``acchariyaá¹ƒ, Ä• vuso sÄ• riputta, abbhutaá¹ƒ, Ä• vuso sÄ• riputta! yÄ• va {yaá¹ƒ tvaá¹ƒ
(Se) } mahiddhiko Ä• yasmÄ• sÄ• riputto mahÄ• nubhÄ• vo! idha te, Ä• vuso sÄ• riputta, a pahÄ• raá¹ƒ adÄ• si. tÄ• va mahÄ• pahÄ• ro ahosi, api tena pahÄ• rena sattaratanaá¹ƒ vÄ aá¸• á¸• haá¹-á¹-hamaratanaá¹ƒ vÄ• nÄ• gaá¹ƒ osÄ• deyya, mahantaá¹ƒ vÄ• pabbatakÅ« panÄ• yasmÄ• sÄ• riputto evamÄ• ha --- `khamanÄ«yaá¹ƒ me, Ä• vuso moggallÄ• na, yÄ• moggallÄ• na; api ca me sÄ«saá¹ƒ thokaá¹ƒ dukkhaâ€™â€™ â€™ nti.

``acchariyaá¹ƒ, Ä• vuso moggallÄ• na, abbhutaá¹ƒ, Ä• vuso moggallÄ• na! yÄ• va {yaá¹ƒ (
mahÄ• moggallÄ• no mahÄ• nubhÄ• vo yatra hi nÄ• ma yakkhampi passissati! mayaá¹ƒ pa passÄ• mÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

assosi kho bhagavÄ• dibbÄ• ya sotadhÄ• tuyÄ• visuddhÄ• ya atikkantamÄ• nusikÄ• ya te mahÄ• nÄ• gÄ• naá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ evarÅ«paá¹ƒ kathÄ• sallÄ• paá¹ƒ.

atha \Be 125/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``yassa \Ee 41/ selÅ«pamaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ, á¹-hitaá¹ƒ nÄ• nupakampati.

virattaá¹ƒ rajanÄ«yesu, kopaneyye na kuppati.

yassevaá¹ƒ bhÄ• vitaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ, kuto taá¹ƒ dukkhamessatÄ«â€™â€™ ti || catutthaá¹ƒ.

5. nÄ• gasuttaá¹ƒ

<35> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• kosambiyaá¹ƒ viharati ghositÄ• pana samayena bhagavÄ• Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o viharati bhikkhÅ«hi bhikkhÅ«nÄ«hi upÄ• sakehi up rÄ• jamahÄ• mattehi titthiyehi titthiyasÄ• vakehi. Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o dukkhaá¹ƒ na phÄ• su vihara etadahosi --- ``ahaá¹ƒ kho etarahi Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o viharÄ• mi bhikkhÅ«hi \Ne 115/ bhikkhÅ«nÄ upÄ• sikÄ• hi rÄ• jÅ«hi rÄ• jamahÄ• mattehi titthiyehi titthiyasÄ• vakehi. Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o dukkh viharÄ• mi. yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• haá¹ƒ eko gaá¹‡asmÄ• vÅ«pakaá¹-á¹-ho vihareyyaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya kosam kosambiyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tapaá¹-ikkanto sÄ• saá¹ƒsÄ• metvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya anÄ• mantetvÄ• upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• kaá¹ƒ anapalok adutiyo yena pÄ• lileyyakaá¹ƒ tena cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ pakkÄ• mi. anupubbena cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ tadavasari. tatra sudaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• pÄ• lileyyake viharati rakkhitavanasaá¹‡á¸• e bhaddas

aÃ±Ã±ataropi kho hatthinÄ• go Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o viharati hatthÄ«hi hatthinÄ«hi hatthikalabhehi

chinnaggÄ• ni ceva tiá¹‡Ä• ni khÄ• dati, obhaggobhaggaÃ±cassa sÄ• khÄ• bhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ k pÄ• nÄ«yÄ• ni pivati, ogÄ• hÄ• cassa uttiá¹‡á¹‡assa hatthiniyo kÄ• yaá¹ƒ upanighaá¹ƒsant dukkhaá¹ƒ na phÄ• su viharati. atha kho tassa hatthinÄ• gassa etadahosi --- ``ahaá¹ƒ kho e viharÄ• mi \Se 135/ hatthÄ«hi hatthinÄ«hi hatthikalabhehi hatthicchÄ• pehi, chinnaggÄ• ni c khÄ• dÄ• mi, obhaggobhaggaÃ±ca me sÄ• khÄ• bhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ khÄ• danti, Ä• vilÄ• ni ca pÄ uttiá¹‡á¹‡assa \Be 126/ hatthiniyo kÄ• yaá¹ƒ upanighaá¹ƒsantiyo gacchanti, Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o du viharÄ• mi. yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• haá¹ƒ eko gaá¹‡asmÄ• vÅ«pakaá¹-á¹-ho vihareyyaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho so hatthinÄ• go yÅ«thÄ• apakkamma yena pÄ• lileyyakaá¹ƒ rakkhitavanasaá¹‡á¸ bhaddasÄ• lamÅ«laá¹ƒ yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami. tatra sudaá¹ƒ {upasaá¹…kamitv Katthaci) } so hatthinÄ• go yasmiá¹ƒ padese bhagavÄ• viharati taá¹ƒ padesaá¹ƒ {appaharita soá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya (bahÅ«su) } appaharitaá¹ƒ karoti, soá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya ca {appaharitaÃ±ca karoti, } bhagavato pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ paribhojanÄ«yaá¹ƒ upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti {upaá¹-á¹-hapeti (Ce Se Ke atha kho bhagavato rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá¹ƒ cetaso parivitakko udapÄ• di --- Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o vihÄ• siá¹ƒ bhikkhÅ«hi bhikkhÅ«nÄ«hi upÄ• sakehi upÄ• sikÄ• hi rÄ• jÅ«hi rÄ• titthiyasÄ• vakehi, Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o dukkhaá¹ƒ na phÄ• su vihÄ• siá¹ƒ. somhi etarahi anÄ• kiá¹‡ bhikkhÅ«hi bhikkhunÄ«hi upÄ• sakehi upÄ• sikÄ• hi rÄ• jÅ«hi rÄ• jamahÄ• mattehi titthiyeh anÄ• kiá¹‡á¹‡o sukhaá¹ƒ phÄ• su viharÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

tassapi \Ne 116/ kho hatthinÄ• gassa evaá¹ƒ cetaso parivitakko udapÄ• di --- ``ahaá¹ƒ kho vihÄ• siá¹ƒ hatthÄ«hi hatthinÄ«hi hatthikalabhehi hatthicchÄ• pehi, chinnaggÄ• ni ceva tiá¹‡ obhaggobhaggaÃ±ca me sÄ• khÄ• bhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ khÄ• diá¹ƒsu, Ä• vilÄ• ni ca pÄ• nÄ«yÄ• n me uttiá¹‡á¹‡assa hatthiniyo kÄ• yaá¹ƒ upanighaá¹ƒsantiyo agamaá¹ƒsu, Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡o dukk vihÄ• siá¹ƒ. somhi etarahi anÄ• kiá¹‡á¹‡o viharÄ• mi hatthÄ«hi hatthinÄ«hi hatthikalabhehi h acchinnaggÄ• ni ceva tiá¹‡Ä• ni khÄ• dÄ• mi, obhaggobhaggaÃ±ca me sÄ• khÄ• bhaá¹…ga
pÄ• nÄ«yÄ• ni pivÄ• mi, ogÄ• hÄ• ca me uttiá¹‡á¹‡assa hatthiniyo na kÄ• yaá¹ƒ upanighaá anÄ• kiá¹‡á¹‡o sukhaá¹ƒ phÄ• su viharÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• attano ca pavivekaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tassa ca hatthinÄ• gassa cetasÄ• ceto tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ• nesi --- ``etaá¹ƒ \Be 127/ {evaá¹ƒ (Katthaci) } nÄ• gassa nÄ• gena, Ä«sÄ• dantassa hatthino.

sameti cittaá¹ƒ cittena, yadeko ramatÄ« manoâ€™â€™ ti || paÃ±camaá¹ƒ.

6. piá¹‡á¸• olasuttaá¹ƒ

<36> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• piá¹‡á¸• olabhÄ• radvÄ• jo bhagavato avi Ä• bhujitvÄ• ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya Ä• raÃ±Ã±iko piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tiko paá¹ƒsukÅ«l santuá¹-á¹-ho pavivitto asaá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-ho Ä• raddhavÄ«riyo {Ä• raddhaviriyo (Ce Se Ke Ee) adhicittamanuyutto.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• olabhÄ• radvÄ• jaá¹ƒ \Ee 43/ avidÅ«re n Ä• bhujitvÄ• ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya Ä• raÃ±Ã±ikaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tikaá¹ƒ paá¹ƒ appicchaá¹ƒ santuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ pavivittaá¹ƒ asaá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ Ä• raddhavÄ«riyaá¹ƒ dhutav adhicittamanuyuttaá¹ƒ \Se 137/.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``anÅ«pavÄ• do \Ne 117/ anÅ«paghÄ• to {anupavÄ• do anupaghÄ• to (Se Ee Katthaci) }, p mattaÃ±Ã±utÄ• ca bhattasmiá¹ƒ, pantaÃ±ca sayanÄ• sanaá¹ƒ.

adhicitte ca Ä• yogo, etaá¹ƒ buddhÄ• na sÄ• sanaâ€™â€™ nti || chaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ.

7. sÄ• riputtasuttaá¹ƒ

<37> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• sÄ• riputto bhagavato avidÅ«re nisinno ho
ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya appiccho santuá¹-á¹-ho pavivitto asaá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-ho Ä• raddh adhicittamanuyutto.

addasÄ• \Be 128/ kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ sÄ• riputtaá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinnaá¹ƒ palla
ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya appicchaá¹ƒ santuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ pavivittaá¹ƒ asaá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-ha adhicittamanuyuttaá¹ƒ.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``adhicetaso appamajjato, munino monapathesu sikkhato.

sokÄ• na bhavanti tÄ• dino,

upasantassa sadÄ• satÄ«matoâ€™â€™ ti || sattamaá¹ƒ.

8. sundarÄ«suttaá¹ƒ

<38> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• sakkato hoti garukato mÄ• nito pÅ«jito apa cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ \Se 138/.
garukato mÄ• nito pÅ«jito apacito lÄ• bhÄ« cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ. aÃ±Ã±ati asakkatÄ• honti agarukatÄ• amÄ• nitÄ• apÅ«jitÄ• anapacitÄ• na lÄ• bhino cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ.

atha kho te aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ• jakÄ• bhagavato sakkÄ• raá¹ƒ asahamÄ• nÄ• bhikk yena sundarÄ« paribbÄ• jikÄ• tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• \Ee 44/ sundar etadavocuá¹ƒ --- ``ussahasi tvaá¹ƒ, bhagini, Ã±Ä• tÄ«naá¹ƒ atthaá¹ƒ kÄ• tuâ€™â€™ nti? ``k karomi? kiá¹ƒ mayÄ• na sakkÄ• {kiá¹ƒ mayÄ• sakkÄ• (Se Ee) } kÄ• tuá¹ƒ? jÄ«vitampi me atthÄ• yÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

``tena hi, bhagini, abhikkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ jetavanaá¹ƒ gacchÄ• hÄ«â€™â€™ ti. ``evaá¹ƒ, ayyÄ• â paribbÄ• jikÄ• tesaá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• naá¹ƒ paribbÄ• jakÄ• naá¹ƒ paá¹-issutvÄ• abhikkha agamÄ• si.

yadÄ• \Be 129/ te aÃ±Ã±iá¹ƒsu aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ• jakÄ• --- ``vodiá¹-á¹-hÄ• kho su bahujanena abhikkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ jetavanaá¹ƒ gacchatÄ«â€™â€™ ti {gacchatÄ«ti (Ce Se Ke Ee voropetvÄ• tattheva jetavanassa parikhÄ• kÅ«pe nikkhipitvÄ• {nikhanitvÄ• (Ce Se Ee) } ye kosalo tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ pasenadiá¹ƒ kosalaá¹ƒ e mahÄ• rÄ• ja, sundarÄ« paribbÄ• jikÄ• ; sÄ• no na dissatÄ«â€™â€™ ti. ``kattha pana tumh \Se 139/? ``jetavane, mahÄ• rÄ• jÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``tena hi jetavanaá¹ƒ vicinathÄ• â€™â€™

atha kho te aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ• jakÄ• jetavanaá¹ƒ vicinitvÄ• yathÄ• nikkhittaá¹ƒ par uddharitvÄ• maÃ±cakaá¹ƒ Ä• ropetvÄ• sÄ• vatthiá¹ƒ pavesetvÄ• rathiyÄ• ya rathiyaá¹ƒ si siá¹…ghÄ• á¹-akaá¹ƒ upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• manusse ujjhÄ• pesuá¹ƒ ---

``passathÄ• yyÄ• samaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ sakyaputtiyÄ• naá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ! alajjino ime samaá¹‡Ä pÄ• padhammÄ• musÄ• vÄ• dino abrahmacÄ• rino. ime hi nÄ• ma dhammacÄ• rino samac sÄ«lavanto kalyÄ• á¹‡adhammÄ• paá¹-ijÄ• nissanti! natthi imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, natt naá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, naá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ imesaá¹ƒ brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ. kuto i imesaá¹ƒ brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ? apagatÄ• ime sÄ• maÃ±Ã±Ä• , apagatÄ• ime brahmaÃ±Ã±Ä purisakiccaá¹ƒ karitvÄ• itthiá¹ƒ jÄ«vitÄ• voropessatÄ«â€™â€™ ti!

tena kho pana samayena sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ manussÄ• bhikkhÅ« disvÄ• asabbhÄ• hi pharus paribhÄ• santi rosanti vihesanti ---

``alajjino ime samaá¹‡Ä• sakyaputtiyÄ• dussÄ«lÄ• pÄ• padhammÄ• musÄ• vÄ• dino abr nÄ• ma dhammacÄ• rino samacÄ• rino brahmacÄ• rino saccavÄ• dino sÄ«lavanto kalyÄ• á natthi imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, natthi imesaá¹ƒ brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ. naá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ imesaá naá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ imesaá¹ƒ brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ. kuto imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, kuto imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±Ä• , apagatÄ• ime \Se 140/ brahmaÃ±Ã±Ä• . kathaÃ±hi nÄ• ma puriso purisak jÄ«vitÄ• voropessatÄ«â€™â€™ ti!

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ
pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ \Ee 45/ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• a 130/ yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• nisÄ«diá¹ƒsu. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ ---

``etarahi, bhante, sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ manussÄ• bhikkhÅ« disvÄ• asabbhÄ• hi pharusÄ• hi vÄ paribhÄ• santi rosanti vihesanti --- `alajjino ime samaá¹‡Ä• sakyaputtiyÄ• dussÄ«lÄ• pÄ• abrahmacÄ• rino. ime hi nÄ• ma dhammacÄ• rino samacÄ• rino brahmacÄ• rino saccavÄ• paá¹-ijÄ• nissanti. natthi imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, natthi imesaá¹ƒ brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ. naá sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, naá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ imesaá¹ƒ brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ. kuto imesaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aa brahmaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ? apagatÄ• ime sÄ• maÃ±Ã±Ä• , apagatÄ• ime brahmaÃ±Ã±Ä• . kathaÃ karitvÄ• itthiá¹ƒ jÄ«vitÄ• voropessatÄ«â€™â€™ â€™ ti!

``neso, bhikkhave, saddo ciraá¹ƒ bhavissati sattÄ• hameva bhavissati. sattÄ• hassa accaye tena hi, bhikkhave, ye manussÄ• bhikkhÅ« disvÄ• asabbhÄ• hi pharusÄ• hi vÄ• cÄ• hi akk vihesanti, te tumhe imÄ• ya gÄ• thÄ• ya paá¹-icodetha --- `` `abhÅ«tavÄ• dÄ« \Se 141/ nirayaá¹ƒ upeti, yo vÄ• pi {yo cÄ• pi (Ce Ee Katthaci) } katvÄ• na karomi cÄ• ha.

ubhopi te pecca samÄ• bhavanti,

nihÄ«nakammÄ• manujÄ• paratthÄ• â€™â€™ â€™ ti ||

atha kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavato santike imaá¹ƒ gÄ• thaá¹ƒ pariyÄ• puá¹‡itvÄ• ye manussÄ

120/ asabbhÄ• hi pharusÄ• hi vÄ• cÄ• hi akkosanti paribhÄ• santi rosanti vihesanti te imÄ• paá¹-icodenti ---

``abhÅ«tavÄ• dÄ« nirayaá¹ƒ upeti, yo vÄ• pi katvÄ• na karomicÄ• ha.

ubhopi te pecca samÄ• bhavanti,

nihÄ«nakammÄ• manujÄ• paratthÄ• â€™â€™ ti ||

manussÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 131/ etadahosi --- ``akÄ• rakÄ• ime samaá¹‡Ä• sakyaputtiyÄ• . nayi samaá¹‡Ä• sakyaputtiyÄ• â€™â€™ ti. neva so saddo ciraá¹ƒ ahosi. sattÄ• hameva ahosi. antaradhÄ• yi.

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamit ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«diá¹ƒsu. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavato etadavocuá ``acchariyaá¹ƒ, bhante, abbhutaá¹ƒ, bhante! yÄ• va subhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ cidaá¹ƒ bhante bhagava bhikkhave, saddo ciraá¹ƒ bhavissati. sattÄ• hameva bhavissati. sattÄ• hassa accayena \Se antaradhÄ• yissatÄ«â€™ ti. antarahito so, bhante, saddoâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``tudanti vÄ• cÄ• ya janÄ• asaÃ±Ã±atÄ• , sarehi saá¹…gÄ• magataá¹ƒva kuÃ±jaraá¹ƒ.

sutvÄ• na vÄ• kyaá¹ƒ pharusaá¹ƒ udÄ«ritaá¹ƒ,

adhivÄ• saye bhikkhu aduá¹-á¹-hacittoâ€™â€™ ti || aá¹-á¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

9. upasenasuttaá¹ƒ

<39> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• rÄ• jagahe viharati veá¸·uvane k Ä• yasmato upasenassa \Ee 46/ vaá¹…gantaputtassa rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá¹ 121/ udapÄ• di --- ``lÄ• bhÄ• vata me, suladdhaá¹ƒ vata me, satthÄ• ca me bhagavÄ• ara svÄ• kkhÄ• te camhi dhammavinaye agÄ• rasmÄ• anagÄ• riyaá¹ƒ pabbajito; sabrahmacÄ• kalyÄ• á¹‡adhammÄ• ; sÄ«lesu camhi paripÅ«rakÄ• rÄ«; susamÄ• hito camhi ekaggacitto;

mahiddhiko camhi mahÄ• nubhÄ• vo. bhaddakaá¹ƒ me jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ, bhaddakaá¹ƒ maraá¹‡aâ

atha kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmato upasenassa vaá¹…gantaputtassa cetasÄ• cetoparivitakka velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ• nesi ---

``yaá¹ƒ \Be 132/ jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ na tapati, maraá¹‡ante na socati.

sa ve diá¹-á¹-hapado dhÄ«ro, sokamajjhe na socati ||

``ucchinnabhavataá¹‡hassa \Se 143/, santacittassa bhikkhuno.

vikkhÄ«á¹‡o jÄ• tisaá¹ƒsÄ• ro, natthi tassa punabbhavoâ€™â€™ ti || navamaá¹ƒ.

10. sÄ• riputtaupasamasuttaá¹ƒ

<40> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• sÄ• riputto bhagavato avidÅ«re nisinno ho ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya attano upasamaá¹ƒ paccavekkhamÄ• no.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ sÄ• riputtaá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinnaá¹ƒ pallaá¹…kaá¹ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya attano upasamaá¹ƒ paccavekkhamÄ• naá¹ƒ.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``upasantasantacittassa, netticchinnassa bhikkhuno.

vikkhÄ«á¹‡o jÄ• tisaá¹ƒsÄ• ro, mutto so mÄ• rabandhanÄ• â€™â€™ ti || dasamaá¹ƒ.

meghiyavaggo catuttho niá¹-á¹-hito.

tassuddÄ• naá¹ƒ \Ne 122/ ---

meghiyo uddhatÄ• gopÄ• lo, yakkho {juá¹‡hÄ• (Ce Se Ee), juá¹‡haá¹ƒ (Katthaci) } nÄ• gen

piá¹‡á¸• olo sÄ• riputto ca, sundarÄ« bhavati aá¹-á¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

upaseno vaá¹…gantaputto, sÄ• riputto ca te dasÄ• ti ||

5. soá¹‡avaggo {mahÄ• vagga (aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya sameti) }

1. piyatarasuttaá¹ƒ

<41> evaá¹ƒ \Be 133/ \Ee 47/ \Se 144/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• va jetavane anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena rÄ• jÄ• pasenadi ko saddhiá¹ƒ uparipÄ• sÄ• davaragato hoti. atha kho rÄ• jÄ• pasenadi kosalo mallikaá¹ƒ deviá nu kho te, mallike, kocaÃ±Ã±o attanÄ• piyataroâ€™â€™ ti?

``natthi kho me, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, kocaÃ±Ã±o attanÄ• piyataro. tuyhaá¹ƒ pana, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, piyataroâ€™â€™ ti? ``mayhampi kho, mallike, natthaÃ±Ã±o koci attanÄ• piyataroâ€™â€™ atha kho rÄ• jÄ• pasenadi kosalo pÄ• sÄ• dÄ• orohitvÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…ka bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho rÄ• jÄ• pa etadavoca ---

``idhÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhante, mallikÄ• ya deviyÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ uparipÄ• sÄ• davaragato mallikaá¹ƒ
`atthi nu kho te, mallike, kocaÃ±Ã±o attanÄ• piyataroâ€™ ti? evaá¹ƒ vutte, mallikÄ• devÄ« `natthi kho me, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, kocaÃ±Ã±o attanÄ• piyataro. tuyhaá¹ƒ pana, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, a piyataroâ€™ ti? evaá¹ƒ vutte, ahaá¹ƒ, bhante, mallikaá¹ƒ deviá¹ƒ etadavocaá¹ƒ --- `mayham natthaÃ±Ã±o koci attanÄ• piyataroâ€™â€™ â€™ ti.

atha \Ne 123/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``sabbÄ• \Se 145/ disÄ• anuparigamma cetasÄ• , nevajjhagÄ• piyataramattanÄ• kvaci.

evaá¹ƒ piyo puthu attÄ• paresaá¹ƒ, tasmÄ• na hiá¹ƒse paramattakÄ• moâ€™â€™ ti || paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

2. appÄ• yukasuttaá¹ƒ

<42> evaá¹ƒ \Be 134/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando \Ee 48/ sÄ• yanhasama {paá¹-isallÄ• á¹‡Ä• (Ce) } vuá¹-á¹-hito yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitv

abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bha ``acchariyaá¹ƒ, bhante, abbhutaá¹ƒ, bhante! yÄ• va appÄ• yukÄ• hi, bhante, bhagavato mÄ bhagavati bhagavato mÄ• tÄ• kÄ• lamakÄ• si, tusitaá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ upapajjÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

``evametaá¹ƒ, Ä• nanda {evametaá¹ƒ Ä• nanda evametaá¹ƒ Ä• nanda (Se) }, appÄ• yukÄ•
bodhisattamÄ• taro honti. sattÄ• hajÄ• tesu bodhisattesu bodhisattamÄ• taro kÄ• laá¹ƒ karo upapajjantÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``ye keci bhÅ«tÄ• bhavissanti ye vÄ• pi, sabbe gamissanti pahÄ• ya dehaá¹ƒ.

taá¹ƒ sabbajÄ• niá¹ƒ kusalo viditvÄ• ,

Ä• tÄ• piyo brahmacariyaá¹ƒ careyyÄ• â€™â€™ ti || dutiyaá¹ƒ.

3. suppabuddhakuá¹-á¹-hisuttaá¹ƒ

<43> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• rÄ• jagahe viharati veá¸·uvane \S tena kho pana samayena rÄ• jagahe suppabuddho nÄ• ma kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« ahosi --- manussad 124/, manussavarÄ• ko. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• mahatiyÄ• parisÄ• ya parivut hoti.

addasÄ• kho suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« taá¹ƒ mahÄ• janakÄ• yaá¹ƒ dÅ«ratova sannipatita
--- ``nissaá¹ƒsayaá¹ƒ kho ettha kiÃ±ci khÄ• danÄ«yaá¹ƒ vÄ• bhojanÄ«yaá¹ƒ vÄ• bhÄ• jÄ«y }. yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• haá¹ƒ yena so mahÄ• janakÄ• yo tenupasaá¹…kameyyaá¹ƒ. appeva nÄ• m bhojanÄ«yaá¹ƒ vÄ• labheyyaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha \Be 135/ kho suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« yena so mahÄ• janakÄ• yo tenupasaá¹…kam kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ mahatiyÄ• parisÄ• ya parivutaá¹ƒ dhammaá¹ƒ desentaá¹ƒ nisin etadahosi --- ``na kho ettha kiÃ±ci khÄ• danÄ«yaá¹ƒ vÄ• bhojanÄ«yaá¹ƒ vÄ• bhÄ• jÄ«yati.
parisati dhammaá¹ƒ deseti. yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• hampi dhammaá¹ƒ suá¹‡eyyaâ€™â€™ nti. tatthev ``ahampi dhammaá¹ƒ sossÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• sabbÄ• vantaá¹ƒ \Ee 49/ parisaá¹ƒ cetasÄ• ceto paricca manasÄ• kÄ• dhammaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• tuâ€™â€™ nti? addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• suppabuddhaá¹ƒ kuá¹-á¹-h nisinnaá¹ƒ. disvÄ• nassa etadahosi --- ``ayaá¹ƒ kho idha bhabbo dhammaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• tuâ kuá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha Ä• nupubbiá¹ƒ kathaá¹ƒ {Ä• nupubbikathaá¹ƒ (Ce), anupubbikathaá kathesi, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- dÄ• nakathaá¹ƒ sÄ«lakathaá¹ƒ saggakathaá¹ƒ; kÄ• mÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• saá¹…kilesaá¹ƒ; nekkhamme {nekkhamme ca (Ce Se Ee) } Ä• nisaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ pakÄ• sesi. yad suppabuddhaá¹ƒ kuá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ \Se 147/ kallacittaá¹ƒ muducittaá¹ƒ vinÄ«varaá¹‡acittaá¹ƒ ud pasannacittaá¹ƒ, atha yÄ• buddhÄ• naá¹ƒ sÄ• mukkaá¹ƒsikÄ• dhammadesanÄ• taá¹ƒ pak samudayaá¹ƒ, nirodhaá¹ƒ, maggaá¹ƒ. seyyathÄ• pi nÄ• ma suddhaá¹ƒ vatthaá¹ƒ apagatakÄ rajanaá¹ƒ paá¹-iggaá¹‡heyya, evameva suppabuddhassa kuá¹-á¹-hissa tasmiá¹ƒyeva Ä• sa dhammacakkhuá¹ƒ udapÄ• di --- ``yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci samudayadhammaá¹ƒ sabbaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ nirod

atha kho suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« diá¹-á¹-hadhammo pattadhammo viditadhammo pariyo tiá¹‡á¹‡avicikiccho vigatakathaá¹ƒkatho vesÄ• rajjappatto aparappaccayo satthu sÄ• sane u bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekaman nisinno kho suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca ---

``abhikkantaá¹ƒ \Ne 125/, bhante, abhikkataá¹ƒ, bhante! seyyathÄ• pi, bhante, nikkujjitaá¹ƒ paá¹-icchannaá¹ƒ vÄ• vivareyya, mÅ«á¸·hassa vÄ• maggaá¹ƒ Ä• cikkheyya, andhakÄ• re
--- cakkhumanto rÅ«pÄ• ni dakkhantÄ«ti; evamevaá¹ƒ bhagavatÄ• anekapariyÄ• yena dha bhante, bhagavantaá¹ƒ saraá¹‡aá¹ƒ gacchÄ• mi dhammaÃ±ca bhikkhusaá¹…ghaÃ±ca. upÄ dhÄ• retu ajjatagge pÄ• á¹‡upetaá¹ƒ saraá¹‡aá¹ƒ gataâ€™â€™ nti.

atha \Be 136/ kho suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« bhagavatÄ• dhammiyÄ• kathÄ• ya sandassi sampahaá¹ƒsito bhagavato bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ abhinanditvÄ• anumoditvÄ• uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ \Se 148/ katvÄ• pakkÄ• mi. atha kho acirapakkantaá¹ƒ suppabuddhaá¹ƒ k taruá¹‡avacchÄ• adhipatitvÄ• jÄ«vitÄ• voropesi.

atha kho sambahulÄ• \Ee 50/ bhikkhÅ« yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹
abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«diá¹ƒsu. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhaga ``yo so, bhante, suppabuddho nÄ• ma kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« bhagavatÄ• dhammiyÄ• kathÄ• ya san samuttejito sampahaá¹ƒsito, so kÄ• laá¹…kato. tassa kÄ• gati, ko abhisamparÄ• yoâ€™â€

``paá¹‡á¸• ito, bhikkhave, suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ«; paccapÄ• di dhammassÄ• nudhamm
dhammÄ• dhikaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ vihesesi. suppabuddho, bhikkhave, kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ saá sotÄ• panno avinipÄ• tadhammo niyato sambodhiparÄ• yaá¹‡oâ€™â€™ ti.

evaá¹ƒ vutte, aÃ±Ã±ataro bhikkhu bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``ko nu kho, bhante, hetu, suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« ahosi --- manussadaliddo, manussakapaá¹‡o, manussavarÄ• koâ

``bhÅ«tapubbaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, suppabuddho kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« imasmiá¹ƒyeva rÄ• jagahe seá¹-á uyyÄ• nabhÅ«miá¹ƒ niyyanto addasa tagarasikhiá¹ƒ {taggarasikhiá¹ƒ (Katthaci) } paccekabu piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya pavisantaá¹ƒ. disvÄ• nassa etadahosi --- `kvÄ• yaá¹ƒ kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« kuá¹-á¹-hi ti? niá¹-á¹-hubhitvÄ• apasabyato {apabyÄ• mato (Se SN a I 255) } karitvÄ• pakkÄ• mi. so t bahÅ«ni vassasatÄ• ni bahÅ«ni vassasahassÄ• ni bahÅ«ni vassasatasahassÄ• ni niraye pa vipÄ• kÄ• vasesena \Se 149/ imasmiá¹ƒyeva rÄ• jagahe kuá¹-á¹-hÄ« ahosi manussadaliddo manussavarÄ• ko. so tathÄ• gatappaveditaá¹ƒ dhammavinayaá¹ƒ Ä• gamma saddhaá¹ƒ sa sutaá¹ƒ samÄ• diyi cÄ• gaá¹ƒ samÄ• diyi paÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ samÄ• diyi. so \Ne 126/ tathÄ• gatap Ä• gamma saddhaá¹ƒ samÄ• diyitvÄ• sÄ«laá¹ƒ samÄ• diyitvÄ• sutaá¹ƒ samÄ• diyitvÄ• cÄ samÄ• diyitvÄ• kÄ• yassa \Be 137/ bhedÄ• paraá¹ƒ maraá¹‡Ä• sugatiá¹ƒ saggaá¹ƒ lokaá tÄ• vatiá¹ƒsÄ• naá¹ƒ sahabyataá¹ƒ. so tattha aÃ±Ã±e deve atirocati vaá¹‡á¹‡ena ceva yasa

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``cakkhumÄ• visamÄ• nÄ«va, vijjamÄ• ne parakkame.

paá¹‡á¸• ito jÄ«valokasmiá¹ƒ, pÄ• pÄ• ni parivajjayeâ€™â€™ ti || tatiyaá¹ƒ.

4. kumÄ• rakasuttaá¹ƒ

<44> evaá¹ƒ \Ee 51/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati j anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena sambahulÄ• kumÄ• rakÄ• a jetavanaá¹ƒ macchake bÄ• dhenti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya sÄ• va
addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• te sambahule kumÄ• rake antarÄ• ca sÄ• vatthiá¹ƒ antarÄ• ca je disvÄ• na yena te kumÄ• rakÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• te kumÄ• rake eta kumÄ• rakÄ• , dukkhassa, appiyaá¹ƒ vo dukkhaâ€™â€™ nti? ``evaá¹ƒ, bhante, bhÄ• yÄ• m \Se 150/, appiyaá¹ƒ no dukkhaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``sace bhÄ• yatha dukkhassa, sace vo dukkhamappiyaá¹ƒ.

mÄ• kattha pÄ• pakaá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ, Ä• vi vÄ• yadi vÄ• raho ||

``sace ca pÄ• pakaá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ, karissatha karotha vÄ• .

na vo dukkhÄ• pamutyatthi, upeccapi {upaccapi (Katthaci), uppaccapi (?), uppatitvÄ• pi iti
palÄ• yataâ€™â€™ nti || catutthaá¹ƒ.

5. uposathasuttaá¹ƒ

<45> evaá¹ƒ \Be 138/ \Ne 127/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá migÄ• ramÄ• tupÄ• sÄ• de. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• tadahuposathe bhikkhusa

atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando abhikkantÄ• ya rattiyÄ• , nikkhante paá¹-hame yÄ• me, uá uttarÄ• saá¹…gaá¹ƒ {cÄ«varaá¹ƒ (sabbattha) } karitvÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenaÃ±jaliá¹ƒ paá etadavoca --- ``abhikkantÄ• , bhante, ratti; nikkhanto paá¹-hamo yÄ• mo; ciranisinno bhikkh bhante, bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ«naá¹ƒ pÄ• timokkhaâ€™â€™ nti. evaá¹ƒ vutte, bhagavÄ• tuá dutiyampi kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando abhikkantÄ• ya rattiyÄ• , nikkhante majjhime yÄ• me, ekaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ uttarÄ• saá¹…gaá¹ƒ karitvÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenaÃ±jaliá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä• metvÄ• ``abhikkantÄ• , bhante, ratti; nikkhanto majjhimo yÄ• mo; ciranisinno bhikkhusaá¹…gho; udd bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ«naá¹ƒ pÄ• timokkhaâ€™â€™ nti. dutiyampi kho bhagavÄ• tuá¹‡hÄ« \E tatiyampi kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando abhikkantÄ• ya rattiyÄ• , nikkhante \Se 151/ pacchime nandimukhiyÄ• rattiyÄ• uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• ekaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ uttarÄ• saá¹…gaá¹ƒ karitvÄ• paá¹‡Ä• metvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``abhikkantÄ• , bhante, ratti; nikkhanto pacc aruá¹‡o; nandimukhÄ« ratti; ciranisinno bhikkhusaá¹…gho; uddisatu, bhante, bhagavÄ• bhi pÄ• timokkhaâ€™â€™ nti. ``aparisuddhÄ• , Ä• nanda, parisÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho Ä• yasmato mahÄ• moggallÄ• nassa etadahosi --- ``kaá¹ƒ nu kho bhagavÄ• pugg
--- `aparisuddhÄ• , Ä• nanda, parisÄ• â€™ ti? atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• moggallÄ• no s bhikkhusaá¹…ghaá¹ƒ cetasÄ• ceto paricca manasÄ• kÄ• si. addasÄ• kho Ä• yasmÄ• ma dussÄ«laá¹ƒ pÄ• padhammaá¹ƒ asuciá¹ƒ saá¹…kassarasamÄ• cÄ• raá¹ƒ paá¹-icchannakar samaá¹‡apaá¹-iÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ abrahmacÄ• riá¹ƒ brahmacÄ• ripaá¹-iÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ antopÅ«tiá¹ƒ ava majjhe bhikkhusaá¹…ghassa nisinnaá¹ƒ. disvÄ• na uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• yena so puggalo upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• taá¹ƒ \Ne 128/ puggalaá¹ƒ etadavoca \Be 139/ --- ``uá¹-á¹-hehi, Ä• vus bhagavatÄ• ; natthi te bhikkhÅ«hi saddhiá¹ƒ saá¹ƒvÄ• soâ€™â€™ ti. evaá¹ƒ vutte {atha kh 383; AN c 8.20 passitabbaá¹ƒ}, so puggalo tuá¹‡hÄ« ahosi.

dutiyampi kho Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• moggallÄ• no taá¹ƒ puggalaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``uá¹-á¹-he bhagavatÄ• ; natthi te bhikkhÅ«hi saddhiá¹ƒ saá¹ƒvÄ• soâ€™â€™ ti. dutiyampi kho ... pe ...
kho so puggalo tuá¹‡hÄ« ahosi.

atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• moggallÄ• no taá¹ƒ puggalaá¹ƒ bÄ• hÄ• yaá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• bah nikkhÄ• metvÄ• sÅ«cighaá¹-ikaá¹ƒ datvÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…k
--- ``nikkhÄ• mito, bhante, so puggalo mayÄ• . parisuddhÄ• parisÄ• . uddisatu, bhante, bha pÄ• timokkhaâ€™â€™ nti. ``acchariyaá¹ƒ, moggallÄ• na, abbhutaá¹ƒ, moggallÄ• na! yÄ• va moghapuriso Ä• gamessatÄ«â€™â€™ ti!

atha kho \Ee 53/ bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ« Ä• mantesi --- ``na dÄ• nÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, ito par bhikkhave ajjatagge (AN c 8.20) } uposathaá¹ƒ karissÄ• mi, pÄ• timokkhaá¹ƒ uddisissÄ• mi.
bhikkhave, ito paraá¹ƒ uposathaá¹ƒ kareyyÄ• tha, pÄ• timokkhaá¹ƒ uddiseyyÄ• tha. aá¹-á¹-h anavakÄ• so yaá¹ƒ tathÄ• gato aparisuddhÄ• ya parisÄ• ya uposathaá¹ƒ kareyya, pÄ• timo

``aá¹-á¹-hime, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde acchariyÄ• abbhutÄ• dhammÄ• , ye disvÄ• di abhiramanti. katame aá¹-á¹-ha?

``mahÄ• samuddo, bhikkhave, anupubbaninno anupubbapoá¹‡o anupubbapabbhÄ• ro, na {yaá¹ƒ (Ce Se Katthaci) }, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo anupubbaninno anupubbapoá¹‡o an Ä• yatakeneva papÄ• to; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde paá¹-hamo acchariyo abbhut asurÄ• mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti.

``puna \Be 140/ \Se 153/ caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo á¹-hitadhammo velaá¹ƒ nÄ bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo á¹-hitadhammo velaá¹ƒ nÄ• tivattati; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave {ayamp mahÄ• samudde dutiyo acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• asurÄ• mahÄ• s

``puna \Ne 129/ caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo na matena kuá¹‡apena saá¹ƒvasa mataá¹ƒ kuá¹‡apaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ khippameva {khippaÃ±Ã±eva (Ce), khippaá¹ƒyeva (Katthaci) } t thalaá¹ƒ ussÄ• reti. yampi, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo na matena kuá¹‡apena saá¹ƒvasati mataá¹ƒ kuá¹‡apaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ khippameva tÄ«raá¹ƒ vÄ• heti thalaá¹ƒ ussÄ• reti; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikk tatiyo acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• asurÄ• mahÄ• samudde abhirama

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, yÄ• kÄ• ci mahÄ• nadiyo, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- gaá¹…gÄ• yam
mahÄ«, tÄ• mahÄ• samuddaá¹ƒ patvÄ• {pattÄ• (Se Ee Katthaci) } jahanti purimÄ• ni nÄ• tveva saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchanti. yampi, bhikkhave, yÄ• kÄ• ci mahÄ• nadiyo, seyyathidaá¹ƒ aciravatÄ« sarabhÅ« mahÄ« tÄ• mahÄ• samuddaá¹ƒ patvÄ• jahanti purimÄ• ni nÄ• mago saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchanti; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde catuttho acchariyo abbhuto d asurÄ• mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti.

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, yÄ• ca loke savantiyo mahÄ• samuddaá¹ƒ appenti, yÄ• ca a papatanti, na tena mahÄ• samuddassa \Se 154/ Å«nattaá¹ƒ vÄ• pÅ«rattaá¹ƒ vÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä

54/, yÄ• ca loke savantiyo mahÄ• samuddaá¹ƒ appenti, yÄ• ca antalikkhÄ• dhÄ• rÄ• pap mahÄ• sammuddassa Å«nattaá¹ƒ vÄ• pÅ«rattaá¹ƒ vÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• asurÄ• mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti.

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo ekaraso loá¹‡araso. yampi, bhikkhave, mah loá¹‡araso; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde chaá¹-á¹-ho acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, y mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti.

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo bahuratano anekaratano. tatrimÄ• ni ratanÄ
muttÄ• maá¹‡i veá¸·uriyo saá¹…kho silÄ• pavÄ• á¸·aá¹ƒ \Be 141/ rajataá¹ƒ jÄ• tarÅ«paá¹ƒ masÄ• ragallaá¹ƒ. yampi, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo bahuratano anekaratano, tatrimÄ• ni
--- muttÄ• maá¹‡i veá¸·uriyo saá¹…kho silÄ• pavÄ• á¸·aá¹ƒ rajataá¹ƒ jÄ• tarÅ«paá¹ƒ lohita Ee), lohitako (?) } masÄ• ragallaá¹ƒ; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde sattamo acchariy disvÄ• disvÄ• asurÄ• mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti.

``puna \Ne 130/ caparaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo mahataá¹ƒ bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• vÄ• timiá¹…galo timitimiá¹…galo {timi timiá¹…galo timirapiá¹…galo (Ce Ee, AN c 8.19) } asurÄ• santi mahÄ• samudde yojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• , dviyojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• , tiy catuyojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• , paÃ±cayojanasatikÄ• pi \Se 155/ attabhÄ• vÄ• . yampi, mahataá¹ƒ bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• vÄ• so, tatrime bhÅ«tÄ• --- timi timiá¹…galo timitimiá¹…galo santi mahÄ• samudde yojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• dviyojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• ... p attabhÄ• vÄ• ; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde aá¹-á¹-hamo acchariyo abbhuto dhamm mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti. ime kho, bhikkhave, aá¹-á¹-ha mahÄ• samudde acchariyÄ• a disvÄ• asurÄ• mahÄ• samudde abhiramanti.

``evameva kho, bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye aá¹-á¹-ha acchariyÄ• abbhutÄ• dha bhikkhÅ« imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye abhiramanti. katame aá¹-á¹-ha?

``seyyathÄ• pi, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo anupubbaninno anupubbapoá¹‡o anupubbapa papÄ• to; evameva kho, bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye anupubbasikkhÄ• anupubba na Ä• yatakeneva aÃ±Ã±Ä• paá¹-ivedho. yampi, bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye anup anupubbapaá¹-ipadÄ• , na Ä• yatakeneva aÃ±Ã±Ä• paá¹-ivedho; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, imasm acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• bhikkhÅ« imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye abh

``seyyathÄ• pi \Be 142/ \Ee 55/, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo á¹-hitadhammo velaá¹ƒ nÄ• ti kho, bhikkhave, yaá¹ƒ mayÄ• sÄ• vakÄ• naá¹ƒ sikkhÄ• padaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±attaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ mam nÄ• tikkamanti. yampi, bhikkhave, mayÄ• sÄ• vakÄ• naá¹ƒ sikkhÄ• padaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±attaá¹ jÄ«vitahetupi nÄ• tikkamanti; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye dutiyo acchariy disvÄ• disvÄ• bhikkhÅ« imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye abhiramanti.

``seyyathÄ• pi, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo na matena kuá¹‡apena saá¹ƒvasati; yaá¹ƒ hoti
kuá¹‡apaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ khippameva tÄ«raá¹ƒ vÄ• heti, thalaá¹ƒ ussÄ• reti; evameva kho, bhikkh dussÄ«lo pÄ• padhammo asuci saá¹…kassarasamÄ• cÄ• ro paá¹-icchannakammanto assa 131/ abrahmacÄ• rÄ« brahmacÄ• ripaá¹-iÃ±Ã±o antopÅ«ti avassuto kasambujÄ• to, na tena kho naá¹ƒ khippameva sannipatitvÄ• ukkhipati. kiÃ±cÄ• pi so hoti majjhe bhikkhusaá¹…gha Ä• rakÄ• va saá¹…ghamhÄ• , saá¹…gho ca tena. yampi, bhikkhave, yo so puggalo dussÄ« saá¹…kassarasamÄ• cÄ• ro paá¹-icchannakammanto assamaá¹‡o samaá¹‡apaá¹-iÃ±Ã±o a brahmacÄ• ripaá¹-iÃ±Ã±o antopÅ«ti avassuto kasambujÄ• to, na tena saá¹…gho saá¹ƒvasa sannipatitvÄ• ukkhipati. kiÃ±cÄ• pi so hoti majjhe bhikkhusaá¹…ghassa nisinno, atha kho s saá¹…ghamhÄ• , saá¹…gho ca tena; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye \Se 157 dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• bhikkhÅ« imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye abhiramanti.

``seyyathÄ• pi, bhikkhave, yÄ• kÄ• ci mahÄ• nadiyo, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- gaá¹…gÄ• yamunÄ tÄ• mahÄ• samuddaá¹ƒ patvÄ• jahanti purimÄ• ni nÄ• magottÄ• ni, `mahÄ• samuddoâ€™ evameva kho, bhikkhave, cattÄ• ro vaá¹‡á¹‡Ä• --- khattiyÄ• , brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• , vessÄ• , suddÄ• dhammavinaye agÄ• rasmÄ• anagÄ• riyaá¹ƒ pabbajitvÄ• {pabbajitÄ• (Katthaci Ce) } jahan `samaá¹‡Ä• sakyaputtiyÄ• â€™ tveva saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchanti. yampi, bhikkhave, cattÄ• ro brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• , vessÄ• , suddÄ• te tathÄ• gatappavedite dhammavinaye agÄ• rasmÄ• an purimÄ• ni nÄ• magottÄ• ni \Be 143/, `samaá¹‡Ä• sakyaputtiyÄ• â€™ tveva saá¹…khaá¹ƒ imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye catuttho acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• bhikk abhiramanti.

``seyyathÄ• pi, bhikkhave, yÄ• ca loke savantiyo mahÄ• samuddaá¹ƒ appenti, yÄ• ca anta papatanti, na tena mahÄ• samuddassa Å«nattaá¹ƒ vÄ• pÅ«rattaá¹ƒ vÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati; ev cepi bhikkhÅ« anupÄ• disesÄ• ya nibbÄ• nadhÄ• tuyÄ• parinibbÄ• yanti, na tena nibbÄ• na vÄ• pÅ«rattaá¹ƒ vÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati. yampi, bhikkhave, bahÅ« cepi bhikkhÅ« anupÄ• dises parinibbÄ• yanti, na tena nibbÄ• nadhÄ• tuyÄ• Å«nattaá¹ƒ vÄ• pÅ«rattaá¹ƒ vÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye paÃ±camo acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• bh abhiramanti.

``seyyathÄ• pi \Ee 56/, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo ekaraso loá¹‡araso; evameva kho, bhik
dhammavinayo ekaraso vimuttiraso. yampi, bhikkhave, ayaá¹ƒ dhammavinayo ekaraso vimu bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye chaá¹-á¹-ho acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ dhammavinaye abhiramanti.

``seyyathÄ• pi, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo bahuratano anekaratano, tatrimÄ• ni ratanÄ• n

maá¹‡i veá¸·uriyo saá¹…kho silÄ• pavÄ• á¸·aá¹ƒ rajataá¹ƒ jÄ• tarÅ«paá¹ƒ lohitaá¹…go mas kho, bhikkhave, ayaá¹ƒ dhammavinayo bahuratano anekaratano; tatrimÄ• ni ratanÄ• ni, sey satipaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• , cattÄ• ro sammappadhÄ• nÄ• , cattÄ• ro iddhipÄ• dÄ• , paÃ±cindriyÄ bojjhaá¹…gÄ• , ariyo aá¹-á¹-haá¹…giko maggo. yampi, bhikkhave, ayaá¹ƒ dhammavinayo b tatrimÄ• ni ratanÄ• ni, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- cattÄ• ro satipaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• , cattÄ• ro sammappa iddhipÄ• dÄ• , paÃ±cindriyÄ• ni, paÃ±ca balÄ• ni, satta bojjhaá¹…gÄ• , ariyo aá¹-á¹-haá¹…g bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye sattamo acchariyo abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• d dhammavinaye abhiramanti.

``seyyathÄ• pi \Se 159/, bhikkhave, mahÄ• samuddo mahataá¹ƒ bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• vÄ• so, timiá¹…galo timitimiá¹…galo asurÄ• nÄ• gÄ• gandhabbÄ• , santi \Be 144/ mahÄ• samudd dviyojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• tiyojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• catuyojanasatikÄ• pi atta paÃ±cayojanasatikÄ• pi attabhÄ• vÄ• ; evameva kho, bhikkhave, ayaá¹ƒ dhammavinayo ma tatrime bhÅ«tÄ• --- sotÄ• panno, sotÄ• pattiphalasacchikiriyÄ• ya paá¹-ipanno, sakadÄ• gÄ sakadÄ• gÄ• miphalasacchikiriyÄ• ya paá¹-ipanno, anÄ• gÄ• mÄ«, anÄ• gÄ• mÄ«phalasac arahattÄ• ya paá¹-ipanno {arahattaphalasacchikiriyÄ• ya (Ce) }. yampi, bhikkhave, ayaá¹ƒ d bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• vÄ• so, tatrime bhÅ«tÄ• --- sotÄ• panno, sotÄ• pattiphalasacchikiriyÄ• y sakadÄ• gÄ• mÄ«, sakadÄ• gÄ• miphalasacchikiriyÄ• ya paá¹-ipanno, anÄ• gÄ• mÄ«, anÄ paá¹-ipanno, arahÄ• , arahattÄ• ya paá¹-ipanno; ayaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavina abbhuto dhammo, yaá¹ƒ disvÄ• disvÄ• bhikkhÅ« imasmiá¹ƒ dhammavinaye abhiramanti. i dhammavinaye aá¹-á¹-ha acchariyÄ• abbhutÄ• dhammÄ• , ye disvÄ• disvÄ• bhikkhÅ« im abhiramantÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``channamativassati, vivaá¹-aá¹ƒ nÄ• tivassati.

tasmÄ• channaá¹ƒ vivaretha, evaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ nÄ• tivassatÄ«â€™â€™ ti || paÃ±camaá¹ƒ.

6. soá¹‡asuttaá¹ƒ

<46> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 133/ \Ee 57/ me \Se 160/ sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• va jetavane anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kuraraghare {kururaghare (Se Vin I 257), kulaghare (Katthaci) } pavatte pabbate. tena kho p upÄ• sako kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡o Ä• yasmato mahÄ• kaccÄ• nassa upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ko hoti.

atha kho soá¹‡assa upÄ• sakassa kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡assa rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá udapÄ• di --- ``yathÄ• yathÄ• kho ayyo mahÄ• kaccÄ• no dhammaá¹ƒ deseti nayidaá¹ƒ su

ajjhÄ• vasatÄ• ekantaparipuá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ ekantaparisuddhaá¹ƒ saá¹…khalikhitaá¹ƒ brahmaca yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• haá¹ƒ \Be 145/ kesamassuá¹ƒ ohÄ• retvÄ• kÄ• sÄ• yÄ• ni vatthÄ• ni acchÄ• pabbajeyyaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho soá¹‡o upÄ• sako kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡o yenÄ• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kaccÄ• no tenupasaá¹.
Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡o Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ etadavoca ---

``idha mayhaá¹ƒ, bhante, rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá¹ƒ cetaso parivitakko udapÄ•
kho ayyo mahÄ• kaccÄ• no dhammaá¹ƒ deseti nayidaá¹ƒ sukaraá¹ƒ agÄ• raá¹ƒ ajjhÄ• vasa ekantaparisuddhaá¹ƒ saá¹…khalikhitaá¹ƒ brahmacariyaá¹ƒ carituá¹ƒ. yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• haá¹ƒ ke kÄ• sÄ• yÄ• ni vatthÄ• ni acchÄ• detvÄ• agÄ• rasmÄ• anagÄ• riyaá¹ƒ pabbajeyyaâ€™ nti 161/, ayyo mahÄ• kaccÄ• noâ€™â€™ ti.

evaá¹ƒ vutte, Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kaccÄ• no soá¹‡aá¹ƒ upÄ• sakaá¹ƒ kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ e soá¹‡a, yÄ• vajÄ«vaá¹ƒ ekabhattaá¹ƒ ekaseyyaá¹ƒ brahmacariyaá¹ƒ. iá¹…gha tvaá¹ƒ, soá¹‡ Ä• gÄ• rikabhÅ«to samÄ• no buddhÄ• naá¹ƒ sÄ• sanaá¹ƒ anuyuÃ±ja kÄ• layuttaá¹ƒ ekabha brahmacariyaâ€™â€™ nti. atha kho soá¹‡assa upÄ• sakassa kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡assa yo ahosi paá¹-ipassambhi.

dutiyampi kho ... pe ... \Se 162/ dutiyampi kho Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kaccÄ• no soá¹‡aá¹ƒ up kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``dukkaraá¹ƒ kho, soá¹‡a, yÄ• vajÄ«vaá¹ƒ ekabhattaá¹ƒ e brahmacariyaá¹ƒ. iá¹…gha tvaá¹ƒ, soá¹‡a, tattheva Ä• gÄ• rikabhÅ«to samÄ• no buddhÄ• n kÄ• layuttaá¹ƒ ekabhattaá¹ƒ ekaseyyaá¹ƒ \Ne 134/ brahmacariyaâ€™â€™ nti. dutiyampi kh kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡assa yo ahosi pabbajjÄ• bhisaá¹…khÄ• ro so paá¹-ipassambhi.

tatiyampi kho soá¹‡assa upÄ• sakassa kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡assa rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa parivitakko udapÄ• di --- ``yathÄ• yathÄ• kho ayyo mahÄ• kaccÄ• no dhammaá¹ƒ deseti n
ajjhÄ• vasatÄ• ekantaparipuá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ ekantaparisuddhaá¹ƒ saá¹…khalikhitaá¹ƒ brahmaca yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• haá¹ƒ kesamassuá¹ƒ ohÄ• retvÄ• kÄ• sÄ• yÄ• ni vatthÄ• ni acchÄ• detvÄ• a pabbajeyyaâ€™â€™ nti. tatiyampi kho soá¹‡o upÄ• sako kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡o \Be 146/ yenÄ• y tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detv ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho soá¹‡o upÄ• sako kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡o Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ

``idha mayhaá¹ƒ, bhante, rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá¹ƒ cetaso parivitakko udapÄ•
kho ayyo mahÄ• kaccÄ• no dhammaá¹ƒ deseti nayidaá¹ƒ sukaraá¹ƒ agÄ• raá¹ƒ ajjhÄ• vasa ekantaparisuddhaá¹ƒ saá¹…khalikhitaá¹ƒ \Se 163/ brahmacariyaá¹ƒ carituá¹ƒ. yaá¹ƒnÅ«nÄ• ohÄ• retvÄ• kÄ• sÄ• yÄ• ni vatthÄ• ni acchÄ• detvÄ• agÄ• rasmÄ• anagÄ• riyaá¹ƒ pabba bhante, ayyo mahÄ• kaccÄ• noâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kaccÄ• no soá¹‡aá¹ƒ upÄ• sakaá¹ƒ kuá¹-ikaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ pabbÄ avantidakkhiá¹‡Ä• patho {avanti dakkhiá¹‡apatho (Ce) } appabhikkhuko hoti. atha kho Ä• ya tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ vassÄ• naá¹ƒ accayena kicchena kasirena tato tato dasavaggaá¹ƒ bhikkhusaá Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ soá¹‡aá¹ƒ upasampÄ• desi.

atha kho Ä• yasmato soá¹‡assa vassaá¹ƒvuá¹-á¹-hassa {vassaá¹ƒvutthassa (Ce Se Ke Ee) paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá¹ƒ cetaso parivitakko udapÄ• di --- ``na kho me so bhagavÄ• samm sutoyeva me so bhagavÄ• --- `Ä«diso ca Ä«diso cÄ• â€™ ti. sace maá¹ƒ upajjhÄ• yo anujÄ taá¹ƒ bhagavantaá¹ƒ dassanÄ• ya arahantaá¹ƒ sammÄ• sambuddhaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• soá¹‡o sÄ• yanhasamayaá¹ƒ paá¹-isallÄ• nÄ• vuá¹-á¹-hito yenÄ• yas
tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detv
ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho Ä• yasmÄ• soá¹‡o Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ etadav

``idha \Ne 135/ mayhaá¹ƒ, bhante, rahogatassa paá¹-isallÄ«nassa evaá¹ƒ cetaso parivitakk kho me so bhagavÄ• sammukhÄ• diá¹-á¹-ho, api ca sutoyeva me so bhagavÄ• --- Ä«diso maá¹ƒ upajjhÄ• yo \Be 147/ anujÄ• neyya, gaccheyyÄ• haá¹ƒ \Se 164/ taá¹ƒ bhagavantaá¹ƒ sammÄ• sambuddhaâ€™â€™ nti ( ) { (gaccheyyÄ• haá¹ƒ bhante taá¹ƒ bhagavantaá¹ƒ dass sammÄ• sambuddhaá¹ƒ, sace maá¹ƒ upajjhÄ• yo anujÄ• nÄ• tÄ«ti (Vin I 257) }.

``sÄ• dhu sÄ• dhu, soá¹‡a; gaccha tvaá¹ƒ, soá¹‡a, taá¹ƒ bhagavantaá¹ƒ dassanÄ• ya arah {samÄ• sambuddhanti (sabbattha) }. dakkhissasi tvaá¹ƒ, soá¹‡a, taá¹ƒ bhagavantaá¹ƒ pÄ• s pasÄ• danÄ«yaá¹ƒ santindriyaá¹ƒ santamÄ• nasaá¹ƒ uttamadamathasamathamanuppattaá yatindriyaá¹ƒ nÄ• gaá¹ƒ. disvÄ• na mama vacanena bhagavato pÄ• de sirasÄ• vandÄ• hi, a appÄ• taá¹…kaá¹ƒ lahuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ balaá¹ƒ phÄ• suvihÄ• raá¹ƒ {phÄ• suvihÄ• raÃ±ca ( me, bhante, Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kaccÄ• no bhagavato pÄ• de sirasÄ• vandati, appÄ• bÄ• d lahuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ balaá¹ƒ phÄ• suvihÄ• raá¹ƒ {phÄ• suvihÄ• raÃ±ca (Ce) } pucchatÄ«â€™

``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho Ä• yasmÄ• soá¹‡o Ä• yasmato mahÄ• kaccÄ• nassa bhÄ anumoditvÄ• uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• senÄ• sanaá¹ƒ saá¹ƒsÄ• metvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya yena sÄ• vatthi tena cÄ• rikaá¹ cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ• no yena sÄ• vatthi jetavanaá¹ƒ anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• mo, ye tenupasaá¹…kami, upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ« Ä• yasmÄ• soá¹‡o bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``upajjhÄ• yo me, bhante, Ä• yasmÄ• ma sirasÄ• vandati, appÄ• bÄ• dhaá¹ƒ appÄ• taá¹…kaá¹ƒ lahuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ balaá¹ƒ phÄ• s (Ce) } pucchatÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

``kacci, bhikkhu, khamanÄ«yaá¹ƒ, kacci yÄ• panÄ«yaá¹ƒ, kaccisi appakilamathena addhÄ• piá¹‡á¸• akena kilantosÄ«â€™â€™ ti? ``khamanÄ«yaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• , yÄ• panÄ«yaá¹ƒ bhag bhante, addhÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• gato, na piá¹‡á¸• akena kilantomhÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha \Se 165/ kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``imassÄ• nanda senÄ• sanaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• pehÄ«â€™â€™ ti. atha kho Ä• yasmato Ä• nandassa etadahosi Ä• á¹‡Ä• peti \Be 148/ --- `imassÄ• nanda, Ä• gantukassa bhikkhuno senÄ• sanaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã bhagavÄ• tena bhikkhunÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ ekavihÄ• re vatthuá¹ƒ, icchati bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmat ekavihÄ• re vatthuâ€™â€™ nti. yasmiá¹ƒ vihÄ• re bhagavÄ• viharati, tasmiá¹ƒ vihÄ• re Ä• senÄ• sanaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• pesi.

atha \Ne 136/ kho bhagavÄ• bahudeva rattiá¹ƒ abbhokÄ• se nisajjÄ• ya vÄ«tinÄ• metvÄ• vihÄ• raá¹ƒ pÄ• visi. Ä• yasmÄ• pi kho soá¹‡o bahudeva rattiá¹ƒ abbhokÄ• se nisajjÄ• ya v pakkhÄ• letvÄ• vihÄ• raá¹ƒ pÄ• visi. atha kho bhagavÄ• rattiyÄ• paccÅ«sasamayaá¹ƒ pa soá¹‡aá¹ƒ ajjhesi --- ``paá¹-ibhÄ• tu taá¹ƒ bhikkhu dhammo bhÄ• situâ€™â€™ nti.

``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho Ä• yasmÄ• soá¹‡o bhagavato paá¹-issutvÄ• soá¸·asa aá sabbÄ• neva sarena abhaá¹‡i. atha kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmato soá¹‡assa sarabhaÃ±Ã±ap ``sÄ• dhu sÄ• dhu, bhikkhu, suggahitÄ• ni te, bhikkhu, soá¸·asa aá¹-á¹-hakavaggikÄ• ni sun sÅ«padhÄ• ritÄ• ni, kalyÄ• á¹‡iyÄ• si {kalyÄ• á¹‡iyÄ• ca (Katthaci), kalyÄ• á¹‡iyÄ• cÄ• si (samannÄ• gato vissaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya anelagaá¸·Ä• ya atthassa viÃ±Ã±Ä• paniyÄ• . kati vassos ``ekavasso ahaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``kissa pana tvaá¹ƒ \Se 166/, bhikkhu, evaá¹ƒ cira ``ciraá¹ƒ diá¹-á¹-ho {ciradiá¹-á¹-ho (Ce) } me, bhante, kÄ• mesu Ä• dÄ«navo; api ca sambÄ• bahukicco bahukaraá¹‡Ä«yoâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``disvÄ• Ä• dÄ«navaá¹ƒ loke, Ã±atvÄ• dhammaá¹ƒ nirÅ«padhiá¹ƒ.

ariyo na ramatÄ« pÄ• pe, pÄ• pe na ramatÄ« sucÄ«â€™â€™ ti || chaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ.

7. kaá¹…khÄ• revatasuttaá¹ƒ

<47> evaá¹ƒ \Ee 60/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati j anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• kaá¹…khÄ• revat pallaá¹…kaá¹ƒ Ä• bhujitvÄ• ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya attano kaá¹…khÄ• vitaraá¹‡av

addasÄ• \Be 149/ kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ kaá¹…khÄ• revataá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinnaá ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya attano kaá¹…khÄ• vitaraá¹‡avisuddhiá¹ƒ paccavekkhamÄ•

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``yÄ• \Ne 137/ kÄ• ci kaá¹…khÄ• idha vÄ• huraá¹ƒ vÄ• , sakavediyÄ• vÄ• paravediyÄ• vÄ• .

ye jhÄ• yino tÄ• pajahanti sabbÄ• ,

Ä• tÄ• pino brahmacariyaá¹ƒ carantÄ• â€™â€™ ti || sattamaá¹ƒ.

8. saá¹…ghabhedasuttaá¹ƒ

<48> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• rÄ• jagahe viharati \Se 167/ veá¸ tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando tadahuposathe pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ rÄ• jagahaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya pÄ• visi.

addasÄ• kho devadatto Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ rÄ• jagahe piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya carantaá¹
Ä• nando tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ etadavoca Ä• vuso Ä• nanda, aÃ±Ã±atreva bhagavatÄ• aÃ±Ã±atra bhikkhusaá¹…ghÄ• uposathaá¹ƒ cÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando rÄ• jagahe piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡ bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamar nisinno kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca ---

``idhÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhante, pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya rÄ• j addasÄ• kho maá¹ƒ, bhante, devadatto rÄ• jagahe piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya carantaá¹ƒ. disvÄ• na ye upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• maá¹ƒ etadavoca --- `ajjatagge dÄ• nÄ• haá¹ƒ, Ä• vuso Ä• nanda, aÃ± bhikkhusaá¹…ghÄ• uposathaá¹ƒ karissÄ• mi saá¹…ghakammÄ• ni cÄ• â€™ ti. ajja, bhante bhindissati, uposathaÃ±ca karissati saá¹…ghakammÄ• ni cÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

atha \Be 150/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá

``sukaraá¹ƒ \Ee 61/ sÄ• dhunÄ• sÄ• dhu, sÄ• dhu pÄ• pena dukkaraá¹ƒ {sukaraá¹ƒ sÄ• dh pÄ• pena dukkaraá¹ƒ (Katthaci) }.

pÄ• paá¹ƒ \Se 168/ pÄ• pena sukaraá¹ƒ, pÄ• pamariyehi dukkaraâ€™â€™ nti || aá¹-á¹-ham

9. sadhÄ• yamÄ• nasuttaá¹ƒ

<49> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 138/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• kosalesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ ca bhikkhusaá¹…ghena saddhiá¹ƒ. tena kho pana samayena sambahulÄ• mÄ• á¹‡avakÄ• bh sadhÄ• yamÄ• narÅ«pÄ• {saddÄ• yamÄ• narÅ«pÄ• (Se Ee aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• yaá¹ƒ pÄ• á¹-(Katthaci), vadhÄ• yamÄ• narÅ«pÄ• (Katthaci Ce, Katthaci-a), saddhÄ• yamÄ• narÅ«pÄ• sadhudhÄ• tuyÄ• vÄ• siddhamidanti veditabbaá¹ƒ} atikkamanti. addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• s avidÅ«re sadhÄ• yamÄ• narÅ«pe atikkante.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``parimuá¹-á¹-hÄ• paá¹‡á¸• itÄ• bhÄ• sÄ• , vÄ• cÄ• gocarabhÄ• á¹‡ino.

yÄ• vicchanti mukhÄ• yÄ• maá¹ƒ, yena nÄ«tÄ• na taá¹ƒ vidÅ«â€™â€™ ti || navamaá¹ƒ.

10. cÅ«á¸·apanthakasuttaá¹ƒ

<50> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• cÅ«á¸·apanthako {cullapanthako (Ce), cÅ avidÅ«re nisinno hoti pallaá¹…kaá¹ƒ Ä• bhujitvÄ• ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya parimukh upaá¹-á¹-hapetvÄ• .

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ cÅ«á¸·apanthakaá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinnaá¹ƒ pallaá¹ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya parimukhaá¹ƒ satiá¹ƒ upaá¹-á¹-hapetvÄ• .

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``á¹-hitena \Be 151/ kÄ• yena á¹-hitena cetasÄ• , tiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nisinno uda vÄ• sayÄ• no.

etaá¹ƒ {evaá¹ƒ (Katthaci) } satiá¹ƒ bhikkhu adhiá¹-á¹-hahÄ• no, labhetha \Se 169/ pubbÄ• pariyaá¹ƒ visesaá¹ƒ.

laddhÄ• na pubbÄ• pariyaá¹ƒ visesaá¹ƒ,

adassanaá¹ƒ maccurÄ• jassa gaccheâ€™â€™ ti || dasamaá¹ƒ.

soá¹‡avaggo {soá¹‡atheravaggo (Se Ke Katthaci) mahÄ• vaggo (aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya samet

tassuddÄ• naá¹ƒ \Ne 139/ ---

piyo appÄ• yukÄ• kuá¹-á¹-hÄ«, kumÄ• rakÄ• uposatho.

soá¹‡o ca revato bhedo, sadhÄ• ya panthakena cÄ• ti ||

6. jaccandhavaggo

1. Ä• yusaá¹…khÄ• rossajjanasuttaá¹ƒ

<51> evaá¹ƒ \Ee 62/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• vesÄ• liyaá¹ƒ viharati ma kÅ«á¹-Ä• gÄ• rasÄ• lÄ• yaá¹ƒ. atha kho bhagavÄ• pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pa piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya pÄ• visi. vesÄ• liyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• a Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``gaá¹‡hÄ• hi, Ä• nanda, nisÄ«danaá¹ƒ. yena c } cetiyaá¹ƒ tenupasaá¹…kamissÄ• ma divÄ• vihÄ• rÄ• yÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavato paá¹-issutvÄ• nisÄ«dan piá¹-á¹-hito piá¹-á¹-hito anubandhi. atha kho bhagavÄ• yena cÄ• pÄ• laá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ tenupa upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• paÃ±Ã±atte Ä• sane nisÄ«di. nisajja \Se 170/ kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasma
---

``ramaá¹‡Ä«yÄ• , Ä• nanda, vesÄ• lÄ«; ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ udenaá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä«ya
ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ sattambaá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ bahuputtaá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ cÄ• pÄ• laá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ. yassa kassaci, Ä• nanda \Be 152/, catt bhÄ• vitÄ• bahulÄ«katÄ• yÄ• nÄ«katÄ• vatthukatÄ• anuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• paricitÄ• susamÄ• ra { (Ä• nanda) (Katthaci) } kappaá¹ƒ vÄ• tiá¹-á¹-heyya kappÄ• vasesaá¹ƒ vÄ• . tathÄ• gatass iddhipÄ• dÄ• bhÄ• vitÄ• bahulÄ«katÄ• yÄ• nÄ«katÄ• vatthukatÄ• anuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• paricit Ä• kaá¹…khamÄ• no, Ä• nanda, tathÄ• gato kappaá¹ƒ vÄ• tiá¹-á¹-heyya kappÄ• vasesaá¹ƒ evampi \Ne 140/ kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavatÄ• oá¸·Ä• rike nimitte kayiramÄ• ne, kayiramÄ• ne, nÄ• sakkhi paá¹-ivijjhituá¹ƒ; na bhagavantaá¹ƒ yÄ• ci --- ``tiá¹-á¹-hatu, bhante

kappaá¹ƒ; tiá¹-á¹-hatu sugato kappaá¹ƒ bahujanahitÄ• ya bahujanasukhÄ• ya lokÄ• nukamp sukhÄ• ya devamanussÄ• naâ€™â€™ nti, yathÄ• taá¹ƒ mÄ• rena pariyuá¹-á¹-hitacitto \Ee
... \Se 171/ tatiyampi kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi ---

``ramaá¹‡Ä«yÄ• , Ä• nanda, vesÄ• lÄ«; ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ udenaá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä«ya
ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ sattambaá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ bahuputtaá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä cetiyaá¹ƒ; ramaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ cÄ• pÄ• laá¹ƒ cetiyaá¹ƒ. yassa kassaci, Ä• nanda, cattÄ• ro iddh bahulÄ«katÄ• yÄ• nÄ«katÄ• vatthukatÄ• anuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• paricitÄ• susamÄ• raddhÄ• , so tiá¹-á¹-heyya kappÄ• vasesaá¹ƒ vÄ• . tathÄ• gatassa kho, Ä• nanda, cattÄ• ro iddhipÄ• dÄ• yÄ• nÄ«katÄ• vatthukatÄ• anuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• paricitÄ• susamÄ• raddhÄ• . Ä• kaá¹…khamÄ• vÄ• tiá¹-á¹-heyya kappÄ• vasesaá¹ƒ \Se 172/ vÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

evampi kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavatÄ• oá¸·Ä• rike nimitte kayiramÄ• ne, oá¸·Ä• rik nÄ• sakkhi paá¹-ivijjhituá¹ƒ; na bhagavantaá¹ƒ yÄ• ci --- ``tiá¹-á¹-hatu, bhante, bhagavÄ• ka tiá¹-á¹-hatu sugato kappaá¹ƒ bahujanahitÄ• ya bahujanasukhÄ• ya lokÄ• nukampÄ• ya atth devamanussÄ• naâ€™â€™ nti, yathÄ• taá¹ƒ mÄ• rena pariyuá¹-á¹-hitacitto.

atha kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``gaccha tvaá¹ƒ, Ä• nand maÃ±Ã±asÄ«â€™â€™ ti. ``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavato uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ katvÄ• avidÅ«re a nisÄ«di.

atha kho mÄ• ro pÄ• pimÄ• , acirapakkante Ä• yasmante Ä• nande, yena bhagavÄ• tenup ekamantaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ• si. ekamantaá¹ƒ á¹-hito kho mÄ• ro pÄ• pimÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ eta

``parinibbÄ• tu dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• ; parinibbÄ• tu sugato; parinibbÄ• nakÄ• lo dÄ• n bhÄ• sitÄ• kho panesÄ• , bhante, bhagavatÄ• vÄ• cÄ• --- `na tÄ• vÄ• haá¹ƒ, pÄ• pima, pa yÄ• va me bhikkhÅ« na sÄ• vakÄ• bhavissanti viyattÄ• vinÄ«tÄ• visÄ• radÄ• {visÄ• radÄ 8.70), visÄ• radappattÄ• yogakhemÄ• (Ce Ee Katthaci), visÄ• radappattÄ• yogakhemakÄ dhammadharÄ• dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ• anudhamm uggahetvÄ• Ä• cikkhissanti desessanti paÃ±Ã±apessanti paá¹-á¹-hapessanti vivarissanti vi uttÄ• nÄ«karissanti \Se 173/ uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ• riyaá¹ƒ dhammaá¹ƒ desessantÄ«â€™ ti. etarahi kho pana, bhante {santi kho Ee SN c V 822) } bhikkhÅ« bhagavato sÄ• vakÄ• viyattÄ• vinÄ«tÄ• visÄ• radÄ• bahussut
dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ• anudhammacÄ• rino sakaá Ä• cikkhanti desenti paÃ±Ã±apenti paá¹-á¹-hapenti vivaranti vibhajanti uttÄ• nÄ«karonti upp parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ niggahetvÄ• sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ• riyaá¹ƒ dha dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• ; parinibbÄ• tu sugato; parinibbÄ• nakÄ• lo dÄ• ni, bhante, bhaga

``bhÄ• sitÄ• kho panesÄ• , bhante, bhagavatÄ• vÄ• cÄ• --- `na tÄ• vÄ• haá¹ƒ, pÄ• pima, bhikkhuniyo na sÄ• vikÄ• bhavissanti viyattÄ• vinÄ«tÄ• visÄ• radÄ• bahussutÄ• dhamm
dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ• anudhammacÄ• riniyo saka
Ä• cikkhissanti desessanti paÃ±Ã±apessanti paá¹-á¹-hapessanti vivarissanti vibhajissanti ut
uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ niggahetvÄ• sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ
desessantÄ«â€™ ti. etarahi kho pana, bhante \Ee 64/, bhikkhuniyo bhagavato sÄ• vikÄ• vi visÄ• radÄ• bahussutÄ• dhammadharÄ• dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«ci anudhammacÄ• riniyo sakaá¹ƒ Ä• cariyakaá¹ƒ uggahetvÄ• Ä• cikkhanti desenti paÃ±Ã±ap vibhajanti uttÄ• nÄ«karonti \Se 174/ uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena sunigg sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ• riyaá¹ƒ dhammaá¹ƒ desenti. parinibbÄ• tu dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• ; parini parinibbÄ• nakÄ• lo dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavato.

``bhÄ• sitÄ• kho panesÄ• , bhante, bhagavatÄ• vÄ• cÄ• --- `na tÄ• vÄ• haá¹ƒ, pÄ• pima,
upÄ• sakÄ• na sÄ• vakÄ• bhavissanti viyattÄ• vinÄ«tÄ• visÄ• radÄ• bahussutÄ• dhamm
dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ• anudhammacÄ• rino sakaá
Ä• cikkhissanti desessanti paÃ±Ã±apessanti paá¹-á¹-hapessanti vivarissanti vibhajissanti ut
uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ niggahetvÄ• sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ
desessantÄ«â€™ ti. etarahi kho pana, bhante, upÄ• sakÄ• bhagavato sÄ• vakÄ• viyattÄ•
bahussutÄ• dhammadharÄ• dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ
Ä• cariyakaá¹ƒ \Ne 142/ uggahetvÄ• Ä• cikkhanti desenti paÃ±Ã±apenti paá¹-á¹-hapenti viv uttÄ• nÄ«karonti uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ niggahetvÄ dhammaá¹ƒ desenti. parinibbÄ• tu dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• ; parinibbÄ• tu sugato; parinibb bhagavato.

``bhÄ• sitÄ• kho panesÄ• , bhante, bhagavatÄ• vÄ• cÄ• --- `na tÄ• vÄ• haá¹ƒ, pÄ• pima, upÄ• sikÄ• na sÄ• vikÄ• bhavissanti viyattÄ• vinÄ«tÄ• visÄ• radÄ• bahussutÄ• dhamma
dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ• anudhammacÄ• riniyo saka
Ä• cikkhissanti desessanti paÃ±Ã±apessanti paá¹-á¹-hapessanti vivarissanti vibhajissanti ut
uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ niggahetvÄ• sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ
desessantÄ«â€™ ti. etarahi kho pana, bhante, upÄ• sikÄ• bhagavato sÄ• vikÄ• viyattÄ• v
bahussutÄ• dhammadharÄ• dhammÄ• nudhammappaá¹-ipannÄ• sÄ• mÄ«cippaá¹-ipannÄ
Ä• cariyakaá¹ƒ uggahetvÄ• Ä• cikkhanti desenti paÃ±Ã±apenti paá¹-á¹-hapenti vivaranti vib
uppannaá¹ƒ parappavÄ• daá¹ƒ sahadhammena suniggahitaá¹ƒ niggahetvÄ• sappÄ• á¹-ihÄ
parinibbÄ• tu dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• ; parinibbÄ• tu sugato; parinibbÄ• nakÄ• lo dÄ• ni, b

``bhÄ• sitÄ• \Be 155/ kho panesÄ• , bhante, bhagavatÄ• vÄ• cÄ• --- `na tÄ• vÄ• haá¹ƒ, p yÄ• va me idaá¹ƒ brahmacariyaá¹ƒ na iddhaÃ±ceva bhavissati phÄ«taÃ±ca vitthÄ• rikaá¹ƒ b

puthubhÅ«taá¹ƒ yÄ• va devamanussehi suppakÄ• sitaâ€™ nti. etarahi kho pana, bhante {ta 822) }, bhagavato brahmacariyaá¹ƒ iddhaÃ±ceva phÄ«taÃ±ca vitthÄ• rikaá¹ƒ bÄ• hujaÃ±Ã± devamanussehi suppakÄ• sitaá¹ƒ. parinibbÄ• tu dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• ; parinibbÄ• tu su dÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavatoâ€™â€™ ti.

evaá¹ƒ vutte, bhagavÄ• mÄ• raá¹ƒ pÄ• pimantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``appossukko \Se 176/ tv ciraá¹ƒ tathÄ• gatassa parinibbÄ• naá¹ƒ bhavissati. ito tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ mÄ• sÄ• naá¹ƒ accayen parinibbÄ• yissatÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• cÄ• pÄ• le cetiye sato sampajÄ• no Ä• yusaá¹…khÄ• raá¹ƒ ossajji. oss Ä• yusaá¹…khÄ• re mahÄ• bhÅ«micÄ• lo ahosi bhiá¹ƒsanako lomahaá¹ƒso, devadundubhiy ca phaliá¹ƒsu.

atha \Ne 143/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``tulamatulaÃ±ca sambhavaá¹ƒ, bhavasaá¹…khÄ• ramavassaji muni.

ajjhattarato samÄ• hito,

abhindi kavacamivattasambhavaâ€™â€™ nti || paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

2. sattajaá¹-ilasuttaá¹ƒ

<52> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati pubbÄ• migÄ• ramÄ• tupÄ• sÄ• de. tena kho pana samayena \Ee 65/ bhagavÄ• sÄ• yanhasamaya bahidvÄ• rakoá¹-á¹-hake nisinno hoti. atha kho rÄ• jÄ• pasenadi kosalo yena bhagavÄ• ten upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di.

tena \Be 156/ kho pana samayena satta ca jaá¹-ilÄ• , satta ca nigaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• , satta ca acel
ekasÄ• á¹-akÄ• , satta ca paribbÄ• jakÄ• , parÅ«á¸·hakacchanakhalomÄ• khÄ• rivividhamÄ (Katthaci SN a I 122; DN I 280) } bhagavato avidÅ«re atikkamanti.

addasÄ• kho rÄ• jÄ• pasenadi kosalo te satta ca jaá¹-ile, satta ca nigaá¹‡á¹-he, satta ca a ekasÄ• á¹-ake, satta ca paribbÄ• jake \Se 177/, parÅ«á¸·hakacchanakhalome khÄ• rivividha avidÅ«re atikkamante. disvÄ• na uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• ekaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ uttarÄ• saá¹…gaá¹ƒ k dakkhiá¹‡ajÄ• á¹‡umaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ pathaviyaá¹ƒ {paá¹-haviyaá¹ƒ (Ce Se Ee) } nihantvÄ• y jaá¹-ilÄ• , satta ca nigaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• , satta ca acelakÄ• , satta ca ekasÄ• á¹-akÄ• , satta ca par tenaÃ±jaliá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä• metvÄ• tikkhattuá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ sÄ• vesi --- ``rÄ• jÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhante, rÄ• jÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhante, pasenadi kosalo; rÄ• jÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhante, pasenadi kosaloâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho rÄ• jÄ• pasenadi kosalo acirapakkantesu tesu sattasu ca jaá¹-ilesu, sattasu ca nig sattasu ca acelakesu, sattasu ca ekasÄ• á¹-akesu, sattasu ca paribbÄ• jakesu, yena bhagav
upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nis pasenadi kosalo bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``ye kho {ye ca kho (Ce), ye ca te (Se), ye nu te (SN a I 122), ye nu kho keci (?) } bhante, loke arahanto vÄ• arahattamaggaá¹ƒ vÄ• sam aÃ±Ã±atareâ€™â€™ ti {aÃ±Ã±atarÄ• ti (Ce Katthaci), aÃ±Ã±ataroti (Se Ee) }.

``dujjÄ• naá¹ƒ kho etaá¹ƒ, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, tayÄ• gihinÄ• kÄ• mabhoginÄ• puttasambÄ• dh kÄ• sikacandanaá¹ƒ paccanubhontena mÄ• lÄ• gandhavilepanaá¹ƒ dhÄ• rayantena jÄ• tarÄ ime vÄ• arahanto, ime vÄ• arahattamaggaá¹ƒ samÄ• pannÄ• ti.

``saá¹ƒvÄ• sena kho, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, sÄ«laá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. taÃ±ca kho dÄ«ghena addhun
(Se Ce Se-a) }, manasikarotÄ• no amanasikarotÄ• , paÃ±Ã±avatÄ• no duppaÃ±Ã±ena. sa mahÄ• rÄ• ja, soceyyaá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. taÃ±ca kho dÄ«ghena addhunÄ• \Be 157/ \Se 178 manasikarotÄ• no amanasikarotÄ• , paÃ±Ã±avatÄ• no duppaÃ±Ã±ena. Ä• padÄ• su kho, ca kho dÄ«ghena addhunÄ• na ittaraá¹ƒ, manasikarotÄ• no amanasikarotÄ• , paÃ±Ã±avat sÄ• kacchÄ• ya kho, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, paÃ±Ã±Ä• veditabbÄ• . sÄ• ca kho dÄ«ghena addhun amanasikarotÄ• , paÃ±Ã±avatÄ• no duppaÃ±Ã±enÄ• â€™â€™ ti \Ee 66/.

``acchariyaá¹ƒ, bhante, abbhutaá¹ƒ, bhante! yÄ• va subhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ cidaá¹ƒ {subhÄ• sitamid bhante, bhagavatÄ• --- `dujjÄ• naá¹ƒ kho etaá¹ƒ, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, tayÄ• gihinÄ• puttasambÄ ajjhÄ• vasantena kÄ• sikacandanaá¹ƒ paccanubhontena mÄ• lÄ• gandhavilepanaá¹ƒ dhÄ• sÄ• diyantena --- ime vÄ• arahanto, ime vÄ• arahattamaggaá¹ƒ samÄ• pannÄ• ti. saá¹ƒvÄ sÄ«laá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ ... pe ... sÄ• kacchÄ• ya kho, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, paÃ±Ã±Ä• veditabbÄ• .
addhunÄ• na ittaraá¹ƒ, manasikarotÄ• no \Se 179/ amanasikarotÄ• , paÃ±Ã±avatÄ• no du

``ete, bhante, mama purisÄ• corÄ• {carÄ• (SN a I 122) } ocarakÄ• janapadaá¹ƒ ocaritvÄ• paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ ociá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ ahaá¹ƒ pacchÄ• osÄ• rissÄ• mi {otarissÄ• mi (Ce Se Ee), oyÄ osÄ• payissÄ• mi (SN a I 122) }. idÄ• ni te, bhante, taá¹ƒ rajojallaá¹ƒ pavÄ• hetvÄ• sunhÄ• kappitakesamassÅ« odÄ• tavatthavasanÄ• paÃ±cahi kÄ• maguá¹‡ehi samappitÄ• samaá¹ paricÄ• ressantÄ«â€™â€™ {cÄ• riyanti (Se) } ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``na \Ne 145/ vÄ• yameyya sabbattha, nÄ• Ã±Ã±assa puriso siyÄ• .

nÄ• Ã±Ã±aá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya jÄ«veyya, dhammena na vaá¹‡iá¹ƒ {vÄ• á¹‡iá¹ƒ (Ce), vaá¹‡Ä« (Se
(Katthaci) } careâ€™â€™ ti || dutiyaá¹ƒ.

3. paccavekkhaá¹‡asuttaá¹ƒ

<53> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• attano aneke \Be 158/ pÄ• pake akusale dh nisinno hoti, aneke ca kusale dhamme bhÄ• vanÄ• pÄ• ripÅ«riá¹ƒ gate.

atha kho bhagavÄ• {etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• (Ce Katthaci) } attano aneke pÄ• pake akusale aneke ca kusale dhamme bhÄ• vanÄ• pÄ• ripÅ«riá¹ƒ gate {etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• (Ce Katth imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ• nesi ---

``ahu pubbe tadÄ• nÄ• hu, nÄ• hu pubbe tadÄ• ahu.

na cÄ• hu na ca bhavissati, na cetarahi vijjatÄ«â€™â€™ ti || tatiyaá¹ƒ.

4. paá¹-hamanÄ• nÄ• titthiyasuttaá¹ƒ

<54> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena sambahulÄ• \Se 180/ nÄ• nÄ• titthiyasamaá¹‡abrÄ• h sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ paá¹-ivasanti nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• khantikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rucikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hinissayanissitÄ• .

santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassato loko, ida moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá loko, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• e
--- ``antavÄ• loko, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡a evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``anantavÄ• loko, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. s evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``taá¹ƒ jÄ«vaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ sarÄ«raá¹ƒ, idameva saccaá¹ƒ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``aÃ±Ã±a sarÄ«raá¹ƒ, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``hoti tathÄ• gato paraá¹ƒ maraá¹‡Ä• \Ne 146/, idameva saccaá¹ƒ mo santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``na hoti tathÄ
idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒ
``hoti ca na ca hoti tathÄ• gato paraá¹ƒ maraá¹‡Ä• , idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™

159/ samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``neva hoti na na hoti maraá¹‡Ä• , idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti.

te bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• \Se 181/ kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• pannÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ n
viharanti --- ``ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, ediso dhammoâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ
pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tap
tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ
nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ ---

``idha, bhante, sambahulÄ• nÄ• nÄ• titthiyasamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡aparibbÄ• jakÄ• sÄ• va
nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• khantikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rucikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hinissayanissitÄ

``santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- `sassato loko, id moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™ nti ... pe ... \Se 182/ te bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ•
mukhasattÄ«hi vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, e

``aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• , bhikkhave, paribbÄ• jakÄ• andhÄ• acakkhukÄ• ; atthaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti, dhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti, adhammaá¹ƒ \Ee 68/ na jÄ• nanti. te atthaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• anattha
ajÄ• nantÄ• adhammaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• par
vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, ediso dhammoâ

``bhÅ«tapubbaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, imissÄ• yeva sÄ• vatthiyÄ• aÃ±Ã±ataro rÄ• jÄ• ahosi. atha aÃ±Ã±ataraá¹ƒ purisaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- `ehi tvaá¹ƒ, ambho purisa, yÄ• vatakÄ• sÄ• vatthiy ekajjhaá¹ƒ sannipÄ• tehÄ«â€™ ti. `evaá¹ƒ, devÄ• â€™ ti kho, bhikkhave, so puriso \Ne 147 paá¹-issutvÄ• yÄ• vatakÄ• sÄ• vatthiyÄ• jaccandhÄ• te \Se 183/ sabbe gahetvÄ• yena s upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• taá¹ƒ rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ etadavoca --- `sannipÄ• titÄ• kho te, deva, yÄ• vat jaccandhÄ• â€™ ti \Be 160/. `tena hi, bhaá¹‡e, jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthiá¹ƒ dassehÄ«â€™ t kho, bhikkhave, so puriso tassa raÃ±Ã±o paá¹-issutvÄ• jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthiá¹ƒ dasses

``ekaccÄ• naá¹ƒ jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthissa sÄ«saá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hat jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthissa kaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. e jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthissa dantaá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. ekacc hatthissa soá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. ekaccÄ• naá¹ƒ jacc kÄ• yaá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. ekaccÄ• naá¹ƒ jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. ekaccÄ• naá¹ƒ jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthissa

(Se) } dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. ekaccÄ• naá¹ƒ jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatt naá¹…guá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti. ekaccÄ• naá¹ƒ jaccand vÄ• ladhiá¹ƒ dassesi --- `ediso, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™â€™ â€™ ti.

``atha kho, bhikkhave, so puriso jaccandhÄ• naá¹ƒ hatthiá¹ƒ dassetvÄ• yena so rÄ• jÄ• te upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• taá¹ƒ rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ etadavoca --- `diá¹-á¹-ho kho tehi, deva, jaccandhe kÄ• laá¹ƒ maÃ±Ã±asÄ«â€™ ti.

``atha kho, bhikkhave, so rÄ• jÄ• yena te jaccandhÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamit
--- `diá¹-á¹-ho vo, jaccandhÄ• , hatthÄ«â€™ ti \Se 184/? `evaá¹ƒ, deva, diá¹-á¹-ho no hatthÄ jaccandhÄ• , kÄ«diso hatthÄ«â€™ ti?

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa sÄ«saá¹ƒ diá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ ahosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒsu hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi kumbhoâ€™ ti.

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa kaá¹‡á¹‡o diá¹-á¹-ho ahosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒsu --- hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi suppoâ€™ ti.

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa danto diá¹-á¹-ho ahosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒsu \Ee 69/
hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi khÄ«loâ€™ ti.

``yehi \Ne 148/, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa soá¹‡á¸• o diá¹-á¹-ho ahosi, te evamÄ• h deva, hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi naá¹…galÄ«sÄ• â€™ ti.

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa kÄ• yo diá¹-á¹-ho ahosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒsu --- `ec seyyathÄ• pi koá¹-á¹-hoâ€™ ti.

``yehi \Be 161/, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa pÄ• do diá¹-á¹-ho ahosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒ hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi thÅ«á¹‡oâ€™ ti.

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa satthi diá¹-á¹-ho {piá¹-á¹-hi diá¹-á¹-Ä• (Katthaci Ce
diá¹-á¹-hÄ• (Katthaci Ce) } hosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒsu --- `ediso, deva, hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa naá¹…guá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ diá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ ahosi, te evamÄ deva, hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi musaloâ€™ ti.

``yehi, bhikkhave, jaccandhehi hatthissa vÄ• ladhi diá¹-á¹-ho ahosi, te evamÄ• haá¹ƒsu --- `
hatthÄ« seyyathÄ• pi sammajjanÄ«â€™ ti.

``te `ediso hatthÄ«, nediso hatthÄ«; nediso hatthÄ«, ediso hatthÄ«â€™â€™ â€™ ti aÃ±Ã±a muá¹-á¹-hÄ«hi saá¹ƒsumbhiá¹ƒsu {saá¹ƒyujjhiá¹ƒsu (Katthaci Ce, Se Ee) }. tena ca pana, bh attamano ahosi.

``evameva kho, bhikkhave, aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• \Se 185/ paribbÄ• jakÄ• andhÄ• acakkhukÄ• anatthaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti, dhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti adhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti. te atthaá¹ƒ ajÄ• ajÄ• nantÄ• , dhammaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• adhammaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• ka aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ mukhasattÄ«hi vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhamm dhammoâ€™â€™ â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``imesu kira sajjanti, eke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• .

viggayha naá¹ƒ vivadanti, janÄ• ekaá¹…gadassinoâ€™â€™ ti || catutthaá¹ƒ.

5. dutiyanÄ• nÄ• titthiyasuttaá¹ƒ

<55> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 149/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena sambahulÄ• nÄ• nÄ• titthiyasamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡aparibbÄ• jakÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ paá¹-ivasanti nÄ• nA nÄ• nÄ• khantikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rucikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hinissayanissitÄ• .

santeke \Be 162/ samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassato idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• ev
--- ``asassato attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke sa evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassato ca asassato ca {sassato asassato (Ce) } att idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke \Se 186/ samaá¹‡abrÄ• hma evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``neva sassato nÄ• sassato attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ mog santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sayaá¹ƒkato attÄ saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• ``paraá¹ƒkato attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke sa evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sayaá¹ƒkato ca paraá¹ƒkato ca {sayaá¹ƒkato paraá¹ loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaa evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``asayaá¹ƒkÄ• ro aparaá¹ƒkÄ• ro {asayaá¹ƒkÄ• ro ca aparaá¹ƒkÄ• ro adhiccasamuppanno attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. sa evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassataá¹ƒ sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idame

moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santek evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassataÃ±ca asassataÃ±ca {sassataá¹ƒ asassataá¹ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡ab evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``neva sassataá¹ƒ nÄ• sassataá¹ƒ sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca \Se 187/ loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nt samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evadiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``paraá¹ƒkataá¹ƒ sukhadukkha
idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒ ``sayaá¹ƒkataÃ±ca paraá¹ƒkataÃ±ca {sayaá¹ƒkathaá¹ƒ paraá¹ƒkataá¹ƒ (Ce) } sukhadukkha ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``asayaá¹ƒkÄ• raá¹ƒ aparaá¹ƒkÄ• raá¹ƒ adhiccasamuppannaá¹ƒ sukh ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti.

te bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• pannÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ mukhasat ``ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, ediso dhammoâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ
pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tap
tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ
nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ ---

``idha, bhante, sambahulÄ• nÄ• nÄ• titthiyasamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡aparibbÄ• jakÄ• sÄ• va
nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• khantikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rucikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hinissayanissit

``santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- `sassato attÄ• c saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™ nti ... pe ... te bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• \Se 188/
aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ mukhasattÄ«hi vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhamm
dhammoâ€™â€™ â€™ ti.

``aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• , bhikkhave, paribbÄ• jakÄ• andhÄ• acakkhukÄ• ; atthaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti
dhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti adhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti. te atthaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• anatthaá¹ƒ ajÄ
ajÄ• nantÄ• adhammaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• par
vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, ediso dhammoâ

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``imesu kira sajjanti, eke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• .

antarÄ• va visÄ«danti, appatvÄ• va tamogadhaâ€™â€™ nti || paÃ±camaá¹ƒ.

6. tatiyanÄ• nÄ• titthiyasuttaá¹ƒ

<56> evaá¹ƒ \Be 164/ \Ne 151/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena sambahulÄ•
nÄ• nÄ• titthiyasamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡aparibbÄ• jakÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ paá¹-ivasanti nÄ• n nÄ• nÄ• khantikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rucikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hinissayanissitÄ• .

santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassato attÄ• c
saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• ``asassato attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke sam evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassato ca asassato ca \Se 189/ attÄ• ca loko ca, i moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá
nÄ• sassato attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke sa evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sayaá¹ƒkato attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ m santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``paraá¹ƒkato saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino ``sayaá¹ƒkato ca paraá¹ƒkato ca attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™ samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``asayaá¹ƒkÄ• ro aparaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• h evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassataá¹ƒ sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ m santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``asassataá¹ƒ loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sassataÃ±ca asassataÃ±ca sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idam
moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá sassataá¹ƒ nÄ• sassataá¹ƒ sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghama samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino \Se 190/ evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``sayaá¹ƒkataá¹ƒ loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™â€™ nti. santi paneke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hma evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``paraá¹ƒkataá¹ƒ sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ nti \Be 165/. santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``say paraá¹ƒkataÃ±ca sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€ samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- ``asayaá¹ƒkÄ• raá¹ƒ apara adhiccasamuppannaá¹ƒ sukhadukkhaá¹ƒ attÄ• ca loko ca, idameva saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±

te \Ne 152/ bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• pannÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ
viharanti --- ``ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, ediso dhammoâ€™â€™ ti.

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÅ
pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tap
tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ
nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ ---

``idha, bhante, sambahulÄ• nÄ• nÄ• titthiyasamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡aparibbÄ• jakÄ• sÄ• va
nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• khantikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rucikÄ• nÄ• nÄ• diá¹-á¹-hinissayanissit

``santeke samaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• evaá¹ƒvÄ• dino evaá¹ƒdiá¹-á¹-hino --- `sassato attÄ• c
saccaá¹ƒ moghamaÃ±Ã±aâ€™ nti \Se 191/ ... pe ... te bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ•
aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ mukhasattÄ«hi vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhamm
dhammoâ€™â€™ â€™ ti.

``aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• , bhikkhave, paribbÄ• jakÄ• andhÄ• acakkhukÄ• . te atthaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nan jÄ• nanti, dhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti adhammaá¹ƒ na jÄ• nanti. te atthaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• anatt dhammaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• adhammaá¹ƒ ajÄ• nantÄ• bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• v
mukhasattÄ«hi vitudantÄ• viharanti --- `ediso dhammo, nediso dhammo; nediso dhammo, e

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``ahaá¹…kÄ• rapasutÄ• yaá¹ƒ \Be 166/ pajÄ• , paraá¹ƒkÄ• rÅ«pasaá¹ƒhitÄ• .

etadeke nÄ• bbhaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒsu, na naá¹ƒ sallanti addasuá¹ƒ ||

``etaÃ±ca sallaá¹ƒ paá¹-ikacca {paá¹-igacca (Ce Se Ke Ee) } passato.

ahaá¹ƒ karomÄ«ti na tassa hoti.

paro \Se 193/ karotÄ«ti na tassa hoti ||

``mÄ• nupetÄ• \Ne 153/ ayaá¹ƒ pajÄ• , mÄ• naganthÄ• mÄ• navinibaddhÄ• {mÄ• navinib

diá¹-á¹-hÄ«su sÄ• rambhakathÄ• , saá¹ƒsÄ• raá¹ƒ nÄ• tivattatÄ«â€™â€™ ti || chaá¹-á¹-haá

7. subhÅ«tisuttaá¹ƒ

<57> evaá¹ƒ \Ee 71/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati j anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• subhÅ«ti bhagav pallaá¹…kaá¹ƒ Ä• bhujitvÄ• ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya avitakkaá¹ƒ samÄ• dhiá¹ƒ sam

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ subhÅ«tiá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinnaá¹ƒ pallaá¹…kaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya avitakkaá¹ƒ samÄ• dhiá¹ƒ samÄ• pannaá¹ƒ.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``yassa vitakkÄ• vidhÅ«pitÄ• , ajjhattaá¹ƒ suvikappitÄ• asesÄ• .

taá¹ƒ saá¹…gamaticca arÅ«pasaÃ±Ã±Ä«, catuyogÄ• tigato na jÄ• tu metÄ«â€™â€™ ti {na jÄ• timetÄ«ti (Se Ee-a pÄ• á¹-hantaraá¹ƒ) }

8. gaá¹‡ikÄ• suttaá¹ƒ

<58> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• rÄ• jagahe viharati veá¸·uvane k pana samayena rÄ• jagahe dve pÅ«gÄ• aÃ±Ã±atarissÄ• gaá¹‡ikÄ• ya sÄ• rattÄ• honti pa
bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• pannÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ pÄ• á¹‡Ä«hip leá¸• á¸• Å«hipi upakkamanti \Be 167/, daá¹‡á¸• ehipi upakkamanti, satthehipi upakkamanti.
nigacchanti maraá¹‡amattampi dukkhaá¹ƒ.

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ
pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. rÄ• jagahe piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tapaá¹-i tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu \Ne 154/; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekan ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ ---

``idha, bhante, rÄ• jagahe dve pÅ«gÄ• aÃ±Ã±atarissÄ• gaá¹‡ikÄ• ya sÄ• rattÄ• paá¹-ibac
bhaá¹‡á¸• anajÄ• tÄ• kalahajÄ• tÄ• vivÄ• dÄ• pannÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ pÄ• á¹‡Ä«hip upakkamanti, daá¹‡á¸• ehipi upakkamanti, satthehipi upakkamanti. te tattha maraá¹‡ampi ni maraá¹‡amattampi dukkhaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``yaÃ±ca pattaá¹ƒ yaÃ±ca pattabbaá¹ƒ, ubhayametaá¹ƒ rajÄ• nukiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ, Ä• turassÄ• n

sikkhÄ• sÄ• rÄ• sÄ«labbataá¹ƒ jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ brahmacariyaá¹ƒ upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nasÄ• rÄ• , ayam
--- `natthi kÄ• mesu dosoâ€™ ti, ayaá¹ƒ dutiyo anto. iccete \Ee 72/ ubho antÄ• kaá¹-asivaá kaá¹-asiyo diá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• henti. etete ubho ante anabhiÃ±Ã±Ä• ya olÄ«yanti eke, at 195/ ca kho te abhiÃ±Ã±Ä• ya tatra ca nÄ• hesuá¹ƒ, tena ca nÄ• maÃ±Ã±iá¹ƒsu, vaá¹-á¹-aá paÃ±Ã±Ä• panÄ• yÄ• â€™â€™ ti. aá¹-á¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

9. upÄ• tidhÄ• vantisuttaá¹ƒ

<59> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• rattandhakÄ• ratimisÄ• yaá¹ƒ abbhokÄ• se jhÄ• yamÄ• nesu.

tena kho pana samayena sambahulÄ• adhipÄ• takÄ• tesu telappadÄ«pesu Ä• pÄ• taparip byasanaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjanti {natthi sÄ«haá¸·apotthake}, anayabyasanaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjanti \Be 168/ {n sÄ«haá¸·apotthake}. addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• te sambahule adhipÄ• take tesu telappadÄ«p anayaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjante, byasanaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjante, anayabyasanaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjante.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``upÄ• tidhÄ• vanti \Ne 155/ na sÄ• ramenti, navaá¹ƒ navaá¹ƒ bandhanaá¹ƒ brÅ«hayanti.

patanti pajjotamivÄ• dhipÄ• takÄ• { ... dhipÄ• tÄ• (Ce Se) },

diá¹-á¹-he sute itiheke niviá¹-á¹-hÄ• â€™â€™ ti || navamaá¹ƒ.

10. uppajjantisuttaá¹ƒ

<60> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. atha kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…ka ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavantaá¹ƒ etada

``yÄ• vakÄ«vaÃ±ca, bhante, tathÄ• gatÄ• loke nuppajjanti arahanto sammÄ• sambuddhÄ• aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ• jakÄ• sakkatÄ• honti garukatÄ• mÄ• nitÄ• pÅ«jitÄ• apacitÄ• l cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ. yato ca k uppajjanti arahanto sammÄ• sambuddhÄ• atha aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ• jakÄ• asakkatÄ• apÅ«jitÄ• anapacitÄ• na lÄ• bhino cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabh

bhagavÄ• yeva \Ee 73/ {bhagavÄ• ceva (Se) } dÄ• ni, bhante, sakkato hoti garukato mÄ• n lÄ• bhÄ« cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ, ``evametaá¹ƒ \Be 169/, Ä• nanda, yÄ• vakÄ«vaÃ±ca, Ä• nanda, tathÄ• gatÄ• loke nuppajj sammÄ• sambuddhÄ• tÄ• va aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ• jakÄ• sakkatÄ• honti garukatÄ• n lÄ• bhino cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ tathÄ• gatÄ• loke uppajjanti arahanto sammÄ• sambuddhÄ• atha aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• paribbÄ agarukatÄ• amÄ• nitÄ• apÅ«jitÄ• anapacitÄ• na lÄ• bhino cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ. tathÄ• ga dÄ• ni sakkato hoti garukato mÄ• nito pÅ«jito apacito lÄ• bhÄ« cÄ«varapiá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tasenÄ• sanagilÄ• napaccayabhesajjaparikkhÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ, bhikkhus

atha \Ne 156/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``obhÄ• sati \Se 197/ tÄ• va so kimi, yÄ• va na unnamate {uggamati (Ce), unnamati (Se) } pabhaá¹…karo.

(sa) { ( ) natthi Ce Se potthakesu} verocanamhi uggate, hatappabho hoti na cÄ• pi bhÄ• sati ||

``evaá¹ƒ obhÄ• sitameva takkikÄ• naá¹ƒ {titthiyÄ• naá¹ƒ (Ce Se Ee) }, yÄ• va sammÄ• sambuddhÄ• loke nuppajjanti.

na takkikÄ• sujjhanti na cÄ• pi sÄ• vakÄ• ,

duddiá¹-á¹-hÄ« na dukkhÄ• pamuccareâ€™â€™ ti || dasamaá¹ƒ.

tassuddÄ• naá¹ƒ ---

Ä• yujaá¹-ilavekkhaá¹‡Ä• , tayo titthiyÄ• subhÅ«ti.

gaá¹‡ikÄ• upÄ• ti navamo, uppajjanti ca te dasÄ• ti ||

jaccandhavaggo chaá¹-á¹-ho niá¹-á¹-hito.

7. cÅ«á¸·avaggo

1. paá¹-hamalakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyasuttaá¹ƒ

<61> evaá¹ƒ \Be 170/ \Ee 74/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• sÄ• riputto Ä• ya lakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyaá¹ƒ anekapariyÄ• yena dhammiyÄ• kathÄ• ya sandasseti samÄ• da samuttejeti sampahaá¹ƒseti.

atha \Se 198/ kho Ä• yasmato lakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyassa Ä• yasmatÄ• sÄ• riputtena anel 157/ kathÄ• ya sandassiyamÄ• nassa samÄ• dapiyamÄ• nassa samuttejiyamÄ• nassa sam Ä• savehi cittaá¹ƒ vimucci.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ lakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyaá¹ƒ Ä• yasmatÄ• sÄ• rip dhammiyÄ• kathÄ• ya sandassiyamÄ• naá¹ƒ samÄ• dapiyamÄ• naá¹ƒ samuttejiyamÄ• naá anupÄ• dÄ• ya Ä• savehi cittaá¹ƒ vimuttaá¹ƒ {vimuttacittaá¹ƒ (?) }.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``uddhaá¹ƒ adho sabbadhi vippamutto, ayaá¹ƒhamasmÄ«ti {ayamahamasmÄ«ti (Ce Se Ee)

evaá¹ƒ vimutto udatÄ• ri oghaá¹ƒ, atiá¹‡á¹‡apubbaá¹ƒ apunabbhavÄ• yÄ• â€™â€™ ti || paá

2. dutiyalakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyasuttaá¹ƒ

<62> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• sÄ• riputto Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ lakuá¹‡á¸• ak (Se), sekhoti (Ee) } maÃ±Ã±amÄ• no bhiyyosomattÄ• ya anekapariyÄ• yena dhammiyÄ• ka samuttejeti sampahaá¹ƒseti.

addasÄ• \Be 171/ kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ sÄ• riputtaá¹ƒ Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ lakuá¹‡á maÃ±Ã±amÄ• naá¹ƒ bhiyyosomattÄ• ya \Ee 75/ anekapariyÄ• yena dhammiyÄ• kathÄ• ya samuttejentaá¹ƒ sampahaá¹ƒsentaá¹ƒ.

atha kho bhagavÄ• \Se 199/ etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá

``acchecchi {acchejji (Katthaci Ce), acchijji (Katthaci Ce Se), achijji (Katthaci) } vaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ nirÄ• saá¹ƒ, visukkhÄ• saritÄ• na sandati.

chinnaá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ na vattati, esevanto dukkhassÄ• â€™â€™ ti || dutiyaá¹ƒ.

3. paá¹-hamasattasuttaá¹ƒ

<63> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 158/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena sÄ• vatthiyÄ• manussÄ• yeb sattÄ• ( ) { (honti) (bahÅ«su) aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya saá¹ƒsandetabbaá¹ƒ} rattÄ• giddhÄ• gad mucchitÄ• ajjhopannÄ• sammattakajÄ• tÄ• kÄ• mesu viharanti.

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ
pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tap
tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ
nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ --- ``idha, bhante, sÄ• vatthiyÄ• ma kÄ• mesu ativelaá¹ƒ sattÄ• rattÄ• giddhÄ• gadhitÄ• mucchitÄ• ajjhopannÄ• sammattaka viharantÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``kÄ• mesu sattÄ• kÄ• masaá¹…gasattÄ• , saá¹ƒyojane vajjamapassamÄ• nÄ• .

na \Se 200/ hi jÄ• tu saá¹ƒyojanasaá¹…gasattÄ• ,

oghaá¹ƒ tareyyuá¹ƒ vipulaá¹ƒ mahantaâ€™â€™ nti || tatiyaá¹ƒ.

4. dutiyasattasuttaá¹ƒ

<64> evaá¹ƒ \Be 172/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena sÄ• vatthiyÄ• manussÄ• yeb (honti) (bahÅ«su) aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya saá¹ƒsandetabbaá¹ƒ} rattÄ• giddhÄ• gadhitÄ• mucc andhÄ«katÄ• sammattakajÄ• tÄ• kÄ• mesu viharanti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya sÄ• va
addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyÄ• te manusse yebhuyyena \Ee 76/ kÄ• mesu satte rat ajjhopanne andhÄ«kate sammattakajÄ• te kÄ• mesu viharante.

atha \Ne 159/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na ``kÄ• mandhÄ• jÄ• lasaÃ±channÄ• , taá¹‡hÄ• chadanachÄ• ditÄ• .

pamattabandhunÄ• baddhÄ• , macchÄ• va kuminÄ• mukhe.

jarÄ• maraá¹‡amanventi {jarÄ• maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ gacchanti (Ce Se) }, vaccho khÄ«rapakova mÄ catutthaá¹ƒ.

5. aparalakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyasuttaá¹ƒ

<65> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• lakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyo sambahulÄ• naá piá¹-á¹-hito yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ lakuá¹‡á¸• akabhaddiyaá¹ƒ dÅ«ratova sambahul piá¹-á¹-hito piá¹-á¹-hito Ä• gacchantaá¹ƒ dubbaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ duddasikaá¹ƒ okoá¹-imakaá¹ƒ ye paribhÅ«tarÅ«paá¹ƒ \Se 201/. disvÄ• na bhikkhÅ« Ä• mantesi ---

``passatha no tumhe, bhikkhave, etaá¹ƒ bhikkhuá¹ƒ dÅ«ratova sambahulÄ• naá¹ƒ bhikkhÅ« piá¹-á¹-hito Ä• gacchantaá¹ƒ dubbaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ duddasikaá¹ƒ okoá¹-imakaá¹ƒ yebhuyyena b paribhÅ«tarÅ«paâ€™â€™ nti? ``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti.

``eso \Be 173/, bhikkhave, bhikkhu mahiddhiko mahÄ• nubhÄ• vo. na ca sÄ• samÄ• patti s bhikkhunÄ• asamÄ• pannapubbÄ• . yassa catthÄ• ya {yassatthÄ• ya (Ce Katthaci) } kulapu anagÄ• riyaá¹ƒ pabbajanti tadanuttaraá¹ƒ brahmacariyapariyosÄ• naá¹ƒ diá¹-á¹-heva dhamm sacchikatvÄ• upasampajja viharatÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``nelaá¹…go setapacchÄ• do, ekÄ• ro vattatÄ« ratho.

anÄ«ghaá¹ƒ passa Ä• yantaá¹ƒ, chinnasotaá¹ƒ abandhanaâ€™â€™ nti || paÃ±camaá¹ƒ.

6. taá¹‡hÄ• saá¹…khayasuttaá¹ƒ

<66> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 160/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena \Ee 77/ Ä• yasmÄ• aÃ±Ã±Ä•

{aÃ±Ã±Ä• takoá¹‡á¸• aÃ±Ã±o (sabbattha) } bhagavato avidÅ«re nisinno hoti pallaá¹…kaá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya taá¹‡hÄ• saá¹…khayavimuttiá¹ƒ paccavekkhamÄ• no.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±Ä• sikoá¹‡á¸• aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinna ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya taá¹‡hÄ• saá¹…khayavimuttiá¹ƒ paccavekkhamÄ• naá¹ƒ.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``yassa mÅ«laá¹ƒ chamÄ• natthi, paá¹‡á¹‡Ä• natthi kuto latÄ• .

taá¹ƒ \Se 202/ dhÄ«raá¹ƒ bandhanÄ• muttaá¹ƒ, ko taá¹ƒ ninditumarahati.

devÄ• pi naá¹ƒ pasaá¹ƒsanti, brahmunÄ• pi pasaá¹ƒsitoâ€™â€™ ti || chaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ.

7. papaÃ±cakhayasuttaá¹ƒ

<67> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• attano papaÃ±casaÃ±Ã±Ä• saá¹…khÄ• pa
hoti.

atha \Be 174/ kho bhagavÄ• attano papaÃ±casaÃ±Ã±Ä• saá¹…khÄ• pahÄ• naá¹ƒ viditvÄ•
udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ• nesi ---

``yassa papaÃ±cÄ• á¹-hiti ca natthi, sandÄ• naá¹ƒ palighaÃ±ca vÄ«tivatto.

taá¹ƒ nittaá¹‡haá¹ƒ muniá¹ƒ carantaá¹ƒ,

nÄ• vajÄ• nÄ• ti sadevakopi lokoâ€™â€™ ti || sattamaá¹ƒ.

8. kaccÄ• nasuttaá¹ƒ

<68> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 161/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena Ä• yasmÄ• mahÄ• kaccÄ• n pallaá¹…kaá¹ƒ Ä• bhujitvÄ• ujuá¹ƒ kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya kÄ• yagatÄ• ya satiyÄ• ajjhat sÅ«paá¹-á¹-hitÄ• ya.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• kaccÄ• naá¹ƒ avidÅ«re nisinnaá¹ƒ pallaá
kÄ• yaá¹ƒ paá¹‡idhÄ• ya kÄ• yagatÄ• ya satiyÄ• ajjhattaá¹ƒ parimukhaá¹ƒ sÅ«paá¹-á¹-hitÄ

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``yassa \Ee 78/ siyÄ• sabbadÄ• sati, satataá¹ƒ kÄ• yagatÄ• upaá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

no \Se 203/ cassa no ca me siyÄ• , na bhavissati na ca me bhavissati.

anupubbavihÄ• ri tattha so,

kÄ• leneva tare visattikaâ€™â€™ nti || aá¹-á¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

9. udapÄ• nasuttaá¹ƒ

<69> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• mallesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ• no saddhiá¹ƒ yena thÅ«á¹‡aá¹ƒ {thÅ«naá¹ƒ (Ce Se Ee) } nÄ• ma mallÄ• naá¹ƒ brÄ• hmaá¹‡ag kho thÅ«á¹‡eyyakÄ• brÄ• hmaá¹‡agahapatikÄ• --- ``samaá¹‡o khalu, bho, gotamo sakyap mallesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ• no \Be 175/ mahatÄ• bhikkhusaá¹…ghena saddhiá¹ƒ thÅ«á¹‡ { (atha kho te thÅ«á¹‡eyyakÄ• brÄ• hmaá¹‡agahapatikÄ•) (?) } udapÄ• naá¹ƒ tiá¹‡assa ca mukhato pÅ«resuá¹ƒ --- ``mÄ• te muá¹‡á¸• akÄ• samaá¹‡akÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ apaá¹ƒsÅ«

atha kho bhagavÄ• maggÄ• okkamma yena rukkhamÅ«laá¹ƒ tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹ nisÄ«di. nisajja kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``iá¹…gha me tv udapÄ• nÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ Ä• harÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

evaá¹ƒ \Ne 162/ vutte, Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``idÄ• ni so, bha thÅ«á¹‡eyyakehi brÄ• hmaá¹‡agahapatikehi tiá¹‡assa ca bhusassa ca yÄ• va mukhato pÅ« muá¹‡á¸• akÄ• samaá¹‡akÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ apaá¹ƒsÅ«â€™â€™ â€™ ti.

dutiyampi kho ... pe ... \Se 204/ tatiyampi kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• n tvaá¹ƒ, Ä• nanda, etamhÄ• udapÄ• nÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ Ä• harÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``evaá¹ƒ, bha Ä• nando bhagavato paá¹-issutvÄ• pattaá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• yena so udapÄ• no tenupasaá¹…ka Ä• yasmante Ä• nande upasaá¹…kamante sabbaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ tiá¹‡aÃ±ca bhusaÃ±ca mukhato

anÄ• vilassa vippasannassa yÄ• va mukhato pÅ«rito vissandanto {vissando (Katthaci) } ma

atha kho Ä• yasmato Ä• nandassa etadahosi --- ``acchariyaá¹ƒ vata, bho, abbhutaá¹ƒ vata, mahiddhikatÄ• mahÄ• nubhÄ• vatÄ• ! ayaÃ±hi so udapÄ• no mayi upasaá¹…kamante sabl
mukhato ovamitvÄ• acchassa udakassa anÄ• vilassa vippasannassa yÄ• va mukhato pÅ«r á¹-hitoâ€™â€™ ti!! pattena pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ Ä• dÄ• ya yena \Ee 79/ bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…
bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``acchariyaá¹ƒ, bhante, abbhutaá¹ƒ, bhante, tathÄ• gatassa m mahÄ• nubhÄ• vatÄ• ! ayaÃ±hi so, bhante, udapÄ• no mayi upasaá¹…kamante sabbaá¹ƒ ta
mukhato ovamitvÄ• acchassa udakassa anÄ• vilassa vippasannassa yÄ• va mukhato pÅ«r aá¹-á¹-hÄ• si!! pivatu bhagavÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ, pivatu sugato pÄ• nÄ«yaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha \Be 176/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``kiá¹ƒ \Se 205/ kayirÄ• udapÄ• nena,

Ä• pÄ• ce sabbadÄ• siyuá¹ƒ.

taá¹‡hÄ• ya mÅ«lato chetvÄ• ,

kissa pariyesanaá¹ƒ careâ€™â€™ ti || navamaá¹ƒ.

10. utenasuttaá¹ƒ

<70> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 163/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• kosambiyaá¹ƒ viharati pana samayena raÃ±Ã±o utenassa {udenassa (Ce Se Ee) } uyyÄ• nagatassa antepuraá¹ƒ itthisatÄ• ni {paÃ±ca itthisatÄ• ni (Ce Se Ee) } kÄ• laá¹…katÄ• ni honti sÄ• mÄ• vatÄ«pamu

atha kho sambahulÄ• bhikkhÅ« pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• d pÄ• visiá¹ƒsu. kosambiyaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• Ä• ya caritvÄ• pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tapa
tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ
nisinnÄ• kho te bhikkhÅ« bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ --- ``idha, bhante, raÃ±Ã±o utenass antepuraá¹ƒ daá¸• á¸• haá¹ƒ, paÃ±ca ca itthisatÄ• ni kÄ• laá¹…katÄ• ni sÄ• mÄ• vatÄ«pam upÄ• sikÄ• naá¹ƒ kÄ• gati ko abhisamparÄ• yoâ€™â€™ ti?

``santettha, bhikkhave, upÄ• sikÄ• yo sotÄ• pannÄ• , santi sakadÄ• gÄ• miniyo, santi anÄ• bhikkhave, upÄ• sikÄ• yo anipphalÄ• kÄ• laá¹…katÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``mohasambandhano loko, bhabbarÅ«pova dissati.

upadhibandhano {upadhisambandhano (Katthaci Ce) } bÄ• lo, tamasÄ• parivÄ• rito.

sassatoriva \Se 206/ {sassati viya (Katthaci Ce) } khÄ• yati, passato natthi kiÃ±canaâ€™â€™

tassuddÄ• naá¹ƒ ---

dve \Be 177/ bhaddiyÄ• dve ca sattÄ• , lakuá¹‡á¸• ako taá¹‡hÄ• khayo.

papaÃ±cakhayo ca kaccÄ• no, udapÄ• naÃ±ca utenoti ||

cÅ«á¸·avaggo {cullavaggo (Ce), cÅ«lavaggo (Ee) } sattamo niá¹-á¹-hito.

8. pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyavaggo

1. paá¹-hamanibbÄ• napaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttasuttaá¹ƒ

<71> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 164/ \Ee 80/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ« nibbÄ• r kathÄ• ya sandasseti samÄ• dapeti samuttejeti sampahaá¹ƒseti. tedha bhikkhÅ« {te ca bhik tadaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• pi oloketabbÄ• } aá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ katvÄ• {aá¹-á¹-hÄ«katvÄ• (Ce Se), aá¹-á katvÄ• sabbaá¹ƒ cetaso {sabbaá¹ƒ cetasÄ• (itipi aÃ±Ã±asuttesu) } samannÄ• haritvÄ• ohi suá¹‡anti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``atthi, bhikkhave, tadÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ, yattha neva pathavÄ«, na Ä• po, na tejo, na vÄ• yo, na Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ, na viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±cÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ, na Ä• kiÃ±caÃ±Ã±Ä• y nevasaÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanaá¹ƒ, nÄ• yaá¹ƒ loko, na paraloko, na ubho candimasÅ bhikkhave, neva Ä• gatiá¹ƒ vadÄ• mi \Se 207/, na gatiá¹ƒ, na á¹-hitiá¹ƒ, na cutiá¹ƒ, na upapa appatiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, appavattaá¹ƒ, anÄ• rammaá¹‡amevetaá¹ƒ. esevanto dukkhassÄ• â€™â€

2. dutiyanibbÄ• napaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttasuttaá¹ƒ

<72> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ« nibbÄ• napaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttÄ• ya \E

sandasseti samÄ• dapeti samuttejeti sampahaá¹ƒseti. tedha bhikkhÅ« aá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ katvÄ• m cetaso samannÄ• haritvÄ• ohitasotÄ• dhammaá¹ƒ suá¹‡anti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``duddasaá¹ƒ anataá¹ƒ nÄ• ma, na hi saccaá¹ƒ sudassanaá¹ƒ.

paá¹-ividdhÄ• taá¹‡hÄ• jÄ• nato, passato natthi kiÃ±canaâ€™â€™ nti || dutiyaá¹ƒ.

3. tatiyanibbÄ• napaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttasuttaá¹ƒ

<73> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 165/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
anÄ• thapiá¹‡á¸• ikassa Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ« nibbÄ• m kathÄ• ya sandasseti samÄ• dapeti samuttejeti sampahaá¹ƒseti. tedha bhikkhÅ« aá¹-á¹-hiá¹ sabbaá¹ƒ cetaso samannÄ• haritvÄ• , ohitasotÄ• dhammaá¹ƒ suá¹‡anti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``atthi, bhikkhave, ajÄ• taá¹ƒ abhÅ«taá¹ƒ akataá¹ƒ asaá¹…khataá¹ƒ. no cetaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, abhÅ«taá¹ƒ akataá¹ƒ asaá¹…khataá¹ƒ, nayidha jÄ• tassa bhÅ«tassa katassa saá¹…khatass paÃ±Ã±Ä• yetha. yasmÄ• ca kho, bhikkhave, atthi ajÄ• taá¹ƒ abhÅ«taá¹ƒ akataá¹ƒ asaá¹…
bhÅ«tassa \Se 208/ katassa saá¹…khatassa nissaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• yatÄ«â€™â€™ ti. ta

4. catutthanibbÄ• napaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttasuttaá¹ƒ

<74> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tena kho pana samayena bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ« nibbÄ• napaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttÄ• ya dh samÄ• dapeti samuttejeti sampahaá¹ƒseti. tedha bhikkhÅ« aá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ katvÄ• manasi katv samannÄ• haritvÄ• ohitasotÄ• dhammaá¹ƒ suá¹‡anti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``nissitassa \Be 179/ calitaá¹ƒ, anissitassa calitaá¹ƒ natthi. calite asati passaddhi, passaddhi na hoti. natiyÄ• asati Ä• gatigati na hoti. Ä• gatigatiyÄ• asati cutÅ«papÄ• to na hoti. cutÅ«p nevidha na huraá¹ƒ na ubhayamantarena {na ubhayamantare (sabbattha) MN III 393; SN b esevanto dukkhassÄ• â€™â€™ ti. catutthaá¹ƒ.

5. cundasuttaá¹ƒ

<75> evaá¹ƒ \Ne 166/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• mallesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ car bhikkhusaá¹…ghena saddhiá¹ƒ yena pÄ• vÄ• tadavasari. tatra sudaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• pÄ• vÄ• kammÄ• raputtassa ambavane.

assosi kho cundo kammÄ• raputto --- ``bhagavÄ• kira mallesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ• no ma saddhiá¹ƒ pÄ• vaá¹ƒ anuppatto pÄ• vÄ• yaá¹ƒ viharati mayhaá¹ƒ ambavaneâ€™â€™ ti. ath yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ek nisinnaá¹ƒ kho cundaá¹ƒ kammÄ• raputtaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• dhammiyÄ• \Se 209/ kathÄ• ya sa samuttejesi sampahaá¹ƒsesi. atha kho cundo kammÄ• raputto bhagavatÄ• dhammiyÄ• ka samuttejito sampahaá¹ƒsito bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``adhivÄ• setu me, bhante, bhaga bhattaá¹ƒ saddhiá¹ƒ bhikkhusaá¹…ghenÄ• â€™â€™ ti. adhivÄ• sesi bhagavÄ• tuá¹‡hÄ«bh atha kho cundo kammÄ• raputto bhagavato adhivÄ• sanaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ katvÄ• pakkÄ• mi. atha kho cundo kammÄ• raputto tassÄ• rattiyÄ• acca paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ khÄ• danÄ«yaá¹ƒ bhojanÄ«yaá¹ƒ paá¹-iyÄ• dÄ• petvÄ• pahÅ«taÃ±ca sÅ«ka Ä• rocÄ• pesi --- ``kÄ• lo, bhante, niá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ bhattaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha \Ee 82/ kho bhagavÄ• pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya yena cundassa kammÄ• raputtassa nivesanaá¹ƒ tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• pa nisajja kho bhagavÄ• cundaá¹ƒ kammÄ• raputtaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``yaá¹ƒ te, cunda, sÅ«ka paá¹-iyattaá¹ƒ tena maá¹ƒ parivisa, yaá¹ƒ panaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ khÄ• danÄ«yaá¹ƒ \Be 180/ bhojan tena bhikkhusaá¹…ghaá¹ƒ parivisÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho cundo ka paá¹-issutvÄ• yaá¹ƒ ahosi sÅ«karamaddavaá¹ƒ paá¹-iyattaá¹ƒ tena bhagavantaá¹ƒ parivisi;
khÄ• danÄ«yaá¹ƒ bhojanÄ«yaá¹ƒ paá¹-iyattaá¹ƒ tena bhikkhusaá¹…ghaá¹ƒ parivisi.

atha kho bhagavÄ• cundaá¹ƒ kammÄ• raputtaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``yaá¹ƒ te, cunda, sÅ«kar avasiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ sobbhe nikhaá¹‡Ä• hi. nÄ• haá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ, cunda, passÄ• mi sadevake sabrahmake sassamaá¹‡abrÄ• hmaá¹‡iyÄ• pajÄ• ya sadevamanussÄ• ya yassa taá¹ƒ pari gaccheyya aÃ±Ã±atra \Ne 167/ tathÄ• gatassÄ• â€™â€™ ti {aÃ±Ã±atra tathÄ• gatenÄ• ti (K bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho cundo kammÄ• raputto bhagavato paá¹-issutvÄ• yaá¹ƒ ahosi sÅ«ka taá¹ƒ sobbhe nikhaá¹‡itvÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhaga ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinnaá¹ƒ kho cundaá¹ƒ kammÄ• raputtaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sandassetvÄ• samÄ• dapetvÄ• samuttejetvÄ• sampahaá¹ƒsetvÄ• uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ•

atha kho bhagavato cundassa kammÄ• raputtassa bhattaá¹ƒ bhuttÄ• vissa kharo Ä• bÄ• d lohitapakkhandikÄ• pabÄ• á¸·hÄ• {bÄ• á¸·hÄ• (Ce Se Ee) } vedanÄ• vattanti mÄ• raá¹‡a bhagavÄ• sato sampajÄ• no adhivÄ• sesi avihaÃ±Ã±amÄ• no. atha kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yas

``Ä• yÄ• mÄ• nanda, yena kusinÄ• rÄ• tenupasaá¹…kamissÄ• mÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``evaá¹ƒ, Ä• nando bhagavato paccassosi.

``cundassa bhattaá¹ƒ bhuÃ±jitvÄ• , kammÄ• rassÄ• ti me sutaá¹ƒ.

Ä• bÄ• dhaá¹ƒ samphusÄ« dhÄ«ro, pabÄ• á¸·haá¹ƒ mÄ• raá¹‡antikaá¹ƒ ||

``bhuttassa ca sÅ«karamaddavena, byÄ• dhippabÄ• á¸·ho udapÄ• di satthuno.

viriccamÄ• no {viriÃ±camÄ• no (?) virecamÄ• no (DN II 190) } bhagavÄ• avoca, `gacchÄ•
nagaraâ€™â€™ â€™ nti ||

atha \Ee 83/ \Se 211/ kho bhagavÄ• maggÄ• okkamma yena aÃ±Ã±ataraá¹ƒ rukkhamÅ«l upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``iá¹…gha me tvaá¹ƒ, Ä• n saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• pehi; kilantosmi, Ä• nanda, nisÄ«dissÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti. ``ev Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavato paá¹-issutvÄ• catugguá¹‡aá¹ƒ saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iá¹ƒ \Be 181 bhagavÄ• paÃ±Ã±atte Ä• sane. nisajja kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• ma Ä• nanda, pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ Ä• hara; pipÄ• sitosmi, Ä• nanda, pivissÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

evaá¹ƒ vutte, Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``idÄ• ni, bhante, paÃ±ca atikkantÄ• ni. taá¹ƒ cakkacchinnaá¹ƒ udakaá¹ƒ parittaá¹ƒ luá¸·itaá¹ƒ Ä• vilaá¹ƒ sandati. ayaa kukuá¹-á¹-hÄ• {kakutthÄ• (Ce), kukuá¹-Ä• (Se), kakudhÄ• (DN II 191) } nadÄ« avidÅ«re a sÄ«todakÄ• setodakÄ• supatitthÄ• ramaá¹‡Ä«yÄ• . ettha bhagavÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaÃ±ca pivis sÄ«tÄ«karissatÄ«â€™â€™ ti {sÄ«tiá¹ƒ karissatÄ«ti (Ce), sÄ«taá¹ƒ karissatÄ«ti (Se Ee Katth

dutiyampi kho ... pe ... tatiyampi kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi \S \Ne 168/ tvaá¹ƒ, Ä• nanda, pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ Ä• hara; pipÄ• sitosmi, Ä• nanda, pivissÄ• mÄ«â€ bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho Ä• yasmÄ• Ä• nando bhagavato paá¹-issutvÄ• pattaá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• y atha kho sÄ• nadÄ« cakkacchinnÄ• parittÄ• luá¸·itÄ• Ä• vilÄ• sandamÄ• nÄ• Ä• yasma acchÄ• vippasannÄ• anÄ• vilÄ• sandati.

atha kho Ä• yasmato Ä• nandassa etadahosi --- ``acchariyaá¹ƒ vata, bho, abbhutaá¹ƒ vata, mahiddhikatÄ• mahÄ• nubhÄ• vatÄ• ! ayaÃ±hi sÄ• nadÄ« cakkacchinnÄ• parittÄ• luá¸·itÄ upasaá¹…kamante acchÄ• vippasannÄ• anÄ• vilÄ• sandatÄ«â€™â€™ ti!! pattena pÄ• nÄ tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``acchariyaá¹ƒ, bhante tathÄ• gatassa mahiddhikatÄ• mahÄ• nubhÄ• vatÄ• ! ayaÃ±hi sÄ• , bhante, nadÄ« cakkac
Ä• vilÄ• sandamÄ• nÄ• mayi upasaá¹…kamante acchÄ• vippasannÄ• anÄ• vilÄ• sandat \Ee 84/, pivatu sugato pÄ• nÄ«yaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ apÄ• yi {apÄ• si (Ce) }. atha kho bhagavÄ• mahatÄ• b yena kukuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nadÄ« tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• kukuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nadiá¹ pivitvÄ• ca paccuttaritvÄ• yena ambavanaá¹ƒ tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• Ä• y Ä• mantesi --- ``iá¹…gha me tvaá¹ƒ, cundaka, catugguá¹‡aá¹ƒ saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä nipajjissÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti \Be 182/ \Se 213/. ``evaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti kho Ä• yasmÄ• paá¹-issutvÄ• catugguá¹‡aá¹ƒ saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• pesi. atha kho bhagavÄ• dak sÄ«haseyyaá¹ƒ kappesi pÄ• de pÄ• daá¹ƒ accÄ• dhÄ• ya sato sampajÄ• no uá¹-á¹-hÄ• nas Ä• yasmÄ• pana cundako tattheva bhagavato purato nisÄ«di.

``gantvÄ• na buddho nadikaá¹ƒ kukuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, acchodakaá¹ƒ sÄ• tudakaá¹ƒ {sÄ• todakaá¹ƒ (sabbattha) } vippasannaá¹ƒ.

ogÄ• hi satthÄ• sukilantarÅ«po,

tathÄ• gato appaá¹-imodha loke ||

``nhatvÄ• ca pivitvÄ• cudatÄ• ri {nhatvÄ• ca uttari (Katthaci) } satthÄ• , purakkhato bhikkhugaá¹‡assa majjhe.

satthÄ• \Ne 169/ pavattÄ• bhagavÄ• idha dhamme, upÄ• gami ambavanaá¹ƒ mahesi.

Ä• mantayi cundakaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma bhikkhuá¹ƒ,

catugguá¹‡aá¹ƒ santhara {patthara (Ce Ee) } me nipajjaá¹ƒ ||

``so codito bhÄ• vitattena cundo, catugguá¹‡aá¹ƒ santhari {patthari (Ce Ee) } khippameva.

nipajji satthÄ• sukilantarÅ«po,

cundopi tattha pamukhe nisÄ«dÄ«â€™â€™ ti ||

atha kho bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ Ä• nandaá¹ƒ Ä• mantesi --- ``siyÄ• kho \Se 214/, pan kammÄ• raputtassa koci vippaá¹-isÄ• raá¹ƒ upadaheyya --- `tassa te, Ä• vuso cunda, alÄ• b dulladdhaá¹ƒ yassa te tathÄ• gato pacchimaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• taá¹ƒ bhuÃ±jitvÄ• parinibbut kammÄ• raputtassa \Ee 85/ evaá¹ƒ vippaá¹-isÄ• ro paá¹-ivinodetabbo ---

`` `tassa te, Ä• vuso cunda, lÄ• bhÄ• , tassa te suladdhaá¹ƒ yassa te tathÄ• gato pacchima paribhuÃ±jitvÄ• parinibbuto. sammukhÄ• metaá¹ƒ, Ä• vuso cunda, bhagavato sutaá¹ƒ, sar
--- dveme piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tÄ• samasamaphalÄ• \Be 183/ samasamavipÄ• kÄ• ativiya aÃ±Ã mahapphalatarÄ• ca mahÄ• nisaá¹ƒsatarÄ• ca. katame dve? yaÃ±ca piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• taá¹ƒ anuttaraá¹ƒ sammÄ• sambodhiá¹ƒ abhisambujjhati, yaÃ±ca piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• taá¹ƒ paribhuÃ±ji nibbÄ• nadhÄ• tuyÄ• parinibbÄ• yati. ime dve piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tÄ• samasamaphalÄ• samas piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tehi mahapphalatarÄ• ca mahÄ• nisaá¹ƒsatarÄ• ca.

`` `Ä• yusaá¹ƒvattanikaá¹ƒ Ä• yasmatÄ• cundena kammÄ• raputtena kammaá¹ƒ upacitaá¹ Ä• yasmatÄ• cundena kammÄ• raputtena kammaá¹ƒ upacitaá¹ƒ, sukhasaá¹ƒvattanikaá¹ƒ Ä kammÄ• raputtena kammaá¹ƒ upacitaá¹ƒ, saggasaá¹ƒvattanikaá¹ƒ Ä• yasmatÄ• cundena k upacitaá¹ƒ, yasasaá¹ƒvattanikaá¹ƒ Ä• yasmatÄ• cundena kammÄ• raputtena kammaá¹ƒ up Ä• dhipateyyasaá¹ƒvattanikaá¹ƒ Ä• yasmatÄ• cundena kammÄ• raputtena kammaá¹ƒ upac kammÄ• raputtassa evaá¹ƒ vippaá¹-isÄ• ro \Se 215/ paá¹-ivinodetabboâ€™â€™ ti.

atha \Ne 170/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``dadato puÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ pavaá¸• á¸• hati, saá¹ƒyamato veraá¹ƒ na cÄ«yati.

kusalo ca jahÄ• ti pÄ• pakaá¹ƒ,

rÄ• gadosamohakkhayÄ• sanibbutoâ€™â€™ ti {parinibbutoti (Ce Se Ee) } || paÃ±camaá¹ƒ

6. pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyasuttaá¹ƒ

<76> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• magadhesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ saddhiá¹ƒ yena pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• mo tadavasari. assosuá¹ƒ kho pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• {pÄ• á¹-al upÄ• sakÄ• --- ``bhagavÄ• kira magadhesu cÄ• rikaá¹ƒ caramÄ• no mahatÄ• bhikkhusaá pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• maá¹ƒ anuppattoâ€™â€™ ti. atha kho pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• upÄ• sakÄ• yena upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«diá¹ƒsu. ekamanta pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• upÄ• sakÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ \Ee 86/ etadavocuá¹ƒ --- ``adhivÄ• setu n

Ä• vasathÄ• gÄ• raâ€™â€™ nti. adhivÄ• sesi bhagavÄ• tuá¹‡hÄ«bhÄ• vena.

atha \Be 184/ kho pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• upÄ• sakÄ• bhagavato adhivÄ• sanaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• u bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ katvÄ• yenÄ• vasathÄ• gÄ• raá¹ƒ tenupa upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• sabbasanthariá¹ƒ Ä• vasathÄ• gÄ• raá¹ƒ santharitvÄ• Ä• sanÄ• ni paÃ patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• petvÄ• telappadÄ«paá¹ƒ Ä• ropetvÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒ bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒsu. ekamantaá¹ƒ á¹-hitÄ• kho pÄ bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ --- ``sabbasantharisanthataá¹ƒ {sabbasanthariá¹ƒ santhataá¹ƒ Ä• vasathÄ• gÄ• raá¹ƒ; Ä• sanÄ• ni \Se 216/ paÃ±Ã±attÄ• ni; udakamaá¹‡iko patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• pitaá¹ƒ (Se) } telappadÄ«po Ä• ropito. yassadÄ• ni, bhante, bhagavÄ• kÄ• laá

atha kho bhagavÄ• nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya saddhiá¹ƒ bhikkhusaá¹…ghena tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• pÄ• de pakkhÄ• letvÄ• Ä• vasathÄ• gÄ• raá¹ƒ pav nissÄ• ya puratthÄ• bhimukho nisÄ«di. bhikkhusaá¹…ghopi kho pÄ• de pakkhÄ• letvÄ• Ä• pacchimaá¹ƒ bhittiá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya puratthÄ• bhimukho nisÄ«di bhagavantaá¹ƒyeva purakkhat kho upÄ• sakÄ• pÄ• de pakkhÄ• letvÄ• Ä• vasathÄ• gÄ• raá¹ƒ pavisitvÄ• puratthimaá¹ƒ b pacchimÄ• bhimukhÄ• \Ne 171/ nisÄ«diá¹ƒsu bhagavantaá¹ƒyeva purakkhatvÄ• . atha kho upÄ• sake Ä• mantesi ---

``paÃ±cime, gahapatayo, Ä• dÄ«navÄ• dussÄ«lassa sÄ«lavipattiyÄ• . katame paÃ±ca? idh sÄ«lavipanno pamÄ• dÄ• dhikaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ mahatiá¹ƒ bhogajÄ• niá¹ƒ nigacchati. ayaá¹ƒ paá¹ sÄ«lavipattiyÄ• .

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, dussÄ«lassa sÄ«lavipannassa pÄ• pako kittisaddo abbhugg
Ä• dÄ«navo dussÄ«lassa sÄ«lavipattiyÄ• .

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, dussÄ«lo sÄ«lavipanno yaÃ±Ã±adeva parisaá¹ƒ upasaá¹…
khattiyaparisaá¹ƒ, yadi brÄ• hmaá¹‡aparisaá¹ƒ, yadi gahapatiparisaá¹ƒ, yadi samaá¹‡aparis upasaá¹…kamati maá¹…kubhÅ«to. ayaá¹ƒ tatiyo Ä• dÄ«navo \Ee 87/ dussÄ«lassa sÄ«lavip

``puna \Se 217/ caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, dussÄ«lo sÄ«lavipanno sammÅ«á¸·ho kÄ• laá¹ƒ k
Ä• dÄ«navo dussÄ«lassa sÄ«lavipattiyÄ• .

``puna \Be 185/ caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, dussÄ«lo sÄ«lavipanno kÄ• yassa bhedÄ• paraá¹
duggatiá¹ƒ vinipÄ• taá¹ƒ nirayaá¹ƒ upapajjati. ayaá¹ƒ paÃ±camo Ä• dÄ«navo dussÄ«lassa s gahapatayo, paÃ±ca Ä• dÄ«navÄ• dussÄ«lassa sÄ«lavipattiyÄ• .

``paÃ±cime, gahapatayo, Ä• nisaá¹ƒsÄ• sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampadÄ• ya. katame paÃ±ca? id

sÄ«lasampanno appamÄ• dÄ• dhikaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ mahantaá¹ƒ bhogakkhandhaá¹ƒ adhigaccha sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampadÄ• ya.

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampannassa kalyÄ• á¹‡o kittisaddo abbhu Ä• nisaá¹ƒso sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampadÄ• ya.

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, sÄ«lavÄ• sÄ«lasampanno yaÃ±Ã±adeva parisaá¹ƒ upasaá khattiyaparisaá¹ƒ \Ne 172/, yadi brÄ• hmaá¹‡aparisaá¹ƒ, yadi gahapatiparisaá¹ƒ, yadi sama visÄ• rado upasaá¹…kamati amaá¹…kubhÅ«to. ayaá¹ƒ tatiyo Ä• nisaá¹ƒso sÄ«lavato sÄ«la

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, sÄ«lavÄ• sÄ«lasampanno asammÅ«á¸·ho kÄ• laá¹…karoti
sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampadÄ• ya.

``puna caparaá¹ƒ, gahapatayo, sÄ«lavÄ• sÄ«lasampanno kÄ• yassa bhedÄ• paraá¹ƒ mar
lokaá¹ƒ upapajjati. ayaá¹ƒ paÃ±camo Ä• nisaá¹ƒso sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampadÄ• ya. ime kho, Ä• nisaá¹ƒsÄ• sÄ«lavato sÄ«lasampadÄ• yÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

atha \Se 218/ kho bhagavÄ• pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miye upÄ• sake bahudeva rattiá¹ƒ dhammiyÄ•
samÄ• dapetvÄ• samutejetvÄ• sampahaá¹ƒsetvÄ• uyyojesi --- ``abhikkantÄ• kho, gahapa tumhe kÄ• laá¹ƒ maÃ±Ã±athÄ• â€™â€™ ti. { ``evaá¹ƒ bhante ``ti khopÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• u paá¹-issutvÄ• (Vin I 285; DN II 151) } atha kho pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• upÄ• sakÄ• bhagavato abhinanditvÄ• anumoditvÄ• { ``evaá¹ƒ bhante ``ti khopÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• upÄ• sakÄ• bha 285; DN II 151) } uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ k bhagavÄ• acirapakkantesu pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyesu upÄ• sakesu suÃ±Ã±Ä• gÄ• raá¹ƒ pÄ• vis tena \Be 186/ kho pana samayena sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• {sunÄ«dhavassakÄ• rÄ• (Ce Se pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• me nagaraá¹ƒ mÄ• penti \Ee 88/ vajjÄ«naá¹ƒ paá¹-ibÄ• hÄ• ya. tena kho pana devatÄ• yo sahassasahasseva {sahasseva (Se Katthaci), sahassasseva (Ee) } pÄ• á¹-aligÄ pariggaá¹‡hanti. yasmiá¹ƒ padese mahesakkhÄ• devatÄ• vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hanti mahe raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni namanti nivesanÄ• ni mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. yasmiá vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hanti majjhimÄ• naá¹ƒ tattha raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ ci mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. yasmiá¹ƒ padese nÄ«cÄ• devatÄ• vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hanti nÄ«cÄ• naá¹ƒ t rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni namanti nivesanÄ• ni mÄ• petuá¹ƒ.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• dibbena cakkhunÄ• visuddhena atikkantamÄ• nusakena tÄ• dev pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• me vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hantiyo. yasmiá¹ƒ padese mahesakkhÄ• devatÄ• va mahesakkhÄ• naá¹ƒ tattha raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni namanti \Se 219 yasmiá¹ƒ padese majjhimÄ• devatÄ• vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hanti, majjhimÄ• naá¹ƒ tattha ra rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni namanti nivesanÄ• ni mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. yasmiá¹ƒ padese nÄ pariggaá¹‡hanti, nÄ«cÄ• naá¹ƒ \Ne 173/ tattha raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ

mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. atha kho bhagavÄ• tassÄ• rattiyÄ• paccÅ«sasamaye paccuá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya Ä• Ä• mantesi ---

``ke nu kho {ko nu kho (sabbattha) } Ä• nanda pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• me nagaraá¹ƒ mÄ• pentÄ«â€™ (sabbattha) }. ``sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• , bhante, magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• me na paá¹-ibÄ• hÄ• yÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``seyyathÄ• pi, Ä• nanda, devehi tÄ• vatiá¹ƒsehi saddhiá¹ƒ n Ä• nanda, sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• me nagaraá¹ƒ mÄ• idhÄ• haá¹ƒ, Ä• nanda, addasaá¹ƒ dibbena cakkhunÄ• visuddhena atikkantamÄ• nusakena sahassasahasseva pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• me vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hantiyo. yasmiá¹ƒ padese mahes pariggaá¹‡hanti mahesakkhÄ• naá¹ƒ tattha raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. yasmiá¹ƒ padese majjhimÄ• devatÄ• vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hanti majjhimÄ• n rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ• ni namanti nivesanÄ• ni mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. yasmiá¹ƒ \Be 187/ p vatthÅ«ni pariggaá¹‡hanti nÄ«cÄ• naá¹ƒ tattha raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÄ• jamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ cittÄ mÄ• petuá¹ƒ. yÄ• vatÄ• , Ä• nanda, ariyaá¹ƒ Ä• yatanaá¹ƒ yÄ• vatÄ• vaá¹‡ippatho idaá¹ƒ a bhavissati pÄ• á¹-aliputtaá¹ƒ puá¹-abhedanaá¹ƒ. pÄ• á¹-aliputtassa kho, Ä• nanda, tayo anta aggito vÄ• udakato vÄ• mithubhedato vÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kam bhagavatÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ sammodiá¹ƒsu. sammodanÄ«yaá¹ƒ kathaá¹ƒ sÄ• rÄ• á¹‡iyaá¹ƒ {sÄ• vÄ«tisÄ• retvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒsu. ekamantaá¹ƒ á¹-hitÄ• kho sunidhavassakÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavocuá¹ƒ --- ``adhivÄ• setu no bhavaá¹ƒ gotam saddhiá¹ƒ bhikkhusaá¹…ghenÄ• â€™â€™ ti. adhivÄ• sesi bhagavÄ• tuá¹‡hÄ«bhÄ• vena.

atha kho sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• bhagavato adhivÄ• sanaá¹ƒ viditv tenupasaá¹…kamiá¹ƒsu; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• sake Ä• vasathe paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ khÄ• danÄ«ya paá¹-iyÄ• dÄ• petvÄ• bhagavato kÄ• laá¹ƒ Ä• rocesuá¹ƒ --- ``kÄ• lo, bho gotama, niá¹-á¹-hi atha kho bhagavÄ• pubbaá¹‡hasamayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• setvÄ• pattacÄ«varamÄ• dÄ• ya saddhi sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• vasatho tenupasaá¹…kami; u nisÄ«di. atha kho sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• buddhappamukhaá¹ƒ bhik khÄ• danÄ«yena bhojanÄ«yena sahatthÄ• santappesuá¹ƒ sampavÄ• resuá¹ƒ.

atha \Ne 174/ kho sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ bhuttÄ• v aÃ±Ã±ataraá¹ƒ nÄ«caá¹ƒ Ä• sanaá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«diá¹ƒsu. ekamantaá¹ƒ n magadhamahÄ• matte bhagavÄ• imÄ• hi gÄ• thÄ• hi anumodi --- ``yasmiá¹ƒ \Se 221/ padese kappeti, vÄ• saá¹ƒ paá¹‡á¸• itajÄ• tiyo.

sÄ«lavantettha bhojetvÄ• , saÃ±Ã±ate brahmacÄ• rayo {brahmacÄ• rino (Se), brahmacariye ``yÄ• \Be 188/ tattha devatÄ• Ä• suá¹ƒ, tÄ• saá¹ƒ dakkhiá¹‡amÄ• dise.

tÄ• pÅ«jitÄ• pÅ«jayanti, mÄ• nitÄ• mÄ• nayanti naá¹ƒ ||

``tato naá¹ƒ anukampanti, mÄ• tÄ• puttaá¹ƒva orasaá¹ƒ.

devatÄ• nukampito poso, sadÄ• bhadrÄ• ni passatÄ«â€™â€™ ti ||

atha kho bhagavÄ• sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• naá¹ƒ imÄ• hi gÄ uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• pakkÄ• mi.

tena kho pana samayena sunidhavassakÄ• rÄ• magadhamahÄ• mattÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ p anubandhÄ• honti --- ``yenajja samaá¹‡o gotamo dvÄ• rena nikkhamissati taá¹ƒ `gotamadv bhavissati. yena titthena gaá¹…gaá¹ƒ nadiá¹ƒ tarissati taá¹ƒ `gotamatitthaá¹ƒâ€™ nÄ• ma b atha kho bhagavÄ• yena dvÄ• rena nikkhami taá¹ƒ `gotamadvÄ• raá¹ƒâ€™ \Ee 90/ nÄ• m yena gaá¹…gÄ• nadÄ« tenupasaá¹…kami. tena kho pana samayena gaá¹…gÄ• nadÄ« pÅ kÄ• kapeyyÄ• . appekacce manussÄ• nÄ• vaá¹ƒ pariyesanti, appekacce uá¸·umpaá¹ƒ pariy bandhanti apÄ• rÄ• pÄ• raá¹ƒ gantukÄ• mÄ• . atha kho bhagavÄ• --- seyyathÄ• pi nÄ• ma vÄ• bÄ• haá¹ƒ pasÄ• reyya, pasÄ• ritaá¹ƒ vÄ• bÄ• haá¹ƒ samiÃ±jeyya, evameva --- gaá¹…

{orimatÄ«rÄ• (bahÅ«su) Vin I 286; DN II 154 passitabbaá¹ƒ) } antarahito pÄ• rimatÄ«re pac saddhiá¹ƒ bhikkhusaá¹…ghena \Se 222/.

addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• te manusse appekacce nÄ• vaá¹ƒ pariyesante, appekacce uá¸·un kullaá¹ƒ bandhante apÄ• rÄ• pÄ• raá¹ƒ gantukÄ• me.

atha \Ne 175/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``ye taranti aá¹‡á¹‡avaá¹ƒ saraá¹ƒ, setuá¹ƒ katvÄ• na visajja pallalÄ• ni.

kullaÃ±hi jano pabandhati {bandhati (Se Ee) }, tiá¹‡á¹‡Ä• {nitiá¹‡á¹‡Ä• (Katthaci) } medhÄ• vino janÄ• â€™â€™ ti || chaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ.

7. dvidhÄ• pathasuttaá¹ƒ

<77> evaá¹ƒ \Be 189/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• kosalesu addhÄ• nama
Ä• yasmatÄ• nÄ• gasamÄ• lena pacchÄ• samaá¹‡ena. addasÄ• kho Ä• yasmÄ• nÄ• gas {dvedhÄ• pathaá¹ƒ (Ce) }. disvÄ• na bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- ``ayaá¹ƒ, bhante, bhagav gacchÄ• mÄ• â€™â€™ ti. evaá¹ƒ vutte, bhagavÄ• Ä• yasmantaá¹ƒ nÄ• gasamÄ• laá¹ƒ eta nÄ• gasamÄ• la, pantho; iminÄ• gacchÄ• mÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

dutiyampi ... pe ... tatiyampi kho Ä• yasmÄ• nÄ• gasamÄ• lo bhagavantaá¹ƒ etadavoca --- bhagavÄ• pantho; iminÄ• gacchÄ• mÄ• â€™â€™ ti \Se 223/. tatiyampi kho bhagavÄ• Ä• etadavoca --- ``ayaá¹ƒ, nÄ• gasamÄ• la, pantho; iminÄ• gacchÄ• mÄ• â€™â€™ ti. atha kh bhagavato pattacÄ«varaá¹ƒ tattheva chamÄ• yaá¹ƒ nikkhipitvÄ• pakkÄ• mi --- ``idaá¹ƒ, bha pattacÄ«varaâ€™â€™ nti.

atha kho Ä• yasmato nÄ• gasamÄ• lassa tena panthena gacchantassa antarÄ• magge cor pÄ• dehi ca Ä• koá¹-esuá¹ƒ pattaÃ±ca bhindiá¹ƒsu saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iÃ±ca vipphÄ• lesuá¹ƒ. a nÄ• gasamÄ• lo bhinnena pattena vipphÄ• litÄ• ya saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iyÄ• yena bhagavÄ• ten bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho Ä• yasmÄ• etadavoca --- ``idha mayhaá¹ƒ, bhante, tena panthena gacchantassa antarÄ• magge corÄ• pÄ• dehi ca Ä• koá¹-esuá¹ƒ, pattaÃ±ca bhindiá¹ƒsu, saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-iÃ±ca vipphÄ• lesuâ€™

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``saddhiá¹ƒ \Ne 176/ caramekato vasaá¹ƒ, misso aÃ±Ã±ajanena vedagÅ«.

vidvÄ• pajahÄ• ti pÄ• pakaá¹ƒ,

koÃ±co khÄ«rapakova ninnagaâ€™â€™ nti || sattamaá¹ƒ.

8. visÄ• khÄ• suttaá¹ƒ

<78> evaá¹ƒ \Be 190/ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati
migÄ• ramÄ• tupÄ• sÄ• de. tena kho pana samayena visÄ• khÄ• ya migÄ• ramÄ• tuyÄ• na manÄ• pÄ• . atha kho visÄ• khÄ• migÄ• ramÄ• tÄ• allavatthÄ• allakesÄ• divÄ• divassa

upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abhivÄ• detvÄ• ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nis
migÄ• ramÄ• taraá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• etadavoca \Se 224/ ---

``handa kuto nu tvaá¹ƒ, visÄ• khe, Ä• gacchasi allavatthÄ• allakesÄ• idhÅ«pasaá¹…kantÄ ti? ``nattÄ• me, bhante, piyÄ• manÄ• pÄ• kÄ• laá¹…katÄ• . tenÄ• haá¹ƒ allavatthÄ• allak divÄ• divassÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``iccheyyÄ• si tvaá¹ƒ, visÄ• khe, yÄ• vatikÄ• {yÄ• vatakÄ• (?
tÄ• vatike {tÄ• vatake (?) } putte ca nattÄ• ro cÄ• â€™â€™ ti? ``iccheyyÄ• haá¹ƒ, bhagavÄ bhagavÄ• (Se) } yÄ• vatikÄ• sÄ• vatthiyÄ• manussÄ• tÄ• vatike putte ca nattÄ• ro cÄ• â€

``kÄ«vabahukÄ• pana, visÄ• khe, sÄ• vatthiyÄ• manussÄ• devasikaá¹ƒ kÄ• laá¹ƒ karontÄ bhante, sÄ• vatthiyÄ• manussÄ• devasikaá¹ƒ kÄ• laá¹ƒ karonti; navapi, bhante ... aá¹-á¹-h sattapi, bhante ... chapi, bhante ... paÃ±capi, bhante ... cattÄ• ropi, bhante ... tÄ«á¹‡ipi, bhan bhante, sÄ• vatthiyÄ• manussÄ• devasikaá¹ƒ kÄ• laá¹ƒ karonti. ekopi, bhante, sÄ• vatthiyÄ kÄ• laá¹ƒ karoti. avivittÄ• , bhante, sÄ• vatthi manussehi kÄ• laá¹ƒ karontehÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

``taá¹ƒ kiá¹ƒ maÃ±Ã±asi, visÄ• khe, api nu tvaá¹ƒ kadÄ• ci karahaci anallavatthÄ• vÄ• bha
vÄ• â€™â€™ ti? ``no hetaá¹ƒ, bhante \Ee 92/. alaá¹ƒ me, bhante, tÄ• va bahukehi puttehi c ti.

``yesaá¹ƒ \Ne 177/ \Se 225/ kho, visÄ• khe, sataá¹ƒ piyÄ• ni, sataá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; y piyÄ• ni, navuti tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ asÄ«ti piyÄ• ni, asÄ«ti tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yes sattati tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ saá¹-á¹-hi piyÄ• ni, saá¹-á¹-hi tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá piyÄ• ni, paÃ±Ã±Ä• saá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ cattÄ• rÄ«saá¹ƒ piyÄ• ni, cattÄ• rÄ« yesaá¹ƒ tiá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ piyÄ• ni, tiá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ vÄ«sati piyÄ• ni, vÄ«sa yesaá¹ƒ dasa \Be 191/ piyÄ• ni, dasa tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ nava piyÄ• ni, nava tesa aá¹-á¹-ha piyÄ• ni, aá¹-á¹-ha tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ satta piyÄ• ni, satta tesaá¹ƒ dukkh piyÄ• ni, cha tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ paÃ±ca piyÄ• ni, paÃ±ca tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yes cattÄ• ri tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ tÄ«á¹‡i piyÄ• ni, tÄ«á¹‡i tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• ni; yesaá¹ƒ ekaá¹ƒ piyaá¹ƒ, ekaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ; yesaá¹ƒ natthi piya dukkhaá¹ƒ, asokÄ• te virajÄ• anupÄ• yÄ• sÄ• ti vadÄ• mÄ«â€™â€™ ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``ye keci sokÄ• paridevitÄ• vÄ• , dukkhÄ• ca {dukkhÄ• va (-a) } lokasmimanekarÅ«pÄ• .

piyaá¹ƒ paá¹-iccappabhavanti ete,

piye asante na bhavanti ete ||

``tasmÄ• hi te sukhino vÄ«tasokÄ• , yesaá¹ƒ \Se 226/ piyaá¹ƒ natthi kuhiÃ±ci loke.

tasmÄ• asokaá¹ƒ virajaá¹ƒ patthayÄ• no,

piyaá¹ƒ na kayirÄ• tha kuhiÃ±ci lokeâ€™â€™ ti || aá¹-á¹-hamaá¹ƒ.

9. paá¹-hamadabbasuttaá¹ƒ

<79> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• rÄ• jagahe viharati veá¸·uvane k
Ä• yasmÄ• dabbo mallaputto yena bhagavÄ• tenupasaá¹…kami; upasaá¹…kamitvÄ• bhag ekamantaá¹ƒ nisÄ«di. ekamantaá¹ƒ nisinno kho Ä• yasmÄ• dabbo mallaputto bhagavantaá ``parinibbÄ• nakÄ• lo me dÄ• ni, sugatÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``yassadÄ• ni tvaá¹ƒ, dabba, kÄ• laá¹

atha \Ne 178/ kho Ä• yasmÄ• dabbo mallaputto uá¹-á¹-hÄ• yÄ• sanÄ• bhagavantaá¹ƒ abh katvÄ• vehÄ• saá¹ƒ abbhuggantvÄ• Ä• kÄ• se antalikkhe pallaá¹…kena nisÄ«ditvÄ• tejod vuá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• parinibbÄ• yi.

atha \Be 192/ kho Ä• yasmato dabbassa mallaputtassa vehÄ• saá¹ƒ \Ee 93/ abbhuggantvÄ pallaá¹…kena nisÄ«ditvÄ• tejodhÄ• tuá¹ƒ samÄ• pajjitvÄ• vuá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• parinibbutassa jhÄ• yamÄ• nassa á¸• ayhamÄ• nassa neva chÄ• rikÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yittha na masi. seyyathÄ vÄ• jhÄ• yamÄ• nassa á¸• ayhamÄ• nassa neva chÄ• rikÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati na masi; evam mallaputtassa vehÄ• saá¹ƒ abbhuggantvÄ• Ä• kÄ• se antalikkhe pallaá¹…kena nisÄ«ditvÄ•
samÄ• pajjitvÄ• vuá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• parinibbutassa sarÄ«rassa jhÄ• yamÄ• nassa á¸• ayham 227/ paÃ±Ã±Ä• yittha na masÄ«ti.

atha kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• naá¹ƒ udÄ•

``abhedi kÄ• yo nirodhi saÃ±Ã±Ä• , vedanÄ• sÄ«tibhaviá¹ƒsu {pÄ«tidahaá¹ƒsu (Ce Ee), sÄ«tidahiá¹ƒsu (Katthaci) } sabbÄ• .

vÅ«pasamiá¹ƒsu saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• ,

viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ atthamÄ• gamÄ• â€™â€™ ti || navamaá¹ƒ.

10. dutiyadabbasuttaá¹ƒ

<80> evaá¹ƒ me sutaá¹ƒ --- ekaá¹ƒ samayaá¹ƒ bhagavÄ• sÄ• vatthiyaá¹ƒ viharati jetavane
Ä• rÄ• me. tatra kho bhagavÄ• bhikkhÅ« Ä• mantesi --- ``bhikkhavoâ€™â€™ ti. ``bhadante bhagavato paccassosuá¹ƒ. bhagavÄ• etadavoca ---

``dabbassa, bhikkhave, mallaputtassa vehÄ• saá¹ƒ abbhuggantvÄ• Ä• kÄ• se antalikkhe p tejodhÄ• tuá¹ƒ samÄ• pajjitvÄ• vuá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• parinibbutassa sarÄ«rassa jhÄ• yamÄ• na chÄ• rikÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yittha na masi. seyyathÄ• pi nÄ• ma sappissa vÄ• telassa vÄ• jhÄ• neva chÄ• rikÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati na masi; evameva kho, bhikkhave, dabbassa mallaputtassa Ä• kÄ• se antalikkhe pallaá¹…kena nisÄ«ditvÄ• tejodhÄ• tuá¹ƒ \Ne 179/ samÄ• pajjitvÄ• v parinibbutassa sarÄ«rassa jhÄ• yamÄ• nassa á¸• ayhamÄ• nassa neva chÄ• rikÄ• paÃ±Ã±

atha \Be 193/ kho bhagavÄ• etamatthaá¹ƒ viditvÄ• tÄ• yaá¹ƒ velÄ• yaá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ udÄ• na

``ayoghanahatasseva, jalato jÄ• tavedaso {jÄ• tavedassa (Se) }.

anupubbÅ«pasantassa, yathÄ• na Ã±Ä• yate gati ||

evaá¹ƒ \Se 228/ sammÄ• vimuttÄ• naá¹ƒ, kÄ• mabandhoghatÄ• rinaá¹ƒ.

paÃ±Ã±Ä• petuá¹ƒ gati natthi, pattÄ• naá¹ƒ acalaá¹ƒ sukhaâ€™â€™ nti || dasamaá¹ƒ.

pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyavaggo {pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• mavaggo (Katthaci) } aá¹-á¹-hamo.

tassuddÄ• naá¹ƒ \Ee 94/ --- nibbÄ• nÄ• caturo vuttÄ• , cundo pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyÄ• .

dvidhÄ• patho visÄ• khÄ• ca, dabbena saha te dasÄ• ti ||

udÄ• ne vaggÄ• namuddÄ• naá¹ƒ --- vaggamidaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ varabodhi, vaggamidaá¹ƒ dutiyaá¹ƒ mucalindo.

nandakavaggavaro tatiyo tu, meghiyavaggavaro ca catuttho ||

paÃ±camavaggavarantidha soá¹‡o, chaá¹-á¹-hamavaggavaranti jaccandho {chaá¹-á¹-hamav Katthaci) }.

sattamavaggavaranti ca cÅ«á¸·o, pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miyamaá¹-á¹-hamavaggo {pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• miy
Ee), pÄ• á¹-aligÄ• mavaraá¹-á¹-hamavaggo (Ce Katthaci) } ||

asÄ«timanÅ«nakasuttavaraá¹ƒ, vaggamidaá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ suvibhattaá¹ƒ.

dassitaá¹ƒ cakkhumatÄ• vimalena, addhÄ• hi taá¹ƒ udÄ• namitÄ«damÄ• hu {atthÄ• yetaá¹
saddhÄ• hi taá¹ƒ udÄ• nantidamÄ• hu (Se kaá¹ƒ Ee) } ||

udÄ• napÄ• á¸·i niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

Unexpected (He gets to know his mother-in-law)
byanon56212001©

This story is true, I remember every detail. It illustrates that incest can happen to anyone, wi under the right circumstances.

My name is Robert. My wife Sherry and I have been married for 20 years. We are both 41 a college. We have 2 children, both girls aged 16 and 12.

Sherry is a great wife. Our home life is great and we have never had marital problems. I hav around on her. Why would I, she is a very wonderful wife, mother and lover.

I am an insurance adjuster for a major company. In September 1998, a tropical storm hit the home state and I was sent down as part of the disaster response team. Normal procedure is claims as possible as fast as possible. As a result we normally work from 8am to sunset. We on, 2 day off, schedule and stay until we have either settled with all our policyholders or turn over to a higher power for review.

I arrived in the area on the 18th of September and worked the 16 day rotation. Normally I wo home for the time off, but the girls had a school trip on that weekend and Sherry was a chap insisted I call her 61 year old widowed mother, Dot, who lived in a town about 2 hours inland assignment and spend the weekend relaxing at her house. I spoke with Dot on Wednesday would arrive around 6 PM on Friday. She said she would have a home cooked meal ready.

Dot and I had always had a good Mother-in-Law/Son-in-Law relationship. When Sherry and felt she disliked and resented me for moving her only child away from home to the big city. A this went away. I can honestly say that I never had a sexual interest in the woman. Dot is a p black hair with wisps of gray, great complexion, 5'5" tall and about 165 pounds. She has full defined waist line, well rounded hips and buttocks and very nice legs. She dresses conserva matronly.

On Friday night I was treated to one of the best meals I've ever eaten. Dot and I talked for h family, old times and the recent storm damage to the area. At about 10:30 Dot insisted I turn good nights sleep. I fell asleep as soon as my head hit the pillow.

I awoke at 9am on Saturday. I felt rested and refreshed. I took a shower and went down for reading the paper at the kitchen table. She jumped right up and got me coffee and started b breakfast we talked about the kids and all matters pertaining to family and jobs. About 1pm I paper and went into the den. As I read the sports page I noticed the dog track about 150 mil for the fall season. Knowing that Dot loved the dog races I went back into the kitchen and as like to go to the track. She got excited and remarked she had not been to the track since Sh years ago. Because it was night racing with an 8pm post time I told her to go pack some clo a night of it with dinner at the jockey club, the races and then stay over in a hotel.

While I was on the phone with the hotel Dot came back into the kitchen. When she heard m she interrupted me and said to just get a room with 2 double beds. She didn't mind being in there was no need to waste the money. I changed the room request and never thought twice the road by 3:30. On the 2 1/2 hour trip we talked constantly about family and friends. When hotel, I checked in and we went up to the room. The room we were given had a king size be picked up the phone and called the front desk requesting a different room. I was told that be storm, there were so many families staying at the hotel all the doubles were full and this wou room available. There were also no roll-away beds available.

Dot told me not to worry I was like a son and she had no problem sleeping in the same bed laughed and said when I saw her with no makeup I would probably want to sleep in the car.
to take a bath and change. I went down to the lobby to get a racing form and give her a little

We went to the track, had an excellent dinner and won about $200.00 between us. We had back to the hotel at about midnight. Dot turned the TV on and I took a shower. I put on my b shirt. I always slept in my shorts and no top but, I was concerned about being modest in fron mother-in-law. When I came out of the bathroom Dot was watching TV and waiting to chang clothes. Dot went to change and I got in the bed. I turned the light by my side of the bed off watching TV. In about 10 minutes, Dot came out of the bathroom wearing a blue silk nightsh at mid-calf. The best way I can describe it is that it looked like a baseball jersey with no slee buttoned down the front and was cut up the sides to just about the knees. It was not reveling way. She asked if I minded if she left the light on in the bathroom and the door cracked oper if she needed to get up in the middle of the night.

I asked Dot if she wanted to watch TV and she said no she was going to sleep but it wouldn wanted to. I said no and turned it off. Dot got into bed, said good night and I turned off the li honest with you I never gave a second thought to being in bed with my mother-in -law. I wer

Sometime during the night I woke up. I was laying on back and Dot had her leg on the top o thigh resting on my cock which was hard as a rock. Her arm was across my chest and her le on my right biceps and her right breast on my chest. I lay there for a minute without moving.
pussy pressed tightly against my hip. I've got to tell you that I could not help being turned on for a few minutes more in a very uncomfortable state, then just rolled over on my side thinki her she would turn over away from me. Instead she followed me and put her leg right over m arm over my chest. She was holding me so tight I could feel both breasts pressed into my ba soft pussy jammed up against my thigh. I laid there for what seemed like a eternity. Dot neve apparent from her slow rhythmic breathing she was in a deep sleep. I tried moving again to s her to change positions. I rolled over completely, facing her.

That did it, she rolled over on her back, but snuggled up and pressed her hip right up agains sudden she raised her legs and began to struggle with the covers pushing them down with h uncover herself. After kicking off the cover, she lay on her back with her right leg bent at the legs slightly apart. I looked down and saw part of her right breast was exposed because two her shirt had come undone. Her shirt had ridden up to her waist and fully exposed her white of her pussy appeared massive under the tight fabric.

I couldn't help myself. I had been gone from home for over 2 weeks. I my cock was throbbin placed my leg over hers and my knee right on her soft pussy. She opened her legs further. M tight against her thigh. I began to move my leg ever so slowly in a way that forced my knee t ever so lightly. I placed my hand over her exposed right breast and cupped it ever so slightly lightly circle her nipple with my index finger and it began to harden. I was more excited than years, like a kid the first time.

After about a minute she let out a small moan. I could have jumped out of my skin. I lay still minutes and started to remove move my leg. When I raised my leg Dot turned on her side fa arm over me. She pulled me close and put her leg over me again. I was right up against her over her with my hand resting on her butt. I stroked her butt softly, then gripped it slightly an closer to me. My cock was pressed up against her pussy. I pulled back slightly reached dow through the opening in my boxers. I pushed it down very slowly to come in contact with the s pussy. I lay very still for a minute and then began to move my hips ever so slightly.

Dot began to return my movements and her breathing became heavier. I softly rubbed her p a few minutes and then slipped my hand inside the panties and felt the smooth skin of her b breathing harder and moving slightly. I moved my hand from her butt to her inner thigh and f radiating from her soft smooth skin. I slowly moved my hand up to the softness of her pussy and caressed the outer panty covered lips. She slipped her other arm under and behind me and held me tight. I moved my hand up and into the top of her panties sliding my hand down her wet pussy. She began moving her hips in time with me. My cock was throbbing, I couldn reached down and moved her panties aside. She was so wet my cock instantly entered her.
a few moments afraid if I moved I would come. In a brief moment of sanity I wondered if she pretending. Surely she couldn't sleep through this. She began to move ever so slightly. I slo rolled on top of her. She offered no resistance, and rolled unto her back. I fully penetrated h very slow rhythmic movements.

She slowly raised both legs into the air and started to move her hips in time with me. The pa movements became quicker, we were both making love to each other. She came at least 3 t about 5 minutes of slow, soothing and very fulfilling sex. When I came, it was like nothing I h experienced. I do not know if it was the anticipation, fear, extended forbidden foreplay or jus good pussy. We both got very still. We laid there in each others arms, neither knowing or su was awake because not a word had been said. I lay there for what seemed like an eternity h still between her legs. I finally drifted off to sleep.

I awoke the next morning to an empty bed. Dot was in the bathroom. In about 5 minutes Dot with a cup of coffee. She shook me and said it was 11am and we better get moving because noon. I sat up on the side of the bed and Dot told me to go ahead and take a shower. She sa clean clothes in there for me and she would pack up and be ready to go when I was finished bathroom, showered, shaved and got dressed. I was more nervous than I'd ever been in my of the bathroom. I could see my life going down the tubes because I did something really stu packing up and she looked up at me and smiled. She said she had the best nights sleep she night. She was in a very cheerful and happy mood.

On the drive back to her home we talked about the fun we had at the race track and the qua was as if she had no knowledge of what happened. But, she must surely know. I had dried s came in her, she had to know something happened. Perhaps I had a wet dream.

When we arrived at her house she made coffee and served me a cup. She excused herself unpack and put her clothes away. She went down the hallway and into her bedroom. I saw h hall with a laundry basket, open the laundry room door go in and return to her room empty h went down the hall and into the laundry room. On the top of the clothes she placed in the ha of panties she wore last night. I picked them up and looked at them. They were full of my dri not a wet dream.

I left shortly after that to return to work the next morning. Nothing was ever mentioned about

When I called Sherry on Sunday night she said she had just gotten off the phone with her m sounded better than she had since her father died. Dot informed her she had a lovely time w and that she had gotten to know me better this weekend than she had in the 20 years we ha

To Be Continued...

Unique Tattooing (Ann gets inked in an intimate area)
byYoung At Heart©

"Unique tattooing, can I help you?" David answered the ringing phone. "Hi David, this is Ann time to squeeze me in today?" she asked, cheerfully.

A huge smile flashed across David's already darkly handsome face when he heard her voice hair, long legs and chubby body just made his senses soar, not to mention his heart race ev at him. She had a smile that would melt the polar ice caps, and bring blinding light to darken loved tattooing her as well, she never complained of the pain and he often wondered if she e times. He had tattooed her 7 times in the past and she had never once stopped him no matt there was, and she always gave him the idea of what she wanted then allowed him free rein trusted him and that made him feel exceptional. He couldn't get over how his luck had chang call answered, especially after the grueling week he'd had. He jumped at the chance to see and smell her once more. Allow her to take away the bad days and overshadow them with h

Ann giggled when she heard David's deep voice reverberate in her ear...she loved his voice with lust and need when he touched her body and talked to her while working on her. She ha about having sex while being tattooed but never dreamed of moving forward with that plan, u knew he felt the same about her but neither of them had ever brought it up. They had gotten great friends in the years she had been going to him. David was definitely sexy enough; she looking at him and explode in her mind upon hearing him so sweetly ask her if she was ok, h scorching her skin as he touched her body so intimately. She heard him answer, but was los thoughts and had to ask him to repeat what he'd just said.

"I have the day open as a matter of fact, Ann. What are you wanting to do today?" He asked hurry and call his other appointments and tell them he would have to reschedule them. "I wa David, do you have time for that?" she asked sweetly. "You bet come on over and we'll get s design." He replied grinning from ear to ear at the thought of seeing her again. It had been a they had seen each other last and he had missed her brightness and charm, and she his se erotic touch.

"OK, thanks David. I'll be there in a few." She hung up the phone with sweaty palms and a m thinking of how she would just let the passion show this time as he tattooed her. Allow the e touch and the vibrating scratching of his gun to overwhelm her with lust and maybe he would about it, she certainly hoped he would anyway. She hated making the first move but she lov they did, drawing them to her, making them demand and take what they wanted.

Ann had just jumped out of the shower when she called David so she was clean and fresh h strands down her back. She hardly ever wore make-up or perfumes, she was just a natural g art of tattooing and merging the designs with her personality. She slipped into a pair of jeans slid on her shoes and dashed out the door to her truck. She was nervous and excited alread herself that maybe she shouldn't do this. That maybe she should just get the tattoo and keep herself. What if he doesn't feel that way? What if she was reading more into it than was reall

She chastised herself as she flipped down the visor to look at herself in the mirror. "Stop tha want this. You have wanted it from the first time you met him. You know deep down he want ask you to stop and tell you that he is not interested in you that way. Of course that will crush have survived rejection before many times, girl. So just do it!" She slammed the visor back in turned the keys dangling from the ignition, the engine started with a roar and she slid into ge off. At every stop light she would go through the doubt and chastising over and over, until sh there and walking in the door to his shop.

"Hi Ann, how have you been?" David asked. As his deep blue-green eyes glimpsed her smil automatically, without thought. "Great and you?" she replied her blue-gray eyes taking in all manly form, broad chest and thickness of his limbs, dark hair and goatee. She loved this ma his coloring everything about him just heightened her senses. They both had the same taste designs as well, both looking to be as unique as possible.

"Busy but good." He told her as she stepped in and set her stuff down on the table, casually the pool table and slid one leg up, and placed her splendid butt on the edge, her other leg st floor holding her body up.

"So you're finally adding the dragon to your kingdom hmmm?" he asked with a devilish grin.
him just as slyly and nodded yes, her golden hair softly bouncing around her face as she did have in mind?" he asked her as he started pulling out design books and laying them on the p her some ideas to start with.

They laughed and joked as they thumbed through the magazines and books of designs. She something kind of like what she wanted and gave him the picture and free rein to draw her s
They chatted and caught up on life, her palms sweating like crazy, her heart racing in her ch was here and getting closer to the time when they start the process of adding it to her body.
drawing her dragon he handed the sketch to her for her approval. She took it in her shaking upon her dreamt about design come to life. In awe, she handed the paper back to him and t believe how much you and I think alike. It's like you just copied that right out of my dreams."

He looked up at her and smiled as he started getting stuff together to do the outline. "Well.... telling you we are soul mates in our tattooing." He said chuckling. The tattoo was fairly large would take a few sessions to finish it all. He looked forward to that tremendously. He couldn really dreamed his design but he liked the thought that she had.

She looked upon him knowing this was a sign of something good and finally and lastly decid let her passion show to him this time. In her confidence of the decision made, her body stop her palms stopped sweating. She was perfectly relaxed as he called to her from the cozy tat her if she was ready.

"Ready as I'm ever gonna get babe." She retorted smartly as she walked into the room and ready to go. Her face beamed at the sight of him sitting there all prepared to watch her agai pants and look upon her naked privacy. She stepped into the room and kicked her shoes off of the way. She stood in front of him and to the side of the table facing away as she slid her her hips and bending teasingly as she pulled them from each foot. Standing she folded them them across the empty chair.

"OK. Now step back here so I can apply the design and find the proper location on your che her huskily. A slight bulge in his pants hidden by the towel lying over his lap, he reached out touched her hips pulling her closer to him gently. God her teasing would kill him. He wasn't e knew she was doing it but hell he loved it from her. She turned him on so much, she was pe yet he had always thought her too good for him and so had never made his move with her. H what she wanted from him other than great tattooing so he had in the past left it alone and tr feelings created by her aside. This time he thought to himself, "If she shows any signs of wa going for it!".

Her skin was set ablaze with heat where his fingers slightly grabbed her hips and tugged he could feel his hands and the tracing paper tickle her heart-shaped chubby butt cheek as he with tedious care. She felt him slide the cool stick of lube press against her skin then the tatt being rubbed on. He pulled back and told her to go and look at it in the mirror so she could t was positioned properly. He explained how the dragons tail would wrap around her inner thi pussy lips, then slide back out higher in the crack of her lips, and finally, obsessively encircle of kingdom cum, sitting on her mound. Running his finger over her silken skin sensually as h turned her body and opened her legs to allow his finger to find the path the tattoo would take a heated trail burning her skin following his touch.

"That looks great David, very sexy. You are so talented in drawing. I truly am going to have coming to my house one day and drawing my walls." She told him with a huge smile on her his eyes take in her pussy lips and where his fingers actually were, how close to feeling her, pleasure her so much. She could see it in his passion-clouded eyes and it turned her on, ma harden and her blood pump. He had shown her the desire openly, she finally had proof of it, shaking body and the hardness of him, growing. She heard the gulp in his throat as he swall and giggled then turned her head back to the mirror trying to imagine the dragon in full color process, hide her delighted reaction to his open passion. She was very impressed with what told him she was ready.

The blood pumping in his veins, throbbing in his ears and the very large bulge in his pants m his seat and cover back up with the towel. He watched as she stepped over to the bench an stomach, her beautiful alabaster ass was right there in front of him, he was going to be allow mark it with a part of himself, his own original design. That called to his heart, her wanting to designs and not the same old stuff everyone else picked out on the never-ending pages hun parlor. She was a delight to him, someone he respected and understood. He couldn't wait to to give himself a few minutes to calm down a bit and think again. Think about something oth those chubby cheeks and plunging into her, filling her every need and desire with himself.

He turned and started fiddling around with his equipment at the table next to him as she wig getting comfortable. He pushed the back of her shirt up past her hips to rest above the smal lay there her sweet butt exposed to him, her long legs lying on the bench with her bootie-soc off the end just a little. My gosh the girl even had cute feet and he had never much cared ab or another which made the thought of it shock him. He eventually got a grip on himself and h her body, "Are you ready?" he asked her.

"Yeppers" she replied kind of breathless. She knew he loved that word, he thought it cute th said it so she gave it to his ear, and heard him chuckle. She turned and looked over her sho smiled, telling him, "Remember I always jump at the initial little buzz and poke." He smiled a remembered and that he was ready go ahead and jump, his teeth so white against his dark his smile flash all the brighter.

He touched her soft white ass with the gun and she didn't jump this time. "Hey how about th time, Ann." He laughed. "I think I'm finally getting used to it." She giggled, as she thought to no wonder I don't feel it I am so hot and wet from anticipation I couldn't feel anything but bur even if I was out in 40 below weather, naked."

He continued to work on her following the traced lines of the dragon. Her skin puckering and the poking of the gun, as he went, leaving behind the dark ink outline. He could hardly conce tattoo while his mouth was so close to her beautiful butt. He just wanted to dip down and bite lick it, her fresh clean scent filling him. He stopped his thoughts from drifting and concentrate on what he was doing. He was filled with anticipation of her seeing his work already. She alv and he loved that about her. She made him feel good and strive for more. She inspired him.

She lay there naked below the waist as he heated her body with the light touches of his han this way and that as he ran the gun over her alabaster skin. She was getting hotter and hotte sting from the gun and the heat of his touches. Her eyes closed as she lay there and though for him to just slip his hand between her legs and touch her intimately. She lay listening to th fantasies over running her mind making her pussy wet. The feel of his moist breath slowly gl body, thinking of him being there, leaning over her, the heat of his body caressing hers, his l controlling her ass, the erotic feel of her burning skin where he tattooed her.

He heard her moan all of a sudden and his manhood nearly jumped out of the waistband of certainly turned on by her before, but now he was almost hungry for her. He asked her, "Ann right?" he stopped tattooing her and rested his hand on the small of her back, leaning over c body.

"Umm, yes I'm fine, it actually feels kind of erotic, you know, David?" she said with a passion her face. "Sorry if I interrupted you." She whispered to him, because she could hardly talk he dry from her sexual panting, and the look of acceptance and understanding on his face as sl nipples were pebbled and smashed beneath her body, making the pleasure pain all the mor and leaned back, continuing his work.

The longer she lay there the hotter she got, soon she was seriously wet between her legs an would feel it. "God please let him feel it!" she screamed inside her head. The pleasure-pain a was so intense that she could hardly take anymore, her moaning increased tenfold in the las diligently ran the vibrating gun over her eager ass. So wet, so hot. In her mind they had alrea and explored every inch of each other many times. She felt him spraying her tender area wit water, a chill running up her spine and then his heated hand wiping it off with a soft cloth so sweetly. Next she felt his naked fingers rubbing in some cream to cover and protect it.

"You're all done for today." He whispered in her ear. "You little vixen. You have me so hot an now I have to have you. I have been working on you, touching you, lusting for you for the be years now. You drive me wild with desire and passion. I love your face, your smile, your bod that all along, this turned you on. The feeling of it so intense isn't it, so erotic?" He asked her his hands up her back under her shirt, gently massaging her shoulders back and sides with "The heated touch of the gun makes me feel the same thing, Ann. Always forcing myself to c while being worked on."

She could no longer speak due to the realization of him caressing her, so she just shook her turned to look at him, all the passion and lust showing in her eyes had turned them a dark gr night sky. She devoured his face with her eyes looking deeply into his dark blue, penetrating soul and showing him hers. Telling him how much she wanted him as well and for how long him. She felt his hand slip over her breast cupping it, filling his palm with it and feeling the w pierced and pebbled nipple pushing into his hand with her every gasping breath, swelling in begging for more, as she gasped at his gentle touch. "You know, Ann, when I pierced your n ago, I almost died trying to keep myself from leaning over and kissing them afterward." He s her nipple between finger and thumb.

He slide his other hand over her butt, caressing the beautiful shape of it, feeling the heat fro tattooed, reddened skin. He ran his hand up the crack of her orbs and gently caressed her s to slide his large hand over her pussy, engulfing it. Filling his hand with her sweet tattooed a twat. Feeling her wet silken folds as he slipped his lusting fingers down over her tight star sh and then, farther, to her clit this time.

She jumped at the feel of it pushing against his strong fingers. She moaned as he stroked ba teasing her swollen flesh and her hard love nub, pinching her nipple and tugging, making he held nothing back. She massaged the other breast as he did the partner. She licked her lips ecstasy as she arched her back and he felt her hips pushing against his hand, begging for m her prone body and kissed her passionately, hungrily, setting her even more on fire with his already was from his teasing vibrating tattoo gun. Over and over his tongue slid into her torri demanding hands gave her such pleasure.

He already knew she was near orgasm, he could feel her woman's flesh thickening and hea as he slipped his finger inside her. "Let it go, Ann, feel the pleasure mixed with pain. Let it ov senses and cum for me, baby." He led her with his words and voice, as he gently smacked h fucked her pussy. Pushing into her tightness feeling her silken walls squeeze around his fing

"David, Oh yes, please touch me, allow me to feel everything, every touch every breath, eve you. I'm cumming now, David. Mmm." She moaned as she let go and fell into her orgasm. T nectar, engulfing his hand, milky-white and wet. Filling his nostrils with the sweet essence of his mind with the picture of her face in ecstasy. He couldn't hold out much longer so intense for her.

"Ann, are you ready for me?" He asked her sweetly. She devoured him with her eyes and no up at him. That smile could break a thousand dark hearts, he thought to himself as he hurrie clothes.

She watched him with passion clouded eyes as he stripped his clothing from his body, shari her eye. He was so handsome, so sexy. She was made even wetter by just looking upon his covered in fine dark hair. His broad chest and bulging biceps making her whimper with delig piercing so erotic and sensual. When he undid the button and zipper of his jeans and showe underwear just like her she nearly died at the sight of his engorged cock protruding from the his hair. Standing at full attention like a tribute to what she just shared with him. She was ve knowing she affected him the same way he did her.

He pushed her body back to a lying position with her chubby butt in the air, begging him to t most intimate of places. He pulled her hips down the bench until his cock pressed against h
He slid his hard cock back and forth between her cheeks and wet pussy lips, preparing to en way with her sweet juice. She gushed once more as his hard cock slid between her lips, flick and over, spreading her lips to accommodate his head.

"Ann I have to have you now, are you ready for me?" he asked huskily as the passion and lu him now.

"Oh David, I have been ready for you and this to happen for 7 years as well. If you wait one die." She replied throatily. She pushed her asshole against his cock, begging him to enter he Slowly, teasingly, until the head popped inside her, spreading her, and finally filling her with She truly thought she had died and found heaven when he started stroking into her ass over plunging thrusts. Her ass cheeks jiggling at each connection of their bodies. Their moaning, lust talk, filled the room, and their senses as well along with the smells, the thoughts, and ac they did.

"David? I need to feel your gun on my ass, burning and marking me. Fuck my ass with your you tattoo your heart to me for all to know I belong to you in this sensual lust-filled drama, fo David?" She begged him to bring her to erotic ecstasy with both his smoking guns.

"Ann, you do not know how much I have wanted to feel that with you, your body so sweet an so husky in your lust, as I slide my hardness in and out of your tight hole while the gun vibra climax. The thought of you wanting to wear a tattoo to remember this sexually shared fantas so much of me home with you. Oh my God, Anne, you are delectable, you make me crazy a stop." He replied to her in his lustful haze, as he grabbed the gun and set the cup of ink on t to them so he could reach it easier.

He began tattooing a heart on her ass as he felt the buzz of the gun slide right through all of hardened throbbing cock inside her. He plunged into her harder and harder as she arched h cum onto his cock and down to run onto the table beneath her body. Both of them feeling th his hands tugging and pulling her skin as he tattooed his heart onto her quivering ass cheek hold out as he finished the last of the lines and added the arrow through the center, penetrat he penetrated her. He slammed into her again and again his slippery wet cock filling her his her already heated cheeks once more.

The feeling of his demanding cock exploring her so deeply as he gunned her ass was almos causing her to loose all control of herself as she started pushing into him faster and faster. H tattoo gun and grabbed her hips with both hands and started plunging into her faster and fas the explosion coming then he reached around her body and teased her clit with his long see Feeling her pulsate and peak under his manipulation of her body. Her hands filled with her b and tugging her nipples as she climaxed and screamed his name.

"Oh David yes...the pleasure pain is so intense, my ass cheeks burning as hot as my pussy giving me this, sharing this fantasy with me. Thank you for finally allowing me to be me and and need." She cried out in her ecstasy.

"Ann my little rebel, my sweet Ann, with lustful giggles and smiles that would warm the colde body, your movements, would bring a dead man back to life, Ann, and I can't tell you how m that you would share this with me as well, that you even wanted to. I only wish you had told told her close in her ear as he pumped his cum into her begging asshole, over and over, dee spewed inside her while telling her of her beauty and charm, her heated lustful body making ecstasy. He could hear her pussy rings tinkling with every gush of joy and it made the feelin even stronger. He never wanted it to end and neither did she.

He collapsed onto her, totally drained. She collapsed on the bench her muscles limp. They l caressed and touched each other until they slowly floated back into their bodies and minds.

"David, I think I am in total lust with you." She smiled brightly as she turned to him and slipp over his lips not even allowing him to answer her.

He had always known they were connected in their likes and dislikes but wow now this, it wo until he had her forever under his guns. The teasing pleasure pain of this ecstasy over and o his mind, body and soul. Her forever his.

He looked down into her passion flushed face and slipped his hands to cradle her head on e you seeing anyone?" he asked.

"No, David I'm not." She replied with honesty, wondering where he was going with this but th knew.

"Would you like to have someone in your life?" he asked gently.

"David, I would want you in my life. To share everything with you, experience everything we of, fantasized about. David do you feel this connection? I don't know how to explain it but I h since I met you and I am very glad that you finally made your feelings clear. You make me c me to do wild things and forget myself in my pleasure."

"Oh Anne, you do the same to me and yes I feel the connection as well, I always have. I just you felt, until today anyway. Wow, you little vixen you. You drive me insane with lust." He tol she wiggled her butt against him, feeling him grow inside her once more.

"David take me again, fill my pussy this time, I want to feel you fill me, and touch my soul." S more.

He slid his hardness out of her asshole and into her wanton pussy, filling her as he pumped wiggled her hips back and forth meeting his every thrust until once more they found their rel

Afterward he prompted her to turn over, as he slapped her butt cheek, so he could tattoo the around the castle on her mound. She rolled over to face him and as he began adding the de her once more, he could smell himself spilling out of her, smelled her cum mingled with his.
again as she filled his senses. Once the design was tattooed onto her, he couldn't resist her pulled her up to look at his work.

"David, wow, you are amazing in your talent. You have truly done a marvelous job once mor beguilingly at him. "I just can't get over the things you can create and make come to life."

He walked up behind her and felt her body with his hands peeling her shirt off her head and floor. He turned her body into him, feeling the length of her, her full breasts and pierced nipp against his chest. Her milky wet pussy sliding against his thigh as he slipped it between her folds burning him. He had to have her.

He pushed her back against the wall and lifted her legs. She held his shoulders as he lifted h positioned himself to impale her once more. Drink all of her into him. push all of himself into warmth.

They rocked and rode each other into climax once more before they finally left the shop to g place for the best sharing sexual experience either of them had experienced.

Finally empty after exploring each other in so many ways they fell into exhausted sleep, spo with their bodies and enjoying the fact that they had finally found each other in every way.

Copyright 2000 on pictures and story by Young At Heart. All rights reserved. This story may or copied without the express permission from the author, and the Queen shall banish all wh permission from her erotic kingdom. so be good and don't upset her or she'll set her ferociou dragon on you.

SYNOPSIS: Originally in booklet form, information presented here is with the intention of pro information about a teacher of teachers. All time references are as originally published, circa Great Stupa of Dharmakaya Which Liberates Upon Seeing and information regarding the wo Vidyadhara the Venerable Trungpa, Rinpoche is included here. For more information, write o

Mountain Shambhala Center, 4921 County Rd 68C, Red Feather Lakes, CO 80545
Voice: (970) 881 2184; Telecopier: 970 881 2909

Contents

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE STUPAPage 3
SYMBOLISM OF THE STUPAPage 4
THE GREAT STUPA OF DHARMAKAYAPage 5
YOUR PARTICIPATIONPage 7
VIDYADHARA, THE VENERABLE CH™GYAM TRUNGPA, RINPOCHEPage 9
ORGANIZATIONS FOUNDED (Selected List)Page 11 BOOKS PUBLISHEDPage 13
>>>>

VIDYADHARA THE VENERABLE CH™GYAM TRUNGPA, RINPOCHE

(photo caption: The Vidyadhara taught in America for seventeen years. He brought to us the heritage of the tradition of Buddhism and the teachings of Shambhala.)

His Life and Teachings

Vidyadhara the Venerable Ch”gyam Trungpa, Rinpoche, achieved international repute as a teacher whose vitality in bringing Buddhist and Tibetan traditions to the Western world attra of students. He was the first spiritual master to translate extensively the profound Tibetan Bu Shambhala teachings into English. Because of his extraordinary command of English and hi Western culture, he was able to impart these teachings firsthand to his students and to deve heartfelt connection to the practice of meditation. In his numerous books and through the se programs he conducted, he embodied the living quality, richness, and scope of the Buddhist Vidyadhara the Venerable Trungpa, Rinpoche founded a number of institutions throughout w into the practice and study of the Kagyu, Nyingma and Shambhala traditions of basic sanity.
was Vajradhatu, an international association of over one hundred meditation and study cent States, Canada, Europe, Japan and South America. After twelve years in the United States headquarters of Vajradhatu was relocated to Halifax, Nova Scotia in 1985. Its two other hea Boulder, Colorado and Marburg, Germany.

In 1974, the Venerable Trungpa, Rinpoche, founded The Naropa Institute in Boulder, Colora liberal arts college offering degree programs in Eastern and Western fields of study. The Na the only accredited college in North America with an educational philosophy rooted in the Bu contemplative tradition.

The Shambhala Training program, a nonreligious program offering meditation to the general introduced in 1976. This program presents teachings on how to cultivate, through the path o bravery, the wisdom and dignity that are inherent in ordinary human life. Shambhala Trainin thirty-six cities internationally.

Also in 1976, the Venerable Trungpa, Rinpoche empowered an American student, Thomas Regent - his dharma heir and designated spiritual successor. The Vajra Regent's Buddhist means "radiant holder of the teachings." He is the first Westerner ever to be empowered as the Kagyu and Nyingma traditions.

On April 4, 1987, Vidyadhara the Venerable Trungpa, Rinpoche, died in Halifax. In keeping tradition dating back to the time of Gautama Buddha himself, a stupa is being built at Rocky Center in Colorado to commemorate this great teacher. His Holiness Dilgo Khyentse, Rinpo scholar and meditation master of the Nyingma lineage and one of the Vidyadhara's principal this stupa "The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya, Which Liberates Upon Seeing."

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE STUPA Historical and Cultural
(photo caption: The Bodhnath Stupa in Kathmandu, Nepal.)

"Stupa" is a Sanskrit word which means "to heap" or "to pile up," and refers to the mound-lik earliest stupas. The Tibetan word for stupa is ch”ten or "receptacle for offerings."
Shortly before his parinirvana, the Buddha instructed his students to cremate his body and p and the remains of his bones in a stupa. People could visit the stupa, venerate it, and renew to his teachings. Since that time, hundreds of thousands of stupas have been built, enshrini the Buddha and of many other enlightened teachers.
There are numerous types of stupas, and their veneration is an essential part of Buddhist lif Burma, China, India, Japan, Korea, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Tibet, and in all countries w been taught and practiced.
Stupas are said to promote harmony, prosperity, longevity, good health, peace, ad freedom
They subdue fear, corruption, and pollution, and bring blessings to the environment in which to those who build them, and to those who visit and venerate them. In this way, they ensure quality of the Buddhist teachings will always be available.

Building a stupa in the United States that is accessible to the public is a project of great sign brings to the West an extremely powerful religious and cultural symbolism and acknowledge America has developed to the point where the spiritual power and compassion that is expres stupa can be presented and understood.
Building the Great Stupa of Dharmakaya is a unique opportunity. Through this effort, people personally confirm the awakened state called enlightenment and thereby engage directly in the world.

SYMBOLISM OF THE STUPA

The stupa that enshrines the teacher's physical remains is at once a reminder of the teacher embodiment of the pure and all-pervasive aspect of the awakened state. As His Holiness Di Rinpoche, has said, "When a great teacher passes away, his body is no more. But to indicat dwelling forever in an unchanging way in the dharmakaya, one will erect a stupa as a symbo buddhas."
As the Buddhist teachings point out, every element of a buddha's physical body is pervaded enlightenment. Thus, even after cremation, the teacher's remains are considered sacred, be distilled essence of his or her physical form and are therefore themselves the embodiment o Because it enshrines these relics, the stupa is powerful.
It is said that in venerating the stupa one can "meet" the teacher. The visual impact of the st observer brings a direct experience of inherent wakefulness and dignity. Stupas continue to of their ability to liberate one from confusion simply upon seeing their structure.
The shape of the stupa represents the Buddha, crowned and sitting in meditation posture or crown is the top of the spire; his head is the square at the spire's base; his body is the vase legs are the four steps of the lower terrace; and the base is his throne.
The stupa also symbolizes the five essential elements and their relationship to enlightened r the essential attributes of a fully realized human being: the base of the stupa signifies earth equanimity; the dome, water and indestructibility; the spire, fire and compassion; above the all-accomplishing action; and, at the very top, the jewel signifies space and all-pervading aw stupa is a mandala, or sacred arrangement, containing all of these enlightened qualities.

[sidebar: This stupa is called a dharmakaya stupa. Within it, the guru dwells unchanging. Th whoever sees a dharmakaya stupa will be liberated by the sight of it. Feeling the breeze nea liberates one by its touch. The sound of the tinkling of the small bells hanging on the stupa li their sound. Having thus seen or experienced this stupa, by thinking of one's experience of i liberated through recollection. - His Holiness Dilgo Khyentse, Rinpoche.]

THE GREAT STUPA OF DHARMAKAYA

At Rocky Mountain Dharma Center

The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya is being built at Rocky Mountain Dharma Center, 400 acres mountainous land located just west of Fort Collins, Colorado. The center was founded in 197 Trungpa, Rinpoche. Its rural setting provides an excellent environment for the intensive prac contemplative disciplines, and the center offers facilities for both individual and group practic the year. Rocky Mountain Dharma Center is also available to teachers and students of other traditions who wish to use it as a contemplative conference facility.

The Stupa

The site of the Stupa is a meadow situated in the upper end of the main valley. The spot ma of three smaller valleys and gives way to steep cliffs and crags leading to the retreat area ab was originally selected by His Holiness the Sixteenth Gyalwa Karmapa and subsequently co Holiness Dilgo Khyentse, Rinpoche who visited as the Vidyadhara's parinirvana.

The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya is the "lha bap" or "divine decent" type of stupa, which sign appearance of the teacher on earth. It will be built according to the proportions set out in the Tiktse, the great treatise on stupas by the 19th century meditation master and scholar Jamg Great.

The Stupa will stand 100 feet tall and will contain three levels. A forty-eight feet square base stairways and openings on all four sides will form the lower level. Inside will be a shrine hall feet square and twenty-four feet high. In the center will be a large, golden statue of the Budd relic of the Vidyadhara, the skull relic, will be placed inside the statue's heart center. The en room will be adorned with statues of the ten previous Trungpa tulkus, sculptures of the Vidya teachers - including his root guru Jamgon Kongtrul of Sechen, His Holiness the Sixteenth Gy Holiness Dilgo Khyentse, Rinpoche and Khenpo Gangshar Rangdrol - frescoes, and smalle

Most stupas are sealed monuments. A most unusual aspect of the Great Stupa of Dharmaka hall of the Buddha on the first level will be open to all who wish to visit and venerate the Stu

The second level, reached by interior stairs, will contain another shrine hall, twenty-four feel fourteen feet high. Here there will be a three-dimensional Cakrasamvara mandala, as well a and frescoes throughout. This shrine hall will be used only for special liturgical practices.

[photos caption: His Holiness the Sixteenth Karmapa; Jamgon Kongtrul of Sechen; The Vidy
Holiness Khyentse Rinpoche.]

The third level of the Stupa, in the shape of a vase, will house a round shrine hall, nineteen f diameter and sixteen feet high, containing a statues of Vajrasattva and relics of the Vidyadh enlightened teachers.

On the top of this level will be the spire, thirteen disks representing stages of enlightenment, the top and surmounted by a golden moon, sun, and jewel.

Small clay stupas, called tsa tsas, containing ashes from the Vidyadhhara's cremation, will b throughout the entire structure, as will relics of other enlightened teachers, relics of sacred s mantras, scriptures, engravings, and precious jewels and metals. These smaller stupas and be placed in the Stupa to increase and enrich the spiritual power and blessings of the Great Dharmakaya.

A terraced park, 180 feet in diameter, with lawns, trees, gardens, and walkways, will surrour

His Holiness Khyentse Rinpoche and the Venerable Tenga Rinpoche are directing all aspec and the Vajra Regent Osel Tendzin is supervising the entire project. Each step of the buildin groundbreaking to placing the spire, entails traditional ceremonies of purification and blessin Venerable Tenga Rinpoche will personally conduct the relic placements and some of the co necessary for the Stupa's empowerment.

The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya is being built to last for generations. The finest and most e currently available will be used throughout. In the later stages of construction, Bhutanese ma assisted by Western students, will paint the frescoes and create the statues for the interior. T phase will provide a rare opportunity for Westerners to study with artists thoroughly trained i disciplines and will help ensure the continuation in the West of those traditions of painting ar

YOUR PARTICIPATION

The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya, Which Liberates Upon Seeing is being built to inspire pea world, to hasten the Vidyadhara's rebirth, and to evoke the awakened state. It is intended to people.

The total budgeted cost of this project is $1.5 million. Your contribution to the Great Stupa o will be used to fund construction, painting and sculpture, visiting artists, and landscaping.

Please contribute generously to this campaign to build the Great Stupa of Dharmakaya.

Phase One:$275,000
The first phase includes planning and design work, engineering, permits and approvals, equ groundbreaking, as well as construction of the foundation, floor, and a support building. This is scheduled for completion in the fall of 1988.

Phase Two:$675,000
Phase Two is the main construction phase, continuing through the winter of 1990. Artisans w the sculptures, carvings and castings. By fall 1989, the basic structure will be finished and in construction will begin. During this phase, the Venerable Tenga Rinpoche will place tsa tsas the Stupa and conduct the appropriate consecration ceremonies.

Phase Three$550,000
During the final phase, all exterior work and surface coatings will be completed, the four entr will be built and carved, and the spire will be set in place. Landscaping will also be complete work on sculptures, frescoes, and interior detailing, carried out by Bhutanese master artists accomplished by the winter of 1991.

Total:$1,500,000

Please make your contributions to:
The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya
Vajradhatu
1345 Spruce Street
Boulder, Colorado 80302
(303) 444-0190

Volunteering to Work on the Stupa
The Great Stupa of Dharmakaya is being built almost entirely by volunteers, some of whom fields of architecture, design, metal-casting, gold-leafing, and construction. Both skilled and volunteers are warmly invited to assist wiith the project during the three to four year construc

Especially needed are concrete form carpenters during the summer of 1989.

If you are interested in participating, please write to the Vajradhatu Stupa Project at the abov [quotations]:

"Our world, torn with strife and tension, is a pooor place to live in without the Venerable Ch”
His life and message will continue to inspire us all to build a world of peace and brotherhood
Paul, Indian Ambassador to the United States;

"Trungpa Rinpoche's magnificent strength and brilliance as a teacher reaches far into our he his continuing memory that we pray for his speedy rebirth and his presence again in the wor Traleg Kyabgon, Rinpoche

"...the Venerable Trungpa Rinpoche's strong commitment to world peace and harmony will b because of his important role in Buddhism in this country and the promotion of international Ambassador M.L. Birabhongse Kasemsri, Permanent Representative of Thailand to the Unit

"...the Venerable Ch”gyam Trungpa Rinpoche's incredible compassion and wisdom reached world." - Hon. Patricia Schroeder, Congresswoman, Colorado

BRIEF CHRONOLOGY
VIDYADHARA, THE VENERABLE CH™GYAM TRUNGPA, RINPOCHE

1940: Born in Kham, Eastern Tibet; recognized in infancy as the eleventh Trungpa and hea Monasteries in Eastern Tibet.

1941: Enthroned as the eleventh Trungpa, Supreme Abbot of Surmang Monasteries, and G District.

1945-1959: In addition to the traditional monastic disciplines, studied calligraphy, thangka p monastic dance.

1948: Received ordination of shramanera (novice monk).

1958: Received degrees of Kyorpon (Doctor of Divinity) and Khenpo (Master of Studies). O (full monk).

1959: Escaped to India as a result of the Communist Chinese invasion of Tibet and increas the Buddhist religion.

1959-1963: Appointed by His Holiness the Dalai Lama to serve as spiritual advisor at the Y School in Dalhousie, India.

1963-1967: Received Spaulding sponsorship to attend Oxford University; studied comparat philosophy and fine arts. Received instructor's degree in Sogestsu School of Japanese flow founded by Master Sofu Teshigahara.

1968-1970: Founded and served as spiritual director of Samye-Ling Meditation Centre in D Scotland.

1969: Relinquished monastic vows.

1970: Married the former Diana Judith Pybus. They have five sons: Osel Rangtrol. Tagtruk Ashoka Alexander and Hung Loa David.

1970: Arrived in North America. Founded Karme-Choling Buddhist Meditation and Study C called "Tail of the Tiger") in Vermont. Founded the Karma Dzong Meditation Center, whose numbers about 1,000 American Buddhist practitioners.

1970-87: Traveled and taught extensively, establishing many urban meditation and study c Dhramadhatus or Dharma Study Groups, throughout North America and Europe for the prac Buddhist meditation.

1971: Founded Rocky Mountain Dharma Center near Fort Collins, Colorado.

1973: Founded Vajradhatu to coordinate the work of all the dharma centers under his auspi first annual Vajradhatu Seminary, a three-month advanced study program. (Transcripts of hi seminaries through 1986 comprise over 25 volumes published by Vajradhatu for use by his 1974: Founded Nalanda foundation, a non-profit education corporation.

1974: Hosted the first visit of His Holiness the Gyalwa Karmapa, head of the Kagyu lineage

Founded Dorje Khyung Dzong, a retreat facility in southern Colorado. Founded the Naropa
Boulder, Colorado.

1976: Hosted the first visit of His Holiness Khyentse Rinpoche, one of the leaders of the Ny Tibetan Buddhism, to North America.

1976: Empowered an American student, Thomas F. Rich, as his spiritual successor who is Regent Osel Tendzin.

1976: Established the Shambhala Training Program.

1981: Hosted the visit of His Holiness the Dalai Lama in Boulder.

April 4, 1987: Died as a result of respiratory failure and cardiac arrest in Halifax, Nova Scoti

ORGANIZATIONS FOUNDED (selected list)

1973: Vajradhatu. An international association of Buddhist meditation and study centers. Cu over 100 centers in the United States, Canada, and Europe, with headquarters in Boulder, C Nova Scotia, and Marburg, Germany.

1974: The Naropa Institute. Boulder, Colorado. An accredited liberal arts college combining studies with traditional liberal arts disciplines, the fine and performing arts, and psychology.

1974: Nalanda Foundation. A nonprofit, non-sectarian educational organization to encourag programs in the fields of education, psychology and the arts which bring together the wisdor insight of Eastern and Western traditions. Its divisions and activities include:

Shambhala Training. Established in 1976 in Boulder, Colorado. A nonreligious program offe instruction to the public in major North American and European cities.

Alaya Preschool. Established in 1975, Boulder, Colorado.

Vidya Elementary School. (Grades K-4) (1975-1987) Bounder, Colorado.

The Naropa Institute of Canada. Established in 1985. Dedicated to bringing to Canada work the arts, education and psychology.

Nalanda Translation Committee. Established in 1975. A consortium of Sanskrit and Tibetan translation of traditional literature and religious texts. Among other work, they have translate
The Rain of Wisdom, a compendium of devotional songs and poetry of the Kagyu lineage of Shambhala Publications, 1980, and The Life of Marpa the Translator, Shambhala Publicatio

Shambhala School of Dressage. Established in 1979. A school of riding integrating the tradi of the Spanish Riding School of Vienna with the ancient principles of mindfulness and aware direction of Diana Mukpo.

Kalapa Ikebana. Established in 1982. A new school of Ikebana to promote the study and pr discipline of Japanese flower arranging as a contemplative journey. Kalapa Ikebana organiz workshops, lecture demonstrations and exhibitions throughout North America.

Ryhudo Kyudojo. Established 1981. Boulder, Colorado. Founded to present the practice of Z direction of Shibata Kanjuro, Sensei, the twentieth-generation bowmaker to the Emperor of J

Kalapa Cha. Established 1981, Boulder, Colorado. Devoted to the study of the Japanese wa

Maitri Center. Founded in 1972, Wingdale, New York. Maitri Center employed traditional the together with contemporary psychotherapy. The C enter no longer exists, however, the thera are included as part of the curriculum for MA psychology students at The Naropa Institute.

Mudra Theater Group. Established in 1972. Utilizing postures and movement from traditiona theater together with modern Western approaches, Mudra has produced a repertory from cl 1974: Dorje Kasung. A volunteer service organization within Vajradhatu. Members serve as drivers to principal teachers and are trained to fulfill a variety of organizational and security f including staffing public events, crisis intervention within the community, and traditional cere

1978: Amara. An association of health professionals that provides a forum for exchanging vi health issues from a multidisciplinary perspective. The basic premise of this approach is an the relationships between a person's state of mind and state of health.

Upaya Council. A meditation council to provide a forum of sanity and gentleness for commu together to resolve disputes of a domestic or business nature.

1983: United States Committee for the United National Lumbini Project. An organization of political, and educational leaders devoted to building a peace center at the birthplace of the Nepal.

1983: Gampo Abbey. A Kagyu monastery located in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, where Wes into traditional monastic discipline.

1986: The American Buddhist Congress. A national organization uniting leaders of the 3-4 r
the U.S.

BOOKS PUBLISHED

1966: Born in Tibet, George Allen & Unwin Ltd., London. Harcourt Brace & World, New York
Hyman, London and Shambhala Publications. (German, French, Italian)

1969: Meditation in Action, Shambhala Publications, and Stuart & Watkins, London. (French Spanish, Portuguese)

1972: Mudra, Collected poems 1952-71. Shambhala Publications. (German)

1973: Cutting Through Spiritual Materialism, Shambhala Publications. (French, German, Da Portuguese, Japanese, Italian, Dutch)

1975: The Dawn of Tantra, co-authored with Dr. Herbert Gentler, Shambhala Publications. ( Italian)

1975: Glimpses of Abhidharma, Vajradhatu Press, Boulder, Colorado. Reissued by Shambh (French, German)

1975: The Tibetan Book of the Dead, translated with Francisco Ferment (new translation) Sh
(French, German, Italian, Spanish, Finnish)

1975: Visual Dharma: The Buddhist Art of Tibet. Shambhala Publications.

1976: The Myth of Freedom, Shambhala Publications. (French, German, Italian, Spanish, Ja

1980: The Rain of Wisdom, translated with the Nalanda Translation Committee, Shambhala

1981: Journey Without Goal, Prajna Press, Boulder and London. Reissued by Shambhala P German, Italian)

1982: The Life of Marpa, translated with the Nalanda Translation Committee, Prajna Press, Reissued by Shambhala Publications.

1983: First Thought Best Thought, 108 poems, Ed. David I. Rome. Introduction by Allen Gin Publications.

1984: Shambhala: The Sacred Path of the Warrior, Ed. Carolyn Rose Gimian, Shambhala P Books, New York., N.Y. (1986) (German, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, French)

>>>>
In closing, may all beings who comes in contact with this know the dharma immmediately an awake true nature. May all beings progress on their path. Mangalam.

VEDANTA & BUDDHISM
A Comparative Study

by Helmuth Von Glasenapp
Professor of Indology University of Tuebingen, Germany

Wheel Publication No. 2

First edition: January 1958
Second impression: July 1958
Third impression: July 1960
Fourth impression: February 1978

Copyright 1995 Buddhist Publication Society

BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
KANDY Sri Lanka

* * *

DharmaNet Edition 1995

Transcription: Gaston Losier
Proofreading & Formatting: John Bullitt

This electronic edition is offered for free distribution
via DharmaNet by arrangement with the publisher.

DharmaNet International
P.O. Box 4951, Berkeley CA 94704-4951

* * * * * * * *

PREFACE

The present treatise by Prof. Dr. H.V. Glasenapp has been selected for reprint particularly in view of the excellent elucidation of the Anatta Doctrine which it contains. The treatise, in its German original, appeared in 1950 in the Proceeding of the "Akademie der Wissenschaften and Literatur" (Academy of Sciences and Literature). The present selection from that original is based on the abridged translations published in "The Buddhist," Vol.XXI, No. 12 (Colombo 1951). Partial use has also been made of a different selection and translation which appeared in "The Middle Way," Vol. XXXI, No. 4 (London 1957).

The author of this treatise is an eminent Indologist of Western Germany, formerly of the University of Koenigsberg, now occupying the indological chair of the University of Tuebingen. Among his many scholarly publications are books on Buddhism, Hinduism, Jainism and on comparative religion.

-- Buddhist Publication Society

* * *

VEDANTA AND BUDDHISM

Vedanta and Buddhism are the highlights of Indian philosophical thought. Since both have grown in the same spiritual soil, they share many basic ideas: both of them assert that the universe shows a periodical succession of arising, existing and vanishing, and that this process is without beginning and end. They believe in the causality which binds the result of an action to its cause (karma), and in rebirth conditioned by that nexus. Both are convinced of the transitory, and therefore sorrowful character, of individual existence in the world; they hope to attain gradually to a redeeming knowledge through renunciation and meditation and they assume the possibility of a blissful and serene state, in which all worldly imperfections have vanished for ever. The original form of these two doctrines shows however strong contrast. The early Vedanta, formulated in most of the older and middle Upanishads, in some passages of the Mahabharata and the Puranas, and still alive today (though greatly changed) as the basis of several Hinduistic systems, teaches an //ens realissimum// (an entity of highest reality) a the primordial cause of all existence, from which everything has arisen and with which it again merges, either temporarily or for ever.

With the monistic metaphysics of the Vedanta contrasts the pluralistic Philosophy of Flux of the early Buddhism of the Pali texts which up to the present time flourishes in Ceylon, Burma and Siam. It teaches that in the whole empirical reality there is nowhere anything that persists; neither material nor mental substances exist independently by themselves; there is no original entity or primordial Being in whatsoever form it may be imagined, from which these substances might have developed. On the contrary, the manifold world of mental and material elements arises solely through the causal co-operation of the transitory factors of existence (dharma) which depend functionally upon each other, that is, the material and mental universe arises through the concurrence of forces that, according to the Buddhists, are not reducible to something else. It is therefore obvious that deliverance from the Samsara, i.e., the sorrow-laden round of existence, cannot consist in the re-absorption into an eternal Absolute which is at the root of all manifoldness, but can only be achieved by a complete extinguishing of all factors which condition the processes constituting life and world. The Buddhist Nirvana is, therefore, not the primordial ground, the eternal essence, which is at the basis of everything and form which the whole world has arisen (the Brahman of the Upanishads) but the reverse of all that we know, something altogether different which must be characterized as a nothing in relation to the world, but which is experienced as highest bliss by those who have attained to it (Anguttara Nikaya, Navaka-nipata 34). Vedantists and Buddhists have been fully aware of the gulf between their doctrines, a gulf that cannot be bridged over. According to Majjhima Nikaya, Sutta 22, a doctrine that proclaims "The same is the world and the self. This I shall be after death; imperishable, permanent, eternal!" (see Brh. UP. 4, 4, 13), was styled by the Buddha a perfectly foolish doctrine. On the other side, the Katha-Upanishad (2, 1, 14) does not see a way to deliverance in the Buddhist theory of dharmas (impersonal processes): He who supposes a profusion of particulars gets lost like rain water on a mountain slope; the truly wise man, however, must realize that his Atman is at one with the Universal Atman, and that the former, if purified from dross, is being absorbed by the latter, "just as clear water poured into clear water becomes one with it, indistinguishably."

Vedanta and Buddhism have lived side by side for such a long time that obviously they must have influenced each other. The strong predilection of the Indian mind for a doctrine of universal unity (monism) has led the representatives of Mahayana to conceive Samsara and Nirvana as two aspects of the same and single true reality; for Nagarjuna the empirical world is a mere appearance, as all dharmas, manifest in it, are perishable and conditioned by other dharmas, without having any independent existence of their own. Only the indefinable "Voidness" (//sunyata//) to be grasped in meditation, and realized in Nirvana, has true reality.

This so-called Middle Doctrine of Nagarjuna remains true to the Buddhist principle that there can be nowhere a substance, in so far as Nagarjuna sees the last unity as a kind of abyss, characterized only negatively, which has no genetic relation to the world. Asanga and Vasubandhu, however, in their doctrine of Consciousness Only, have abandoned the Buddhist principle of denying a positive reality which is at the root all phenomena, and in doing so, they have made a further approach to Vedanta. To that mahayanistic school of Yogacaras, the highest reality is a pure and undifferentiated spiritual element that represents the non- relative substratum of all phenomena. To be sure, they thereby do not assert, as the (older) Vedanta does, that the //ens realissimum// (the highest essence) is identical with the universe, the relation between the two is rather being defined as "being neither different nor not different." It is only in the later Buddhist systems of the Far East that the undivided, absolute consciousness is taken to be the basis of the manifold world of phenomena. But in contrast to the older Vedanta, it is never maintained that the world is an unfoldment from the unchangeable, eternal, blissful Absolute; suffering and passions, manifest in the world of plurality, are rather traced back to worldly delusion.

On the other hand, the doctrines of later Buddhist philosophy had a far-reaching influence on Vedanta. It is well known that Gaudapada, and other representatives of later Vedanta, taught an illusionistic acosmism, for which true Reality is only "the eternally pure, eternally awakened, eternally redeemed" universal spirit whilst all manifoldness is only delusion; the Brahma has therefore not developed into the world, as asserted by the older Vedanta, but it forms only the world's unchangeable background, comparable to the white screen on which appear the changing images of an unreal shadow play.

In my opinion, there was in later times, especially since the Christian era, much mutual influence of Vedanta and Buddhism, but originally the systems are diametrically opposed to each other. The Atman doctrine of the Vedanta and the Dharma theory of Buddhism exclude each other. The Vedanta tries to establish an Atman as the basis of everything, whilst Buddhism maintains that everything in the empirical world is only a stream of passing Dharmas (impersonal and evanescent processes) which therefore has to be characterized as Anatta, i.e., being without a persisting self, without independent existence.

Again and again scholars have tried to prove a closer connection between the early Buddhism of the Pali texts, and the Vedanta of the Upanishads; they have even tried to interpret Buddhism as a further development of the Atman doctrine. There are, e.g., two books which show that tendency: //The Vedantic Buddhism of the Buddha//, by J.G. Jennings (Oxford University Press, 1947), and in German language, //The Soul Problem of Early Buddhism//, by Herbert Guenther (Konstanz 1949).

The essential difference between the conception of deliverance in Vedanta and in Pali Buddhism lies in the following ideas: Vedanta sees deliverance as the manifestation of a state which, though obscured, has been existing from time immemorial; for the Buddhist, however, Nirvana is a reality which differs entirely from all dharmas as manifested in Samsara, and which only becomes effective, if they are abolished. To sum up: the Vedantin wishes to penetrate to the last reality which dwells within him as an immortal essence, or seed, out of which everything has arisen. The follower of Pali Buddhism, however, hopes by complete abandoning of all corporeality, all sensations, all perceptions, all volitions, and acts of consciousness, to realize a state of bliss which is entirely different from all that exists in the Samsara.

After these introductory remarks we shall now discuss systematically the relation of original Buddhism and Vedanta.

(1) First of all we have to clarify to what extent a knowledge of Upanishadic texts may be assumed for the canonical Pali scriptures. The five old prose Upanishads are, on reasons of contents and language, generally held to be pre-Buddhistic. The younger Upanishads, in any case those beginning from //Maitrayana//, were certainly written at a time when Buddhism already existed.

The number of passages in the Pali Canon dealing with Upanishadic doctrines, is very small. It is true that early Buddhism shares many doctrines with the Upanishads (Karma, rebirth, liberation through insight), but these tenets were so widely held in philosophical circles of those times that we can no longer regard the Upanishads are the direct source from which the Buddha has drawn. The special metaphysical concern of the Upanishads, the identity of the individual and the universal Atman, has been mentioned and rejected only in a few passages in the early Buddhist texts, for instance in the saying of the Buddha quoted earlier. Nothing shows better the great distance that separates the Vedanta and the teachings of the Buddha, than the fact that the two principal concepts of Upanishadic wisdom, Atman and Brahman, do not appear anywhere in the Buddhist texts, with the clear and distinct meaning of a "primordial ground of the world, core of existence, //ens realissimum// (true substance)," or similarly. As this holds likewise true for the early Jaina literature, one must assume that early Vedanta was of no great importance in Magadha, at the time of the Buddha and the Mahavira; otherwise the opposition against if would have left more distinct traces in the texts of these two doctrines.

(2) It is of decisive importance for examining the relation between Vedanta and Buddhism, clearly to establish the meaning of the words //atta// and //anatta// in Buddhist literature.

The meaning of the word //attan// (nominative: //atta//, Sanskrit: //atman//, nominative: //atma//) divides into two groups: (1) in daily usage, //attan//("self") serves for denoting one's own person, and has the function of a reflexive pronoun. This usage is, for instance, illustrated in the 12th Chapter of the Dhammapada. As a philosophical term //attan// denotes the individual soul as assumed by the Jainas and other schools, but rejected by the Buddhists. This individual soul was held to be an eternal unchangeable spiritual monad, perfect and blissful by nature, although its qualities may be temporarily obscured through its connection with matter. Starting from this view held by the heretics, the Buddhists further understand by the term "self" (//atman//) any eternal, unchangeable individual entity, in other words, that which Western metaphysics calls a "substance": "something existing through and in itself, and not through something else; nor existing attached to, or inherent in, something else." In the philosophical usage of the Buddhists, //attan// is, therefore, any entity of which the heretics wrongly assume that it exists independently of everything else, and that it has existence on its own strength.

The word //anattan// (nominative: //anatta//) is a noun (Sanskrit: //anatma//) and means "not-self" in the sense of an entity that is not independent. The word //anatman// is found in its meaning of "what is not the Soul (or Spirit)," also in brahmanical Sanskrit sources

(//Bhagavadgita//, 6,6; Shankara to //Brahma Sutra// I, 1, 1, Bibl, Indica, p 16; Vedantasara Section 158). Its frequent use in Buddhism is accounted for by the Buddhist' characteristic preference for negative nouns. Phrases like //rupam anatta// are therefore to be translated "corporeality is a not-self," or "corporeality is not an independent entity."

As an adjective, the word //anattan// (as occasionally //attan// too; see Dhammapada 379; Geiger, //Pali Lit., Section 92) changes from the consonantal to the //a//-declension; //anatta// (see Sanskrit //anatmaka, anatmya//), e.g., //Samyutta 22, 55, 7 PTS III p. 56), //anattam rupam ... anatte sankare ... na pajanati// ("he does not know that corporeality is without self, ... that the mental formations are without self"). The word //anatta// is therefore, to be translated here by "not having the nature of a self, non-independent, without a (persisting) self, without an (eternal) substance," etc. The passage //anattam rupam anatta rupan ti yathabhutam na pajanati// has to be rendered: "With regard to corporeality having not the nature of a self, he does not know according to truth, 'Corporeality is a not-self (not an independent entity).'" The noun //attan// and the adjective //anatta// can both be rendered by "without a self, without an independent essence, without a persisting core," since the Buddhists themselves do not make any difference in the use of these two grammatical forms. This becomes particularly evident in the case of the word //anatta//, which may be either a singular or a plural noun. In the well-known phrase //sabbe sankhara anicca .... sabbe dhamma anatta// (Dhp. 279), "all conditioned factors of existence are transitory .... all factors existent whatever (Nirvana included) are without a self," it is undoubtedly a plural noun, for the Sanskrit version has //sarve dharma anatmanah//.

The fact that the Anatta doctrine only purports to state that a //dharma// is "void of a self," is evident from the passage in the //Samyutta Nikaya// (35, 85; PTS IV, p.54) where it is said //rupa sunna attena va attaniyenava//, "forms are void of a self (an independent essence) and of anything pertaining to a self (or 'self-like')."

Where Guenther has translated //anattan// or //anatta// as "not //the// self," one should use "//a// self" instead of "//the// self," because in the Pali Canon the word //atman// does not occur in the sense of "universal soul."

(3) It is not necessary to assume that the existence of indestructible monads is a necessary condition for a belief in life after death. The view that an eternal, immortal, persisting soul substance is the //conditio sine qua non// of rebirth can be refuted by the mere fact that not only in the older Upanishads, but also in Pythagoras and Empedocles, rebirth is taught without the assumption of an imperishable soul substance.

(4) Guenther can substantiate his view only through arbitrary translations which contradict the whole of Buddhist tradition. This is particularly evident in those passages where Guenther asserts that "the Buddha meant the same by Nirvana and atman" and that "Nirvana is the true nature of man." For in //Udana// 8,2, Nirvana is expressly described as //anattam//, which is rightly rendered by Dhammapala's commentary (p. 21) as //atta-virahita// (without a self), and in //Vinaya V//, p. 86, Nirvana is said to be, just as the conditioned factors of existence (//sankhata//), "without a self" (p. 151). Neither can the equation atman=nirvana be proved by the well-known phrase //attadipa viharatha, dhammadipa//, for, whether //dipa// here means "lamp" or "island of deliverance," this passage can, after all, only refer to the monks taking refuge in themselves and in the doctrine (//dhamma//),and //attan// and //dhamma// cannot possibly be interpreted as Nirvana. In the same way, too, it is quite preposterous to translate //Dhammapada// 160, //atta hi attano natho// as "Nirvana is for a man the leader" (p. 155); for the chapter is concerned only with the idea that we should strive hard and purify ourselves. Otherwise Guenther would have to translate in the following verse 161, //attana va katam papam attajam attasambhavam//: "By Nirvana evil is done, it arises out of Nirvana, it has its origin in Nirvana." It is obvious that this kind of interpretation must lead to manifestly absurd consequences.

(5) As far as I can see there is not a single passage in the Pali Canon where the word atta is used in the sense of the Upanishadic Atman. [*] This is not surprising, since the word //atman//, current in all Indian philosophical systems, has the meaning of "universal soul, //ens realissimum//, the Absolute," exclusively in the pan-en-theistic and theopantistic Vedanta, but, in that sense, it is alien to all other brahmanical and non-Buddhist doctrines. Why, then, should it have a Vedantic meaning in Buddhism? As far as I know, no one has ever conceived the idea of giving to the term //atman// a Vedantic interpretation, in the case of Nyaya, Vaisesika, classical Sankhya, Yoga, Mimamsa, or Jainism.

[*] Except in a few passages rejecting it, as the one quoted by the author: " The same is the world and the self"; see also //Sutta-nipata//, v 477; and one of the six Ego- beliefs rejected in Majjh. 2: " 'Even by the self I perceive the self': this view occurs to him as being true and correct" (//attana va attanam sanjanamit'tit//). Of Bhagavadgita VI 19 //Yatra caiv' atmana atmanam pasyann-atmani tusyati.

-- The Editor

(6) The fact that in the Pali Canon all worldly phenomena are said to be //anatta// has induced some scholars of the West to look for an Atman in Buddhism. For instance, the following "great syllogism" was formulated by //George Grimm//: "What I perceive to arise and to cease, and to cause suffering to me, on account of that impermanence, cannot be my ego. Now I perceive that everything cognizable in me and around me, arises and ceases, and causes me suffering on account of its impermanence. Therefore nothing cognizable is my ego." From that Grimm concludes that there must be an eternal ego-substance that is free from all suffering, and above all cognizability. This is a rash conclusion. By teaching that there is nowhere in the world a persisting Atman, the Buddha has not asserted that there must be a transcendental Atman (i.e., a self beyond the world). This kind of logic resembles that of a certain Christian sect which worships its masters as "Christs on earth," and tries to prove the simultaneous existence of several Christs from Mark 13,22, where it is said: "False Christs and false prophets shall arise"; for, if there are false Christs, there must also be genuine Christs!

The denial of an imperishable Atman is common ground for all systems of Hinayana as well as Mahayana, and there is, therefore, no reason for the assumption that Buddhist tradition, unanimous on that point, has deviated from the original doctrine of the Buddha. If the Buddha, contrary to the Buddhist tradition, had actually proclaimed a transcendental Atman, a reminiscence of it would have been preserved somehow by one of the older sects. It is remarkable that even the Pudgalavadins, who assume a kind of individual soul, never appeal to texts in which an Atman in this sense is proclaimed. He who advocates such a revolutionary conception of the Buddha's teachings, has also the duty to show evidence how such a complete transformation started and grew, suddenly or gradually. But non of those who advocate the Atta-theory has taken to comply with that demand which is indispensable to a historian.

(7) In addition to the aforementioned reasons, there are other grounds too, which speak against the supposition that the Buddha has identified Atman and Nirvana. It remains quite incomprehensible why the Buddha should have used this expression which is quite unsuitable for Nirvana and would have aroused only wrong associations in his listeners. Though it is true that Nirvana shares with the Vedantic conception of Atman the qualification of eternal peace into which the liberated ones enter forever, on the other hand, the Atman is in brahmanical opinion, something mental and conscious, a description which does not hold true for Nirvana. Furthermore, Nirvana is not, like the Atman, the primordial ground or the divine principle of the world (Aitareya Up. 1,1), nor is it that which preserves order in the world (Brhadar. Up. 3,8,9); it is also not the substance from which everything evolves, nor the core of all material elements.

(8) Since the scholarly researches made by Otto Rosenberg (published in Russian 1918, in German trs. 1924), Th. Stcherbatsky (1932), and the great work of translation done by Louis de la Vallee Poussin //Abhidharmakosa// (1923-31) there cannot be any doubt about the basic principle of Buddhist philosophy. In the light of these researches, all attempts to give to the Atman a place in the Buddhist doctrine, appear to be quite antiquated. We know now that all Hinayana and Mahayana schools are based on the //anatma-dharma// theory. This theory explains the world through the causal co-operation of a multitude of transitory factors (//dharma//), arising in mutual functional dependence. This theory maintains that the entire process of liberation consists in the tranquilization of these incessantly arising and disappearing factors. For that process of liberation however, is required, apart from moral restraint (//sila//) and meditative concentration (//samadhi//), the insight (//prajna//) that all conditioned factors of existence (//samskara//) are transitory, without a permanent independent existence, and therefore subject to grief and suffering. The Nirvana which the saint experiences already in this life, and which he enters for ever after death, is certainly a reality (//dharma//), but as it neither arises nor vanishes, it is not subject to suffering, and is thereby distinguished from all conditioned realities. Nirvana being a //dharma//, is likewise //anatta//, just as the transitory, conditioned dharmas of the Samsara which, as caused by volitions (that is, karma-producing energies (//samskara//)), are themselves also called //samskara//. Like them, Nirvana is no individual entity which could act independently. For it is the basic idea of the entire system that all dharmas are devoid of Atman, and without cogent reasons we cannot assume that the Buddha himself has thought something different from that which since more than two thousand years, his followers have considered to be the quintessence of their doctrine.

* * * * * * * *

THE BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

The BPS is an approved charity dedicated to making known the Teaching of the Buddha, which has a vital message for people of all creeds. Founded in 1958, the BPS has published a wide variety of books and booklets covering a great range of topics. Its publications include accurate annotated translations of the Buddha's discourses, standard reference works, as well as original contemporary expositions of Buddhist thought and practice. These works present Buddhism as it truly is -- a dynamic force which has influenced receptive minds for the past 2500 years and is still as relevant today as it was when it first arose. A full list of our publications will be sent upon request with an enclosure of U.S. $1.00 or its equivalent to cover air mail postage.

Write to:

The Hony. Secretary
BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
P.O. Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy Sri Lanka

or

The Barre Center for Buddhist Studies
Lockwood Road
Barre, MA 01005 USA
Tel: (508) 355-2347

* * * * * * * *

DISTRIBUTION AGREEMENT
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

TITLE OF WORK: Vedanta & Buddhism: A Comparative Study (Wheel Publication No. 2)
FILENAME: WHEEL002.ZIP
AUTHOR: Helmuth von Glasenapp
AUTHOR'S ADDRESS: N/A PUBLISHER'S ADDRESS: Buddhist Publication Society
P.O. Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy, Sri Lanka
COPYRIGHT HOLDER: Buddhist Publication Society (1995)
DATE OF PUBLICATION: 1978
RIGHTS AND RESTRICTIONS: See paragraph below.
DATE OF DHARMANET DISTRIBUTION: February 1995
ORIGIN SITE: Access to Insight BBS, Pepperell MA * (508) 433-5847 (96:903/1)

The copyright holder retains all rights to this work and hereby grants electronic distribution rights to DharmaNet International. This work may be freely copied and redistributed electronically, provided that the file contents (including this Agreement) are not altered in any way and that it is distributed at no cost to the recipient. You may make printed copies of this work for your personal use; further distribution of printed copies requires permission from the copyright holder. If this work is used by a teacher in a class, or is quoted in a review, the publisher shall be notified of such use. See the title page of this work for any additional rights and restrictions that may apply.

It is the spirit of dana, freely offered generosity, which has kept the entire Buddhist tradition alive for more than 2,500 years. If you find this work of value, please consider sending a donation to the author or publisher, so that these works may continue to be made available. May your generosity contribute to the happiness of all beings everywhere.

DharmaNet International, P.O. Box 4951, Berkeley, CA 94704-4951

[end]

Verses for Thudong-faring

From the Sutta-Nipata

Put by the rod for all that lives,
Nor harm thou anyone thereof;
Long not for son -- how then for friend?
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Love cometh from companionship;
In wake of love upsurges ill;
Seeing the bane that comes of love,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

In ruth for all his bosom friends,
A man, heart-chained, neglects the goal;
Seeing this fear in fellowship,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Tangled as crowding bamboo boughs
Is fond regard for sons and wife:
As the tall tops are tangle-free,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

The deer untethered roams the wild Whithersoe'er it lists for food:
Seeing the liberty, wise man,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Casting aside the household gear,
As sheds the coral-tree its leaves,
With home-ties cut, and vigorous,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Seek for thy friend [*] the deeply learned,
Dhamma-endued, lucid and great;
Knowing the needs, expelling doubt,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

The heat and cold, and hunger, thirst,
Wind, sun-beat, sting of gadfly, snake:
Surmounting one and all of these,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Crave not for tastes, but free of greed,
Moving with measured step from house
To house, support of none, none's thrall,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Free everywhere, at odds with none,
And well content with this and that:
Enduring dangers undismayed,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Snap thou the fetters as the snare
By river denizen is broke:
As fire to waste comes back no more,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

And turn thy back on joys and pains,
Delights and sorrows known of old;
And gaining poise and calm, and cleansed,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Neglect thou not to muse apart,
'Mid things by Dhamma-faring aye;
Alive to all becomings' bane,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

As lion, mighty-jawed and king
Of beasts, fares conquering, so thou,

Taking thy bed and seat remote,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Poise, amity, ruth and release
Pursue, and timely sympathy;
At odds with none in all the world,
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

Leaving the vanities of view,
Right method won, the Way obtained:
"I know! No other is my guide!"
Fare lonely as rhinoceros.

* [`Friend' here signifies the Good Friend (kalyana mitta), as the meditation-master is called.]

//Selected verses of the Rhinoceros Sutta from "Woven Cadences" (Sutta Nipata), translated by E. M. Hare, and published in Sacred Books of the Buddhists Series by the Pali Text Society. Other verses are used in this booklet.//

THE DISCOURSE ON RIGHT VIEW

The Sammaditthi Sutta
and its Commentary

Translated from the Pali by Bhikkhu Nanamoli

Edited and Revised by Bhikkhu Bodhi

The Wheel Publication No. 377/379
ISBN 955-24-0079-1

Published in 1991

BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
KANDY SRI LANKA

Copyright 1991 Buddhist Publication Society

* * *

DharmaNet Edition 1994

This electronic edition is offered for free distribution
via DharmaNet by arrangement with the publisher.

DharmaNet International
P.O. Box 4951, Berkeley CA 94704-4951

* * * * * * * *

THE TRANSLATOR

Bhikkhu Nanamoli was born in England in 1905 and graduated from Exeter College, Oxford. In 1948 he came to Sri Lanka, where he was ordained the following year at the Island Hermitage near Dodanduwa. During his 11 years in the Sangha Ven. Nanamoli translated into lucid English some of the most difficult texts of Theravada Buddhism. In 1960, on one of his rare outings from the Hermitage, he suddenly passed away due to heart failure.

THE EDITOR

Bhikkhu Bodhi is a Buddhist monk of American nationality, born in New York City in 1944. After completing a doctorate in philosophy at Claremont Graduate School, he came to Sri Lanka in 1972, and was ordained the same year under the eminent scholar-monk, Ven. Balangoda Ananda Maitreya. Since 1984 he has been Editor for the Buddhist Publication Society, and its President since 1988.

* * * * * * * *

Bhikkhus, just as the dawn is the forerunner and first indication of the rising of the sun, so is right view the forerunner and first indication of wholesome states.

For one of right view, bhikkhus, right intention springs up. For one of right intention, right speech springs up. For one of right speech, right action springs up. For one of right action, right livelihood springs up. For one of right livelihood, right effort springs up. For one of right effort, right mindfulness springs up. For one of right mindfulness, right concentration springs up. For one of right concentration, right knowledge springs up. For one of right knowledge, right deliverance springs up.

Anguttara Nikaya 10:121

* * * * * * * *

INTRODUCTION

The Sammaditthi Sutta, the Discourse on Right View, is the ninth sutta of the Majjhima Nikaya, the Collection of Middle Length Discourses. Its expositor is the Venerable Sariputta Thera, the Buddha's chief disciple and the foremost of the Master's bhikkhu disciples in the exercise of the faculty of wisdom. The Buddha declared that next to himself, it was the Venerable Sariputta who excelled in turning the incomparable Wheel of the Dhamma, in expounding in depth and in detail the Four Noble Truths realized with the attainment of enlightenment. In the Sammaditthi Sutta the great disciple bears ample testimony to the Buddha's words of praise, bequeathing upon us a discourse that has served as a primer of Buddhist doctrine for generations of monks in the monasteries of South and Southeast Asia.

As its title suggests, the subject of the Sammaditthi Sutta is right view. The analysis of right view undertaken in the sutta brings us to the very core of the Dhamma, since right view constitutes the correct understanding of the central teachings of the Buddha, the teachings which confer upon the Buddha's doctrine its own unique and distinctive stamp. Though the practice of right mindfulness has rightly been extolled as the crest jewel of the Buddha's teaching, it cannot be stressed strongly enough that the practice of mindfulness, or any other approach to meditation, only becomes an effective instrument of liberation to the extent that it is founded upon and guided by right view. Hence, to confirm the importance of right view, the Buddha places it at the very beginning of the Noble Eightfold Path. Elsewhere in the Suttas the Buddha calls right view the forerunner of the path (//pubbangama//), which gives direction and efficacy to the other seven path factors.

Right view, as explained in the commentary to the Sammaditthi Sutta, has a variety of aspects, but it might best be considered as twofold: conceptual right view, which is the intellectual grasp of the principles enunciated in the Buddha's teaching, and experiential right view, which is the wisdom that arises by direct penetration of the teaching. Conceptual right view, also called the right view in conformity with the truths (//saccanulomika-sammaditthi//), is a correct conceptual understanding of the Dhamma arrived at by study of the Buddha's teachings and deep examination of their meaning. Such understanding, though conceptual rather than experiential, is not dry and sterile. When rooted in faith in the Triple Gem and driven by a keen aspiration to realize the truth embedded in the formulated principles of the Dhamma, it serves as a critical phase in the development of wisdom (//panna//), for it provides the germ out of which experiential right view gradually evolves.

Experiential right view is the penetration of the truth of the teaching in one's own immediate experience. Thus it is also called right view that penetrates the truths (//saccapativedha-sammaditthi//). This type of right view is aroused by the practice of insight meditation guided by a correct conceptual understanding of the Dhamma. To arrive at direct penetration, one must begin with a correct conceptual grasp of the teaching and transform that grasp from intellectual comprehension to direct perception by cultivating the threefold training in morality, concentration and wisdom. If conceptual right view van be compared to a hand, a hand that grasps the truth by way of concepts, then experiential right view can be compared to an eye -- the eye of wisdom that sees directly into the true nature of existence ordinarily hidden from us by our greed, aversion and delusion.

The Discourse on Right View is intended to elucidate the principles that are to be comprehended by conceptual right view and penetrated by experiential right view. The Venerable Sariputta expounds these principles under sixteen headings: the wholesome and the unwholesome, the four nutriments of life, the Four Noble Truths, the twelve factors of dependent arising, and the taints as the condition for ignorance. It will be noted that from the second section to the end of the sutta, all the expositions are framed in accordance with the same structure, which reveals the principle of conditionality as the scaffolding for the entire teaching. Each phenomenon to be comprehended by right view is expounded in terms of its individual nature, its arising, its cessation, and the way leading to its cessation. The grasp of this principle thus makes it clear that any entity taken for examination is not an isolated occurrence with its being locked up in itself, but part of a web of conditionally arisen processes that can be terminated by understanding and eliminating the cause that gives it being.

The right view arrived at by penetrating any of the sixteen subjects expounded in the sutta is discussed in terms of two aspects, both aspects of supramundane penetration. The first is the initial penetration of the supramundane path that transforms a person from a worldling (//puthujjana//) into a stream-enterer (//sotapanna//), a noble disciple who has entered irreversibly upon the stream to liberation. This aspect of right view is indicated by the words that open each section, "(one) who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma and has arrived at this true Dhamma." These qualities are attributes only of the stream-enterer and those of higher attainment along the path. The description thus applies to the trainee (//sekha//), the disciple who has entered the path but has not yet reached its end. The words signify right view as a transformative vision which has revealed the ultimate truths underlying our existence, but which must still be developed further to complete the full transformation it is capable of effecting.

The second aspect of supramundane right view is indicated by the closing words of each section, from "he entirely abandons the underlying tendency to lust" to "he here and now makes an end of suffering." This description is fully applicable only to the Arahant, the liberated one, and thus indicates that the right view conceptually grasped by the wise worldling, and transformed into direct perception with the attainment of stream-entry, reaches its consummation with the arrival at the teaching's final goal, the attainment of complete emancipation from suffering.

* * *

The translation of the Sammaditthi Sutta and its commentary presented here has been adapted from manuscripts left behind by Bhikkhu Nanamoli. The translation of the sutta has been adapted from Ven. Nanamoli's complete translation of the Majjhima Nikaya. The version used has been taken from the edition of the complete Majjhima Nikaya translation that I prepared for publication by Wisdom Publications in the United States. This version, tentatively scheduled for release in late 1992, employs extensive substitution of Ven. Nanamoli's own technical terminology with my own preferred renderings of Pali doctrinal terms.

The commentary to the Sammaditthi Sutta is from the Papancasudani, Acariya Buddhaghosa's complete commentary (//atthakatha//) to the Majjhima Nikaya. The translation of the commentary has also been adapted from a rendering by Ven. Nanamoli, contained in a notebook of his that was discovered only a few years ago at Island Hermitage. The terminology used in the notebook version suggests that it was one of Ven. Nanamoli's earliest attempts at translation from the Pali; it certainly preceded his translation of the Visuddhimagga, The Path of Purification, first completed at the end of 1953. In adapting the translation, I have naturally replaced the technical terminology used in the notebook version with that used in the sutta. In places I also decided to translate directly from the Pali text rather than adhere to Ven. Nanamoli's rendering, which sometimes tended to be literal to the point of awkwardness. A few passages from the commentary that are concerned solely with linguistic clarification have been omitted from the translation.

Passages in the commentarial section enclosed in square brackets are taken from the subcommentary to the Sammaditthi Sutta, by Acariya Dhammapala. Passages in parenthesis are additions either by Ven. Nanamoli or by myself. The paragraph numbering of the commentarial section follows that of the sutta. The phrases of the sutta that are selected for comment have been set in boldface. The backnotes are entirely my own.

Bhikkhu Bodhi

* * * * * * * *

PART ONE:

THE DISCOURSE ON RIGHT VIEW

(Sammaditthi Sutta)

1. Thus have I heard. On one occasion the Blessed One was living at Savatthi in Jeta's Grove, Anathapindika's Park. There the Venerable Sariputta addressed the bhikkhus thus: "Friends, bhikkhus." -- "Friend," they replied. The Venerable Sariputta said this:

2. "'One of right view, one of right view' is said, friends. In what way is a noble disciple one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma, and has arrived at this true Dhamma?"

"Indeed, friend, we would come from far away to learn from the Venerable Sariputta the meaning of this statement. It would be good if the Venerable Sariputta would explain the meaning of this statement. Having heard it from him, the bhikkhus will remember it."

"Then, friends, listen and attend closely to what I shall say."

"Yes, friend," the bhikkhus replied. The Venerable Sariputta said this:

The Wholesome and the Unwholesome

3. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands the unwholesome, the root of the unwholesome, the wholesome, and the root of the wholesome, in that way he is one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma, and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

4. "And what, friends, is the unwholesome, what is the root of the unwholesome, what is the wholesome, what is the root of the wholesome? Killing living beings is unwholesome; taking what is not given is unwholesome; misconduct in sensual pleasures is unwholesome; false speech is unwholesome; malicious speech is unwholesome; harsh speech is unwholesome; gossip is unwholesome; covetousness is unwholesome; ill will is unwholesome; wrong view is unwholesome. This is called the unwholesome.

5. "And what is the root of the unwholesome? Greed is a root of the unwholesome; hate is a root of the unwholesome; delusion is a root of the unwholesome. This is called the root of the unwholesome.

6. "And what is the wholesome? Abstention from killing living beings is wholesome; abstention from taking what is not given is wholesome; abstention from misconduct in sensual pleasures is wholesome; abstention from false speech is wholesome; abstention from malicious speech is wholesome; abstention from harsh speech is wholesome; abstention from gossip is wholesome; non-covetousness is wholesome; non-ill will is wholesome; right view is wholesome. This is called the wholesome.

7. "And what is the root of the wholesome? Non-greed is a root of the wholesome; non-hate is a root of the wholesome; non-delusion is a root of the wholesome. This is called the root of the wholesome.

8. "When a noble disciple has thus understood the unwholesome, the root of the unwholesome, the wholesome, and the root of the wholesome, he entirely abandons the underlying tendency to lust, he abolishes the underlying tendency to aversion, he extirpates the underlying tendency to the view and conceit 'I am,' and by abandoning ignorance and arousing true knowledge he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Nutriment
~~~~~~~~~

9. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

10. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands nutriment, the origin of nutriment, the cessation of nutriment, and the way leading to the cessation of nutriment, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

11. "And what is nutriment, what is the origin of nutriment, what is the cessation of nutriment, what is the way leading to the cessation of nutriment? There are these four kinds of nutriment for the maintenance of beings that already have come to be and for the support of those seeking a new existence. What four? They are physical food as nutriment, gross or subtle; contact as the second; mental volition as the third; and consciousness as the fourth. With the arising of craving there is the arising of nutriment. With the cessation of craving there is the cessation of nutriment. The way leading to the cessation of nutriment is just this Noble Eightfold
~~~~~~~~~

Path; that is, right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness and right concentration.

12. "When a noble disciple has thus understood nutriment, the origin of nutriment, the cessation of nutriment, and the way leading to the cessation of nutriment, he entirely abandons the underlying tendency to greed, he abolishes the underlying tendency to aversion, he extirpates the underlying tendency to the view and conceit 'I am,' and by abandoning ignorance and arousing true knowledge he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

The Four Noble Truths

13. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

14. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands suffering, the origin of suffering, the cessation of suffering, and the way leading to the cessation of suffering, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

15. "And what is suffering, what is the origin of suffering, what is the cessation of suffering, what is the way leading to the cessation of suffering? Birth is suffering; aging is suffering; sickness is suffering; death is suffering; sorrow, lamentation, pain, grief and despair are suffering; not to obtain what one wants is suffering; in short, the five aggregates affected by clinging are suffering. This is called suffering.

16. "And what is the origin of suffering? It is craving, which brings renewal of being, is accompanied by delight and lust, and delights in this and that; that is, craving for sensual pleasures, craving for being and craving for non-being. This is called the origin of suffering.

17. "And what is the cessation of suffering? It is the remainderless fading away and ceasing, the giving up, relinquishing, letting go and rejecting of that same craving. This is called the cessation of suffering.

18. "And what is the way leading to the cessation of suffering? It is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration. This is called the way leading to the cessation of suffering.

19. "When a noble disciple has thus understood suffering, the origin of suffering, the cessation of suffering, and the way leading to the cessation of suffering ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Aging and Death

20. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

21. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands aging and death, the origin of aging and death, the cessation of aging and death, and the way leading to the cessation of aging and death, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

22. "And what is aging and death, what is the origin of aging and death, what is the cessation of aging and death, what is the way leading to the cessation of aging and death? The aging of beings in the various orders of beings, their old age, brokenness of teeth, grayness of hair, wrinkling of skin, decline of life, weakness of faculties -- this is called aging. The passing of beings out of the various orders of beings, their passing away, dissolution, disappearance, dying, completion of time, dissolution of the aggregates, laying down of the body -- this is called death. So this aging and this death are what is called aging and death. With the arising of birth there is the arising of aging and death. With the cessation of birth there is the cessation of aging and death. The way leading to the cessation of aging and death is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

23. "When a noble disciple has thus understood aging and death, the origin of aging and death, the cessation of aging and death, and the way leading to the cessation of aging and death ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Birth
~~~~~

24. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

25. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands birth, the origin of birth, the cessation of birth, and the way leading to the cessation of birth, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

26. "And what is birth, what is the origin of birth, what is the cessation of birth, what is the way leading to the cessation of birth? The birth of beings into the various orders of beings, their coming to birth, precipitation (in a womb), generation, manifestation of the aggregates, obtaining the bases for contact -- this is called birth. With the arising of being there is the arising of birth. With the cessation of being there is the cessation of birth. The way leading to the cessation of birth is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.
~~~~~

27. "When a noble disciple has thus understood birth, the origin of birth, the cessation of birth, and the way leading to the cessation of birth ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Being
~~~~~
28. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

29. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands being, the origin of being, the cessation of being, and the way leading to the cessation of being, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

30. "And what is being, what is the origin of being, what is the cessation of being, what is the way leading to the cessation of being? There are these three kinds of being: sense-sphere being, fine-material being and immaterial being. With the arising of clinging there is the arising of being. With the cessation of clinging there is the cessation of being. The way leading to the cessation of being is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

31. "When a noble disciple has thus understood being, the origin of being, the cessation of being, and the way leading to the cessation of being ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."
~~~~~

Clinging

~~~~~~~~

32. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

33. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands clinging, the origin of clinging, the cessation of clinging, and the way leading to the cessation of clinging, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

34. "And what is clinging, what is the origin of clinging, what is the cessation of clinging, what is the way leading to the cessation of clinging? There are these four kinds of clinging: clinging to sensual pleasures, clinging to views, clinging to rituals and observances, and clinging to a doctrine of self. With the arising of craving there is the arising of clinging. With the cessation of craving there is the cessation of clinging. The way leading to the cessation of clinging is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

35. "When a noble disciple has thus understood clinging, the origin of clinging, the cessation of clinging, and the way leading to the cessation of clinging ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Craving
~~~~~~~~

~~~~~~~

36. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

37. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands craving, the origin of craving, the cessation of craving, and the way leading to the cessation of craving, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

38. "And what is craving, what is the origin of craving, what is the cessation of craving, what is the way leading to the cessation of craving? There are these six classes of craving: craving for forms, craving for sounds, craving for odors, craving for flavors, craving for tangibles, craving for mind-objects. With the arising of feeling there is the arising of craving. With the cessation of feeling there is the cessation of craving. The way leading to the cessation of craving is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

39. "When a noble disciple has thus understood craving, the origin of craving, the cessation of craving, and the way leading to the cessation of craving ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Feeling

~~~~~~~

40. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

41. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands feeling, the origin of feeling, the cessation of feeling, and the way leading to the cessation of feeling, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

42. "And what is feeling, what is the origin of feeling, what is the cessation of feeling, what is the way leading to the cessation of feeling? There are these six classes of feeling: feeling born of eye-contact, feeling born of ear-contact, feeling born of nose-contact, feeling born of tongue-contact, feeling born of body-contact, feeling born of mind-contact. With the arising of contact there is the arising of feeling. With the cessation of contact there is the cessation of feeling. The way leading to the cessation of feeling is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

43. "When a noble disciple has thus understood feeling, the origin of feeling, the cessation of feeling, and the way leading to the cessation of feeling ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Contact
~~~~~~~

44. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

45. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands contact, the origin of contact, the cessation of contact, and the way leading to the cessation of contact, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

46. "And what is contact, what is the origin of contact, what is the cessation of contact, what is the way leading to the cessation of contact? There are these six classes of contact: eye-contact, ear-contact, nose-contact, tongue-contact, body-contact, mind-contact. With the arising of the sixfold base there is the arising of contact. With the cessation of the sixfold base there is the cessation of contact. The way leading to the cessation of contact is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.
~~~~~~~

47. "When a noble disciple has thus understood contact, the origin of contact, the cessation of contact, and the way leading to the cessation of contact ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

The Sixfold Base

48. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

49. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands the sixfold base, the origin of the sixfold base, the cessation of the sixfold base, and the way leading to the cessation of the sixfold base, he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

50. "And what is the sixfold base, what is the origin of the sixfold base, what is the cessation of the sixfold base, what is the way leading to the cessation of the sixfold base? There are these six bases: the eye-base, the ear-base, the nose-base, the tongue-base, the body-base, the mind-base. With the arising of mentality-materiality there is the arising of the sixfold base. With the cessation of mentality-materiality there is the cessation of the sixfold base. The way leading to the cessation of the sixfold base is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

51. "When a noble disciple has thus understood the sixfold base, the origin of the sixfold base, the cessation of the sixfold base, and the way leading to the cessation of the sixfold base ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Mentality-Materiality
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

52. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

53. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands mentality-materiality, the origin of mentality-materiality, the cessation of mentality-materiality, and the way leading to the cessation of mentality-materiality, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

54. "And what is mentality-materiality, what is the origin of mentality-materiality, what is the cessation of mentality-materiality, what is the way leading to the cessation of mentality-materiality? Feeling, perception, volition, contact and attention -- these are called mentality. The four great elements and the material form derived from the four great elements -- these are called materiality. So this mentality and this materiality are what is called mentality-materiality. With the arising of consciousness there is the arising of mentality-materiality. With the cessation of consciousness there is the cessation of mentality-materiality. The way leading to the cessation of mentality-materiality is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

55. "When a noble disciple has thus understood mentality-materiality, the origin of mentality-materiality, the cessation of mentality-materiality, and the way leading to the cessation of mentality-materiality ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Consciousness
~~~~~~~~~~~~~

56. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

57. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands consciousness, the origin of consciousness, the cessation of consciousness, and the way leading to the cessation of consciousness, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

58. "And what is consciousness, what is the origin of consciousness, what is the cessation of consciousness, what is the way leading to the cessation of consciousness? There are these six classes of consciousness: eye-consciousness, ear-consciousness, nose-consciousness, tongue-consciousness, body-consciousness, mind-consciousness. With the arising of formations there is the arising of consciousness. With the cessation of formations there is the cessation of consciousness. The way leading to the cessation of consciousness is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

59. "When a noble disciple has thus understood consciousness, the origin of consciousness, the cessation of consciousness, and the way leading to the cessation of consciousness ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."
~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Formations

60. Saying, "Good friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

61. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands formations, the origin of formations, the cessation of formations, and the way leading to the cessation of formations, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

62. "And what are formations, what is the origin of formations, what is the cessation of formations, what is the way leading to the cessation of formations? There are these three kinds of formations: the bodily formation, the verbal formation, the mental formation. With the arising of ignorance there is the arising of formations. With the cessation of ignorance there is the cessation of formations. The way leading to the cessation of formations is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

63. "When a noble disciple has thus understood formations, the origin of formations, the cessation of formations, and the way leading to the cessation of formations ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Ignorance

64. Saying, "Good friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

65. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands ignorance, the origin of ignorance, the cessation of ignorance, and the way leading to the cessation of ignorance, in that way he is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma.

66. "And what is ignorance, what is the origin of ignorance, what is the cessation of ignorance, what is the way leading to the cessation of ignorance? Not knowing about suffering, not knowing about the origin of suffering, not knowing about the cessation of suffering, not knowing about the way leading to the cessation of suffering -- this is called ignorance. With the arising of the taints there is the arising of ignorance. With the cessation of the taints there is the cessation of ignorance. The way leading to the cessation of ignorance is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view ... right concentration.

67. "When a noble disciple has thus understood ignorance, the origin of ignorance, the cessation of ignorance, and the way leading to the cessation of ignorance ... he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

Taints
~~~~~~
68. Saying, "Good, friend," the bhikkhus delighted and rejoiced in the Venerable Sariputta's words. Then they asked him a further question: "But, friend, might there be another way in which a noble disciple is one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma and has arrived at this true Dhamma?" -- "There might be, friends.

69. "When, friends, a noble disciple understands the taints, the origin of the taints, the cessation of the taints, and the way leading to the cessation of the taints, in that way he is one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma and has arrived at this true Dhamma.
~~~~~~

70. "And what are the taints, what is the origin of the taints, what is the cessation of the taints, what is the way leading to the cessation of the taints? There are three taints: the taint of sensual desire, the taint of being and the taint of ignorance. With the arising of ignorance there is the arising of the taints. With the cessation of ignorance there is the cessation of the taints. The way leading to the cessation of the taints is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness and right concentration.

71. "When a noble disciple has thus understood the taints, the origin of the taints, the cessation of the taints, and the way leading to the cessation of the taints, he entirely abandons the underlying tendency to lust, he abolishes the underlying tendency to aversion, he extirpates the underlying tendency to the view and conceit 'I am,' and by abandoning ignorance and arousing true knowledge he here and now makes an end of suffering. In that way too a noble disciple is one of right view, whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma and has arrived at this true Dhamma."

That is what the Venerable Sariputta said. The bhikkhus were satisfied and delighted in the Venerable Sariputta's words.

* * * * * * * *

PART TWO:

THE COMMENTARY TO THE DISCOURSE ON RIGHT VIEW

1. Thus have I heard: the Sammaditthi Sutta.

2. Herein, all such questions spoken by the Elder as " 'One of right view, one of right view' is said, friends. In what way is a noble disciple one of right view ...?" or "And what, friends, is the unwholesome ...?" -- these are questions showing a desire to expound. Herein, since those who know, those who do not know, those outside the Dispensation, those within it, those who speak by hearsay, etc., and those who speak by personal knowledge, say "one of right view," therefore, taking it as an expression (common) to the many, he touched upon it twice, saying "One of right view, one of right view" is said, friends (//sammaditthi sammaditthi ti avuso vuccati//). The intention here is this: "Others say 'one of right view,' and still others say 'one of right view.' Since that is said, in what way, friends, is a noble disciple one of right view in respect of meaning and characteristic?" Herein, one of right view is one possessing a lucid and praiseworthy view (//sobhanaya pasatthaya ca ditthiya samannagato//). But when this word "right view" is used to signify a state (rather than a person endowed with that state), it then means a lucid and praiseworthy view.[1]

This right view is twofold: mundane (//lokiya//) and supramundane (//lokuttara//). Herein, the knowledge of kamma as one's own and knowledge which is in conformity with the (Four Noble) Truths are mundane right view; or, in brief, (mundane right view is) all understanding that is accompanied by the taints.[2] Understanding connected with the noble paths and fruits is supramundane right view.[3] The person possessing right view is of three kinds: the worldling (//puthujjana//), the disciple in higher training (//sekha//), and the one beyond training (//asekha//). Herein, the worldling is of two kinds: one outside the Dispensation and one within the Dispensation. Herein, one outside the Dispensation who believes in kamma is one of right view on account of the view of kamma as one's own, but not on account of that which is in conformity with the truths, because he holds to the view of self. One within the Dispensation is of right view on account of both. The disciple in higher training is one of right view on account of fixed right view,[4] the one beyond training on account of (the right view) that is beyond training.[5]

But here "one of right view" is intended as one possessing supramundane wholesome right view, which is fixed in destiny and emancipating. Hence he said: whose view is straight, who has perfect confidence in the Dhamma, and has arrived at this true Dhamma (//ujugata'ssa ditthi dhamme aveccappasadena samannagato agato imam saddhammam//). Because of its going straight without deviating to either extreme, or because of its going straight by removing all crookedness such as bodily crookedness, etc., supramundane right view is "straight." One possessing that view also possesses perfect confidence, unshakable confidence, in the ninefold supramundane Dhamma.[6] And by becoming disentangled from all the thickets of (wrong) views, by abandoning all the defilements, by departing from the round of rebirths, by bringing the practice to its consummation, he is said to have come by the noble path to this "true Dhamma" proclaimed by the Enlightened One, that is, Nibbana, the plunge into the Deathless.

The Wholesome and the Unwholesome

3. Understands the unwholesome (//akusalan ca pajanati//): he understands the unwholesome called the ten courses of unwholesome kamma (action), penetrating this by way of function with the understanding that has Nibbana as its object as "This is suffering." (Understands) the root of the unwholesome (//akusalamulan ca pajanati//): And he understands the unwholesome root which has become the root condition of that (unwholesome), penetrating this, in the same way, as "This is the origin of suffering." The same method applies here also in regard to "the wholesome" and "the root of the wholesome." And, as it is here, so in all the following sections, the understanding of the subject should be understood by way of function.

In that way (//ettavata pi//): by this much; by this understanding of the unwholesome, etc. He is one of right view (//sammaditthi hoti//): he possesses supramundane right view of the kind aforesaid. Whose view is straight ... and has arrived at this true Dhamma: At this point the summary version of the teaching has been expounded. And this (part of) the teaching itself was brief; but for those bhikkhus it should be understood that the penetration (of the meaning) through right attention occurred in detail.

But in the second section (Section 4) it should be understood that the teaching too, as well as the penetration through attention, is stated in detail.

Herein, the bhikkhus [at the council at the Great Monastery held to rehearse the Pitakas] said: "In the brief exposition the two lower paths are discussed, in the detailed exposition the two higher paths," taking into account the passage at the end of the sections setting forth the detailed exposition that begins "he entirely abandons the underlying tendency to lust." But the Elder (presiding over the council) said: "In the brief exposition the four paths are expounded as a group, and also in the detailed exposition."[7]

This query into the brief and detailed expositions which has been cleared up here should be understood in all the following sections in the way stated here. From here on we shall only comment on terms that are new or obscure.

The Unwholesome Courses of Action

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

4. Herein, firstly, in the detailed exposition of the first section: as regards the passage beginning killing living beings is unwholesome (//panatipato kho avuso akusalam//), "unwholesome" should be understood by way of the occurrence of unwholesomeness, or as what is opposed to the wholesome, which is to be dealt with below (Section 6). As to characteristic, it is blameworthy and has painful result, or it is defiled. This, in the first place, is the comment upon the general terms here.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

But as regards the particular terms, the phrase killing living beings means the slaughter of a living being, the destruction of a living being. And here a living being (//pana//) is, according to ordinary usage, a being (//satta//); in the ultimate sense it is the life faculty. "Killing living beings" is the volition to kill on the part of one who is aware, in respect of a living being, that it is a living being, and which (volition), manifesting itself through one or the other of the doors of body and speech, initiates activity resulting in the cutting off of the life faculty.

In relation to beings such as animals, etc., which lack moral qualities (//guna//), it is less blameworthy in respect of small living beings and more blameworthy in respect of beings with large bodies. Why? Because of the magnitude of the effort involved. And when the effort involved is equal, because of the magnitude of the object (the being killed). In relation to beings such as humans, etc., who possess moral qualities, it is less blameworthy in respect of beings with few good qualities and more blameworthy in respect of beings with great qualities. When the size of the body and moral qualities are equal, however, it is less blameworthy when the defilements and activity are mild, and more blameworthy when they are strong: so it should be understood.

There are five constituents for this (act of killing a living being): a living being, awareness that it is a living being, the mind to kill, activity, and the death (of the being) thereby.

There are six means: one's own person, command, a missile, a fixed contrivance, a magical spell, supernormal power.

To explore this matter in detail, however, would involve too much diffuseness. Therefore we shall not explore it in detail, or any other subject similar in kind. Those who wish to go into the matter may do so by looking it up in the Samantapasadika, the Vinaya Commentary.[8]

Taking what is not given (//adinnadana//): the carrying off of others' goods, stealing, robbery, is what is meant. Herein, "what is not given" is another's possession, which the other may use as he likes without incurring penalty or blame. "Taking what is not given" is the volition to steal on the part of one who is aware, in respect of another's possession, that it is another's possession, and which (volition) initiates activity resulting in the taking of that thing.

That (taking of what is not given) is less blameworthy when the other's property is of low value, and more blameworthy when it is of high value. Why? Because of the high value of the object (stolen). When the value of the objects is equal, the act is more blameworthy when the object belongs to one of outstanding qualities, and less blameworthy when the object belongs to one who, in comparison, is inferior with respect to moral qualities.

There are five constituents of this act: another's possession, awareness that it is another's possession, the mind to steal, the activity, and the carrying off (of the object) thereby.

There are six means: one's own person, etc. (as for killing).

And these (acts of stealing) may be classed, according to the way in which they occur, by way of the following: taking by theft, by force, by concealment, by stratagem, by fraud. This here is in brief; the details, however, are given in the Samantapasadika.[9]

Misconduct in sensual pleasures (//kamesu micchacara//): here, "in sensual pleasures" (//kamesu//) means in regard to sexual intercourse. "Misconduct" is entirely reprehensible vile conduct. As to characteristic, sexual misconduct is the volition to transgress bounds occurring through the body door by way of unrighteous intent.

Herein, out of bounds for men, firstly, are the twenty kinds of women, that is, the ten beginning with those protected by the mother, namely, "protected by the mother, protected by the father, protected by the mother and father, protected by the brother, protected by the sister, protected by relatives, protected by the clan, protected by the law, under protection, entailing a penalty"; and the ten beginning with those purchased with money, namely, "one purchased with money, one who lives (with a man) by her own desire, one who lives (with a man) on account of wealth, one who lives (with a man) on account of cloth, one who is given (in marriage with the ceremony of) dipping the hand in water, one who has been (taken to wife and) relieved of her burden-carrying head-pad, one who is a slave and a wife, one who is a servant and a wife, one who is carried off in a raid, one engaged at so much a time."[10]

Then, as concerns women, for the twelve kinds of women consisting of the two, namely, under protection and entailing a penalty, and the ten beginning with those purchased with money, other men are out of bounds.

This sexual misconduct is less blameworthy when (the person) out of bounds is without good qualities such as virtue, etc., and more blameworthy when (the person) possesses good qualities such as virtue, etc. There are four constituents of this act: an object which is out of bounds, the mind to engage in that, the effort to engage, and consent to the union of sexual organs.[11] The means is single: one's own person.

False speech (//musavada//): "false" (//musa//) is the verbal effort or bodily effort for destroying welfare (made) by one bent on deceiving. "False speech" is the volition initiating the verbal effort or bodily effort of deceiving another on the part of one intent on deceiving. According to another method, "false" means an unreal, untrue case, "speech" the communication of that as being real, true. As to characteristic, "false speech" is the volition of one desiring to communicate to another an untrue case as being true, which (volition) initiates such an act of communication.

This is less blameworthy when the welfare destroyed is slight, and more blameworthy when the welfare destroyed is great. Further, when it occurs on the part of householders who, not wishing to give away some belonging of theirs, say "I do not have it," it is less blameworthy; when one who is a witness speaks (falsely) for the purpose of destroying another's welfare, it is more blameworthy. In the case of those gone forth, when it occurs by their saying as a joke, after they have obtained just a little oil or ghee, in the manner of the Puranas, "Today the oil is flowing in the village just like a river," then it is less blameworthy; but for those who speak (as a witness) saying that they have seen what they have not seen it is more blameworthy.

There are four constituents of this act: an untrue case, the mind to deceive, the appropriate effort, the communicating of that meaning to another. The means is single: one's own person only. That is to be regarded as the performing of the action of deceiving another by means of the body or by means of something attached to the body or by means of speech. If, through that action, the other understands that meaning, one is bound by the kamma of false speech at the very moment of the volition initiating the action.

Malicious speech, etc.: The kind of speech that creates in the heart of the person to whom it is spoken affection for oneself and voidness (of affection) for another is malicious speech (//pisuna vaca//). The kind of speech by which one makes both oneself and another harsh, the kind of speech which is also itself harsh, being pleasant neither to the ear nor to the heart -- that is harsh speech (//pharusa vaca//). That by which one gossips idly, without meaning, is gossip (//samphappalapa//). Also, the volition that is the root cause of these gains the name "malicious speech," etc. And that only is intended here.

Therein, malicious speech is the volition of one with a defiled mind, which (volition) initiates an effort by body or by speech either to cause division among others or to endear oneself (to another). It is less blameworthy when the person divided has few good qualities, and more blameworthy when such a one has great qualities. Its constituents are four: another person to be divided, the intention to divide, (thinking) "Thus these will be separated and split" or the desire to endear oneself, (thinking) "Thus I shall become loved and intimate," the appropriate effort, the communicating of that meaning to that person.

Harsh speech is the entirely harsh volition initiating an effort by body or by speech to wound another's vital feelings. This is an example given for the purpose of making it clear: A village boy, it is said, went to the forest without heeding his mother's words. Unable to make him turn back, she scolded him angrily, saying: "May a wild buffalo chase you!" Then a buffalo appeared before him right there in the forest. The boy made an asseveration of truth, saying: "Let it not be as my mother said but as she thought!" The buffalo stood as though tied there. Thus, although the means (employed) was that of wounding the vital feelings, because of the gentleness of her mind it was not harsh speech. For sometimes parents even say to their children, "May robbers chop you to pieces!" yet they do not even wish a lotus leaf to fall upon them. And teachers and preceptors sometimes say to their pupils, "What is the use of these shameless and heedless brats? Drive them out!" yet they wish for their success in learning and attainment.

Just as, through gentleness of mind, speech is not harsh, so through gentleness of speech, speech does not become unharsh; for the words "Let him sleep in peace" spoken by one wishing to kill are not unharsh speech. But harsh speech is such on account of harshness of mind only. It is less blameworthy when the person to whom it is spoken has few good qualities, and more blameworthy when such a one has great qualities. Its constituents are three: another to be abused, an angry mind, the abusing.

Gossip is the unwholesome volition initiating an effort by body or by speech to communicate what is purposeless. It is less blameworthy when indulged in mildly, and more blameworthy when indulged in strongly. Its constituents are two: the being intent on purposeless stories such as the Bharata war or the abduction of Sita, etc., and the telling of such stories.[12]

Covetousness (//abhijjha//): It covets, thus it is covetousness; "having become directed towards others' goods, it occurs through inclination towards them" is the meaning. It has the characteristic of coveting others' goods thus: "Oh, that this were mine!" It is less blameworthy and more blameworthy as in the case of taking what is not given. Its constituents are two: another's goods, and the inclination for them to be one's own. For even though greed has arisen based on another's goods, it is not classed as a (completed) course of kamma so long as one does not incline to them as one's own (with the thought), "Oh, that this were mine!"

Ill will (//byapada//): It injures welfare and happiness, thus it is ill will (//hitasukham byapadayati ti byapado//). Its characteristic is the mental defect (of wishing for) the destruction of others. It is less blameworthy and more blameworthy as in the case of harsh speech. Its constituents are two: another being, and the wish for that being's destruction. For even though anger has arisen based on another being, there is no breach of a course of kamma so long as one does not wish, "Oh, that this being might be cut off and destroyed!"

Wrong view (//micchaditthi//): It sees wrongly due to the absence of a correct grasp of things, thus it is wrong view. Its characteristic is the mistaken view that "there is no (result from) giving," etc. It is less blameworthy and more blameworthy as in the case of gossip. Moreover, it is less blameworthy when not fixed in destiny, and more blameworthy when fixed.[13] Its constituents are two: a mistaken manner of grasping the basis (for the view), and the appearance of that (basis) in accordance with the manner in which it has been grasped.

Now the exposition of these ten courses of unwholesome kamma should be understood in five ways: as to mental state (//dhammato//), as to category (//kotthasato//), as to object (//arammanato//), as to feeling (//vedanato//), and as to root (//mulato//).

Herein, as to mental state: The first seven among these are volitional states only. The three beginning with covetousness are associated with volition.[14]

As to category: The eight consisting of the first seven and wrong view are courses of kamma only, not roots. Covetousness and ill will are courses of kamma and also roots; for covetousness, having arrived at the (state of) a root, is the unwholesome root greed, and ill will is the unwholesome root hate.

As to object: Killing living beings, because it has the life faculty as object, has a formation as object. Taking what is not given has beings as object or formations as object. Misconduct in sensual pleasures has formations as object by way of tangible object; but some say it also has beings as object. False speech has beings or formations as object; likewise malicious speech. Harsh speech has only beings as object. Gossip has either beings or formations as object by way of the seen, heard, sensed and cognized; likewise covetousness. Ill will has only beings as object. Wrong view has formations as object by way of the states belonging to the three planes (of being).

As to feeling: Killing living beings has painful feeling; for although kings, seeing a robber, say laughingly, "Go and execute him," their volition consummating the action is associated only with pain. Taking what is not given has three feelings. Misconduct (in sensual pleasures) has two feelings, pleasant and neutral, but in the mind which consummates the action there is no neutral feeling. False speech has three feelings; likewise malicious speech. Harsh speech has painful feeling only. Gossip has three feelings. Covetousness has two feelings, pleasant and neutral; likewise wrong view. Ill will has painful feeling only.

As to root: Killing living beings has two roots, by way of hate and delusion; taking what is not given, by way of hate and delusion or by way of greed and delusion; misconduct, by way of greed and delusion; false speech, by way of hate and delusion or by way of greed and delusion; likewise for malicious speech and gossip; harsh speech, by way of hate and delusion. Covetousness has one root, by way of delusion; likewise ill will. Wrong view has two roots, by way of greed and delusion.

The Unwholesome Roots

5. Greed is a root of the unwholesome, etc.: It is greedy, thus it is greed (//lubbhati ti lobho//); it offends against (it hates), thus it is hate (//dussati ti doso//); it deludes, thus it is delusion (//muyhati ti moho//). Among these, greed is itself unwholesome in the sense that it is blameworthy and has painful results; and it is a root of these unwholesome (deeds) beginning with killing living beings, for some in the sense that it is an associated originative cause, for some in the sense that it is a decisive support condition. Thus it is an unwholesome root. This too is said: "One who is lustful, friends, overwhelmed and with mind obsessed by lust, kills a living being" (A.3:71/i,216; text slightly different). The same method applies to the state of being unwholesome roots in the cases of hate and delusion.

The Wholesome Courses of Action

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

6. Abstention from killing living beings is wholesome (//panatipata veramani//), etc.: Here "killing living beings," etc. have the same meaning as aforesaid. It crushes the hostile, thus it is abstention (//veram manati ti veramani//); the meaning is that it abandons the hostile. Or: with that as the instrument one abstains (//viramati//), the syllable //ve// being substituted for the syllable vi. This here is, in the first place, the commentary on the phrasing.

But as to the meaning, abstention is refraining (//virati//) associated with wholesome consciousness. What is stated thus: "For one refraining from killing living beings, that which is on that occasion the leaving off, the refraining" (Vibh. 285), that is the refraining associated with wholesome consciousness. As to kind, it is threefold: refraining in the presence of opportunity, refraining because of an undertaking, and refraining because of eradication (of defilements).

Herein, refraining in the presence of an opportunity (//sampattavirati//) is to be understood as the refraining which occurs in those who have not undertaken any training rule but who do not transgress when an opportunity for doing so presents itself because they reflect upon their birth, age, learning, etc., like the lay follower Cakkana in the island of Sri Lanka.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

When he was a boy, it is said, his mother developed an illness, and the doctor said, "Fresh hare's flesh is needed." Then Cakkana's brother sent him, saying, "Go, dear, and hunt in the field." He went there. On that occasion a hare had come to eat the young corn. On seeing him it bolted swiftly, but it got entangled in a creeper and squealed "kiri, kiri." Guided by the sound, Cakkana went and caught it, thinking, "I will make medicine for my mother." Then he thought again, "This is not proper for me, that I should deprive another of life for the sake of my mother's life." So he released it, saying "Go and enjoy the grass and the water with the other hares in the forest." When his brother asked him, "Did you get a hare, dear?" he told him what had happened. His brother scolded him. He went to his mother and determined upon an asseveration of truth: "Since I was born I am not aware that I have ever intentionally deprived a living being of life." Straightaway his mother became well.

Refraining because of an undertaking (//samadanavirati//) is to be understood as the refraining which occurs in those who do not transgress in a particular case because they have undertaken training rules, giving up even their own lives in the undertaking of the training rules and in what is superior to that, like the lay follower who dwelt at Uttaravaddhamana Mountain.

It is said that after undertaking the training rules from the Elder Pingala Buddharakkhita who lived in the Ambariya Monastery, he was plowing a field. Then his ox got lost. Searching for it, he climbed up Uttaravaddhamana Mountain. There a large serpent seized him. He thought, "Let me cut off his head with this sharp axe." Then he thought again, "This is not proper for me, that I should break a training rule that I have undertaken in the presence of my honored teacher." Thinking up to the third time, "I will give up my life but not the training rule," he threw the sharp hand axe that was slung on his shoulder into the forest. Straightaway the creature released him and went away.

Refraining because of eradication (of defilements) (//samucchedavirati//) is to be understood as the refraining associated with the noble path. After the arising of this even the thought, "I will kill a living being," does not occur to the noble persons.

This refraining is called "wholesome" (//kusala//) because of the occurrence of wholesomeness (//kosalla//); or because of shedding the vile (//kucchitassa salanato//). Also, evil conduct is commonly called "weeds" (//kusa//) and it mows this down (//lunati//), thus it is called "wholesome."

As in the case of the unwholesome, so for these courses of wholesome kamma the exposition should be understood in five ways: as to mental state, as to category, as to object, as to feeling, and as to root.

Herein, as to mental state: The first seven among these can be both volitions and abstinences; the last three are associated with volition only.

As to category: The first seven are courses of kamma only, not roots. The last three are courses of kamma and also roots. For non-covetousness, having arrived at the (state of) a root, is the wholesome root non-greed; non-ill will is the wholesome root non-hate; and right view is the wholesome root non-delusion.

As to object: The objects of these are the same as the objects of killing living beings, etc. For abstention is spoken of in relation to something which can be transgressed. But just as the noble path, which has Nibbana as object, abandons the defilements, so too should these courses of kamma, which have the life faculty, etc., as object, be understood to abandon the kinds of evil conduct beginning with killing living beings.

As to feeling: All have pleasant feeling or neutral feeling. For there is no painful feeling which arrives at the wholesome.

As to root: The first seven courses of kamma have three roots by way of non-greed, non-hate, and non-delusion in one who abstains by means of consciousness associated with knowledge. They have two roots in one who abstains by means of consciousness dissociated from knowledge.[15] Non-covetousness has two roots in one who abstains by means of consciousness associated with knowledge, one root (in one who abstains) by means of consciousness dissociated from knowledge. Non-greed, however, is not by itself its own root. The same method applies in the case of non-ill will. Right view always has two roots, by way of non-greed and non-hate. [16]

The Wholesome Roots

7. Non-greed is a root of the wholesome (//alobho kusalamulam//), etc.: Non-greed is not greed; this is a term for the state that is opposed to greed. The same method applies in the case of non-hate and non-delusion. Among these, non-greed is itself wholesome; and it is a root of these wholesome (courses of kamma) beginning with abstention from killing living beings, for some in the sense that it is an associated originative cause and for some in the sense that it is a decisive support condition. Thus it is a wholesome root. The same method applies to the state of being wholesome roots in the cases of non-hate and non-delusion.

Conclusion on the Unwholesome and the Wholesome

8. Now, summing up the meaning of all that has been set forth in brief and in detail, he states the concluding section beginning with the words when a noble disciple. Herein, has thus understood the wholesome (//evam akusalam pajanati//) means: has thus understood the unwholesome by way of the ten courses of unwholesome kamma as described. The same method applies in the case of the root of the unwholesome, etc.

Up to this point, by a single method, emancipation as far as Arahantship has been expounded for one who has the Four Noble Truths as his meditation subject. How? Here, the ten courses of unwholesome kamma with the exception of covetousness, and the (ten) courses of wholesome kamma, are the truth of suffering. These two states -- covetousness and the greed which is a root of the unwholesome -- are, literally speaking, the truth of the origin. Speaking figuratively, however, all the courses of kamma are the truth of suffering, and all the wholesome and unwholesome roots are the truth of the origin.[17] The non-occurrence of both is the truth of cessation. The noble path fully understanding suffering, abandoning its origin, and understanding its cessation is the truth of the path. Thus two truths are stated in their own nature and two are to be understood by way of the guideline of conversion.[18]

He entirely abandons the underlying tendency to lust (//so sabbaso raganusayam pahaya//): Understanding thus the unwholesome, etc., he abandons in all ways the underlying tendency to lust. He abolishes the underlying tendency to aversion (//patighanusayam pativinodetva//): and he removes in all ways too the underlying tendency to aversion, is what is meant. Up to this point the path of non-return is stated.[19] He extirpates the underlying tendency to the view and conceit "I am" (//asmi ti ditthimananusayam samuhanitva//): he extricates the underlying tendency to the view and conceit which occurs in the mode of grasping the five aggregates as a group (with the notion) "I am," due to failure to distinguish any state among them.

Therein, by the phrase the underlying tendency to the view and conceit "I am" (//ditthimananusayam//) what is meant is the underlying tendency to conceit which is similar to a view (//ditthisadisam mananusayam//). For this underlying tendency to conceit is similar to a view because it occurs (with the notion) "I am"; therefore it is stated thus. And one who wishes to understand this conceit "I am" in detail should look up the Khemaka Sutta in the Khandhiyavagga (S.22:89/iii,126ff.).

By abandoning ignorance (//avijjam pahaya//): having abandoned ignorance, the root of the round (of existence). And arousing true knowledge (//vijjam uppadetva//): having aroused the true knowledge of the path of Arahantship which completely extricates that ignorance. At this point the path of Arahantship is stated.[20] He here and now makes an end of suffering (//ditth'eva dhamme dukkhass'antakaro hoti//): in this very existence he becomes one who cuts off the suffering of the round.

In that way too (//ettavatapi kho avuso//): he marks off (this first part of) the teaching; by way of the attention and penetration stated in this exposition of the courses of kamma, is what is meant. The rest is as aforesaid. Thus he concludes the exposition by means of the path of non-return and the path of Arahantship.

THE FOUR NUTRIMENTS

General

9. Saying, "Good, friend," ... (etc.) ..." and has arrived at this true Dhamma": Thus, having heard the Venerable Sariputta's exposition of the four truths under the heading of the wholesome and the unwholesome, the bhikkhus delighted in his words with the statement, "Good, friend," and rejoiced with the mind that aroused that statement; what is meant is that they agreed by word and approved by mind. Now, because the Elder was competent to give an exposition on the four truths in diverse ways -- as (the Blessed One) said: "Bhikkhus, Sariputta is able to propound, to teach, the Four Noble Truths in detail" (M.141/iii, 248); or because he had said "in that way too," being desirous of giving a further exposition, the bhikkhus, being desirous of hearing the teaching of the four truths by another method, asked him a further question. By asking "But, friend, might there be another way? Would there be another case?" they asked another question additional to that question asked and answered (already) by the Venerable Sariputta himself. Or what is meant is that they asked a question subsequent to the previous one. Then, answering them, the Elder said, "There might be, friends," and so on.

10. Herein, this is the elucidation of the terms that are not clear. Nutriment (//ahara//) is a condition (//paccaya//). For a condition nourishes its own fruit, therefore it is called nutriment.[21]

11. Of beings that already have come to be (//bhutanam va sattanam//), etc.: Here come to be (//bhuta//) means come to birth, reborn; seeking a new existence (//sambhavesinam//) means those who seek, search for, existence, birth, production. Therein, among the four kinds of generation,[22] beings born from eggs and from the womb are said to be "seeking a new existence" as long as they have not broken out of the eggshell or the placenta. When they have broken out of the eggshell or the placenta and emerged outside, they are said to have "come to be." The moisture-born and the spontaneously born are said to be "seeking a new existence" at the first moment of consciousness; from the second moment of consciousness onwards they are said to have "come to be."

Or alternatively, "come to be" is born, reproduced; this is a term for those who have destroyed the cankers (//Arahants//), who are reckoned thus: "They have come to be only, but they will not come to be again." "Seeking a new existence" means they seek a new existence; this is a term for worldlings and disciples in higher training who seek a new existence in the future too, because they have not abandoned the fetter of being. Thus by these two terms he includes all beings in all ways.

For the maintenance (//thitiya//); for the purpose of maintaining. For the support (//anuggahaya//): for the purpose of supporting, for the purpose of helping. This is merely a difference of words, but the meaning of the two terms is one only. Or alternatively, "for the maintenance" is for the non-interruption of this or that being by means of the serial connection of arisen states. "For the support" is for the arising of unarisen (states). And both these expressions should be regarded as applicable in both cases thus: "For the maintenance and support of those that have come to be, and for the maintenance and support of those seeking a new existence."

The Four Kinds of Nutriment

Physical food as nutriment (lit. "food made into a ball") (//kabalinkaro aharo//) is nutriment that can be swallowed after making it into a ball; this is a term for the nutritive essence which has as its basis boiled rice, junket, etc.[23] Gross or subtle (//olariko va sukhumo va//): it is gross because of the grossness of the basis, and subtle because of the subtlety of the basis. But because physical nutriment is included in subtle materiality, by way of its individual essence it is subtle only.[24] And also that grossness and subtlety should be understood relatively in respect of the basis.

The nutriment of peacocks is subtle compared with the nutriment of crocodiles. Crocodiles, they say, swallow stones, and these dissolve on reaching their stomachs. Peacocks eat such animals as snakes, scorpions, etc. But the nutriment of hyenas is subtle compared with the nutriment of peacocks. These, they say, eat horns and bones thrown away three years before, and these become soft as yams as soon as they are moistened with their saliva. Also, the nutriment of elephants is subtle compared with the nutriment of hyenas. For these eat the branches of various trees, etc. The nutriment of the gayal buffalo, the antelope, the deer, etc., is subtler than the nutriment of elephants. These, they say, eat the sapless leaves of various kinds of trees, etc. The nutriment of cows is subtler than their nutriment; they eat fresh and dried grass. The nutriment of hares is subtler than their nutriment; that of birds is subtler than that of hares; that of barbarians is subtler than that of birds; that of village headmen is subtler than that of barbarians; that of kings and kings' ministers is subtler than village headmens'; that of a Wheel-turning Monarch is subtler than their nutriment. The earth deities' nutriment is subtler than that of a Wheel-turning Monarch. The nutriment of the deities of the Four Great Kings is subtler than that of the earth deities. Thus nutriment should be elaborated up to that of the deities who wield power over others' creations.[25] But saying, "Their nutriment is subtle," the end is reached.

And here, in a basis that is gross, the nutritive essence is limited and weak; in one that is subtle, it is strong. Thus one who has drunk even a full bowl of gruel is soon hungry again and desirous of eating anything; but after drinking even a small amount of ghee, he will not want to eat for the whole day. Therein, it is the basis that dispels fatigue, but it is unable to preserve; but the nutritive essence preserves, though it cannot dispel fatigue. But when the two are combined they both dispel fatigue and preserve.

Contact as the second (//phasso dutiyo//): The sixfold contact beginning with eye-contact should be understood as the second of these four kinds of nutriment. And this is the method of the teaching itself; therefore it should not be inquired into here, saying "For this reason it is the second, or the third." Mental volition (//manosancetana//): volition (//cetana//) itself is stated. Consciousness (//vinnanam//): any kind of consciousness whatever.

It may be asked here: "If the meaning of condition is the meaning of nutriment, then, when other conditions also exist for beings, why are only these four stated?" It should be said in reply: "It is because they are the special conditions for personal continuity." For physical nutriment is the special condition for the material body of beings that eat physical nutriment; as regards the group of mental constituents, contact is (the special condition) for feeling, mental volition for consciousness, and consciousness for mentality-materiality. As it is said: "Just as, bhikkhus, this body has nutriment for its maintenance, is maintained in dependence on nutriment, and without nutriment is not maintained" (S.46:2/v,64); and likewise: "With contact as condition, feeling; ... with formations as condition, consciousness; ... with consciousness as condition, mentality-materiality" (S.12:1/ii,1, etc.).

What is this nutriment, and what does it nourish? Physical nutriment nourishes the materiality with nutritive essence as eighth;[26] contact as nutriment nourishes the three feelings; mental volition as nutriment nourishes the three kinds of being; consciousness as nutriment nourishes the mentality-materiality of rebirth-linking.

How? As soon as it is placed in the mouth, physical food as nutriment brings into being the eight kinds of materiality (aforesaid). Then each lump of cooked rice ground by the teeth, on being swallowed, brings into being unit after unit of the eight kinds of materiality. Thus it nourishes the materiality with nutritive essence as eighth.

But with contact as nutriment, when contact productive of pleasant feeling arises it nourishes pleasant feeling; contact productive of painful feeling nourishes painful feeling; contact productive of neither-painful-nor-pleasant feeling nourishes neither-painful-nor-pleasant feeling. Thus in all ways contact as nutriment nourishes the three kinds of feeling.

In the case of mental volition as nutriment, kamma leading to sense-sphere being nourishes sense-sphere being; kamma leading to fine-material and immaterial being nourishes its respective kind of being. Thus in all ways mental volition as nutriment nourishes the three kinds of being.

But with consciousness as nutriment, it is said that it nourishes, by way of conascence condition, etc., the three (immaterial) aggregates associated with itself at the moment of rebirth-linking and the thirty kinds of materiality that arise by way of triple continuity. Thus consciousness nourishes the mentality-materiality of rebirth-linking.[27]

And here, by the words "mental volition as nutriment nourishes the three kinds of being," only the wholesome and unwholesome volition accompanied by taints is meant; by the words "consciousness nourishes the mentality-materiality of rebirth-linking," only rebirth-linking consciousness is meant. However, these are to be understood indiscriminately as nutriments as well because they nourish the states that are associated with them and originated by them.

The Four Functions

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

As regards these four kinds of nutriment, physical food as nutriment accomplishes the function of nutriment by sustaining, contact by contacting (touching), mental volition by accumulating, consciousness by cognizing.

How? Physical food as nutriment, by sustaining, is for the maintenance of beings by maintaining the body. For this body, though generated by kamma, is sustained by physical food and stands for ten years or a hundred years up to the end of the life-span. Like what? Like a child which, though given birth by the mother, is nurtured by the milk, etc., given to him to drink by the wet-nurse and thus lives long. Also, as a house is supported by a prop. This too has been said (untraced): "Great king, just as, when a house is collapsing, they prop it up with other timber, and that house, being propped up by other timber, does not collapse, so too this body is supported by nutriment, persists in dependence upon nutriment."

Thus physical food as nutriment accomplishes the function of nutriment by sustaining. Accomplishing it thus, physical food as nutriment becomes a condition for two material continuities, namely, for that originated by nutriment and that kammically acquired.[28] It is a condition for the kamma-born materiality by becoming its preserver. It is a condition for that originated by nutriment by becoming its producer.

Then contact, by contacting the object which is the basis for pleasure, etc., is "for the maintenance of beings" by causing the occurrence of pleasant feeling, etc. Mental volition, accumulating by way of wholesome and unwholesome kamma, is "for the maintenance of beings" because it provides the root of existence. Consciousness, by cognizing, is "for the maintenance of beings" by causing the occurrence of mentality-materiality.

The Four Dangers

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Now, while these are accomplishing their function of nutriment by sustaining, etc., four dangers are to be seen: the danger of desire in the case of physical food as nutriment; the danger of approach in the case of contact; (the danger) of accumulating in the case of mental volition; and (the danger) of launching [into a new existence here or there by way of taking rebirth-linking] in the case of consciousness.

What are the reasons (for this)? Because, having aroused desire for physical food, beings face cold, etc., to undertake such work as checking, accounting, etc., and incur not a little suffering. And some who have gone forth in this dispensation seek nutriment through such improper means as the practice of medicine, etc., and they are to be censured here and now, and hereafter they become "recluse ghosts" in the manner described thus in the Lakkhana Samyutta: "And his outer robe was burning, blazing," etc.[29] For this reason, desire itself is to be understood as the danger in physical food as nutriment.

Those who approach contact, who find gratification in contact, commit crimes in respect of others' guarded and protected belongings, such as their wives, etc. When the owners of the goods catch them with their belongings, they cut them into pieces or throw them onto a rubbish heap, or hand them over to the king; and then the king has various tortures inflicted upon them. And with the breakup of the body, after death, a bad destination is to be expected for them. Thus this entire danger -- that pertaining to the here and now and that pertaining to the afterlife -- has come about rooted in contact. For this reason, approach is to be understood as the danger in the case of the nutriment contact.

The entire danger in the three realms of existence has come about by the accumulation of wholesome and unwholesome kamma and is rooted in that (accumulation). For this reason, accumulation is to be understood as the danger in the nutriment mental volition.

And in whatever place rebirth-linking consciousness launches (the new existence), in that same place it is reborn by seizing the rebirth-linking mentality-materiality. When it is produced, all dangers are produced, for they are all rooted in it. For this reason, launching is to be understood as the danger in the nutriment consciousness.

The Four Similes

In regard to these nutriments with their dangers, for the sake of eliminating desire for the nutriment physical food, the Fully Enlightened One taught the simile of son's flesh in the passage beginning thus: "Suppose, bhikkhus, a couple, a man and his wife, ..." For the sake of eliminating desire for the nutriment contact, he taught the simile of the flayed cow in the passage beginning thus: "Suppose, bhikkhus, there was a flayed cow ..." For the sake of eliminating desire for the nutriment mental volition, he taught the simile of the charcoal pit in the passage beginning thus: "Suppose, bhikkhus, there was a charcoal pit ..." And for the sake of eliminating desire for the nutriment consciousness, he taught the simile of the man struck with three hundred spears in the passage beginning thus: "Suppose, bhikkhus, there was a thief, a crook ..."[30]

Therein, taking the essential meaning, there follows a brief interpretation of the meaning. A couple, it is said, a man and his wife, took their son and set out on a desert trail a hundred yojanas long,[31] with only limited provisions. When they had gone fifty yojanas their provisions ran out. Exhausted by hunger and thirst, they sat down in some scanty shade. Then the man said to his wife: "My dear, for fifty yojanas on all sides there is neither a village nor a town. Therefore, though a man can do many kinds of work, such as plowing, guarding cattle, etc., it is not possible for me to do that. Come, kill me. Eat half of my flesh, and having made the other half into provisions for the journey, cross out of the desert together with our son."

The wife said: "Dear husband, though a woman can do many kinds of work, such as spinning thread, etc., it is not possible for me to do that. Come, kill me. Eat half of my flesh, and having made the other half into provisions for the journey, cross out of the desert together with our son."

Then the man said: "My dear, the death of the mother would mean the death of two, for a young boy cannot live without his mother. But if we both live, then we can beget another child again. Come now, let us kill our child, take his flesh, and cross out of this desert."

Then the mother said to the son: "Dear, go to your father." He went, but the father said: "For the sake of supporting this child I incurred much suffering through such work as plowing, guarding cattle, etc. I cannot kill the boy. You kill your son." Then he said: "Dear, go to your mother." But the mother said: "Longing for a son I incurred much suffering by observing the cow-observance, the dog-observance, praying to the gods, etc., not to speak of bearing him in my womb.[32] It is not possible for me to kill him." Then she said: "Dear, go to your father."

The boy died from going back and forth between the father and the mother. Seeing him dead, they wept, and having taken the flesh as described above, they departed. Because that flesh of their son was repulsive to them for nine reasons, it was not eaten for enjoyment nor for intoxication nor for making (the body) strong and beautiful, but only for the purpose of crossing out of the desert.

For what nine reasons was it repulsive? Because it was the flesh of their own offspring, the flesh of a relative, the flesh of a son, the flesh of a dear son, the flesh of a youngster, raw flesh, not beef, unsalted, unspiced. Therefore the bhikkhu who sees the nutriment physical food thus, as similar to son's flesh, eliminates the desire for it.[33]

This, in the first place, is the interpretation of the meaning of the simile of son's flesh.

Then, as regards the simile of the flayed cow: If a cow were stripped of its skin from the neck to the hooves and then set free, whatever it would rest upon would become a basis of pain for it, since it would be bitten by the small creatures living there.[34] So too, whatever physical basis or object contact stands upon as its support becomes a basis for the felt pain originating from that basis or object.[35] Therefore a bhikkhu who sees the nutriment contact thus, as similar to a flayed cow, eliminates the desire for it. This is the interpretation of the meaning of the simile of the flayed cow.

Then, as regards the simile of the charcoal pit:[36] The three realms of being are like a charcoal pit in the sense of a great burning heat (lit., a great fever). Like the two men who grab hold (of a weaker man) by both his arms and drag him towards it, is mental volition in the sense that it drags one towards the realms of being. Therefore a bhikkhu who sees the nutriment mental volition thus, as similar to a charcoal pit, eliminates the desire for it. This is the interpretation of the meaning of the simile of the charcoal pit.

Then, as regards the simile of the man struck with three hundred spears:[37] The hundred spears that strike the man in the morning make a hundred wound openings in his body, and without remaining inside they pierce through and fall on the other side; and so with the other two hundred spears as well. Thus his whole body is cut again and again by the spears which come without piercing him in a place where another has already struck. There is no measuring the pain arisen in him from even one of the wound openings, not to speak of three hundred wound openings.

Therein, the time of the generation of the rebirth-linking consciousness is like the time of being struck by a spear. The production of the aggregates is like the production of the wound openings. The arising of the various kinds of suffering rooted in the round (of existence) once the aggregates have been born is like the arising of suffering on account of the wound openings.

Another method of interpretation (is as follows): The rebirth-linking consciousness is like the thief. His mentality-materiality conditioned by consciousness is like the wound openings created by the striking of the spears. The arising of the various kinds of suffering by way of the thirty-two types of torture and the eighty-nine types of diseases in regard to consciousness conditioned by mentality-materiality -- this should be regarded as like the arising of severe pain for that man conditioned by the wound openings.

Therefore a bhikkhu who sees the nutriment consciousness thus, as similar to one struck by three hundred spears, eliminates the desire for it. This is the interpretation of the meaning of the simile of the man struck by three hundred spears.

Full Understanding

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Thus by eliminating desire in regard to these nutriments, he also fully understands these four nutriments. When these have been fully understood, the entire basis (for them) has also been fully understood. For this has been said by the Blessed One (S.12:63/ii,99-100):

> Bhikkhus, when the nutriment physical food has been fully understood, lust for the five cords of sensual pleasure has been fully understood. When lust for the five cords of sensual pleasure has been fully understood, there exists no more any fetter bound by which the noble disciple might come back to this world.
>
> Bhikkhus, when the nutriment contact has been fully understood, the three feelings have been fully understood. When the three feelings have been fully understood, there is nothing further for the noble disciple to do, I say.
>
> Bhikkhus, when the nutriment mental volition has been fully understood, the three kinds of craving have been fully understood. When the three kinds of craving have been fully understood, there is nothing further for the noble disciple to do, I say.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Bhikkhus, when the nutriment consciousness has been fully understood, mentality-materiality has been fully understood. When mentality-materiality has been fully understood, there is nothing further for the noble disciple to do, I say.

The Arising and Cessation of Nutriment

~~~~~~

With the arising of craving there is the arising of nutriment (//tanhasamudaya aharasamudayo//): This is the meaning: "With the arising of craving in the previous (existence) the arising of the nutriments occurs at rebirth-linking (in this existence)." How? Because at the moment of rebirth-linking there is the nutritive essence produced among the thirty types of materiality that have arisen by way of triple continuity.[38] This is the kammically acquired physical food as nutriment produced by craving as its condition. But the contact and volition associated with the rebirth-linking consciousness, and that mind or consciousness itself -- these are the kammically acquired nutriments of contact, mental volition and consciousness produced by craving as their condition. Thus, in the first place, the arising of the nutriments at rebirth-linking should be understood as occurring with the arising of craving in the previous existence.

But because the nutriments that are kammically acquired and those that are not kammically acquired have been discussed here combined, (the principle of) the arising of nutriment with the arising of craving should be understood to apply also to those that are not kammically acquired. For there is nutritive essence in the kinds of materiality that are aroused by the eight types of consciousness accompanied by greed;[39] this is the nutriment physical food that is not kammically acquired yet is produced by conascent craving as its condition. But the contact and volition associated with the consciousness accompanied by greed, and that mind or consciousness itself -- these are the nutriments of contact, mental volition and consciousness that are not kammically acquired yet are produced by craving as their condition.
~~~~~~

With the cessation of craving there is cessation of nutriment (//tanhanirodha aharanirodho//): By this there is set forth the cessation of nutriment by the cessation of the craving that had become the condition for both nutriment that is kammically acquired and that which is not kammically acquired. The rest (should be understood) by the method stated, but there is this difference. Here the four truths are stated directly, and as here, so in all the following sections. Therefore one who is unconfused in mind can deduce the truths throughout in what follows.[40]

12. And in all the following sections the delimiting phrase In that way too, friends (//ettavata pi kho avuso//) should be construed according to the principle that has been expounded. Here, in the first place, this is the interpretation of it (in the present context). "In that way too": what is meant is: "the attention and penetration stated by way of the teaching concerning nutriment." The same method throughout.

The Four Noble Truths

14. Now, delighting and rejoicing in the Elder's words, after saying as before "Good, friend," the bhikkhus asked a further question, and the Elder answered them by another exposition. This method is found in all the following sections. Therefore, from here onwards, we shall explain the meaning only of the particular exposition he states in reply, without touching upon such words (as are already explained).

15. In the brief exposition of this teaching, in the phrase (he) understands suffering (//dukkham pajanati//), "suffering" is the truth of suffering. But regarding the detailed exposition, whatever needs to be said has all been said already in the Visuddhimagga in the Description of the Truths (XVI,13-104).

Aging and Death

21. From here onwards the teaching is given by way of dependent arising (//paticca samuppada//).

22. Therein, in the section on aging and death, firstly as to the term their (//tesam tesam//) -- this should be understood as a collective designation in brief for the many kinds of beings. For if one were to state (the aging of individuals such as) the aging of Devadatta, the aging of Somadatta, etc., one would never come to an end of beings. But there is no being not included by this term "their."[41] Therefore it was said above: "This should be understood as a collective designation in brief for the many kinds of beings."

In the various (//tamhi tamhi//): This is a collective designation for the many (different) orders by way of destiny and birth. Orders of beings (//sattanikaye//): an indication of the nature of what is designated by the collective designation.

Aging, old age (//jara jiranata//), etc.: As regards these, "aging" is the description of the nature; "old age" is the description of the aspect; "brokenness," etc., are descriptions of the function with respect to the passage of time; and the last two terms are descriptions of the normal (process). For this is indicated as to nature by this term aging (//jara//); hence this is a description of its nature. It is indicated as to aspect by this term old age (//jiranata//); hence this is a description of its aspect. Brokenness (//khandicca//): by this it is indicated as to the function of causing the broken state of teeth and nails on account of the passage of time. Grayness (//palicca//): by this it is indicated as to the function of causing the head hairs and body hairs to turn gray. Wrinkling (//valittacata//): by this it is indicated as to the wrinkled state of the skin after the withering of the flesh. Hence the three terms beginning with brokenness are descriptions of function with respect to the passage of time. By these evident aging is shown, which becomes evident by the showing of these alterations. For just as the course taken by water or wind or fire is evident from the damaged and broken state, or the burnt state, of the grass and trees, etc., and yet the course that has been taken is not the water, etc., itself, so too the course taken by aging is evident through brokenness of teeth, etc., and it is apprehended by opening the eyes, but the brokenness, etc., themselves are not aging, nor is aging cognizable by the eye.

Decline of life, weakness of faculties (//ayuno samhani indriyanam paripako//): By these terms it is indicated by means of the normal (process) known as the exhaustion of the life-span and the weakening of the eye faculty, etc., that has become manifest with the passage of time. Hence these last two are to be understood as descriptions of its normal (process).

Therein, because the life-span of one who has reached aging is dwindling, aging is called "decline of life" as a metaphor (for the cause stated in terms) of its effect. And because the eye faculty, etc. -- which at the time of youth were quite clear and could easily grasp even subtle objects -- become deficient, obscure, unable to grasp even gross objects when one has reached old age, therefore it is called "weakness of faculties" also as a metaphor (for the cause stated in terms) of its effect.

This aging, thus described, is all of two kinds, evident and concealed. Therein, the aging of material phenomena, shown by brokenness, etc., is called evident aging (//pakatajara//). But in the case of immaterial phenomena, because their alteration in such a way is not visible, their aging is called concealed aging (//paticchannajara//). Therein, the brokenness that is seen is simply color (//vanna//) because of the ease of comprehending such things as the teeth, etc. Having seen this with the eye and reflected on it with the mind door, one knows aging thus: "These teeth have been afflicted by aging," just as one knows the existence of water below when one has noticed the heads of cows, etc., bound to the place where the water is located.

Again, aging is twofold thus: as continuous and as discrete. Therein, continuous aging (//avicijara//) is the aging of such things as gems, gold, silver, coral, the sun and moon, etc.; it is so called because of the difficulty of perceiving in such things distinct changes in color, etc., at regular intervals, as we can in the case of living beings passing through the decade of childhood, etc., and in the case of vegetation (lit. non-breathing things) such as flowers, fruits, buds, etc. The meaning is: aging that progresses without interval. Discrete aging (//savicijara//) is the aging of the things other than those, i.e. of the aforesaid things (living beings and vegetation); it is so called because it is easy to perceive in them distinct changes in color, etc., at regular intervals. So it should be understood.

Following this (in the definition of death) the term their (//tesam tesam//) should be understood by the method stated above (in the definition of aging). Then, in the expression passing, passing away, etc., passing (//cuti//) is said by way of what has the nature to pass away; this is a collective designation (applying) to one-, four-, and five-aggregate (existence). Passing away (//cavanata//) is the indication of the characteristic by a word expressing the abstract state. Dissolution (//bheda//) is an indication of the occurrence of the breaking up of the aggregates (at the time) of passing. Disappearance (//antaradhana//) is an indication of the absence of any manner of persistence of the aggregates (at the time) of passing, as they are broken like a broken pot.

Dying (//maccu marana//): death which is called dying. By this he rejects the idea of death as complete annihilation. Completion of time (//kalakiriya//): time is the destroyer, and this (completion of time) is its activity. By this he explains death in conventional terminology.

Now, to explain death in (terms valid in) the ultimate sense, he next says the dissolution of the aggregates (//khandhanam bhedo//), etc.[42] For in the ultimate sense it is only the aggregates that break up; it is not any so called being that dies. But when the aggregates are breaking up convention says "a being is dying," and when they have broken up convention says "(he is) dead."

Here the dissolution of the aggregates is said by way of four- [and five-] constituent being; the laying down of the body (//kalevarassa nikkhepo//) by way of one-constituent being.[43] Or alternatively, the dissolution of the aggregates is said by way of four-constituent being; the laying down of the body should be understood by way of the other two (i.e. one- and five-constituent being). Why? Because of the existence of the body, that is, the material body, in those two realms of being. Or else, because in the realm of the Four Great Kings, etc., the aggregates simply break up and they do not lay anything down, the dissolution of the aggregates is said with reference to them.[44] The laying down of the body occurs among human beings, etc. And here, because it is the cause for the laying down of the body, death is called the laying down of the body. Thus the meaning should be understood.

So this aging and this death are what is called aging and death (//iti ayan ca jara idan ca maranam idam vuccat'avuso jaramaranam//): this is spoken of as "aging and death" by combining the two into one.

Birth
~~~~~
26. In the section on birth, in regard to the phrase birth, ... their coming to birth, etc., birth (//jati//) is in the sense of being born; this is stated with reference to those (conceived) with incomplete sense bases. Coming to birth (//sanjati//) is in the sense of the act of coming to birth; this is stated with reference to those (conceived) with already complete sense bases. Precipitation (or descent, //okkanti//) is in the sense of being precipitated (descending). This is stated with reference to those born from the egg and from the womb, for they take rebirth-linking as though descending and entering the egg shell or the placenta. Generation (//abhinibbatti//) is in the sense of being generated. This is stated with reference to those born from moisture or those of spontaneous birth, for these are generated as soon as they become manifest.

Now comes the exposition in (terms valid in) the ultimate sense. Manifestation (//patubhava//) is the arising. Of the aggregates (//khandhanam//) is to be understood as (the arising) of one aggregate in the one-constituent realm of being, of four aggregates in four-constituent realms, and of five aggregates in five-constituent realms. Obtaining (//patilabha//) is the manifestation in continuity. The bases (//ayatananam//) should be understood as comprising the sense bases arising (at conception) in this or that realm. For when the sense bases become manifest, then they are said to be obtained.
~~~~~

This is called birth (//ayam vuccat'avuso jati//): by this phrase he comes to the conclusion on birth taught in both conventional terms and in the ultimate sense.

With the arising of being (//bhavasamudaya//): but here one should understand kammically active being as the condition for birth. The rest by the method stated.

Being
~~~~~
30. In the section on being, sense-sphere being (//kamabhava//) is kammically active being and resultant being. Therein, kammically active being (//kammabhava//) is kamma itself that leads to sense-sphere being. For that is called "being" as a designation of the cause in terms of its effect, because it is the cause for resultant being, as when it is said: "The arising of Buddhas is bliss" and "The accumulation of evil is painful" (Dhp. 194, 117). Resultant being (//upapattibhava//) is the group of kammically acquired aggregates produced by that kamma. For that is called "being" because it exists there. Thus this kamma and this result are both spoken of conjointly as "sense-sphere being." The same method applies to fine-material being and immaterial being (//ruparupabhava//).

With the arising of clinging (//upadanasamudaya//): But here clinging is a condition for wholesome kammically active being only by way of decisive support; it is a condition for unwholesome kammically active being by way of both decisive support and conascence.[45] For all resultant being it is a condition only by way of decisive support. The rest by the method stated.
~~~~~

Clinging
~~~~~~~~

34. In the section on clinging, in regard to the phrase "clinging to sense pleasures," etc., clinging to sense pleasures (//kamupadana//) is analyzed thus: by this one clings to the object of sensual pleasure, or this itself clings to it. Or alternatively: that is a sensual pleasure and it is clinging, thus it is clinging to sensual pleasure. It is firm grasping (//dalhagahana//) that is called clinging. For here the prefix //upa// has the sense of firmness. This is a designation for the lust for the five cords of sensual pleasure. This is the brief account here. The detailed account should be understood by the method stated thus: "Therein, what is clinging to sensual pleasures? The sensual desire in regard to sensual pleasures," etc. (Dhs. Section 1214).

So too, that is a view and clinging, thus it is clinging to views (//ditthupadana//). Or alternatively: it clings to a view, or by this they cling to a view. For the subsequent view clings to the previous view and thereby they cling to the view. As it is said: "Self and the world are eternal; only this is true, anything else is false," etc. (M.102/ii, 233). This is a designation for the whole field of (wrong) views except clinging to rituals and observances and clinging to a doctrine of self.[46] This is the brief account here. The detailed account should be understood by the method stated thus: "Therein, what is clinging to views? There is nothing given," etc. (Dhs. Section 1215).

So too, by this they cling to rituals and observances, or this itself clings to them, or that is a ritual and observance and clinging, thus it is clinging to rituals and observances (//silabbatupadana//). For when one adheres to the idea that the cow ritual or cow observance brings purification, that itself is a clinging.[47] This is the brief account here. The detailed account should be understood by the method stated thus: "Therein, what is clinging to rituals and observances? (The idea) of recluses and brahmins outside here (i.e. outside the Buddha's dispensation) that purity (is achieved) by rules," etc. (Dhs. Section 1216).
~~~~~~~~

Now they assert in terms of this, thus it is a doctrine. By this they cling, thus it is clinging. What do they assert? Or what do they cling to? Self. The clinging to a doctrine about a self is the clinging to a doctrine of self (//attavadupadana//). Or alternatively: by this a mere doctrine of self is clung to as self, thus it is clinging to a doctrine of self. This is a designation for personality view with its twenty cases. This is the brief account here. The detailed account should be understood by the method stated thus: "Therein, what is clinging to a doctrine of self? Here, the uninstructed worldling who has no regard for noble ones," etc. (Dhs. Section 1217).

With the arising of craving (//tanhasamudaya//): here, craving is a condition for clinging to sensual pleasures either by way of decisive support or by way of proximity, contiguity, absence, disappearance and repetition.[48] But for the rest (it is a condition) by way of conascence, etc., too. The rest by the method stated.

Craving
~~~~~~~

38. In the section on craving, craving for forms ... craving for mind-objects (//rupatanha ... dhammatanha//): these are names for the kinds of craving which occur in the course of a javana cognitive process (//javanavithi//) in the eye door, etc. Like a name derived from the father, such as Setthiputta ("merchant's son") or Brahmanaputta ("brahmin's son"), their names are derived from the object, which is similar to the father [as being the cause (//hetu//) of it only, not as is the case with "eye-contact," which is like a name derived from the mother in that (the eye like the mother in relation to her son) is a cause by its nature as a physical support (//nissayabhava//)].

And here, craving for forms is craving that has forms as its object, craving in regard to forms. When this occurs by finding gratification in visible forms through its nature as sensual lust, it is craving for sensual pleasure (//kamatanha//). When it occurs by finding gratification in visible forms, thinking "Form is permanent, lasting, eternal," through its nature as lust accompanied by the eternalist view, then it is craving for being (//bhavatanha//). When it occurs by finding gratification in visible form, thinking "Form is annihilated, destroyed, and does not exist after death," through its nature as lust accompanied by the annihilationist view, then it is craving for non-being (//vibhavatanha//). Thus it is threefold. And as craving for form, so too craving for sound, etc., (are each threefold too). Thus there are eighteen modes of craving. These eighteen in respect of internal visible form, etc., and in respect of external visible form, etc., come to thirty-six. So thirty-six in the past, thirty-six in the future, and thirty-six at present make up a hundred and eight.
~~~~~~~

Or there are eighteen based on internal form, etc., thus: "On account of the internal there is (the notion) 'I am,' there is (the notion) 'I am such and such,' " and so on; and there are eighteen based on external form, etc., thus: "On account of the external there is (the notion) 'I am,' there is (the notion) 'I am such and such,' " and so on. Thus there are thirty-six. So thirty-six in the past, thirty-six in the future, and thirty-six at present make up thus the hundred and eight modes of craving (//tanhavicaritani//; see A. 4:199/ii, 212).

Again, when a classification is made, they reduce to only six classes of craving -- in terms of their objects, forms and the rest -- and to only three types of craving -- craving for sensual pleasure and the rest. Thus:

Craving should be known by the wise
Through description and when described
In detail; it (should be known) again
Through classification of the detail.

With the arising of feeling there is the arising of craving

(//vedanasamudaya tanhasamudayo//): But here the word "feeling" is intended as resultant feeling.[49] How is that the condition for craving in respect of the six sense doors? Because of its ability to produce gratification. For it is through the gratification in pleasant feeling that beings become enamored of that feeling, and after arousing craving for feeling and being seized by lust for feeling, they long only for a desirable visible form in the eye door. And on getting it, they find gratification in it, and they honor painters, etc., who provide such objects. Likewise, they long only for a desirable sound, etc., in the ear door, etc. And on getting it, they find gratification in it, and they honor musicians, perfume makers, cooks, spinners and the teachers of the various crafts. Like what? Like those who, being enamored of a child, out of love for the child honor the wet-nurse and give her suitable ghee, milk, etc., to eat and drink. The rest by the method stated.

Feeling
~~~~~~~

42. In the section on feeling, classes of feeling (//vedanakaya//) means groups of feeling. Feeling born of eye-contact ... feeling born of mind-contact (//cakkhusamphassaja vedana ... manosamphassaja vedana//): because of what has come down in the Vibhanga thus: "There is feeling born of eye-contact that is wholesome, that is unwholesome, that is indeterminate" (Vibh. 15), the wholesome, unwholesome and indeterminate feelings that occur in the eye door, etc., are named after the physical base, which is similar to a mother, just as some are named after their mother, such as "Sariputta (Lady Sari's son)," "Mantaniputta (Lady Mantani's son)," etc.

But the word meaning here is this: feeling born of eye-contact (//cakkhusamphassaja vedana//) is feeling that is born with eye-contact as the cause. The same method throughout. This, in the first place, is the all-inclusive explanation. But by way of resultant, in the eye-door there are two eye-consciousnesses, two mind elements, three mind-consciousness elements; feeling should be understood as what is associated with these.[50] This method also applies in the ear door, etc. In the mind door, (feeling) is associated only with the mind-consciousness elements.
~~~~~~~

With the arising of contact (//phassasamudaya//): But here the arising in the five doors of the feelings that have the five physical bases (as their support) occurs with the arising of the conascent eye-contact. For the rest, eye-contact, etc., are conditions by way of decisive support. In the mind door, the arising of feelings (on the occasion) of registration and of the doorless feelings (on the occasions) of rebirth-linking, life-continuum and death occurs with the arising of the conascent mind-contact.[51] The rest by the method stated.

Contact

46. In the section on contact, eye-contact (//cakkhusamphassa//) is contact in the eye. The same method throughout. Eye-contact ... body-contact (//cakkhusamphasso ... kayasamphasso//): up to this point ten kinds of contact have been stated, namely, the wholesome- and unwholesome-resultants having the five physical bases (as their support). Mind-contact (//manosamphassa//): by this (he indicates) the remaining twenty-two kinds of contact associated with the mundane resultant (types of consciousness).[52]

With the arising of the sixfold base (//salayatanasamudaya//): The arising of this sixfold contact should be understood to occur by way of the arising of the six bases beginning with the eye-base. The rest by the method stated.

The Sixfold Base

50. In the section on the sixfold base, as regards the eye-base (//cakkhayatana//), etc., whatever should be said has all been said already in the Visuddhimagga in the Description of the Aggregates and in the Description of the Bases (XIV, 37-52; XV, 1-16).

With the arising of mentality-materiality (//namarupasamudaya//): But here the arising of the sixfold base should be understood to occur from the arising of mentality-materiality according to the method stated in the Visuddhimagga in the Description of Dependent Arising, as to which mentality, which materiality, and which mentality-materiality are a condition for which base (XVII, 206-219).

Mentality-Materiality
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

54. In the section on mentality-materiality, mentality (//nama//) has the characteristic of bending (//namana//); materiality (//rupa//) has the characteristic of being molested (//ruppana//).[53] In the detailed section, however, feeling (//vedana//) is to be understood as the feeling aggregate, perception (//sanna//) as the perception aggregate, and volition, contact and attention (//cetana phasso manasikaro//) as the formations aggregate. While it is certainly the case that other states are included in the formations aggregate, still these three are found in all classes of consciousness, even the weakest. That is why the formations aggregate is here pointed out only by means of these three.

The four great elements (//cattari mahabhutani//): this is a designation for the four -- earth, water, fire and air. The reason why these are called "great elements," and other determinations concerning them, are all stated in the Visuddhimagga in the Description of the Materiality Aggregate.[54]

Derived from the four great elements (//catunnan ca mahabhutanam upadaya//): derived from (//upadaya//) = having clung to (//upadayitva//); "having grasped" is the meaning. Some also say "depending upon" (//nissaya//). And here the reading is completed by adding the word "existing" (//vattamanam//). The Pali uses the genitive (in the term for the elements) in the sense of a group. Hence the meaning here should be understood thus: the materiality that exists derived from the group of the four great elements.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Thus materiality taken altogether is to be understood as consisting of all the following: the four great elements beginning with the earth element, and the materiality that exists derived from the four great elements, stated in the canonical Abhidhamma to be of twenty-three kinds by analysis into the eye-base, etc.[55]

With the arising of consciousness (//vinnanasamudaya//): But here the arising of mentality-materiality should be understood to occur with the arising of consciousness according to the method stated in the Visuddhimagga in the Description of Dependent Arising, as to which consciousness is a condition for which mentality, for which materiality, and for which mentality-materiality (XVII, 186-202). The rest by the method stated.

Consciousness
~~~~~~~~~~~~~

58. In the section on consciousness, eye-consciousness (//cakkhuvinnana//) is consciousness in the eye or consciousness born from the eye. So also with ear-, nose-, tongue- and body-consciousness. But with the other one, i.e. mind-consciousness (//manovinnana//), mind itself is consciousness. This is a designation for the resultant consciousness of the three (mundane) planes of existence except for the two groups of fivefold consciousness.[56]

With the arising of formations (//sankharasamudaya//): But here the arising of consciousness should be understood to occur with the arising of formations according to the method stated in the Visuddhimagga, as to which formation is a condition for which consciousness (XVII, 175-185).

Formations
~~~~~~~~~~

62. In the section on formations, a formation (//sankhara//) has the characteristic of forming (//abhisankharanalakkhana//). But in the detailed section, the bodily formation (//kayasankhara//) is a formation that proceeds from the body. This is a designation for the twenty kinds of bodily volition -- the eight sense-sphere wholesome and twelve unwholesome -- that occur by way of activation in the bodily door.[57] The verbal formation (//vacisankhara//) is a formation that proceeds from speech. This is a designation for the (same) twenty kinds of verbal volition that occur by way of breaking into speech in the door of speech. The mental formation (//cittasankhara//) is a formation that proceeds from the mind. This is a designation for the twenty-nine kinds of mental volition -- the mundane wholesome and unwholesome -- that occur in one sitting alone in thought, and which do not cause activation of the bodily and verbal doors.[58]

With the arising of ignorance (//avijjasamudaya//): But here ignorance should be understood as a condition for the wholesome by way of decisive support and for the unwholesome by way of conascence as well. The rest by the method stated.

Ignorance
~~~~~~~~~

66. In the section on ignorance, not knowing about suffering (//dukkhe annanam//) means not knowing about the truth of suffering. This is a designation for delusion (//moha//). The same method with respect to "not knowing about the origin of suffering," and so on.

Herein, not knowing about suffering should be understood in four ways: as to containment (//antogadhato//), as to physical basis (//vatthuto//), as to object (//arammanato//), and as to concealment (//paticchadanato//). Thus, because of being included in the truth of suffering, it ("not knowing" or ignorance) is contained in suffering; and the truth of suffering is its physical basis by being its support condition; and (the truth of suffering) is its object by being its object condition; and it conceals the truth of suffering by preventing the penetration of its real characteristic and by not allowing knowledge to occur in regard to it.
~~~~~~~~~

Not knowing about the origin (of suffering) should be understood in three ways: as to physical basis, as to object, and as to concealment. And not knowing about cessation and the way (to cessation) should be understood in one way only: as to concealment. For non-knowledge only conceals cessation and the way by preventing the penetration of their real characteristics and by not allowing knowledge to occur in regard to them. But it is not contained in them because it is not included in this pair of truths. And these two truths are not its physical basis because they are not conascent. Nor are they its object because of its non-occurrence on account of them. For the last pair of truths are difficult to see because of their profundity, and non-knowledge, which is blind, does not occur there. But the first (pair of truths) is profound in the sense of opposition because of the difficulty in seeing the characteristic of their intrinsic nature; it occurs there by way of obsession by the perversions.

Furthermore: About suffering (//dukkhe//): to this extent ignorance is indicated as to inclusion, as to physical basis, as to object, and as to function. About the origin of suffering (//dukkhasamudaye//): to this extent, as to basis, as to object, and as to function. About the cessation of suffering (//dukkhanirodhe//) and about the way leading to the cessation of suffering (//dukkhanirodhagaminiya patipadaya//): to this extent, as to function. But without distinction, (in each instance) ignorance is described in terms of its intrinsic nature by the phrase "not knowing."

With the arising of the taints (//asavasamudaya//): But here the taint of sensual desire and the taint of being are conditions for ignorance by way of conascence, etc.; the taint of ignorance, only by way of decisive support. And here the ignorance that had arisen previously should be understood as the taint of ignorance. That is a decisive support condition for the ignorance that arises subsequently. The rest by the method stated.

The Taints

70. In the section on the taints, with the arising of ignorance (//avijjasamudaya//): Here ignorance is a condition for the taint of sensual desire and the taint of being by way of decisive support, etc.; (it is a condition) for the taint of ignorance only by way of decisive support. And here the ignorance that arises subsequently should be understood as the taint of ignorance. The previously arisen ignorance itself becomes a decisive support condition for the subsequently arisen taint of ignorance. The rest by the aforesaid method.

This section is stated by way of showing the condition for the ignorance which heads the factors of dependent arising. Stated thus, the undiscoverability (//anamataggata//) of any beginning of samsara is established. How? Because with the arising of the taints there is the arising of ignorance, and with the arising of ignorance there is the arising of the taints. Thus the taints are a condition for ignorance, and ignorance is a condition for the taints. Having shown this, (it follows that) no first point of ignorance is manifest, and because none is manifest the undiscoverability of any beginning of samsara is proven.[59]

Conclusion

Thus in all this sutta sixteen sections have been stated: the section on the courses of kamma, the section on nutriment, the section on suffering, and the sections on aging and death, birth, being, clinging, craving, feeling, contact, the sixfold base, mentality-materiality, consciousness, formations, ignorance and the taints.

As to these, in each individual section there is a twofold analysis -- in brief and in detail -- amounting to thirty-two cases. Thus in this sutta, in these thirty-two cases, the Four (Noble) Truths are expounded. Among these, in the sixteen cases stated in detail, Arahantship is expounded.

But according to the opinion of the Elder, the four truths and the four paths are expounded in the thirty-two cases.[60] Thus in the entire Word of the Buddha comprised in the five great Nikayas, there is no sutta except for this Discourse on Right View where the Four (Noble) Truths are explained thirty-two times and where Arahantship is explained thirty-two times.

That is what the Venerable Sariputta said (//idam avoc'ayasma Sariputto//): The Venerable Sariputta spoke this Discourse on Right View, having adorned it with sixty-four divisions -- thirty-two expositions of the four truths and thirty-two expositions of Arahantship. The bhikkhus were satisfied and delighted in the Venerable Sariputta's words.

In the Papancasudani, the Commentary to the Majjhima Nikaya, the Explanation of the Discourse on Right View is concluded.

* * * * * * * *

NOTES

1. The term sammaditthi is ordinarily used to mean simply a state, the path factor of right view. Here, however, the Pali expression is used as a masculine noun to mean, in the first instance, a person possessing right view; hence it has been rendered "one of right view." The commentator contrasts this unusual usage of the term with the more common usage where sammaditthi signifies a state (//dhamma//), that is, the path factor rather than the individual endowed with that state.

2. The knowledge of kamma as one's own (//kammassakatanana//) is often expressed in the Suttas thus: "I am the owner of my kamma, the heir of my kamma, I spring from my kamma, I am bound to my kamma, I have kamma as my refuge. Whatever kamma I perform, good or bad, of that I am the heir." In short, it is knowledge of the moral efficacy of action, of the fact that one's willed deeds fashion one's destiny. Knowledge in conformity with the truths (//saccanulomikanana//) is conceptual knowledge of the Four Noble Truths, accompanied by understanding and acceptance of them.

3. The understanding or wisdom (//panna//) connected with the paths and fruits is supramundane because its object is the supramundane dhamma, Nibbana, and because it leads to the overcoming of the world.

4. A disciple in higher training (//sekha//) is one at any of the three lower levels of sanctity -- a stream-enterer, once-returner, or non-returner -- or one who has reached their respective paths. His right view is said to be fixed in destiny (//niyata//) because it necessarily leads to final liberation.

5. The "one beyond training" (//asekha//) is the Arahant, so called because he has completed the threefold training in virtue, concentration and wisdom.

6. The ninefold supramundane Dhamma: the four paths, the four fruitions, and Nibbana.

7. The interpretation of "the bhikkhus" and "the Elder" is offered by Sub. Cy., which also presents an alternative interpretation, based on the commentary to the Vatthupama Sutta (M.7) according to which the bhikkhus are the pupils of the Elder Mahasangharakkhita and "the Elder" is the Elder Mahasangharakkhita.

8. See commentary to the third parajika offence.

9. See commentary to the second parajika offence.

10. The meaning of several of these terms, obscure in the original Pali, has been elaborated with the aid of the Sub. Cy.

11. Consent (//adhivasana//) is included to cover the case where one of the partners is initially an unwilling victim of another's assault, but during the course of union consents to the act and thereby becomes a participant.

12. These are references to the two great classics of Hindu India, the Mahabharata and the Ramayana.

13. Wrong views of fixed destiny (//niyata micchaditthi//) are views which deny the moral efficacy of action or which tend to undermine the foundations of morality. For the most common examples, see D.2/i, 52-56, and M.76/i, 515-18.

14. The chief factor in the first seven courses of kamma is volition; the other three courses are identical with the mental factors of greed, hatred and wrong view, which are associated with volition in the states of consciousness in which they arise.

15. This refers to the Abhidhamma classification of consciousness, according to which wholesome sense-sphere consciousness is of eight types, four associated with knowledge, four dissociated from knowledge. The abstinences, according to the Abhidhamma, occur in sense-sphere consciousness only one at a time on occasions when one deliberately abstains from some wrong. In supramundane consciousness all three abstinences -- right speech, right action and right livelihood -- occur together simultaneously.

16. Right view is synonymous with the mental factor of wisdom (//panna//) or non-delusion (//amoha//); it is always accompanied by the other two wholesome roots, though the latter do not necessarily occur in conjunction with right view.

17. Literally, or in the strict sense (//nippariyayena//), only covetousness and greed, being synonyms of craving (//tanha//), count as the origin of suffering. But in a looser or figurative manner of exposition (//pariyayena//) all the roots are the truth of the origin, since as roots of kamma they help to sustain the round of rebirth and suffering.

18. The guideline of conversion (//avattahara//) is one of the methods of deduction in the exegetical guide, the Nettippakarana. According to this guideline, an expositor of a sutta is to extract from a particular text a standard doctrinal concept belonging to a dichotomy, and then taking this concept as a basis, he is to show that the other member of the dichotomy is also implied by the passage under consideration, and therefore "turns up" when the first member is mentioned.

19. The path of non-return (//anagamimagga//) is stated because this path eradicates all sensual lust and aversion.

20. The path of Arahantship is implied by the eradication of conceit and ignorance and by the arousing of true knowledge.

21. The verb //aharati// normally means "to bring," but here it is rendered as "nourish" to underscore its connection with //ahara//, nutriment.

22. On the four //yoni// or modes of generation, see M.12/i, 73.

23. According to the Abhidhamma, the nutriment proper is the material phenomenon called nutritive essence (//oja//), while the solid food ingested is the mere "basis" (//vatthu//) of the nutritive essence.

24. The point is that while in conventional terms food substances are distinguished as gross or subtle, this distinction is made in terms of the physical base only. The Abhidhamma classifies nutritive essence as subtle materiality (//sukhumarupa//); it contrasts with gross materiality (//olarikarupa//), which includes only the five sense organs and their objects.

25. This is the highest realm among the sense-sphere heavens. Above this come the Brahma realms, where physical nutriment is non-existent.

26. This is the simplest kind of material group (//rupakalapa//) recognized by the Abhidhamma theory of matter. It consists of the four primary elements, along with color, smell, taste, and nutritive essence. All the more complex material groups also contain these eight phenomena as their foundation. Material groups in a living organism require an input of nutriment in order to endure in continuity.

27. Conascence condition (//sahajatapaccaya//) is the condition whereby the conditioning state contributes to the arising or maintenance of another state, the conditionally arisen state, when the latter arises simultaneously with itself. Consciousness is a conascence condition for the three other mental aggregates -- feeling, perception and mental formations -- both at rebirth and during the course of life. At rebirth it is also a conascence condition for the "triple continuity," i.e. the three material decads of body-sensitivity, sexual determination and the heart-base. Each of these consists of the above-mentioned eight material units along with physical life and, as the tenth factor, the material phenomenon after which it is named.

28. Kammically acquired materiality (//upadinnarupa//) is matter that is born of kamma. It includes the physical sense faculties, the life faculty, masculinity, femininity, and the coexisting material phenomena in the same group. Though such types of matter are produced by kamma rather than by nutriment, they require nutriment to sustain them in continuity.

29. The Lakkhana Samyutta (S.19/ii, 254-62) describes the torments experienced by beings in the realm of the petas or "afflicted spirits."

30. These similes are taken from the Puttamamsa Sutta, the Discourse on Son's Flesh (S.12:63/ii, 97-100). See Nyanaponika Thera, The Four Nutriments of Life (BPS Wheel No. 104/105, 1967), pp. 19-40, for the sutta along with its commentary.

31. A //yojana// is about seven miles.

32. The cow-observance and the dog-observance are forms of self-mortification which ascetics of the Buddha's time practiced in the hope of purification; see M.57/i, 387. Apparently, women also observed them for short periods in the hope they would make them fertile.

33. The commentary to the Puttamamsa Sutta develops this analogy in greater detail than the present commentary.

34. The sutta elaborates as follows: If the cow stands, the creatures in the air attack it; if it leans against a wall, the creatures in the wall attack it; if it lies down, the creatures in the ground attack it; if it enters a pool of water, the creatures in the water attack it.

35. Contact arises from the coming together of an object, a physical basis or sense faculty (//vatthu//), and the corresponding type of consciousness.

36. The simile as given in the sutta is this: Two strong men grab hold of a weaker man by both arms and drag him towards a blazing charcoal pit. He wriggles and struggles to get free because he knows that if he is thrown into the pit, he will meet death or deadly pain.

37. The king's men arrest a thief and bring him before the king. The king orders him struck with a hundred spears in the morning, another hundred at noon, and a third hundred in the evening. The man survives but experiences deadly pain.

38. See note 27.

39. The eight types of consciousness accompanied by greed are distinguished by the presence or absence of wrong view, by their accompanying feeling which may be pleasant or neutral, and by whether they are spontaneous or prompted.

40. The principle of the Four Noble Truths can be discerned in the format of the exposition: a particular item X, the arising of X, the cessation of X, and the way to the cessation of X.

41. In Pali the repetition //tesam tesam//, lit. "of them, of them," is understood to imply complete inclusiveness. The same applies to //tamhi tamhi//, "in that, in that," just below.

42. Whereas the previous definitions were framed in conventional terminology, those valid in the ultimate sense (//paramatthato//) define their subject solely in terms of "ultimate realities" such as aggregates and sense bases.

43. The various realms of existence are analyzed as threefold on the basis of the number of aggregates existing there. One-constituent being is the non-percipient realm (//asannibhumi//), which includes only the aggregate of material form. Four-constituent being is the four immaterial realms, which contain the four mental aggregates but not the aggregate of material form. Five-constituent being comprises all other realms, in which all five aggregates are present.

44. It seems that in the sense-sphere heavens, at death the beings simply dissipate into thin air, without leaving behind any corpse.

45. Decisive support condition (//upanissayapaccaya//) and conascence condition (//sahajatapaccaya//) are the two chief conditions among the twenty-four conditions of the Patthana or Abhidhammic system of conditional relations. Decisive support holds between a conditioning state and a conditioned state that it helps to arise across an interval of time. Conascence condition holds between a conditioning state and a conditioned state that arise simultaneously. See also note 27 above.

46. Clinging to rituals and observances and clinging to a doctrine of self are both types of wrong view, but as they are enumerated as individual kinds of clinging in their own right, they are not included under clinging to views.

47. See above, note 32.

48. These are conditional relations that hold between successive mind-moments in the javana phase of a single cognitive process (//cittavithi//).

49. Resultant feeling alone is intended here because this is an exposition of the round of existence, and in the formula of dependent arising the factors from consciousness through feeling are classified as the resultant phase of the round.

50. The two eye-consciousness elements are the wholesome-resultant and the unwholesome-resultant; the two resultant mind elements are the wholesome-resultant and the unwholesome-resultant receiving consciousness (//sampaticchanacitta//); the three resultant mind-consciousness elements are three types of investigating consciousness (//santiranacitta//).

51. The registration consciousness (//tadarammanacitta//) is a resultant type of consciousness that occurs through any of the sense doors. Its function is to register the datum that had been the object of the preceding javana series. The rebirth, life-continuum (//bhavanga//) and death consciousnesses are resultants that are considered to be "doorless" (//advarika//) because they occur at an inner subliminal level, not through the intercourse of sense organs and sense objects.

52. This refers to the Abhidhamma classification of thirty-two types of resultant consciousness, of which twenty-two remain besides the ten types of sense-consciousness, five resultants of the unwholesome and five of the wholesome. The details are not necessary here.

53. These two definitions involve word plays difficult to reproduce in English. Ven. Nanamoli has a note suggesting, half flippantly, "minding" for namana and "mattering" for ruppana.

54. In fact the Visuddhimagga discusses the four great elements not in its chapter on the Description of the Aggregates (Ch. XIV), but in the chapter on the meditation subject called the definition of the elements (Ch. XI).

55. Some instances of derived materiality are: the five sense faculties, color, sound, smell, taste, the life faculty, sexual determination, nutritive essence, space, etc.

56. The three planes of existence were enumerated in Section 30. Only resultant consciousness is taken into account here because this is an exposition of the round.

57. The figures for the types of consciousness again come from the Abhidhamma. These types of consciousness can come to expression either through the door of bodily action or the door of speech, or they can remain within and not gain outer expression.

58. The nine types of volition which do not come to expression by body or speech are the five volitions of the five fine-material-sphere jhanas and the four of the four immaterial-sphere jhanas.

59. Elsewhere the Buddha says: "A first point of ignorance cannot be discovered, of which it can be said: Before that there was no ignorance and it came to be after that" (A.10:61/v,113). In that sutta the Buddha cites the five hindrances as the condition for ignorance, but as these in turn presuppose ignorance, the vicious cycle is again established.

60. For the identity of the dissenting Elder, see Section 3 and note 7.

* * * * * * * *

The BPS is an approved charity dedicated to making known the Teaching of the Buddha, which has a vital message for people of all creeds. Founded in 1958, the BPS has published a wide variety of books and booklets covering a great range of topics. Its publications include accurate annotated translations of the Buddha's discourses, standard reference works, as well as original contemporary expositions of Buddhist thought and practice. These works present Buddhism as it truly is -- a dynamic force which has influenced receptive minds for the past 2500 years and is still as relevant today as it was when it first arose. A full list of our publications will be sent upon request with an enclosure of U.S. $1.00 or its equivalent to cover air mail postage.

Write to:

The Hony. Secretary
BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
P.O. Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy Sri Lanka

or

The Barre Center for Buddhist Studies
Lockwood Road
Barre, MA 01005
Tel: (508) 355-2347

* * * * * * * *

DISTRIBUTION AGREEMENT
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

TITLE OF WORK: The Discourse on Right View (The Wheel Publication No. 377/379)
FILENAME: WHEEL377.ZIP
AUTHOR: Bhikkhu Bodhi, ed.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

AUTHOR'S ADDRESS: c/o Buddhist Publication Society
PUBLISHER'S ADDRESS: Buddhist Publication Society
P.O. Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy, Sri Lanka
COPYRIGHT HOLDER: Buddhist Publication Society (1991)
DATE OF PUBLICATION: 1991
RIGHTS AND RESTRICTIONS: See paragraph below.
DATE OF DHARMANET DISTRIBUTION: October 1994
ORIGIN SITE: Access to Insight BBS, Pepperell MA * (508) 433-5847
(DharmaNet 96:903/1)

The copyright holder retains all rights to this work and hereby grants electronic distribution rights to DharmaNet International. This work may be freely copied and redistributed electronically, provided that the file contents (including this Agreement) are not altered in any way and that it is distributed at no cost to the recipient. You may make printed copies of this work for your personal use; further distribution of printed copies requires permission from the copyright holder. If this work is used by a teacher in a class, or is quoted in a review, the publisher shall be notified of such use.

It is the spirit of dana, freely offered generosity, which has kept the entire Buddhist tradition alive for more than 2,500 years. If you find this work of value, please consider sending a donation to the author or publisher, so that these works may continue to be made available. May your generosity contribute to the happiness of all beings everywhere.

DharmaNet International, P.O. Box 4951, Berkeley, CA 94704-4951

[end of file]

Book of Equanimity Case 48

VimalakirtiÕs Nonduality

Master Wong SongÕs Preface to the Assembly

Even if oneÕs subtle function is universal, thereÕs a place where one canÕt even begin to act. Even if oneÕs eloquence is unhindered, thereÕs a time when one canÕt open oneÕs mouth. Longya was like a handless man boxing. Jiashan made a tongueless man able to speak. Who is it who can extricate oneself midway?

The Main Case

Vimalakirti asked Manjushri, ÒWhat is a bodhisattvaÕs method of entering nonduality?ÓManjushri said, ÒAccording to my mind, in all things, no speech, no explanations, no direction, no representation, leaving behind all questions and answers, this is the method of entering nonduality. Then Manjushri asked Vimalakirti, ÒWe have each spoken, now you should say. Good man, what is a bodhisattvaÕs method of entering into nonduality? Vimalakirti was silent.

Master HongzhiÕs Verse

Manjushri inquires after the illness of the old Vaisalian;
The gate of nonduality opens Ñ Behold the adept.
Crude without, pure within Ñ who appreciates it?
Forgetting ÔbeforeÕ and losing Ôafter,Õ donÕt sigh.
Struggling to present the gem Ñ the man with his feet cut off in the garden of Chu:
Repaying with a jewel, shining bright Ñ the cut snake of Sui.
Stop checking Ñ
There are absolutely no flaws:

This past week we looked at home practice and I mentioned to the group that was assembled there that although in the Mahayana tradition there is a strong support of lay practice and that there are indeed lay practitioners or white-robed ones in the history of Mahayana Buddhism, the fact is that until the present day there really has been no lay practice per say. Technically you can say that Layman Pang, and laywoman Pang, and the daughter in the Pang family, three very enlightened lay practitioners of the Tang Dynasty were lay practitioners but in actual fact when you look at the way they lived their lives you would have to say that they were really following a monastic lifestyle. Layman Pang had made a lot of money as a merchant but he reached a point in his practice when he took all of his worldly goods and went and sank them in a big lake. And he and his wife and daughter became wandering mendicants in a sense. They didnÕt beg for their food, they sold straw sandals on the road for their food. They lived in the woods, they had basically renounced worldly affairs. Vimalakirti who, in this koan is one of the most famous of the lay practitioners, is said to have lived at the time of the Buddha. He was a merchant, very involved in worldly affairs, was as enlightened as the Buddha, equivalent to the Buddha and used as an example of lay practice. But we donÕt know anything about how he lived his life. We know his wifeÕs name, and his daughterÕs name, and his sonÕs name. We know how he made his business, but we donÕt know what he did day to day. How he managed to run all his businesses and at the same time come to deep realization equivalent to that of the Buddha. So as an example, itÕs not much of an example. We get his teaching, the teaching of the nondual dharma in this sutra, the Vimalakirti sutra, but none of the details.

There doesnÕt seem to be much of a history of lay practice though we know that it existed at various times in China and Japan and so on. And it seems that probably one of the reasons is that institutions such as monasteries are the places that would maintain historical records and lineages. But so far as we know, no continuous lay lineages have come down though the ages to this time and this place. Whatever happened to Layman Pang, did he have any disciples? Did Vimalakirti have any disciples? Did Laywoman Pang have any disciples? Did Leng Chow, the daughter have any disciples? We donÕt know. We do know that they studied at the monasteries of the time and that they later became wanderers. We know what their teachings were, and they are very fine teachings, no question about it. So in a sense weÕre writing in the latter part of the twentieth century in the West, a history of lay practice. WeÕre putting the chapters in there that have never been put in there, and weÕre writing a few other chapters too.

Mahayana Buddhism has always spoken of the equality of men and women and yet the historical records donÕt show much activity of that equality. There are isolated cases, but definitely no equivalent to the way the Mahayana teachings speak of the equality of men and women. Discrimination exists against women in all of the schools in one way or another. Individual teachers are the exceptions rather than the rule. So again for the first time in the history of Buddhism, it finds itself in a country where that discrimination is illegal. And so the opportunity for the Mahayana teachings of the equality of men and women now has an opportunity to come to fruition. And now for the first time in the Mahayana tradition, half the practitioners are women, in some places more than half. Women teachers are emerging. Again the same is true of social action, although Mahayana Buddhism speaks of compassion and the bodhisattva, very little opportunity existed in the history of Buddhism for that compassionate action. Monasteries were very isolated in China. Emperors were very touchy about what you had to say or how you interfered in the function of state. If the religion proved to be any kind of a threat whatsoever to the nation or the state, monasteries were burned and the monks were beheaded, itÕs as simple as that. Again for the first time in Mahayana Buddhism, it finds itself in nations in the West where religious freedom is an essential guarantee of the State. Separation of Church and State is one of the primary principles in these societies. So social action becomes possible without fear putting an end to the religion.

ItÕs kind of extraordinary, just this setting, right here today, is unprecedented in all of the ancient history of Buddhism, to have a hall filled with lay practitioners listening to a discourse in the context of monastic practice. There were always public talks, but this is different. The lay practitioners are participating fully in every aspect of the training. Dokusan, service, work practice, everything that the monks do, the lay practitioners have an opportunity to do. It makes you wonder why it took so long.

If you really put yourself into the situation as it existed many years ago at the time of the Buddha or in China or in medieval Japan. Leisure time wasnÕt available, people were struggling for a living. If you were a farmer, you and all of your family were constantly tilling the fields, and monasteries and teachers were hundreds and thousands of miles away, deep in the recesses of the mountains. Hard to get to; not so difficult in the 20th century with transportation and communication what it is. Leisure time was something that only emperors and members of the courts had, and they were the lay practitioners. Almost all the lay practitioners in the history of Zen were the high government officials and the emperors, they were the only oneÕs that had the leisure time to do it, but today leisure time is available to people. We have weekends off, we have a couple of weekÕs vacation every year at least. People who are lucky enough to be teaching have two months off each year. This is unprecedented. So this provides for the first time an opportunity to do serious practice and not gain merit just by dana, by giving, but rather by oneÕs own practice. And itÕs for this reason that weÕre put so much emphasis on lay practice here at Zen Mountain Monastery. I am convinced that a strong core, monastery or center, with a teacher representing a lineage, authenticated, can provide a powerful core for a large group of lay practitioners in the world.

The next question is, how do you support them? Obviously the main means of support is communication. Communication of the dharma, of the teachings, of the Buddha, of the Sangha. And so we create Mountain Record, we took advantage of the modern media and communication revolution and use video and audio. We set up systems that provide human contact such as training advisors that coordinate the activities inside and outside of the Monastery. We create lay practice centers and affiliates wherever thereÕs a large enough group of students in one place to support it. And we create a form of teaching that can take place on an individual basis, and thatÕs the Eight Gates of Training. The only thing in the Eight Gates that we havenÕt figured out how to get to you through Dharma Communications is dokusan, the intimacy of the teacherÐstudent relationship. But maybe in the not to distant future, IÕll be able to show up in your living room when you want dokusan. We donÕt have the kind of teaching that some of the traditions have, that the guru is always present. At any time you just summon the guru and the guru is present. We donÕt have gurus, unless itÕs you. Each person is their own guru. The teacher can only point. The teacher can only create complications. The teacher ultimately has nothing to give and ultimately you have nothing to receive. But there is a process, the process of going deep into oneself to find the foundations of what this incredible dharma is about. And so I say again and again, that we should keep in mind as we practice this incredible Way, that what weÕre doing is not only clarifying our own life but creating a precedent, weÕre writing a chapter in the history of this incredible dharma.

In the Preface to the Assembly, Wong Song says, ÒEven if one subtle function is universal, thereÕs a place where one canÕt even begin to act.Ó What heÕs referring to when he says ÒÉsubtle function is universalÉÓ is the totality of human experience, the totality of being, the totality of the universe. In other words heÕs talking about the absolute basis of reality. So even if one has realized the absolute basis of reality, thereÕs a place where one canÕt even begin to act. Having realized that, thereÕs something that is ultimately non-functional. The second line says, ÒEven if oneÕs eloquence is unhindered, thereÕs a time when one canÕt open oneÕs mouth.Ó No matter how eloquent you are, there are things that cannot be spoken of, that cannot be expressed. The Tao that can be expressed in words is not the true Tao. Then he gives examples from other koans and asks the question, ÒWho can extricate oneself midway?Ó How do you extricate yourself from this state? Keep in mind that the Vimalakirti sutra, the thrust of the Vimalakirti sutra is the teaching of the relationship between absolute and relative. The teachings of the nonduality of absolute and relative. And when you speak of the nondual dharma, itÕs speaking of all of the nondualities. So whatever applies to form and emptiness also applies to any other duality. Man and woman, heaven and earth, good and bad, monastery and the world, monk practice and lay practice, sacred and secular. And always teachers have used one to illuminate the other.

So when you point to the absolute, the teacher will point to the relative. When you point to the relative the teacher will point to the absolute. Understand that the truth of this incredible dharma is found in neither.

Here in this koan, Vimalakirti asks Manjushri, ÒWhat is a bodhisattvaÕs method of entering into nonduality?Ó Manjushri is the teacher of the past seven Buddhas, and an extraordinary bodhisattva. And thereÕs an assembly of bodhisattvas at VimalakirtiÕs house. Those of you that have read the sutra are familiar with it. Vimalakirti was ill, and the Buddha called all of his bodhisattvas together and all the arhats and the disciples. Many of these disciples were monks of the old school, of the Hinayana school. This sutra is a Mahayana sutra and itÕs going to show what the shortcomings of the Hinayana practice are. You see all sorts of things happen, like the goddess showers flowers down on the assembly and the flowers all stick to the robes of the Hinayana practitioners and theyÕre freaking out because they are not allowed to adorn themselves, and they start tearing at the flowers to try and take them off. But all the bodhisattvas, the flowers just fall right off, they donÕt stick. So thereÕs a big discourse on what thatÕs all about. In another situation a goddess appears and in the Hinayana teachings, women canÕt become enlightened, they have to be reborn as a man to become enlightened. So hereÕs this enlightened goddess who engages in dharma combat with one of the Hinayana monks who canÕt understand that since sheÕs so enlightened which she proves through this wonderful dharma combat, ÒWhy donÕt you leave your womanÕs body and become a man?Ó And she does a number on him with regard to that. So itÕs a nice teaching this sutra, of those things that I talked about, compassion, of the equality of men and women in the dharma, of lay practice, in the world in the monastery in the mountain. Being codependent realities, mutually interpenetrating, mutually arising and thatÕs the way I hope our practice here at Zen Mountain Monastery will continue to develop between the lay practitioners and the monk practitioners. That there will always be a dynamic and supportive relationship on the part of both parts, because it wonÕt work with either. Both are essential to the dharma staying strong, vital, and touching our lives and everything that we do.

So Vimalakirti was sick at home. Sick because of the sickness of all sentient beings. And heÕs laying in bed and Buddha gets hold of Subhuti and says, ÒWhy donÕt you take a bunch of the monks and go over and visit Vimalakirti.Ó They donÕt want to go because every time they go, Vimalakirti gets them all entangled in dharma combat which they always end up losing. It reminds me of the dialogs with Plato and Aristotle, kind of like a setup for the master to come out on top. And finally the Buddha says, Go, and they go. Tens of hundreds and thousands of arhats and bodhisattvas, goddesses, and gods fill this little room that heÕs in, and of course thereÕs plenty of room for everybody to fit in. ThereÕs a lot of magic in this sutra. If youÕve never heard Robert Thurman speak on it, heÕs a treat to listen to. He gets all excited about it. He starts naming one after another, all these different kinds of beings that are present, and all of the magic. And as he says in his book, the intent of all of this magic is to stretch oneÕs imagination, not to place any limits of the possibilities. From a Zen point of view all of these extraordinary magical things that take place need to be understood, and many of them are what koans are about. So everybody goes there and each chapter deals with a different aspect of the teaching of Vimalakirti. This particular one deals with nonduality. Vimalakirti asks each of the bodhisattvas to present their understanding. So basically what the whole chapter is about is each bodhisattva getting up and saying what the bodhisattvaÕs method of entering nonduality is. Of course every one of them is going off at the mouth. TheyÕre explaining the whole thing, including the great master Manjushri, teacher of the Buddha. So Vimalakirti finally gets to Manjushri and the end of the chapter and says, ÒWhat is a bodhisattvaÕs method of entering nonduality?Ó And Manjushri says, ÒAccording to my mind, in all things ÉÓ you could really nail this line word after word. ÒAccording to my mind, in all things, no speech ÉÓ then shut up, ÒÉno explanationÉÓ stop talking, ÒÉ no direction ÉÓ stop pointing, ÒÉ no presentation, leaving behind all questions and answers, this is the method of entering nonduality.Ó Then Manjushri asked Vimalakirti, ÒWe have each spoken, now you should say. Good man, what is a bodhisattvaÕs method of entry into nonduality?Ó Vimalakirti was silent.

ThereÕs many ways to look at that silence. The same koan appears in the Blue Cliff Record. In there, Setcho includes the same wording up to the question of Manjushri, ÒTell us what is a bodhisattvaÕs method of entering into nonduality.Ó He doesnÕt say that Vimalakirti was silent. He says, ÒWhat did Vimalakirti say?Ó And then he also says, ÒSeen through.Ó Indeed what did Vimalakirti say. YesterdayÕs talk, Lu Tzu Faces the Wall, what did Lu Tzu say? The Buddha teaches the outsider, the Buddha remained seated, what did the Buddha say?

In the footnotes to this koan, what he says, he quotes, ÒManjushri, now you should say, good man, what is a bodhisattvas method of entry into nonduality?Ó The footnote to that says, ÒOnce heÕs surrounded and divested or everything ÉÓ keep in mind all of this dialog of thirty two bodhisattvas, each one presenting entry of the nondual dharma. So heÕs surrounded and divested of everything, theyÕve mentioned everything. So once heÕs surrounded and divested of everything they donÕt count on a violent outburst. Was the violent outburst VimalakirtiÕs silence? Thunder filled the whole universe, waves washed the heavens.

The name Vimalakirti means untainted name or pure name. His wifeÕs name was Golden Woman. His sonÕs name was Good Thought, his daughterÕs name was Moonlike Beauty.

A monk once asked an old master, ÒVimalakirti was the golden-grained Buddha.Ó This was one of the ways that they referred to him. Why did he listen to the teachings of the assembly of Shakyamuni Buddha. ÒWhy did he even bother with listening to these bodhisattvas present their understanding?Ó And the master said, ÒHe didnÕt make a contest between others and self.Ó He didnÕt put himself above them, he didnÕt separate himself. He made himself part of that group. And through the entire dialog he remained seated and he listened. And then when they asked him for his presentation, he remained silent, he continued to remain silent. Another master said, ÒManjushriÕs applauding in this way, still is casting a divining ladle. Listening to the empty sound, Vimalakirti remained silent. DonÕt you folks go drilling tortoiseshells or striking tiles.Ó In other words, donÕt go to sorcery to try and figure this one out. Before the I-Ching they used to use a tortoise shell to divine the Book of Changes. They would heat it and it would crack, and theyÕd study the cracks and lay the yarrow stalks. Now computers are used. Another master said, ÒVimalakirti was not silent, did not pause. Argument that he remained seated turned out to be wrong.Ó All the things they said turned out to be not true. One of the problems about this silence, is that it becomes a nest, and Zen students like everybody else like to make little nests. So inevitably students will present silence and inevitably the teacher will chase them out. Just like the goddess wouldnÕt accept silence from Shariputra. When she pressed him on the point of the absolute, he remained silent. She said, donÕt give me that! So why was ShariputraÕs silence unacceptable and VimalakirtiÕs, everyone though it was wonderful? WhatÕs the difference?

Wong Song has a little thing in here. He says, ÒEven now, in various places when they see this matter brought up, they still say, ÔRemaining silent for a while (so-and-so) said.ÕÓ And then he says, ÒA monk once asked a teacher, ÔIn the records it often says liang jiu,Ó which is the word for silent. ÒÔliang jiu for a good while,Õ who is liang jiu?Ó The teacher said, ÒThe younger brother of Liang Ba .Ó This is told as a joke. Wong Song goes on to say. ÒThe last two lines are the most outstanding.Ó And then I go to the references to find out whatÕs happening. When you label it as a joke, somethingÕs wrong. Cleary tries this explanation. Scholars are not great joke tellers, particularly when you have to translate it from ancient Chinese into modern English. He gets kind of hung up. But what itÕs basically about is that Liang jiu, jiu is also the word that means nine, it sounds exactly like the word that means nine, the number nine. And Ba is the sound for the number eight. So when somebody asks the teacher, ÒWhatÕs liang jiu?Ó meaning whatÕs silence? The teacher took it as whatÕs liang nine, and he said the elder brother of liang eight. And I wondered how I could say this to make it understandable to you. And the word silence. What is silence? the student asked the teacher. The teacher answers, ÒSi-lence is Jo-lenceÕ mute brother.Ó I thought it was great. After a week of sesshin, thatÕs a riot. Thank you, thank you.

In the verse on another koan in the Book of Equanimity, the one of Mazu, when Mazu said, ÒBrother YakujoÕs head is white, and the other brotherÕs head is black.Ó In the verse to that koan, Hongzhi says, ÒGrandly sitting, cutting off the road of the tongue, what a laugh the old awl of Vaisali.Ó And thatÕs of course Vimalakirti. And the verse this time, he says,

Manjushri inquires after the illness of the old Vaisalian;
The gate of nonduality opens Ñ behold the adept.
Crude without, pure within Ñ who appreciates it?
Forgetting ÔbeforeÕ and losing Ôafter,Õ donÕt sigh.
Struggling to present the gem Ñ the man with his feet cut off in the garden of Chu:
Repaying with a jewel, shining bright Ñ the cut snake of Sui.
Stop checking Ñ
There are absolutely no flaws.

One of the remarkable things about the dharma to me is that, ancient Chinese culture and twentieth century American culture are on two opposite sides of the poles. There are ways of expressing things, their poetry, their stories, what they thought was funny, what they thought was great, what they thought was heroic, the examples using warriors and generals and so on, are very different to what the American practitioner, or the Western practitioner in the twentieth century is in to. Yet the dharma, the teaching thatÕs hidden in there, if you can get beyond the surface, get beyond the metaphors, get to the heart of it, that dharma is very applicable to everything that we do. It will take a hundred years at least before it begins to manifest itself in a Western form. So one of the things that IÕve also found, is that if youÕre working with the Book of Equanimity, the verse, which was written by Hongzhi, and Hongzhi was the one that collected the Main Case, and Hongzhi was several generations before Wong Song who put these all together and added commentaries to it. If you want to get what Hongzhi was talking about, check out the verse before, itÕs the only statement he makes about the koan. And Hongzhi is the same person that wrote Cultivating the Empty Field. He was considered one of the finest of the Sung Dynasty poets and a great Zen master. In this verse he says,

Manjushri inquires after the illness of the old Vaisalian;
that is Vimalakirti,
The gate of nonduality opens Ñ Behold the adept.Ó
And of course again, itÕs extolling the virtues of Vimalakirti.
Crude without, pure within Ñ who appreciates it?

He uses an example of this silence of Vimalakirti as being equivalent to in the sutra, he says, ÒShakyamuni closed his room, Vimalakirti shut his mouth. Subhuti extolled speechlessness to reveal the Way. Indra and Brahma beyond hearing showered flowers. These are all because the truth is mastered by spiritual knowledge so the mouth is thereby silent. How could you say they had no eloquence?Ó It is what eloquence cannot speak of. ThatÕs what I spoke a lot of yesterday. That thereÕs direct immediate seeing, experiencing. ThatÕs what itÕs about. ThatÕs what heÕs calling spiritual knowledge, thatÕs what this practice is about. ThatÕs what you get to in your own zazen. And then there is speaking of it.

Now speaking of it can be useful. The Buddha spoke of it, hundreds of masters spoke of it. Today in this hall we speak of it. But those are still, nonetheless, words and ideas that describe the reality. ItÕs the reality itself that needs to be realized. We use all kinds of skilful techniques, everything that we do is skillful means, bar none, including zazen. And the whole point of those skillful means is oneÕs own direct realization of the truth. It can happen any time, any place. Something comes along and opens that door for you. ItÕs different for different people. But always zazen is somewhere at the root of it.

He speaks of a gem, a semi-precious stone, and inside that stone, thereÕs a story in one of these ancient-Chinese things, that thereÕs a semi-precious stone which doesnÕt seem like itÕs very important. When you cut it open, inside it is the real gem. And this is being made an equivalent of Vimalakirti, who outwardly seems dumb, and his speechlessness makes it seem that way, he doesnÕt say anything. But that itÕs pure and genuine within. The stone conceals the jewel.

Crude without, pure within Ñ who appreciates it?
Forgetting ÔbeforeÕ and ÔlosingÕ after, donÕt sigh.
This is another thing from the collections on meditation where the master says, ÒNow when I speak of knowing, you neednÕt know knowing, just know Ñ thatÕs all. Then before you donÕt continue extinction, and after you donÕt bring on production. The continuity of before and after broken, in between is solitary and alone.Ó

In the sutra of the third patriarch, he talks about it again and again and again, how the truth is to be found outside of the words and ideas that describe it. And in the end he talks about, Òthat the way of words and speech finally comes to an end,Ó because the way is beyond these things. ItÕs not the past, itÕs not future, itÕs not the present.

Struggling to present the gem Ñ the man with his feet cut off in the garden of Chu:

This is such an awful example. This is the story about this guy who comes to the emperor with a gem, and the emperor looks at the gem and says, ÒThatÕs not a gem, thatÕs an ordinary stone.Ó This is the stone that has the gem inside it. ÒItÕs an ordinary stone, cut his leg off.Ó So they cut one of his feet off. Then that emperor ends his term and a new emperor comes and the guy comes running back again with the stone. The emperor looks at the stone and says, ÒThatÕs a stone not a gem, cut his other foot off.Ó So this is the guy with two feet cut off, who finally comes to the third emperor. This third emperor summons him and asks him about it, and he said, ÒI do not resent the amputation of my feet, I do resent that the real jewel is taken to be an ordinary stone. That an act of loyalty is taken to be deception.Ó The king had the stone split and found it was the real jewel. The king grieved and said, ÒHow lamentable that two former sovereigns found it easy to cut off a manÕs feet but found it hard to split a stone. Now it actually turns out to be a gem and a treasure for a nation.Ó There might be nicer ways of presenting the gem that Vimalakirti was, in that outwardly he was very ordinary, and inwardly he was the embodiment of nonduality of the teachings.

ItÕs the same with repaying with a jewel shining bright, the cut snake of Sui. The cut snake of Sui is not so bad. ItÕs the story about this guy whoÕs walking along and he sees this snake, with a piece of it cut off. So he goes over to the snake and puts a little water on him and tries to heal him and then weeks later heÕs at his house and thereÕs a big flash of lightning, and thereÕs the snake holding a gem in his mouth. ItÕs a reward. These are all Tung Dynasty fairy tales that are worked into these koans and used in the verses. Of course if you were living at that time all of this would make immediate sense to you and youÕd get it. But for us it seems a little out of the way and it needs explanations.

Stop checking Ñ There are absolutely no flaws:
I donÕt know if that needs any interpretation. There are absolutely no flaws. Stop checking, because it is inherently complete of itself. You are inherently complete of yourself. There are absolutely no flaws. Wong Song says, ÒGo ahead, point one out.Ó No flaws means there is a continuum. No gaps, no breaks. In birth nothing is added. In death nothing is lost. When the universe is destroyed, it is not destroyed. What is that? The absolute basis of reality? Emptiness? Well form is emptiness, and emptiness is form. Form is exactly emptiness, and emptiness exactly form. ThatÕs what the Heart Sutra tells us. ThatÕs what the Identity of Absolute and Relative tells us, just the title tells us. ThatÕs what Mahayana Buddhism tells us. ThatÕs what Vimalakirti has told us. ThatÕs what tens of thousands of koans and masters have told us. So what is it that is not destroyed when the universe is destroyed? What is it, that is neither born nor extinguished? ThatÕs what Vimalakirti is trying to show here. Not just in this one thing but throughout the whole sutra. The message of Vimalakirti is the relationship between form and emptiness. Nonduality is about the interpenetration of dualities. The mutual causalities of dualities, the codependence of dualities. ThatÕs what our practice is about, whether youÕre a monk or a lay practitioner. Each of us depend on the other. Whether youÕre a man or a woman, each of us depend on the other. Whether youÕre in the world or on the mountain, each of us depend on the other. And where it all comes home is on that pillow. And the process that brings it home is zazen.

Preface

This book is an attempt to give an organized, detailed account of the Patimokkha training rules and the traditions that have grown up around them, so that anyone whose life is affected by the rules--either a bhikkhu who lives by them, or a lay person who has dealings with the bhikkhus--will be able to find, gathered in one convenient volume, as much essential information as possible on just what the rules do and do not entail. Scholars interested in Early Buddhism or contemporary Theravada should also find the book interesting, as should anyone who is interested in the practice of the Dhamma and who is curious to see how the Buddha worked out the ramifications of Dhamma practice in daily life.

The amount of information offered here is both the book's strength and its weakness. On the one hand, it encompasses material that has in some cases been unavailable in English or even in romanized Pali, and should be sufficient to serve as a life-long companion to any bhikkhu who seriously wants to benefit from the precise and thorough training the rules have to offer. On the other hand, the sheer size of the book and the mass of details to be remembered might prove daunt-ing or discouraging to anyone just embarking on the bhikkhu's life.

To overcome this drawback, I have tried to organize the material in as clear-cut a manner as possible. In particular, by analyzing each rule into its component factors, I have tried to show not only the rule's precise range, but also how it connects to the general pattern of mindfully analyzing one's own actions in terms of such factors as intention, perception, object, effort and result--a system that plays an important role in the training of the mind.

Secondly, I have provided short summaries for the rules, and have gathered them, organized by topic, in the Rule Index at the back of the book. If you are new to the subject of Buddhist monastic disci-pline, I suggest that you read the Rule Index first, to grasp the gist of the rules and their relationship to the Buddhist path, before going on to the more detailed discussions in the body of the book.

I am indebted to the many people who helped directly and indirectly in the writing of this book. Phra Ajaan Fuang Jotiko (Phra Khru Nanavisitth) and Phra Ajaan Thawng Candasiri (Phra Nanavisitth), my first teachers in Vinaya, gave me a thorough ground-ing in the subject. Ven. Brahmavamso Bhikkhu gave many hours of his time to playing Devil's advocate during the long period of research that led up to the book, forcing me to deepen my knowledge and sharpen my interpretations. Ven. Phra Nanavarodom, Bhikkhu Bodhi, Amaro Bhikkhu, Bill Weir and Doris Weir all read copies of the manu-script and offered valuable suggestions for improvement. I, of course, remain responsible for any errors it may still contain.

Although this book was many years in the research and writing, the decision to print it was given at short notice, and I had to prepare the final manuscript under severe time constraints. Thus there are bound to be editorial errors that have escaped my attention, for which I ask your indulgence. If you find any errors of substance or unclear explanations, please let me know.

I dedicate this book in gratitude and respect to my preceptor, Phra Debmoli (Samrong Gunavuddho), and to all my teachers in the path of the Dhamma-Vinaya.

Thanissaro Bhikkhu

(Geoffrey DeGraff)

Metta Forest Monastery

Valley Center, CA 92082-1409

U.S.A.

Abbreviations

A	Anguttara Nikaya
As	Adhikarana-samatha
Ay	Aniyata
BD	Book of Discipline
Cv	Cullavagga
D	Digha Nikaya
Dhp	Dhammapada
M	Majjhima Nikaya
Mv	Mahavagga
NP	Nissaggiya Pacittiya
Pc	Pacittiya
Pd	Patidesaniya
Pr	Parajika
Pv	Parivara

S Samyutta Nikaya

Sg Sanghadisesa

Vism Visuddhi Magga

Contents

Preface / i

Abbreviations / iii

Introduction: dhamma-vinaya / 1

chapter 1: patimokkha / 16

chapter 2: nissaya / 24

chapter 3: disrobing / 36

chapter 4: parajika / 38

chapter 5: sanghadisesa / 72

chapter 6: aniyata / 132

chapter 7: nissaggiya pacittiya / 137

One: The Robe-cloth Chapter / 137

Two: The Silk Chapter / 176

Three: The Bowl Chapter / 198

chapter 8: pacittiya / 225

One: The Lie Chapter / 225

Two: The Living Plant Chapter / 256

Three: The Exhortation Chapter / 279

Four: The Food Chapter / 294

Five: The Naked Ascetic Chapter / 333

Six: The Alcoholic Drink Chapter / 352

Seven: The Animal Chapter / 369

Eight: The In-accordance-with-the-Rule Chapter / 389

Nine: The Treasure Chapter / 406

chapter 9: patidesaniya / 424

chapter 10: sekhiya / 432

One: Proper Behavior / 432

Two: Food / 437

Three: Teaching Dhamma / 446

Four: Miscellaneous / 449

chapter 11: adhikarana-samatha / 452

chapter 12: appendices / 466

I. Controversial points: Dawn / 466

II. Controversial points: Sugata measures / 468

III. Controversial points: Meals / 469

IV. Pali formulae: Determination / 472

V. Pali formulae: Shared ownership / 473

VI. Pali formulae: Forfeiture / 475

VII. Pali formulae: Confession/ 481

VIII. The pupil's duties as attendant to his mentor / 483

Rule Index / 489

Bibliography / 503

"Now, Ananda, if the thought occurs to any of you--'The teaching has lost its authority; we are without a Teacher'--it should not be viewed in that way. Whatever Dhamma and Vinaya I have pointed out and formulated for you, that will be your Teacher when I am gone."

--D. 16

The Buddhist Monastic Code

The Patimokkha Training Rules

Translated and Explained

by Thanissaro Bhikkhu

(Geoffrey DeGraff)

The Buddhist Monastic Code Thanissaro Bhikkhu

CHAPTER EIGHT

Pacittiya

As explained in the preceding chapter, this term is most probably related to the verb pacinati, "to know", and means "to be made known" or "to be confessed". There are 92 rules in this category, divided into eight chapters of ten each, and one of twelve.

One: The Lie Chapter

1. A deliberate lie is to be confessed.

"Now at that time Hatthaka the Sakyan had been overthrown in debate. In discussions with adherents of other sects, he acknow-ledged points after having denied them, denied points after having acknowledged them, evaded one question with another, told deliberate lies, made an appointment (for a debate) but then didn't keep it. The adherents of other sects were offended and annoyed and spread it about...

"The bhikkhus heard them...and having approached Hatthaka the Sakyan, asked him: 'Is it true, Hatthaka, that in discussions with adherents of other sects, you acknowledged points after having denied them, denied points after having acknowledged them, evaded one question with another, told deliberate lies, made an appointment (for a debate) but then didn't keep it?'

'"Those adherents of other sects have to be beaten in some way or another. You can't just give them the victory!'"

A deliberate lie is a statement or gesture made with the purpose of misrepresenting the truth to someone else. According to the

K/Commentary, a violation of this rule requires two factors:

(1) Intention: the intention to misrepresent the truth; and

(2) Effort: the effort to make another individual know whatever one wants to communicate based on that intent.

Intention. The desire to misrepresent the truth fulfills this factor regardless of what one's motives are. Thus "white lies", lies made with benevolent intentions (e.g., to a person whose state of mind is too weak to take the truth) and outrageous lies meant as jokes--to amuse rather than deceive--would all fall under this rule.

For this reason, a bhikkhu who wants to shield an emotionally weak person from harsh truths has to be very skillful in phrasing his statements. And any bhikkhu with an active sense of humor should be careful how he expresses it, bearing in mind the passage from the suttas (M.61) where the Buddha shows an empty water dipper to Rahula, his son, telling him that anyone who feels no shame at utter-ing a deliberate lie is as empty of the virtues of a contemplative as the dipper is empty of water, and then advises him to train himself: "I will not utter a deliberate lie, even for a laugh."

Effort. According to the Vibhanga, to misrepresent the truth means to say that one has seen X when one hasn't; that one hasn't seen X when one has, or that one has seen X clearly when one is in doubt about the matter. This pattern holds for the other senses--hearing, smell, taste, touch and ideation--as well. Thus to repeat what one has heard, seen, etc., even if it actually is misinformation, does not count as a misrepresentation of the truth under this rule, since one is truthfully reporting what one has seen, etc. If, however, one says that one believes in such misinformation when one actually doesn't would count as a misrepresentation of the truth, and so would fulfill this factor.

According to the Commentary, effort here covers falsehoods con-veyed not only by speech, but also by writing or gesture, as well as the act of remaining silent in situations where silence would convey a false message (as during the recitation of the Patimokkha, where silence on the part of the listener indicates that he has no unconfessed offenses).

Result is not a factor here. Thus whether or not anyone understands the lie or is deceived by it, is of no consequence.

In cases where a particular lie would fall under another rule--such as Parajika 4, Sanghadisesa 8 or 9, Pacittiya 13, 24 or 76--the penalties assigned by that rule take precedence over the ones assigned here. For instance, making a false claim to a superior human state and not being understood would incur a thullaccaya under Parajika 4; falsely accusing another bhikkhu of a parajika offense would incur a sanghadisesa under Sanghadisesa 8; falsely accusing him of a sangha-disesa would incur a pacittiya under Pacittiya 76; and falsely accusing him of a lesser offense would incur a dukkata under that rule.

The Vinaya Mukha argues that this rule should take precedence in cases where a particular lie would incur only a dukkata under any of the other rules--as in the last example--but this contradicts the Vibhanga.

Non-offenses. A bhikkhu who misrepresents the truth uninten-tionally incurs no offense under this rule. The Vibhanga gives two examples--speaking quickly and saying one thing while meaning another--and the Commentary explains them as follows: Speaking quickly means speaking before one has carefully considered the matter. Saying one thing while meaning another means making a slip of the tongue, either out of stupidity or carelessness. And, as we noted above, a bhikkhu who speaks from mistaken assumptions--truthfully reporting any mistaken information he may have received or mistaken beliefs he may have thought up--does not come under this rule.

Broken promises. The Mahavagga (III.14.1-14) imposes a dukkata on the act of making a promise with pure intentions but later breaking it. Since the texts make no mention of any circumstances beyond one's control which would exempt one from that penalty, a bhikkhu should be very careful of how he states his plans for the future. A special instance of breaking a promise--accepting an invitation to a meal but then not going--is treated under Pacittiya 33.

Summary: The intentional effort to misrepresent the truth to another individual is a pacittiya offense..

***

2. An insult is to be confessed.

An insult is a gesture or statement, written or spoken, made with the malicious intent of hurting another person's feelings or of bring-ing him/her into disgrace. The Vibhanga analyzes the full offense under this rule in terms of three factors:

1) Effort--One insults a person directly to his face, touching on any one of the 10 topics for abuse (akkosa-vatthu) discussed below.

2) Object--The person is a bhikkhu.

3) Intention--One wants to humiliate him for malicious reasons.

Effort. The Vibhanga lists ten ways a verbal insult can be phrased: making remarks about the other person's race, class or nationality (You nigger! You bum! You Jew!); name (You really are a Dick!);

family or lineage (You bastard! You son of a bitch!); occupation (You pimp! You capitalist pig!);

craft (What would one expect out of a basket weaver like you?);

disease or handicap (Hey, Clubfoot! Spastic!); physical characteristics (Hey, Fatty! Beanpole! Shrimp! Hulk!); passions (How can a temperamental person like you expect to meditate?);

offenses or attainments (I bet you masturbate with that hand):
or

using an abusive form of address, such as, "You camel! You goat! You ass! You penis! You vagina!" () (All five of these come from the Vibhanga.)

These ten topics are called the akkosa vatthu--topics for abuse--and appear in the following training rule as well.

As the examples in the Vibhanga show, the remark that fulfills the factor of effort here must touch on one of these topics for abuse, and must be made directly to the listener: "You are X." It may be phrased either as sarcastic praise or as out-and-out abuse. The Commentary and Sub-commentary say that any insulting remark that is not listed in the Vibhanga would only be grounds for a dukkata, but the Vibhanga defines the topics for abuse in such a way that any term related to them in any way would fulfill this factor here.

Remarks made in an indirect or insinuating manner, though, would not fulfill this factor. Indirect remarks are when the speaker includes himself together with the target of his insult in his statement ("We're all a bunch of fools.") Insinuating remarks are when he leaves in uncertain as to whom he is referring to ("There are camels among us"). Any remark of this sort, if meant as an insult, incurs a dukkata regardless of whether the target is a bhikkhu or not.

All of the insults mentioned in the Vibhanga take the form of remarks about the person, whereas insults and verbal abuse at present often take the form of command--Go to hell! F-- off! etc.--and the question is whether or not these too would be covered by this rule. Viewed from the standpoint of intent, they fit under the general definition of an insult; but if for some reason they would not fit under this rule, they would in most cases be covered by Pacittiya 54.

Insulting remarks made about someone behind his/her back are dealt with under Pacittiya 13.

Object. This factor is fulfilled for the full offense only if the target of one's insult is a bhikkhu. To insult an unordained person--according to the Commentary, this runs the gamut from bhikkhunis to all other living beings--incurs a dukkata.

Intent. The Vibhanga defines this factor as "desiring to jeer at, desiring to scoff at, desiring to shame." If, with no insult intended, a bhikkhu jokes about another person's race, etc., he incurs a dub-bhasita, regardless of whether the person is lay or ordained, mentioned outright or insinuatingly, and regardless of whether he/she takes it as a joke or an insult. This is the only instance of this class of offense.

The K/Commentary adds result as a fourth factor--the target of one's insult knows, "He is insulting me"--but there is no basis for this in either the Vibhanga or the Commentary. If one makes an insulting remark under one's breath, not intending to be heard, or in a foreign language, not intending to be understood, the intention would be to let off steam, which would not qualify as the intention covered by this rule. If one truly wants to humiliate someone, one will make the necessary effort to make that person hear and understand one's words--but if for some reason that person doesn't hear or understand (a loud noise blots out one's words, one uses a slang term that is new to one's listener), there is nothing in the Vibhanga to indicate that one would escape from the full penalty.

For this reason, whether or not the person addressed actually feels insulted by one's remarks is of no consequence in determining the severity of the offense. If one makes a remark to a fellow bhikkhu, touching on one of the topics for abuse and meaning it as an insult, one incurs a pacittiya even if he takes it as a joke. If one means the remark as a joke, one incurs a dubbhasita even if the other person feels insulted.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, a bhikkhu who mentions another person's race, etc., commits no offense if he is "aiming at Dhamma, aiming at his benefit, aiming at teaching." The Commentary illustrates this with a bhikkhu saying to a member of the untouchable caste: "You are an untouchable. Don't do any evil. Don't be a person born into misfortune and going on to misfortune."

Another example would be of a teacher who uses insulting language to shame a stubborn disciple: This would incur no offense if done without malice, but one should be very sure of the purity of one's motives and of the beneficial effect of one's words before using language of this sort. The Cullavagga (IX.5.2) states that a bhikkhu is fit to reprove another bhikkhu only if he keeps five points in mind: "I will speak at the right time, and not at the wrong time. I will speak about what is factual, and not about what is not factual. I will speak with gentleness, and not with harshness. I will speak about what is connected with the goal, and not about what is not connected with the goal. And I will speak with thoughts of kindness, and not with inner hatred."

Summary: An insult made with malicious intent to another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense.

***

3. Malicious tale-bearing among bhikkhus is to be confessed

Malicious tale-bearing is described in the Vibhanga as follows: X makes remarks about Y touching on his race, name, or any of the other ten akkosa vatthu listed in the explanation to the preceding rule. Z, hearing these remarks, goes to tell someone else--either W or Y himself--in hopes of causing a rift between X and his listener, or of winning favor with his listener in case there is already a rift between the two. For example:

a) X calls Y a bastard behind his back. Z tells Y, in hopes of ingratiating himself with Y.

b) X makes racist remarks about Y to his face. Z knows that W is a friend of Y and hates racists, and so tells W what X said, in hopes of causing a rift between W and X.

Bhikkhu Z incurs the full offense here when three factor are fulfilled: object, intent and effort.

Object: Both Z's listener and X are bhikkhus; X has made remarks about Y that qualify as a direct insult under the preceding rule (or, if he didn't make them in Y's presence, remarks that would have qualified as a direct insult had he done so).

Effort: Z reports X's remarks to his listener verbally or by gesture (as in writing a letter),

Intent: with the intent of ingratiating himself with his listener, or to cause a rift between his listener and X.

The K/Commentary adds a fourth factor--Z's listener understands what he is saying--but as with the previous rule, there is no basis for this in the Vibhanga.

Object. If either X or Z's listener--or both--are not bhikkhus, then the penalty for Z is a dukkata.

If X's remarks qualified only as an indirect insult under the preced-ing rule--e.g., he said with reference to Y that, "There are asses among us"--then Z incurs a dukkata if he reports them with the intent to ingratiate himself or cause a rift, regardless of whether his listener and/or X are bhikkhus or not.

The Sub-commentary states that there is a dukkata for bearing tales dealing with matters other than remarks about the ten akkosa vatthu--i.e., telling Y about things said or done by X, to make X appear in a bad light,in hopes of winning favor or causing a rift, although some cases of this sort would come under Pacittiya 13.

Effort. This rule is sometimes translated as dealing with slander--false tale-bearing--but as the examples in the Vibhanga show, it actually deals with true tale-bearing: X really does say insulting things about Y, and Z gives a true report. The Vinaya Mukha comments that if Z engages in false tale-bearing, then regardless of whether or not X and Z's listener are bhikkhus, the penalty for Z is a pacittiya in accordance with Pacittiya 1.

Intent. To give a true report of such matters with motives other than those of winning favor or causing a rift incurs no penalty. Examples of this would include:

informing a senior bhikkhu when one bhikkhu has accused another of a serious offense, so that an inquiry can be made for the sake of harmony in the Community; or telling a senior bhikkhu about a student of his who is making racist remarks, so that the senior bhikkhu can put a stop to it.

Summary: Tale-bearing among bhikkhus, in hopes of winning favor or causing a rift, is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

4. Should any bhikkhu have an unordained person recite Dhamma line by line (with him), it is to be confessed.

This is an offense with two factors:

Effort: One gets a student to recite Dhamma line-by-line with oneself (which, as we shall see below, means to train the student to be a skilled reciter of a Pali Dhamma text).

Object: The student is neither a bhikkhu nor a bhikkhuni.

Only the first factor needs explanation, and is best treated under two headings: Dhamma and reciting line-by-line.

Dhamma the Vibhanga defines as "a saying made by the Buddha, his disciples, seers or heavenly beings, connected with the teaching or connected with the goal." The Commentary devotes a long discussion to these terms, coming to the conclusion that connected with the Dhamma refers to the Pali Canon--in Pali, not in translation--as agreed on in the first three councils, while connected with the goal (attha) refers to the Maha Atthakatha, the most revered ancient commentary (only in its original Pali version, the Sub-commentary says).

The ancient commentaries disagreed as to what other works would fit under this category, but Buddhaghosa's conclusion seems to be that--in the Milinda Panha, for example--Ven. Nagasena's quotes of the Buddha's words would count, but not his own formulations of the teaching, and the same principle holds for other texts that quote the Buddha's words as well. The ancient commentaries are unanimous, though, in saying that "Dhamma" does not cover the Mahayana sutras or compositions (this would include translations) dealing with the Dhamma in languages other than Pali.)

This interpretation, identifying "Dhamma" with particular Pali texts, has caused no controversy in the context of this rule--although it seems unlikely that the compilers of the Vibhanga would have had the commentaries in mind when they said, "connected with the goal"--but it has met with disagreement in the context of Pacittiya 7, and so we will discuss it there in more detail.

Reciting line-by-line. To make someone recite line by line means to train him/her by rote to be a skilled reciter of a text.

Bhikkhus in the days of the Buddha committed the teachings in the Canon to memory so as to preserve them from generation to generation. Although there is evidence to suggest that writing was in use at the time--mainly for keeping accounts--no one used it to record teachings either of the Buddha or of any other religious teacher. The Pali Canon was not written down until approximately 500 years after the Buddha's passing away, when repeated wars in Sri Lanka threatened its survival.

The Vibhanga lists four ways in which a person might be trained to be a reciter of a text:

1) The teacher and student recite in unison, i.e., beginning together and ending together.

2) The teacher begins a line, the student joins in and they end together.

3) The teacher recites the beginning syllable of a line together with the student, who then completes it alone.

4) The teacher recites one line, and the student recites the next line alone.

Reciters of the Vedas still use these methods at present when practicing their texts.

The origin story states that the Buddha forbade these methods of training unordained people because they caused the lay students to feel disrespect for the bhikkhus. The Vinaya Mukha explains this by noting that if a teacher made a slip of the tongue while teaching in this way, his students would look down on him for it. If this were the right explanation, though, the no-offense clauses would have listed "proper" ways of training novices and lay people to recite the Dhamma, but they don't.

A more likely explanation is that at the time of the Buddha the duty of memorizing and reciting the texts was considered the province of the bhikkhus and bhikkhunis. Although some lay people memorized discourses (Mv.III.5.9), and bhikkhus of course taught the Dhamma to lay people, there was apparently the feeling that to teach non-ordainees to become skilled reciters of the texts was not good for the relationship between bhikkhus and laity. There are two possible reasons for this:

1) People may have felt that the bhikkhus were shirking their responsibilities by trying to pass their duty off onto lay people.

2) The Brahmins at the time were very strict in not allowing anyone outside their caste to memorize the Vedas, and their example may have led lay people to feel disrespect for bhikkhus who were not equally protective of their own tradition.

At present, the entire Canon is available in print, and even bhikkhus rarely commit it to memory, although they do frequently memorize parts of it, such as the Patimokkha, the major discourses and other passages chanted on ceremonial occasions. To train a lay person or novice person to become skilled in reciting such teachings by rote would incur a pacittiya.

Perception and intent are not mitigating factors here. Thus a bhikkhu who trains a novice to recite a text in any of the ways mentioned above--on the assumption that the novice is a bhikkhu--incurs a pacittiya all the same. The same holds true for a bhikkhu training a mixed group of bhikkhus and novices, even if his intention is to train just the bhikkhus in the group.

Non-offenses. Since this rule is aimed at methods of teaching, the Vibhanga states that there is no offense "for one made to recite in unison." This, says the Commentary, refers to a young bhikkhu who is told by his teacher to recite together with a novice who is the teacher's student.

Also, there is no offense if a bhikkhu chants a passage in unison with unordained people who have already memorized it. The Commentary extends this allowance to include cases of bhikkhus learning a text from an unordained person, probably on the model of the Itivuttaka which--according to its Commentary--the bhikkhus first learned from a servant woman who had memorized some of the Buddha's teachings that the bhikkhus had overlooked.

Finally, there is no offense if a bhikkhu corrects an unordained person who has memorized most of a passage or who is reciting in a confused manner.

Summary: To train a novice or lay person to recite passages of Dhamma by rote is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

5. Should any bhikkhu lie down in the same lodging with an unordained person for more than two or three consecutive nights, it is to be confessed.

As the Vinaya Mukha comments, "The Buddha originally laid down the rule forbidding the act of sleeping in the same lodging with an unordained person so that lay people would not see the unsightly attitudes a bhikkhu might assume while asleep. But then, when novices come into being, they were classed as unordained people and so had no place to stay. The Buddha therefore relaxed the rule, allowing bhikkhus to sleep in the same lodging with an unordained person no more than three nights running, thus also opening the way for them to sleep in the same lodging with ordinary laymen."

The occasion for the first formulation of the rule was this:

"Now at that time lay men came to the monastery to hear the Dhamma. After the Dhamma had been taught, each of the elder bhikkhus went to his own dwelling, while the newer bhikkhus went to sleep right there in the attendance hall with the laymen--careless, absent-minded, naked, mumbling and snoring. The laymen were annoyed and offended and spread it about, 'How can revered people go to sleep careless, absent-minded, naked, mumbling and snoring?'"

The occasion for the final formulation was this:

"The bhikkhus said to Ven. Rahula (who must have still been a novice at this point), 'There is a training rule laid down by the Blessed One that (a bhikkhu) should not lie down together with an unordained person. Find yourself a place to sleep.' So Ven. Rahula, not being able to find a place to sleep, went to sleep in the out-house. Then the Blessed One, getting up towards the end of the night, went to the outhouse and on arriving cleared his throat. Ven. Rahula cleared his throat.

"'Who's there?'

"'It's me, sir--Rahula.'

"'Why are you lying there?'

"So Ven. Rahula told him what had happened."

There are two factor for the full offense here:

1) Object: An unordained person.

2) Effort: (a) Lying down, (b) in the same lodging with the unordained person, (c) for four nights running.

Object. The Vibhanga defines unordained person as anyone other than a bhikkhu. According to the Commentary, this includes not only human beings, but also any animal large enough to have intercourse with. The Sub-commentary, though, following the Three Ganthipadas, notes that this does not include female human beings, since there is another training rule, following immediately on this one, which deals specifically with them.

Lying down. To be lying down in the same lodging with someone else means to be prone at the same time as the other person is prone within the area defined as the lodging. This factor is fulfilled whether the bhikkhu lies down when the other person is already lying there, or vice versa, or both lie down at the same time. Although there are other training rules where lying down is included under the term sitting, sitting is not included under the term lying down here. Whether or not the bhikkhu or the other person falls asleep is of no account.

Lodging. The Vibhanga defines the lodging that can be grounds for a pacittiya here as a place completely roofed and completely walled, or mostly roofed and mostly walled. A place half-roofed and half-walled, it says, is grounds for a dukkata, while a place (a) fully roofed but with no wall (e.g., an open pavilion), (b) fully walled but with no roof (e.g., a corral), or (c) less than half-roofed and less than half-walled, are all not grounds for an offense.

Buddhaghosa quotes the Maha Atthakatha, the major ancient commentary, as filling in all the other possibilities:

Grounds for a pacittiya: A place fully roofed and mostly walled, fully roofed and half-walled,

mostly roofed and half-walled,

mostly roofed and fully walled, half-roofed and fully walled, or half-roofed and mostly walled.

Grounds for a dukkata: A place fully roofed and less than half-walled, mostly roofed and less than half-walled,

less than half-roofed and fully walled, or less than half-roofed and mostly walled.

Grounds for no offense: A place

half-roofed and less than half walled,

less than half roofed and half-walled, or less than half roofed and less than half walled.

The Commentary notes that tents would fit under the definition of place here, and it would seem that vehicles--caravans in the time of the Buddha; automobiles, trains, buses and airplanes in ours--would fit here as well.

The same lodging. Unfortunately, the Vibhanga does not say how far the boundary of a "single lodging" would extend. For example, would each separate room in a house count as a separate lodging? Would the entire house? Would an entire apartment building be a single lodging? The Commentary tries to remedy this omission by introducing the factor of "having a single common entrance" or "being part of the same enclosure." (The Pali word it uses, ekupacara, has both meanings, and the Commentary makes use of both in its discussion.)

What it says is this: Even a seven-story palace or a building with 100 rooms would count as a single lodging if all the rooms make use of a common entrance. If there are several buildings in a single enclosure, and one can go from one to another without stepping on outside ground, they would count as part of the same lodging. If there is a building divided into units that are not connected by internal doorways, each unit having a separate entrance, the differ-ent units would count as separate lodgings. Locking or closing a door does not close off the doorway. Only if the door-opening is bricked up or otherwise permanently sealed off does it no longer count as a doorway.

The Commentary admits that the "single entrance" factor is not mentioned in the Canon in connection with this rule, and is borrowed from the Vibhanga to NP 2. It argues that this factor is unavoidably bound up in the concept of "walled and roofed", though, and illus-trates its point as follows: There is a two-room dwelling, composed of an antechamber through which one must pass to get to the inner chamber. A bhikkhu is sleeping in the inner chamber, and an unordained person in the antechamber. Now suppose that a stubborn Vinaya student maintains that if the door between the two rooms is closed, the bhikkhu is sleeping in a separate lodging from the unordained person, while if the door is open, they are in the same lodging. His teacher then asks him, "Why are they in the same lodging if the door is open?"

"Because the two rooms share the same roof and walls."

"And if the door is closed, does that destroy the roof and walls they had in common?"

"No, of course not. But the enclosure in which the bhikkhu is sleeping is marked by the door."

This, the Commentary says, shows that the notion of enclosure is part and parcel of the concept of lodging, and that the stubborn student has defeated his own argument. Its reasoning here is probably more convincing in Pali than in English, since as we noted above, Pali uses the same word for enclosure and entrance, but even so the illustration does not carry much force when applied to such places as separate apartments in an apartment building, and so leaves the issue unsettled as far as they are concerned.

The Vinaya Mukha notes that the factor introduced by the Commentary has implications which go far beyond the original purpose of this rule--and of the following rule, in which the concept of "single lodging" is even more important. It suggests borrowing an additional factor from NP 2: the factor of separate residences or zones of ownership (the Pali word kula carries both meanings). Thus in a large building composed of separate residences --such as an apartment building, a hotel or a hospital with private rooms--it suggests that each separate residence count as a separate lodging.

Since the Canon gives no clear guidance on this point, the best policy for an individual bhikkhu is to follow the views of the Community to which he belongs.

Nights here, as in other training rules, are counted by dawns. Thus, if a bhikkhu is sleeping in the same lodging with an unordained person but one of them gets up before dawn, that night does not count. If a bhikkhu has slept in the same lodging with an unordained person for two or three nights running, but then skips a night, the consecutive series is broken. If he then sleeps in the same lodging with an unordained person another night, the counting starts again from one.

However, if he has slept in the same lodging with an unordained person three nights running, then if after sundown on the fourth night he reclines in the same lodging in which a lay person is reclining--even if only for a moment--he incurs a pacittiya.

The Commentary interprets the phrase "after sundown" as meaning any time on the fourth day. In other words, there is no need to wait until the next dawn to count the fourth period of sleeping together. As we noted above in the conclusion to the chapter on the Sanghadi-sesa rules, there was a tendency in the time of the Canon to call a 24-hour period of day and night a "night". Perhaps this period was felt to begin at sundown, just as we now feel that a 24-hour "day" begins at midnight.

The Commentary also states that the unordained person need not be the same person each of the four nights, and the same holds true for the lodging. i.e., if a bhikkhu lies down in a lodging with novice X one night, and then goes elsewhere and lies down in a lodging with layman Y the next night, and so on for four nights running, he commits an offense all the same.

Perception and intent are not mitigating factors here. Thus a bhikkhu lying down in the same lodging with a novice whom he thinks to be another bhikkhu incurs an offense all the same. Similarly with a bhikkhu who miscounts the nights, and lies down in the same room with an unordained person for what he thinks is his third night when it is actually his fourth.

In fact, this is a training rule that one may break without ever realizing it. Suppose a novice comes to lie down in a room where a bhikkhu is sleeping, and then gets up to leave before the bhikkhu awakens. If he does this for four nights running, the bhikkhu incurs a pacittiya even though he may never have been aware of what the novice was doing. Rules like this are the reason why many bhikkhus make a practice of confessing offenses even when they are not consciously aware of having committed them.

Non-offenses. To lie down with an unordained person in a lodging that would qualify as grounds for a pacittiya or a dukkata is no offense as long as one does it no more than three days running. And there is no offense in lying down any number of consecutive nights with an unordained person in a lodging that would not qualify as grounds for an offense.

The Vinaya Mukha comments that although this rule as it presently stands no longer fulfills its original purpose, bhikkhus should keep the original purpose in mind and avoid sleeping in the same place with an unordained person whenever possible. It would also be a wise policy to avoid sleeping out in a public park, on a public beach, in an unwalled pavilion, etc., if full view of the public, even though no offense would be involved.

Summary: Lying down at the same time, in the same lodging, with a novice or layman for more than three nights running is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

6. Should any bhikkhu lie down in the same lodging with a woman, it is to be confessed.

There are only two differences between this rule and the preceding one:

1) The factor of "object" here is fulfilled only by a female human being, "even one born on that day, all the more an older one."

2) Factor (c) under "effort" is dropped, which means that one incurs a pacittiya the instant one lies down in the same lodging with her.

Object. The Vibhanga states that female animals, petas, nagas and devas, as well as pandakas, as defined under Sanghadisesa 2, and female animals are grounds for a dukkata here. The Commen-tary qualifies this by saying that "female animal" means one with which it is possible to have intercourse, and "female petas, nagas and devas" includes only those who make themselves visible.

Even if another man is present in the lodging, it does not negate the offense.

Perception and intent are not mitigating factors here. Thus a bhikkhu who sleeps in the same room with a woman he thinks to be a man--e.g., she has disguised herself--commits the full offense all the same. A bhikkhu lying down in the same lodging with a woman commits an offense regardless or whether or not he realizes that she is there.

The same principles apply to pandakas: A bhikkhu who lies down in the same room with a pandaka whom he thinks to be an ordinary man commits a dukkata; and the same is true for a bhikkhu lying down in a lodging not knowing that a pandaka is also lying down there.

A single lodging is defined as in the preceding rule. Thus a bhikkhu sleeping in the same house as his mother, even if they are in separate rooms and another man is present, commits an offense all the same.

Effort. The main point where this rule differs from the preceding one under the factor of effort is that a bhikkhu incurs a pacittiya the moment he is lying in a lodging at the same time a woman is lying there, with no need to count nights or dawns. This is expressed in the Vibhanga by saying, "If at sunset a bhikkhu is lying when a woman is lying, it is to be confessed."

The Sub-commentary interprets this as meaning that this rule applies only at night, but the no-offense clauses in the Vibhanga give no exemptions for daytime, which suggests that the Sub-commentary's interpretation is invalid. What the Vibhanga's statement means is that there is no need to wait until dawn to count the period of lying down together. As we noted under the preceding rule, there was a tendency in the time of the Canon to call a 24-hour period of day and night a "night", and this period may have been felt to begin at sundown. The Commentary, switching to our current practice of calling a 24-hour period a day, says, "In the previous rule, the offense is on the fourth day. Here it is right from the first day."

Thus, no matter what time of day or night a bhikkhu lies down in the same lodging with a woman, he immediately incurs a pacittiya.

The purposes of this rule. Another difference between this rule and the preceding one is the obvious point that they have different purposes. As the origin story shows, this rule is to prevent situations which might tempt a bhikkhu to commit a serious offense, such as a Parajika 1 or Sanghadisesa 2.

"Then the woman, having prepared a bed inside (her house) for Ven. Anuruddha, having put on her jewelry and scented herself with perfumes, went to him and said, 'Master, you are beautiful, good-looking and charming. I, too, am beautiful, good-looking and charming. It would be good if I were to be your wife.'

"When she said this, Ven. Anuruddha remained silent. So a second time... a third time she said to him, 'Master, you are beautiful, good-looking and charming. I too am beautiful, good-looking and charming. Please take me together with all my wealth.'

"A third time, Ven. Anuruddha remained silent. So the woman, having slipped off her upper cloak, paraded up and down in front of him, stood, sat down, and then lay down right in front of him. But Ven. Anuruddha, keeping control of his faculties, didn't as much as glance at her or say even a word.

"Then it occurred to her: 'Isn't it amazing! Isn't it astounding! Many men send for me at a price of a hundred or even a thousand (a night), but this recluse, even when I myself beg him, doesn't want to take me together with all of my wealth!' So, putting her upper cloak back on, and bowing her head at his feet, she said to him: 'Honored sir, a transgression has overcome me in that I acted in such a foolish, muddle-headed and ill-considered way. Please accept this confession of my transgression as such, so that I may restrain myself in the future.'"

Ven. Anuruddha was very advanced in the practice, and so was able to get through the situation with his mindfulness and precepts intact. Many a lesser bhikkhu, though, would have succumbed right from the woman's first request, and so the Buddha formulated this rule for his protection.

This rule is also meant to prevent situations where suspicious people might think a bhikkhu had committed a serious offense even when he hadn't. Like Caesar's wife, a bhikkhu must not only be pure, he must look pure if he is to uphold the religion and maintain the reputation of the Community. If a bhikkhu and a woman are seen going into a house together in the evening and leaving together the following morning, then even if they slept in separate rooms, suspicious neighbors--and very few neighbors aren't suspicious of bhikkhus--would be quick to jump to conclusions. Thus the wise policy mentioned in the preceding rule applies even more forcefully here: A bhikkhu would be well-advised not to lie down with a woman in such places as parks, beaches or unwalled pavilions even though technically speaking no offense would be involved.

There is some overlap between this rule and Pacittiyas 44 and 45, which deal with a bhikkhu sitting or lying down together in private with a woman (or women). Special cases covered by this rule that are not covered by those would include, for example, a bhikkhu and a woman lying down in separate rooms of the same lodging; a bhikkhu and a woman lying down in the same lodging with another man present. Also, under those rules, the questions of the bhikkhu's state of mind and his awareness of the situation are important factors. Here they are of no consequence: Even a bhikkhu with the purest state of mind--or completely unknowingly--incurs a pacittiya when lying down together with a woman in the same lodging.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in lying down with a woman in a lodging that under the preceding rule would not be grounds for an offense, i.e., fully roofed but with no walls (e.g., an open pavilion)

fully walled but with no roof (e.g., a corral)

half-roofed and half-walled

half-roofed and less than half walled

less than half roofed and half-walled

less than half roofed and less than half walled.

Still, as noted above, a bhikkhu would be well-advised to avoid such situations whenever possible, and to have another man present when not.

Summary: Lying down at the same time in the same lodging with a woman is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

7. Should any bhikkhu teach more than five or six sentences of Dhamma to a woman, unless a knowledgeable man is present, it is to be confessed.

"Then Ven. Udayin, having dressed early in the morning and taking his robe and bowl, went to visit a certain family. At that time the lady of the house was sitting in the main entrance, while the daughter-in-law was sitting in the door to the inner chamber. So Ven. Udayin approached the lady of the house and whispered Dhamma into her ear. The daughter-in-law thought, 'Is this recluse my mother-in-law's lover, or is he being fresh with her?' Then, having whispered Dhamma into the ear of the lady of house, Ven. Udayin went to the daughter-in-law and whispered Dhamma into her ear. The lady of the house thought, 'Is this recluse my daughter-in-law's lover, or is he being fresh with her?' After whispering Dhamma into the daughter-in-law's ear, Ven. Udayin left. So the lady of the house said, 'Hey. What did that recluse say to you?'

"'He taught me Dhamma, ma'am. And what did he say to you?'

"'He taught me Dhamma, too.'

So they were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can Ven. Udayin whisper Dhamma into women's ears? Shouldn't the Dhamma be taught openly and out loud?'"

The two factors for the full offense here are:

1) Object: a female human being who knows what is and is not lewd, and who has not asked one a question about the Dhamma.

2) Effort: One teaches her more than six sentences of Dhamma without a knowledgeable man present--i.e., a male human being who also knows what is and is not lewd.

Object. The word woman covers women as well: If a bhikkhu is with two or more women, but without a knowledgeable man present, he may teach them no more that five or six sentences of Dhamma. Perception is not a factor here: If a bhikkhu teaches Dhamma to a woman he thinks is a man, this factor is fulfilled as well.

According to the Vibhanga, a female peta, deva or animal (probably a naga) in the form of a human woman, are each grounds for a dukkata here.

There is no penalty, though, if the woman asks the bhikkhu a question on the Dhamma and he answers. The Commentary, maintaining that the bhikkhu can give as long an answer as he likes, illustrates this point with an extreme example: If she asks him, "What is this 'Digha Nikaya'?" he may recite the entire text to her without committing an offense. If he can't finish it today, he can return tomorrow and pick up where he left off. Although this is an extreme case, there is nothing in the Canon to suggest that the Commentary is wrong. Thus if a woman asks a question about Dhamma, the bhikkhu may answer with as many sentences of Dhamma as he needs to make his point clear.

This allowance is important in that it honors women in their desire to understand the Dhamma. A wise policy, though, would be to show restraint in such situations. The relationship of male teacher to female student has a long, well-known history of getting out of hand. Even if a bhikkhu is in control of himself in such conversations, passers-by--and the woman herself--can easily misconstrue his words and actions. So, wherever possible, he should go out of his way to guard himself against suspicion and misunderstandings in such cases by having a man present when talking alone with a woman, even though the special exemption is made.

Dhamma the Vibhanga defines in the same terms as under Pacittiya 4: "a saying made by the Buddha, his disciples, seers or heavenly beings, connected with the teaching, connected with the goal."

Precisely what this means is a point of controversy. The Commentary identifies "a saying made by the Buddha, his disciples, seers or heavenly beings" with different parts of the Pali Canon--in Pali--and then treats "connected with the teaching, connected with the goal" as nouns, the first referring to the Canon, and the second to the ancient commentary named the Maha Atthakatha. This last point is highly unlikely, since the Maha Atthakatha did not yet exist when the Canon was being composed.

There are two alternatives to the Commentary's interpretation: One follows the Commentary in treating "connected with the teaching, connected with the goal" as nouns, but interprets them as meaning any statement dealing with the Dhamma, no matter what language it is in, and regardless of whether or not it is quoted from a text. Thus anything a bhikkhu would say about the Dhamma--quoted from the Canon, from a later text, or of his own invention--would count as Dhamma here.

The second interpretation regards "connected with the teaching, connected with the goal" as adjectives modifying "a saying made by the Buddha, his disciples, seers or heavenly beings." This makes more sense in terms of Pali syntax, but limits the meaning of Dhamma in this rule to passages from the Canon. This would not necessarily limit it to passages in the Pali language, though. Translations from the Canon would also come under the rule, since there is a passage in the Cullavagga (V.33.1) where the Buddha allows bhikkhus to learn Dhamma each in his own language, thus showing--contrary to the Commentary--that Dhamma does not have to be in Pali to be Dhamma.

There is nothing in the Canon to decide between these two interpretations, and the question comes down to what one perceives to be the purpose of the rule. Adherents of the first interpretation say that the rule is designed to prevent the sort of suspicions that arise when a bhikkhu is talking at length alone with a woman, but this argument does not fit with the Buddha's allowance for a bhikkhu to teach more than six sentences of Dhamma when a woman asks him for instruction.

It is more likely that the rule is aimed at preventing a bhikkhu from using his knowledge of Dhamma as a come-on, a way of making himself attractive to a woman. As any man who has taught Dhamma has learned, there are women who find such knowledge irresistible. To view the rule in this light makes either of the two interpretations tenable, so the wise policy is to adhere to the interpretation of the Community to which one belongs.

This rule applies to telephone conversations as well as to conversations in person, and--contrary to the Parivara's statement (I.5.7) that this rule deals only with the spoken word--it would seem reasonable to extend it to cover letters as well.

Six sentences. As for the amount of Dhamma a bhikkhu may say to a woman or women without a knowledgeable man present, the Pali word for "sentence", (vaca), can also mean "word", but the Commentary states specifically that one vaca is approximately equal to a line of verse. The Sub-commentary goes on to say that the Commentary's definition here applies to poetry, while one vaca of prose is equal to the conjugation of a verb, i.e., six words. In either case, six vacas would amount to six sentences.

Conversations on other topics. Strangely enough, neither the Vibhanga nor the Commentary makes mention of conversations with women that do not touch on the Dhamma. The Sub-commentary notes this, and in one of its rare stabs at humor concludes, "It is perfectly all right to talk as much as you like about Tamils and that sort of thing."

Conversation that does not deal with the Dhamma, though, is termed "animal talk" (tiracchana-katha) in the Canon, and there are several passages (e.g., Pac. XXI,1; LXXXV.1; Mv.V.6.3-4) that criticize the group-of-six bhikkhus for engaging in animal talk: worldly talk about "kings, robbers and ministers of state (politics); armies, alarms and battles; food and drink; clothing, furniture, garlands and scents; relatives; vehicles; villages, towns, cities, the countryside; women and heroes; the gossip of the street and the well; tales of the dead; also philosophical discussions of the past and future (this is how the Sub-commentary to Pacittiya 85 explains 'tales of diversity'), the creation of the world and of the sea, and talk of whether things exist or not." The Sub-commentary notes, though, that to discuss any of these topics in a way to foster an understanding of the Dhamma--e.g., discuss-ing the impermanence of worldly power--is not considered improper.

Although there is no specific penalty for indulging in such worldly talk, a bhikkhu who indulges in it with lay people, bhikkhus or novices to the point where he becomes offensive to the Community may be subject to an act of censure, banishment or suspension on the grounds of "unbecoming association with householders" or "verbal frivolity". Furthermore, a bhikkhu sitting alone with a woman (or women) engaging in such talk would be subject to the conditions of Pacittiya 44 or 45 and Aniyata 1 or 2.

It is also worth noting in this regard that, unlike Pacittiyas 44 & 45 and Aniyatas 1 & 2, this rule covers situations where either the bhikkhu or the woman, or both, are standing. In other words, if a bhikkhu and a woman are conversing while standing, he may teach her at most six sentences of Dhamma unless she asks him a question on the topic.

Non-offenses. In addition to the exemption mentioned above--that a bhikkhu may teach as many sentences of Dhamma to a woman as he likes in response to a question from her, there is no offense if, after the bhikkhu teaches the woman six sentences of Dhamma, either he or she changes position-- stands up, sits down, etc.--and he continues with six more sentences. This point was most likely included to indicate separate conversations. Once a bhikkhu has taught five or six sentences to a woman, he may teach her again when they meet again, and is not condemned to silence for the rest of his life.

Another exemption is that a bhikkhu, after teaching six sentences of Dhamma to one woman, may turn and teach six more sentences to another without incurring a penalty. Thus the Commentary notes that a bhikkhu addressing an assembly of 100 women may teach them a total of 600 sentences of Dhamma if aims each set of six at a different woman.

A third exemption is that there is no penalty for a bhikkhu who is teaching Dhamma to someone else, and a woman happens to be listening in.

Summary: Teaching more than six sentences of Dhamma to a woman except in response to a question, is a pacittiya offense unless a knowledgeable man is present.

* * *

8. Should any bhikkhu report the factual (attainment of) a superior human state to an unordained person, it is to be confessed.

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: an unordained person, i.e., anyone--human or not--who is not a bhikkhu or bhikkhuni.

2) Effort: One reports one's actual attainment of a superior human state to such a person.

3) Result: The person immediately understands.

Effort. The meaning of superior human state is discussed at length under Parajika 4. In brief, it covers (a) jhana, (b) the cognitive powers that can arise as its result, and (c) the transcendent states.

Factual is not explained in the texts, but probably means factual from the bhikkhu's own point of view. i.e., whether or not he has actually attained a superior human state, if he thinks he has and reports it to an unordained person, he incurs an offense all the same. If he actually has attained such a state, e.g., jhana, but thinks he hasn't, and yet claims that he has--in other words, he is telling what he thinks to be a lie--he incurs a parajika.

To report, says the Vibhanga, means to speak directly of one's own attainments. To speak indirectly of one's own attainments--e.g., "The bhikkhu who lives in this dwelling enters jhana at will"--incurs a dukkata. According to the Commentary, gestures fall under this rule as well. Thus, if a lay person asks a bhikkhu who has attained Stream-entry if he has reached any of the noble attainments and the bhikkhu nods, his nod would fulfill the factor of effort here.

The origin story to this rule deals with bhikkhus who, as a tactic for getting almsfood in a time of scarcity, had agreed to speak of one another's superior human states to householders. This would seem to suggest that to speak of another bhikkhu's actual attainment of superior human states with such motives in mind--e.g., hoping to get a share of the increased gains he might receive--should incur a penalty as well, but none of the texts mention this point, so it is not an offense. Still, any bhikkhu who plans to act in such a way, on the grounds that whatever is not an offense is perfectly all right, should remember than the Buddha criticized the bhikkhus in the origin story in very strong terms.

Result. As noted above, the bhikkhu incurs the full offense only if his listener immediately understands what he has said. If the listener does not understand, the bhikkhu incurs a dukkata regardless of whether he spoke directly or indirectly of his attainments.

Whether or not the person addressed believes what is said, is of no account in determining the offense.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that to report one's own superior human attainments to another bhikkhu or to a bhikkhuni carries no penalty. There is, though, a series of stories in the Vinita Vatthu to Parajika 4 that raise a number of points to bear in mind in such situations. A typical example--the stories differ only in minor details--is this:

"Then Ven. Maha Moggallana, as he was descending Vulture Peak Mountain, smiled at a certain place. Ven. Lakkhana said to him, 'Friend Moggallana, what is the reason, what is the cause for your smile?'

"'This is not the time, friend Lakkhana, to answer this question. Ask me in the presence of the Exalted One.'

"So Ven. Lakkhana and Ven. Maha Moggallana...having approached and paid homage to the Exalted One, sat down to one side. As they were sitting there, Ven. Lakkhana said to Ven. Moggallana, 'Just now, friend Moggallana...you smiled. What was the reason, what was the cause for your smile?'

"'Just now, my friend, I saw a man immersed head and all in a dung pit, eating dung with both hands. The thought occurred to me, "Isn't it amazing, isn't it astounding, that there are beings even like this...."'

"Bhikkhus were annoyed and offended and spread it about, 'Ven. Moggallana is boasting of a superior human state.'

"Then the Exalted One said to the bhikkhus, 'Actually, bhikkhus, there are disciples of vision and knowledge who will know or see or bear witness like this. Once I myself saw that being, but I didn't disclose it. Had I disclosed it, others would not have believed me, and that would have been to their pain and detriment for a long time. That being, bhikkhus, was once a corrupted Brahmin right here in Rajagaha. He, in the time of the Buddha Kassapa, having invited a Community of bhikkhus to a meal, having filled a trough with dung and announcing the time, said, "Venerable sirs, eat from this and take with you as much as you like." Having been boiled in purgatory as a result of that deed for many years, many hundreds of years, many thousands of years, many hundreds of thousands of years, he is now--through the remainder of the result of that deed--experiencing existence as an individual like this. Moggallana spoke truly, bhikkhus. There is no offense for him.'"

Ven. Moggallana's conduct here--waiting until he is in the presence of his teacher before relating his vision--has become a model for conduct among meditators, for as the reaction of the bhikkhus and the comments of the Buddha make clear, there are situations where the act of relating one's visions, etc., even when allowed, will serve no positive purpose.

Displaying psychic powers. A related rule in the Cullavagga (V.8.2) states that to display psychic powers to lay people is a dukkata. In the origin story leading up to that rule, the Buddha levels strong criticism at such an act: "Just as a woman might expose her sexual organ for a miserable wooden masaka coin, so too have you displayed a superior human state, a wonder of psychic power, to lay people for the sake of a miserable wooden bowl."

To display psychic powers to bhikkhus or novices, though, is no offense.

Summary: To tell unordained people of one's actual superior human attainments is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

9. Should any bhikkhu report (another) bhikkhu's gross offense to an unordained person--unless authorized by the bhikkhus -- it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time Ven. Upananda the Sakyan was on bad terms with the group-of-six bhikkhus. Having committed an offense of intentional emission of semen, he asked the Commu-nity to put him on probation...It so happened that a certain guild in Savatthi was presenting food to the Community. Ven. Upananda, being on probation, sat down on the last seat in the dining hall. The group-of-six bhikkhus said to the lay people, 'Friends, this Ven. Upananda the Sakyan, your esteemed dependent, emitted semen making do with the very same hand with which he is eating your gift of faith... (This is why), being on probation, he is sitting on the last seat.'"

There are two factors for the full offense here:

1) Perception: One perceives that another bhikkhu has committed a gross offense.

2) Effort: One reports it to an unordained person without having been authorized to do so by the Community.

Perception. The Vibhanga states that gross offense refers to any of the four parajika or thirteen sanghadisesa offenses, while Buddhaghosa reports the ancient commentaries as saying that it refers only to the sanghadisesas. His discussion of this point is interesting for the light it throws on the history of the texts: He presents two arguments for the commentaries' position, effectively demolishes them, but then backs down and ends up siding with them. Why he does this is hard to say, although it may be that he himself disagreed with the ancient commentaries on this point, but was forced to side with them by the elders of the MahaVihara who were responsible for putting the seal of approval on his work.

At any rate, the details of the argument lie outside the scope of this guide. The Vinaya Mukha has already adopted Buddhaghosa's arguments against the ancient commentaries here, and we will simply follow our usual policy of siding with the Vibhanga wherever the other texts depart from it. Gross offense means both the four parajikas and the thirteen sanghadisesas.

Whether or not the other bhikkhu has actually committed a gross offense is not an issue here. Thus, for example, if one thinks that Bhikkhu X has had lustful bodily contact with a woman and then reports it to his lay followers, one incurs a pacittiya even if it turns out that Bhikkhu X never committed the offense in the first place.

A bhikkhu's non-gross offenses, and an unordained person's misbehavior--gross or not--are grounds for a dukkata. () (The passage on which this last point is based is sometimes translated, "tells one who is not ordained of a transgression" when it should read, "tells of an unordained person's transgression.") According to the Commentary, "gross misbehavior" on the part of an unordained person means breaking any of the five precepts. Anything else would count as not gross.

This dukkata penalty for informing an unordained person about another unordained person's transgressions of the precepts is a point frequently overlooked in discussions of this rule, but it is important. It seems to be aimed at keeping bhikkhus from being gossips, so that novices and lay people may seek advice from a bhikkhu concerning the difficulties they have in observing the precepts, without fear that the bhikkhu will spread it about to other unordained people as well.

This also helps preserve the good faith of donors: They can give their support to the bhikkhus without fear that the recipients of their support might be gossiping about their lapses in the practice behind their backs. If donors were to learn that a bhikkhu had been gossip-ing about them, they might become so disgusted as to withdraw their support from the religion as a whole.

Effort. Unordained person here means anyone who is not a bhikkhu or a bhikkhuni.

To report an offense to an unordained person means to tell him/her both the action and the class of the offense. Thus, to say, "Ven. Upananda committed a sanghadisesa by masturbating," would fulfill the fact of effort here; while to say simply, "Ven. Upananda committed a sanghadisesa." or "Ven. Upananda masturbated," would not, and would not even be grounds for a lesser offense.

This allowance, which looks strange on the surface, was made apparently for such cases as when a lay person, seeing a senior bhikkhu sitting at the end of the line, might ask one of the other bhikkhus why. A bhikkhu would be well-advised, though, to examine his motives before making use of this allowance, for to take advantage of it to discredit a fellow bhikkhu would be to incur a dukkata under Pacittiya 13. Though the penalty is minor, little acts and minor offenses of this sort are often the ones most destructive to the harmony of the Community.

The authorization. The Vibhanga does not give any indication of when the Community should authorize a bhikkhu to tell unordained people about another bhikkhu's gross offense. As the Vinaya Mukha sees it, the purpose of the training rule is to prevent bhikkhus from advertising one another's faults among people outside the Commu-nity. However, there are cases, it says, where a bhikkhu may commit a gross offense and refuse to acknowledge it, as when committing a parajika and yet continuing to assume the status of a bhikkhu, or committing a sanghadisesa and refusing to go through the procedures for rehabilitation. Thus if the Community sees fit in such cases, it is allowed to authorize one of its members to inform lay people, such as the bhikkhu's supporters, as a way of exerting pressure on him to submit to his penalty.

According to the Commentary, though, the authorization is to be used in cases where the Community feels that the act of informing the laity would help to convince a well-intentioned but weak-willed bhikkhu who repeatedly commits sanghadisesa offenses--even if he willingly undergoes the period of penance--to mend his ways.

Both interpretations fit with the Canon, although it should be borne in mind that using the authorization in line with the Vinaya Mukha's rationale--to exert pressure on a bhikkhu who refuses to undergo a penalty--can often backfire, in that the laity may simply think that the Community is jealous of the support they are giving to the bhikkhu they assume to be innocent of any wrong-doing.

The Vibhanga also does not tell how the authorization is to be issued. According to the Commentary, it is to be made as a declara-tion (apalokana) stated three times and unanimously agreed to by the Community meeting within a proper boundary for formal acts.

The Vibhanga does state, though, that when giving the authori-zation the Community may make it limited to families, limited to offenses, limited to both or to neither. Limited to families means that the bhikkhu receiving the authorization may inform only certain specified families. Limited to offenses means that he may report only certain of the guilty bhikkhu's offenses. A bhikkhu who oversteps the limits of his authorization incurs a pacittiya.

Non-offenses. We have already covered the cases that the Vibhanga includes in the no-offenses clauses. To recapitulate: There is no penalty--

1) in telling an unordained person about another bhikkhu's serious offense if one states the action but not the class of offense, or the class but not the action; or

2) in reporting another bhikkhu's serious offense--action and class of offense--to an unordained person if one has been properly authorized to do so, as long as one does not overstep the bounds of one's authorization.

Summary: Telling an unordained person of another bhikkhu's serious offense--unless one is authorized by the Community to do so--is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

10. Should any bhikkhu dig soil or have it dug, it is to be confessed.

Object. The Pali word for soil, pathavi, also means ground or earth. Thus the Vibhanga distinguishes what forms of earth are and are not classed as soil:

Pure loam, pure clay, whatever is mostly loam or clay with a lesser portion of rock, stones, potsherds, gravel or sand mixed in, is classed as soil (jata-pathavi).

Whatever is pure rock, stones, potsherds, gravel or sand, or any of these with a lesser portion of loam or clay mixed in, is earth not classed as soil (ajata-pathavi). Also, burnt clay or loam--according to the Commentary, this means soil that has been burnt in the course of firing a bowl, pot, etc.--is not classed as soil. As for heaps of loam or clay that have been dug up: If they have been rained on for less than four months, they are not classed as soil, but if rained on for four months or more, they are. Also, the layer of fine dust that forms on the surface of dry soil as the result of wind erosion is not classed as soil.

As the Commentary makes clear in discussing the Vibhanga's no-offense clauses, there is no penalty in digging earth not classed as soil. Thus, for example, digging into a pile of newly dug-up loam or drawing diagrams in the dust on top of dry soil would not be an offense.

Effort. The Vibhanga says that the term "digging" also covers burning, i.e., firing pottery; and breaking, i.e., making a furrow with a rake or a stick. Thus, using a stick to draw in the soil or driving in a stake or pulling one out in such a way as to disturb the surrounding soil would be included under the term "digging".

Non-offenses. Perception and intention are mitigating factors here. Thus there is no offense for the bhikkhu who digs soil-- unknowingly--e.g., digging into a pile of soil perceiving it to be sand; unthinkingly--e.g., absent-mindedly drawing in the dirt while talking with someone else; or unintentionally--e.g., raking leaves, pulling a wheelbarrow through the mud, or digging in a pile of sand and accidentally digging into the soil underneath.

Also, there is no offense in asking for clay or soil, or in indicating a need for a hole in the ground, without expressly giving the command to dig. ("Please get me some clay to make a pot," "We're going to need a hole right here.") According to the Commentary, an explicit request that a reservoir, pit, etc., be dug also incurs no penalty as long as one does not say precisely where to dig it. ("We're going to have to drain the water from A to B, so dig the trench wherever you think it would do the job best.") This sort of request or hint is termed kappiya vohara--"allowable expression", or in plain English, "wording it right"--and often finds use in in the context of rules where an express command would be an offense, but an indication of a desire or intent would not.

The Commentary quotes the ancient commentaries as saying that if another person or animal has fallen into a pit, there is no penalty for digging the victim out. The same holds true if another person or animal is trapped by a fallen but still-living tree: The bhikkhu may cut the tree to free the victim without incurring a penalty under the following rule.

Although the Commentary cannot find any justification in the Canon for these opinions, it states that they should be accepted since they are the unanimous judgment of the ancient commentaries. As we have noted before, Buddhaghosa does not always accept even the unanimous judgment of the ancient commentaries, but perhaps he felt that these were cases in which it would be better to err on the side of compassion rather than the side of strictness.

However, the Commentary goes on to say that if a bhikkhu falls into a pit himself, he should not dig any earth which would be classed as soil, even for the sake of his life. The same holds true if he is trapped by a fallen but still-living tree: He may not cut the tree even though his life is in danger.

The reason for this rule, as indicated by the origin story, is that people in general at the time of the Buddha viewed soil as having a form of one-facultied life. The Jains, who were contemporaries of the Buddha, classed life into five categories according to the number of senses or faculties the living thing possessed. In the one-facultied category, where there is only the sense of touch, they included soil and vegetation. This sort of view was so widespread at the time that any potters who were meticulous in their precepts would take their clay only from termite nests and other piles of dug-up earth.

Another consideration, carrying more weight at present, is that the act of digging soil risks killing or injuring whatever animals may be living there.

This rule, together with the following one, also effectively prevents bhikkhus from engaging in agriculture.

Summary: Digging soil or commanding that it be dug is a pacittiya offense.

Two: The Living Plant Chapter

11. The damaging of a living plant is to be confessed.

"Now a certain Alavi bhikkhu was chopping down a tree. The devata living in the tree said to the bhikkhu, 'Sir, do not chop down my dwelling to build a dwelling for yourself.' The bhikkhu, paying no attention, continued chopping and injured the arm of the devata's child. The devata thought: 'What if I were to kill this bhikkhu right here?' Then another thought occurred to her: 'But no, that wouldn't be proper. What if I were to inform the Exalted One of this matter?' So she went to the Exalted One and on arrival informed him of what had happened.

"'Very good, devata. It's very good that you didn't kill the bhikkhu. If you had, you would have produced much demerit for yourself. Now go, devata. Over there is a vacant tree. Go into it.' (The Commentary adds here that the tree, being in the Jetavana Monastery, was one of the choicest pieces of devata real estate in those days. Other devas coming to pay their respects to the Buddha also made a point of paying their respects to the devata living in this tree. At any rate:)

"People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can these Sakyan contemplatives cut down trees and have them cut down? They are destroying one-facultied life.'"

Object. The Pali term for living plant--bhutagama--literally means the home of a being. This the Sub-commentary explains by saying that devatas may take up residence in plants standing in place by means of a longing on which their consciousness fastens (at the end of their previous lives) as in a dream. This rule is justified, it says, in that the etiquette of a contemplative precludes doing harm to the abodes of living beings. As the origin story shows, though, the reason this rule was laid down in the first place was to prevent bhikkhus from offending people who held to the Jain cosmology--or at least to a popular version of it--which regarded plants as one-facultied life having the sense of touch.

The Vibhanga defines bhutagama as vegetation arising from any of five sources:

1) from bulbs, rhizomes or tubers (e.g., potatoes, tulips)

2) from cuttings or stakes (e.g., willows, rose bushes)

3) from joints (e.g., sugar cane, bamboo)

4) from runners (e.g., strawberries, couch grass)

5) from seeds (e.g., corn, beans).

According to the Commentary, a whole plant or part of one that has been removed from its original place is no longer classed as bhutagama. If it is capable of growing again if placed in the ground, it is classed as bijagama, which means "home of a plant". When a seed is sown, it is regarded as bijagama until the first shoot turns a fresh green color and the first leaf appears. After that it is regarded as bhutagama.

In line with this criterion, the Commentary classifies such lower forms of plant life as mushrooms which still have their spores, fungi, lichens without leaves and moulds as bijagama, in that they do not pass through a fresh green stage and have no discernable leaves, and yet are capable of regeneration. Mushrooms that have lost their spores, and parts of any plants that have been removed from place and will not grow, that have been cooked or otherwise damaged to the point where they are not capable of generation, are not grounds for an offense under this rule.

The Commentary states further that to damage bijagama incurs a dukkata. The Vibhanga makes no mention of this point, but the Commentary cites as its justification a passage that occurs in a number of suttas, (D.1, D.2, etc.), saying that bhikkhus refrain from harming both bhutagama and bijagama. The Mahavagga and Cullavagga give partial justification to the Commentary's assertion in two passages, dealing with bhikkhus eating fruit, which we will discuss below.

Furthermore, according to the Commentary, there are certain kinds of plants that do not count either as bhutagama or bijagama under this rule, and to damage them incurs no offense. To justify this point it quotes a passage from the Cullavagga (VIII.1.2): "If a var-nished wall...(or) finished floor has spots of mould (), it is to be wiped off with a moistened cloth that has been wrung out." The Commentary extends the Canon's instructions here to cover not only mould on walls, but also other lower forms of plant life--such as algae on the inside of water jars, fungus on toothbrushes and mould on food--that would count as filth if they were allowed to continue growing.

Effort. According to the Vibhanga, the term "damaging" here includes such actions as cutting, breaking, picking, burning and cooking. The Commentary defines the term as "dealing with a plant as one likes by cutting it, breaking it and so on." Although the word "dealing with", paribhunjati, literally means "making use of", the Commentary's illustrations of what this covers include even such things as shaking a tree limb to get the dry leaves to fall off so that one can sweep them up. Thus, it says, the term "damaging" would include picking flowers or leaves, uprooting a plant, engraving one's initials in a tree trunk, etc. Since no exception is made for doing such things with "benevolent" intentions towards the plant, pruning would be included as well. Given the catch-all nature of the Commentary's definition, using herbicides to kill plants would also come under the term "damaging".

Plants growing in water, such as water hyacinths, whose roots do not extend to the earth beneath the water, have the water as their base. To remove them from the water is to damage them, although there is no offense in moving them around in the water. To move them from one body of water to another without incurring a penalty, one may take them together with some of the water in which they originally lived and place them together with that water into the new body of water.

Plants such as mistletoe, orchids and bird vine which grow on trees have the tree as their base. To remove them from the tree is to damage them, and so incurs a pacittiya.

Perception is a mitigating factor here. Thus, if one cuts a plant () perceiving it as something else--say, a dead plant--one incurs no offense. If one cuts a plant in doubt as to whether it is living or dead, then regardless of what it actually is, the offense is a dukkata.

Intention is also a mitigating factor. Thus, for example, there is no offense if a bhikkhu climbing a hill grabs onto a plant for support and inadvertently uproots it.

Making Fruit Allowable. Since fruit seeds are bijagama, the question arises as to how bhikkhus should go about eating fruit. There are two passages, one each in the Mahavagga (VI. 21) and the Cullavagga (V.5.2), which deal with this question and which the Commentary discusses in detail under this rule. The Cullavagga passage reads, "I allow you, bhikkhus, to consume fruit that has been made allowable for contemplatives in any of five ways: If it is damaged by fire, by a knife, by a nail, if it is seedless, and the fifth is if the seeds are discharged." The Mahavagga passage reads, "Now at that time there was a great quantity of fruit at Savatthi, but there was no one to make it allowable...(The Buddha said,) 'I allow you, bhikkhus, to consume fruit that is seedless or whose seed is dis-charged, (even if) it has not been made allowable."

First, to summarize the commentaries' discussion of seedless fruit and fruit whose seeds have been discharged: According to the Commentary to the Mahavagga, "seedless fruit" includes fruit whose seeds are too immature to grow. As for fruit whose seeds have been discharged, the Sub-commentary states that this means, "Fruit, such as mangoes or jackfruit, which it is possible to eat having removed the seeds and separating them entirely (from the flesh)."

The question sometimes arises as to whether bhikkhus may remove the seeds themselves before eating fruit of this sort, or whether an unordained person has to remove them first, but given the context of the Mahavagga passage and the wording of the Sub-commentary's explanation, it seems clear that the bhikkhus themselves may discharge the seeds before or while eating the fruit. As the Commentary notes, both these kinds of fruit are allowable in and of themselves, and need not go through any other procedure to make them allowable.

Other kinds of fruit, though, such as those with numerous seeds (e.g., tomatoes, blackberries) or whose seeds would be difficult to remove undamaged (grapes, oranges, etc.) must be damaged by fire, a knife or a fingernail before a bhikkhu may eat them. The Commentary's description of how to do this shows that the damaging need only be symbolic: An unordained person draws a hot object or a knife across the skin of the fruit, or pokes it with a fingernail, saying "allowable" (kappiyam) either while doing the damaging or immediately afterward. The Sub-commentary notes that the word for "allowable" may be stated in any language.

If a heap of fruit, such as grapes, is brought to a bhikkhu, he should say, "Make it allowable," (Kappiyam karohi,) either to the donor or to any other unordained person who knows how. The unordained person need only make one of the grapes allowable in line with the above procedures for the entire heap to be considered allowable, although he/she should not remove the grape from the heap while doing so.

The Sub-commentary claims that the ceremony of making fruit allowable must always be performed in the presence of a bhikkhu, but the Commentary mentions this factor only in connection with this last case--making an entire heap of fruit allowable by "damaging" only one piece--and not in its basic description of how the procedure is done.

In communities that follow the Sub-commentary, the custom is as follows: When a donor brings grapes, tomatoes or similar fruit to a bhikkhu, the bhikkhu says, "Kappiyam karohi (Make it allowable)." The donor damages the fruit in any of the three specified ways and says,

"Kappiyam bhante (It is allowable, sir)," while doing the damaging, and then presents the fruit to the bhikkhu.

In communities that do not follow the Sub-commentary, the donor may perform the act of damaging the fruit beforehand, and simply inform the bhikkhu that the fruit has been made allowable when presenting it to him. In either case, the act of making a heap of fruit allowable by damaging only one piece must be done in the presence of a bhikkhu. And we should note again that seedless fruit or fruit whose seeds may be removed entirely from the flesh of the fruit are allowable in and of themselves, and do not have to go through any procedure before a bhikkhu may accept and eat them.

The two passages in the Mahavagga and Cullavagga that we have been discussing deal specifically only with fruit, but the Commentary extrapolates from them to say that the same conditions apply to other forms of bijagama, such as sugar cane and bean sprouts as well.

Non-offenses. There is no offense for a bhikkhu who cuts a living plant unknowingly--e.g., thinking it to be dead;

unthinkingly--e.g., absent-mindedly pulling grass while talking with someone; or unintentionally--e.g., inadvertently uprooting grass while raking leaves.

Also, there is no penalty in telling an unordained person to make an item allowable, in asking for leaves, flowers, etc. without specifically saying which leaves or flowers are to be picked; or in indicating indirectly that e.g., the grass needs cutting ("Look at how long the grass is") or that a tree needs pruning ("This branch is in the way") without expressly giving the command to cut. In other words, this is another rule where one may avoid an offense by using kappiya vohara: "wording it right."

The Cullavagga (V.32.1) says that if a brush fire is approaching a dwelling, one may light a counter-fire toward it off. In doing so, one is exempt from any penalty imposed by his rule.

Also, according to the Sub-commentary to NP 6, a bhikkhu whose robes have been stolen and who cannot find any other cloth to cover himself, may pick grass and leaves to cover himself without incurring any penalty here.

Summary: Intentionally cutting, burning or killing a living plant is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

12. Evasive speech and uncooperativeness are to be confessed.

This rule deals with a bhikkhu's behavior in a communal meeting when being formally questioned about a charge made against him. The factors for the full offense here are two:

1) Intention: One desires to hide one's own offenses; and

2) Effort: One continues engaging in evasive speech or in being uncooperative after the Community has brought a formal charge of evasive speech or uncooperativeness against one.

These factors will be easier to understand if we discuss effort and intention before going on to the formal act.

Evasive speech is illustrated in the origin story as follows:

"Now at that time Ven. Channa, having misbehaved and being examined about the offense in the midst of the Community, avoided one question with another: 'Who has committed the offense? What was committed?

With regard to what matter was it committed? How was it committed? What are you saying? Why do you say it?'"

The Commentary notes that "evasive speech" covers any and all forms of speaking beside the point when being formally questioned, and not just the ones given in the origin story. The Sub-commentary agrees and gives an additional example of its own:

"Have you committed this offense?"

"I've been to Pataliputta."

"But we're not asking about your going to Pataliputta. We're asking about an offense."

"From there I went to Rajagaha."

"Well, Rajagaha or Brahmanagaha, did you commit the offense?"

"I got some pork there."

As for uncooperativeness:

"Now at a later time Ven. Channa, being examined about an offense in the midst of the Community, (thinking), 'By avoiding one question with another, I will fall into an offense,' remained silent and was uncooperative with the Community."

Thus, the texts say, to be uncooperative means to remain silent when being formally questioned in the midst of the Community.

Intention. This factor is fulfilled only if one is acting out of a desire to conceal one's own offenses. If one has other reasons for remaining silent or asking questions while being questioned, there is no penalty. For example, there is no offense for a bhikkhu who, being examined, asks questions or gives answers not to the point because he does not understand what is being said,

who is too ill to speak,

who feels that in speaking he will create conflict or dissension in the Community, or who feels that the Community will carry out its formal act unfairly or not in accordance with the rule.

The formal act. If a bhikkhu speaks evasively or is uncooperative out of a desire to conceal his own offenses, he incurs a dukkata. If the Community sees fit, it may then bring a formal charge of evasion or uncooperativeness against him in order to restrain him from persisting in such behavior. If he then continues being evasive or uncooperative, he incurs a pacittiya.

Perception is not a factor here. Once a formal charge of evasion or uncooperativeness has been rightfully brought against a bhikkhu and he continues to be evasive or uncooperative, he incurs a pacittiya regardless of whether he sees the charge as rightful or not. If the charge has been wrongfully brought against him--e.g., the formal act was not carried out strictly in accordance with formal procedure--then in continuing to be evasive or remain silent out of a desire to hide his offenses, he incurs a dukkata regardless of whether he perceives the charge as wrongful, rightful or doubtful. In other words, he is not let off the hook simply because the Community has not mastered formal procedure.

If, after the Community rightly brings a formal charge of evasive speech or uncooperativeness against a bhikkhu, he continues being evasive or uncooperative simply to avoid revealing his offenses, he may further be subject to a more severe penalty: a formal act of censure (tajjaniya-kamma) for being a maker of trouble and strife for the Community (Cv.I.1-8) or--what is essentially the same thing--an act for further misbehavior (tassa-papiyasika-kamma) for not admitting to a true charge right from the start (see the discussion under the Adhikarana-Samatha rules, Chapter 11).

Non-offenses. If a bhikkhu answers not to the point or remains silent for any of the allowable reasons, he incurs no offense even after a formal act of evasive speech or uncooperativeness has for some reason been brought against him.

Summary: Persistently replying evasively or keeping silent when being questioned in a meeting of the Community in order to conceal one's own offenses--after a formal charge of evasiveness or uncooperativeness has been brought against one--is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

13. Maligning or complaining (about a Community official) is to be confessed.

Community officials. In the Cullavagga (VI.21), the Buddha gives allowance for a Community of bhikkhus to designate various of its members as Community officials, to handle such business as distributing food, deciding who will stay in which lodging, keeping the rosters that decide who will receive the invitations to which meals, etc. Ven. Dabba Mallaputta was the first such official, and was well-equipped for the job:

"As for those bhikkhus who came at night, he would enter the fire-element for them and by that light would assign them lodgings--so much so that bhikkhus would arrive at night on purpose, thinking, 'We will see the marvel of Dabba Mallaputta's psychic power.' Approaching him, they would say, 'Friend Dabba, assign us lodgings.'

"Ven. Dabba Mallaputta would say, 'Where would you like? Where shall I assign them?'

"Then they would name a distant place on purpose: 'Friend Dabba, assign us a lodging on Vulture's Peak. Friend Dabba, assign us a lodging on Robber's Cliff...'

"So Ven. Dabba Mallaputta, entering the fire-element for them, went before them with his finger glowing, while they followed behind with the help of his light."

Even with his special skills, there were bhikkhus who were dissatis-fied with the lodgings and meals he assigned to them--as we saw under Sanghadisesas 8 & 9--and in the origin story to this rule they malign and complain about him.

Object. Only a bhikkhu who has been formally agreed upon as a Community official fulfills the factor of object under this rule. All other people, ordained or not, are grounds for a dukkata.

Effort. The Commentary and Sub-commentary give the clearest description of the distinction between maligning and complaining: To malign means to speak critically of a person in the presence of one or more other people so as to make them form a low opinion of him/her. To complain means simply to give vent to one's criticisms of the person within earshot of someone else.

According to the Vibhanga, the penalty for maligning or complaining about a Community official is a pacittiya if one's listener is a fellow bhikkhu; and a dukkata if one's listener is an unordained person. () The question of who one's remarks are addressed to is irrelevant if one is maligning or complaining about an unordained person or a bhikkhu who is not a Community official: The penalty is a dukkata, regardless of whether the person to whom the remarks are addressed is ordained or not.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga says that if a Community official acts habitually out of any of the four causes for prejudice--favoritism, animosity, stupidity or fear--there is no offense in maligning or complaining about him. For example, if he assigns the best lodgings to certain bhikkhus simply because he likes them, gives the poorest food to certain bhikkhus simply because he dislikes them, habitually sends the wrong bhikkhus to the wrong meals because he is too stupid to handle the rotating rosters properly, or gives the best treatment to certain bhikkhus because he is afraid of them or their supporters, there is no offense in criticizing his behavior in the presence of others.

However, one should be very sure of the facts of the case before taking advantage of this allowance. Disappointment and anger have a way of coloring one's perceptions, making another person's perfectly blameless behavior look biased and unjust. If one maligns or complains about an official, thoroughly convinced that he has been acting out of prejudice, one is still guilty of an offense if it turns out that in fact the official's behavior has been fair. The same considerations apply also to complaints or criticisms concerning anyone, ordained or not.

To criticize a Community official to his face, simply for the sake of hurting his feelings, would be an offense under Pacittiya 2, regardless of whether his behavior has in fact been prejudiced or not.

The job of a Community official is often a thankless one. The procedures he must follow in distributing invitations, etc., can be fairly complex and, in large communities, quite time-consuming. Since there is no way he can guarantee equal treatment to all, there may be times when he seems to be acting out of prejudice when he is simply following standard procedure. If he cannot receive the benefit of the doubt from his fellow bhikkhus, there is no incentive for him to undertake these duties in the first place. The Buddha likened material gains to excrement (see A.V.196), and when excrement is shared out there is rarely any point in complaining about who gets the choicest portions.

Summary: If a Community official is innocent of prejudice, criticizing him within earshot of another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

14. Should any bhikkhu set a bed, bench, mattress or stool belonging to the Community out in the open--or have it set out--and then on departing neither put it away nor have it put away, or should he go without taking leave, it is to be confessed.

During the four months of the rains, furniture belonging to the Community--when not in use--is to be kept in a place where it will not be rained on, such as a fully-roofed storeroom or lodging. During the remainder of the year, it may also be kept in a shed roofed with slats or branches, or under a tree where birds do not leave droppings. The Commentary implies, though, that this latter allowance holds only in those regions with a distinct dry season; and, according to the Sub-commentary, even where there is a dry season, if a bhikkhu sees an unseasonable rain storm approaching, he should not leave furniture in such semi-open places.

Effort. This rule deals with bhikkhus who set furnishings of the Community out in the open and then depart without taking leave, without putting the furnishings away or without getting them put away in the proper place. To depart is defined as going further than one leddupata--approximately 6 meters--from the furniture. (A leddupata is a unit of measure which appears frequently in the Canon, and is defined as the distance a man of average stature can throw a clod of dirt underarm.) Taking leave, according to the Commentary, means informing a bhikkhu, a novice or a temple attendant who agrees to take responsibility for the furnishings.

Object. Any bed, bench, mattress or stool belonging to the Community is grounds for a pacittiya. Perception is not an issue here: If the item actually belongs to the Community, this factor is fulfilled regardless of whether or not one perceives it as such. Other furnish-ings belonging to the Community--such as carpets, bedspreads, mats, foot-wiping cloths, chairs, even the brooms--are grounds for a dukkata, as are furnishings of every type belonging to another individual. One's own furnishings are not grounds for an offense.

According to the Commentary, if one has made an arrangement with someone else to use his/her belongings on trust, there is no offense in leaving that person's furnishings out in the open. The Sub-commentary states that furnishings which the donor presents for the Community to use out in the open--e.g., stone or concrete benches--are likewise not grounds for an offense.

Responsibility. A bhikkhu is held responsible for putting away furnishings that he has ordered another person to place in the open, unless the other person is also a bhikkhu, in which case he is the one responsible. The Commentary states that if a senior bhikkhu requests a junior bhikkhu to place out in the open any furnishings that may be grounds for a penalty, then the junior bhikkhu is responsible for them until the senior bhikkhu sits down on them, places an article of his use (such as a robe or a shoulder bag) on them, or gives the junior bhikkhu permission to leave, after which point the senior bhikkhu is responsible.

If there is to be an open-air meeting, the host bhikkhus are responsible for any seats set out in the open, until the visiting bhik-khus claim their places, from which point the visitors are responsible. If there is to be a series of Dhamma talks, each speaker is responsible for the sermon seat from the moment he sits in it until the moment the next speaker does.

Non-offenses. Intention is a factor here, in that there is no offense if one departs having set furnishings belonging to the Community or another individual out in the sun with the purpose of drying them, and thinking, "I will put them away when I come back." () Also, there is no offense if one departs after someone else takes possession or responsibility for furnishings one has left out in the open, or when there are dangers of any sort--the Commentary men-tions tigers, lions, ghosts, ogres, outlaws and people who might cause one to disrobe--which give one no time to put the furnishings away.

The Vinaya Mukha, extracting a general principle from this rule, states, "This training rule was formulated to prevent negligence, and to teach one to care for things. It should be taken as a general model."

Summary: To set a bed, bench, mattress or stool belonging to the Community out in the open and then leave its immediate vicinity without putting it away or arranging to have it put away is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

15. Should any bhikkhu, having set out bedding in a lodging belonging to the Community--or having had it set out--and then on departing neither put it away nor have it put away, or should he go without taking leave, it is to be confessed.

Object. Bedding here refers to mattresses, pillows, rugs, sheets, mats, sitting cloths, blankets, bedspreads, animal skins, throw rugs, etc., and not to the beds or benches on which they may be placed. Unlike the previous rule, the question of whom the bedding belongs to is not an issue in determining the offense under this rule.

The place where it is left, though, is an issue. Bedding left in a dwelling belonging to the Community is grounds for a pacittiya. Bedding left in a dwelling belonging to another individual is grounds for a dukkata, as is bedding left in the area around a dwelling, in a meeting hall or at the foot of a tree--these last three places belonging to the Community or to another individual. Bedding left in a dwelling, etc., belonging to oneself is not grounds for an offense. The same holds true for bedding left in a dwelling belonging to anyone who has given one the right to use his/her belongings on trust.

Perception is not an issue here. If, for example, the dwelling actually belongs to the Community, it is grounds for a pacittiya regardless of whether or not one perceives it as such.

Effort. Putting the item away, having it put away and taking leave are all defined as under the preceding rule. The way to determine responsibility for bedding when a bhikkhu orders someone else to spread it may also be inferred from the discussion there.

To depart is defined as going outside the grounds of the monas-tery. The absence of any reference to this rule in the duties to be done before one's almsround (pindapata-vatta) (Cv.VIII.5), however, indicates that temporary excursions outside the monastery are not counted as "departing". This conclusion is seconded by one of the no-offense clauses, which says that in the case of a bhikkhu who goes with the expectation of returning but then changes his mind, if he then sends word back to the monastery, he avoids any penalty under this rule. This implies that a bhikkhu who leaves his bedding spread out in a dwelling belonging to the Community, leaves the monastery temporarily with the intent of returning, and returns as planned, incurs no penalty as well.

The question arises, though, as to how long a temporary period of absence is allowable. The Vibhanga itself sets no time limit. The Commentary illustrates the no-offense clause we have just mentioned with the case of a bhikkhu who leaves, thinking, "I will return today," but makes no specific statement that longer periods are not allowed.

Since the texts give no specific guidelines here, this is a matter which each Community should decide for itself, taking the following considerations into account:

1) The origin story suggests that the purpose of the rule is to prevent the bedding's being left so long in an unoccupied dwelling that it attracts ants, termites and other pests.

2) Another consideration, raised by the Vinaya Mukha, is that if a bhikkhu goes for a long excursion, leaving his bedding and other belongings scattered about in a dwelling, this might inconvenience the resident bhikkhus in that they could not conveniently allot the dwelling to another bhikkhu in the interim.

Intention is a factor here. If one plans to return within the allowable space of time, but for some reason cannot--examples in the Commentary include flooding rivers, kings and robbers--one incurs no offense. And as mentioned above, if one leaves with the intention of returning, but then changes one's mind, one can avoid an offense by sending word back to the monastery via a messenger.

Non-offenses. In addition to the above two cases, the Vibhanga says that there is no offense in departing having left bedding spread out in a dwelling if someone else has taken responsibility for the bedding or if one has taken leave of the resident bhikkhus. With regard to this latter point, though, the duties to be done when moving out of a monastery (gamika vatta) (Cv.VIII.3) include putting away the bedding one has been using. To neglect this duty, even when one takes leave of the resident bhikkhus, incurs a dukkata.

Summary: To depart from a monastery, leaving bedding spread out in a dwelling belonging to the Community without taking leave or arranging to have it put away, is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

16. Should any bhikkhu knowingly lie down in a lodging belonging to the Community so as to intrude on a bhikkhu who arrived there first, (thinking), "Whoever feels crowded will go away"--doing it for this reason and no other--it is to be confessed.

There are four factor for an offense here:

1) Object: A bhikkhu who should not be forced to move.

2) Perception: One perceives him as such.

3) Effort: One encroaches on his space in a dwelling belonging to the Community.

4) Intention: One's sole motive is to force him out.

Object & perception. Knowingly is defined in the Vibhanga as knowing that the lodging's current occupant is a senior bhikkhu, a sick one, or one to whom the Community (or its official) has assigned the dwelling. The Commentary interprets this definition as a list of examples, and generalizes from it to include any case in which one knows, "This bhikkhu shouldn't be forced to move."

Effort. To encroach means to lie down or sit down in the area immediately adjacent to the bhikkhu's sleeping or sitting place--which the Commentary defines as anywhere within 75 cm. of the sleeping or sitting place--or on a 75 cm. wide path from either of those places to the entrance to the dwelling. There is a dukkata for placing one's bedding or seat in such an area; and a pacittiya for each time one sits or lies down there. To place one's bedding or seat in any other part of the dwelling incurs a dukkata; and to sit or lie down there, another dukkata--assuming in all of these cases that the dwelling belongs to the Community.

Perception with regard to the dwelling is not an issue here. If the dwelling actually belongs to the Community, this part of the factor is fulfilled regardless of whether one perceives it as belonging to the Community or not.

There is a dukkata in encroaching on the space of a bhikkhu--intending to force him out--in the area immediately adjacent to such a dwelling, in a place belonging to the Community which is not the dwelling of a particular person (e.g., an eating hall), the shade of a tree, in the open air, or in a dwelling belonging to another individual. To do so in a dwelling belonging to oneself incurs no penalty. According to the Commentary, this last allowance also applies to a dwelling belonging to anyone who has offered to let one use his/her belongings on trust.

Intention. If there is a compelling reason--one is ill or suffering from the cold or heat, or there are dangers outside--one may intrude on the space of another bhikkhu without penalty. The reason for these allowances would appear obvious--one is not aiming at forcing the other bhikkhu out--but it turns out that the matter is not as simple as that. The Sub-commentary reports the Three Ganthipadas as saying that because of this allowance, one may make an excuse of one's illness, etc., as a pretext for intruding on the other bhikkhu's space so as to force him out of the lodging. The Sub-commentary tries to argue with this ruling, but the Ganthipadas have the support of the Vibhanga here: Only if one's sole motive is to force the other bhikkhu out is one subject to an offense under this rule. If one has mixed motives, one may take advantage of one's illness, etc., to move in one the other bhikkhu.

However, once one's illness, etc., has passed, one would incur an offense each time one continued to sit or lie down encroaching on his space.

All of this may seem very strange on the surface, but it is likely that the original occupant would not feel unduly pressured if an ill bhikkhu or one escaping dangers were to move into his dwelling, while he would start feeling pressured by the continued presence of the bhikkhu after the illness or dangers had passed, which is why the penalties are allotted as they are.

Summary: To encroach on another bhikkhu's sleeping or sitting place in a dwelling belonging to the Community, with the sole purpose of making him uncomfortable and forcing him to leave, is a pacittiya offense.

***

17. Should any bhikkhu, angry and displeased, evict a bhikkhu from a dwelling belonging to the Community--or have him evicted--it is to be confessed.

"At that time some group-of-17 bhikkhus were fixing up a large dwelling on the fringes of the monastery, thinking, 'We will spend the rains here.' Some group-of-six bhikkhus...seeing them, said, 'These group-of-17 bhikkhus are fixing up a dwelling place. Let's drive them out.' But others of them said, 'Wait, friends, while they fix it up. When it's fixed up, then we'll drive them out.'

"Then the group-of-six bhikkhus said to the group-of-17 bhikkhus, 'Get out, friends. The dwelling is ours.'

"'Shouldn't this have been mentioned beforehand so that we could have fixed up another one?'

"'Isn't this a dwelling belonging to the Community?'

"'Yes...'

"'Then get out. The dwelling is ours.'

"'The dwelling is large, friends. You can stay here, and we'll stay here, too.'

"'Get out. The dwelling is ours.' And angered and displeased, taking them by the throat, they threw them out. The group-of-17 bhikkhus, having been thrown out, began to cry."

The three factors for the full offense here are:

1) Object: a bhikkhu.

2) Effort: One evicts him from a dwelling belonging to the Community.

3) Intention: One's prime motivation is anger.

Object. A bhikkhu is grounds for a pacittiya here, while the follow-ing are grounds for a dukkata: a bhikkhu's belongings, an unordained person, and an unordained person's belongings.

Effort. According to the Commentary, this rule covers both physical eviction--picking up the bhikkhu and throwing him out--as well as verbal eviction--ordering him to leave. The penalty in both cases is the same. (The Mahasanghikas and Sarvastivadins write this point into their version of the rule.)

There is a dukkata in telling someone else to evict the bhikkhu--no allowances for kappiya vohara are given here--and, assuming that all the other factors are fulfilled, a pacittiya once the bhikkhu has been evicted.

To evict a bhikkhu from a dwelling belonging to the Community incurs a pacittiya. (Again, perception with regard to the ownership of the dwelling is not an issue here.) To evict anyone--bhikkhu or not--from an area immediately adjacent to a dwelling belonging to the Community, from a place belonging to the Community which is not the dwelling of a particular person, from the shade of a tree, from a spot in the open air or from a dwelling belonging to another individual incurs a dukkata. There is also a dukkata for throwing a person's belongings out from any of these places. (In all the cases mentioned in this paragraph, the assumption is that one is motivated by anger.)

To evict anyone or anyone's belongings from one's own dwelling--or from one which belongs to an individual who has offered to let one use his/her belongings on trust--is not grounds for an offense.

Intention. There is no offense in evicting anyone when one's primary motive is not anger. Examples given in the no-offense clauses include evicting anyone--or the requisites of anyone--who is insane, shameless in his/her behavior, or a maker of quarrels, strife and dissension in the Community. The Commentary adds here that one also has the right to throw the person out of the monastery as a whole if he/she is a maker of quarrels, strife and dissension, but not if he/she is simply shameless.

Also, one may without penalty evict one's student from his dwelling if he is not properly observing his duties.

In all of these cases, the Sub-commentary notes, if anger happens to arise in one's mind in the course of evicting the person, there is no offense as long as it is not the primary motive.

Summary: To cause a bhikkhu to be evicted from a dwelling belonging to the Community--when one's primary motive is anger--is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

18. Should any bhikkhu sit or lie down on a bed or bench with detachable legs on an (unplanked) loft in a dwelling belonging to the Community, it is to be confessed.

Object. A bed or bench with detachable legs on an unplanked loft is grounds for a pacittiya if it is in a dwelling belonging to a Commu-nity, a dukkata if in a dwelling belonging to another individual, and no offense if in a dwelling belonging to oneself or to anyone who has offered to let one use his/her belongings on trust. Perception of the ownership, as in the preceding rules, is not an issue here.

The purpose of this rule, as indicated by the origin story, is to guard against injury to a bhikkhu living under the loft: He might get hit on the head if any of the detachable legs fall down through the floor of the loft. Thus there is no offense if the loft is not high enough off the ground for a man of medium height to stand under it without hitting his head; if the floor of the loft is completely planked; if there is no one under the loft; if the area under the loft cannot be used as a dwelling (e.g. it is used solely for storage space, says the Commen-tary); if the bed or bench with detachable legs is on the ground; or if the legs of the bed or bench are securely fixed to their frame.

Effort. There is a question as to whether "sitting and lying down" would include standing as well, since the no-offense clauses allow one "to stand there and hang things up or take them down." The Commentary interprets "there" as a bed or bench with detachable legs, but standing on such a thing would seem to be even more dangerous than sitting or lying down on it. More probably, "there" refers to the unplanked loft.

Some people have noted that although the bhikkhu in the origin story sat down hurriedly, the word "hurriedly" does not appear in the rule, and they speculate that it may have been dropped by mistake. If one is not allowed at all to sit or lie down on a bed or bench with detachable legs on an unplanked loft, they say, there would be no reason to have one there. Actually, beds with detachable legs do not sound like wise things to have on an unplanked loft, and perhaps the Buddha's purpose in formulating this rule was to discourage their being placed there in the first place.

Summary: To sit or lie down on a bed or bench with detachable legs on an unplanked loft in a dwelling belonging to the Community, is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

19. When a bhikkhu is building a large dwelling, he may apply two or three layers of facing to plaster the area around the window frame and re-inforce the area around the door frame the width of the door opening, while standing where there are no crops to speak of. Should he apply more than that, even if stand-ing where there are no crops to speak of, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time a chief minister who was Ven. Channa's supporter was having a dwelling built for Ven. Channa. Ven. Channa had the finished dwelling covered with roofing material again and again, plastered again and again, so that the dwelling, overloaded, caved in. Then Ven. Channa, collecting grass and sticks, despoiled the barley field of a certain brahmin. The brahmin was offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can revered ones go around despoiling our barley field?'...Bhikkhus...were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can Ven. Channa have a finished dwelling covered with roofing material again and again, plastered again and again, so that the dwelling gets overloaded and caves in?'"

This rule is an extension of Sanghadisesa 7, giving further direc-tions for how a bhikkhu should go about building a dwelling for his own use when sponsored by another person. Since it deals with techniques used in building wattle and daub dwellings 2,500 years ago, both the rule and its explanations in the Canon and commen-taries contain a number of terms whose meaning is uncertain at present. The syntax of the rule suggests one interpretation, the Commentary another, while the Vibhanga is non-committal on the points where the two interpretations differ. Since both interpretations make sense, we will present them both here.

What the rule seems to say. The area 1.25 meters around the door frame is to be covered with up to three layers of plaster or roofing material to reinforce it so that when the door is blown open or shut it will not damage the wall or be loosened from its hinges. Five kinds of roofing material are mentioned in the Vibhanga: tiles, stones, lime (cement), grass and leaves.

Similarly, around the windows an area the width of the window shutters is to be reinforced with up to three layers of plaster to protect it from being damaged when the shutters are blown open or shut. Three kinds of plaster were used in the Buddha's time--white, black and red-chalk--and bhikkhus were allowed to apply them in a number of geometrical patterns, but not to use them to make obscene pictures of men and women on the walls (!) (Cv.VI.3.1-2). Although the bhikkhus were allowed to cover the entire walls and floor with this plaster, this rule gives directions only for the minimum area which should be covered to keep the walls strong.

What the Commentary says. Because the rule refers to roofing material, the Commentary assumes that it must refer to the roof of the dwelling, even though this assumption does violence to the syn-tax of the rule. Its interpretation: One may reinforce the door and window frames with as much plaster or roofing material as one likes, but may cover the roof with only three layers of roofing material. A relevant point from the Canon is the passage at Cv.VIII.3.3 which states that if at a later date the roof begins to leak, the resident bhikkhu--if he can--should re-roof it himself or arrange for someone else to do it for him. If he can do neither, though, he incurs no offense.

The reasons for this rule. The origin story suggests that the Buddha imposed the three-layer limit in order to prevent the dwelling from collapsing under the weight of too much roofing material, but the no-offense clauses show clearly that the rule is aimed at prevent-ing bhikkhus from abusing the generosity of the person sponsoring the building work by using too much roofing material. In either case, the Commentary's interpretation has its logic, in that an overloaded roof would be more burdensome to the dwelling and to the sponsor than an overloaded window or door frame would be.

A supplementary regulation arising from the origin story is that one should not perform any building operations, including supervising, where grain is growing.

The offenses here are as follows: a pacittiya for each piece of roofing beyond the allowable three layers, and a dukkata for doing or directing the work while standing where crops are growing. These offenses apply regardless of whether one is doing the work oneself or having it done. They also apply whether one is building a new dwelling or having an old one repaired.

Perception is not a factor here. If one happens to miscount the number of layers of plaster or roofing material, one is still not immune from an offense.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, these regulations do not apply to "an abode in a cave, a grass hut, (a dwelling) for the use of another, (a dwelling built) by means of one's own resources, or anything other than a dwelling." The Sub-commentary argues from the wording of the rule--the fact that it refers to "a large dwelling"--that the regulations also do not apply to small dwellings built to the standard measurement specified under Sanghadisesa 6: i.e., no larger than 3 by 1.75 meters.

Summary: When a bhikkhu is building or repairing a large dwelling for his own use, using resources donated by another, he may not reinforce the window or door frames with more than three layers of roofing material or plaster. To exceed this is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

20. Should any bhikkhu knowingly pour water containing living beings--or have it poured--on grass or on clay, it is to be confessed.

This is an offense with four factors.

Object. Water containing living creatures. As the K/Commentary's contribution to the next factor shows, this includes things like mosquito larvae, but not beings so small they cannot be seen.

Perception. One knows that they are there (from having seen or heard them, says the K/Commentary) and that they will die from the factor of effort, defined below.

If one is in doubt as to whether water contains living beings, then to use it in a way which would cause their death if they were there is to commit a dukkata.

Effort. Because of a peculiarity of Pali syntax, this rule can also be interpreted as reading, "Should any bhikkhu knowingly pour grass or clay--or have it poured--in water containing living beings, it is to be confessed." The Commentary states that both readings are correct. It also states that "grass and clay" cover any material which would cause death to living beings in the water. Thus actions covered by this rule would include such things as emptying old water from a flower vase onto the ground, using water to make cement, or pouring a toxic chemical or heavy pollutant into the water.

Unlike some of the other rules that deal with giving orders, simply giving the order to pour is enough to fulfill this factor. Thus, for example, a bhikkhu who tells someone else to dump an aquarium of fish on the floor incurs a pacittiya for giving the order, and another pacittiya when the other person does as told.

Intention. This factor is fulfilled simply by the desire to pour the water or to have it poured (or to pour "grass and clay" into the water or to have it poured). As the K/Commentary notes, one need not have murderous intent towards the living beings in order to fulfill this factor. For example, if after perceiving that the water contains insects, one chooses to ignore their existence and pours the water on a burning log--not to kill the insects, but to put out the fire--one commits an offense all the same.

Result is not a factor here. Whether or not the living beings actually die is of no consequence in determining the offense.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in using water containing living beings in any of the ways covered by this rule unknowingly--e.g., not knowing that it contains living beings; pouring a toxic chemical into the water thinking it to be harmless;

unthinkingly--e.g., heating a kettle of water on the stove, seeing that it has tadpoles in it and in a knee-jerk reaction dumping the water out on the ground so that they won't be boiled to death; or unintentionally--e.g., accidentally knocking over a goldfish bowl.

However, a bhikkhu should always check water before using it. One practical method for checking large amounts of water is to look at two or three cupfuls as samples: If no living being are visible in the samples, the water may be used without further check. An alternative method is to use a filter, being mindful to return any living beings caught in the filter to some other water in good time.

Watering plants. The topic of watering plants comes up in the Commentary's discussion of the bad habits of the bhikkhus at Kitagiri mentioned under Sanghadisesa 13. There it says that even if the water has no discernable life, to use it or have someone else use it to water plants with the purpose of corrupting families with gifts from the plant, incurs a dukkata. In cases of this sort, one is not allowed to use kappiya vohara or any other way of indicating one's desire that the plant be watered.

If one wants to use the fruits or flowers of the plant in other ways --to eat the fruit oneself, to make a gift of fruit to the Community, to use the flowers as an offering to a Buddha image, etc.--one may not water it oneself, but there is no offense in getting someone else to water it if one uses kappiya vohara ("Look at how dry this plant is !" "If it doesn't get any water, it's going to die.")

If one wants the plant to grow for other reasons--for the sake of its shade, or as part of a decorative garden or forest--there is no offense in watering it oneself as long as one uses water with no discernable life in it. Two of the ancient commentaries add that if one simply desires shade, a garden or a forest, one may plant the plant oneself as long as one places it in earth which would not count as "soil" (jata-pathavi) under Pacittiya 10.

Summary: To pour water which one knows to contain living beings--or to have it poured--on grass or clay; or to pour anything which would kill the beings into such water--or to have it poured--is a pacittiya offense.

Three: The Exhortation Chapter

21. Should any bhikkhu, unauthorized, exhort the bhikkhunis, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time , elder bhikkhus, having exhorted the bhikkhunis, became recipients of robes, alms, lodgings and medicines for the sick. (According to the Commentary, if a bhikkhu gave a good exhortation to the bhikkhunis, they would tell their supporters, who in turn would provide the exhorter with requisites.) The thought occurred to some group-of-six bhikkhus: 'At present, elder bhikkhus, having exhorted the bhikkhunis, have become recipients of robes, alms, lodgings and medicines for the sick. Let's exhort the bhikkhunis, too.' So, having approached the bhikkhunis, they said, 'Approach us, sisters, and we too will exhort you.'

"So the bhikkhunis went to where the group-of-six bhikkhus were staying, and on arrival, having bowed down, sat to one side. Then the group-of-six bhikkhus, after giving just a trifling Dhamma talk, and spending the day with 'animal talk', dismissed the bhikkhunis: 'You may go, now, sisters.'

"Then the bhikkhunis went to where the Blessed One was staying, and on arrival, having bowed down, stood to one side. As they were standing there, the Blessed One addressed them: 'Was the exhortation effective, bhikkhunis?'

"'Venerable sir, since when was the exhortation effective? The group-of-six bhikkhus, giving just a trifling Dhamma talk, dismissed us after spending the day with 'animal talk'.'"

When MahaPajapati Gotami, the Buddha's aunt and stepmother, requested that the Buddha establish an order of bhikkhunis, he did so on the condition that she and all future bhikkhunis accept eight vows of respect (garu-dhamma). In short:

1) Even a bhikkhuni who has been ordained over a century must pay homage to a bhikkhu ordained that very day.

2) A bhikkhuni must not spend the rains in a residence where there is no bhikkhu (within half a league, says the Commentary).

3) Every half month a bhikkhuni should expect two things from the Community of bhikkhus: the date of Patimokkha recitation, and an exhortation.

4) At the end of the rains, every bhikkhuni should invite criticism both from the Community of bhikkhunis and from the Community of bhikkhus.

5) A bhikkhuni who has broken any of the vows of respect must undergo penance (manatta) for half a month under both Communities.

6) A woman may become ordained as a bhikkhuni only after becoming female novice, and then, as a probationer, observing the first six precepts without lapse for two full years.

7) A bhikkhuni is not to insult or abuse a bhikkhu in any way.

8) A bhikkhuni may not instruct a bhikkhu, although a bhikkhu may instruct a bhikkhuni.

This rule deals with the bi-weekly exhortation mentioned in vow #3. The pattern for the exhortation was that once a bhikkhu had been chosen by the bhikkhus to exhort the bhikkhunis, he was to clean and prepare the place for the exhortation within the monastery where he was dwelling. He was then to find a companion, and wait for their arrival. When the bhikkhunis had come, he was to ask if all the bhikkhunis were present, and if they were observing the eight vows of respect. If they were, he was then to exhort them on any topic dealing with the Dhamma. If they weren't, he was to exhort them on the eight vows.

Since the eight vows form the heart of the exhortation, the two factors for the full offense under this rule are defined as follows:

1) Object: A bhikkhuni or group of bhikkhunis.

2) Effort: A bhikkhu exhorts her/them concerning the eight respected vows when he has not been properly authorized to do so, and has not been invited by the bhikkhuni(s) to give them instruction.

Object. A bhikkhuni had to undergo a double ordination--first in the Bhikkhuni Sangha, and then in the Bhikkhu Sangha--before she was considered fully ordained. Thus only a bhikkhuni with the full double ordination is grounds for a pacittiya here. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination, under the Bhikkhuni Sangha, is grounds for a dukkata, while female probationers and female novices are not grounds for an offense.

Effort. For a bhikkhu--not properly authorized--to exhort the bhikkhunis on any topic other than the eight vows is grounds for a dukkata.

The authorization. When this rule was still newly-formulated, some group-of-six bhikkhus simply authorized one another to continue exhorting the bhikkhunis. This forced the Buddha to establish stringent standards for the type of bhikkhu who could properly be authorized. They were, in short:

He is scrupulously virtuous.

He is very learned.

He thoroughly understands the qualities of the holy life.

He has mastered both the bhikkhus' Patimokkha and the bhikkhunis' Patimokkha.

He has a pleasing voice and delivery.

He is well-liked by the bhikkhunis.

He never, before his ordination, violated a bhikkhuni, female probationer or female novice.

He has been a bhikkhu for at least 20 years.

As the Commentary notes, these are qualities which the group of six never possessed even in their dreams.

If a bhikkhu has been improperly authorized--e.g., he does not meet with these qualifications--then even if he perceives himself as properly authorized, his perception is not a mitigating factor: He does not count as authorized under this rule.

Non-offenses. Although this rule grew from a time when bhik-khus were eager to exhort the bhikkhunis, times changed. The Cullavagga (X.9.5) deals with a period when the bhikkhus tried to avoid exhorting the bhikkhunis, and Cv.X.9.4 tells what should be done when there is no bhikkhu qualified to exhort them. (The bhikkhus were to tell them, "Continue striving in good faith.")

In cases such as these, though, the bhikkhunis were not left adrift. They could approach any bhikkhu they admired and ask him for instruction. Thus the no-offense clauses here say, "There is no offense in giving and exposition (the Commentary interprets this as chanting the eight vows in Pali), giving the interrogation (this, accord-ing to the Commentary, means reciting the ancient commentary, which is hardly likely; more probably, it means questioning the bhik-khunis as to whether or not they are observing the eight vows), and then, after being requested by the bhikkhunis, giving instruction. There is also no offense if, on being asked a question by a bhikkhuni, one answers her question, or if a bhikkhuni happens to overhear any instruction one is giving for the sake of another person.

Summary: Exhorting the bhikkhunis about the eight vows of respect--except when one has been authorized to do so by the bhikkhus--is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

22. Should any bhikkhu, even if authorized, exhort the bhikkhunis after sunset, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time it was Ven. Culapanthaka's turn to exhort the bhikkhunis. The bhikkhunis said, 'Today the exhortation won't be effective, for Ven. Culapanthaka will simply repeat the same old stanza over and over again.'

"Then the bhikkhunis approached Ven. Culapanthaka, and on arrival, having paid homage to him, sat down to one side. As they were sitting there, Ven. Culapanthaka said to them, 'Are you all present, sisters?'

"'Yes, sir, we are all present.'

"'Are the eight vows of respect being observed?'

"'Yes, sir, they are being observed.'

"'This, sisters, is the exhortation.' And having given it to them, he repeated it over and over again:

Exalted in mind, uncomplacent,

The sage, trained in sagacity's ways:

He has no sorrows, one such as this,

Calmed and ever mindful.

"The bhikkhunis said, 'Didn't we say so? Today the exhortation won't be effective, for now Ven. Culapanthaka will simply repeat the same old stanza over and over again.'

"Ven. Culapanthaka heard the bhikkhunis' conversation. Rising up into the air, he walked back and forth in space, in the sky, stood, sat, lay down, emitted smoke, emitted flames and dis-appeared, repeating the same old stanza and many other sayings of the Buddha. The bhikkhunis said, 'Isn't it amazing? Isn't it astounding? Never before has there been an exhortation as effective as this!'

"Then Ven. Culapanthaka, having exhorted the bhikkhunis until nightfall, dismissed them: 'You may go, sisters.' So the bhikkhunis--the gates of the city being closed--spent the night outside the city walls and entered the city only at morning. People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'These bhikkhunis are unchaste. Having spent the night with the bhikkhus in the monastery, only now are they entering the city.'"

The factors for the full offense here are two:

Object. As with the preceding rule, a bhikkhuni or group of bhik-khunis who have received the double ordination are grounds for a pacittiya here. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination, under the Bhikkhuni Sangha, is grounds for a dukkata, while female probationers and female novices are not grounds for an offense.

Effort. One teaches any Dhamma to the bhikkhuni(s) after the sun has set.

Non-offenses. Although the origin story suggests that it is not wise in any case to teach bhikkhunis after sunset, because of the suspicions it may provoke, the no-offense clauses give more respect to the bhikkhunis's desire for instruction than to the fear of gossiping lay people. As under the preceding rule, a bhikkhu may instruct bhikkhunis after sunset if they request it or if a bhikkhuni asks him a question. And as before, if a bhikkhuni happens to overhear any instruction he is giving for the sake of another after sunset, he commits no offense.

Summary: Exhorting bhikkhunis on any topic at all after sunset--except when they request it--is a pacittiya offense.

***

23. Should any bhikkhu, having gone to the bhikkhunis' quarters, exhort the bhikkhunis--except at the proper occasion--it is to be confessed. Here the proper occasion is this: A bhikkhuni is ill. This is the proper occasion here.

Here again there are two factors for the full offense:

Object. A bhikkhuni who is not ill. "Ill" means that she is unable to go to an exhortation or to a "samvasa", which none of the texts define but which probably means any official communal meeting of the bhikkhunis.

As with the preceding rule, a bhikkhuni or group of bhikkhunis who have received the double ordination are grounds for a pacittiya here. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination, under the Bhikkhuni Sangha, is grounds for a dukkata, while female probationers and female novices are not grounds for an offense.

Effort. One goes to her residence--any place where a bhikkhuni has spent at least one night--and exhorts her concerning the eight respected vows. Exhorting about any other topic is grounds for a dukkata.

Non-offenses. As the rule states, there is no offense for the bhik-khu who goes to the bhikkhunis' quarters to exhort an ill bhikkhuni. Otherwise, the no-offense clauses are identical with those for the preceding rule. Here again, a bhikkhuni's desire for instruction is considered more important than the wagging tongues of the laity.

Summary: Going to the bhikkhunis' quarters and exhorting a bhikkhuni about the eight vows of respect--except when she is ill or has requested the instruction--is a pacittiya offense.

***

24. Should any bhikkhu say that the bhikkhus exhort the bhikkhunis for the sake of personal gain, it is to be confessed.

Here the factors for the full offense are three:

Object. A bhikkhu who has been properly authorized to teach the bhikkhunis, and who is not teaching for the sake of personal gain. If the bhikkhu has not been properly authorized, he is not grounds for an offense.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here: The bhikkhu's actual status--properly or improperly authorized--is what determines whether or not this factor is fulfilled. And although the texts do not touch on this point, it would seem that if the bhikkhu actually does not aim at personal gain, one would incur a pacittiya in saying that he does, regardless of how one perceives the case.

Intention. One wants to criticize, discredit or shame him.

Effort. One accuses him of teaching for the sake of personal gain: either material gain--gifts of robes, almsfood, etc.--or immaterial gain, such as respect, homage or veneration.

Non-offenses. If the bhikkhu does actually teach for the sake of personal gain, then there is no offense in stating the facts of the case.

Summary: Saying that a properly authorized bhikkhu exhorts the bhikkhunis for the sake of personal gain--when in fact that is not the case--is a pacittiya offense.

***

25. Should any bhikkhu give robe-material to a bhikkhuni unrelated to him, except in exchange, it is to be confessed.

This rule is the counterpart to NP 5. The full offense is composed of two factors: object and effort.

Object. Any piece of robe cloth of the six suitable kinds, measur-ing at least four by eight fingerbreadths. Other requisites are not grounds for an offense.

Effort. The bhikkhu gives such cloth to an unrelated bhikkhuni and does not receive anything from her in exchange.

"Unrelated bhikkhuni" here is defined in the same terms as under NP 5: a bhikkhuni who has received the double ordination and is not related to the bhikkhu back through their great x 7 grandfathers. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination, from the bhik-khunis, is grounds for a dukkata. Female probationers and female novices are not grounds for an offense.

Perception here is not a mitigating factor: According to the Vibhanga, even if a bhikkhu perceives an unrelated bhikkhuni as related, he is still subject to the penalty.

The Commentary states that giving need not be hand-to-hand. If a bhikkhu simply places robe cloth near a bhikkhuni as his way of giving it to her, and she accepts it as given, this factor is fulfilled.

As for the item given in exchange for the cloth, the Vibhanga states that it can be worth much more then the cloth or much less. Buddhaghosa quotes the Mahapaccari, one of the ancient commen-taries, saying that even if, in return for the cloth, the bhikkhuni gives the bhikkhu a piece of yellow myrobalan--a medicinal fruit, one of the cheapest things imaginable in India--he escapes the penalty under this rule.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

if the bhikkhuni is a relation;

if the bhikkhuni is not related, but she gives one something in exchange;

if the bhikkhuni takes the cloth on trust;

if she borrows the cloth;

if one gives her a non-cloth requisite;

if one gives robe cloth to a female probationer or female novice.

Summary: Giving robe cloth to an unrelated bhikkhuni without receiving anything in exchange is a pacittiya offense.

***

26. Should any bhikkhu sew a robe or have it sewn for a bhikkhuni unrelated to him, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time Ven. Udayin had become skilled at making robes. A certain bhikkhuni went to where he was staying, and on arrival said,

'Be so good, Ven. sir, as to sew me a robe.' So Ven. Udayin, having sewed a robe for the bhikkhuni, having made it well-dyed and well-finished, having embroidered an obscene design in the middle (a man and woman in mid-intercourse, done in full color, says the Commentary) and having folded it up, placed it to one side. Then the bhikkhuni went to him and on arrival said, 'Where is the robe, Ven. sir?'

"'Here you are, sister. Take this robe as it is folded and place it aside. When the Community of bhikkhunis comes for exhortation, put it on and come at the back of the line.'

"So the bhikkhuni took the robe as it was folded and placed it aside. When the Community of bhikkhunis came for exhortation, she put it on and came at the back of the line. People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How brazen these nuns are, how shameless and sly, in that they embroider obscene designs on a robe!'

"The bhikkhunis said, 'Whose work is this?'

"'Master Udayin's,' the bhikkhuni answered.

"'A thing like this should not adorn even those who are brazen, shameless and sly. It is Master Udayin's, isn't it?'"

The full offense here has three factors:

1) Effort: One sews--or gets someone else to sew--

2) Object: a robe

3) Intention: for the sake of a bhikkhuni unrelated to oneself.

Effort. The Vibhanga says that there is a pacittiya for every stitch one makes in the robe. If one gets someone else to sew the robe, there is a pacittiya in giving the command or making the request, and another pacittiya when the other person does as commanded/ requested, no matter how many stitches he/she makes.

Object. Robe here means any of the six kinds of robe material made into a robe which can be worn. Other cloth requisites are not grounds for an offense.

Intention. Unrelated bhikkhuni here is defined in the same terms as under the preceding rule: a bhikkhuni who has received the double ordination and is not related to the bhikkhu back through their great x 7 grandfathers. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination, from the bhikkhunis, is grounds for a dukkata. Female probationers and female novices are not grounds for an offense.

Perception here is not a mitigating factor: According to the Vibhanga, even if a bhikkhu perceives an unrelated bhikkhuni as related, he is still subject to the penalty.

The Commentary states that if Bhikkhu X is sewing a robe for a bhikkhuni related to him, and Bhikkhu Y--who is not related to her--helps him sew it, Bhikkhu Y incurs a pacittiya for every stitch he sews in the robe.

The Sub-commentary adds, though, that if Bhikkhu Y does not know that the robe is for the bhikkhuni, he incurs no offense.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in sewing a cloth requisite other than a robe for an unrelated bhikkhuni, in sewing anything for a bhikkhuni who is a relation, or in sewing anything for a female probationer or female novice, related or not.

Summary: Sewing a robe--or having one sewn--for an unrelated bhikkhuni is a pacittiya offense.

***

27. Should any bhikkhu, by arrangement, travel together with a bhikkhuni, even for the interval between one village and the next, except at the proper occasion, it is to be confessed. Here the proper occasion is this: The road is to be traveled by caravan, and is considered dubious and risky. This is the proper occasion here.

Here the full offense has two factors:

1) Object: A bhikkhuni

2) Effort: (a) One makes an arrangement together with her to travel together; (b) one actually travels together with her as arranged (c) from one village to another (d) except at the allowable time.

Object. A bhikkhuni who has received the double ordination is grounds for a pacittiya here. Any other woman would come under Pacittiya 67.

Making an arrangement. According to the Vibhanga, the bhikkhu must give his verbal consent to the arrangement for this part of the factor to be fulfilled. In other words, if the bhikkhuni proposes the arrangement, and he agrees; or he proposes it, regard-less of whether or not she agrees, this part of the factor is fulfilled. The penalty for fulfilling it is a dukkata.

If the bhikkhuni proposes the arrangement, but the bhikkhu does not give his verbal assent, then even if he does travel together as she proposed, he incurs no pacittiya in doing so.

Going as arranged. If a specific time frame was part of the arrangement, then the two parties must begin traveling together within that time frame for this factor to be fulfilled. If they happen to start out earlier or later than arranged, again the bhikkhu incurs no penalty.

From one village to another. There is some controversy as to whether this phrase--gamantara--means "from one village to another" or "from one house to another." According to Buddhaghosa, the ancient commentaries opted for "village", while he opts for "house". The ancient commentaries have the support of the Canon here, in that the Bhikkhunis' Sanghadisesa 3 & Pacittiya 37 also use the term in question, and there it definitely means the area outside a village, and not the interval from one house to another within a village.

There is a pacittiya for every village-to-village interval one passes. In an area where there are no villages--i.e., says the Sub-commentary, where villages are further than half a league (8 km. or 5 miles) apart--there is a pacittiya for every half-league one travels together as arranged.

The allowable occasions. A road to be traveled by caravan is one too dubious or risky to travel alone. (Some have translated this as a "road to be traveled with a weapon," but since bhikkhus and bhikkhunis are not allowed even to touch weapons, it's a doubtful translation at best.)

Dubious means that thieves are known to be about; risky, that people are known to have been beaten, plundered or robbed by them.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

if the bhikkhu and bhikkhuni happen to travel together without having made an arrangement;

if the bhikkhuni proposes an arrangement, while the bhikkhu does not give his verbal assent;

if they travel on a dubious and risky road;

or if there are other dangers. The Commentary illustrates this last contingency with a stock phrase whose meaning admits two interpretations. It starts, "Savage tribes are attacking the countryside," and then comes the ambiguous part, either, "People mount their wheels (their carriages, says the Sub-commentary)," or, what is more likely, "The tribes seize power (another meaning for 'wheel')."

Summary: Traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhuni from one village to another--except when the road is risky or there are other dangers--is a pacittiya offense.

***

28. Should any bhikkhu, by arrangement, get in the same boat with a bhikkhuni going upstream or downstream--except to cross over to the other bank --it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time, some group-of-six bhikkhus, having made an arrangement with some bhikkhunis, got in the same boat with them. People were annoyed and offended and spread it about: 'Just as we amuse ourselves with our wives in a boat, so too these Sakyan contemplatives, having made an arrangement with bhikkhunis, amuse themselves in a boat...'"

(The Buddha then formulated the first version of this rule, without the exception for crossing over to the other bank.)

"Then at that time a number of bhikkhus and bhikkhunis were traveling on the road from Saketa to Savatthi. Along the way, they had to cross over a river. The bhikkhunis said to the bhikkhus, 'We will cross over with the masters.'

"'Sisters, it isn't proper for bhikkhus, having made an arrange-ment, to get in the same boat with bhikkhunis. Either you go first, or we'll go first.'

"'The masters are outstanding men. Let the masters go first.'

"Then as the bhikkhunis were crossing over afterward, thieves robbed them and raped them."

The factors for the full offense here are similar to those for the previous rule.

1) Object: A bhikkhuni

2) Effort: (a) One makes an arrangement together with her to get in a boat together; (b) one actually travels together with her as arranged, going upstream or downstream along a river (c) from one village to another.

Object. A bhikkhuni who has received the double ordination is grounds for a pacittiya here. One who has received only her first ordination--from the Bhikkhuni Sangha--would seem to be grounds for a dukkata, and female probationers and female novices grounds for no offense, but none of the texts mention these points.

Effort. The conditions for making an arrangement here are iden-tical with those under the preceding rule: If the bhikkhuni proposes the arrangement, and the bhikkhu agrees; or he bhikkhu proposes it, regardless of whether or not she agrees, this part of the factor is fulfilled and he incurs a dukkata.

The next part of the factor--going as arranged--is fulfilled only if they get in the boat together within the time frame they had agreed on. If they get in earlier or later, there is no grounds for an offense.

Once they get in the boat as arranged, they incur a pacittiya for every village-to-village interval they pass along the riverbank while going upstream or downstream. If the villages are further than 8 km. apart, they incur a pacittiya for every 8 km. they travel together.

The commentaries try to add "intention" as an additional factor here--the bhikkhu's purpose in traveling with the bhikkhuni(s) is to amuse himself--but there is no basis for this in the Vibhanga.

Non-offenses. As the rule says, there is no offense in making an arrangement and crossing over a river with a bhikkhuni. The Commentary adds that this applies not only to rivers, but also to oceans: If one travels from one seaport to another by arrangement with a bhikkhuni, no penalty is incurred.

The K/Commentary goes even further, and says that this rule applies only to rivers, and that a bhikkhu seeking to amuse himself with a bhikkhuni may make a date with her and travel around the ocean as much as he likes without incurring an offense. The Sub-commentary disagrees here, saying that a bhikkhu traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhuni in a boat on the ocean incurs a dukkata for every 8 km. they travel. The Sub-commentary's position here is more in keeping with the Great Standards, and so carries more weight.

Finally, there is no offense if:

the bhikkhu and bhikkhuni happen to travel together in the same boat without having made an arrangement;

the bhikkhuni proposes an arrangement, while the bhikkhu does not give his verbal assent; or there are dangers.

Summary: Traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhu upriver or downriver in the same boat--except when crossing a river--is a pacittiya offense.

***

29. Should any bhikkhu knowingly eat almsfood donated through the prompting of a bhikkhuni, except for food which householders had already intended for him prior (to her prompting), it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time Bhikkhuni Thullananda regularly took her meals with a certain family. Then one day the head of the house-hold invited some senior monks to a meal. Bhikkhuni Thullananda, dressing in the early morning, carrying her robe and bowl, went to the family's place and on arrival said to the head of the household, 'Why has so much food been prepared?'

"'I have invited some senior bhikkhus for a meal.'

"'But who, to you, are senior bhikkhus?'

"'Ven. Sariputta, Ven. Maha Moggallana, Ven. Maha Kaccana, Ven. Maha Kotthita, Ven. Maha Kappina, Ven. Maha Cunda, Ven. Anuruddha, Ven. Revata, Ven. Upali, Ven. Ananda, Ven. Rahula.'

"'But why have you invited these scoundrels masquerading as great heroes?'

"'And who, to you, are great heroes?'

"'Ven. Devadatta, Ven. Kokakalika, Ven. Katamoraka Tissaka, Ven. Khanda Deviyaputta, Ven. Samuddadatta....' At that point, Bhikkhuni Thullananda was interrupted in mid-sentence when the senior monks entered. 'Is it true, householder, that you have invited these great heroes?'

"'Just now you made them out to be scoundrels, and now great heroes.' So he threw her out of the house and put an end to her regular meals."

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: Any of the five staple foods (see the preface to the Food Chapter, below) offered by a lay person at the instigation of a bhikkhuni.

2) Perception: One knows that it was offered at her instigation.

3) Effort: One eats the food.

Object. Any of the five staple foods is grounds for a pacittiya. Any edible aside from them is not grounds for an offense.

Bhikkhuni here refers to one who has received the double ordination. The K/Commentary says that one who has received only her first ordination--from the Bhikkhuni Sangha--is grounds for a dukkata, while the Vibhanga notes that female novices and female probationers are not grounds for an offense.

Instigating means that the bhikkhuni praises Bhikkhu X to a lay person who is not already planning to give him food, and concludes with the suggestion that food be presented to him. If the lay person was already planning to give food to X, this factor is not fulfilled. The Vibhanga defines "already planning to give food" in the following terms: Either X and the lay person are related, the lay person has previously invited X to ask for food, or the lay person already normally prepares food for X. The Commentary adds that if the lay person had already prepared food for X before the bhikkhuni's instigation, X incurs no penalty in eating that food even if none of the Vibhanga's three conditions apply.

Perception. If one is in doubt as to whether or not the food was offered at a bhikkhuni's instigation, the penalty for eating it is a dukkata regardless of whether or not it was. If one does not know, then even if it was, there is no offense.

Effort. There is a dukkata for accepting food, with the purpose of eating it and knowing that it was offered as the result of a bhikkhuni's instigation; and a pacittiya for every mouthful one eats.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

if one does not know,

if one eats any edible aside from the five staples offered at a bhikkhuni's instigation, if the lay person was instigated by a female probationer or female novice, or if the lay person was already planning to present one with the food before the bhikkhuni's instigation. As we noted above, one's relatives, people who have invited one to ask for food and people who ordinarily provide one with food also fit under this allowance.

Summary: To eat any of the five staple foods which a lay person has offered as the result of a bhikkhuni's prompting--unless the lay person was already planning to offer the food before her prompting--is a pacittiya offense.

***

30. Should any bhikkhu sit in private alone with a bhikkhuni, it is to be confessed.

This rule is completely subsumed under another one--Pacittiya 45--the only instance where this happens in the Patimokkha. All explanations are given under that rule.

Summary: Sitting or lying down with a bhikkhuni in a place out of sight and out of hearing with no one else present is a pacittiya offense.

Four: The Food Chapter

Many of the rules in this chapter classify food into two groups: bhojana (consumables) and khadiniya (chewables). Scholars usually translate the two as "softer food" and "harder food", although the hardness and softness of a particular food has little to do with the category it belongs to. A translation closer to the essence of each category would be "staple food" and "non-staple food". The distinc-tion between the two is important, for it is often the deciding factor between what is and is not an offense. Note, however, that the term staple here covers only what was considered staple in the time of the Buddha. Bread, pasta and potatoes, which are staples in the West, were not always staples in India at that time, and so do not always fit into this category.

Staple foods are consistently defined as five sorts of foods, although the precise definitions of the first two are a matter of controversy.

1) Cooked grains. The Vibhanga defines this as seven types of cooked grain, but there is disagreement on the identity of some of the seven. They are sali (BD translates this as rice; the Thais, wheat); vihi (BD again has rice, and the Thais agree); yava (BD has barley; the Thais, glutinous rice); godhuma (BD has wheat; the Thais, tares); kangu (both BD and the Thais identify this as millet or sorghum); varaka (BD doesn't identify this beyond saying that it is a bean; the Thais are probably right in identifying it as Job's tears); and kudru-saka (the Commentary states that this term covers all forms of grain which come from grass--rye would be an example in the West). Whatever the precise definitions of these terms, though, we could argue from the Great Standards that any grain cooked as a staple--including corn (maize) and oats--would fit into this category.

2) Kummasa. The Commentary says that this is a staple confection made out of yava, but doesn't describe it in any detail aside from saying that if the kummasa is made out of any of the other grains or mung beans, it doesn't count as a staple food. Mentions of kummasa in the Canon show that it was a very common staple that could form a rudimentary meal in and of itself, and would spoil if left overnight.

3) Sattu. Any of the seven types of grain dried or roasted and pounded into meal.

4) Fish. All seafood.

5) Meat. The flesh of any bipeds or quadripeds, except for that which is unallowable. The following types of meat are unallowable: the flesh of human beings, elephants, horses, dogs, snakes, lions, tigers, leopards, bears and hyenas (panthers). Human beings, horses and elephants were regarded as too noble to be used as food. The other types of meat were forbidden either on grounds that they were repulsive ("People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can these Sakyan contemplatives eat dog meat? Dogs are loathsome, disgusting'") or dangerous (bhikkhus, smelling of lion's flesh, went into the jungle; the lions there were offended and annoyed and attacked them).

To eat human flesh incurs a thullaccaya; to eat any of the other unallowable types, a dukkata (Mv.VI.23.9-15). If a bhikkhu is uncertain as to the identity of any meat presented to him, he incurs a dukkata if he doesn't ask the donor what it is (Mv.VI.23.9).

Fish or meat, even if of an allowable kind, is unallowable if raw. Thus bhikkhus may not eat steak tartare, sashami, oysters on the half-shell, etc. (Raw flesh and blood are allowed at Mv.VI.10.2 only when one is possessed by non-human beings (!)) Furthermore, even cooked fish or meat of an allowable kind is unallowable if the bhikkhu sees, hears or suspects that the animal was killed specifically for the purpose of feeding bhikkhus (Mv.VI.31.14).

Non-staple foods are defined according to context:

a) in Pacittiyas 35-38: every edible outside of staple foods, juice drinks, the five tonics and medicines (see below).

b) in Pacittiya 40: every edible outside of staple foods, water and toothwood.

c) in Pacittiya 41 (also the Bhikkhunis' Pacittiyas 44 & 54): every edible outside of staple foods, the five tonics, juice drinks, medicine and conjey.

The Commentary to Pacittiya 37 lists the following items as non-staple foods: flour and confections made of flour (cakes, bread and pasta made without eggs would be classed here); also, roots, tubers (this would include potatoes), lotus roots, sprouts, stems, bark, leaves, flowers, fruits, nuts, seed-meal, seeds and resins which are made into food. Any of these items made into medicines, though, would not be classed as a non-staple food.

The Commentary also makes reference to the fact that some societies use roots, tubers, confections made out of flour, etc., as staple foods, but it nowhere suggests that the definition of staple food be altered to fit the society in which one is living. Thus in the West we are left with a somewhat zig-zag line separating what are and are not staple foods for the purposes of the rules: Meal pounded from grain is a staple; flour ground from grain is not. Bread made with oat meal, corn meal, wheat germ, etc., would thus be a staple; bread made without any grain meal or eggs (see below) would not. The same holds true for pastries, noodles and pasta.

This means that it would be possible for a donor to provide bhikkhus with a full, strictly vegetarian meal that would include absolutely no staple foods. The wise policy in such a case, though, would be to treat the meal as if it did contain staple foods with reference to the rules (Pacittiya 33 & 35) that aim at saving face for the donor.

Conjey, the watery rice porridge or gruel commonly drunk before almsround in the time of the Buddha, is classed differently according to context. If it is so thick that it cannot be drunk and must be eaten with a spoon, it is regarded as a staple food (Mv.VI.25.7; Pacittiya 33). "Drinking conjey" is classed as a non-staple food under Pacittiyas 35-38 & 40, whereas it is considered as neither a staple nor a non-staple food in Pacittiya 41. The Commentary notes, though, that if drinking conjey has bits of meat or fish "larger than lettuce seeds" floating in it, it is a staple food.

Milk and buttermilk are classed as "finer staple foods" under Pacittiya 39 In other contexts they fit under the definition of non-staple food.

All other dairy products--except for fresh butter and ghee when used as tonics (see NP 23)--are non-staple foods.

Eggs are not mentioned in the Vibhanga or Khandhakas. Presum-ably they come under meat. If so, raw eggs are unallowable; and bread, pastries, noodles and pasta made with eggs are a staple food.

In addition to staple and non-staple foods, the Vibhanga to the rules in this chapter mentions three other classes of edibles: juice drinks, the five tonics and medicines.

Juice drinks include the freshly squeezed juice of sugar cane, lotus root, all fruits except grain, all leaves except cooked vegetables, and all flowers except liquorice (Mv.VI.35.6). According to the Commentary, the juice must be strained, and may be warmed by sun-light but not heated over a fire. (What category boiled juice would fit under, the Commentary does not say. The Vinaya Mukha maintains that it would fit under sugar in the five tonics.)

In discussing the Great Standards, the Commentary says that grain is a "great fruit", and thus the juice of any one of nine large fruits--palmyra fruit, coconut, jackfruit, breadfruit, bottle gourd, white gourd, muskmelon, watermelon and squash--would fall under the same class as the juice of grain: i.e., as a non-staple food, and not a juice drink. From this judgment, many Communities infer that the juice of any large fruit, such as pineapple or grapefruit, would also be classed as a non-staple food.

The Commentary notes further that if a bhikkhu himself makes a juice drink from fruit, etc., he has received, it counts as a non-staple food and must be consumed before noon.

The five tonics are discussed in detail under NP 23.

Medicines. According to the Mahavagga (VI.3.1-8), any items in the six following categories which, by themselves, are not used as staple or non-staple food are medicines: roots, astringent decoctions, leaves, fruits, resins and salts. For example, under fruits: Oranges and apples are not medicines, but pepper, nutmeg and cardamom are. Most modern medicines would fit under the category of salts. Using the Great Standards, we can say that any edible which is used as a medicine but does not fit under the categories of staple or non-staple food, juice drinks or the five tonics, would fit here.

Keeping and consuming. Each of the four basic classes of edibles--food, juice drinks, the five tonics and medicines--has its "life-span", the period during which it may be kept and consumed. Food may be kept and consumed until noon of the day it is received; juice drinks, until dawn of the following day; the five tonics, until dawn of the seventh day after they are received; and medicines, throughout one's life.

Edibles made from ingredients which have different life-spans--e.g., salted beef, honeyed cough syrup, sugared orange juice--have the same life-span as the ingredient with the shortest life-span. Thus salted beef is treated as beef, honeyed cough syrup as honey, and sugared orange juice as orange juice (Mv.VI.40.3).

Tonics and medicines, such as sugar and salt, received today may be eaten mixed with food or juice drinks received today, but not with food or juice drinks received on a later day. Medicine, such as salt, tea or cocoa, received at any time may be eaten mixed with any of the five tonics on any day of the tonic's life-span (Mv.VI.40.3).

***

31. A bhikkhu who is not ill may eat one meal at a public alms center. Should he eat more than that, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time a certain guild had prepared food at a public alms center not far from Savatthi. Some group-of-six bhikkhus, dressing in the morning, taking their bowls and robes, entered Savatthi for alms, but after not getting any almsfood, went to the public alms center. The people there said, 'At last the reverend ones have come,' and respectfully waited on them. Then on the second day and the third day, the group-of-six bhikkhus, dressing in the morning, taking their bowls and robes, entered Savatthi for alms, but after not getting any almsfood went to the public alms center and ate. The thought occurred to them, 'Why should we bother going back to the monastery? Tomorrow we'll have to come right back here.'

"So staying on and on right there, they ate the food of the public alms center. The members of other sects fled the place. People were offended and annoyed and spread it about: 'How can these Sakyan contemplatives stay on and on, eating the food of the public alms center? The food at the alms center isn't meant just for them; it's meant for absolutely everybody.'"

A public alms center is a place where all comers are offered as much food as they want, free of charge. Soup kitchens and shelters for the homeless, if they are run in this way, would fit under this rule.

A meal is defined as one which includes any of the five staple foods.

"Not ill" in this rule is defined as being able to leave the alms center.

The origin story seems to indicate that this rule is directed against staying on and eating day after day in the alms center. The Commen-tary, though, maintains that it forbids eating in the center two days running, without making any mention of whether the bhikkhu stays on at the center or not. To eat one day in a center belonging to one family (or group), and the next day in a center belonging to another family, it says, incurs no penalty.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense in taking a meal on the second day-- if it does not include any of the five staple foods;

if one is invited by the proprietors;

if one is ill;

if the food is specifically intended for bhikkhus; () or if the center determines the amount of food the recipients may take, rather than allowing them to take as much as they want. () The reason for this last allowance is that if the owners of the center were unhappy with having a bhikkhu eat there, they could give him very little or nothing at all.

Also, there is no offense in taking a second meal when "coming or going", which in the context of the origin story seems to mean that one may take a second meal if one simply leaves the center and then comes back. The Commentary, though, interprets this phrase as meaning "coming or going on a journey," and even here it says a meal should not be taken from the center two days running unless there are dangers, such as floods or robbers, which prevent one from continuing on one's way.

Summary: To eat food obtained from the same public alms center two days running, unless one is too ill to leave the center, is a pacittiya offense.

***

32. A group meal, except on the proper occasions, is to be confessed. Here the proper occasions are these: a time of illness, a time of giving cloth, a time of making robes, a time of going on a journey, a time of embarking on a boat, an extraordinary occasion, a time when the meal is supplied by contemplatives. These are the proper occasions here.

This is a rule which dates from Devadatta's efforts to create a schism in the Community of bhikkhus.

"Now at that time Devadatta, his gain and honor lost, ate his meals having asked and asked for them among households with his friends. (Here the Commentary elaborates: 'Thinking, "Don't let my group fall apart," he provided for his friends by eating his meals among householders together with his friends, having asked for them thus: "You give food to one bhikkhu. You give food to two."') People were offended and annoyed and spread it about: 'How can these Sakyan contemplatives eat their meals having asked and asked for them among households? Who isn't fond of well-prepared things? Who doesn't like sweet things?'"

Group meals. The Vibhanga defines a group meal as one consisting of any of the five types of staple foods to which four or more bhikkhus are invited. The Parivara (VI.2) adds that this rule covers any group meal that the donor offers at his/her own initiative, as well as any that results from a bhikkhu's requesting it.

In the early days of the Buddha's career, donors who wished to invite bhikkhus to their homes for a meal would invite an entire Community. Later, as Communities grew in size and there were times of scarcity in which donors were unable to invite entire Communities (Cv.VI.21.1), the Buddha allowed:

1) designated meals, at which a certain number of bhikkhus were to be served. The donors would ask the Community official in charge of meal distribution (bhattuddesaka) to designate so-and-so many bhikkhus "from the Community" to receive their meals. Bhikkhus would be sent on a rotating basis to these meals as they occurred.

2) invitational meals, to which specific bhikkhus were invited.

3) lot meals, for which the bhikkhus receiving the meals were to be chosen by lot; and

4) periodic meals, i.e., meals offered at regular intervals, such as every day or every uposatha day, to which bhikkhus were to be sent on a rotating basis, as with designated meals. The bhattuddesaka was to supervise the drawing of lots and keep track of the various rotating schedules. (The explanations of these various types of meal come partly from the Commentary. For a fuller explanation, see Appendix III.)

The no-offense clauses to this rule state that in addition to the exceptions mentioned in the rule, which we will discuss below, this rule does not apply to lot meals or periodic meals. The Commentary concludes from this--and on the surface it seems reasonable enough--that the rule thus applies to meals to which the entire Community is invited, and to invitational meals. (Buddhaghosa reports that there was disagreement among Vinaya authorities as to whether or not it applies to designated meals--more on this point below.)

The Commentary's conclusion, though, creates a problem when lay people want to invite Communities of more than three bhikkhus to their homes for a meal. Perhaps this problem is what induced the Commentary to interpret the Vibhanga's definition of group meal as meaning one in which the invitations specifically mention the word "meal", "food", or the type of meal or food to be served. ("Come to my house for breakfast tomorrow." "I know you don't often get a chance to eat Indian food, so I'm inviting you all over for chappatties and curry.") This interpretation has led to the custom of phrasing invitations to eat "in the morning" or to eat "before noon", so that groups of four or more bhikkhus may be invited without breaking this rule.

The Buddha's purposes for establishing this rule, though, are listed at Cv.VII.3.13 as follows: "For the restraint of evil-minded individuals, for the comfort of well-behaved bhikkhus, so that those with evil desires will not split the Community by (forming) a faction, and out of compassion for householders."

The Commentary's definition of "group meal" accomplishes none of the purposes: The custom of phrasing invitations to avoid the word "food" or "meal" does nothing to restrain evil-minded individuals, etc., and it actually creates trouble for lay people who do not know the custom, a point well-illustrated by the Commentary itself in an entertaining section on how to deal with a person whose invitation contains the word "meal": After getting the run-around from the bhattuddesaka--who apparently was not allowed to tell him in any straightforward way how to phrase his invitation, and so gave him a long series of hints--the poor man returns to his friends and makes a cryptic statement that the A/Sub-commentary translates as: "There are a lot of words that have to be spoken in this business of making an invitation. What's the use of them all?"

Two other arguments against the Commentary's interpretation are:

1) The Vibhanga's definition of "invited" in this rule is repeated word-for-word under Pacittiyas 33 & 46. If the factor of mentioning "food" or "meal", etc., is necessary for there to be an offense under this rule, it would have to be necessary under those rules as well, a proposal which makes no sense in their context, and which no one has ever suggested.

2) In the origin stories of two of the reformulations of the rule, bhikkhus refuse invitations on the grounds that they would break the rule against a group meal, and yet the invitations make no mention of food or meal.

An alternative interpretation. To find an alternative to the Commentary's explanation, we have to go back to the origin stories leading to the reformulations of the rule, where we find an interesting point: The invitations rejected by scrupulous bhikkhus on the grounds that they would break the rule all deal with "invitational" meals. In one of them, a naked ascetic invites a group of bhikkhus to an invitational meal is rejected on the grounds that it would be a group meal. He then goes to the Buddha and--after complaining that he should not be subjected to such treatment--rephrases the invitation, this time inviting the entire Community. This suggests that he felt that an invitation of this sort would not constitute a group meal.

His reasoning has its grounds in the Vinaya itself: Throughout the Vibhanga and Khandhakas, the word "group" is used to refer to any set of bhikkhus not forming a complete Community, and yet acting as an independent unit. This may be why the category of Community meal was not mentioned in the no-offense clauses: The arrangers of the Vibhanga may have felt that no mention was necessary, in that the term "group" meal automatically excluded Community meals.

Similar considerations suggest that designated meals may also be exempted from this rule even though they are not mentioned in the no-offense clauses. Invitations to such meals were customarily worded as requests for so-and-so many bhikkhus "from the Community", and thus--as a type of Community meal--they would by definition not be invitations to a "group" meal.

Since invitations to lot meals and periodic meals did not customar-ily make reference to the Community, the Vibhanga arrangers did have to make mention of those types of meals in order to exempt them.

We are left with a rule which applies exclusively to invitations to specific groups--not Communities--of four or more bhikkhus regardless of whether or not the invitation mentions the word "food" or "meal".

The rule in this form has the virtue of fulfilling the express purposes mentioned for it in the Cullavagga: It would prevent evil-minded bhikkhus and lay people from trying to exert influence over specific groups in the Community by arranging meals especially for them; and in the same way, it would prevent people with evil desires from creating a split in the Community. (Since the smallest faction that can create a split in the Community is four bhikkhus, the maximum number allowed at a group meal is three.)

The rule in this form would also contribute to the comfort of well-behaved bhikkhus in that invitations to meals would not be pre-empted by factions; and it would protect householders from being prey to the maneuverings of bhikkhus who would try to arrange for such meals as part of their strategy to create and maintain such factions. (Anyone who has lived in any of the traditional Buddhist countries knows only too well the influence of sweet-talking bhikkhus over unsuspecting or low-minded lay people. This sort of thing neither started nor ended with Devadatta.)

Since Community meals and designated meals would not form an opening for such machinations, there would be no reason to limit them to groups of three if lay people want to invite groups larger than that.

Thus the point at issue is not whether the invitation makes men-tion of food or meals, but whether it specifies the individual bhikkhus to be invited. If it specifies more than three individual bhikkhus--either naming them outright, or saying such things as "Ven. X and four of his friends," or "The five of you," etc.--the meal would count as a group meal.

Effort. To accept an invitation to a group meal incurs a dukkata; and to eat it, whether or not one realizes that it is a group meal, a pacittiya. Whether or not the bhikkhus actually eat together is not an issue. If they receive their food at the same invitation to a group meal, but then split up and eat it separately, they still incur the full offense.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga defines the "proper occasions" mentioned the rule--during which bhikkhus may eat a group meal without incurring an offense--as follows:

A time of giving cloth is the "robe season".

A time of making robes is any time the bhikkhus are making robes.

A time of journeying is any time the bhikkhus are about to go, are going, or have just returned from a journey of at least half a league (about five miles, or eight kilometers).

A time of embarking on a boat is any time the bhikkhus are about to embark, are embarking or are disembarking from a boat. No minimum distance for the boat journey is specified.

A time of illness is, in its minimal terms, a time when the bhikkhus' feet are split (and they cannot go for alms).

An extraordinary occasion is one in which there are so many bhikkhus in proportion to the donors giving alms that three bhikkhus going for alms can obtain enough food to support themselves, but not enough to support a fourth.

A meal supplied by contemplatives is one provided by a person who has taken on the state of religious wanderer. This the Commen-tary explains as meaning not only those ordained in other sects, but also one's own co-religionists (bhikkhus and samaneras) as well. This interpretation, though, would completely negate the effect of the rule. The word the Vibhanga uses for religious wanderer (paribbajaka) refers throughout the Canon to members of other sects, and never to Buddhist bhikkhus, bhikkhunis, samaneras, etc. We may safely assume that it carries the same range of meaning here. This exemption, as its origin story makes clear, was formulated to promote good relations between bhikkhus and members of other sects.

Aside from the proper occasions, there is no offense-- if groups of three or less eat a meal to which they have been specifically invited;

if the meal to which a group of four or more is invited does not include any of the five kinds of staple food;

or if bhikkhus, having walked separately for alms, eat assembled as a group.

No mention is made of whether or not bhikkhus can go for alms in groups of four or more, as is the custom at present in the rural areas of many Buddhist countries. From the various stories of bhikkhus and bhikkhunis on almsround that appear in the Canon, it seems that the custom was for them to go individually. Pacittiya 42 mentions bhikkhus going for alms as a pair, but the Vibhanga notes that they might receive less food that way than when going individually. Apparently, going as a group would not have made much sense in their cultural context.

As mentioned above, the Vibhanga also states that there is no offense for groups of any number eating periodic meals or lot meals; and as we have already stated, our interpretation would explicitly extend this exemption to cover Community and designated meals as well.

Summary: Eating a meal to which four or more individual bhikkhus have been specifically invited--except on special occasions--is a pacittiya offense.

***

33. An out-of-turn meal, except on the proper occasions, is to be confessed. Here the proper occasions are these: a time of illness, a time of giving cloth (the robe season), a time of making robes. These are the proper occasions here.

"Now at that time a succession of meals of sumptuous foods had been arranged in Vesali. The thought occurred to a certain poor laborer: 'The way these people respectfully present meals isn't at all a bad thing. What if I were to present a meal?' So he went to Kirapatika and said, 'Master, I want to prepare a meal for the Community of bhikkhus with the Buddha at its head. Please give me my wage.' Now Kirapatika had faith and confidence in the Buddha, so he gave the laborer more than his wage.

"Then the laborer went to the Lord, paid respect, sat down to one side and said, 'May the Lord together with the Community of bhikkhus consent to a meal with me tomorrow.'

"'You should be warned, friend, that the Community of bhikkhus is large.'

"'Let it be large, Lord. I have prepared plenty of jujube fruits. The beverages will be full of jujube mixture.'

"So the Lord consented by remaining silent...The bhikkhus heard, '...The beverages will be full of jujube mixture,' so right before the time of the meal they went for alms and ate. People heard, 'They say that the poor laborer has invited the Community of bhikkhus with the Buddha at its head,' so they took a great deal of staple and non-staple foods to the laborer...(When the time came for the meal) the Lord went to the poor laborer's house and sat on the appointed seat together with the Community of bhikkhus. Then the poor laborer served the bhikkhus in the dining area. The bhikkhus said, 'Just a little, friend. Give just a little.'

"'Don't take so little, thinking that I'm just a poor laborer. I have prepared plenty of staple and non-staple food. Take as much as you want.'

"'That's not the reason why we are taking so little, friend. Simply that we went for alms and ate just before the time for the meal: That's why we are taking so little.'

"The poor laborer was offended and annoyed and spread it about: 'How can these reverend ones eat elsewhere when they were invited by me? Am I not capable of giving them as much as they want?'"

Object. The term "out-of-turn meal" covers two sorts of situations: A bhikkhu has been invited to a meal consisting of any of the five staple foods but then either (1) goes elsewhere and eats another meal consisting of any of the five staple foods at the same time as the meal to which he was originally invited; or (2) eats a staple food right before going to the meal, as in the origin story.

Effort. The Vibhanga states that there is a dukkata for accepting--with the thought of eating it--food which will constitute an out-of-turn meal, and a pacittiya for every mouthful one eats. Whether or not one perceives it as an out-of-turn meal, the offense is the same.

Proper times. The special occasions when one may accept and eat an out-of-turn meal are defined as follows:

A time of illness is when one is unable to eat enough at one sitting, and so has to eat two or more times in a morning.

The times of giving cloth and making robes are defined as in the preceding rule. The reason for exempting them is that in the days of the Buddha, cloth and thread were hard to come by, and donors who wanted to offer them usually did so in conjunction with a meal. If these exemptions were not made, a bhikkhu making a robe, having already been invited to one meal, could not go to another meal beforehand to receive the cloth or thread offered there.

There is reason to believe that these three exemptions apply to out-of-turn meals of the type mentioned in the origin story: i.e., a bhikkhu is allowed in these cases to go to another meal before attending the meal to which he was originally invited.

Sharing invitations. As for the sort of out-of-turn meal where a bhikkhu invited to one meal goes to another meal instead, the Buddha in a story ancillary to this rule gives permission to share invitations: If a bhikkhu has received an invitation, he may give it to another bhikkhu or novice by saying, "I give my expectation of a meal to so-and-so." He is then allowed to eat elsewhere.

The Commentary regards the act of sharing as a mere formality: One may even make the statement outside of the other bhikkhu's presence without his knowing anything about it. This, though, is very unlikely to satisfy the original donor. The wise policy in this case would be to make the statement in the presence of the other bhikkhu--"I give my expectation of a meal to you"--making reasonably sure that he is able and willing to go.

The Vinaya Mukha adds, though, that if the donors of the meal have specifically invited one to a meal--i.e., one is going to an invitational meal rather than a designated meal (see Pacittiya 32)--it would be bad manners to share the invitation without making an agreement with the donors first.

Non-offenses. The no-offense clauses state that there is no penalty for a bhikkhu who, on receiving an invitation, states, "I will go for alms." This statement the Commentary explains as a refusal, and interprets the allowance as meaning that if a bhikkhu refuses an invitation, he is still allowed to eat another meal at the time for which the invitation was made. If the Vibhanga arrangers did mean this statement to be a refusal, though, it is probably for the sake of those bhikkhus who hold to the dhutanga vow of going for alms and not accepting invitations. If a bhikkhu who does not hold to such a vow refuses an invitation for a time for which he has no prior commitment, it is considered very bad manners. And if he were to later accept an invitation for a meal served at the same time as the meal he earlier refused, it would be extremely bad manners.

An alternative explanation for the statement, "I will go for alms," is that there is no offense if the bhikkhu lets the donor know before-hand that he will go for alms before the meal: He can have his alms meal first and then go to receive the meal offered by the donor. This would make room for the custom common in village monasteries throughout Theravadin countries, where invitations are usually for the pre-noon meal, and bhikkhus are commonly expected to have an early morning alms meal before that. (If this interpretation does not hold, most village bhikkhus would then probably claim a perpetual "time of illness" as their exemption from this rule.)

Meals which do not include any of the five staple foods are also exempted from this rule. Thus if one is invited to a meal and takes a snack of milk, drinking conjey, fruit, etc., beforehand, this would not constitute an offense--although to be in keeping with the spirit of the rule, one should not take so much as to spoil one's appetite for the meal.

There is no offense if, when invited to more than one meal on the same day, one goes to them in the order in which one received the invitations (but see Pacittiya 35); if one puts the food from the various invitations together in one's bowl and eats them at the same time; or, if invited by an entire village, one goes to eat anywhere in the village.

The Commentary, in discussing this point, mentions a situation that often occurs where there are very few bhikkhus in proportion to the number of donors: A bhikkhu has been invited to a meal, but before he leaves the monastery to go to the meal another group of donors arrives with food to place in his bowl; or after he arrives at the home of the original donor, another group of donors arrives with still more food. According to the Commentary he may accept the food of these various donors as long as he is careful--when he finally gets around to eating--to take his first mouthful from the food offered by the original donor.

Meals offered on a periodic basis and those for which bhikkhus are chosen by lot do not count as out-of-turn meals under this rule. The Canon offers no explanation for these last two exemptions, but the Commentary to Cullavagga VI shows that the custom was for many families to prepare such meals on the same day. This exemption would thus seem to provide for the situation where there are fewer bhikkhus than there are families preparing these meals: One bhikkhu would be allowed to accept more than one meal so that no family's meal would go without a recipient.

There is a passage in the Mahavagga (VI.25.7) which implies that if the donor of the meal provides a pre-meal snack of thick conjey--or by extension any other staple food--there would be no offense in eating it. And the Commentary notes that if the donor gives explicit permission to eat another meal before the one to which he/she has invited one, there would be no offense in doing so.

Summary: Eating a meal before going to another meal to which one was invited, or accepting an invitation to one meal and eating elsewhere instead, is a pacittiya offense except when one is ill or at the time of giving cloth or making robes.

***

34. In case a bhikkhu arriving at a family residence is presented with cakes or cooked grain-meal, he may accept two or three bowlfuls if he so desires. If he should accept more than that, it is to be confessed. Having accepted the two-or-three bowlfuls, and having taken them from there, he is to share them among the bhikkhus. This is the proper course here.

The purpose of this rule is to prevent bhikkhus from abusing a donor's generosity and good faith.

The origin story deals with two separate cases. In the first, a woman named Kana is about to return to her husband's house after visiting her parents. Her mother, thinking, "How can one go empty-handed?" bakes some cakes. A bhikkhu comes, and the mother--being a faithful lay follower--presents him with the cakes and then bakes some more to replace them. The bhikkhu, meanwhile, has informed another bhikkhu that cakes are baking at Kana's house, so the second bhikkhu goes and receives the second batch of cakes. This process keeps up until Kana' husband tires of waiting for her and takes another woman for his wife. The Commentary notes, reasonably enough, that Kana developed a long-term grudge against Buddhism as a result of this incident.

In the second case, a man is preparing provisions for a journey by caravan. A similar series of events takes place, and he eventually ends up tagging along behind the caravan and getting robbed. People become offended and annoyed as usual, and spread it about, "How can these Sakyan contemplatives accept food without knowing moderation?"

Object. In the context of this rule, the Vibhanga defines cakes so as to cover anything prepared as a present, and cooked grain-meal (sattu) so as to cover anything prepared as provisions for a journey. The word "journey" here refers to journeys that the donors are planning to take themselves. This rule does not cover gifts of food that donors have prepared to give to a bhikkhu for a journey he is planning to take.

The Vinaya Mukha, using the Great Standards, infers from the Vibhanga's definitions for cakes and cooked grain-meal that any food prepared in large quantities for sale or for a party, banquet or reception, etc., should be covered by this rule as well.

Protocol. If the bhikkhu is presented with such things--i.e., invited to take as much as he likes--he may take no more than two or three bowlfuls: To take more than that would incur a pacittiya. Returning from there, he should tell every bhikkhu he sees, "I accepted two or three bowlfuls over there. Don't you accept anything there." He incurs a dukkata if, seeing a bhikkhu, he does not tell him, while there is a dukkata for the other bhikkhu if, having been told, he accepts anything at the place in question. According to the Commen-tary, if the first bhikkhu accepts two bowlfuls, he should tell the second bhikkhu to accept no more than one, and all other bhikkhus he meets that they should not accept anything. If he accepts only one bowlful, he should follow a similar process so that, all-in-all, the bhikkhus accept a total of no more than three.

The Commentary states further that a bhikkhu receiving two or three bowlfuls may keep one bowlful and do as he likes with it, but must share the remainder among an entire Community, i.e., not just among his friends. A bhikkhu receiving only one bowlful may do with it as he likes .

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that there is no offense in taking more than three bowlfuls of items not intended as presents or provisions, of items left over from preparing presents or provisions, or of provisions remaining when plans for a journey have been aban-doned. As explained above, the Vinaya Mukha would include items prepared for sale or for parties, etc., under the word "provisions" here.

The Vibhanga also says that there is no penalty in accepting more than three bowlfuls from relatives or from those who have offered an invitation. Here the Commentary states that if such people give more than three bowlfuls outright, one may accept them without penalty, but that if they tell one to take as much as one likes from items prepared as presents or provisions, the proper thing to do is to take only two or three bowlfuls.

Also, there is no offense in having more than three bowlfuls of provisions purchased with one's own resources.

Finally, the Vibhanga says that there is no offense in taking extra for the sake of another. Neither the Commentary nor Sub-commentary discusses this point, but the only way it can make sense in the context of this rule is if it refers to cases where the bhikkhu takes extra for the sake of another not on his own initiative, but because the donor asks him to.

Summary: To accept more than three bowlfuls of food which the donors prepared for their own use as presents or for provisions for a journey is a pacittiya offense.

***

35. Should any bhikkhu, having eaten and turned down an offer (of further food), chew or consume staple or non-staple food which is not left over, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time a certain Brahmin, having invited bhikkhus, gave them a meal. The bhikkhus, having eaten and turned down an offer of further food, went to their relatives' families. Some ate there, some left having received alms.

"Then the Brahmin said to his neighbors, 'Masters, the bhikkhus have been satisfied by me. Come and I will satisfy you as well.'

"They said, 'Master, how will you satisfy us? Even those you invited came to our homes. Some ate there, some left having received alms.'

"So the Brahmin was offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can their reverences, having eaten in my home, eat elsewhere? Am I not capable of giving as much as they want?'"

When a donor invited bhikkhus for a meal, the custom in the time of the Buddha was for him/her to offer food to the bhikkhus repeatedly while they ate, and to stop only when the supplies of food were exhausted or the bhikkhus refused any further offers. (This custom is still widespread in Sri Lanka and Burma.) Thus it was often a matter of pride among donors that their supplies were not easily exhausted, and that they could continue offering food until the bhikkhus were completely satisfied and could eat no more. And where there is pride, there is bound to be damaged pride: A donor could easily feel insulted if bhikkhus refused further offers of food, finished their meal, and then went to eat someplace else.

As the origin story shows, this rule is designed to protect generous donors from being insulted by the bhikkhus in this way. It is also designed to protect bhikkhus from being forced to go hungry by stingy or impoverished donors. If the donor stops offering food before the bhikkhus have refused further offers--or if what he/she offers is not substantial food at all (see the discussion under Pacittiya 8 for an historic case of this sort)--the bhikkhus, after finishing their meal, are free to accept food elsewhere that morning if they are still hungry.

Having eaten (bhuttavi), according to the Vibhanga, means having eaten any of the five staple foods, "even as much as a blade of grass." On the surface, this could mean one of two things: having taken one's first bite of a meal, or having finished a meal--even the smallest possible one. The Commentary adopts the first interpretation, but in doing so creates two problems:

1) If having eaten means having taken one's first bite of a meal, then the word serves no purpose in the rule, because the first factor of "having turned down an offer of further food" is "the bhikkhu is eating", and as the Commentary itself notes, if one is eating then one has already taken one's first bite of the meal. It concludes that the word "having eaten", both in the rule and in the Vibhanga, is completely superfluous.

2) A more practical problem coming from the Commentary's interpretation is that if one turns down an offer of extra food when one already has more than enough food in one's bowl, but has yet to finish one's meal, one cannot continue eating. The Commentary tries to get around this predicament by introducing an additional factor: As long as one does not move from the spot on which one is sitting, one may continue eating. This, though, creates further problems: Suppose a bhikkhu has turned down an offer of further food but has yet to finish his meal. If there is then some compelling reason for him to move from the spot on which he is sitting--the donor spills a pot of hot soup, ants come crawling into his robes, an earthquake throws him from his seat--then he cannot finish his meal even if the donor begs him to continue eating.

The Sub-commentary gets around the first problem by interpreting "having eaten" as "having finished a meal," which fits better with the origin story and with the linguistic usage of the Vibhanga itself. (There is a separate term, asana, for one who is in process of eating a meal without yet having finished it.) The author of the Sub-commentary doesn't realize, though, that in adopting this interpreta-tion he is also eliminating the need for the Commentary's extra factor concerning moving from one's spot. If the factor is unnecessary, and there is no basis for it in the Canon, there would seem to be no reason to adopt it. Thus the Commentary's factor, and not the wording of the rule, is what is superfluous. So we can say that "having eaten" means having finished one's meal, and that the question of having moved from one's spot doesn't enter into the rule.

As the Commentary itself notes when discussing the term asana, the point where one finishes eating is determined in one of two ways:

a) One no longer has any food in one's bowl, hand or mouth; or

b) one has decided that one has had enough for that particular meal.

Thus, as long as the bhikkhu has not yet finished the donor's meal, he is free to refuse, accept and eat food as he likes. In other words, if he refuses an offer of further food, he may continue eating what is left in his bowl. If he initially refuses an offer of further food, but then gives in and accepts it after being pressured by the donor, he may eat what he accepts without penalty. Or if he feels, for example, that he has enough vegetables but would like more rice, he may refuse an offer of vegetables yet accept and eat an offer of rice that follows it.

But once he no longer has any food in his bowl, hand or mouth and/or has decided that he has had enough for that particular meal, he fulfills the factor of "having eaten" under this rule. If he refused an offer of further food before finishing the meal, he may not for the remainder of the day eat any staple or non-staple foods that are not leftovers.

Turning down an offer for further food. The Vibhanga defines this as an act with five factors:

1) The bhikkhu is eating.

2) There is further staple food.

3) The donor is standing within hatthapasa (1.25 meters) of the bhikkhu.

4) He/she offers the food.

5) The bhikkhu turns it down.

The Commentary adds that if the bhikkhu has finished eating before the further food is offered, factor (1) is not fulfilled, so if he turns down the food he does not fall under the terms of this rule. Similarly, if the food in factor (2) is not a staple food--e.g., if it is fruit, chocolates or cheese--or if it is staple food of a sort unallowable for a bhikkhu to eat--e.g., it has been offered as a result of a bhikkhu's claiming a superior human state or corrupting a family (see Sangha-disesa 13), or it is made of human flesh or snake meat, etc.--the factor is not fulfilled. Since none of the texts specify that the donor under factor (3) must be unordained, a bhikkhu offering food to a fellow bhikkhu would apparently fulfill this factor as well. Thus this rule would apply not only to meals offered by lay donors, but also to food handed out by bhikkhus and samaneras in a monastery.

Factor (5) is fulfilled by any refusal made by word or gesture.

Staple and non-staple food. Staple food, here, follows the stan-dard definition. Non-staple food, in the context of this rule, refers to all edibles except for the five staple foods, juice drinks, the five tonics, medicines and water.

Left-over food is of two sorts: food left over from a sick bhikkhu's meal, and food which has been formally "made" left-over by a bhikkhu who is not sick. In the latter case, the formal act has seven factors:

1) The food is allowable.

2) Bhikkhu X has formally received it.

3) He offers it to Bhikkhu Y.

4) He remains within hatthapasa of Bhikkhu Y.

5) Bhikkhu Y has finished his meal.

6) Bhikkhu Y has not yet gotten up from the seat where he has finished his meal and refused further food; and

7) he says, "I have had enough of all this."

The Commentary notes that any bhikkhu except Bhikkhu Y may eat the food that Bhikkhu Y has made left over in this way.

Effort. If a bhikkhu who, having eaten and turned down an offer for further food, is presented with staple or non-staple which is not left over--e.g., a snack of milk or ice cream--he incurs a dukkata if he accepts it with the thought of eating it; and a pacittiya for every mouthful he eats.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if a bhikkhu accepts the food and takes it for the sake of another; if he accepts and eats left-over food; or if, having a reason, he later in the day accepts and consumes juice drinks, any of the five tonics or medicine. According to the Commentary, "having a reason" means, in the case of juice drinks, being thirsty; and in the case of the tonics and medicine, suffering from an illness which they are meant to assuage. (As we have noted under NP 23, these illnesses include hunger and fatigue as well as medical disorders.) In other words, a bhikkhu under the circum-stances covered by this rule may not take these items as food. The Vibhanga says that if he accepts them with the idea of taking them as food, he incurs a dukkata; while the Commentary imposes a further dukkata for every mouthful he eats.

According to the Mahavagga (VI.14, VI.9.2, VI.20.4; V.32), this rule is relaxed during times of famine so that a bhikkhu who has eaten and turned down an offer for further food may later in the day consume food which is not left-over:

if it was accepted before one went to one's meal, if it is brought back from a place where a meal has been offered, or if it has been taken from a wilderness area or a pond. The texts offer no explanation for this last stipulation. Perhaps, during famines, such places were where most people would be foraging for food.

Summary: Eating staple or non-staple food which is not left-over, after having earlier in the day finished a meal during which one turned down an offer to eat further staple food, is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

36. Should any bhikkhu, knowingly and wishing to find fault, present staple or non-staple food to a bhikkhu who has eaten and turned down an offer (for further food), saying, "Here, bhikkhu, chew or consume this"--when it has been eaten, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time two bhikkhus were traveling through the Kosalan districts on their way to Savatthi. One of them indulged in bad habits; the second one said, 'Don't do that, my friend. It isn't proper.' The first one developed a grudge. Eventually, they arrived at Savatthi.

"Now at that time one of the guilds in Savatthi gave a meal to the Community. The second bhikkhu finished his meal, having turned down an offer for further food. The bhikkhu with the grudge, having gone to his relatives and bringing back alms food, went to where the second bhikkhu was staying and on arrival said, 'Here, friend, have some of this.'

"'No thanks, my friend. I'm full.'

"'Really, this is delicious alms food. Have some.'

"So the second bhikkhu, being pressured by the first, ate some of it.

Then the bhikkhu with the grudge said to him, 'You think I'm the one to be reprimanded when you eat food that isn't left-over, after finishing your meal and turning down an offer for further food?'

"'Shouldn't you have told me?'

"'Shouldn't you have asked?'"

This rule covers cases in which one bhikkhu, knowingly and wish-ing to find fault, offers food to another bhikkhu in order to trick him into committing an offense under the preceding rule. The full offense here requires a full set of five factors:

1) Object: staple or non-staple food.

2) Effort: One gives the food to a bhikkhu who has turned down an offer of further food, as under the previous rule.

3) Perception: One knows that he has turned down an offer of further food.

4) Intention: One wishes to find fault with him.

5) Result: He accepts the food and eats from it.

Only three of these factors--object, intention and result--require further explanation.

Object. Staple food, here, follows the standard definition. Non-staple food, in the context of this rule, refers to all edibles except for the five staple foods, juice drinks, the five tonics, medicines and water. Whether or not the food one is offering to the other bhikkhu is actually 'left-over' is not a factor in determining the offense here. The important point lies in the perception: As long as one assumes the food to be "not left-over", one is subject to a penalty if the other bhikkhu accepts it. If one assumes the food to be left-over, one's actions would not fit under this rule.

Intention. Wishing to find fault, according to the Vibhanga, means planning to accuse, criticize or shame the bhikkhu after one has succeeded in tricking him into breaking the preceding rule.

Result. Bhikkhu X, in giving food to Bhikkhu Y "knowingly and wishing to find fault," incurs a dukkata when Y accepts the food with the thought of eating it, and a pacittiya when Y has stopped eating from it. If X then accuses or shames Y with malicious intent--the only kind possible, given the nature of the case--he is to be treated under Pacittiya 2 as well. As for Y, the Commentary notes, he doesn't escape the penalty under the preceding rule even though he has been tricked into the offense. In other words, both bhikkhus in the origin story were right: The bhikkhu with a grudge should have told the second bhikkhu, while the second bhikkhu should have asked.

Non-offenses. There is no offense--

if one gives the other bhikkhu left-over food;

if the other bhikkhu takes the food for the sake of another; or if one gives him juice drinks, any of the five tonics, medicines or water.

None of the texts make any mention of a bhikkhu trying to trick another bhikkhu into committing an offense under any rule other than Pacittiya 35; and apparently, a bhikkhu who tricks a fellow bhikkhu into committing an offense under Pacittiya 35 with no desire to blame or shame him, but simply for the perverse satisfaction of seeing him commit the offense, would incur no penalty under this or any other rule. There is no escaping the fact, though, that such actions carry their own inherent penalty in terms of one's spiritual maturity. This is one of those cases where we have to look past the particulars of the rule to the general principle underlying it: that one should not deliberately trick another person into breaking a rule or vow which he or she has pledged to uphold.

Summary: Deliberately tricking another bhikkhu into breaking the preceding rule, in hopes of finding fault with him, is a pacittiya offense.

***

37. Should any bhikkhu chew or consume staple or non-staple food at the wrong time, it is to be confessed.

Object. Staple food here follows the standard definition given in the preface to this chapter. Non-staple food refers to all edibles except for the five staple foods, juice drinks, the five tonics, medicines and water.

The wrong time. The Vibhanga defines the wrong time as from after noon until dawn of the following day. (See Appendix I for a discussion of how dawn is defined.) Noon is reckoned as the moment the sun reaches its zenith, rather than by the clock--in other words, by local rather than standard or daylight-savings time. Thus, for example, a bhikkhu who is offered food while traveling in an airplane should check the position of the sun in order to determine whether or not he may accept and eat it. Some have argued that one may eat after noon if one has begun one's meal before noon, but the Commentary says explicitly that this is not the case.

Effort. The verbs "chew" and "consume" in the Pali of this rule are the verbs which are normally paired, respectively, with non-staple and staple foods. They both mean "to eat", but the question arises as to whether eating means going down the throat or entering the mouth. This becomes an issue, for instance, when a bhikkhu has a piece of food stuck in his teeth from his morning meal, and swallows it after noon.

The Commentary generally defines eating as going down the throat, but a passage from the Cullavagga (V.25) suggests otherwise. In it, the Buddha allows a ruminator who brings up food to his mouth at the "wrong time" to swallow it, and ends with the statement: "But food which has been bought out from the mouth should not be taken back in. Whoever should take it in is to be dealt with according to the rule (i.e., this rule and the following one)." This suggests, then, that eating is technically defined as "taking into the mouth."

Offenses. A bhikkhu who, intending to eat it, accepts staple or non-staple food at the wrong time incurs a dukkata. If he eats staple or non-staple food at the wrong time--regardless of whether he accepted it at the right or wrong time--he incurs a pacittiya for every mouthful he eats. As for juice drinks, the five tonics and medicine, there is a dukkata for accepting them to be used as food at the wrong time; and another dukkata for eating them as food at the wrong time.

Perception is not a factor here. Thus, a bhikkhu who eats food in the wrong time unknowingly--e.g., assuming that noon has not passed when it actually has, or that the food belongs to one of the other classes of edibles when it actually doesn't--commits an offense all the same.

No exception is granted to an ill bhikkhu, because there are a number of edibles an ill bhikkhu may consume at the wrong time without incurring an offense: juice drinks, the five tonics and medi-cines. Also, there is an allowance in the Mahavagga (I.14.7) for a bhikkhu who has taken a purgative to take strained meat broth, strained rice broth or strained green gram (mung bean) broth at any time of the day. Using the Great Standards, we may say that a bhikkhu who has a similar illness or worse may take these broths at any time; and some have argued that other bean broths--such as soybean milk--would fit under the category of green gram broth as well. However--unlike the case with the five tonics--mere hunger or fatigue would not seem to count as sufficient reasons for taking any of these substances in the "wrong time".

A substance termed lonasoviraka (or lonasociraka) is allowed (Mv.VI.16.3) in the wrong time as a medicine for ill bhikkhus, and when mixed with water, as a beverage for bhikkhus who are not ill. No one makes it anymore, but the recipe for it in the Commentary to Parajika 3 bears some resemblance to the recipe for miso (fermented soybean paste). Some have argued, using the Great Standards, that the special allowance for this substance should extend to miso as well, but this is a controversial point. Even if the allowance does apply to miso, taking miso broth as food in the wrong time would incur a dukkata.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, having a reason, one con-sumes juice drinks, any of the five tonics, medicine or water after noon or before dawn.

Summary: Eating staple or non-staple food in the period after noon until the next dawn is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

38. Should any bhikkhu chew or consume stored-up staple or non-staple food, it is to be confessed.

This is one of the few rules where the original instigator was an arahant: Ven. Belatthasisa, Ven. Ananda's preceptor and formerly the head of the 1,000 ascetics who attained Awakening on hearing the Fire Sermon. The origin story here reports that he made a practice of keeping left-over rice from his almsround, drying it, and then moistening it to eat on a later day. As a result, he only rarely had to go on almsround. Even though he was doing this out of frugality rather than greed, the Buddha still rebuked him. The story doesn't give the precise reasons for the rebuke: Perhaps it was because he saw that such behavior would open the way for bhikkhus to avoid going on almsround, thus depriving themselves of the excellent opportunity that alms-going provides for reflecting on their dependency on others and on the human condition in general; and depriving the laity of the benefits that come from daily contact with the bhikkhus and the opportunity to practice generosity of the most basic sort every day.

Although frugality may be a virtue, there are times when other considerations supercede it.

At any rate, the Buddha showed great foresight in formulating this rule. Over the centuries, whenever bhikkhus have lived in Communities where vast stores of food were kept--such as the great Buddhist uni-versities in India--bhikkhus have tended to grow lax in their practice, and a gulf of misunderstanding and suspicion has come to separate them from the laity.

Object. Staple food here, as usual, follows the standard definition given in the preface to this chapter. Non-staple food here includes all edibles except for the five staples, juice drinks, the five tonics, medi-cine and water.

Stored-up means formally accepted by a bhikkhu (see Pacittiya 40, below) on one day and eaten on the next or a later day. The bound-ary between one day and the next is dawn.

According to the Commentary, though, if a bhikkhu accepts food today but then gives it to an unordained person, having abandoned possession of it in his mind, and then that person happens to present it again to the bhikkhu on a following day, it does not count as stored-up under this rule. If, however, the bhikkhu does not abandon possession of the food in his mind, and the unordained person presents it again the following day, it still counts as stored-up even if the bhikkhu did not say with word or gesture that the food was to be kept and presented to him again.

Since this factor is difficult to determine with absolute certainty in cases where food is left over after being presented to a number of bhikkhus--there is hardly any way of being sure that they have all renounced possession of the leftovers--many Communities ignore the Commentary's allowance and do not permit their members to accept any food at all which they formally received on a previous day.

The story of the Second Council (Cv.XII.2.8) shows that this rule also forbids storing such medicines as salt (or pepper, vinegar, etc.) to add to any bland food one might receive on a later day.

Effort. The Vibhanga says that there is a dukkata "if one accepts it, thinking, 'I will eat it'"--the Commentary interprets this as taking or accepting, with the purpose of eating, food which has been stored up--and a pacittiya for every mouthful one eats.

Perception is not a factor here. Thus, a bhikkhu who eats stored-up food commits an offense regardless of whether or not he perceives it as stored-up. This means--

1) If Bhikkhu X receives the food on one day and, without renouncing possession of it, lets someone else put it away, and Bhikkhu Y eats it on a later day, Y commits an offense all the same, regardless of whether or not he knows that the food was stored-up.

2) One should be careful that there are no traces of any edible received yesterday on a utensil from which one will eat food today. The duties which a student should perform for his preceptor (upajjhaya-vatta) (Mv.I.25.9) show that the custom in the Buddha's time was to rinse out one's bowl before going for alms. The Commentary suggests a method for making sure that one's bowl is clean: Run a finger along the inside of the bowl while it is dry. If there is enough food residue or dust in the bowl for the finger to make a mark in it, clean the bowl again before use.

Lesser offenses. If a bhikkhu accepts or takes, for the sake of food, juice drinks, any of the five tonics or medicine which has been stored overnight, there is a dukkata in the taking, and another dukkata for every mouthful he eats. The Commentary, though, asserts that when a bhikkhu takes, not for food but simply to assuage his thirst, a juice drink stored overnight, he incurs a pacittiya for every swallow he drinks.

It seems strange that drinking the juice simply as juice would incur a stronger penalty than taking it as food, and as there is no basis anywhere in the Canon for the Commentary's assertion, there seems to be no reason to adopt it. Mv.VI.40.3 states clearly that juice drinks, taken for any reason, are allowable at any time on the day they are accepted, but not after the dawn of the following day. No specific penalty is given for taking them on the following day, but we can infer from the Vibhanga to this rule that the penalty would be a dukkata.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in the simple act of storing food. A bhikkhu going on a journey with an unordained person may thus carry the latter's food--while the latter carries the bhikkhu's food--without incurring an offense.

There is also no offense in telling an unordained person to store food which has not been formally received. For example, if donors simply leave food at a bhikkhu's residence without formally present-ing it, the bhikkhu may tell a novice or lay person to take it and put it away for a later day. If the food is then presented to the bhikkhu on a later day, he may eat it that day without incurring a penalty.

However, food may be stored in a monastery only in a building formally agreed on for the purpose (Mv.VI.33.2). Since bhikkhus may not use such a building as a dwelling place (Mv.VI.33.4), a bhikkhu who has food stored in his dwelling would incur a dukkata. He may, however, store medicines or the five tonics in his dwelling without incurring an offense.

If a bhikkhu accepts, sets aside and then eats any of the four kinds of edibles all within their permitted time periods--e.g., he receives bread in the morning, sets it aside and then eats it before that noon; or receives honey today, sets it aside, and takes it as a tonic tomorrow--there is no offense.

This rule makes no exceptions for a bhikkhu who is ill, although the rule as a whole is suspended in times of scarcity and famine (Mv.VI.17-20; Mv.VI.32). Also, a bhikkhu going on a journey where alms food is difficult to obtain along the way may search for and take provisions of rice, kidney beans, green gram (mung beans), salt, sugar, oil and ghee (Mv.VI.34.21).

Summary: To eat food which a bhikkhu--oneself or another--formally received on a previous day is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

39. There are these finer staple foods, i.e., ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, sugar/molasses, fish, meat, milk and curds. Should any bhikkhu who is not ill, having asked for finer staple foods such as these for his own sake, then eat them, it is to be confessed.

The Vibhanga defines "finer staple foods" as any of the nine foods mentioned in the rule, either on their own or mixed with other foods. Thus milk and milk mixed with cereal would both be finer staple foods. The ancient commentators, though, must have objected to including some of these items under the category of staple food (bhojana), and so we have the Commentary defining "finer staple foods" as any of the substances mentioned in the rule mixed with any one of the seven types of grain. Thus, it would say, milk with cereal would be a finer food, but milk on its own would not.

As we have seen, though, the Vibhanga defines its terms to fit with the situation covered by each particular rule, and is not always con-sistent from one rule to another. Thus, since the Vibhanga is not at fault for being inconsistent here, there is no reason to follow the Commentary in deviating from it. The rule means what it says: It covers each of the foods mentioned in it, whether pure or mixed with other ingredients.

The first five of these finer foods are discussed in detail under NP 23. Fish and meat are discussed in the preface to this chapter. Milk and curds here refers to milk and curds from animals whose flesh is allowable. The Sub-commentary, in discussing this point, maintains that tiger's milk, bear's milk, etc., are not unallowable, simply that they would not come under this rule: This is an interesting idea, but was included probably just to wake up sleepy students in the back of the room.

According to the Commentary, any food other than these nine finer foods is grounds for a dukkata under Sekhiya 37.

Effort. A bhikkhu who is not ill, requesting the foods for his own use, incurs a dukkata for every request he makes, a dukkata for accept-ing the food, and a pacittiya for every mouthful he eats.

"Not ill" means that one is able to fare comfortably without these foods. None of the texts go into detail on this point, but "ill" probably means something more than simply being hungry, for there is a sepa-rate allowance under Sekhiya 37 for a bhikkhu who is hungry to ask for rice and bean curry, which was the basic diet of the day, and the Commentary extends that allowance to cover all foods not covered by this rule. Here "ill" probably refers to any form of fatigue, weak-ness or malnutrition which comes specifically from lacking any of the foods mentioned in the rule.

The Commentary adds that if a bhikkhu asks for one kind of finer food, but receives another kind instead, he incurs the dukkata for asking, but no penalty for accepting and eating what he gets. It also notes that when a bhikkhu asks a lay person for any of the finer foods and the lay person makes a donation of money to the bhikkhu's steward to buy that food, then once the food is bought it comes under this rule all the same.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

in asking for food--any kind of food--when one is ill, and then eating it, even if one has recovered in the meantime;

in eating food which has been requested for the sake of an ill bhikkhu and is left over after his meal;

in asking from relatives;

in asking from those who have offered an invitation to ask;

in asking for the sake of another person;

or in asking that food be bought with one's own resources.

Summary: Eating finer foods, after having asked for them for one's own sake--except when ill--is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

40. Should any bhikkhu take into his mouth an edible which has not been given--except for water and tooth-cleaning sticks--it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time certain bhikkhu, living entirely off of what was thrown away, was staying in a cemetery. Not wanting to receive gifts from people, he himself took the offerings for the dead--left in cemeteries, under trees and on thresholds--and ate them. People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can this bhikkhu himself take our offerings for the dead and eat them? He is robust, this bhikkhu. He is strong. Perhaps he feeds on human flesh.'"

Object. An edible is whatever is fit to eat, and includes all four classes of food and medicine: staple and non-staple foods, juice drinks, the five tonics and medicine.

Exceptions. Water, according to the Commentary, includes ice, hailstones and snow as well.

Tooth-cleaning sticks, as used in the time of the Buddha, were semi-edible. They were sticks of soft wood, like balsam, cut four to eight inches long, chewed until they were reduced to fiber and spat out. People in India still use tooth-cleaning sticks of this sort even today.

The act of giving food and other edibles, as described in the Vibhanga, has three factors:

1) The donor (an unordained person) is standing within reach (1.25 meters) of the bhikkhu.

2) He/she gives the item with the body (e.g., the hand), with something in contact with the body (e.g., a spoon) or by means of letting go. According to the Commentary, letting go means releasing from the body or something in contact with the body--e.g., dropping from the hand or a spoon--and refers to such cases as when a donor drops or tosses something into a bhikkhu's bowl or hands without directly or indirectly making contact.

3) The bhikkhu receives the item with the body or with something in contact with the body (e.g., his bowl, a piece of cloth).

There is a tradition in Thailand that a bhikkhu should never receive offerings from a woman hand-to-hand. Either she offers it with something in contact with her body (e.g., a tray) or the bhikkhu must accept it with something in contact with his body--an alms bowl, a tray, a piece of cloth, etc. Apparently this tradition arose as a means of protecting a sexually aroused bhikkhu from committing an offense under Sanghadisesa 2, or from the embarrassment which might arise if, say, yesterday he was not aroused and so could take something straight from her hand, while today he is and so can't. Many Thai eight-precept nuns, even though they don't have any precepts corresponding to Sanghadisesa 2, follow a reciprocal tradi-tion of not receiving anything hand-to-hand from a man. Neither of these traditions is mentioned in the Canon or the commentaries, nor are they observed by Sri Lankan or Burmese bhikkhus or nuns.

A special allowance in the Cullavagga (V.26) states that if food accidentally falls while being offered, a bhikkhu may pick it up him-self and eat it without committing an offense.

Effort. If a bhikkhu realizes that food is not given or improperly given, he incurs a dukkata if he takes it with the intention of eating it. As for the bhikkhu who thinks that it is properly given when it isn't, the Vibhanga does not say whether he incurs a penalty in taking it with the intention of eating it or not. The Commentary says explicitly that he doesn't. In either case, though, the Vibhanga states that the bhikkhu incurs a pacittiya for every mouthful he eats. Thus percep-tion is not a mitigating factor when determining the full offense under this rule.

Non-offenses. There is an allowance (Mv.VI.17.8-9; Mv.VI.32) that in times of scarcity and famine a bhikkhu may pick up fallen fruit, take it to an unordained person, place it on the ground and have it formally "given" without incurring an offense. At times when this allowance is not in effect, though, a bhikkhu who--with the intention of eating it--picks up an edible he knows has not been given may not later make it allowable by formally "receiving" it from an unordained person. Whether other bhikkhus may receive it and make use of it, though, is a controversial point discussed in the Commentary in a treatise sepa-rate from its explanation of the Vibhanga (see below).

In the Mahavagga (VI.14.6), the Buddha gives permission for a bhikkhu bitten by a snake to make an antidote of urine, excrement (burned in fire), ashes and soil. If there is no unordained person present who can or will make these things allowable, the bhikkhu may take, prepare and eat them himself without incurring a penalty under this rule. The Commentary adds that if he cuts a tree under these circumstances to burn it, or digs the earth to get soil, he is exempt from the rules dealing with those actions as well.

Controversial points from the Commentary. As mentioned above, the Commentary's discussion of this rule includes a treatise separate from its explanation of the Vibhanga, dealing with controver-sial points for which the Canon gives unclear answers or no answers at all. Since the treatise is a compilation of the opinions of various teachers and does not pretend to explain the meaning or intent of the Buddha's words--and since the Buddha warned bhikkhus against making up their own rules (NP 15.1.2)--the opinions expressed in the treatise are not necessarily normative. Many Communities do not accept them, or are selective in choosing what they do and do not accept. Here we will give a summary of some of the Commentary's opinions which have influenced practices found in some, if not all, Communities of bhikkhus at present.

1. Taking into the mouth is defined as going down the throat. As we have already noted under Pacittiya 37, though, this definition has no justification in canonical usage. The Sub-commentary attempts to justify the Commentary's stand here by defining "mouth" (literally, the door of the face) as the larynx, i.e., the back door rather than the front door to the mouth, but again this is not supported by the Canon. Sekhiya 41--"I will not open the door of my face when the mouthful has yet to be brought to it"--shows decisively that this term refers to the lips, and not to the larynx. "Taking into the mouth" thus means taking in through the lips.

2. Food. Water taken from a pond which is so muddy that it leaves a scum on the hand or on the mouth is considered to be food, and so must be given before it can be drunk. The same holds true with water into which so many leaves or flowers have fallen that their taste is discernible in the water. For some reason, though, water which has been scented with flowers need not be given, and the same is true with water taken from a stream or river no matter how muddy. (There is a belief still current in India and other parts of Asia that flowing water is inherently clean.) Although leaves and flowers technically do count as edibles--they are classed as non-staple foods or medicines, depending on one's purpose in eating them--the idea of counting mud and scum as edibles seems to be taking the concept of edible a little too far.

If toothwood is chewed for the sake of its juice, it must first be given. Even if one is chewing it for the sake of cleaning the teeth, but accidentally swallows the juice, one has committed an offense all the same. These two opinions have no basis in the Canon, since intention is not a factor in determining the offense under this rule.

A long section of this treatise discusses what to do if things which are not given get into food which has been given. It concludes that they must either be removed from the food, or the food must be given again. If the items "not given" are edibles, this seems reason-able enough, but the Commentary extends the concept to include such things as dust, dirty rain water, rust from a knife, beads of sweat dropping from one's brow, etc. Again, this seems to be taking the concept too far, for the Vibhanga states clearly that the rule covers only those things generally considered as fit to eat.

3. Giving. The Commentary redefines the act of giving, expanding its factors to five:

(1) The item is such that a man of average stature can lift it.

(2) The donor is within reach of the bhikkhu.

(3) He/she makes a gesture of offering the food.

(4) The donor is a celestial being, a human being or a common animal.

(5) The bhikkhu receives the item with the body or with something in contact with the body.

Factor (1) was included apparently to discourage the practice, still found in many places, of getting two or more men to present a table of food to a bhikkhu by lifting the entire table at once. The inclusion of this factor, though, has given rise to the assumption that the donor must lift the food a certain distance before handing it to the bhikkhu, but the Commentary itself, shows that this assumption is mistaken, in that it states that if a small novice too weak to lift a pot of rice simply slides it along the table or floor onto a bhikkhu's hand, it is properly given.

Factor (2): If any part of the donor's body (except for his/her extended arm) is within 1.25 meters of any part of the bhikkhu's body (except for his extended arm), this factor is fulfilled. If the donor is standing beyond reach, the bhikkhu should tell him/her to come within reach before donating the food. If for some reason the donor does not comply with the bhikkhu's request, the bhikkhu may still accept the food, but should then take it to another unordained person--without setting it down and picking it up again in the meantime (see below)--and have it properly "given" before eating it.

Although the donor must be within reach, the food itself need not be. Thus if the donor places many vessels on a mat while the bhikkhu touches the mat with the intention of receiving them, all of the food is considered to be properly received as long as the donor is within reach of the bhikkhu. The same holds true if the donor places many vessels touching one another while the bhikkhu touches one of the vessels with the intention of receiving them all. (The factor of the bhikkhu's intention is discussed further under factor (5) below.)

Factor (3) means that the donor cannot simply tell the bhikkhu to take the food being given. Rather, he/she should make a physical gesture of offering the food. In some places, this factor is interpreted as meaning that the donor must assume a humble or respectful manner while making the offering, and has led some to believe, for instance, that a bhikkhu going barefoot on his alms round should not accept food from a donor wearing shoes. This view is not supported by the Commentary. Although some of the gestures it cites as examples, such as tilting the head, might be interpreted as showing respect, some of them are not respectful in terms of Asian manners at all. For instance, a person riding on the bhikkhu's shoulders picks a piece of fruit from a tree, drops it into his hands, and it is consi-dered properly given.

The question arises as to how much of a gesture is necessary for this factor to be fulfilled. In the West, if a donor brings a tray of food and stands in front of a bhikkhu, waiting for him to take some of the food, the fact that he/she stands there waiting would be considered enough of a gesture to show that the food is being given. If the bhikkhu were to demand more of a gesture than that, the donor would probably be offended. Since, as we have noted, the opinions expressed in this section of the Commentary are not necessarily normative, this is an area where one can make allowances for cultural norms. The essence of this factor would seem to be that a bhikkhu should not snatch food which a person happens to be carrying past him without showing any indication that he/she wants him to take the food.

Factor (4) is not discussed by the Commentary, although it is probably inspired by such stories as that of elephants offering lotus stalks to Ven. Moggallana and of Sakka, the king of the deities, presenting a gift of food to Maha Kassapa after the latter had withdrawn from seven days of concentration. There is at least one bhikkhu in Thailand today who has trained a pet monkey to "give" him things.

Factor (5): The effort involved in receiving the item may be minimal indeed. In fact, the Commentary's discussion of the Vibhanga quotes the Mahapaccari, one of the ancient Sinhalese commentaries, as saying that attention is the measure which deter-mines whether or not food has been received. Thus if a donor offers food by placing it on a table, the bhikkhu may simply touch the table with his finger, thinking, "I am receiving the food," and it is properly given. The same holds true if he is sitting on the table or lying on a bed and regards the act of sitting or lying there as one of receiving whatever is placed there. However, immovable objects--such as a floor, the ground, or anything fixed to the floor or ground--may not be used as "items connected to the body" to receive food in this way.

Food placed in a bhikkhu's hand when he is asleep or his attention is elsewhere, e.g., in deep meditation, does not count as properly given. He must be awake and paying enough attention to know that the food is being given for this factor to be fulfilled. Food placed in a bhikkhu's mouth is considered properly given if he is awake. If he is asleep or unconscious and food is put into his stomach via a feeding tube, he has not broken this rule for he is not the agent putting it there, and as the Sub-commentary notes under Sanghadisesa 1, the Vinaya does not apply to a bhikkhu when he is not in a normal, waking state of awareness.

Taking food which has not been given. To take food knowing that it has been improperly given or not given at all (here we are not talking about cases of stealing) is no offense if the bhikkhu has no intention of eating it. If, after he has set it down, the food is later "given" to him, he may accept and eat it with no penalty. The examples for this point given in the Commentary include such things as picking up fallen fruit or the remains of a lion's kill with the thought of taking them for a novice to eat, or picking up oil or ghee with the thought of taking it to one's parents. A common example at present would be picking up food left lying around when one is cleaning up the monastery. The Sub-commentary states that this allowance does not hold if one is thinking of taking the food for other bhikkhus to eat.

To take food with the purpose of eating it, thinking that it has been properly given when in fact it hasn't, is also no offense. If one then learns or realizes that it has not been properly given, one should return it, if possible, to its original place--without setting it down and picking it up again in the meantime. Once the food is back in its original place, one may "receive" and eat it with no penalty. If one sets it down and picks it up again before returning it to its original place, though, then technically one incurs a dukkata for taking food which one realizes is not properly given, and so one may not later formally receive the food, as mentioned above. If for some reason there is no possibility of returning the food to its original place, one need only return it to some other spot in the building from which it was taken, and then "receive" and eat it without committing an offense.

To take food with the purpose of eating it, knowing that it has not been properly given, incurs a dukkata, as stated in the Vibhanga. According to the Commentary's treatise, "taking" here also includes deliberately touching the food or the vessel containing it with the intention of eating it. (Touching it accidentally it carries no penalty.) If a bhikkhu deliberately touches it in this way, he may not then properly receive it, although other bhikkhus may. Once they have received it, the first bhikkhu may not eat any of it.

If the first bhikkhu, instead of merely touching the food or its vessel, actually moves it from its place, then neither he nor any of the other bhikkhus may receive it. Thus if a donor brings a pot of stew to the monastery, and one of the bhikkhus, curious to see what is going to be offered that day, tilts the pot to peek inside, none of the bhikkhus may eat the food, and the donor must either give it to the novices and any attendants at the monastery, if there are any, throw it to the dogs or take it home.

Many Communities do not accept the Commentary's opinions on this point, and with good reason: The last-mentioned penalty--even though the offense is a dukkata--is stronger than that imposed by any of the nissaggiya pacittiya rules, and penalizes perfectly innocent people: the other bhikkhus and the donor of the food as well. An alternate opinion, which many Communities follow, is that if a bhikkhu takes--with the thought of eating it--food which he knows has not been properly offered, he may not then formally receive it from an unordained person, but other bhikkhus may. Once it has been properly received, any bhikkhu--including the first--may eat from it.

This is an area in which none of the texts gives an authoritative answer, and a wise policy is to adhere to the views of the Community in which one is living, as long as they fit into the framework provided by the Canon.

When food becomes "ungiven". The Commentary to Parajika 1, in its discussion of what to do when a bhikkhu's sex changes sponta-neously (!), lists seven instances in which an edible given to a bhikkhu becomes "ungiven"--i.e., no bhikkhu may pick it up and eat it until it is formally given again. The seven are--

1) The original recipient undergoes a spontaneous sex change.

2) He dies.

3) He disrobes and becomes a lay person.

4) He becomes a low person. (According to the Sub-commentary, this means that he commits a parajika.)

5) He gives it to an unordained person.

6) He abandons it, having lost interest in it; or

7) The item is stolen. (The Sub-commentary, in discussing this last point, refers solely to cases of out-and-out thievery, and not to the mere act of touching or moving.)

Of these seven instances, the treatise we are discussing deals with only two--(5) and (6)--in a series of examples, as follows:

A bhikkhu with rice in his hand offers it to a novice: The rice remains "given" until the novice takes it.

A bhikkhu places food in a vessel and, no longer interested in it, tells a novice to take it: The food is "ungiven" as soon as he says this. This point, however, does not apply to food the bhikkhu leaves in his own bowl, or in any Community vessel from which the bhik-khus are served or in which their food is prepared. If he leaves food in such a vessel, he is not regarded as having abandoned interest in it.

A bhikkhu sets his bowl on a stand and tells a novice to take some rice from it. Assuming that the novice's hand is clean--i.e., not "con-taminated" with any food from his own bowl which might fall into the bhikkhu's bowl--the rice remaining in the bhikkhu's bowl after the novice has taken his portion is still "given". Technically speaking, the treatise says, the rice taken by the novice still belongs to the bhikkhu until the novice puts it in his own bowl. Thus if the novice begins to take a second handful and, being told by the bhikkhu, "That's enough," puts the second handful back in the bhikkhu's bowl; or if any grains of rice from the first handful happen to fall back into the bhikkhu's bowl while the novice is lifting it out, all the rice in the bhikkhu's bowl is still "given".

A bhikkhu holding a stick of sugar cane tells a novice to cut off a piece from the other end: The remaining section is still "given".

A bhikkhu places pieces of hardened molasses on a tray and tells other bhikkhus and novices to help themselves from the tray: If the bhikkhus and novices simply pick up their portions and take them, the remaining hardened molasses is still "given". If, though, a novice picks up one piece, puts it down, picks up another piece, puts it down, and so on, the hardened molasses remaining on the tray becomes "ungiven".

The Sub-commentary explains this by saying that the novice picking up the molasses is thinking, "This is mine. I'll take it," then changes his mind, puts it down and then lays claim to another piece, and so on. Further, it says that only the pieces which the novice claims and then abandons in this way become "ungiven". The other pieces on the tray still count as "given".

This last example, when taken out of context, has led to the widespread view that food given to a bhikkhu becomes "ungiven" if an unordained person touches or moves it. Viewed in context, though, the example does not imply this at all. The bhikkhu has offered the hardened molasses to the novice, and the novice in picking it up simply completes the factors for case (5): "The bhikkhu gives the item to an unordained person." The example of the novice taking rice from a bhikkhu's bowl shows that even when a bhikkhu offers food to an unordained person, the mere fact that the person touches or moves the food does not necessarily make the food "ungiven".

Thus in cases where the bhikkhu is not giving away the food and has not abandoned interest in it--and the unordained person is not stealing it--there is no reason to hold that "given" food becomes "ungiven" simply when an unordained person touches or moves it. This is another area, though, where different Communities hold different views, and where the wise policy is to conform to the observances of the Community in which one is living.

The various points in the Commentary's treatise may seem like a lot of hair-splitting, but remember that the gift of food ranks with sexual temptation as one of the largest issues in a bhikkhu's--or anyone's--life. If questions of this sort hadn't arisen in practice, no one would have bothered to compile the treatise in the first place. Given the cursory manner in which the Vibhanga treats this rule, and given the large "gray" areas surrounding the act of giving--modern anthropology started with this subject, and will probably never finish with it--it's good to have those areas spelled out in detail so as to minimize any disharmony that might arise in a Community when its members find themselves in such areas.

Still, as we have noted several times, the guidelines in the Commentary's treatise are not binding, and the wise policy is to follow the standards of the Community in which one is living, as long as they fall within the framework of the Canon.

Summary: Eating food which has not been formally given is a pacittiya offense.

Five: The Naked Ascetic Chapter

41. Should any bhikkhu give staple or non-staple food with his own hand to a naked ascetic, a male wanderer or a female wanderer, it is to be confessed.

There are two origin stories here, the first being the more entertaining of the two:

"Now at that time the Community had received a lot of non-staple food. Ven. Ananda told this matter to the Blessed One, who said, "In that case, give the cakes to those who eat scraps.'"

"'As you say, sir,' Ven. Ananda answered the Blessed One. Then, having had those who eat scraps sit down in a line, and giving a cake to each, he gave two cakes to a certain female wanderer, thinking they were one. The female wanderers around her said, "That contemplative is your lover.'

"'No, he's not. He just gave me two cakes thinking they were one.'

"A second time...A third time, Ven. Ananda, giving a cake to each, gave two cakes to that female wanderer, thinking they were one. The female wanderers around her said, "That contemplative is your lover.'

"'No, he's not. He just gave me two cakes thinking they were one.'

"So--'Lover!' 'Not a lover!'--they kept squabbling."

The second story, though, gives a better idea of the reason for the rule:

"Then a certain naked ascetic went to a distribution of food. A certain bhikkhu, having mixed rice with a great deal of ghee, gave a large helping to the naked ascetic. So the naked ascetic, having received his alms, left. Another naked ascetic asked him, 'Where, friend, did you get your alms?'

"'At a distribution of food by that shaveling householder, the contemplative Gotama.'"

This training rule is corollary to the preceding one. Apparently other sects at the Buddha's time observed the formalities of receiving food from their lay followers just as the Buddhist bhikkhus did, and thus a bhikkhu who gave food in such a way to a mendicant ordained in another sect would be placing himself in the position of a lay follower of that sect, as the second origin story shows. An interesting point about this rule is that the Buddha formulated it at the request of Buddhist lay followers. Having overheard the naked ascetics' con-versation, they said to him, "Sire, these adherents of other sects enjoy criticizing the Buddha...Dhamma...and Sangha. It would be good if the masters did not give to adherents of other sects with their own hands."

Object. The terms naked ascetic and male or female wanderer are meant to cover all mendicants ordained in religions outside of Buddhism. Since Brahmins, which were a non-mendicant priestly caste at the Buddha's time, are not included in this definition, we may infer at present that this rule does not refer to people ordained in other religions--e.g, Catholic priests, Protestant ministers, Jewish rabbis, Muslim mullahs, etc.--who do not obtain their food by going for alms.

Effort. Staple and non-staple food here cover all edibles: juice drinks, tonics and medicines as well as food, but not water and tooth-cleaning sticks. Staple and non-staple foods are grounds for a pacittiya; water and tooth-cleaning sticks, grounds for a dukkata.

To give is defined as giving with the body, with something in con-tact with the body, or by means of letting go, as in the preceding rule.

Non-offenses. To get someone else to give edible things, to give edible things by depositing them near (as in NP 18), or to give ointments for external use--and, by extension, other inedible things--entails no offense.

Summary: Giving food or medicines with one's own hand to a mendicant ordained outside of Buddhism is a pacittiya offense.

***

42. Should any bhikkhu say to a bhikkhu, "Come, my friend, let's enter the village or town for alms," and then--whether or not he has had (food) given to him--should dismiss him, saying, "Go away, my friend. I don't like sitting or talking with you. I prefer sitting or talking alone," if doing it for that reason and no other, it is to be confessed.

The factors for the full offense here are four:

1) Object: another bhikkhu.

2) Intention: One wants to indulge in misconduct and does not want him to see it.

3) Effort: One dismisses him.

4) Result: He leaves one's range of hearing and sight (six meters, according to the Commentary).

Object. A bhikkhu is grounds for a pacittiya here. An unordained person, grounds for a dukkata.

Intention. The Vibhanga defines misconduct as laughing, playing or sitting in private with a woman, or any other misbehavior--breaking the minor rules--of any sort. To dismiss the other person--ordained or not--for reasons other than a desire to hide one's own misconduct entails no offense. Examples from the Vibhanga are listed in the non-offenses section below.

Effort & result. To dismiss the other person means either to say outright for him/her to go away, or else to make remarks that will make him/her want to leave. The Commentary gives an example here--"Look at how this guy stands, sits and looks around. He stands like a stump, sits like a dog and looks about like a monkey"--but this would more likely come under Pacittiya 2.

The offenses here are as follows:

a dukkata for speaking the words of dismissal;

a dukkata when the other bhikkhu is leaving the range of hearing and sight; and a pacittiya when he has left.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense in:

dismissing one's companion with the thought that two bhikkhus going together won't obtain enough food;

dismissing him after seeing costly goods ahead, so that he won't develop a feeling of greed; dismissing him after seeing a beautiful woman ahead, so that he won't develop a feeling of dissatisfaction with the chaste life; sending him back with food for a sick bhikkhu or lay worker at the monastery; or dismissing him for any other proper reason, as long as one is not planning to indulge in misconduct.

Summary: When, on almsround with another bhikkhu, one sends him back so that he won't witness any misconduct one is planning to indulge in, it is a pacittiya offense.

***

43. Should a bhikkhu sit intruding on a family "with its meal", it is to be confessed.

The origin story here, briefly, is this: Ven. Upananda visits a woman in her private quarters. Her husband approaches him respectfully, has his wife give him alms, and then asks him to leave. The wife senses that her husband wants to have sexual intercourse with her, and so--as a game, apparently--keeps detaining Ven. Upananda until the husband gets exasperated and goes to complain to the bhikkhus: "Sires, this master Upananda is sitting in the bedroom with my wife. I have dismissed him, but he isn't willing to go. We are very busy and have much work to do."

Object: A family "with its meal". The Vinaya Mukha tries to take this phrase literally, but the Vibhanga explains it as a euphemism meaning "a man and woman together, both not having gone out (of their bedroom), both not without lust"--in other words, a man and woman together in their private quarters, with at least one of them desiring sexual intercourse with the other. Although the Commentary tries to justify the Vibhanga's explanation etymologically (bhoga, the root form of meal, has other forms which mean enjoyment, indul-gence and use), there is no need to turn to etymology. Since ancient times in all cultures, eating has been commonly used as a metaphor for sex.

Effort. To sit intruding means to sit down in the bedroom--in a house which is large enough to have a separate bedroom--or in the back half of a house which is not (the Sub-commentary explains this as a house about five meters from front to back).

The texts seem to expect a bhikkhu to be quick to realize what is going on in situations like this, for they make no mention of the case in which he doesn't perceive that either the man or woman is sexually aroused. Instead, their discussions of perception center around the bedroom, and the question of intention, though mentioned in passing in the Commentary, is explained only in the Sub-commentary, which applies it solely to the act of intruding and sitting: One is subject to an offense only if one wants to sit there. Thus, to be perfectly safe from an offense in cases like this, a bhikkhu should not sit intruding on a couple unless they both make him 100% certain that he is welcome: a wise policy in any case, whether or not one is a bhikkhu.

Cases of sitting with a woman alone in her bedroom--or any other private place--are covered by the following rule.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

if both the man and woman have left the bedroom/private area;

if neither of them is sexually aroused;

if the bhikkhu is not in the bedroom/private area; or if he has a second bhikkhu as his companion.

Summary: To sit down intruding on a man and a woman in their private quarters-- when one or both are sexually aroused, and when another bhikkhu is not present--is a pacittiya offense.

***

44. Should any bhikkhu sit in private on a secluded seat with a woman, it is to be confessed.

There are three factors for the offense here:

1) Object: a female human being, "even one born that very day, all the more an older one."

2) Effort: One sits with her in a private, secluded seat, without another man present.

3) Intention: One is aiming at privacy.

Object. Woman here includes women as well. In other words, even if one is sitting with many women in the secluded area, one is not exempt from this factor.

A female human being is grounds for a pacittiya. A pandaka (basically, a male homosexual or eunuch--see Sanghadisesa 2 for details), a female peta, and an animal in the form of a woman are all grounds for a dukkata.

Perception is not a factor here. If one is sitting with a woman, even if one thinks she is a man or something else, this factor is fulfilled.

Effort. To sit also includes lying down. Whether the bhikkhu sits near the woman when she is already seated, or the woman sits near him when he is already seated, or both sit down at the same time, makes no difference.

Private means private to the eye and private to the ear. Two people sitting in a place private to the eye means that no one else can see if they wink, raise their eyebrows or nod. If they are in a place private to the ear, no one else can hear what they say in an normal voice.

A secluded seat is one behind a wall, a closed door, a large bush or anything at all that would afford them enough privacy to commit the sexual act.

According to the Commentary, private to the eye is the essential factor here. Even if a man is within hearing, but not sight--i.e., he is sitting just outside the door to the private place--that does not exempt one from the offense here.

The Commentary states further that the presence of a man within sight absolves one from this factor only if he is knowledgeable enough to know what is and is not lewd, if he is awake, and if he is not blind or deaf. Even a crazy or drowsy man, though, if he meets these criteria, would absolve one from this factor.

Intention. The Commentary explains "aiming at privacy" as being motivated by any defilement related to sex, but this explana-tion opens as many questions as it tries to resolve. Does it refer solely to the desire for intercourse, or to other more subtle sexually-related desires? Unfortunately, neither the Commentary nor the Sub-commentary say. A passage in the Anguttara Nikaya (A.VII.47), though, offers a clue here: It refers to a priest or contemplative who observes the chaste life by not engaging in intercourse, but whose chastity is "broken, cracked, spotted and blemished" by the joy he finds in any one of the following activities:

1) He consents to being rubbed down, bathed and massaged by a woman.

2) He jokes, plays and amuses himself with a woman.

3) He stares into a woman's eyes.

4) He listens to the voices of women outside his wall as they laugh, speak, sing or cry.

5) He recollects how he used to laugh, converse and play with a woman.

6) He sees a householder or householder's son enjoying himself endowed with the five sensual pleasures.

7) He practices the chaste life intent on being born in one or another of the heavenly hosts, (thinking) "By this virtue or practice or abstinence or chaste life I will be a god of one sort or another.

The joy a person finds in any of this things is termed a sexual fetter (methuna-sanyoga) which prevents him from gaining release from birth, ageing and death, and from the entire round of suffering. If the Commentary is indeed referring to this sort of thing when it mentions "defilements related to sex" (methuna-nissita-kilesa), then the factor of intention under this rule would be fulfilled by such things as wanting to joke with the woman, to stare into her eyes, or to enjoy hearing her voice as she talks or laughs.

Although a bhikkhu may be convinced that he has no such motives in sitting in private with a particular woman, he should remember that this is one of the training rules where public opinion makes its claims. Aniyata 1 requires that if an outside witness is suspicious of a bhikkhu's sitting alone with a woman--and unless he is sitting with his mother or other elderly relative, it's rare that outsiders won't be suspicious--the Community must meet to investigate the issue. Even though they may find him innocent of any wrong-doing, the fact that they have had to investigate his behavior is usually enough to keep suspicions alive among the laity, and to create resentment among his fellow bhikkhus over the waste of their time due to his indiscretion.

The Vinaya Mukha avoids these problems by taking an entirely different approach to the factor of intention here. It defines "not aiming at privacy" with the following illustration: A bhikkhu is sitting in a secluded place with a man and woman present, but the man gets up and leaves before the bhikkhu can stop him. In other words, the bhikkhu is not intending to sit alone in private with the woman at all, but circumstances beyond his control force him to.

There is nothing in the Vibhanga to decide conclusively between these two interpretations. However, both the Canon and the Commen-tary give frequent warnings about the dangers that can arise when a bhikkhu sits alone with a woman: His own defilements may tempt him to do, say or think things that are detrimental to his resolve in the chaste life; and even when his motives are pure, he is inviting the suspicions of others--suspicions that do not easily fade even when the Community makes an official inquiry and declares him innocent, as mentioned above. At the same time, he is leaving himself at the mercy of the woman, who will later be free to make any claims she likes about what went on while she was alone him. As Lady Visakha said, "It is unfitting and improper, sir, for the master to sit in private, alone with a woman....Even though the master may not be aiming at that act, it is difficult to convince those who are unbelievers."

All of this suggests that the Vinaya Mukha's interpretation is the wiser and safer of the two. Still, this is another case where different Communities interpret the rule differently, and the wise policy would be to be no less strict than one's Community in interpreting this factor.

Non-offenses. In addition to the bhikkhu not aiming at privacy, there is no offense for the bhikkhu who sits alone with a woman when his attention is elsewhere--i.e., he is absorbed in his work or his meditation when a woman happens to come in and sit down in the room where he is sitting. Also, there is no offense if either the bhikkhu or the woman or both are standing, or if both are sitting when a man is present.

Summary: Sitting or lying down with a woman or women in a private, secluded place with no other man present is a pacittiya offense.

***

45. Should any bhikkhu sit in private, alone with a woman, it is to be confessed.

The full offense here has three factors that differ slightly from those for the preceding rule.

Object. Here woman is defined as a human female being who knows what is and is not lewd. Pandakas, female petas and animals in the form of a woman are again grounds for a dukkata.

Effort. One sits with her alone--without another person present--in a place private to the ear and to the eye, but which is not secluded. Examples of such places would be spots out in the open (e.g, a bench in an open deserted park), seats in a glassed-in porch or room, or in an open-air pavilion. The Commentary would include walled-in open areas--such as a park with a fence around it--here as well, but outside areas screened by a wall or a bush would fall under the preceding rule. Aniyata 1 & 2 suggest that the distinguishing factor here would be how hidden it is. If it would be convenient for committing sexual intercourse, it would fall under the preceding rule; if it wouldn't, it would fall here.

As in the preceding rule, sitting includes lying down as well. And again, whether the bhikkhu sits near the woman when she is already seated, or the woman sits near him when he is already seated, or both sit down at the same time, makes no difference here.

According to the Commentary, the other person whose presence exempts one from this factor can be either a man or a woman, but must know what is and is not lewd, must be awake, must not be deaf or blind, and must be sitting "within sight", i.e., a radius of six meters. As in the preceding rule, whether or not the man or woman is crazy or drowsy is of no consequence here.

Intention. One must be aiming at privacy for this factor to be fulfilled. See the discussion under the preceding rule.

Non-offenses. Strangely enough, the Vibhanga's no-offense clauses here are identical with those for the preceding rule--i.e., they make no mention of the fact that the presence of another woman would exempt one from an offense. The Commentary seems justified in assuming this fact, though, for otherwise there would be no reason to have these two separate rules on the same subject.

Summary: Sitting or lying down alone with a woman in an unsecluded but private place with no one else present is a pacittiya offense.

***

46. Should any bhikkhu, being invited for a meal and without taking leave of an available bhikkhu, go calling on families before or after the meal, except at the proper times, it is to be confessed. Here the proper times are these: the time of giving cloth, the time of making robes. These are the proper times here.

The origin story here suggests that the purpose of this rule is to prevent bhikkhus from wandering off before an appointed meal time so that they will not show up late or be difficult to track down; and to prevent them, after the meal, from using the invitation as an excuse to go off wandering without taking leave (see Pacittiya 85). However, the definition of the factor of object--which limits this rule to visiting lay people's houses--and the non-offense clauses--which allow one to visit monasteries and nunneries without taking leave--suggest a more over-riding purpose: to prevent bhikkhus from taking the invitation as an excuse to visit lay people and spend their time in inappropriate ways.

There are two factors for the full offense here:

1) Object: a family residence.

2) Effort: One enters such a residence--without having taken leave of an available bhikkhu--on a morning when one has been invited to a meal, except during the time exemptions mentioned in the rule.

Object. A family residence is grounds for a pacittiya here; its yard, grounds for a dukkata.

Effort. Entering the residence is defined as having both feet inside the threshold.

Meal here means one consisting of any of the five staple foods.

As for the question of how to determine whether another bhikkhu is or is not available, the Commentary draws the distinction like this: After the desire to go calling on families arises in one's mind, and one takes a normal path to leave the monastery, if one comes across a bhikkhu who is close enough to address in a normal tone of voice (within six meters, says the Sub-commentary), that means that a bhikkhu is available and one should inform him of where one is going. If one does not come across a bhikkhu that close, no bhikkhu is available, and there is no need to go out of one's way to find one.

This, though, is in direct contradiction to the Vibhanga's definition of available--"It is possible to go, having taken leave"--that is, if there is another bhikkhu in the monastery, and there are no obstacles to taking one's leave from him (he is asleep, he is sick, he is receiving important visitors), one is obliged to go out of one's way to inform him.

According to the K/Commentary, taking leave in the context of this rule means the simple act of informing the other bhikkhu that, "I am going to the house of so-and-so," or any similar statement. In other words, one is not asking permission to go, although if the other bhikkhu sees that one is doing something improper in going, he is perfectly free to say so. If one treats his comments with disrespect, one incurs at least a dukkata under Pacittiya 54. (See the discussion under that rule for details.)

For a new bhikkhu still living in dependence (nissaya) on his mentor,

though, taking leave is a matter of asking permission at all times, whether one has been invited to a meal or not. The Mahavagga (I.25.24; II.21.1) states that one of the duties of such a bhikkhu is that he must receive permission from his mentor before entering a village, going to a cemetery, or leaving the district. Not to ask permission before going, or to go after being denied permission, is to incur a dukkata. As for the mentor, if he gives permission to go when it is not appropriate to do so, he is the one who incurs the dukkata.

Non-offenses. As the rule states, there is no offense in not taking leave at the time of giving cloth--the robe season--or at a time of making robes, i.e., any time when one is making a robe. These exceptions enable a bhikkhu to visit his lay supporters easily to obtain gifts of thread, cloth or scissors, etc., at such times.

There is also no offense in going when one has taken leave of another bhikkhu, or in going when one has not taken leave under any of the following circumstances:

--There is no bhikkhu available (e.g, one is living alone; all the other bhikkhus have left; all the bhikkhus in the monastery are going together).

--One is going to the house where one was invited for the meal.

--The path to the house in which the meal is to be given leads through another house or its yard.

--One is going to another monastery, to bhikkhunis' quarters or to the residence of people ordained in another sect or religion (located in a village, says the Commentary), or one is returning from any of these places.

--There are dangers. This, according to the Commentary, refers to dangers to one's life or to one's resolve in practicing chastity.)

The general principle. This rule, in conjunction with Pacittiya 85, is designed to keep bhikkhus from visiting lay people and spending their time in inappropriate ways. Pacittiya 85 deals with entire villages and towns, and covers the period from noon until the following dawn. This rule deals with family residences and covers the period from dawn until noon on days when one has been invited to a meal. The period from dawn to noon on days when one is not invited to a meal, and would be expected to go on alms-round, is thus not covered by either rule. Note, however, that the Buddha reprimands Ven. Upananda for visiting families during the latter part of a morning after going for alms. This shows that he did not approve of such behavior, even though he had practical reasons for not laying down a rule against it: On mornings when one is going for alms--and in his time, alms-going could often be an all-morning affair--there is no convenient way to draw a hard and fast line between appropriate alms-going and inappropriate visiting. Thus we have the rules as they stand. At present, though, in monasteries where alms-going takes up much less of the morning, or where the bhikkhus do not go outside the monastery for alms at all, it is a wise policy to adhere to the general principle by informing a fellow bhikkhu whenever possible when one is leaving the monastery for errands or visits which involve lay people, even during periods not covered by the rules.

Summary: Visiting lay families--without having informed an available bhikkhu--before or after a meal to which one has been invited is a pacittiya offense except during the robe season or any time one is making a robe.

***

47. A bhikkhu who is not ill may accept (make use of) a four-month invitation to ask for requisites. If he should accept (make use of) it for longer than that--unless the invitation is renewed or is permanent--it is to be confessed.

Object. An invitation to ask for requisites is an offer, made by a lay person, to supply a bhikkhu with requisites whenever he (the bhikkhu) asks for them. Such invitations may be made either to individual bhikkhus, to groups or to entire Communities. The responsibilities incumbent on the two sides in such an arrangement are well-illustrated in a passage from the origin story to this rule.

"'Now at that time some group-of-six bhikkhus wore their lower robes improperly, their upper robes improperly, and were not at all consummate in their deportment. Mahanama the Sakyan criticized them: 'Sirs, why do you wear your lower robes improperly, your upper robes improperly, and why are you not at all consummate in your deportment? Shouldn't a person who has gone forth wear his lower robe properly, his upper robe properly, and be consum-mate in his deportment?'

"The group-of-six bhikkhus nursed a grudge against him. They thought, 'Now how can we embarrass Mahanama the Sakyan?' Then it occurred to them, 'Listen, friends. Mahanama the Sakyan has made an invitation to provide the Sangha with medicines. Let's ask him for ghee.'

"So they went to where Mahanama the Sakyan was staying, and on arrival said to him, 'We have need of a gallon of ghee, my friend.'

"'Please wait for a day, sirs. People have just gone to the cattle pen to get ghee. You may come and fetch it in the morning.'

A second time...A third time, they said to him, 'We have need of a gallon of ghee, my friend.'

"'Please wait for a day, sirs. People have just gone to the cattle pen to get ghee. You may come and fetch it in the morning.'

"'Did you make the invitation not desiring to give, in that having made the invitation you don't give?'

"So Mahanama the Sakyan was annoyed and offended and spread it about, 'How can revered ones, being told, "Please wait for a day, sirs," not wait?'"

As the story shows, the person making the invitation was expected to provide the goods he offered, while bhikkhus were expected to be reasonable in their requests.

The Vibhanga and Commentary, taken together, show that this rule covers invitations made to Communities to provide them with medi-cines. The rule and origin stories show that at first invitations of this sort had three standard forms: a four-month invitation (each of the major seasons in India lasts four months, which may have been the reason for this type of invitation), a renewed four-month invitation, and a permanent invitation. Eventually, though, the Vibhanga worked out the following four-fold schema for covering invitations of a wide variety of sorts: those which (1) specify requisites (medicines), (2) specify a time period, (3) specify both or (4) specify neither.

(1) An invitation specifying requisites may specify merely the type of item offered--"Let me know if you ever need any honey or sugar"--or it may also specify the amount--"Let me know if you ever need a bottle of honey...a pound of sugar." In cases like these, a bhikkhu may ask for the type or amount of the item which has been offered. If he asks for other items or for more of the proper item than the amount offered, if that too is specified, he incurs a pacittiya. How-ever, since the donor mentions no time limit, the Vibhanga says that the bhikkhu may ask at any time.

(2) An invitation specifying the time period may be phrased, for example, "Let me know if you need any medicine during this Rains Retreat." In cases like this, a bhikkhu may ask for any type or amount of medicine during that time period. But as the origin stories to this and the other rules dealing with asking make clear, (see Sanghadisesa 6 and NP 6 & 7), he should be moderate and reasonable when making requests, and not abuse the lay supporter's generosity. If, not being ill, he asks after the period has expired, he incurs a pacittiya.

(3) An invitation specifying requisites and the time period might be phrased, "Let me know if you need any honey during the Rains Retreat." In cases like this, a bhikkhu incurs a pacittiya if he asks for items other than those offered--or for more of the proper item than the amount offered, if that too is mentioned--whether or not he asks during the time period mentioned. He also incurs a pacittiya if, not being ill, he asks for the items offered after the time period has expired.

(4) An invitation specifying neither requisites nor the time period may be phrased, for example, "Let me know if you even need any medicine." In cases like this, the bhikkhu may ask for any medicine at any time. As in case (2), though, he should try to be reasonable in his requests.

Effort. A bhikkhu who asks for medicine outside of the types of medicine or time period specified in the invitation incurs a pacittiya in the asking, regardless of whether or not he is given what he asks for. If he asks for medicine, making use of an invitation to do so, but then uses it for a non-medicinal purpose--e.g, he asks for honey and then has someone else make a desert with it--he incurs a pacittiya as well.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. If the time period has expired, and he asks assuming that it hasn't, he commits the full offense all the same.

Non-offenses. Three of the no-offense clauses require no special explanation: There is no offense in asking from relatives, for the sake of another, or for medicine to be bought with one's own resources.

One of the two no-offense clauses requiring explanation is that there is no offense in asking from those who have made an invitation. This the Commentary explains by saying that if one has received a personal invitation, one may ask in line with its terms, but that other-wise the limits set by this rule apply only to invitations made to an entire Community, and not to those made on a personal basis to individual bhikkhus. Although the Vibhanga makes no specific mention of this point, it is the only way to make sense of this no-offense clause and the relationship between this rule and Pacittiya 39. Under that rule, a bhikkhu who is not ill and has not been invited incurs a dukkata in asking for any one of the five tonics, and there seems no reason to impose a heavier penalty for requesting one of the five tonics after a personal invitation to do so has expired. If, though, the invitation referred to in this rule is one made to an entire Community, the heavier penalty makes sense as an added protection to the donor against having his/her invitation abused by the less conscientious members of the Community. This added protection would also be a means of encouraging further invitations of this sort in the future.

The second no-offense clause requiring explanation is the one for an ill bhikkhu. Reading the rule, one would imagine that the exemp-tion for an ill bhikkhu would read simply, "There is no offense if one is ill," but instead it reads, "There is no offense if one says, "The time period for which we were invited has passed, but we have need of medicine." This is an important point of etiquette. Normally, an ill bhikkhu may ask anyone for medicine at anytime, but in dealing with a person who has made an invitation for medicine to the Community, he has to show special consideration. In mentioning the fact that the time period for the invitation has expired, he gives recognition of the fact that the donor is no longer under any obligation to provide the medicine, thus giving the donor a convenient "out" in case he/she can no longer provide it. This simple gesture is the least consideration that can be shown to someone who has had the generosity to invite the Community to ask for medicines. And again, simple gestures of this sort are what protect donors and encourage similar invitations again in the future.

An alternative interpretation. The Vinaya Mukha tries to extend this rule to cover invitations of every sort, individual and communal, dealing with any sort of requisite. It also reads the training rule to mean that if a time-limit is not specified on an invitation, a four-month time limit is to be assumed. All of this has no support in the Vibhanga, and so is not binding, but the last point is something that individual bhikkhus may adopt as a personal policy as a way of teaching themselves to be moderate in their requests. A donor's faith and financial position can change quickly, and it is reasonable not to depend on an invitation for longer periods of time unless the donor makes it clear that he/she is still willing to provide the item offered in the first place.

Summary: When a supporter has made an offer to supply medicines to the Community: If any bhikkhu who, not being ill, asks for medicine outside of the terms of the offer, or who asks for a medicine to use for a non-medicinal purpose, it is a pacittiya offense.

***

48. Should any bhikkhu go to see an army on active duty, unless there is a suitable reason, it is to be confessed.

Object. An army in the time of the Buddha was a very different affair from what an army is now. We will start with a discussion of how the Vibhanga explains this factor in terms of armies at that time, and then follow with a discussion of how it may be applied to armies at present.

Armies in those times consisted mainly of what we would call reserve units. These were organized into four divisions: elephant units, cavalry units, chariot units and infantry units. The soldiers for the most part were citizens who would live at home until called up on active duty to engage in actual warfare or practice maneuvers, activities which always took place outside the city. Battles, both actual and practice, were fought according to rules--total warfare is a modern invention--and it was possible for non-military citizens to watch, with occasional danger to live and limb, much as people at present watch football games. (Going to a battlefield is listed in the Brahmajala Suttanta as a form of entertainment.)

With this information in mind, it is easy to understand the Vibhanga's treatment of this rule: An army on active duty--composed of a full panoply of elephant, cavalry, chariot and infantry units who have left the city--is grounds for a pacittiya. Any segment of an army on duty--even one armed archer, says the Commentary--is grounds for a dukkata. An army not on duty--the Commentary illustrates this with a king's pleasure trip--is not grounds for an offense.

To apply these definitions to armed forces at present: The Vibhanga's definition for army comes close to the modern definition of a field army with a full array of artillery, armored, airborne and infantry divisions. Navies, marines and air forces did not exist at that time, but the Great Standards would allow us to extend the definition of army to cover similar large units of these branches of the military as well. Since armies on active duty no longer limit their activities to areas outside of cities--they are sometimes based in cities, run practice drills there, and can be called in to quell riots or fight enemy forces there--the definition of "on active duty" must be changed to fit the way armies use it at present. Thus soldiers at work on base or off would count as being on duty, and the only areas of armed bases that would not be grounds for an offense here would be the areas where officer's families are housed.

With these points in mind, we may say that a full field army--or the equivalent in naval, marine or air forces--on active duty would be grounds for a pacittiya here. Any smaller unit of the military on active duty--a regiment, a division, or even one armed soldier--would be grounds for a dukkata. Armies not on active duty, as when they organize charity affairs, would not be grounds for an offense.

Effort. This factor is fulfilled simply by standing and watching an army on duty except when one has a suitable reason. The Vibhanga gives a dukkata for every step one makes in going to watch an army on duty, and a pacittiya for standing and watching.

The origin story's example of a suitable reason is that a bhikkhu's uncle in the army had fallen ill and wished to see him. Other suitable reasons would include accepting an invitation from the soldiers to receive alms or to give a talk.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

if, having gone on business, one sees the army;

if, standing within a monastery, one watches an army fighting or holding practice maneuvers nearby;

if an army comes to where one happens to be;

if one meets an army coming from the opposite direction; or if there are dangers. The Commentary interprets this last point as referring to dangers to one's life or chastity which one hopes to escape by taking shelter with the army.

Summary: Watching a field army--or similar large military force--on active duty, unless there is a suitable reason, is a pacittiya offense.

* * *

49.There being some reason or another for a bhikkhu to go to an army, he may stay two or three (consecutive) nights with the army. If he should stay longer than that, it is to be confessed.

Object. Nothing is said in any of the texts as to whether this rule applies only to armies on active duty, or to armies off duty as well, but since this and the following rule are continuations of the preceding one, they would seem to apply only to armies on active duty. Thus this rule does not apply to the housing where military officers live with their families, whether on base or off.

Effort. As under Pacittiya 5--the rule that deals with sleeping in the same lodging with an unordained person--nights here are counted by dawns. If a bhikkhu leaves the army before dawn of any night, that night is not counted. If he returns to spend another night/dawn with the army, the series starts over again from one. If, however, he has spent three consecutive nights with the army and is still with the army at any time beginning with sunset of the fourth night, he incurs a pacittiya. Unlike Pacittiya 5, he does not need to be lying down for this factor to count. The Commentary illustrates this point by saying that even if he is using his psychic power to sit levitating above the army at sunset on the fourth day, he still fulfills this factor.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Even if one miscounts the nights, one is not exempt from the offense.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in staying longer than three consecutive nights:

if one spends another night somewhere else in the meantime;

if one is ill or caring for one who is ill;

'if the army is surrounded by opposing forces;

if one is being held captive; or if there are other dangers.

Summary: Staying more than three consecutive nights with an army on active duty is a pacittiya offense.

***

50. If a bhikkhu staying two or three nights with an army should go to a battlefield, a roll call, the troops in battle formation or to see a review of the (battle) units, it is to be confessed.

"Then a certain bhikkhu of the group of six, having gone to the battlefield, was pierced by an arrow. People made fun of him: 'We hope it was a good battle, venerable sir. How many points did you get?'"

A battle field, according to the Vibhanga and Commentary here, is a place where actual fighting may be seen; according to the Commentary to the Brahmajala Suttanta, it is a place where war games are held. Both interpretations seem valid, especially consider-ing the organized and decorous nature of warfare in those days.

The Commentary also says that a review of battle units can mean anything down to a review of a single unit.

Roll call and troops in battle formation are self-explanatory.

The Brahmajala Suttanta mentions all four of these activities as forms of entertainment. From this, using the Great Standards, we may say that any show that the armed forces put on for the public--parades, air shows, etc.--would fall under this factor as well.

Notice that these activities fulfill this factor even if they do not include the full array of forces that one would find in a field army or similar large military unit. In other words, a bhikkhu staying with the army would incur the full offense here for watching these activities even if they involve only a small segment of a single division. If he is not staying with the army, though, then under Pacittiya 48 he would incur a pacittiya for watching these activities only if they contain the full complement of artillery, armored, airborne and infantry forces; and a dukkata if they contain only a segment.

Effort. As with Pacittiya 48, there is a dukkata for every step one takes towards watching these activities, and a pacittiya for standing and watching them.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga's no-offense clauses here are ident-ical with those for Pacittiya 48. In other words, there is no offense:

if, having gone on business, one happens to see any of these activities;

if, standing within a monastery, one watches these activities;

if an army comes to where one happens to be;

if one meets an army coming from the opposite direction; or if there are dangers.

Summary: Going to a battlefield, a roll call, the troops in battle formation or to see a review of the battle units while one is staying with an army is a pacittiya offense.

Six: The Alcoholic Drink Chapter

51. The drinking of alcohol or fermented liquor is to be confessed.

"Then Ven. Sagata went to the hermitage of the coiled-hair ascetic of Ambatittha, and on arrival--having entered the fire building and spread out a grass mat--sat down cross-legged with his body erect and mindfulness established before him. The naga (living in the fire building) saw that Ven. Sagata had entered, and on seeing him was upset, disgruntled and emitted smoke. Ven. Sagata emitted smoke. The naga, unable to bear his anger, blazed up. Ven. Sagata, entering the fire element, blazed up. Then Ven. Sagata, having consumed the naga's fire with his own fire, left for Bhaddavatika.

"Then the Blessed One, having stayed at Bhaddavatika as long as he liked, left on a walking tour to Kosambi. Word reached the lay followers of Kosambi: 'They say that Ven. Sagata did battle with the Ambatittha naga!'

"Then the Blessed One, having toured by stages, came to Kosambi. The Kosambi lay followers, after welcoming the Blessed One, went to where Ven. Sagata was staying and, on arrival, having bowed down and sat to one side, said to him, 'What, honored sir, is something the masters like which is hard for you to get? What can we prepare for you?'

"When this was said, some group-of-six bhikkhus said to the Kosambi lay followers, 'Friends, there is a strong liquor called pidgeon's liquor (the color of pidgeons' feet, according to the Commentary) which the bhikkhus like and is hard for them to get. Prepare that.'

"Then the Kosambi lay followers, having prepared pidgeon's liquor in house after house, and seeing that Ven. Sagata had gone out for alms, said to him, 'Master Sagata, drink some pidgeon's liquor! Master Sagata, drink some pidgeon's liquor!' Then Ven. Sagata, having drunk pidgeon's liquor in house after house, passed out at the city gate as he was leaving the city.

"Then the Blessed One, leaving the city with a large group of bhikkhus, saw that Ven. Sagata had passed out at the city gate. On seeing him, he addressed the bhikkhus, saying, 'Bhikkhus, pick up Sagata.'

"Answering, 'As you say, Lord,' the bhikkhus took Ven. Sagata to the monastery and laid him down with his head towards the Blessed One. Then Ven. Sagata turned around and went to sleep with his feet towards the Blessed One. So the Blessed One addressed the bhikkhus, saying, 'In the past, wasn't Sagata respectful to the Tathagata and deferential?'

"'Yes, Lord.'

"'But is he respectful to the Tathagata and deferential now?'

"'No, Lord.'

"'And didn't Sagata do battle with the Ambatittha naga?'

"'Yes, Lord.'

"'But could he do battle with even a salamander now?'

"'No, Lord.'"

Object. Alcohol means any alcoholic beverage made from grain, yeast or any combination of ingredients. Examples would include whiskey, beer, vodka and gin. Fermented liquor means any alcoholic beverage made from flowers, fruits, honey, sugar or any combination of ingredients. Examples here would include wine, mead and rum. Together, the two terms are meant to cover all kinds of alcoholic beverages.

There is some controversy as to what other substances would be included in this factor using the Great Standards. Since the Canon repeatedly criticizes alcohol on the grounds that it destroys one's sense of shame, weakens one's discernment and can put one into a stupor--as happened to Ven. Sagata--it seems reasonable to extend this rule to other intoxicants, narcotics and hallucinogens as well. Thus things like marijuana, hashish, heroin, cocaine and LSD would fulfill this factor. Coffee, tea, tobacco and betel do not have this effect, though, so there is no reason to include them here.

Items which look, smell and taste like alcohol but are non-alcoholic also do not come under this rule. Thus, for example, carbonated apple juice that resembles champagne would not fulfill this factor.

Perception is not a mitigating factor under this rule. A bhikkhu drinking champagne that he thinks to be carbonated apple juice would fall under this factor, regardless of his ignorance.

Effort. The Vibhanga defines drinking as taking even as little as the tip of a blade of grass. Thus taking a small glass of wine, even though it might not be enough to make one drunk, would be enough to fulfill this factor.

According to the Commentary, the number of offenses involved in taking an alcoholic drink is determined by the number of separate sips. As for intoxicants taken by means other than sipping, each separate effort would count as an offense.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that there is no offense in taking alcohol "mixed in broth, meat or oil." The Commentary interprets the first two items as referring to stews and meat dishes to which alcoholic beverages, such as wine, are added for flavoring before they are cooked. Since the alcohol would evaporate during the cooking, such dishes would have no intoxicating effect. Foods containing unevaporated alcohol--such as rum babas--would not be included under this allowance.

As for alcohol mixed in oil, this refers to a medicine used in the Buddha's time for afflictions of the "wind element". The Mahavagga (VI.14.1) allows this medicine for use only as long as the taste, color and smell of the alcohol are not perceptible. From this point, the Vinaya Mukha argues that morphine and other narcotics used as pain killers are allowable as well.

In addition, the Vibhanga states that there is no offense in taking alcohol in molasses and embric myrobalan--none of the texts explain what this means--or in taking fermented medicines which are non-alcoholic, but whose color, taste or smell is like alcohol.

Summary: Taking an intoxicant is a pacittiya offense regardless of whether one is aware or not that it is an intoxicant.

***

52. Tickling with the fingers is to be confessed.

"Now at that time some group-of-six bhikkhus were making one of the group of 17 laugh by tickling him with their fingers. Convulsed with laughter and unable to catch his breath, he died."

There are three factors for the full offense here.

1) Object: another bhikkhu.

2) Effort: One touches any part of his body with any part of one's own body.

3) Intention: One's intention in touching him is to make him laugh.

Object. A bhikkhu is grounds for a pacittiya here; any unordained person, grounds for a dukkata. The Commentary notes that even a bhikkhuni counts as an unordained person in the context of this rule, and that a bhikkhu looking for a little fun can tickle one without incurring a penalty stronger than a dukkata. There are occasional attempts at humor in the Commentary, and we can probably write this off as one of them.

Effort. This factor is fulfilled only by body-to-body contact, as defined at length under Sanghadisesa 2. The following actions, if done with the intent of making the other person laugh, would be grounds for a dukkata here regardless of whether the person was ordained or not:

using an item connected with the body--such as a stick--to poke at the person;

touching an item connected with the other person's body;

tossing or dropping things on the other person.

Intention. If one has reasons for touching the other person aside from wanting to make him laugh, there is no penalty in doing so. Thus a bhikkhu massaging another bhikkhu's tired back incurs no offense if he inadvertently happens to touch a spot where the other bhikkhu is ticklish.

Result is not a factor here. If one tickles another bhikkhu with the thought of making him laugh, one incurs the full offense regardless of whether he actually laughs or not.

Summary: Tickling another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense.

***

53. The act of playing in the water is to be confessed.

Here again, the factors for the full offense are three.

1) Effort: One jumps up or down, splashes or swims

2) Object: in the water deep enough to immerse one's ankle

3) Intention: for fun.

Effort. According to the Commentary, each individual effort counts as a separate offense. Thus if one is swimming for fun, one incurs a pacittiya for each hand or footstroke.

Object. Jumping up or down in water less than ankle deep incurs a dukkata, as does splashing water with the hands, feet, a stick or a piece of tile; playing with water in a tumbler or a bowl; or playing with such things as sour gruel, milk, buttermilk, colored dyes, urine or mud.

The Vibhanga states that there is also a dukkata for playing in a boat. This the Commentary defines as paddling a boat with an oar, propelling it with a pole or pushing it up on shore.

Intention. The Vibhanga defines this factor as "for a laugh", which the Commentary translates as "for fun" or "for sport" (kiladhippayo).

The question of swimming for exercise or health does not come up in any of the texts, and seems to have been virtually unheard of in Asia until recent times. Swimming in most Asian countries has long been regarded as a childish form of play, and the one mention in the Canon of athletic bhikkhus keeping their bodies in strong shape is disparaging: In the origin story to Sanghadisesa 8, Ven. Dabba Mallaputta assigned separate lodgings to different groups of bhikkhus--those who studied the Suttas, those who studied the Vinaya, those who meditated, etc.--and, finally, "for those bhikkhus who lived indulging in animal talk and keeping their bodies in strong shape, he assigned lodgings in the same place, 'So that even these venerable ones will live as they like.'" Thus it does not seem likely that the Buddha would have recognized physical fitness as an appropriate reason for bhikkhus to go swimming.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that there is no offense in jumping in or out of the water, swimming or using a boat:

if one goes into the water not for fun but because one has busi-ness to do--examples would include bathing or helping a person who cannot swim;

if one is crossing to the other shore of a body of water; or if there are dangers--e.g, one is escaping a fire or a wild beast.

Summary: Jumping and swimming in the water for fun is a pacittiya offense.

***

54. Disrespect is to be confessed.

This rule refers to cases where one has been admonished for one's behavior. The factors for the full offense are two.

1) Object: One has been admonished by a fellow bhikkhu, who cites a rule formulated in the Vinaya.

2) Effort: One shows disrespect for the bhikkhu or for the rule.

Object. Only if the bhikkhu cites a rule in the Vinaya is this factor grounds for a pacittiya. If he criticizes one's actions, citing standards of behavior outside of the Vinaya--e.g., he says that one has been insensitive, out of touch with modern attitudes or whatever--this factor becomes grounds for a dukkata.

If the person admonishing one is not a bhikkhu, then regardless of whether he/she cites a rule in the Vinaya or standards of behavior outside of the Vinaya, again this factor is grounds for a dukkata.

Whether or not one views the admonition as valid is not an issue here. Even if the other person is really an ignorant fool, has misinter-preted the rule, or has cited some standard of behavior which has absolutely nothing to do with Buddhist practice, one should be careful not to show disrespect in word or deed.

Effort. There are two possible targets for one's disrespect--the person and the rule--and two ways of showing it: by word or by gesture.

Disrespect for the person would include such things as saying "Who are you to tell me?" "Get lost!" or "Go to hell!"

or making a rude gesture or even a slight facial expression to show one's contempt.

Disrespect for the rule would include such things as saying, "That's a stupid rule," "That rule doesn't apply to me;"

stubbornly repeating the action for which one was admonished (this point is covered in Mv.IV,17.1-9); or making a rude gesture, saying, "This is what I think of that rule."

Further action. If one persists in acting disrespectfully when being admonished, one may also be subject to Sanghadisesa 12 or to a formal act of suspension.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, being admonished, one states simply that one was taught differently by one's teachers.

As the Dhammapada (verse 76) says, one should regard a person who points out one's faults as a guide who points out hidden treasure. If one shows disrespect to such a guide, it is unlikely that he/she will feel inclined to point out any hidden treasure ever again.

A good example of how to receive admonishment was set by Ven. Ananda during the First Council (Cv.XI.1.10). Although he was admonished for committing acts which the Buddha had not declared to be offenses, and although he did not see that he had committed any error, still he willingly confessed his actions as offenses so as to show good faith in his fellow bhikkhus.

Summary: Speaking or acting disrespectfully when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach of the training rules is a pacittiya offense.

***

55. Should any bhikkhu try to frighten another bhikkhu, it is to be confessed.

There are three factors for the full offense here:

Intention. One wants to frighten the other person.

Effort. One arranges a frightening sight--such as hanging a sheet in a dark room so that it looks like a ghost--makes a frightening sound, etc., or describes dangers from ghosts, robbers or wild animals.

Object. The other person is a bhikkhu. Anyone who is not a bhikkhu is grounds for a dukkata.

Result is not a factor here. If the three factors are fulfilled, one commits the offense regardless of whether the other person is actually frightened or not.

Non-offenses. To inform another person of dangers from ghosts, robbers, etc., without intending to frighten him/her constitutes no offense.

Summary: Attempting to frighten another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense.

***

56. Should any bhikkhu who is not ill, seeking to warm him-self, kindle a fire or have one kindled--unless there is a suitable reason--it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time, in the winter months, bhikkhus warmed themselves, having kindled a fire by a certain large hollow log. And in that hollow a cobra was scorched by the fire. Coming out, it sprang at the bhikkhus. The bhikkhus ran off every which way."

Here again the factors for the full offense are three:

1) Object: One is not ill.

2) Effort: One lights a fire or gets someone else to light one,

3) Intention: for the purpose of warming oneself.

Object. Not ill, in the context of this rule, means that one can fare comfortably without warming oneself. The Vibhanga makes the point that perception is not a mitigating factor here: Even if one perceives oneself to be ill in these terms, but actually isn't, that still fulfills this factor. What this means is that when it is chilly outside, one should be very sure that extra warmth is a necessity for one's health before going ahead and lighting a fire to warm oneself.

Effort. Lighting a fire at present would include turning on a heating system in one's dwelling, an automobile, etc., for the sake of the warmth.

If, when not ill, one gets someone else to light a fire for the purpose of warming oneself, there is a pacittiya in making the order/request/suggestion, and another pacittiya when the other person lights the fire. To return a burning piece of fuel to a fire is grounds for a dukkata; adding new fuel to a fire--according to the Commentary--is grounds for a pacittiya.

Intention. There is no offense if one lights a fire, or has one lit, for purposes other than warming oneself. Thus one may light a lamp or light a fire to boil water, burn dead leaves or fire an alms bowl without incurring a penalty. The Cullavagga (V.32.1) says that if a forest fire is approaching one's dwelling, one may light a counter-fire to ward off its approach. In other circumstances, though, Pacittiya 10 would impose a pacittiya for lighting a fire on top of "live" soil.

Non-offenses. In addition, there is no offense in warming oneself at raked-out coals or at a fire lit by someone else (not at one's request). And there is no offense in lighting a fire when there are dangers, which the Commentary says refers to cases when one is bitten by a snake (and wants to make the snake-bite medicine mentioned under Pacittiya 40), when one is surrounded by robbers or disturbed by non-human beings or beasts of prey.

Cv.V.14.1 allows bhikkhus to use a "fire hall", similar to a sauna at present, for the purpose of inducing perspiration for health reasons. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense in lighting a fire in a place such as this.

The purpose of this rule is suggested by a passage in the Anguttara Nikaya (V.219) that lists the five disadvantages of sitting around a fire: It is bad for one's eyes, bad for one's skin, bad for one's strength and (most importantly, in this context) groups tend to form (which can turn into factions) and they spend their time in "animal talk".

Summary: Lighting a fire to warm oneself--or having it lit--when one does not need the warmth for one's health is a pacittiya offense.

***

57. Should any bhikkhu bathe at intervals of less than half a month, except at the proper occasions it is to be con-fessed. Here the proper occasions are these: the last month and a half of the hot season, the first month of the rains, these two and a half months being a time of heat, a time of fever; (also) a time of illness; a time of work; a time of going on a journey; a time of wind or rain. These are the proper times here.

"Now at that time bhikkhus were bathing in the hot spring (at Rajagaha). Then King Seniya Bimbisara of Magadha, having gone to the hot spring with the thought, 'I will bathe my head,' waited to one side, thinking, 'I will wait as long as the masters are bathing.' The bhikkhus bathed until nightfall.

"Then King Seniya Bimbisara of Magadha, after having bathed his head at the wrong time (night)--the gates of the city being closed--spent the night outside the city walls....(The Buddha learned of the incident and rebuked the bhikkhus:) 'How can you worthless men, having seen the king, bathe not knowing moderation?'"

The original formulation of this rule--with no allowance for "proper occasions"--seems to have been intended as a temporary disciplinary measure for the bhikkhus who had inconvenienced the king. (There was a similar temporary rule, against eating mangoes (Cv.V.5.1), that the Buddha formulated when King Bimbisara had invited the bhikkhus to help themselves to some of his mangoes, and some group-of-six bhikkhus went and took all the mangoes in his park, even the unripe ones. The rule was later rescinded (Cv.V.5.2) when the Buddha allowed bhikkhus to eat any and all fruit as long as it was allowable in any of the five ways mentioned under Pacittiya 11.)

As for this rule: Once the proper occasions were added, they relaxed it considerably. For instance:

a time of illness is any time when one does not feel comfortable without bathing;

a time of work can involve as little work as sweeping out one's room;

a time of going on a journey is whenever one is about to go, is going or has gone on a trip of half a league (approximately 5 miles/8 kilometers);

a time of wind and rain is whenever a dusty wind blows and two or three drops of rain fall on one's body.

In addition, the Mahavagga (V.13) tells the story of Ven. Maha

Kaccana's leaving the middle Ganges Valley and settling in Avanti, towards the south. After some time, one of his students --Ven. Sona Kutikanna--asked permission to visit the Buddha. Ven. Maha Kaccana gave his permission, together with a request to convey to the Buddha: that certain rules inappropriate for areas outside of the Ganges Valley--this rule among them--be rescinded for bhikkhus living in outlying districts. The Buddha complied with the request, and defined the outlying districts in such a way that there is nowhere in the world outside of the middle Ganges Valley where this rule applies.

Offenses. For those who live in the middle Ganges Valley, the offenses for bathing more frequently than once a fortnight outside of the proper occasions are these: a dukkata for every time one scrubs oneself with chunam (bathing powder) or clay (soap), and a pacittiya when one has finished bathing.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here: Even if one miscounts the days, one is still subject to the offense.

Non-offenses. In addition to bathing more frequently than once a fortnight during the proper occasions or in areas outside the middle Ganges Valley, the Vibhanga says that there is no offense in bathing more frequently if one is crossing a river or if there are dangers. This last allowance the Commentary explains with an example: One is being chased by bees, and so jumps into the water to escape them.

Summary: Bathing more frequently than once a fortnight when residing in the middle Ganges Valley, except on certain occasions, is a pacittiya offense.

***

58. When a bhikkhu receives a new robe, any one of three means of discoloring it is to be applied: green, brown or black. If a bhikkhu should make use of a new robe without applying any of the three means of discoloring it, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time many bhikkhus and wanderers were travel-ing from Saketa to Savatthi. On the way, thieves came out and robbed them. Royal officials, coming out of Savatthi and capturing the thieves with the goods, sent a messenger to the bhikkhus, saying, 'Come, revered sirs, let each identify his own robes and take them.' The bhikkhus could not identify their robes. People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can revered ones not identify their own robes?'"

Protocol. As this rule indicates, a bhikkhu should wear robes only which have been marked with an identifying mark. The Vibhanga does not go into any great detail on procedures for marking a robe, aside from saying that the mark may be as small as the tip of a blade of grass, and can be made with any of the colors mentioned in the rule. (The color green in Pali also covers the color blue, so a mark made with blue ink would be acceptable.)

The Commentary goes into more detail: After the robe has been dyed, one should make a round mark no smaller than the size of a bedbug's back and no larger than the iris of a peacock's eye in all four corners of the robe, three corners, two, or one, as one sees fit. Only round marks are allowable. Such things as lines or angular marks (squares, triangles or stars) are not.

As the Vibhanga notes, once the robe has been marked, there is no need to mark it again, even if the mark wears off, the marked part of the robe gets torn (), one sews a marked cloth together with an unmarked one, or one patches, darns or adds a hem to a marked robe. If Bhikkhu X marks a robe and then gives it to Bhikkhu Y, Y may wear it without having to mark it again.

In Thailand at present, the custom is to make three small dots in one corner of the robe, saying,"Imam pindu-kappam karomi," (I make this properly marked) while making each dot. This procedure does not appear in the Canon or commentaries, but does not conflict with any of them.

The factors for the offense here are two: Object--a new robe--and effort--one makes use of it without first marking it.

Object. According to the Vibhanga, a new robe here refers to one made out of any of the six kinds of robe cloth and which has not yet been marked. Thus an unmarked cloth which has been kept for a long time is still regarded as new. The Commentary adds that robe in the context of this rule refers specifically to robes which can be worn over the shoulders or around the waist--i.e., lower robes, upper robes, outer robes, rains-bathing cloths--and not to ordinary pieces of cloth or other cloth items such as sitting cloths, handkerchiefs or shoulder bags. Any cloth requisite which is not a robe in this sense is not grounds for an offense. Shoulder cloths (ansa) were not worn in the time of the Commentary, but would seem to fall under this factor, as would any other item a bhikkhu might wear around his body.

Effort. The Vibhanga defines this factor with the verb "use" (paribhunjati), while the K/Commentary is more specific in saying that this factor is fulfilled when one wears the robe over the shoulders or around the waist. Since the mark is to be added only after the robe is dyed, this factor does not cover such things as trying on a new robe while it is being sewn but has yet to be dyed.

Non-offenses. As noted above, there is no offense:

in using a robe which has been properly marked;

in using a robe whose mark has worn off (as in washing); or in using a robe whose marked corner has been torn off or otherwise destroyed.

There is also no need to re-mark a marked robe if one sews it together with an unmarked piece of cloth, or if one patches it, darns it, or adds a new hem to it.

The K/Commentary adds that if one's robes have been stolen, destroyed, etc., one may wear an unmarked piece of cloth without incurring an offense.

Summary: Making use of an unmarked robe is a pacittiya offense.

***

59. Should any bhikkhu, himself having placed robe material under shared ownership (vikappa) with a bhikkhu, a bhikkhuni, a female probationer, a male novice or a female novice, then make use of the robe material without the shared ownership's being rescinded, it is to be confessed.

Shared ownership. As mentioned in the explanations to NP1, vikappa is an arrangement whereby a bhikkhu places a robe or robe material under shared ownership so that he may store it for any length of time without its being counted as an extra cloth. One may share ownership with novices, bhikkhunis, female probationers and female novices, as well as with one's fellow bhikkhus.

Passages in the Mahvagga (VIII.20.2; VIII.21.1) show that shared ownership is intended for cloth which is being stored, and not for cloth in use: Cloth which has not been made into a finished robe, rains-bathing cloths being kept during the eight months of the year outside of the rainy season, and skin-eruption covering cloths being kept when they are not needed may all be placed under shared ownership. The three basic robes, miscellaneous requisites, handker-chiefs and the sitting cloth may not. As this rule states, when a bhikkhu wants to use a piece of cloth placed under shared ownership, the shared ownership must first be rescinded.

Protocol. The Vibhanga to this rule explains how cloth may be placed under shared ownership, but unfortunately the explanation is rather terse, so we will have to discuss two alternative interpretations.

What the Vibhanga says. One may place a piece of material under dual ownership only if it is one of the six kinds of robe material discussed under NP 1, and it measures at least four by eight finger-breadths. There are two ways of doing this: in the presence of (the second owner presumably, although this is a controversial point) or in the absence of (again, this would seem to mean the second owner).

In the first method, one says, "I place this under shared ownership with you (plural)" or "with so-and-so." (The Pali formulae for this and the following procedures are in Appendix V.) This is as far as the Vibhanga explains the method, but it seems to refer to two ways of doing the procedure in the presence of the second owner: One uses "you (plural)" if the other owner is a bhikkhu with more seniority than oneself; and the second owner's name if he/she is a junior bhikkhu, a bhikkhuni, female probationer or male or female novice. (Passages throughout the Canon show that it was considered disrespectful to refer to a senior person by his name in his presence. Buddhists, for instance, would never address the Buddha as Gotama, although members of other sects often did. At Mv.I.74.1, Ven. Ananda says that he is not worthy enough to refer to Ven. Maha Kassapa by name, as the latter is his teacher.)

The Vibhanga does not say how shared ownership is to be rescinded in a case like this, although the K/Commentary gives a formula for the second owner to say: "Use what is mine, give it away, or do as you like with it."

In the second method, one gives the cloth to a witness and says, "I give this robe cloth to you to place under shared ownership." The witness then says, "Who are your friends and acquaintances?" One then names two of one's friends (with whom one has made an arrange-ment for using one another's belongings on trust), and the witness says, "I give it to them. Use what is theirs, give it away or do as you like with it."

This second method, apparently, is for use in situations where one has an extra cloth whose time-span is almost up, and one is far away from any co-religionist with whom one has made an arrangement to use one another's belongings on trust.

What is happening in the procedure is that one is giving the cloth away to the witness; the witness then places it with one as a gift to one's friends. Since one already has permission to use their things on trust, one may freely make use of the robe if one wants to, or simply keep it for any number of days if not. (See Mv.V.13.13.) Cases of placing gifts in trust in this way are discussed in detail in Mv.VIII.31.2-3. According to those passages, the witness has no business in giving one permission to use the robe after having given it to the two other people; perhaps the statement is included to show that all sides involved--the witness and the two new owners of the cloth--are agreeable to one's making use of the cloth. If the two new owners have not previously given one permission to use their belongings on trust, one may not make use of the cloth before gaining express permission from them to do so, although one may keep it for any number of days without incurring a penalty under NP1.

What the K/Commentary says. The Commentary has nothing to say about these procedures, while the K/Commentary goes into great detail, reworking the Vibhanga's descriptions to come up with three methods.

In the first method, "in the presence of," one says in the presence of the second owner, "I place this cloth under shared ownership with you." The shared ownership is rescinded when the second owner/ witness gives one permission to use the cloth, give it away or do as one likes with it.

In the second method--which the K/Commentary also calls "in the presence of"--one says in the presence of a witness who is not the second owner, "I place this cloth under shared ownership with so-and-so." The shared ownership is rescinded when the witness gives one permission to use the cloth, give it away or do as one likes with it.

In the third method, "in the absence of," one gives the cloth to a witness, saying, "I give this cloth to you to place under shared ownership." The witness says, "Who is a friend or acquaintance of yours?" One names a friend, and the witness says, "I give it to him/her. Use what is him/hers, give it away or do as you like with it." The shared ownership is rescinded when the witness says this.

There are a number of problems with the K/Commentary's inter-pretations. First, it is hard to see any practical difference between its methods 2 and 3, why one should be called "in the presence of" and the other "in the absence of", and in either case why the witness should have the right to give one permission to use an article which strictly speaking belongs to someone else.

Secondly, the K/Commentary's method for "in the absence of" deviates from the Vibhanga's description of the method. In the Vibhanga's description, the witness places the cloth under shared ownership with two of one's friends, while in the K/Commentary's description, he/she places it under shared ownership with one. Why this should be, none of the texts explains.

For these reasons, it would seem that the previous explanation--that there are two methods, as explained in the Vibhanga--is preferable to the K/Commentary's.

The factors for the offense here are two: Object--any one of the six kinds of robe cloth, measuring at least four by eight finger-breadths, which one has placed under shared ownership; and effort--one uses the cloth without the shared ownership's being rescinded.

The K/Commentary notes that this rule applies not only to robe material, but also to bowls as well. There is nothing in any of the other texts on this point, but the Great Standards would seem to support it.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in using an item placed under shared ownership if the shared ownership has been rescinded, or if one makes use of the item on trust. The factors for legitimately taking an item on trust are as follows (Mv.VIII.19.1):

1) The other person is an acquaintance.

2) He/she is one's friend.

3) He/she has spoken of the matter. (According to the Commentary, this means that he/she has said, "You may take any of my property you want.")

4) He/she is still alive; and

5) one knows that he/she will not mind.

These factors are discussed in detail under Parajika 2.

The K/Commentary's analysis of the factors involved in committing an offense under this rule suggests that when robe material placed under shared ownership is taken on trust, the shared ownership is automatically rescinded and the material reverts to the status of extra cloth.

Summary: Making use of cloth or a bowl which is stored under shared ownership--unless the shared ownership has been rescinded or one is taking the item on trust--is a pacittiya offense.

***

60. Should any bhikkhu hide (another) bhikkhu's bowl, robe, sitting cloth, needle case or belt--or have it hidden--even as a joke, it is to be confessed.

This is another rule which comes from some members of the group-of-six teasing the children in the group-of-17. The factors for the full offense are three:

Object. Any of the requisites mentioned in the rule, belonging to a bhikkhu. Robe here means any piece of robe material measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths, except for sitting cloths, which are mentioned separately. Needle case covers both cases which contain needles and empty needle cases. Any requisite not mentioned in the rule but belonging to a bhikkhu is grounds for a dukkata, as is any requisite belonging to a person who is not a bhikkhu.

Effort. One hides the article or has it hidden. In the latter case--assuming that the other factors are fulfilled--there is a pacittiya in making the request/command/suggestion, and another pacittiya when the other person does one's bidding.

Intention. One is doing it as a game. The Sub-commentary makes clear that the "game" here can either be friendly or malicious. If one hides the other bhikkhu's requisites out of the perverse pleasure of annoying him, or simply for a friendly laugh, one commits the full offense all the same.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if-- not as a game, one puts away properly items which have been put away improperly (), e.g, a bowl left hanging on a peg (see Cv.V.8.5); or one puts away an item, thinking, "I will give it back (to him) after having given him a Dhamma talk." Dhamma talk here, the Commentary says, refers to such admonitions as, "A contemplative should not leave his requisites scattered around." Hiding things with this purpose in mind is sometimes an effective way for a teacher to train his students to stop being careless with their belongings, but it should be used only with discretion, for it can easily backfire.

Summary: To hide another bhikkhu's bowl, robe, sitting cloth, needle case or belt--or to have it hidden--either as a joke or with the purpose of annoying him, is a pacittiya offense.

Seven: The Animal Chapter

61.Should any bhikkhu knowingly deprive an animal of life, it is to be confessed.

There are five factors for the full offense here.

1) Object: a living animal.

2) Perception: One perceives it to be a living animal.

3) Intention: One knowingly, consciously, deliberately and purposefully wants to cause its death.

4) Effort: whatever one does with the purpose of causing it to die.

5) Result: It dies as a result of one's action.

Object. Animal here covers all common animals. As the Commen-tary notes, whether the animal is large or small makes no difference in terms of the penalty, although the size of the animal is one of the factors determining the moral gravity of the act.

Apparently, this factor does not include beings too small to be seen with the naked eye, inasmuch as the classes of medicine allowed in Mahavagga VI include a number of anti-bacterial and anti-viral substances--some mineral salts and the decoctions made from the leaves of some trees, for example, can be antibiotic. The Commentary's example of the smallest extreme to which this rule extends is a bed bug egg. In the four "Things Not To Be Done" taught to every bhikkhu immediately after his ordination (Mv.I.78.4), one is told that one should not deprive an animal of life, "even if it is only an ant."

On the other end of the spectrum, there is a parajika for deliberately killing a human being, and a thullaccaya for deliberately killing a peta, yakkha or naga.

Perception. If this factor is not fulfilled, there is no offense. For example, if one steps on bed bug eggs, thinking them to be spots of dirt, there is no penalty.

Intention, in the Vibhanga, is described as "having made the decision knowingly, consciously and purposefully." According to the Commentary, "having made the decision" refers to the moment when one "crushes" one's indecisiveness by taking an act. Knowingly means that one knows that, "This is a living being." Consciously means that one is aware that one's action is depriving the animal of life. Purposefully means that one's purpose in acting is to kill the animal. All of this indicates that this factor is fulfilled only when one acts on a clear and consciously made decision to deprive the animal of life. Thus, for example, if one is sweeping a walk, trying carefully not to kill any insects, and yet some ants happen to die, one does not commit an offense even if one knew that there was the possibility that some might die, since one's purpose in acting was not to cause their death.

Effort. The act of taking life may take the form of any of the six types of action listed under Parajika 3:

using one's own person (e.g., hitting with the hand, kicking, using a knife or a club);

throwing (hurling a stone, shooting an arrow or a gun);

using stationary devices (setting a trap, placing poison in food);

using magical formulae;

using psychic powers;

commanding.

A passage in the Mahavagga (V.10.10) deals with a case of this last instance, in which a depraved bhikkhu tells a layman that he has use for a certain calf's hide, and the layman kills the calf for him.

Since the bhikkhu did not give a specific command that the calf be killed, and yet the Buddha said that his action did come under this rule, this shows that there is no room for "kappiya vohara" in this context. Whatever one says in hopes of inciting someone else to kill an animal would fulfill this factor.

Result. Only if the animal dies does one incur the pacittiya here. The Commentary to Pacittiya 74 imposes a dukkata on the simple act of striking an animal.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in killing an animal unintentionally--e.g., accidentally dropping a load that crushes a cat to death;

unthinkingly--e.g., absent-mindedly rubbing one's arm while it is being bitten by mosquitoes;

unknowingly--e.g., walking into a dark room and, without realizing it, stepping on an insect; or when one's action is motivated by a purpose other than that of causing death--e.g., giving medicine to a sick dog whose system, it turns out, cannot withstand the dosage.

Still, the Commentary states that if one notices even bed bug eggs while cleaning a bed, one should be careful not to damage them. Thus, "out of compassion, one's duties are to be done carefully." Or, in the words of the Sub-commentary: "One's duties in looking after one's dwelling are to be done with mindfulness well-established so that such creatures do not die."

Summary: Deliberately killing an animal--or having it killed--is a pacittiya offense.

***

62.Should any bhikkhu knowingly make use of water with living beings in it, it is to be confessed.

This rule is similar to Pacittiya 20, differing only in the factor of effort and the way the non-offenses are defined. Here, as under that rule, the factors for the full offense are four:

Object. Water containing living creatures. This includes things like mosquito larvae, but not beings so small they cannot be seen.

Perception. One knows that they are there (from having seen or heard them, says the K/Commentary) and that they will die from the factor of effort, defined below.

If one is in doubt as to whether water contains living beings, then to use it in a way that would cause their death if they were there is to incur a dukkata.

Effort. The Vibhanga does not do into detail on this factor, while the Commentary defines it with examples: drinking the water, using it to wash one's bowl, using it to cool hot porridge, dipping it out of a tank or pond to bathe with it, making waves in a pool so that the water will splash over its banks. The Sub-commentary suggests that this rule covers only cases in which one is using water for one's own personal consumption, but this does not fit with the fact that, under this rule, the Commentary explains how one should go about clean-ing out a dirty pool. (Place eight to ten potfuls of water containing no living beings in another place that will hold the water, and then dip the water from the pool into it.)

From all of this, it would appear that this rule covers all cases of using water containing living beings which are not covered by Pacittiya 20.

Unlike that rule, though, the factor of effort here does not cover cases of telling someone else to use water containing living beings.

Intention. This factor is fulfilled simply by the desire to use the water As the K/Commentary notes, one need not have murderous intent towards the living beings in order to fulfill this factor. For example, if after perceiving that the water contains insects, one chooses to ignore their existence and boils the water--not to kill the insects, but to use the water for bathing--one commits an offense all the same.

Result is not a factor here. Whether or not the living beings actually die is of no consequence in determining the offense.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in using water:

if one does not know that it contains living beings;

if one knows that it does not contain living beings; or if one knows that the living beings it contains will not die from the use one has in mind.

Water strainers. Cv.V.13.1 gives permission for one to use a water strainer to remove dirt and living beings from water before using it, and such strainers eventually became one of a bhikkhu's eight basic requisites. According to Cv.V.13.2, one must have a water strainer with one when going on a journey. If one has no strainer, one may determine the corner of one's outer robe as a strainer, and use it to filter water.

Summary: Using water, knowing that it contains living beings that will die from one's using it, is a pacittiya offense.

***

63. Should any bhikkhu knowingly agitate for the reviving of an issue that has been rightfully dealt with, it is to be confessed.

Issues. An issue (adhikarana) is a matter which, once arisen, must be dealt with formally in a prescribed manner. The Vibhanga lists four sorts:

1) disputes concerning Dhamma and Vinaya (see Sanghadisesa 10), which the Community must deal with by declaring which side is right and which wrong;

2) accusations concerning offenses (see Sanghadisesa 8 & 9; Aniyata 1 & 2), which the Community must deal with by judging them true or false;

3) the commission of offenses, which are to be dealt with by the offenders' undergoing the prescribed penalties; and

4) duties of the Community--such as giving ordination and holding the Patimokkha recitation--which the Community must deal with by the Community's performing them fully.

An issue rightfully dealt with is one that has been handled fairly in accordance with the procedures given in the Vinaya. Some of these procedures are discussed under Pacittiyas 79 & 80, and the Adhikarana-Samatha rules. If an issue has been dealt with improperly, it may be reopened for reconsideration, but once it has been dealt with properly it is considered closed for good.

The factors for an offense under this rule are three:

1) Object: an issue which has been dealt with properly.

2) Perception: One knows that it was dealt with properly, either because one was directly involved or one has been told of the matter.

3) Effort: One says--in the presence of another bhikkhu--that it was dealt with improperly. The Vibhanga gives the following examples of statements that would fulfill this factor: "The issue was not carried out." "It was poorly carried out." "It should be carried out again." "It was not settled." "It was poorly settled." "It should be settled again."

The Parivara (IX.3) contains a short discussion of this rule, and makes the point that one is subject to this rule regardless of whether or not one was involved in dealing with the issue the first time around.

Further action. If one makes a concerted effort to reopen an issue, knowing that it was properly dealt with, one is considered a maker of strife, and as such is subject to an act of censure, banish-ment or suspension, depending on the seriousness of the case.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in agitating to have an issue re-opened if one perceives it to have been improperly dealt with: e.g., dealt with not in accordance with the rules and procedures of the Vinaya, dealt with by an incomplete group, or--in the case of an accusation or similar acts--performed against someone who did not deserve it. This allowance holds regardless of whether, in actuality, the issue was properly dealt with or not. For example: A Community has performed an act of censure against Bhikkhu X. One feels that X did not deserve the act, and says so to a fellow bhikkhu. In this case, one commits no offense, even if it turns out that X did in fact deserve censure.

Summary: Agitating to re-open an issue, knowing that it was properly dealt with, is a pacittiya offense.

***

64. Should any bhikkhu knowingly conceal another bhikkhu's serious offense, it is to be confessed.

Here there are four factors for the full offense.

1) Object: Another bhikkhu has committed a serious offense, which according to the Vibhanga means a parajika or a sanghadisesa.

2) Perception: One knows that he has committed a serious offense.

3) Intention: One wants to hide the offense from other bhikkhus, for fear that they will reprove or remind him of the offense (steps in the formal inquiry into the offense) or that they will jeer, scoff or shame him about it (steps in his enemies' informal reaction to the news). In other words, this factor is fulfilled if one wants to prevent a formal act from being carried out against the offender, or to protect him from the jeering remarks of other bhikkhus who may dislike him.

4) Effort: A bhikkhu who may be told of the matter is available, but one abandons one's duty to tell him.

Object & perception. Another bhikkhu's non-serious offenses are grounds for a dukkata here, as are the misdeeds--serious or non-serious--of an unordained person (i.e., a novice).

As for a bhikkhu's offenses, only a serious offense that one perceives to be serious is grounds for a pacittiya; all other possible combinations of object and perception--a serious offense that one perceives to be non-serious; a non-serious offense that one perceives to be serious; and a non-serious offense that one perceives to be non-serious--are grounds for a dukkata.

Effort. The K/Commentary defines this factor as if it were a simple act of mind--one decides that, "I won't tell any bhikkhu about this"--but this goes against the basic principles of the Vinaya, in which a mere act of mind is never sufficient for an offense. It would seem better to argue from the Vibhanga and say that this factor is fulfilled when there is another bhikkhu available who may be told, but one decides not to tell him.

The Commentary says that if one abandons one's responsibility, but then later changes one's mind and tells another bhikkhu, one has committed the offense all the same.

It also says that if one tells Bhikkhu X, asking him to help hide Bhikkhu Y's offense, this also fulfills the factor of effort here. If X then abandons his responsibility to tell, he too incurs the offense under this rule.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in not telling another bhikkhu:

if one thinks that telling will lead to strife or a split in the Community;

if one fears reprisals from the bhikkhu who has committed the offense;

if there is no suitable bhikkhu to tell;

if one is not trying to hide the offense; or if one feels that the wrong-doer's own behavior will betray him and thus there is no need to tell.

Summary: Not informing other bhikkhus of a serious offense which one knows another bhikkhu has committed--either out of a desire to protect him from having to undergo the penalty, or out of a desire to protect him from the jeering remarks of other bhikkhus--is a pacittiya offense.

***

65. Should any bhikkhu knowingly give full ordination to an individual less than twenty years of age, the individual is not ordained and the bhikkhus are blameworthy; and as for him (the preceptor), it is to be confessed.

The origin story here tells how the group of 17 came to be ordained.

"Now at that time in Rajagaha, a group of 17 boys were friends, with the boy Upali as their leader. Then the thought occurred to Upali's parents, 'By what means could Upali, after our death, live pleasantly and not grow weary (with work)?...If he studies writing, his fingers will hurt...If he studies calculation, his breast will hurt... If he studies money changing, his eyes will hurt. Now, these Sakyan contemplatives are of pleasing virtue and conduct. Having eaten fine meals, they lie down in beds sheltered from the wind. If Upali went forth among the Sakyan contemplatives, he would live pleasantly after our death, and not be weary with work.'

"The boy Upali heard his parents' conversation. Then he went to the boys... and said, 'Come, masters, let's go forth among the Sakyan contemplatives.'

"'If you go forth, master, so will we.'

"So each of the boys, having approached his parents, said, 'Permit us to go forth from home into homelessness.' Then the parents of the boys gave their permission, (thinking,) 'All these boys are unanimous. They want what is noble.'

"(The boys) having approached the bhikkhus, asked for the going forth. The bhikkhus gave them the going forth and full ordination. Then, waking up in the last watch of the night, the boys (now bhikkhus) cried out, 'Give us porridge! Give us rice! Give us food!'

"The bhikkhus said, 'Wait, friends, until it turns light. If there is porridge, you will drink it. If there is rice, you will eat it. If there is food, you will eat it. But if there is no porridge or rice or food, then you will eat having gone for alms.'

"But even then, those (new) bhikkhus cried out as before, 'Give us porridge! Give us rice! Give us food!' And they wet the bedding and soiled it."

The Buddha, in rebuking the bhikkhus who had given full ordina-tion to the group of 17 boys, painted a picture of the bhikkhus' life very different from that imagined by Upali's parents:

"Bhikkhus, how can these worthless men knowingly give full ordination to an individual less than 20 years old? An individual less than 20 years old is not resistant to cold, heat, hunger, thirst, the touch of gadflies and mosquitoes, wind and sun and creeping things; or to abusive, hurtful language. He is not the sort that can endure bodily feelings which, in arising, are painful, sharp, stabbing, fierce, distasteful, disagreeable, deadly.'"

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: A man less than twenty years old.

2) Perception: One knows that he is less than 20 years old.

3) Effort: One acts as the preceptor in his full ordination as a bhikkhu.

Object. As Mv.I.75 makes clear, a person's age for the purpose of this rule is counted from the time of his conception in his mother's womb. Since this is difficult--if not impossible--to date with any accuracy, the usual practice in calculating a person's age is to add six months to the number of years since his birth, to allow for the possi-bility of his having been born prematurely. As the Commentary notes, a baby born after seven months in the womb may survive, but one born after only six months in the womb won't.

Perception. If one does not know that the individual is less than 20 years old, there is no offense in ordaining him. If one is in doubt as to whether or not he is less than 20, but goes ahead and ordains him anyway, one incurs a dukkata regardless of his actual age.

Effort. There is a dukkata for every step in arranging the ordina-tion of an individual one knows to be less than 20 years old, beginning with the act of searching out a group to ordain him, looking for robes and a bowl for him to use, etc., all the way to the second announce-ment in the formal act of ordination. Once the third and final announcement has been made, the preceptor incurs a pacittiya; and all other bhikkhus in the group who know that the individual is less than 20 years old, a dukkata.

In any case, if the individual is really less than 20 years old when he is ordained, then--regardless of whether he or anyone else knows of the fact or not--he does not count as a bhikkhu, and is only novice. The Commentary notes here that if he continues in this state for long enough to become a preceptor or teacher in another person's ordination, that person counts as rightly ordained only as long as there are enough true bhikkhus in the group ordaining him, not counting the improperly ordained "bhikkhu" in question.

It adds that if one is less that 20 when being ordained, without knowing the fact, it does not act as an obstacle to one's qualifying for heaven or the transcendent states; but if one ever finds out the truth that one was improperly ordained, one should immediately arrange for a proper ordination.

Summary: Acting as the preceptor in the ordination of a person one knows to be less than 20 years old is a pacittiya offense.

***

66.Should any bhikkhu knowingly and by arrangement travel together with a caravan of thieves, even for the interval between one village and the next, it is to be confessed.

Here the full offense has three factors:

1) Object: a caravan of thieves.

2) Perception: One knows that it is a caravan of thieves.

3) Effort: (a) One makes an arrangement together with the caravan to travel together; (b) one actually travels together with them as arranged (c) from one village to another.

Object. A caravan of thieves, according to the Vibhanga, is any group that has committed a theft, is on its way to commit a theft, is planning to evade a tax, or is planning to "rob the king", which the Commentary translates as planning to cheat the government in one way or another. At present this would include any person or group of people carrying contraband goods or planning to evade customs duties by hiding dutiable goods from the authorities.

Perception. If one does not know that a person or group would count as a caravan of thieves, there is no offense in traveling by arrangement with them. If one is in doubt, then there is a dukkata for traveling with them regardless of whether they actually are a caravan of thieves or not.

Making an arrangement. According to the Vibhanga, the bhikkhu must give his verbal consent to the arrangement for this part of the factor to be fulfilled. In other words, if the thieves propose the arrangement, and he agrees; or he proposes it, regardless of whether or not they agree, this part of the factor is fulfilled. The penalty for fulfilling it is a dukkata.

If the thieves propose the arrangement, while the bhikkhu does not give his verbal assent, then even if he does travel together as they proposed, he incurs no offense in doing so.

Going as arranged. If a specific time frame was part of the arrangement, then the two parties must begin traveling together within that time frame for this factor to be fulfilled. If they happen to start out earlier or later than arranged, again the bhikkhu incurs no penalty. The Commentary notes, though, that if they leave from a different spot than the one they had arranged, or go by a different route, that does not absolve the bhikkhu from the offense

From one village to another. There is a pacittiya for every village-to-village interval one passes. In an area where there are no villages--i.e.,, says the Sub-commentary, where villages are further than half a league (8 km. or 5 miles) apart--there is a pacittiya for every half-league one travels together as arranged.

None of the texts mention cases of traveling long distances within a large city, but it would seem that in such cases--arguing from the Great Standards--one would incur the full offense in traveling from one administrative district to the next.

Non-offenses. There is no offense--

if the bhikkhu and thieves happen to travel together without having made an arrangement;

if the thieves propose an arrangement, while the bhikkhu does not give his verbal assent;

if they leave together at a time other than that they had previously arranged;

or if there are dangers (and the bhikkhu must join the caravan for his safety).

Summary: Traveling by arrangement with a group of thieves from one village to another--knowing that they are thieves--is a pacittiya offense.

***

67. Should any bhikkhu, by arrangement, travel together with a woman, even for the interval between one village and the next, it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time a certain bhikkhu, going through the Kosalan countryside on his way to Savatthi, passed by the gate of a certain village. A certain woman, having quarreled with her husband and left the village, saw the bhikkhu and said, 'Where are you going, sir?'

"'I'm going to Savatthi, sister.'

"'Then I'm going with you.'

"'As you wish, sister.'

"Then the woman's husband, leaving the village, asked people, 'Have you seen such-and-such a woman?'

"'She's going along with a monk.'

"So the man, having caught up with them, seized the bhikkhu, gave him a good thrashing and set him free. The bhikkhu went and sat fuming under a certain tree.

"Then the woman said to the man, 'That bhikkhu didn't abscond with me. I was the one who went with him. He's innocent. Go and ask his forgiveness.'

"So the man asked the bhikkhu for his forgiveness."

Object. A female human being, mature enough to know what is and is not lewd, is grounds for a pacittiya here. Pandakas (eunuchs and male homosexuals), female yakkhas and petas, and animals in the form of a female human being are all grounds for a dukkata.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Thus if one travels by arrangement with a woman disguised as a man, one still incurs the full offense. Similarly, if one travels by arrangement with a homo-sexual, not knowing that that's what he is, one still incurs a dukkata.

Effort here is defined as under the preceding rule: (a) One makes an arrangement together with the woman to travel together; (b) one actually travels together with her as arranged (c) from one village to another. See the preceding rule for explanations.

Non-offenses. There is no offense--

if the bhikkhu and woman happen to travel together without having made an arrangement;

if the woman proposes an arrangement, while the bhikkhu does not give his verbal assent;

if they leave together at a time other than that they had previously arranged;

or if there are dangers.

Current practice. In the time of the Buddha, long-distance travel was mostly by foot, and the question of prior arrangement was what made the difference between whether one was traveling together with someone else, or simply happened to be walking along the road at the same time. At present, when one is taking public transport--buses, subways, trains and airplanes--this is still the factor determin-ing whether one is traveling together with someone else, or simply happens to be on the bus, etc., at the same time. This rule thus forbids a bhikkhu from traveling together with a woman, by prior arrangement, on the same public transport.

Private transport, though--such as automobiles, trucks and vans--is an area where different Communities have come to apply this rule in differing ways. Some treat it under Pacittiya 44, rather than here, and say that a bhikkhu may sit in an automobile with a woman as long as a knowledgeable man is present: This holds regardless of whether the automobile is sitting still or traveling any number of miles.

Other Communities treat private transport under this rule, but say that the prior arrangement is implicitly with the driver of the trans-port. If the driver is a woman, one incurs a pacittiya in riding with her from one village to the next. If the driver is a man, one incurs no offense, regardless of whether or not a woman is riding along.

At any rate, this is another case where the wise policy is to follow the practice of the Community in which one belongs, as long as one is careful to adhere to the Vibhanga by not entering verbally into any arrangement with a woman to go traveling together.

Summary: Traveling by arrangement with a woman from one village to another is a pacittiya offense.

***

68. Should any bhikkhu say the following: "As I understand the Dhamma taught by the Blessed One, those acts the Blessed One says are obstructive for me, when indulged in, are not genuine obstructions," he is to be admonished thus by the bhikkhus: "Do not say that, venerable sir. Do not misrepresent the Blessed One, for it is not good to misrepresent the Blessed One. The Blessed One would not say anything like that. In many ways, friend, obstructive acts are described by the Blessed One, and when indulged in, they are genuine obstructions."

And should the bhikkhu, thus admonished by the bhikkhus, persist as before, the bhikkhus are to rebuke him up to three times so as to desist. If while being rebuked up to three times he desists, that is good. If he does not desist, it is to be confessed.

Obstructions. An obstruction, the Commentary says, is anything that acts as an obstacle to the attainment of heaven or emancipation. It lists five major types:

1) Acts, i.e., the five anantariya kamma: patricide, matricide, the murder of an arahant, the wounding of a Buddha, the creation of a schism in a Sangha;

2) Defilements, i.e., firmly held wrong views (the Sub-commentary lists determinism, fatalism, annihilationism, etc.);

3) Fruits of past actions, e.g., birth as a eunuch, a common animal, a hermaphrodite;

4) Disputes, i.e., disputes with Noble Ones--even simple conten-tiousness in the mind, says the Sub-commentary--although these are obstructions only so long as one has not asked forgiveness; and finally, for a bhikkhu,

5) Intentional transgressions of the Buddha's ordinances, although these are obstacles only as long as one has not undergone the penalty called for in the relevant rule.

The Commentary notes that this training rule deals with a bhikkhu who holds to the view that this last category is not an obstacle, the most common example being the bhikkhu who believes that there is nothing wrong in a bhikkhu's having sexual intercourse in defiance of Parajika 1.

There are many ways that one might come to such a rationalization, and the Commentary gives an entertaining description of one of them:

"Here a bhikkhu...having gone into seclusion, reasons as follows: 'There are people living the household life, enjoying the five pleasures of the senses, who are stream-winners, once-returners and non-returners. As for bhikkhus, they see pleasurable forms cognizable via the eye, hear...smell...taste...feel (pleasurable) tactile sensations cognizable via the body. They use soft carpets and clothing. All this is proper. Then why shouldn't the sight, sound, smell, taste and feel of a woman be proper? They too are proper!' Thus...comparing a mustard seed with Mount Sineru, he gives rise to the pernicious view, 'Why did the Blessed One--binding the ocean, as it were, with great effort--formulate the first parajika training rule? There is nothing wrong with that act.'"

Simply holding such a view is not enough to bring a bhikkhu under the purview of this rule, but if he asserts it to others, other bhikkhus have the duty of reprimanding him up to three times in the manner described in the rule. If, having learned of his assertion, one does not reprimand him, one incurs a dukkata, for if he goes unreprimanded, he may continue with his assertions as he likes without incurring a penalty.

If, after being reprimanded, he abandons his view, he incurs no penalty. But if he doesn't, he should then be taken into the midst of the Community to be admonished and rebuked as described under Sanghadisesa 10, the only difference here being that the penalty is a dukkata in each of the preliminary stages, and a pacittiya after the third formal rebuke.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. If the act of admonish-ment and rebuke is properly carried out, then his offense is a pacittiya regardless of whether or not he regards it as such. If the act is improperly carried out, then again--regardless of how he perceives the validity of the act--he incurs a dukkata. ()

Further action. If a bhikkhu who has incurred the penalty under this rule persists in asserting his wrong view, he is subject to an act of suspension, under which he is not allowed to consort or have communion with bhikkhus in any Community until he sees the error of his ways and abandons his view.

Non-offenses. There is no offense for the bhikkhu if he has not been reprimanded, or if after being reprimanded he abandons his view.

Summary: Refusing to give up the wrong view that there is nothing wrong in intentionally transgressing the Buddha's ordinances--after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Sangha--is a pacittiya offense.

***

69.Should any bhikkhu knowingly consort, join in communion or lie down in the same lodging with a bhikkhu professing such a view who has not acted in compliance with the rule, who has not abandoned that view, it is to be confessed.

There are three factors for the full offense here:

1) Object: a bhikkhu who has been suspended by a formal act of the Sangha and has not yet been restored.

2) Perception: One knows that he has been suspended and has not yet been restored.

3) Effort: One consorts with him, joins in communion with him or lies down in the same lodging with him.

Object. According to Cv.I.25-35, a bhikkhu may be suspended for any one of three reasons: He holds to wrong views, as in the preceding rule; he refuses to see an offense (i.e., he admits to having performed an act forbidden by the rules, but refuses to concede that it is an offense); or he refuses to undergo the penalty for an offense he admits to having committed. Once a bhikkhu has been suspended, it is his duty to change his ways and reject the view or position which led to his suspension, so that he may be restored to normal status.

As the Commentary makes clear, the factor of object here is fulfilled by a bhikkhu who has been suspended for any of these three reasons, and has yet to be restored. The Vibhanga's no-offense clauses, though, add that if the bhikkhu was suspended for holding a wrong view, and has abandoned that view, he does not fulfill this factor even if the Community has yet to restore him to normal status.

Perception. There is no offense in consorting, etc., with a sus-pended bhikkhu if one does not know that he has been suspended; and a dukkata for consorting, etc., with a bhikkhu if one is in doubt as to whether he has been suspended. This last penalty holds regardless of whether he has actually been suspended or not.

Effort. This factor is fulfilled by any one of three sorts of action:

1) One consorts with the bhikkhu. Consorting takes one of two forms: sharing material objects, i.e., giving material objects to the bhikkhu or receiving them from him; or sharing Dhamma, i.e., reciting Dhamma for him, or getting him to recite Dhamma. The penalties for sharing Dhamma are, if one recites line-by-line or gets the other to recite line-by-line, a pacittiya for each line of Dhamma recited; if one recites syllable-by-syllable, or gets him to recite syllable-by-syllable, a pacittiya for each syllable.

2) One joins in communion with the bhikkhu, i.e., one performs a formal act of the Community in which he takes a part. An example would be sitting in the same assembly with him to listen to the Patimokkha.

3) One lies down in the same lodging with him. "Same lodging" here, unlike Pacittiya 5 & 6, means one with the same roof. Thus, as the K/Commentary notes, if one is lying under the same roof with the bhikkhu, one falls under this factor even if one is lying in a room which is not connected by any entrance with the one he is lying in. And, we might add, one falls under this factor regardless of whether the lodging is walled or not. Whether one lies down first, or the suspended bhikkhu lies down first, or both lie down at the same time, is not an issue here.

These three actions touch on only a few of the observances a suspended bhikkhu must follow, but they are the only ones which entail a pacittiya for the bhikkhu who has dealings with him while he is suspended. For further details, see Cv.I.25-35.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in consorting, joining in communion or lying down in the same lodging with another bhikkhu if one perceives that-- he has not been suspended;

he was suspended but has been restored; or he has abandoned the wrong view which led to his suspension.

These exemptions hold regardless of whether or not one's perception is correct.

Summary: Consorting, joining in communion or lying down under the same roof with a bhikkhu who has been suspended and not been restored--knowing that such is the case--is a pacittiya offense.

***

70.And if a novice should say the following: "As I understand the Dhamma taught by the Blessed One, those acts the Blessed One says are obstructive for me,, when indulged in, are not genuine obstructions," he is to be admonished thus by the bhikkhus: "Do not say that, friend novice. Do not misrepresent the Blessed One, for it is not good to misrepresent the Blessed One. The Blessed One would not say anything like that. In many ways, friend, obstructive acts are described by the Blessed One, and when indulged in, they are genuine obstructions."

And should that novice, thus admonished by the bhikkhus, persist as before, the bhikkhus should admonish him as follows: "From this day forth, friend novice, you are not to claim the Blessed One as your teacher, nor are you even to have the opportunity the other novices get--that of sharing lodgings two or three nights with the bhikkhus. Away with you! Out of our sight! (literally, 'Get lost!')"

Should any bhikkhu knowingly support, receive services from, consort with or lie down in the same lodging with a novice thus expelled, it is to be confessed.

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: A novice who has been expelled and has not given up his wrong view.

2) Perception: One knows that he has been expelled and has not given up his wrong view.

3) Effort: One supports him, receives services from him, consorts with him or lies down in the same lodging with him.

Object. According to the Commentary, there are three types of expulsion: Expulsion from communion (this applies only to bhikkhus and bhikkhunis, and refers to the act of suspension discussed under the preceding rule); expulsion from one's status; and expulsion as a punishment. Novices are subject to the latter two.

(1) The Mahavagga (I.60) lists ten grounds for expelling a novice from his status as a novice: He breaks any of his first five precepts, he speaks in dispraise of the Buddha, Dhamma or Sangha; he holds to wrong views (such things as eternalism, fatalism or annihilationism, says the Commentary) or he rapes a bhikkhuni.

A novice who breaks any of his first five precepts has cut himself off from the Triple Refuge, from his teacher and from his right to a lodging in a monastery. He is still a novice, though, and if he sees the error of his ways and is determined to restrain himself in the future, he may take the Triple Refuge from his teacher again and so be restored to his former status. (The Commentary says that a novice who knowingly drinks alcohol, in defiance of the fifth precept, may be restored to his status as a novice, but may never ordain as a bhikkhu in this lifetime.. Not all Communities share this view)

If, though, a novice breaks any of these precepts habitually and is not determined to restrain himself in the future, he is to be expelled from his status as a novice.

As for the novice who speaks in dispraise of the Buddha, Dhamma or Sangha or who holds to wrong views, the bhikkhus are to instruct him to show him the error of his ways. If he abandons his views, he is to undergo punishment for an appropriate period (see Mv.I.57-58) and then be allowed to confess his error, so as to return to his former status. If, though, he does not change his ways, he is to be expelled from his status as a novice.

And as for the novice who rapes a bhikkhuni: The Commentary notes that this comes under the breaking of the third precept, but is listed separately because a novice who has sexual intercourse with anyone but a bhikkhuni may be reinstated if he sees the error of his ways, while one who has raped a bhikkhuni may not--and furthermore, he can never be ordained as a novice or a bhikkhu in this lifetime.

Except in the last case, a novice who has been expelled from his status as a novice may be reordained as a novice if he sees his errors and can convince the bhikkhus that he will mend his ways in the future.

(2) The second form of expulsion--expulsion as punishment--is the one mentioned in this rule: A novice comes to think that there is nothing wrong with any novice's having sexual intercourse or breaking any of his other precepts. If he asserts this view, the bhikkhus are to instruct him to show that it is wrong, but if they cannot sway him, they are to expel him in the form described in the rule: He has no right to claim the Buddha as his teacher, and loses his right to live in the same lodgings with the bhikkhus, although he retains his status as a novice. This form of expulsion lasts as long as he has yet to abandon his view. If and when he does abandon it, he is to be reinstated: The Commentary doesn't say how, but we can reason from the pattern mentioned above that he should take the Triple Refuge from his teacher again.

The Vibhanga, in discussing the factor of object here, simply says that it is fulfilled by an expelled novice, without specifying which kind of expulsion. This leads to the conclusion that this factor is fulfilled both by a novice--or rather, ex-novice--who has been expelled from his status as a novice, and by a novice who has been expelled as a form of punishment, as described above.

Perception. There is no offense in supporting, etc., an expelled novice if one does not know that he has been expelled; and a dukkata for supporting, etc., a novice if one is in doubt about the matter. This last penalty holds regardless of whether he has actually been expelled or not.

Effort. This factor is fulfilled with any one of four sorts of action:

1) Supporting a novice means providing him with material requi-sites or instruction in the Dhamma, as a mentor would.

2) Receiving services from him means to accept the services a mentor normally receives from his student--the Vibhanga mentions accepting powder, clay (soap) for washing, tooth-wood or water for washing the face. ()

3 & 4) Consorting and lying down in the same lodging are defined as under the preceding rule.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in supporting, etc., a novice if one perceives that he has not been expelled, or if one knows that he has abandoned the view/position which led to his expulsion in the first place.

Summary: Supporting, receiving services from, consorting or lying down in the same lodging with an expelled novice--knowing that he has been expelled--is a pacittiya offense.

Eight: The In-accordance-with-the-Rule Chapter

71. Should any bhikkhu, admonished by the bhikkhus in accordance with a rule, say, "Friends, I will not train myself under this training rule until I have put questions about it to another bhikkhu, experienced and learned in the discipline," it is to be confessed. Bhikkhus, (a training rule) is to be understood, is to be asked about, is to be pondered. This is the proper course here.

This rule deals with cases where a bhikkhu tries to excuse himself from following any of the training rules, without showing out-and-out disrespect for the rule or the person admonishing him. (If he showed out-and-out disrespect, the case would come under Pacittiya 54.) The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: One has been admonished by a fellow bhikkhu, who cites a rule formulated in the Vinaya.

2) Intention: One does not want to train oneself in line with the rule.

3) Effort: One says something to the effect that one will not train in line with the rule.

Only two of these factors--object and effort--require explanation.

Object. Only if the other bhikkhu cites a rule in the Vinaya is this factor grounds for a pacittiya. If he criticizes one's actions, citing standards of behavior outside of the Vinaya--e.g., he says that one has been acting out of greed, anger, delusion or fear--this factor becomes grounds for a dukkata.

If the person admonishing one is not a bhikkhu, then regardless of whether he/she cites a rule in the Vinaya or standards of behavior outside of the Vinaya, this factor is again grounds for a dukkata.

As under Pacittiya 54, whether or not one views the admonition as valid is not an issue here.

Effort. Looking at the Vibhanga's discussion of this factor, it would appear to cover only cases where one used the precise words mentioned in the training rule, but the K/Commentary--drawing probably on the Great Standards--expands it to cover any case where one says something as a ploy to excuse oneself from following the rule without showing disrespect. Examples might include: "I'll worry about that rule when I come to it." "I don't have time for that right now." "I've been wondering: Do you really think that that rule applies in this day and age?" In other words, this factor closes any loopholes left by Pacittiya 54.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, the only way to avoid an offense in situations like this is to say that one will learn about the rule and train in line with it. As the no-offense clauses to Pacittiya 54 make clear, though, if one has been admonished with any interpreta-tion of a rule which differs from one's teachers', one may avoid an offense simply by stating that one's teachers taught differently.

Summary: Saying something as a ploy to excuse oneself from training under a training rule when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach of the rule is a pacittiya offense.

***

72. Should any bhikkhu, when the Patimokkha is being repeated, say, "Why are these lesser and minor training rules repeated when they lead only to anxiety, bother and confusion?" the criticism of the training rules is to be confessed.

"Now at that time the Blessed One had given a talk on the subject of discipline to the bhikkhus. He spoke in praise of discipline, in praise of the mastery of discipline, and in praise of Ven. Upali, referring to him again and again. The bhikkhus (said), '...Come, friends, let's study discipline with Ven. Upali.' They and many other bhikkhus--elders, newly ordained and those in between--studied discipline with Ven. Upali.

"Then the thought occurred to some group-of-six bhikkhus: 'Now, friends, many bhikkhus... are studying discipline with Ven. Upali. If they become well-versed in the discipline, they will push us and pull us around however they like, whenever they like and as long as they like. Come, friends, let's criticize the discipline.' Then the group-of-six bhikkhus, approaching the bhikkhus, said, 'Why are these lesser and minor training rules repeated when they lead only to anxiety, bother and confusion?'"

The full offense here has three factors:

1) Object: another bhikkhu.

2) Effort: One criticizes the discipline in his presence.

3) Intention: One wants to prevent the study of the discipline.

Object & effort. There is a pacittiya for criticizing the discipline in the presence of a bhikkhu; and a dukkata for criticizing the Dhamma in his presence, or criticizing either the discipline or the Dhamma in the presence of an unordained person.

The training rule would seem to indicate that these actions are grounds for an offense only while the Patimokkha is being recited or rehearsed, but the no-offense clauses in the Vibhanga give no allow-ance to criticize the discipline at other times, and the K/Commentary follows the Vibhanga in not making the recitation of the Patimokkha a necessary factor for the offense here. In other words, the factor of effort here is fulfilled if one criticizes the discipline at any time.

Intention. This factor is fulfilled either if one's intention is to keep that particular bhikkhu from studying or mastering the discipline, or if one wants the discipline in general to disappear from lack of study.

Further action. A bhikkhu who makes a concerted effort to speak in dispraise of the Dhamma or discipline may be subject to an act of censure or banishment, depending on the seriousness of the case (Cv.I.4.1; Cv.I.14.2).

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, without intending to criticize the discipline, one suggests to another person that he/she master the Suttas or the Abhidhamma first, before mastering the discipline.

Summary: Criticizing the discipline in the presence of another bhikkhu, in hopes of preventing its study, is a pacittiya offense.

***

73. Should any bhikkhu, when the Patimokkha is being recited every half-month, say, "Just now have I heard that this case, too, is handed down in the Patimokkha, is included in the Patimokkha, and comes up for recitation every half-month;" and if other bhikkhus should know, "That bhikkhu has already sat through two or three recitations of the Patimokkha, if not more," the bhikkhu is not exempted for being ignorant. Whatever the offense he has committed, he is to be dealt with in accordance with the rule; and in addition, his deception is to be exposed: "It is no gain for you, friend, it is ill-done, that when the Patimokkha is being recited, you do not pay proper attention and take it to heart." Here the deception is to be confessed.

To summarize the Vibhanga: If a bhikkhu, when the recitation of the Patimokkha comes to a rule which he has violated, tries to excuse himself through the sort of pretence cited in the rule, he immediately incurs a dukkata if he has already listened to the Patimokkha in full three times or more. The other bhikkhus may then expose his decep-tion through a formal act of the Community. If he then continues with the pretence, he incurs a pacittiya. If they do not bring the formal act against him, though, he incurs a dukkata for each effort he makes in keeping up the pretence. However, there is no offense if he is not feigning ignorance or if he has not yet heard the Patimokkha in full at least three times.

Obviously, these explanations were written when Pali was the bhikkhus' native language, and the recitation of the Patimokkha in Pali offered the opportunity to learn the rules, along with the oppor-tunity to feign ignorance without telling an out-and-out lie. In other words, one could say immediately after the recitation of a particular rule, "Just now have I heard that this rule is in the Patimokkha," and strictly speaking it would be true: One has just heard it, even if for the umpteenth time, but one hopes that the other bhikkhus will be deceived into inferring that one has just heard it for the first time.

At any rate, the discussion of this rule in the Vibhanga and com-mentaries makes no exceptions for bhikkhus whose native language is not Pali, and since the Patimokkha is available in a number of translations, the "grace period" in which one is expected to be ignorant--three recitations covers a month to a month and a half--is not too short a time for a new bhikkhu to read and remember the rules in translation.

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: One has heard the Patimokkha in full for at least three times, one has tried to feign ignorance, but the bhikkhus have brought a formal act against one, exposing one's deceit.

2) Intention: One wants to deceive the bhikkhus into believing that one is ignorant of the rule one has broken.

3) Effort: One says a half-truth to deceive them. (Out-and-out lies would come under Pacittiya 1.)

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. If the act exposing one's deceit has been properly carried out, then regardless of whether one perceives it as valid or not, one incurs a pacittiya for trying to deceive the bhikkhus any further. If it has been improperly carried out, one incurs a dukkata for trying to deceive them further, regardless of how one perceives the act.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if one has heard the Patimokkha in full less than three times, or if one is not intending to deceive anyone.

Summary: Using half-truths to deceive others into believing that one is ignorant of the rules in the Patimokkha, after one has already heard the Patimokkha in full three times, and a formal act exposing one's deceit has been brought against one, is a pacittiya offense.

***

74. Should any bhikkhu, angered and displeased, give a blow to (another) bhikkhu, it is to be confessed.

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: another bhikkhu.

2) Effort: One gives him a blow.

3) Intention: One is motivated by anger.

Object. A bhikkhu is grounds for an offense here; anyone unordained, grounds for a dukkata. According to the Commentary, anyone unordained includes animals as well as higher forms of life, such as human or celestial beings.

Effort. This factor is fulfilled whether one gives a blow-- with one's own body (hitting with a fist, jabbing with an elbow, kicking with a foot);

with something attached to the body (e.g., a stick or a knife); or with something that may be "thrown" (this includes such things as throwing a rock, shooting an arrow or firing a gun). According to the Vibhanga, this last category includes throwing "even a lotus leaf", which shows that the blow need not be painful in order to fulfill this factor.

This factor also includes such things as twisting the other person's arm behind his back or wringing his neck: It is fulfilled as soon as one touches his body with the intent to do these things.

Intention. If one gives a blow for reasons other than anger, the action does not fall under this rule. Thus, for instance, if one thumps a fellow bhikkhu on the back to help dislodge something caught in his throat, there is no offense. And as the Commentary notes, if--motivated by lust--one gives a blow to a woman, one incurs the full offense under Sanghadisesa 2.

For some reason, the Commentary says that if one cuts off the nose or ear of a fellow bhikkhu in order to disfigure him, one incurs only a dukkata. As the Vinaya Mukha points out, though, there is no basis in the Vibhanga or in reason for this statement. It is hard to imagine anyone doing this unless motivated by anger, and cutting another person would come under the factor of giving a blow with something connected with the body.

Result is not a factor here. Whether or not the other person is hurt--or how badly he/she is hurt--does not affect the offense. If one intends simply to hurt the other person, but he/she happens to die from one's blow, the case is treated under this rule, rather than under Parajika 3. In other words, the penalty is a pacittiya if the victim is a bhikkhu, and a dukkata if not.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense for a bhikkhu who, trapped in a difficult situation, gives a blow "desiring freedom". The Commentary's discussion of this point shows that it includes what we at present would call self-defense; and the K/Commentary's analysis of the factors of the offense here shows that even if anger or displeasure arises in one's mind in cases like this, one incurs no offense.

Summary: Giving a blow to another bhikkhu, when motivated by anger, is a pacittiya offense.

***

75. Should any bhikkhu, angered and displeased, raise his hand against (another) bhikkhu, it is to be confessed.

This rule is similar to the preceding one, differing only in the factor of effort: Raising one's hand means raising any part of one's body (the hand, the foot, etc.) or anything attached to the body (a stick, a rock, a gun, a bow and arrow) in a threatening manner.

The Commentary notes that if one intends only to raise one's hand, but then accidentally gives a blow, one incurs a dukkata. The Sub-commentary explains this in the only way that would make sense: One incurs the dukkata for the blow, but a pacittiya for raising the hand in the first place.

The Sub-commentary also notes that if an animal, for example, is making a mess and a bhikkhu raises his hand against it, this would be included under "desiring freedom"--i.e., from the mess--and so would not be an offense.

Summary: Making a threatening gesture against another bhikkhu when motivated by anger is a pacittiya offense.

***

76. Should any bhikkhu charge a bhikkhu with an unfounded sanghadisesa (offense), it is to be confessed.

Here again the factors for the full offense are three:

1) Object: another bhikkhu.

2) Perception: One perceives him to be innocent of the offense one is charging him with.

3) Effort: One accuses him in his presence--or gets someone else to accuse him in his presence--of having committed a sanghadisesa offense.

If one makes an unfounded charge accusing another bhikkhu of having committed a lesser offense or of falling away from right views, one incurs a dukkata. The same penalty holds for making an unfounded charge accusing an unordained person of having committed a wrong doing or of falling away from right views.

The topic of unfounded charges is a complex one, and has already been covered in detail under Sanghadisesa 8. Additional points may be inferred from the discussion of that rule, the differences being that intention is not a factor here, and the change in effort--one is accusing the other bhikkhu of a sanghadisesa or lesser offense--changes the seriousness of the penalty.

Non-offenses. As under Sanghadisesa 8, there is no offense if one makes the accusation--or gets someone else to make the accusation--when one thinks it to be true, even if it turns out that the other bhikkhu is actually not guilty of the offense.

Summary: Making an unfounded charge in the presence of another bhikkhu--or getting someone else to make the charge in his presence--that he is guilty of a sanghadisesa offense is a pacittiya offense.

***

77. Should any bhikkhu purposefully provoke anxiety in (another) bhikkhu, (thinking,) "This way, even for just a moment, he will have no peace"--if doing it for just this reason and no other--it is to be confessed.

The Vinaya Mukha's explanation for this rule is worth quoting at length:

"There are people who normally tend to be anxious about one thing or another....If someone speaks to a bhikkhu such as this of contingencies which run counter to the Buddha's ordinances and are impossible to know--e.g., 'When you were ordained, how can you know that all the qualifications (for a valid formal act) were fulfilled? If they were lacking, doesn't that mean you aren't really ordained?'--even this is enough to set him worrying, giving him all sorts of anguish. A bhikkhu who is unrestrained, and who--looking for fun with no concern for how his friends will suffer--takes such matters to tell them, is penalized with a pacittiya in this rule."

The full offense here has three factors:

1) Object: another bhikkhu.

2) Effort: One mentions that he might have broken a rule unknowingly.

3) Intention: One's purpose is to cause him anxiety, even if just for a moment.

Object. A bhikkhu here is grounds for a pacittiya; an unordained person, grounds for a dukkata.

Effort. The Vibhanga gives a few examples of rules the other person might have broken unknowingly: He may have drunk liquor, may have eaten food at the wrong time, or sat in private with a woman, all without knowing it. (Although this last would not be an offense if done unknowingly, it is close enough to an offense that the mention of the possibility would cause an ignorant bhikkhu anxiety.) In the origin story, some group-of-six bhikkhus made insinuating remarks to the group of 17 that since they were ordained when they were less than 20 years old, they were not really ordained. (Again, since the group of 17 were the instigators for that rule, they were not subject to it.) All of this shows that this factor is fulfilled by any statement which one might make to another bhikkhu insinuating that he may have broken a rule, even if the action one mentions is not strictly speaking an offense.

Intention. If, not wanting to cause the other person anxiety, one has other reasons for mentioning rules he/she might have broken unknowingly--e.g., one seriously thinks that he may have broken the rules, or that his ordination was improperly carried out, and wants him to look into the matter so that he has no reason for regret in the future--one incurs no offense.

Summary: Saying to another bhikkhu that he may have broken a rule unknowingly, simply for the purpose of causing him anxiety, is a pacittiya offense.

***

78. Should any bhikkhu stand eavesdropping on bhikkhus when they are arguing, quarreling and disputing, thinking, "I will overhear what they say"--if doing it for just this reason and no other--it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time some group-of-six bhikkhus were quarreling with the well-behaved bhikkhus. The well-behaved bhikkhus (meeting among themselves) said, 'These group-of-six bhikkhus are shameless. There's no way you can argue with them.'

"Later, the group-of-six bhikkhus said to them, 'Why do you disgrace us by calling us shameless?'

"'But how did you overhear?'

"'We stood eavesdropping on you.'"

The factors for the full offense here are three:

1) Object: other bhikkhus who are involved in an argument over an issue.

2) Effort: One stands eavesdropping on them,

3) Intention: with the purpose of using what they say against them, either in a formal act (reproving, reminding or reprimanding them) or simply to make them feel remorseful or ashamed.

Object. According to the Vibhanga, the words, arguing, quarreling and disputing refer to arguments over issues (see Pacittiya 63). The Commentary says that this refers to one kind of issue--disputes--but accusations would appear to fit here as well.

This factor is fulfilled regardless of whether the two parties in the dispute/accusation are confronting each other or--as in the origin story--one party is talking in private. It is also fulfilled regardless of whether or not one is already involved in the dispute oneself.

Bhikkhus involved in an argument are grounds for a pacittiya; unordained people involved in an argument, grounds for a dukkata. Perception--e.g., whether or not one perceives the bhikkhus as bhikkhus--is not a mitigating factor here.

People who are not involved in an argument are not grounds for an offense. Thus there is no penalty in eavesdropping on a Dhamma talk, or on a bhikkhu sitting in private with a woman, to see what they will say to each other.

Effort. The Vibhanga goes into a fair amount of detail on this point, allotting the offenses as follows (assuming the other factors to be fulfilled as well):

One goes with the purpose of eavesdropping on the other party (): a dukkata. One stays in one place eavesdropping on them: a pacittiya.

One is walking behind the other party, and speeds up one's steps to overhear them: a dukkata. One stays in one place eavesdropping on them: a pacittiya.

One is walking ahead of the other party, and slows down one's steps to overhear them: a dukkata. One stays in one place eavesdropping on them: a pacittiya.

One is sitting, standing or lying down in place, and the other party happens to walk past (): One should cough, clear one's throat or (the K/Commentary states) say, "I'm here." Not to do so is to incur a pacittiya.

At present, surreptitiously reading another person's mail would seem to fulfill this factor as well.

Intention. According to the no-offense clauses, one incurs no offense if one happens to overhear bhikkhus arguing, and goes away thinking, "I won't get involved," or "I will free myself" ("by declaring my innocence," says the Commentary).

Summary: Eavesdropping on bhikkhus involved in an argument over an issue--with the intention of using what they say against them--is a pacittiya offense.

***

79. Should any bhikkhu, having given consent (by proxy) to a formal act carried out in accordance with the rule, later complain (about the act), it is to be confessed.

"Now at that time some group-of-six bhikkhus were indulging in bad habits, but protested when a formal act was being carried out against any one of their group. Now it happened that the Community was meeting on some other business, and the group-of-six bhikkhus, involved in making robes, sent their consent with one of their members. Then the Community, thinking, 'Look, friends, one of the group-of-six has come alone. Let's carry out a formal act against him,' did just that.

"He then returned to where the group-of-six bhikkhus were staying. They asked him, 'What, friend, did the Community do?'"

"'They carried out a formal act against me.'

"'That wasn't what we gave our consent for, that they would carry out a formal act against you. If we had known that they would carry out a formal act against you, we wouldn't have given our consent!'"

Formal acts. A formal act is a procedure the Community follows in settling any of the four kinds of issues: disputes, accusations, offenses or duties. The Vinaya gives the pattern for settling each of the various issues falling into these four categories: the minimum number of bhikkhus that has to be present, the qualifications (posi-tive or negative) of the individual or situation which warrants the act, and the formal procedure--a declaration, a motion, a motion with one announcement or a motion with three announcements--to follow in carrying out the act. An act carried out in accordance with these patterns is said to be carried out in accordance with the rule.

However, for a formal act to be valid and irreversible, it must be carried out not only in accordance with the rule, but also by a com-plete assembly (Mv.IX.2.4). This point is to prevent small factions from carrying out acts as they like. When this point was first raised, the question arose, How many bhikkhus are needed for an assembly to be complete? All the bhikkhus in the world? All the bhikkhus in a particular monastery? The Buddha's answer was, All the bhikkhus in a monastery, and he gave permission for the bhikkhus to delineate boundaries (sima) so as to determine who did and who did not have to join in the act for the assembly to be complete (Mv.II.5.2,6.1,12.7). Later, he gave permission that an ill bhikkhu living within the bound-ary did not have to attend the meeting, but could give his consent by proxy, through word or gesture, and the assembly would still be regarded as complete (Mv.II.23.1-2).

Thus a complete assembly is defined as follows: All the bhikkhus within the boundary are either present at the meeting (sitting within hatthapasa of other bhikkhus in the meeting) or have given their consent by proxy, and no one makes a valid protest against the act's being carried out (Mv.IX.3.5-6). (An invalid protest would be one made by someone who is not a bhikkhu, by a bhikkhu who is insane, possessed by a spirit, outside the boundary or suspended from the Community, or by the bhikkhu against whom the act is being carried out (Mv.IX.4.7-8).)

Before we go on to discuss this rule, there are a few added points concerning the origin story we should touch on:

1) When a bhikkhu makes a valid protest, he does not need to justify it. In other words, he can make protest simply because he doesn't agree with the act, and his protest stands regardless of whether he can find any basis for it in the Dhamma and Vinaya or not.

2) One Community may not carry out a formal act against another Community (Mv.IX.2.3). What this means is that they may carry it out against no more than three bhikkhus at a time. This is why the group-of-six bhikkhus were able to protect one another from being subject to a formal act, for there were usually more than three of them at any one meeting of the Community. Even though the ones against whom the formal act was being carried out had no right to protest, their friends did, and they took advantage of their right.

3) In the passage where the Buddha gives permission for bhikkhus to give their consent by proxy (Mv.II.23.1-2), he states that this per-mission applies to ill bhikkhus. Yet in the origin stories to this rule and the following one, the group of six are not ill, they give their consent by proxy and the act carried out with their consent is consi-dered to be valid. None of the texts make note of this point, but it seems to indicate that "ill" in this context covers not only physical illness, but also any other serious inconvenience which prevents one from joining in the meeting.

The factors for the offense under this rule are three:

1) Object: a valid formal act to which one has given one's consent.

2) Perception: One perceives it as valid.

3) Effort: One complains about it.

Object & perception. The various permutations of these factors are as follows:

a valid act that one perceives to be valid: grounds for a pacittiya;

an invalid act that one perceives to be valid: grounds for a dukkata;

an act that one is doubtful about, regardless of its actual validity: grounds for a dukkata;

an act that one perceives to be invalid, regardless of whether it actually is or not: grounds for no offense.

Effort. Any expression of displeasure with the act would fulfill this factor. If, however, one states that the act was not carried out in accordance with the rule, then regardless of whether or not one had given one's consent, the case would fall under Pacittiya 63, rather than here.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if one complains about the act if one perceives it as having been carried out not in accordance with the rule, by an incomplete assembly, or against someone who did not warrant such an act. This exemption holds regardless of whether, in fact, the act was valid or not.

Summary: Complaining about a formal act of the Community to which one gave one's consent--if the act was carried out in accordance with the rule, and one knows that it was--is a pacittiya offense.

***

80. Should any bhikkhu, when deliberation is being carried on in the Community, get up from his seat and leave without having given consent, it is to be confessed.

The origin story here is a sequel to the one for the preceding rule.

"Now at that time the Community was meeting on some business, and the group-of-six bhikkhus, involved in making robes, sent their consent with one of their group. Then the Community, thinking, 'We'll carry out the formal act (against the one member of the group-of-six) that was our real purpose in meeting,' set forth a motion. The bhikkhu--thinking, 'It's just in this way that they carry out formal acts against us one at a time. Well, who are you going to carry out this act against?'--without giving his consent, got up from his seat and left."

As explained under the preceding rule, a bhikkhu has no right to protest when the Community is carrying out a formal act against him. However, the Community may not carry out an act against a bhikkhu who is not in its midst (see Adhikarana-Samatha 1), and any act carried out when there is a bhikkhu within the boundary who is not in the meeting and who has not given his consent is invalid. The bhikkhu in the origin story took advantage of these two rules to escape from the formal act being carried out against himself, and the Buddha then formulated this rule to impose a penalty on any bhikkhu who tried the same maneuver in the future.

There are four factors for the full offense.

1) Object: A formal act has been started but has yet to be finished, and is being carried out in a valid manner.

2) Perception: One perceives it as being carried out in a valid manner.

3) Intention: One wants to invalidate the act, or to keep the group from carrying it out.

4) Effort: One goes beyond one hatthapasa (1.25 m.) from the bhikkhus sitting in the meeting, without having first given one's consent.

Object & perception. The various permutations of these two factor are as follows:

a valid act that one perceives to be valid: grounds for a pacittiya;

an invalid act that one perceives to be valid: grounds for a dukkata;

an act that one is doubtful about, regardless of its actual validity: grounds for a dukkata;

an act that one perceives as invalid, regardless of its actual validity: grounds for no offense.

According to the Vibhanga, the time period covered by this factor begins at the point where the matter has been brought up in the Community--or a motion has been set forth--and ends when the Community's decision has been announced.

The Commentary, in discussing this point, says that, in the case of an accusation, the point when the matter has been brought up is when both sides have stated their initial positions, and a bhikkhu has been authorized to cross-examine them.

Effort. The Vibhanga divides the effort here into three parts, and allots the penalties as follows:

One gets up to go: a dukkata.

One reaches the distance of one hatthapasa from the meeting: another dukkata.

One passes beyond the distance of one hatthapasa: a pacittiya.

The K/Commentary adds that one must also remain within the boundary (sima) for this factor to be fulfilled, but the Vibhanga makes no mention of this, and there seems no reason to adopt it. If we did adopt it, it would mean that if a formal act were being carried out against a bhikkhu, and to avoid it he left the meeting and the boundary, he would incur no offense. Thus it seems better to stick with the Vibhanga and say that this factor is fulfilled when one goes beyond one hatthapasa away from the meeting, regardless of whether one then stays within the boundary or not.

Intention. There is no offense if, without giving one's consent, one leaves the meeting for purposes other than to invalidate the act. Examples in the Vibhanga include:

One is ill.

One has to do something (e.g., prepare or give medicine) for one who is ill.

One is overcome with the need to urinate or defecate.

One leaves, without desiring to invalidate the act, with the thought, "I'll come right back."

In all of these cases, though, if possible, it is best to give one's consent before going.

Non-offenses. In addition to the above cases, there is also no offense if one leaves a meeting, without giving one's consent, with the purpose of invalidating the act if one perceives that:

the act will lead to quarreling, a crack or a split in the Community; or the act is being carried out not in accordance with the rule, by an incomplete assembly, or against/for a person who doesn't warrant it.

Summary: Getting up and leaving a meeting of the Community in the midst of a valid formal act--without having first given one's consent to the act--in hopes of invalidating it, is a pacittiya offense.

***

81. Should any bhikkhu, (acting as part of) a Community in concord, give a robe (to an individual bhikkhu) and later complain, "The bhikkhus apportion the Community's gains according to friendship," it is to be confessed.

Apportioning the Community's gains. The Cullavagga (VI.15.2) contains a passage which says that no one--not even the Community itself--can take any of the following items belonging to the Commu-nity and turn them over to individual ownership: monasteries or monastery land; dwellings, or land on which dwellings are built; furnishings, such as couches, chairs or mattresses; metal vessels or tools; building materials or articles made of pottery or wood. The collective term for these goods is garubhanda, or heavy articles. The penalty for handing any of the Community's garubhanda over to individual ownership is a thullaccaya. In the origin story to Parajika 4, the Buddha states that a bhikkhu who hands the Community's garubhanda over to a lay person is one of the five great thieves in the world.

Light articles (lahubhanda) belonging to the Community, though, may be turned over to individual ownership--of a bhikkhu or novice--but only when the proper procedures are followed. The usual pattern is to appoint a Community official, through a formal act, to be responsible for making sure that such items be distributed fairly to the members of the Community eligible to receive them. Such officials include distributors of robe-material, of food, of fruit, of non-staple foods and of small accessories, such as scissors, sandals, water strainers, etc. (Cv.VI.21).

In addition, this training rule shows that a Community, acting as a whole, may take light articles belonging to it and turn them over to individual bhikkhus or novices. (According to the K/Commentary to Pacittiya 79, this can be done with a simple declaration (apalokana), although the kathina ceremony, which would fall under this general category, follows the pattern of a motion with one announcement.) A typical example, apart from the kathina, would be if the Community receives a particularly fine robe and, instead of cutting it up to share the pieces out among the members, decides to present the entire robe to one of its members who has been especially helpful to the group. This is one way that the Community can reward the Community officials for their services.

Any member of the Community who disagrees with such a decision may prevent it from happening by protesting during the declaration. The purpose of this rule is to prevent members of the Community from complaining, after the they have taken part in such a decision, that the Community was acting out of favoritism.

The factors for the full offense are two:

1) Object: One has acted as part of a Community which has given robe-material to a bhikkhu who has been chosen, through a prior formal act, to be a Community official.

2) Effort: One complains afterwards that the Community acted out of favoritism.

Object. Acting as part of a Community means that one is in communion with the Community that handed over the robe-material, and that one was in the same boundary with them: i.e., one was either in the meeting, or had given one's consent to it.

Robe-material means a piece of any of the six kinds of allowable material, measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths.

The various permutations of articles and recipients are as follows:

Complaining when the Community has given robe material to a Community official: a pacittiya.

Complaining when the Community has given any other light article to a Community official: a dukkata.

Complaining when the Community has given any light article--robe or otherwise--to a bhikkhu who is not a Community official or to a novice: a dukkata.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. For example, if the recipient was made a Community official through a valid formal act, then regardless of how one perceives that act, it has no effect on the penalty under this rule. (The Vibhanga is somewhat confusing on this point, not saying explicitly whether the factor of perception with regard to the formal act refers to the act by which the official was appointed or to the act by which the robe was handed over to him. The first interpretation, though, is the only one that makes sense in light of the no-offense clauses, and the K/Commentary confirms that it is the correct one.)

Effort. This factor is fulfilled by any expression of personal dis-pleasure with the Community. If, however, one accuses the Community of having carried out the act improperly--not in accordance with the rule, or with an incomplete assembly--the case would come, not here, but under Pacittiya 63.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga says that if the article was given out of habitual favoritism, anger, delusion or fear, there is no offense in complaining, "What is the use of giving it to him? After receiving it he'll ruin it, he won't take proper care of it." Notice, however, that even in cases of this sort one is allowed to criticize only the recipient, and not the Community--for, after all, one had one's chance to protest during the meeting, but remained silent.

Summary: After participating in a formal act of the Community giving robe-material to a Community official: Complaining that the Community acted out of favoritism is a pacittiya offense.

***

82. Should any bhikkhu knowingly divert to an individual gains which had been allocated for the Community, it is to be confessed.

This rule has already been explained under NP 30.

Summary: Persuading a donor to give to another individual a gift which he or she had planned to give to a Community--when one knows that it was intended for the Community--is a pacittiya offense

Nine: The Treasure Chapter

83. Should any bhikkhu, without being previously announced, cross the threshold of a consecrated noble king's (sleeping chamber) from which the king has not left, from which the treasure (the queen) has not withdrawn, it is to be confessed.

"Having sat down to one side, King Pasenadi of Kosala said to the Blessed One, 'It would be good,venerable sir, if the Blessed One would appoint a bhikkhu to teach Dhamma in our women's quarters.' ... So the Blessed One addressed Ven. Ananda, 'In that case, Ananda, go teach Dhamma in the king's women's quarters.'

"Replying, 'As you say, Lord,' Ven. Ananda entered the king's women's quarters time and again to teach Dhamma. Then one day early in the morning, Ven. Ananda, having put on his lower robe, carrying his robe and bowl, went to King Pasenadi's palace. At that time King Pasenadi had gone to lie down on a couch with Queen Mallika. Queen Mallika saw Ven. Ananda coming from afar, and on seeing him got up hurriedly. Her blouse of burnished gold cloth slipped off. Ven. Ananda turned around and went back to the monastery."

There are two factors for the full offense here: object and effort.

Object. A king--a consecrated member of the noble warrior class, pure in his lineage through the past seven generations--is in his sleeping chamber with his queen. Sleeping chamber means any place where his bed is prepared, even if it is outside, surrounded only by a curtain or screen wall (as was the custom on royal excursions in those days, a custom often depicted in murals on the walls of Thai temples).

Effort. Unannounced, one steps--with both feet--over the thresh-old of the sleeping chamber. Perception as to whether or not one has been announced is not a mitigating factor here.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if--

One has been announced.

The king is not a member of the noble warrior class, or has not been consecrated.

The king or queen or both have left the sleeping chamber.

The room is not a sleeping chamber.

Obviously, there is little chance that a bhikkhu will break this rule at present. However, in the course of formulating the rule, the Buddha mentioned ten dangers for a bhikkhu who enters the king's inner palace even at the king's request, and some of these dangers still apply to any situation in which a bhikkhu is on familiar terms with a person of influence, royal or not:

1) "'There is the case where the king is on a couch together with the queen. A bhikkhu enters there. Either the queen, seeing the bhikkhu, smiles; or the bhikkhu, seeing the queen, smiles. The thought occurs to the king, "Surely they've done it, or are going to do it...

2) "And furthermore, the king is busy, with much to do. Having gone to a certain woman, he forgets about it. On account of that, she conceives a child. The thought occurs to him, "No one enters here but the one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

3) "And furthermore, some jewel in the king's inner palace disappears. The thought occurs to the king, "No one enters here but the one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

4) "And furthermore, secret consultations in the confines of the inner palace get spread abroad. The thought occurs to the king, "No one enters here but the one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

5) "And furthermore, in the king's inner palace the son is estranged from the father, or the father from the son. The thought occurs to them, "No one enters here but the one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

6 & 7) "And furthermore, the king establishes one from a low position in a high position... (or) one from a high position in a low position. The thought occurs to those displeased by this, "The king is on familiar terms with one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

8) "And furthermore, the king sends the army out at the wrong time. The thought occurs to those displeased by this, "The king is on familiar terms with one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

9) "And furthermore, the king sends the army out at the right time, but has it turn around mid-way. The thought occurs to those displeased by this, "The king is on familiar terms with one gone forth. Could this be the work of the one gone forth?" ...

10) "And furthermore, bhikkhus, the king's inner palace is crowded with elephants...horses...chariots. There are enticing sights, sounds, smells, tastes, tactile sensations unsuitable for one gone forth. This, bhikkhus, is the tenth danger for one who enters the king's inner palace.'"

Summary: Entering a king's sleeping chamber, unannounced, when both the king and queen are in the chamber, is a pacittiya offense.

***

84. Should a bhikkhu pick up or have (someone) pick up a treasure or what is considered a treasure, except within a monastery or within a dwelling, it is to be confessed. But when a bhikkhu has picked up or had (someone) pick up a treasure or what is considered a treasure (left) in a monastery or in a dwelling, it is to be kept, (thinking,) "Whoever it belongs to will (come and) fetch it." This is the proper course here.

The purpose of this rule is to prevent a bhikkhu from picking up misplaced valuables belonging to other people, except when he finds them in a monastery or a dwelling, for as the origin story shows, there are dangers inherent in such an act even when done with the best intentions.

"Now at that time a certain bhikkhu was bathing in the Aciravati River. A certain Brahmin, having placed a bag of 500 gold pieces on the dry ground, had bathed in the river and left, forgetting it. The bhikkhu, (saying to himself,) 'Don't let this bag of the Brahmin's be lost,' picked it up. Then the Brahmin, remembering, rushed back and said to the bhikkhu, 'My good man, have you seen my bag?'

"'Here, Brahmin,' he said, and gave it to him.

"Then the thought occurred to the Brahmin, 'Now how can I get away with out giving the five percent reward to this bhikkhu?' So (saying,) 'I didn't have 500, my good man, I had 1,000!' he detained him for a while and then let him go."

However, a bhikkhu who comes across a fallen valuable in a monastery or in a dwelling he is visiting--if he does not pick it up--may later be held responsible if it gets lost: Thus the two situations mentioned as exemptions in the rule. In situations such as these, a bhikkhu is allowed even to pick up money and other items he is not normally allowed to take. In fact, the Vinaya Mukha states that if he does not pick up the valuable and put it in safe keeping, he incurs a dukkata. None of the other texts mention this point, although it is probably justified on the grounds that the bhikkhu is neglecting his duty in not following the "proper course" here.

The Vibhanga advises that if a bhikkhu has picked up a fallen valuable in this way, and put it in safe keeping, he should take note of its features. (The Commentary adds that if it is a bag of money, he should open the bag and count how much it contains. The same would hold for such things as wallets at present.) He should then have an announcement made, "Let him come whose goods are lost." If a person comes to claim the item, the bhikkhu should ask him/her to describe it. If the person describes it correctly, the bhikkhu should hand it over. If not, he should tell the person to "keep looking." If the bhikkhu is going to leave the monastery to live elsewhere, he should entrust the item to another bhikkhu, or--if no suitable bhikkhu is available--to a suitable lay person. ()

The Commentary adds that if, after a suitable length of time, no one comes to claim the item, the bhikkhu should have it exchanged for something of lasting use to the monastery. If, after that, the owner does come to claim the item, the bhikkhu should tell him/her of the use to which it was put. If the owner is satisfied, there is no problem. If not, the bhikkhu should arrange to have the owner compensated.

The factors for the offense here are four:

1) Object: a valuable or anything considered a valuable that one finds left behind, except in a monastery or a dwelling which one is visiting.

2) Perception: One does not perceive that it has been thrown away.

3) Intention: One wants to keep it in safe keeping for the owner.

4) Effort: One picks it up or has someone else pick it up.

Object. The Vibhanga defines a valuable (treasure) as jewels or silver. What is considered a valuable means anything which is of use to people. Items meeting these definitions at present would include money, wallets, watches, keys, eyeglasses, cameras, etc.

According to the K/Commentary, if the owner has given one per-mission to take the article, it does not fulfill this factor.

The Vibhanga defines in a monastery as follows: If the monastery is walled, then within the walls. If not, then in the immediate vicinity (according to the Commentary, a radius of one leddupata--the dis-tance a man of average height can thrown a clod of dirt--around the monastery buildings). As for in a dwelling: If the area around the dwelling is walled, then within the walls. If not, then in the immediate vicinity (according to the Commentary, the distance one can thrown a basket or a pestle (!) from the dwelling).

For some reason, the Commentary says that if the item has fallen in an area of the monastery where many people come and go--e.g., the doorway to the Bodhi tree or public shrine--one should not pick it up. What its reasoning is here, is hard to say, but it does note that the Kurundi--one of the ancient commentaries--does not agree with this position.

It also notes that if someone asks a bhikkhu to put belongings in safe keeping with him at the monastery, he should not accept--so as to avoid being responsible for them--but if they leave the things with him and go off in spite of his objections, or before giving him a chance to object, he should take the belongings and put them away in safe keeping.

Perception & intention. According to the Commentary, if one picks up money for ones own use, for the Community, or for anyone aside from the owner, the case would come under NP 18, rather than here. The same holds true with dukkata objects, such as jewels and semi-precious stones. However, since one does not perceive the object to be thrown away, and one is not borrowing it or taking it on trust, it would seem more fitting to consider the case under Parajika 2, regardless of what the item is.

The Commentary also makes the peculiar point that if one sees an item belonging to one's mother or other close relative left behind on the roadside, one would incur the full offense under this rule for picking it up to put in safe keeping for the owner, but no offense if one took the item, on trust, for one's own. Of course, after taking it on trust like this, one could then give it back to the owner as one liked without penalty.

Effort. For some reason, none of the texts go into detail on the question of getting someone else to pick up the item. Does one incur the pacittiya simply in the act of asking/commanding, or only if the other person actually picks the item up as asked? None of the texts say, but the usual pattern in other pacittiya rules like this is one pacittiya for the asking, and another one when the other person does as asked.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, within a monastery or a dwelling, one picks up an item or has it picked up with the thought, "Whoever this belongs to will come for it." ()

Also, according to the Vibhanga, there is no offense if one takes an item left behind anywhere if one takes it on trust, borrows it, or perceives it as having been thrown away. () The Commentary notes, though, that these last three allowances apply only if the item is something a bhikkhu may normally touch and take; and not, for instance, a dukkata or nissaggiya object as defined under NP 18.

Summary: Picking up a valuable, or having it picked up, with the intent of keeping it in safe keeping for the owner--except when one finds it in a monastery or in a dwelling one is visiting--is a pacittiya offense.

***

85. Should any bhikkhu, without taking leave of an available bhikkhu, enter a village at the wrong time--unless there is a suitable emergency--it is to be confessed.

As the origin story here indicates, the purpose of this rule is to prevent bhikkhus from passing their time among householders talking of things inappropriate for a bhikkhu to discuss. The Pali term used here, "animal talk", means worldly talk about "kings, robbers and ministers of state; armies, alarms and battles; food and drink; clothing, furniture, garlands and scents; relatives; vehicles; villages, towns, cities, the countryside; women and heroes; the gossip of the street and the well; tales of the dead; also, philosophical discussions of the past and future (this is how the Sub-commentary explains 'tales of diversity'), the creation of the world and of the sea, and talk of whether things exist or not." The Sub-commentary notes here that to discuss any of these topics in such a way as to foster an understanding of the Dhamma--e.g., discussing politics to illustrate the impermanence of worldly power--is not considered improper.

The factors for the full offense here are two.

1) Object: a village (this would include larger inhabited areas, such as towns and cities, as well).

2) Effort: One enters the village--without having taken leave of an available bhikkhu--at the wrong time, except when there is an emergency.

Object. The Vibhanga says that if the village as a whole is enclosed, everywhere inside the enclosure is considered to be in the village. If not, the area in the village includes all the buildings and their immediate vicinity. According to the Sub-commentary, this means every where within a 2 leddupata radius of the buildings. (One leddupata is the distance a man of average height can throw a clod of dirt.)

If one is staying in a monastery located within a village or town, the area covered by this factor begins at the boundary of the monastery.

Effort. The Vibhanga defines the wrong time as from after noon until the following dawn. Thus this rule dovetails with Pacittiya 46, which deals with the period from dawn until noon on days when one has been invited to a meal.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Even if one perceives the time to be morning, when it is actually after noon, one's actions would still fall under this rule.

As under Pacittiya 46, another bhikkhu is said to be available for taking one's leave if, in the Vibhanga's words, "It is possible to go having taken leave of him"--that is, if there is another bhikkhu in the monastery, and there are no obstacles to taking one's leave from him (he is asleep, he is sick, he is receiving important visitors), one is obliged to go out of one's way to inform him.

According to the K/Commentary, taking leave in the context of this rule means the simple act of informing the other bhikkhu that, "I am going into the village," or any similar statement. In other words, one is not asking permission to go, although if the other bhikkhu sees that one is doing something improper in going, he is perfectly free to say so. If one treats his comments with disrespect, one incurs at least a dukkata under Pacittiya 54. (See the discussion under that rule for details.)

The Commentary states that if there is no bhikkhu in the monas-tery to take leave from, there is no need to inform any bhikkhu one may meet after leaving the monastery. If many bhikkhus are going together, they need only take leave from one another before entering the village.

For a new bhikkhu still living in dependence (nissaya) on his mentor, though, taking leave is a matter of asking permission from his mentor at all times, "wrong" or not. The Mahavagga (I.25.24; II.21.1) states that one of the duties of such a bhikkhu is that he must receive permission from his mentor before entering a village, going to a cemetery, or leaving the district. Not to ask permission before going, or to go after being denied permission, is to incur a dukkata. As for the mentor, if he gives permission for his student to go when it is not appropriate, he is the one who incurs the dukkata.

As for the suitable emergencies under this rule--which would seem to exempt even new bhikkhus from having to take leave from their mentors--the Vibhanga gives the example of a bhikkhu rushing to get fire to make medicine for another bhikkhu bitten by a snake. Examples more likely at present would include rushing to get a doctor for a sick bhikkhu, or to get help when a fire has broken out in the monastery.

Further action. Although there is no penalty for engaging in "animal talk", a bhikkhu who enters a village frequently and engages in it, even if he takes leave of other bhikkhus, can be subject to an act of censure on the grounds of "unbecoming association with householders" (Cv.I.4).

Non-offenses. There is no offense in entering a village when one has taken leave of another bhikkhu, or in going when one has not taken leave if--

There is an emergency.

There is no bhikkhu available (e.g., one is living alone; all the other bhikkhus have left; all the bhikkhus in the monastery are going together).

One is going to another monastery (), to bhikkhunis' quarters or to the residence of people ordained in another sect or religion (located in a village, says the Commentary), or one is returning from any of these places.

One is going along a road which happens to pass through a village. (According to the Commentary, a bhikkhu who wants to leave the road and enter the village proper should take leave of another bhikkhu if one is available.)

There are dangers. (Examples in the Commentary include seeing lions or tigers approaching, or clouds building up and threatening a storm.)

Summary: Entering a village, town or city during the period after noon until the following dawn, without having taken leave of an available bhikkhu--unless there is an emergency--is a pacittiya offense.

***

86. Should any bhikkhu have a needle case made of bone, ivory or horn, it is to be broken and confessed.

The origin story here echoes the one for NP 21.

"Now at that time a certain ivory-worker offered an invitation to the bhikkhus: 'If any of the masters have need of a needle case, I will supply them with needle cases.' So the bhikkhus asked for many needle cases. Those with small needle cases asked for large ones; those with large ones asked for small ones. The ivory-worker, making many needle cases for the bhikkhus, was not able to make other goods for sale. He could not support himself, and his wife and children suffered."

There are three factors for the full offense here:

1) Object: a needle case made of bone, ivory or horn.

2) Effort: One acquires it after making it or having it made,

3) Intention: for one's own use.

Object. Anything aside from a needle case--such as a fastener or ointment box--is not grounds for an offense here, even if it is made of bone, ivory or horn.

Effort. The permutations under this factor are as follows: The act of making the needle box or having it made--a dukkata. Acquiring the finished box--a pacittiya. This last penalty applies regardless of whether the box was made entirely by oneself, entirely by others, or whether one finished what others began, or let others finish what one began oneself. In any event, one must break the case before confess-ing the offense.

Intention. There is a dukkata in using an ivory, bone or horn needle box made for the sake of another person; and in making such a box--or having it made--for another's use.

The general principle. The Vinaya Mukha derives a general principle from this rule: The Buddha, in formulating this rule, was putting a halt to the sort of fad that can occur among bhikkhus when certain requisites become fashionable--to the point of inconveniencing donors--and senior bhikkhus at present should try to put a halt to any similar fads.

Summary: Acquiring a needle box made of ivory, bone or horn after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one break the box before confessing the offense.

***

87. When a bhikkhu is making a new bed or bench, it is to have legs (at most) eight fingerbreadths long--using Sugata fingerbreadths--not counting the lower edge of the frame. In excess of that it is to be cut down and confessed.

Tall furnishings. The purpose of this rule is to prevent bhikkhus from making and using furnishings that are high and imposing.

The Canon contains many rules dealing with furnishings, especially in the Khandhakas, and since furnishings in the time of the Buddha were somewhat different from what they are now, it is often a matter of guesswork as to what, precisely, the rules are referring to. The bed (manca) in this rule almost certainly refers to what we mean by a bed. The bench (pitha), according to the K/Commentary, is shorter than a bed, but not so short that it is square. This comment comes from the passage in the Cullavagga (Cv.VI.2.4) that allows bhikkhus to use an asandika--apparently a square stool, large enough to sit on but not to lie on--even if the legs are long. Another piece of furniture with long legs allowed in the same passage is the sattanga, a chair or sofa with a back and arms. The Vinaya Mukha includes a pancanga--a chair or sofa with a back but no arms--under this allowance as well. The Canon and commentaries make no mention of this point, but it seems valid: Chairs and sofas without arms are less imposing than those which have them.

The factors for the offense here are three:

1) Object: a bed or bench whose legs, measuring from the lower side of the frame to the floor, are longer than eight Sugata fingerbreadths (approximately 16.6 cm.)

2) Effort: One acquires it after making it or having it made,

3) Intention: for one's own use.

Object. As mentioned above, Cv.VI.2.4 shows that stools, as well as chairs and sofas with backs--with or without arms--would not fulfill this factor.

The Sugata measures are a matter of controversy, discussed in Appendix II. For the purposes of this book, we are taking the Sugata span to be 25 cm., and since there are 12 Sugata fingerbreadths in a Sugata span, that would put eight Sugata fingerbreadths at 16.6 cm.

Effort. The permutations under this factor are as follows: The act of making the bed/bench or having it made--a dukkata. Acquiring the finished article--a pacittiya. This last penalty applies regardless of whether the bed/bench was made entirely by oneself, entirely by others, or whether one finished what others began, or let others finish what one began oneself. In any case, one must cut down the legs to the proper size before confessing the offense.

Intention. There is a dukkata in making a bed or bench with extra long legs--or having it made--for the sake of another person; and in using such a bed or bench made for another's use. This last penalty would seem to apply only inside the monastery, for Cv.VI.8 allows bhikkhus to sit--but not to lie down--on furnishings in a lay person's house even if the furnishings are the sort not allowable in the monastery. There are three exceptions to this allowance, the one piece objected to on account of its height being the asandi--apparently a square platform, large enough to lie on, and very high. Bhikkhus are not allowed to sit on such a thing, even in a lay person's house.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in making a bed or bench--or having one made--if the legs are eight Sugata fingerbreadths or less; or in receiving a bed or bench with extra long legs if one cuts the legs down to regulation size before using it. The Commentary notes that if one buries the legs in the ground, so that no more than eight fingerbreadths separate the ground from the lower frame, that is also allowable.

Summary: Acquiring a bed or bench with legs longer than eight Sugata fingerbreadths after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the legs down before confessing the offense.

***

88. Should any bhikkhu have a bed or bench upholstered, it (the upholstery) is to be torn off and confessed.

Upholstery & cushions. Cotton down was apparently the most luxurious material known in the Buddha's time for stuffing furniture, cushions and mattresses, inasmuch as bhikkhus are forbidden from making beds and benches upholstered with cotton-down (under this rule), and from sitting on cushions stuffed with cotton down, even in the homes of lay people (Cv.VI.8). The only article of furnishing stuffed with cotton down allowed to bhikkhus was a pillow (not a squatting mat, as translated in some places), although the pillow could be made no larger than the size of the head (Cv.VI.2.6).

The Commentary's explanations of this point show that the pillow used in those days was an oblong cushion, looking like a rectangle when viewed from above, and like a triangle when viewed from either the right or left side (like the old style of pillow still in use in Thailand). Such pillows, the Commentary says, should be no more than two cubits (1 meter) long, and one span plus four fingerbreadths (32 cm.) from corner to corner on the sides. A bhikkhu who is not ill may use such a pillow for his head and feet; an ill bhikkhu may line up a series of pillows, cover them with a cloth, and lie down on them without incurring an offense.

Hair--such as human hair and horse-hair--was another forbidden form of stuffing. Cv.VI.8, in addition to forbidding bhikkhus from sitting down on an asandi and cushions stuffed with cotton down, also forbids them from sitting down on a pallanka--a couch stuffed with horse-hair--even in the house of a lay person. According to Cv.VI.14, though, if the bhikkhus are presented with asandis, pallankas and cushions stuffed with cotton down, they may use the asandis after cutting the legs down to size, the pallankas after removing the hair stuffing, and the cotton-down cushions only after tearing them up and making them into pillows.

Mattresses and cushions stuffed with other materials, though, are allowed, even for use in the monastery. Cv.VI.7 mentions five kinds of allowable stuffing: wool, cloth, bark, grass and leaves.

(According to the Commentary, wool here includes all kinds of animal fur and bird feathers. Goose down would thus be allowable. It also mentions that, according to the Kurundi, mattresses and cushions stuffed with these materials are allowable whether covered with cloth or leather.)

The purpose of all this is to keep bhikkhus from using furnishings which are extravagant and ostentatious. As the Vinaya Mukha men-tions, though, standards of what is extravagant and ostentatious vary from age to age and culture to culture. Some of the things allowed in the Canon and commentaries now seem exotic and luxu-rious; and other things forbidden by them, common and ordinary. Thus the wise policy, in the monastery, would be to use only those furnishings allowed by the rules and which seem unostentatious at present; and when visiting a lay person's home, to avoid sitting on furnishings which seem unusually grand.

The factors for the offense here are three:

1) Object: a bed or bench stuffed with cotton down.

2) Effort: One acquires it after making it or having it made,

3) Intention: for one's own use.

Object. Cotton down, according to the Vibhanga, includes any cotton down from trees, vines and grass. The Commentary to Cv.VI interprets this as meaning cotton down from any plant, since "trees, vines and grass" is the Canon's usual way of covering all plant life. Kapok, flax fibers, jute and cotton would thus all come under this category.

Since cotton-down cushions are forbidden in all situations, bed and bench here would seem to include all forms of furniture, including the stools, chairs and sofas exempted from the preceding rule.

Effort. The permutations under this factor are as follows: The act of making the bed/bench or having it made--a dukkata. Acquiring the finished article--a pacittiya. This last penalty applies regardless of whether the bed/bench was made entirely by oneself, entirely by others, or whether one finished what others began, or let others finish what one began oneself. In any case, one must tear off the upholstery before confessing the offense.

Intention. There is a dukkata in making a bed or bench uphol-stered with cotton down--or having it made--for the sake of another person; and in using such a bed or bench made for another's use.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in using cotton down to stuff a pillow, a belt, a shoulder strap, a binding or a bag for carrying the alms bowl; or to form the filter in a water strainer. If one obtains a bed or bench stuffed with cotton down made for another person's use, there is no offense in using it if one removes the upholstery first.

Summary: Acquiring a bed or bench stuffed with cotton down after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one remove the stuffing before confessing the offense.

***

89.When a bhikkhu is making a sitting cloth, it is to be made to the standard measurement. Here the standard is this: two spans--using the Sugata span--in length, 1 1/2 in width, the border a span. In excess of that, it is to be cut down and confessed.

The origin story here follows on the passage in Mv.VIII.16.3, where the Buddha allows bhikkhus to use a sitting cloth in order to protect their robes from getting soiled by their furnishings, and their furnish-ings from getting soiled by their robes and bodies.

"Now at that time the Lord had allowed a sitting cloth for the bhikkhus. Some group-of-six bhikkhus...used sitting cloths without any limit in size, which hung down in front and behind even on beds and benches." (As a result, the Buddha set the limit at 2 spans by 1 1/2.) Now, Ven. Udayin was very large. Setting out his sitting cloth in front of the Blessed One, he stretched it out on all sides before sitting down. The Blessed One said to him, 'Why is it, Udayin, that when setting out your sitting cloth you stretch it out on all sides, like an old skin?'

"Because the sitting cloth the Blessed One has allowed for the bhikkhus is awfully small.'" (Thus the Buddha added the allowance for the border.)

There are three factors for the full offense here:

1) Object: a sitting cloth larger than the standard measure.

2) Effort: One acquires it after making it or having it made,

3) Intention: for one's own use.

Object. A sitting cloth, by definition, has to have a border, regard-less of whether it is made of felted or woven material. However--as none of the texts give any clear indication as to how many borders it should have, or how they are to be patterned--there is no definitive measurement as to how large the overall cloth should be. A wise policy, then, is to take the origin story as a guide: Make the cloth large enough so that one can sit cross-legged on it without soiling one's robes or furnishings, but not so large that it extends out on any one side.

Effort. The permutations under this factor are as follows: The act of making the sitting cloth or having it made--a dukkata. Acquiring the finished article--a pacittiya. This last penalty applies regardless of whether the cloth was made entirely by oneself, entirely by others, or whether one finished what others began, or let others finish what one began oneself. In any case, one must cut down the cloth to the proper size before confessing the offense.

Intention. There is a dukkata in making an overly large sitting cloth--or having it made--for the sake of another person; and in using such a cloth made for another's use.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if one receives an overly large sitting cloth made for another person's use and cuts it down to size before using it oneself.

Summary: Acquiring an overly large sitting cloth after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense.

***

90. When a bhikkhu is making a skin-eruption covering cloth, it is to be made to the standard measurement. Here the standard is this: four spans--using the Sugata span--in length, two spans in width. In excess of that, it is to be cut down and confessed.

Object. The Mahavagga (VIII.17) allows bhikkhus to use a skin-eruption covering cloth to protect their robes when they are suffering from boils, running sores, rashes or "thick scab" diseases (large boils? psoriasis?). The Vibhanga to this rule states that the cloth is to cover the area from the navel down to the knees, thus suggesting that the cloth is intended to be worn as an inner robe, beneath the lower robe. As we already mentioned under NP 1, one should determine these cloths for use when one is suffering from such a disease, and then place them under shared ownership when not.

As mentioned under Pacittiya 87, above, the Sugata measures are discussed in Appendix II. Here we take the Sugata span to equal 25 cm., which would put the standard measurement for the skin-eruption covering cloth at 1 meter by 50 cm. If either of these measurements is exceeded, the cloth would fulfill this factor for the full offense.

Effort, intention & non-offenses. The permutations of these factors are the same as under the preceding rule.

Summary: Acquiring an overly large skin-eruption covering cloth after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense.

***

91. When a bhikkhu is making a rains-bathing cloth, it is to be made to the standard measurement. Here the standard is this: six spans--using the Sugata span--in length, 2 1/2 in width. In excess of that, it is to be cut down and confessed.

Object. The rains bathing cloth has already been discussed in detail under NP 24. Taking the Sugata span to equal 25 cm., the standard measurement for the rains-bathing cloth would be 1.5 meter by 62.5 cm. If either of these measurements is exceeded, the cloth would fulfill this factor for the full offense.

Effort, intention & non-offenses. The permutations of these factors are the same as under Pacittiya 89.

Summary: Acquiring an overly large rains-bathing cloth after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense.

***

92. Should any bhikkhu have a robe made the size of the Sugata robe--or larger--it is to be cut down and confessed. Here, the size of the Sugata robe is this: nine spans--using the Sugata span--in length, six spans in width. This is the size of the Sugata's Sugata robe.

Object. The term "Sugata"--meaning well-gone or accomplished--is an epithet for the Buddha.

Robe is not defined in the Vibhanga, and apparently means any of the three basic robes: the lower robe, the upper robe and the outer robe. This raises an interesting point: Perhaps in the Buddha's time, all three of the basic robes were approximately the same size. This would have made it much more convenient than it is at present to hold to the practice of using only one set of three robes. When washing one robe, one could wear the other two without looking out of place.

At any rate, taking the Sugata span to be 25 cm. would put the size of the Buddha's robes at 2.25 m. by 1.50 m.--much larger that the lower robes used at present, but much smaller than present-day upper and outer robes.

As we will see under Appendix II, various theories have been offered over the centuries as to how large the Sugata span was. Beginning at least with the time of the Maha-Atthakatha, one of the ancient commentaries, the Buddha was assumed to be of super-human height, and his handspan, cubit, etc., were assumed to be three-times normal length. Only recently, within the last century or so, have Vinaya experts taken evidence from the Canon to show that the Buddha, though tall, was not abnormally so, and thus the estimate of the Sugata span, etc., has shrunk accordingly. Still, the traditional estimates of the Buddha's height continue to influence the size of the robes that bhikkhus wear today throughout the Theravadan countries; and although there was a movement in Thailand during the mid-19th century to return to the original size and style as shown in the earliest Indian Buddha images, the idea never caught on.

Effort, intention & non-offenses. The permutations of these factors are the same as under Pacittiya 89.

Summary: Acquiring an overly large robe after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the robe down to size before confessing the offense.

CHAPTER NINE

Patidesaniya

This term means "to be acknowledged". As a name for training rules, it means "entailing acknowledgement". The four training rules here are unique in that they mention, as part of the rule, the words to be used in acknowledging the violation, and the second rule is especially unique in that it depicts the violators as acknowledging their offense as a group.

1. Should any bhikkhu chew or consume staple or non-staple food, having received it himself from the hand of an unrelated bhikkhuni in an inhabited area, he is to acknowledge it: "Friends, I have committed a blameworthy, unsuitable act which ought to be acknowledged. I acknowledge it."

A long series of events led up to the formulation of this rule.

"Now at that time a certain woman whose husband was away from home was made pregnant by her lover. She, having caused an abortion, said to a bhikkhuni who was dependent on her family for alms, 'Come, lady, take this fetus away in your bowl.' So the bhikkhuni, having placed the fetus in her bowl and covering it up with her outer robe, went away. Now it so happened that a certain alms-going bhikkhu had made this vow: 'I won't eat from the first almsfood I receive without having given some of it to a bhikkhu or bhikkhuni.' Seeing the bhikkhuni, he said to her, 'Come, sister, accept alms.'

"'No, master.'--"A second time...A third time...--"'No, master.'

"'Look, sister, I have made this vow: "I won't eat from the first almsfood I receive without having given some of it to a bhikkhu or bhikkhuni." So come on, accept alms.'

"Then the bhikkhuni, being pressured by the bhikkhu, took out her bowl and showed it to him. 'You see, master: a fetus in the bowl. But don't tell anyone.'...

(Of course the bhikkhu couldn't help but tell his fellow bhikkhus, and word reached the Buddha, who formulated a double rule:) 'A bhikkhuni should not take a fetus in a bowl. I allow a bhikkhuni, when seeing a bhikkhu, to take out her bowl and show it to him.'

"Now at that time some group-of-six bhikkhunis, on seeing a bhikkhu, would turn their bowls upside down and show him the bottom side...'I allow a bhikkhuni, when seeing a bhikkhu, to show him her bowl right side up. And she is to offer him whatever food there is in the bowl.'" (Cv.X.13)

"Now at that time a certain bhikkhuni, on the way back from going for alms in Savatthi, seeing a certain bhikkhu, said to him, 'Come, master, accept alms.'

"'Very well, sister.' And he took everything. As the time (for alms-going) was almost up, she was unable to go for alms, and so was deprived of her meal.

"On the second day...the third day...he took everything...she was deprived of her meal.

"On the fourth day, she went staggering along the road. A rich merchant, coming the opposite direction in a chariot, said to her, 'Get out of the way, lady.'

"She went and fell down right there.

"The rich merchant apologized to her, 'I'm sorry, lady, for making you fall.'

"'It wasn't that you made me fall, householder. It's just that I'm weak.'

"'But why are you weak?'

"And she told him what had happened. The rich merchant, having taken her to his house and having fed her (), was offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can the revered ones take food from the hand of a bhikkhuni? It's difficult for women to come by things.'"

There are two factors for the full offense here.

1) Object: Staple or non-staple food that a bhikkhu has accepted from the hand of a bhikkhuni--unrelated to him--while she is in a village area.

2) Effort: He eats the food.

Object. Staple food follows the standard definition given in the Food Chapter under the pacittiya rules. Non-staple food includes all edibles except juice drinks, tonics and medicines.

Staple and non-staple food are grounds for a patidesaniya; juice drinks, tonics and medicines taken as food, grounds for a dukkata.

Bhikkhuni refers to one who has received the double ordination. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination--in the Bhikkhuni Sangha--is grounds for a dukkata. Unrelated means sharing no common ancestor back through seven generations. Perception as to whether or not the bhikkhuni is related is not a mitigating factor here.

A village area is defined as any house or roadway in a village, town or city.

Effort. There is a dukkata in accepting staple or non-staple food with the purpose of eating it, or in accepting juice drinks, tonics or medicine with the purpose of taking them as food; while there is a patidesaniya for every mouthful of the staple or non-staple food one eats, and a dukkata for every mouthful one takes of the juice drinks, tonics or medicine for the sake of food.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if a bhikkhu accepts and eats food from a related bhikkhuni, and no offense in the following situations even if the bhikkhuni is unrelated:

She gets someone else to give him the food.

She gives it by placing it near him (as in NP 18 and Pacittiya 41).

She gives it to him in a monastery, nuns' quarters, a dwelling of members of other sects, or on the way back from such places.

She gives it to him after she has left the village.

She gives him tonics, juice and medicine, and he uses them as such, rather than as food.

She is a female novice or probationer.

Even in these cases, though, it would be a wise policy not to take so much of her food that she is deprived of a full meal.

Summary: Eating staple or non-staple food, after having accepted it from the hand of an unrelated bhikkhuni in a village area, is a patidesaniya offense.

***

2. In case bhikkhus, being invited, are eating in family homes, and if a bhikkhuni is standing there as though giving directions, (saying,) "Give curry here, give rice here," then she is to be dismissed by the bhikkhus, "Go away, sister, while the bhikkhus are eating." If not one of the bhikkhus should speak to dismiss the bhikkhuni, "Go away, sister, while the bhikkhus are eating," the bhikkhus are to acknowledge it: "Friends, we have committed a blameworthy, unsuitable act which ought to be acknowledged. We acknowledge it."

This rule refers to situations where lay donors invite bhikkhus to a meal, and a bhikkhuni stands giving orders, based on favoritism, as to which bhikkhus should get which food. The duty of the bhikkhus in such cases is to tell her to go away. If even just one of them does, they are all exempted from the offense here. If none of them does, and the following factors are fulfilled, they all incur the penalty and must acknowledge their offense as a group.

Object. Actually, there are two objects here: the food the the bhikkhuni. Any one of the five staple food that has been received in such a situation would fulfill the food factor. If the bhikkhuni has been ordained only in the Bhikkhuni Sangha, the bhikkhuni factor would be grounds for a dukkata.

Effort. There is a dukkata in accepting the staple food received under such circumstances, and a patidesaniya for every mouthful one eats.

Non-offenses. There is no offense--

if the bhikkhuni gets others to give her food to the bhikkhus;

if she herself gives the food of other people to the bhikkhus;

if she gets the donors to give food they have forgotten;

if she gets them to give to a bhikkhu they have passed over;

if she gets them to give the food equally to all;

'if she is a female probationer or novice; or if she gets them to give anything but the five staple foods.

Summary: Eating staple food accepted at a meal to which one has been invited and where a bhikkhuni has given directions, based on favoritism, as to which bhikkhu should get which food and none of the bhikkhus have dismissed her, is a patidesaniya offense.

***

3.There are families designated as in training. Should any bhikkhu, not being ill, uninvited beforehand, chew or consume staple or non-staple food, having received it himself at the homes of families designated as in training, he is to acknowledge it: "Friends, I have committed a blameworthy, unsuitable act which ought to be acknowledged. I acknowledge it."

The term "in training" (sekha) is usually used to refer to anyone who has attained at least the first noble path, but has yet to become an arahant. Here, though, the Vibhanga uses it to refer to any family whose faith is increasing but whose wealth is decreasing--i.e., a family whose faith is so strong that they become generous to the point that they suffer financially. In cases such as these, the Community may, as a formal act, declare them as families in training so as to protect them with this rule from bhikkhus who might abuse their generosity.

The factors for the offense here are two:

1) Object: staple or non-staple food accepted at the home of a family designated as in training when one is not ill and has not been invited by them beforehand.

2) Effort: One eats the food.

Object. Staple food follows the standard definition given in the Food Chapter under the pacittiya rules. Non-staple food includes all edibles except juice drinks, tonics and medicines. Staple and non-staple food are grounds for a patidesaniya; juice drinks, tonics and medicines taken as food, grounds for a dukkata.

Ill is defined as being unable to go for alms.

Invited means that one has been invited on that day or a previous day by a member of the family--or a messenger--standing outside of the house or its yard/compound. If they invite one while they are inside the home or its yard/compound, it does not count.

Effort. There is a dukkata in accepting staple or non-staple food with the purpose of eating it, or in accepting juice drinks, tonics or medicine with the purpose of taking them as food; a patidesaniya for every mouthful of the staple or non-staple food one eats; and a dukkata for every mouthful one takes of the juice drinks, tonics or medicine for the sake of food.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in eating food which one has accepted from the house of a family in training if--

One is ill.

One was invited.

The food was set out in the house or its yard by people other than the members of the family in training (); or

The family has made an arrangement to provide food by drawing lots, or on a regular or rotating basis, and one accepts the food as part of that arrangement.

There is also no offense in eating the leftovers of one who received the food at their house when he was invited or ill; or if the members of the family give the food outside of their home or yard/compound. The Commentary quotes the MahaPaccari, one of the ancient commentaries, as saying that this exemption holds regardless of whether they take the food out of the home before or after seeing one approach.

Summary: Eating staple or non-staple food, after accepting it--when one is neither ill nor invited--at the home of a family formally designated as "in training", is a patidesaniya offense.

***

4.There are wilderness abodes that are dubious and risky. Should any bhikkhu, not being ill, living in such abodes, chew or consume unannounced (gifts of) staple or non-staple food, having received them himself in the abode, he is to acknowledge it: "Friends, I have committed a blameworthy, unsuitable act which ought to be acknowledged. I acknowledge it."

"Now at that time the Sakyan slaves were rebelling. The Sakyan ladies wanted to make a meal (for the bhikkhus) in wilderness abodes. The Sakyan slaves heard, 'The Sakyan ladies, they say, want to make a meal in the wilderness abodes,' so they infested the way. The Sakyan ladies, taking exquisite staple and non-staple foods, went to the wilderness abodes. The Sakyan slaves, coming out, plundered and raped them. The Sakyans, having come out and captured the thieves with the goods, were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can the revered ones not inform us that there are thieves living in the monastery?'"

Here again there are two factors for the full offense.

1) Object: an unannounced gift of staple or non-staple food that one has received, when not ill, in a dubious and risky wilderness abode.

2) Effort: One eats the food.

Object. The Vibhanga defines a wilderness abode as one at least 500 bow-lengths, or one kilometer, from the nearest village, measuring by the shortest walkable path between the two, and not as the crow flies. Such an abode is considered dubious if thieves are known to be about, and risky if people are known to have been hurt or plundered by them.

Staple food follows the standard definition given in the Food Chapter under the pacittiya rules. Non-staple food includes all edibles except juice drinks, tonics and medicines.

Staple and non-staple food are grounds for a patidesaniya; juice drinks, tonics and medicines taken as food, grounds for a dukkata.

The Vibhanga gives specific instructions for how the gift of food should be announced. The donor(s) or a messenger must come to the abode and tell one of the inhabitants that a gift of food will be brought. The inhabitant must then tell the informant that the area is dubious and risky. If the informant says, "Never mind, the donor(s) will come anyway", then someone in the abode must tell the thieves, "Go away. People are coming to serve food." This is very unlikely to make the thieves go away but, as the Commentary explains, it absolves the bhikkhus from any responsibility if the thieves attack the donors.

Even if the informant specifies that only certain types of food will be brought, anything that comes along with those foods is considered announced. () Here the Commentary adds that if other people learn of the intended donation and bring food to add to it, their food is considered as announced as well. The Vibhanga also states that if the informant says a particular group is coming to bring food, the announcement covers anything brought by any member of the group.

The Vibhanga makes clear that the announcement counts only if the donor makes it in the abode or its yard/compound. Thus, for example, if the donors announce their intended donation to the bhikkhu while he is in the village for alms, the donation is still considered unannounced. And, for the same reason, such things as telephone calls, letters and faxes would also not count.

The Commentary adds that if the donors send a bhikkhu or novice to the monastery to announce the donation, it does not count as announced. In other words, the messenger must be a lay person.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. If the food is not properly announced, then regardless of whether one perceives it as properly announced or not, it still fulfills this factor.

A bhikkhu counts as ill if he is unable to go for alms.

Effort. There is a dukkata in accepting staple or non-staple food with the purpose of eating it, or in accepting juice drinks, tonics or medicine with the purpose of taking them as food; a patidesaniya for every mouthful of the staple or non-staple food one eats; and a dukkata for every mouthful one takes of the juice drinks, tonics or medicine for the sake of food.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in eating food accepted in the monastery if one is ill or if the gift was announced. There is also no offense-- in using roots, bark, leaves or flowers growing there in the abode;

in eating left-over announced food or food given to one who is ill;

in accepting food outside the abode and eating it inside; or in accepting and eating juice drinks, tonics and medicines as such and not as food.

The Commentary, in discussing these allowances, makes the following points: 1) If lay people take any of the fruits, roots, etc., growing in the abode and cook them at home, they must announce the gift before bringing them back to the abode. 2) If the donors, after announcing the gift, bring large amounts of food, some of it may be set aside--without presenting it to the bhikkhus--to be presented on a later day.

All of this causes no hardships in communities where everyone knows that they have to announce a gift of food before bringing it to the dangerous abode, but there are bound to be cases where donors do not know that the abode is dangerous, or that they should announce their gifts before bringing them, and they are likely to show up at the abode with unannounced gifts of food. In such cases, the Commentary recommends: 1) Either have the donor take the food outside the area of the abode, come back in to announce it, and then go out to bring the food back in to present it; or 2) Have the donor take the food outside and have a bhikkhu follow him out to accept it there.

If order to minimize the necessity of doing this, though, it would be a wise policy for a bhikkhu who finds himself living in such an abode to announce to all his supporters beforehand--and ask them to spread the word--that if they want to bring him gifts of food, they have to come and announce them in advance.

Summary: Eating an unannounced gift of staple or non-staple food after accepting it in a dangerous wilderness abode when one is not ill is a patidesaniya offense.

CHAPTER TEN

Sekhiya

This term, as an adjective qualifying a duty, means "to be practiced" or "to be trained in". As the name of a training rule, it means "to be followed". There are 75 training rules in this category, divided by subject into four groups: etiquette in dressing and behaving when in inhabited areas; etiquette in accepting and eating alms food; etiquette when teaching the Dhamma; and etiquette in urinating, defecating and spitting.

The rules themselves do not impose a direct penalty. They simply say, "(This is) a training to be observed." The Vibhanga, though, says that to violate any of these rules out of disrespect incurs a dukkata. To violate them unintentionally, unthinkingly or unknowingly, or to disobey them when there are dangers or (in most cases) when one is ill, incurs no penalty.

The Commentary adds that "unknowingly" in this case does not mean not knowing the rule. For a new bhikkhu not to make the effort to know the rules, it says, would qualify as disrespect. So "unknowingly" here means not knowing that a situation has developed which would be contrary to the rules. For instance, if one does not know that one's robes have gotten out of kilter, that would not count as a breach of the relevant rule.

One: The 26 Dealing with Proper Behavior

The Canon contains several stories in which a bhikkhu's behavior causes another person to become interested in the Dhamma. The most famous example is the story of Ven. Sariputta's first encounter with Ven. Assaji.

"Now at that time the wanderer Sanjaya was residing in Rajagaha with a large company of wanderers--250 in all. And at that time Sariputta and Moggallana were practicing the holy life under Sanjaya. They had made this agreement: Whoever attains the Deathless first will inform the other.

"Then Ven. Assaji, arising early in the morning, taking his robe and bowl, entered Rajagaha for alms: Gracious in the way he approached and departed, looked forward and behind, drew in and stretched out his arm; his eyes downcast, his every movement consummate. Sariputta the wanderer saw Ven. Assaji going for alms in Rajagaha: gracious...his eyes downcast, his every movement consummate. On seeing him, the thought occurred to him: 'Surely, of those in this world who are arahants or have entered the path to arahantship, this is one. What if I were to approach him and question him: "On whose account have you gone forth? Who is your teacher? In whose Dhamma do you delight?"'

"But then the thought occurred to Sariputta the wanderer: 'This is the wrong time to question him. He is going for alms in the town. What if I were to follow behind this bhikkhu who has found the path for those who seek it?'"

Even though the following rules deal with minor matters, a bhikkhu should remind himself that the minor details of his behavior can often make the difference between sparking and killing another person's interest in the Dhamma.

1. [2]I will wear the lower robe [upper robe] wrapped around (me): a training to be observed.

To wear the lower robe wrapped around means to wear the upper edge circling the waist, covering the navel, and the lower edge circling the knees. The Commentary states that when standing, the lower edge should be not more than eight fingerbreadths below the knees, although if one's calves are disfigured, it is all right to cover them more than that.

To wear the upper robe wrapped around means, according to the Vibhanga, keeping both ends of the top and bottom edges level. The bottom edge of the upper robe, though, does not have to be level with the bottom edge of the under robe. Given the size of the upper robe in the Buddha's time, it would have been impossible for it to have extended down that far.

Intentionally to wear either robe hanging down in front or in back is a breach of these rules. The Commentary states that the purpose of this rule is to prevent bhikkhus from wearing their robes in any of the various ways that lay people in those days wore theirs--e.g., pleated "with 100 pleats", tied up or tucked up between the legs. It also comments that since these rules are not qualified, as the follow-ing ones are, with the phrase, "in inhabited areas", they should be followed in the monastery and wilderness areas as well. As a prac-tical matter, though, if one is working on a high ladder or in a tree, it is a wise policy to tuck one's lower robe up between the legs for decency' sake.

3. [4]I will go [sit] well-covered in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

The Vibhanga does not define inhabited areas in this or any of the following rules. The term thus probably has the same meaning as under Patidesaniya 1: in the homes of lay people, or along the streets and alleys of villages, cities or towns. This does not include, however, monasteries located in inhabited areas, although many such monasteries make it a rule that bhikkhus living with them observe many of these rules when outside of their personal quarters, even though they are still within the monastery grounds.

Well-covered, according to the Commentary, means not exposing one's chest or knees. One should have the upper edge of the upper robe around the neck, and the lower edge covering the wrists. The lower edge of the lower robe, as stated above, should cover the knees. When seated, only one's head, hands and legs from the calves on down should show.

Rule #4 here has an added non-offense clause: There is no offense if one sits not "well-covered" within one's residence. () According to the Vinaya Mukha, this means within one's room if one is staying overnight in a lay person's home. It makes the point that when one is outside of one's room, though, one should follow the rule.

5. [6]I will go [sit] well-restrained in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

Well-restrained, according to the Commentary, means not playing with the hands or feet. This would include such things as dancing, cracking one's knuckles, wiggling one's fingers or toes.

7. [8]I will go [sit] with eyes lowered in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

The Vibhanga says that a bhikkhu should keep his gaze lowered to the ground the distance of a plow's length ahead of him--this equals two meters, according to the Commentary. The purpose of this rule, it adds, is to prevent one from gazing aimlessly here and there at the sights as one walks along. There is nothing wrong, though, in looking up when one has reason to do so. An example given in the Commentary is stopping to look up and see if there are dangers from approaching horses or elephants. A more modern example would be checking the traffic before crossing a road.

9. [10]I will not go [sit] with robes hitched up in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, to hitch up one's robes means to lift them so as to expose either side or both sides of the body. Rule #10 here, like Sekhiya 4, does not apply when one is sitting in one's dwelling in an inhabited area.

11. [12]I will not go [sit] laughing loudly in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

According to the Vibhanga, if there is any reason for amusement, one should simply smile.

13. [14]I will go [sit] (speaking) with a lowered voice in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

The Commentary defines a lowered voice as follows: Three bhikkhus are sitting in a row at intervals of three meters. The first bhikkhu speaks. The second can hear him and clearly catch what he is saying. The third can hear his voice, but not what he is saying. If the third can clearly catch what he is saying, it maintains, the first bhikkhu is speaking too loudly. As the Vinaya Mukha notes, though, when one is speaking to a crowd of people, there is nothing wrong in raising one's voice provided that one does not shout. And as the non-offense clauses shows, there is nothing wrong in shouting if there are dangers--e.g., someone is about to fall off a cliff or be hit by a car--or if one's listener is partially deaf.

15. [16]I will not go [sit] swinging the body in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

This means that one should keep one's body straight. Rule #16, like Sekhiya 4, does not apply when one is sitting in one's dwelling in an inhabited area.

17. [18]I will not go [sit] swinging the arms in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, this means that one should keep one's arms still, although as the Vinaya Mukha points out, there is nothing wrong in swinging one's arms slightly to keep one's balance as one walks. Rule #18 does not apply when one is sitting in one's residence in an inhabited area.

19. [20]I will not go [sit] swinging the head in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

This refers to swinging the head from side to side or letting it droop forward or back. Of course, there is no offense if one is dozing off, and like Sekhiya 4, Rule #20 does not apply when one is sitting in one's residence in an inhabited area.

21. [22]I will not go [sit] with arms akimbo in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

Akimbo means with the hand on the hip. This rule, the Commen-tary says, forbids having one arm or both arms akimbo. As with Sekhiya 4, Rule #22 does not apply when one is sitting in one's residence in an inhabited area.

23. [24]I will not go [sit] with my head covered in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

Covered, here, means covered with a robe, a scarf or other similar piece of cloth. As with Sekhiya 4, Rule #24 does not apply when one is sitting in one's residence in an inhabited area. And the allowance for "one who is ill" under both rules means that one may cover one's head when the weather is unbearably cold or the sun unbearably hot.

25.I will not go tiptoeing or walking just on the heels in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

This translation of the rule follows the Commentary.

26.I will not sit holding up the knees in inhabited areas: a training to be observed.

This, the Vibhanga says, refers to sitting cross-legged hugging the knees with the arms or hands, or binding them with a strip of cloth. () The author of the Vinaya Mukha reports, "I have seen (this latter method) only in ancient pictures. It was widely used among fat people as a way of holding the body erect."

***

In addition to the rules listed here, there are others in the Khandhakas concerning behavior in inhabited areas. These include--

A bhikkhu entering an inhabited area must wear all three of his basic set of robes unless--

He is ill.

It is during the four months of the rains.

It is during the period when his kathina privileges are in effect.

He is going to have to cross a river.

He has a secure dwelling (or other hiding place, the Commentary says, such as a hollow in a tree or a rock) in which to place the robe he leaves behind. (Mv.VIII.23.2)

He should also wear his waistband. The bhikkhu who instigated this rule had the unforgettable experience of having his lower robe slip off in front of a group of people who thoroughly enjoyed the spectacle. (Cv.V.29.1)

A bhikkhu entering an inhabited area, though, should not spread out his outer robe to sit on (Cv.VIII.4.3); and unless he is ill he should not wear footwear--shoes, sandals, boots, etc.--(Mv.V.12) or use an umbrella or sunshade (Cv.V.23.3). The Commentary to the umbrella rule includes physical or mental discomfort under "ill" in this case, and says that one may also use the umbrella to protect one's robes from the rain.

Two: The 30 Dealing with Food

27.I will receive alms food appreciatively: a training to be observed.

This rule was formulated in response to an incident in which some group-of-six bhikkhus accepted alms food unappreciatively, as if--to quote the Vibhanga--"they wanted to throw it away." The Commen-tary explains appreciatively as "with mindfulness established." One should also remind oneself of the trouble and expense the donors went to in providing the food.

28.I will receive alms food with attention focused on the bowl: a training to be observed.

The purpose of this rule is to prevent one from looking at the donor's face or gazing aimlessly in other directions while he/she is placing food in the bowl. However, the Cullavagga (VIII.5) includes a number of "duties to be observed on alms round," one of which is that one should not stand too long or turn away too soon. This means that one should glance at what the donor has prepared to give, so that one will not stand waiting for more when the donor has finished giving, or turn away when he/she has more to give.

29.I will receive alms food with bean curry in proper proportion: a training to be observed.

This rule refers specifically to eating habits at the time of the Buddha. Bean curry means sauces made with gram, pulses, vetch, etc., thick enough that they can be placed in the bowl by the hand. In proper proportion, according to the Commentary, means no more than one-quarter of the total food. The Vinaya Mukha tries to interpret this rule as covering curries and soups of all kinds, but the Vibhanga and commentaries state unequivocally that it covers only bean curries. Other gravies, soups, stews and sauces are exempt.

This rule probably refers to situations in which bhikkhus were offered food from a serving dish from which they helped themselves--as was the custom when they were invited to homes in the Buddha's time, and still is the custom when they are invited to homes in Sri Lanka and Burma--for the Vibhanga states that there is no offense in receiving more than the proper proportion if one is invited to accept more than that. There is also no offense in taking more than the proper proportion if one is accepting it from relatives, for the sake of another, or if one has obtained the food through one's own resources. (This interpretation follows the Commentary. The K/Commentary, for some reason, maintains that all of these non-offense situations--accepting from one's relatives, from people who have offered an invitation, for the sake of another, or from food obtained through one's own resources--apply only to dishes which are not bean curries, but this interpretation does not seem to be supported by the Vibhanga.)

30.I will receive alms food level with the edge (of the bowl): a training to be observed.

Iron bowls in the past had a hoop approximately 1 cm. wide around the inside of the mouth: According to the Commentary, "edge" here means the bottom edge of this hoop. A bhikkhu is prohibited from accepting more than this, although of course there is nothing against accepting less.

The Commentary contains a long discussion of what does and does not come under alms food in this rule, and concludes that it covers only staple and non-staple foods. Thus if one receives a sweet, the "tail" of whose wrapper extends above the edge of the bowl (such sweets are still common in Asia today), it would not count as an infraction of this rule. The same holds true if one receives foods which do not fill the bowl, but extend above the edge--such as a length of sugar cane--or if the donor places on top of one's bowl another vessel containing food, such as a box of sweets or a bag of fruit.

31.I will eat alms food appreciatively: a training to be observed.

According to the Vinaya Mukha, this rule forbids doing other things--such as reading--while eating one's food. The Recollection at the Moment of Using One's Requisites requires that one reflect that one is eating "not playfully, nor for intoxication, nor for fattening, nor for beautification; but simply for the survival and continuance of this body, for ending its afflictions, for the support of the chaste life, (thinking) 'I will destroy old feelings of hunger without creating new feelings from overeating: Thus will I maintain myself, be blameless and live in comfort.'" One should also remind oneself of the effort and expense the donors went to in providing the meal.

32.I will eat alms food with attention focused on the bowl: a training to be observed.

The purpose of this rule is to prevent one from gazing aimlessly about while eating. The Vinaya Mukha notes, though, "To look elsewhere in ways related to one's eating--e.g., looking with the thought of providing a nearby bhikkhu with whatever he is lacking--is not prohibited." (See Sekhiya 38, below.)

33.I will eat alms food methodically: a training to be observed.

The purpose of this rule is that a bhikkhu work steadily across his food while eating, from one side to another, and not pick at it here and there. Special treats, though, may be passed over--either as a form of self-denial, or to save them for the end of the meal. Also, there is no offense in picking here and there when taking food from one's bowl to give to another person. ()

34.I will eat alms food with bean curry in proper proportion: a training to be observed.

The non-offenses here are the same as under Sekhiya 29: This rule does not apply to foods which are not thick bean curries, or to situa-tions where one has received the food from relatives, from people who offered an invitation to take more, for the sake of another or from one's own resources.

35.I will not eat alms food taking mouthfuls from a heap: a training to be observed.

This refers to the rice in one's bowl. The Commentary translates from a heap as from the top or from the middle. The Vinaya Mukha notes that is a custom among bhikkhus before eating to level off the rice in their bowls so that its surface is even. One would then work from one side, as under Sekhiya 33. The no-offense clauses state that if a little food remains scattered in one's bowl, there is no offense in gathering it together in a small heap and eating from that. () The Vinaya Mukha adds that if one is served other foods--such as sweets--stacked on a platter, it would be impolite to level them off, so in cases such as this one may take from the top of the heap.

36. I will not hide bean curry and foods with rice out of a desire to get more: a training to be observed.

Some donors, if they see that a bhikkhu has nothing but rice in his bowl, will go out of their way to provide him with extra food. This rule is to prevent bhikkhus from taking advantage of their kind intentions.

According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense if donors cover the food in one's bowl with rice, or if one covers it with rice oneself if one is not doing it out of a desire for more.

The Commentary notes that there is no exception here for a bhikkhu who is ill.

37.Not being ill, I will not eat rice or bean curry which I have requested for my own sake: a training to be observed.

The Commentary to Pacittiya 39 says that rice or bean curry here covers all foods not covered in that rule.

There is no offense in requesting these foods from relatives, from people who have offered an invitation to request, or if one is ill (weak from hunger would be included here). There is also no offense in obtaining these foods by means of one's own resources.

38.I will not look at another's bowl intent on finding fault: a training to be observed.

The K/Commentary defines finding fault as taking note of the fact that the other bhikkhu or novice has something: What this probably means is that he has some especially nice food that he is not sharing. The Vinaya Mukha provides an alternative suggestion, that this rule refers to finding fault with another's sloppy manner of eating. Sloppi-ness, though, is something about which bhikkhus may admonish one another, so the K/Commentary's interpretation seems more to the point.

The Vibhanga states that there is no offense in looking at another's bowl if one is not meaning to find fault or if one wants to provide him with whatever he may be lacking.

Here again, the Commentary notes that there is no exception for a bhikkhu who is ill.

39.I will not take an extra-large mouthful: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, a mouthful the size of a peacock's egg is too large, while one the size of a chicken egg is too small. (!) One midway between these two sizes is just right. This seems hard to fathom, unless chicken eggs in those days were much smaller than they are now.

According to the Vibhanga, this rule does not cover fruits, solid foods such as roots, and special confections (sandwiches at present would fit here). Apparently, if these items are somewhat largish, it is all right to stick them whole into the mouth, although if they are very large, it would be better to take bites out of them (see Sekhiya 45).

40.I will make up a rounded mouthful: a training to be observed.

People at that time ate food with their hands, and formed mouth-fuls of the food with their fingers before taking them to the mouth.

This rule, like the preceding one, does not cover fruits, solid foods such as roots, and special confections such as sandwiches. In other words, one does not have to mash these things up and form them into rounded mouthfuls before eating.

41.I will not open the mouth when the mouthful has yet to be brought to it: a training to be observed.

42.I will not put the whole hand into the mouth while eating: a training to be observed.

The Commentary and K/Commentary are in agreement that this is the proper translation for this rule. The Sub-commentary insists that it should be "any part of the hand" rather than "the whole hand", but according to the Commentary the act of sticking a finger in one's mouth while eating comes under Sekhiya 52.

43.I will not speak with the mouth full of food: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, if the amount of food in one's mouth is not enough to effect the clarity of one's pronunciation, it is all right to speak.

44.I will not eat from lifted balls of food: a training to be observed.

What this means is that one should not lift food from the bowl in one hand and then use the other hand to take parts of that handful to put in the mouth. According to the Vibhanga, this rule does not cover fruits, solid foods and special confections. Thus, for example, it is all right to pick up a bunch of grapes in one hand, and then take the grapes one by one with the other hand and put them in the mouth.

This rule is often translated as, "I will not eat tossing up balls of food," but since it seems unlikely that there would be an allowance for tossing fruit, etc., into the air and catching it in the mouth, the above translation is probably more correct.

45.I will not eat nibbling at mouthfuls of food: a training to be observed.

After forming a mouthful of food (see Sekhiya 39 & 40), one should place it into the mouth at once, rather than biting it off bit by bit.

Again, this rule does not cover fruits, solid foods and special confections. i.e., there is nothing wrong in taking bites from any of these foods that are too large to fit into the mouth, although the etiquette in many Asian countries at present frowns on taking bites even out of things such as these.

46.I will not eat stuffing out the cheeks: a training to be observed.

In other words, one should swallow one's food before putting another mouthful in the mouth.

This is another rule which does not cover fruits, solid foods and special confections. Apparently this allowance covers cases where the fruits, etc., would make up a largish mouthful, as mentioned under Sekhiya 39.

47.I will not eat shaking (food off) the hand: a training to be observed.

According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense in shaking dust or dirt off the hand while eating. ()

48.I will not eat scattering rice about: a training to be observed.

If one happens to be shaking dirt off the hand, and a few rice grains on the hand happen to get scattered in the process, there is no offense.

49.I will not eat sticking out the tongue: a training to be observed.

50.I will not eat smacking the lips: a training to be observed.

51.I will not eat making a slurping noise: a training to be observed.

In the origin story to this rule, a certain Brahmin prepared a milk drink for the bhikkhus, who drank it making a hissing or slurping sound. One of the bhikkhus, a former actor, made a joke about the fact: "It's as if this entire Sangha were cooled." (This of course, is a pun on the higher meaning of the word "cooled".) Word got to the Buddha, who in addition to formulating this rule, also imposed a dukkata on the act of making a joke about the Buddha, the Dhamma or the Sangha.

52.I will not eat licking the hands: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, this rule also covers the act of sticking a finger into the mouth. There are times, though--it says--when one is eating a semi-liquid food with one's hand, in which case it is all right to stick the tips of the fingers into the mouth so as to get as much of the food as possible into the mouth without spilling it.

53.I will not eat licking the bowl: a training to be observed.

The Commentary shows that the verb lick here also means scrape, in that it says it is a breach of this rule to scrape the bowl even with one finger. The Commentary is surely correct here, for otherwise there is no making sense of the Vibhanga's allowance that if there are a few scattered crumbs left in the bowl, one may gather them into one last mouthful, scrape them up and eat them.

54.I will not eat licking the lips: a training to be observed.

55.I will not accept a water vessel with a hand soiled by food: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, this rule applies to anything from which one would drink water, whether it belongs to oneself or to others. If one's hand is partially soiled, it says, it is all right to pick up a water vessel with the unsoiled part.

The Vibhanga says that if one's hand is soiled, one may take the water vessel with the thought that, "I will wash it or get it washed," although this allowance might be qualified with the consideration that one should make sure it gets washed before someone else uses it.

56.I will not, in an inhabited area, throw away bowl-rinsing water which has grains of rice in it: a training to be observed.

The custom in those times, when bhikkhus were invited to eat at a lay person's home, was for the donor to offer water to the bhikkhus to rinse out their bowls before the meal and again at the end. In both cases, each bhikkhu was to hold his bowl in both hands, receive the water into the bowl, swish it around without scraping it (against the ground or floor), and pour it into a receptacle if there was one--or on the ground if not--taking care not to splash any nearby people or one's own robes. (Cv.VIII.4-6)

This rule applies to the after-meal rinsing. The Vibhanga says that there is no offense in throwing away bowl rinsing water if the rice grains are removed, if they are squashed so as to dissolve in the water, or if the water is poured into a receptacle and later thrown outside. ()

***

In addition to the above rules, the duties observed on alms round and in eating at a lay person's home include the following points of etiquette:

While on alms round. One should go unhurriedly, and stand neither too close to nor too far from the donor. (Cv.VIII.5.2)

While eating in a home. One should select a seat which does not encroach on the senior bhikkhus' spaces, but which also does not deprive the junior bhikkhus of a place to sit. (Cv.VIII.4.3)

If there are any special foods, the most senior bhikkhu should tell the donor to make sure that everyone gets equal portions. He should also not begin eating until everyone is served, nor should he accept water for rinsing his bowl until everyone is finished eating. (Cv.VIII.4.5)

***

The Vinaya Mukha notes that some of the rules and allowances in this section outline "table manners" which would be regarded either as excessively fussy or as messy and impolite by polite modern standards. Thus wherever ancient and modern codes of etiquette are at variance, the wise policy would be to adhere to whichever code is more stringent on that particular point.

Three: The 16 Dealing with Teaching Dhamma

The Canon records that the Buddha himself had the highest respect for the Dhamma he had discovered; that, as others might live under the guidance of a teacher, honoring and revering him, the Buddha lived under the Dhamma, honoring and revering it. He enjoined his followers to show the same respect for the Dhamma not only when listening to it, but also when teaching it, by refusing to teach it to a person who shows disrespect.

The following set of rules deals with situations in which a listener, in terms of the etiquette at that time, would be regarded as showing disrespect for a teacher or his teaching. As the Vinaya Mukha notes, a few of these cases--such as those concerning footwear--are not considered disrespectful under certain circumstances at present, although here the exceptions given for listeners who are "ill" might be stretched to cover any situation where the listener would feel inconvenienced or awkward if asked to comply with the etiquette of the Buddha's time. On the other hand, there are many ways of show-ing disrespect at present which are not covered by these rules, and an argument could be made, reasoning from the Great Standards, that a bhikkhu should not teach Dhamma to a person who showed disrespect in any way.

Dhamma here is defined as any statement spoken by the Buddha, his disciples, seers or devatas connected with the teaching or with its goal. See Pacittiya 7 for a more detailed discussion of this point.

57.I will not teach Dhamma to a person with an umbrella in his hand and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

An umbrella or sunshade, at that time, was considered a sign of rank.

According to the Commentary, this rule applies regardless of whether the umbrella is open or closed, and as long as one's listeners has his/her hand on it. If, however, the umbrella is on the listener's lap, resting against his/her shoulder, or if someone else is holding it over the listener's head, there is no offense in teaching him/her any Dhamma.

58.I will not teach Dhamma to a person with a staff in his hand and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

According to the Vibhanga, a staff is a pole two meters long. For some reason, any pole shorter or longer than that would not come under this rule.

59.I will not teach Dhamma to a person with a knife in his hand and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

The term knife here includes anything with a blade. According to the Commentary, if the knife is not in the listener's hand--e.g., it is in a sheath attached to the belt--there is no penalty in teaching him/her the Dhamma.

60.I will not teach Dhamma to a person with a weapon in his hand and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

The Vibhanga defines weapon as a bow, and the Commentary includes arrows here as well. The Vinaya Mukha adds guns; and in fact any weapon which does not have a blade would seem to fall under this rule.

Again, if the weapon is not in the listener's hand--e.g., it is in a holster attached to the belt--there is no penalty in teaching him/her the Dhamma.

61.[62] I will not teach Dhamma to a person wearing leather [non-leather] footwear who is not ill: a training to be observed.

The Pali terms for leather and non-leather footwear--paduka and upahana--cover all forms of shoes, sandals and boots. (See Mv.V.1.30-8.3)

Wearing means one of three things: placing one's feet on top of the footwear without inserting the toes; inserting the toes, without fastening the footwear; or fastening the footwear with the toes inside.

63. I will not teach Dhamma to a person in a vehicle and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

The Commentary makes the point that if the vehicle is large enough to seat two or more, then the bhikkhu may sit together with his listener and teach Dhamma without penalty. The same holds true if the bhikkhu and his listener are in separate vehicles, as long as the bhikkhu's vehicle is the same height or higher than his listener's, and is not following along behind it.

64. I will not teach Dhamma to a person lying down who is not ill: a training to be observed.

The Commentary goes into great detail on this rule, listing the various permutations of the bhikkhu's position and his listener's, and saying which ones are allowable and which ones not:

A bhikkhu lying down may teach any listener who is standing or sitting down. He may also teach a listener lying down on a piece of furniture, a mat or on the ground, as long as the bhikkhu's position is on an equal level or higher than his listener's.

A bhikkhu sitting down may teach a listener who is standing or sitting down (see also Sekhiyas 68 & 69), but not one who is lying down, unless the listener is ill.

A bhikkhu standing may teach a listener who is also standing, but not one who is sitting or lying down, again unless the listener is ill (see Sekhiya 70).

65. I will not teach Dhamma to a person who sits holding up his knees and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

As under Sekhiya 26, the position of holding up the knees here includes hugging the knees with the arms, or tying them in a similar position with a strap or a piece of cloth.

66. I will not teach Dhamma to a person wearing headgear who is not ill: a training to be observed.

This rule applies only to headgear--such as turbans or hats--which hide all of the hair. If the hat/turban does not hide all of the hair, or if the listener adjusts it so as to expose some hair, it would not come under this rule.

67. I will not teach Dhamma to a person whose head is covered (with a robe or scarf) and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

There is no offense in teaching if the listener adjusts the robe or scarf to uncover his/her head.

68.Sitting on the ground, I will not teach Dhamma to a person sitting on a seat who is not ill: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, a seat here includes even a piece of cloth or a pile of grass.

69.Sitting on a low seat, I will not teach Dhamma to a person sitting on a high seat who is not ill: a training to be observed.

The Commentary states that this rule also covers cases where the bhikkhu and his listener are both sitting on the ground, but the listener is sitting on a higher piece of ground than the bhikkhu.

70.Standing, I will not teach Dhamma to a person sitting who is not ill: a training to be observed.

71.Walking behind, I will not teach Dhamma to a person walking ahead who is not ill: a training to be observed.

There is no offense, the Commentary says, if the bhikkhu and his listener are walking side by side; or if two bhikkhus are walking along, one in front of the other, and they practice reciting a passage of Dhamma together.

72.Walking beside a path, I will not teach Dhamma to a person walking on the path and who is not ill: a training to be observed.

Four: The 3 Miscellaneous Rules

73.Not being ill, I will not defecate or urinate while standing: a training to be observed.

Arguing from the Commentary's allowance under the following rule, it would seem that a bhikkhu who needs to urinate, finds himself in a public restroom, and can no longer hold himself in while waiting for a toilet, would qualify as "ill" here and so would be able to use a urinal without penalty.

74.Not being ill, I will not defecate, urinate or spit on living crops: a training to be observed.

The Vinaya Mukha says that crops here includes all plants that are tended--such as in gardens, farms or lawns--but not plants growing wild. The Commentary includes roots of living trees which appear above ground, in addition to green plants running along on top of the ground. It also quotes the MahaPaccari, one of the ancient commen-taries on which it is based, as including blowing the nose under the term spitting in this rule and the next.

According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense using plants to cover up feces, urine or saliva; and the Commentary states that a bhikkhu looking for a place without crops to do his business, can't find one and is unable to hold himself in any longer, would qualify as "ill" under this rule.

75.Not being ill, I will not defecate, urinate or spit in water: a training to be observed.

According to the Commentary, water here includes water fit for drinking or bathing, but not water unfit for such use--e.g., salt water, stagnant water--or water in a toilet. If there is a flood with no dry ground available, then there is no offense in relieving oneself in the water.

As under the preceding rule, the Vibhanga says that there is no offense using water to cover up or to wash feces, urine or saliva away.

***

The Cullavagga (VIII.10) contains a series of rules concerning etiquette in using a restroom. Among them:

--The restroom should be used in order of arrival, rather than in order of seniority. ("Now at that time, bhikkhus used the restroom in order of seniority. Newly-ordained bhikkhus, having arrived first in dire need to go, had to wait and keeled over stiff from holding themselves in.")

--One should not go bursting into the restroom. (According to the Vinaya Mukha, this means not only that one should not go rushing in, but also that one should not go in with one's lower robe open or pulled up.) Before entering, one should cough or clear one's throat; if a bhikkhu is inside, he should cough or clear his throat in answer.

--One's robes should be hung up on a line or rod before entering. This, according to the Vinaya Mukha, refers to one's upper and outer robe.

--One should not make grunting noises while relieving oneself.

--If the toilet or restroom is dirty, one should clean it for the next person.

--One should not go bursting out of the restroom when finished--again, taking care not to have one's lower robe pulled up or open.

Cv. VIII.9 adds that after one has defecated--inside a restroom or not--one should always rinse oneself if water is available.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Adhikarana-Samatha

This term means, "the settlement of issues." The seven rules in this section are actually principles and procedures for settling the four sorts of issues mentioned under Pacittiya 63: disputes, accusations, offenses and duties. The Canon's explanations of these procedures are given not in the Vibhanga, but in Cullavagga IV, which starts with a sketch of the procedures, followed by a detailed explanation of how to apply them to each of the four types of issues. We will follow the same presentation here.

For the settling, the resolution of issues which arise:

1. A verdict "in the presence of" should be given. This means that the formal act settling the issue must be carried out in the presence of the Sangha, in the presence of the individuals, and in the presence of the Dhamma and Vinaya.

In the presence of the Sangha means that the group of bhikkhus which has gathered is competent to carry out the formal act under question.

In other words, it contains the minimum number of bhikkhus required, all the bhikkhus in the designated area (sima) either are present or have sent their consent, and none of the bhikkhus in the meeting makes protest against having the matter settled by the group--although as we noticed under Pacittiya 80, if a formal act is being carried out against a bhikkhu, his protest does not invalidate the act; any protest made by any other member of the group though, would invalidate it, even if he only informs the bhikkhu sitting next to him. (Mv.IX.4.8)

In the presence of the individuals means that all the individuals involved in the matter are present. For instance, in a dispute, both sides of the dispute must be in the meeting; when the Sangha is carrying out a formal act against one of its members, the accused must be there; in an ordination, the bhikkhu-to-be must be present. There are a few cases where this factor is not followed--such as the ordination of a bhikkhuni by messenger, and the act of turning the bowl upside down (refusing to accept donations from a lay person who has mistreated the Sangha)--but these are rare.

In the presence of the Dhamma and Vinaya means that all the proper procedures laid down in the Vinaya are followed, and that bhikkhus who advocate what is not truly Dhamma or Vinaya are not holding sway over the group.

2. A verdict of mindfulness may be given. This is the verdict of innocence given in an accusation, based on the fact that the accused remembers fully that he did not commit the offense in question.

A verdict of this sort is valid only if:

1) The bhikkhu is pure and without offense;

2) He is accused of an offense.

3) He asks for the verdict.

4) The Sangha gives him the verdict.

5) It is in accordance with the Dhamma, the assembly of bhikkhus being complete and competent to give it. (Cv.IV.4.11)

According to the Commentary, factor (1) here--the bhikkhu is pure and without offense--applies only to arahants, but the Canon makes no mention of this point. There are other places in the Khandhakas where the phrase "pure and without offense" is used to refer to any bhikkhu who has not committed the offense of which he is accused (e.g., Mv.IX.1.7; Mv.IX.4.9), with nothing to indicate that he would have to be an arahant. If the Commentary's interpretation were correct here, there would be no way that a bhikkhu in his right mind who is not an arahant could be declared innocent of an offense at all, since the only three verdicts which may settle an accusation are this one, the verdict of past insanity (for a bhikkhu who was insane when he committed the offense in question), and the act of (punishment for) further misconduct, for a bhikkhu who committed the offense in question when he was in his right mind. The fourth rule below--acting in accordance with what is admitted--which is sometimes assumed to cover cases of innocence, actually applies only to cases where the bhikkhu admits to having committed an offense before the matter goes to interrogation, and not to cases where he is innocent and asserts his innocence.

Thus we will follow the general usage in the Khandhakas and say that the factor "pure and without offense" is fulfilled by any bhikkhu--arahant or not--who has not committed the offense in question.

3. A verdict of past insanity may be given. This is another verdict of innocence given in an accusation, based on the fact that the accused was out of his mind when he committed the offense in question, and so is absolved of any responsibility for it.

Such a verdict is valid only if given to a bhikkhu who:

1) Does not remember what he did while insane;

2) Remembers, but only as if in a dream; or

3) Is still insane enough to believe that his behavior is proper. ("I act that way and so do you. It is allowable for me and allowable for you!") (Cv.IV.6.2)

4.Acting in accordance with what is admitted. This refers to the ordinary confession of offenses, where no formal interrogation is involved. The confession is valid only if in accord with the facts: For instance, a bhikkhu actually commits a pacittiya offense and then confesses it as such, and not as a stronger or lesser offense. If he were to confess it as a dukkata or a sanghadisesa, that would be invalid.

5. Acting in accordance with the majority. This refers to cases in which bhikkhus are unable to settle a dispute unanimously, even after all the proper procedures are followed, and--in the words of the Canon--are "wounding one another with weapons of the tongue." In cases such as these, decisions can be made by majority vote.

Such a vote is valid only--

1) If the issue is major.

2) If the proper procedures have already been followed (in at least two or three monasteries, says the Commentary) and have failed to achieve a result.

3) If those on the side of the Dhamma are in the majority and are perceived to be in the majority.

4) If it is felt that such an act will not divide the Community.

5) If the Community present is competent to settle the issue.

6) If all the bhikkhus present agree to take a vote.

7) If there is no cheating (e.g., one bhikkhu taking two voting tickets); and

8) If each bhikkhu honestly votes in accordance with his views, and not, for example, under fear of intimidation. (Cv.IV.10)

6. Acting in accordance with the accused's further misconduct. This refers to cases where a bhikkhu admits to having committed the offense in question only after being formally interrogated about it. He is then to be reproved for his actions, made to remember the offense and to confess it, after which the Community carries out a formal act of "further misconduct" against him, as a means of further punishment for his being so uncooperative as to require the formal interrogation in the first place.

The Cullavagga (IV.11.2-12.2) contains three separate discussions of the conditions that are necessary for the act to be valid. Since the discussions overlap, they can be summarized as follows:

The act is essentially the same thing as an act of censure, and as such can be given to a bhikkhu who--

1) is a maker of strife, quarrels and dissension in the Community;

2) is ignorant, full of offenses and has not undergone the penalty for them; or

3) lives in unbecoming association with lay people.

What makes this act special is that it is aimed primarily at a bhikkhu who has committed an offense which requires confession, but he does not confess it until being formally interrogated. This is shown by the following factors which are required for the act to be valid:

1) The accused is impure (i.e., he actually did commit the offense, and it is an offense which requires confession).

2) He is unconscientious (i.e., he didn't voluntarily confess the offense on his own in the first place).

3) A formal meeting has been called in which he is present and has been interrogated: reproved for his actions, made to remember the offense, and formally accused of having committed it. (The Commen-tary translates this word--sanuvada--as meaning argumentative--saupavada--which also fits the context. If the bhikkhu has been accused of the offense but at first denies it, that would fulfill this factor.)

4) He finally admits to having committed the offense and confesses it.

5) The Community carries out the act

6) in accordance with the Dhamma and Vinaya, and with a complete assembly.

Once such an act has been carried out against a bhikkhu, he must observe the following rules:

1) He may not act as preceptor or teacher for another bhikkhu, nor is he to have a novice attend to him.

2) He may not assent to being authorized to exhort bhikkhunis; and even if authorized, he is not to exhort them.

3) He should not commit the offense for which he is being punished, a similar offense or a worse one.

4) He should not find fault with the formal act or with those who carried it out.

5) He should not accuse others of offenses, or participate actively in any of the procedures involved in a formal accusation--e.g., sus-pending another bhikkhu's right to join in the Patimokkha recitation, ask leave to accuse, reprove, make remember, etc.

6) He should not quarrel with bhikkhus. (Cv.IV.12.4)

If he abides by all these rules, and the community is satisfied that he has seen the error of his ways, they are to rescind the act and restore him to his former status as a full-fledged bhikkhu.

7.Covering over as with grass. This refers to situations in which both sides of a dispute realize that, in the course of their dispute, they have done much that is unworthy of a contem-plative. If they were to deal with one another for their offenses, the only result would be greater divisiveness. Thus if both sides agree, all the bhikkhus gather in one place. (According to the Commentary, this means that all bhikkhus in the sima must attend. No one should send his consent, and even sick bhikkhus must go.) A motion is made to the entire group that this procedure will be followed. One member of each side then makes a formal motion to the members of his faction that he will make a confession for them. When both sides are ready, the representative of each side addresses the entire group and makes the blanket confession, using the form of a motion and one announcement (natti-dutiya-kamma).

This clears all offenses except for--

1) Any heavy offense (parajika and sanghadisesa, says the Commentary) committed by anyone in the group;

2) Any offenses dealing with the laity;

3) Any offenses of any member of either side who does not approve of the procedure;

4) Any offenses of any bhikkhu who does not attend the meeting. (This is the reason for the Commentary's statement that even sick bhikkhus must attend.)

Point (3) here is interesting. If any member of either side were to dissent, that would invalidate the whole procedure. This point is thus probably added as a reminder to any bhikkhu who might be vindictive enough to want to deal with his enemies case-by-case, that his offenses will also have to be dealt with case-by-case. This might be enough to discourage him from dissenting.

The Commentary explains the name of this procedure by compar-ing the offenses cleared in this way to excrement which has been so thoroughly covered with grass that it can no longer send an oppressive smell.

***

According to the Cullavagga, the principle of "in the presence of" applies to all four types of issues: disputes, accusations, offenses and duties. In addition, disputes may be settled "in accordance with the majority"; accusations must be settled either by a verdict of mindfulness, a verdict of past insanity or an act "in accordance with further misconduct"; and offenses may be settled by acting in accordance with what is admitted or by covering them over as with grass.

What follows it a more detailed discussion of how these principles and procedures apply in each of the four cases:

Disputes are heated disagreements over what the Buddha did and did not teach, or in the words of the Cullavagga, "when bhikkhus dispute, saying:

'It is Dhamma,' or 'It is not Dhamma;'

'It is Vinaya,' or 'It is not Vinaya;'

'It was spoken by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not spoken by the Tathagata;'

'It was regularly practiced by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not regularly practiced by the Tathagata;'

'It was formulated by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not formulated by the Tathagata;'

'It is an offense,' or 'It is not an offense;'

'It is a light offense,' or 'It is a heavy offense;'

'It is a curable offense,' or 'It is an incurable offense;'

'It is a serious offense,' or 'It is not a serious offense.'

Whatever strife, quarreling, contention, dispute, differing opinions, opposing opinions, heated words, abusiveness based on this, is an issue arising from disputes." (Cv.IV.14.2)

Thus not all disagreements on these matters are classed as issues. Friendly disagreements or differences of interpretation aren't; heated and abusive disagreements are.

The Buddha advises that a bhikkhu who wants to bring up such questions for discussion should first consider five points: 1) whether or not it is the right time for such a discussion; 2) whether of not it concerns something true; 3) whether or not it is connected with the goal; 4) whether or not he will be able to get on his side bhikkhus who value the Dhamma and Vinaya; and 5) whether or not the question will give rise to strife, quarreling, disputes, cracks and splits in the community. If the answer to the first four questions is yes, and to the fifth question no (i.e., the discussion is not likely to lead to strife), he may then go ahead and start the discussion. Otherwise, he should let the matter rest for the time being. (Cv.IX.4)

The Cullavagga quotes the Buddha as saying that there are two sorts of mental states which can turn disputes into issues: wholesome and unwholesome. The unwholesome states he lists are covetous, corrupt or confused states of mind; the wholesome ones are states of mind which are not covetous, not corrupt and not confused. He adds, however, that there are six character traits which can lead to issues arising from disputes which will act towards the detriment of many people. They are when a bhikkhu:

is easily angered and bears ill will,

is mean and spiteful,

is jealous and possessive,

is scheming and deceitful,

has evil desires and wrong views,

is attached to his own views, obstinate, unable to let them go.

Such a bhikkhu, he says, lives without deference or respect for the Buddha, the Dhamma, the Sangha, and does not complete the training. If one should see any of these traits within oneself or others, one should strive for their abandonment. If there are no such traits present, one should make sure that they don't arise in the future. (Cv.IV.14.3)

As noted under Sanghadisesa 10, there are two sorts of disputes: those in which one of the parties is aiming at schism, and those in which neither is. Disputes of the first sort are to be dealt with in line with the procedures listed under Sanghadisesas 10 & 11; those of the second sort are to be settled as follows:

In the presence of--Step 1: a) The Community meets, with at least four bhikkhus--the minimum to form a quorum--present. All of the bhikkhus in the sima are either present or have sent their consent, and none of the bhikkhus present protests against having the matter settled by the group.

b) Both sides of the dispute are present.

c) The meeting is carried out in accordance with the procedures the Buddha laid down, and the unanimous decision of the Commu-nity is in line with what the Buddha actually laid down. This point is important: It means that no Community--even if it follows the proper form for the meeting--can legitimately replace the Buddha's teachings with its own preferences on any point.

If the Community can settle the manner in this way, it is properly settled and should not be reopened.

Step 2: If the Community cannot settle the matter, they should go to a monastery where there are more bhikkhus, and ask them to help settle the matter. If it so happens that the group is able to settle the matter among themselves on the way to the other monastery, then it is properly settled, and they may return home to their own monastery.

Step 3: If the matter is still unsettled by the time they reach the second monastery, they should ask the resident bhikkhus there to help settle the matter. The resident bhikkhus should then meet and consider among themselves whether or not they are competent to settle the matter. If they feel that they aren't, they shouldn't take it on. If they feel that they are, they should then ask the incoming bhikkhus how the dispute arose. (The Commentary here adds that the residents should first stall for two or three days--saying that they have to wash their robes or fire their bowls first--as a way of subduing the pride of the incoming bhikkhus.)

Once the resident bhikkhus have asked the history of the dispute, the incoming bhikkhus are to say that if the resident bhikkhus can settle the dispute, they (the incoming bhikkhus) will hand it over to them; if they can't settle it, the incoming bhikkhus will still be in charge of the matter.

If the resident bhikkhus can then settle the dispute, it is properly settled.

Step 4: If they can't settle it in this way--and, in the words of the Canon, "endless disputes arise and there is no discerning the meaning of a single statement"--the disputants should, with a motion and announcement, hand the matter over to a panel of experts. The Commentary recommends a panel of ten. To qualify as a member of the panel, a bhikkhu must have the following qualifications:

1) He is moral, abiding scrupulously by the rules of the Vinaya.

2) He is learned in all things dealing with the holy life.

3) He has memorized both Patimokkhas in detail.

4) He is firm in his knowledge of the Vinaya, and not easily led off-track.

5) He is skilled at reconciling both sides of a dispute.

6) He is skilled at settling an issue.

7) He knows what constitutes an issue.

8) He knows how an issue arises (i.e., through wholesome, unwholesome or neutral states of mind).

9) He knows when an issue is stopped.

10) He knows the way leading to the stopping of an issue. (Notice that these last four qualifications parallel knowledge of the four Noble Truths.)

The Commentary notes that while the panel is discussing the issue, none of the other bhikkhus is to speak. If the panel can settle the issue, it is properly settled, and should not be reopened.

Step 5: If the panel has trouble in settling the issue, and there are any members of the panel who "hide the Dhamma under the shadow of the letter"--i.e., use the letter of the rules to go against the spirit--they may be removed from the panel through a formal motion. If the panel can then settle the issue, it is properly settled.

If not--and by this time, the Commentary says, at least two or three monasteries have become involved--the simple procedure of "in the presence of" has been exhausted, and the dispute must go on to a settlement "in accordance with the majority."

In accordance with the majority: A decision by majority vote is valid only when the following factors are present:

1) The issue is important.

2) The procedures of "in the presence of" have all been followed, but have not succeeded in settling the issue.

3) Both sides have been made to reflect on their position.

4) The distributor of voting tickets knows that the majority is on the side of the Dhamma, or

5) that the majority is probably on the side of the Dhamma.

6) The distributor of voting tickets knows that the procedure will not lead to a split in the Sangha, or

7) that the procedure will probably not lead to a split in the Sangha.

8) The tickets are taken in accordance with the rule (e.g., only one ticket per bhikkhu, and the Dhamma side wins).

9) The assembly is complete; and

10) The bhikkhus take the tickets in accordance with their views (and not, e.g.,, under fear of coercion).

When these factors are all present, the group should first ask one of its members to act as a distributor of voting tickets. He should be free of the four kinds of prejudice, and know what does and does not constitute the taking of a voting ticket. Before accepting the role, he should reflect on whether or not the ten qualifying factors are truly present, and should accept only when they are. Once he accepts the role, he is to be authorized by means of a formal motion and announcement.

He is then to have voting tickets made--a different color for each side--and conduct the ballot in one of three ways: secretly, by whispering in the ear or openly.

In secret balloting, he is to tell each bhikkhu, "This color is for this side and that color for that. Take one, but don't show it to anyone." According to the Commentary, this method is to be used when there are many unconscientious bhikkhus in the assembly.

In "whispering in the ear" balloting, he is to whisper to each bhikkhu, "This color is for this side and that color for that. Take one, but don't tell anyone." This method, the Commentary says, is for assemblies in which there are many foolish or trouble-making bhikkhus.

In open balloting, the bhikkhus are to take the voting tickets openly. This method is for assemblies where the distributor is certain that the conscientious bhikkhus are in the majority.

Once the vote is taken, the distributor is to assess the result before announcing it. If he sees that the non-Dhamma side has won, he is to annul the balloting, and take the vote all over again. According to the Commentary, he may take the vote up to three times. If the anti-Dhamma side is still in the majority, he should announce that the time is not right for a vote, adjourn the meeting, and try to find more bhikkhus on the side of the Dhamma to join the next meeting.

These procedures make two interesting assumptions: One side of the dispute is clearly in the right, and the distributor must belong to the right side. If he belongs to the wrong side, the whole balloting is invalid, and the issue may later be reopened without penalty. If neither side is clearly in the right, the composers of the Cullavagga would probably consider the issue unimportant and not worthy of a vote in the first place. If this is true, then even if a vote is taken, it would not be a valid use of the procedure, and the results would not be binding.

In all of these steps for settling disputes, the important point to remember is that in no way is a group of bhikkhus to rewrite the Dhamma or Vinaya in line with their views. Even if they attempt it, following the procedures to the letter, the fact that their decision goes against the Buddha's teachings invalidates their efforts, and the issue may be reopened at any time without penalty.

***

Accusations. When a bhikkhu has committed an offense, it is his responsibility to undergo the penalty voluntarily so as to make amends for it. If his fellow bhikkhus see, hear or suspect that he has committed an offense without undergoing the penalty, it is their duty to question and admonish him in private, in accordance with the procedures discussed under Sanghadisesa 8. The issue may be settled informally in one of two ways: (1) The accused admits to the act, sees it as an offense and undergoes the penalty; or (2) he is truly innocent, professes his innocence, and can convince his admonishers that their suspicions were ungrounded. If both sides act in good faith and without prejudice, issues of this sort are relatively easy to settle informally in this way.

If they can't be settled, they should be taken to a meeting of the Sangha so that the Community as a whole can make an interrogation and give its verdict.

When the Community meets, both the accused and the accuser must be present, and both must agree to the case's being heard by that particular group. (If the original accuser is a lay person, one of the bhikkhus is to take up the charge.) The accused is then to be asked if he remembers having committed the offense in question, and is to be dealt with in accordance with what he admits to having done (Mv.IX.6.1-4). The Cullavagga (IV.14.29) shows that the other bhikkhus are not to take his first statement at face value. They should press and cross-examine him until they are all satisfied that he is telling the truth, and only then may they pass one of three verdicts:

If he is innocent of the offense, and he can convince the group of his innocence, he is to request a verdict of mindfulness--expressing the request three times--and the Community is to give it to him by means of a formal motion with three announcements.

If he committed the offense while insane or possessed, he should request a verdict of past insanity--again, expressing the request three times--and the Community is to give it to him by means of a formal motion with three announcements.

If he did commit the offense, but admits to it only after the interrogation has begun, the other bhikkhus are to make him confess the offense, and then give him a verdict of further misconduct by means of a formal motion with three announcements.

As we noted above, each of these three verdicts is valid only if in line with the truth. If it so happens that a guilty bhikkhu is given a verdict of mindfulness, a bhikkhu who committed the offense in question while he was in his right mind is given a verdict of past insanity, or an innocent bhikkhu is given a verdict of further mis-conduct, the case may be reopened when new evidence surfaces, and the verdict rescinded or reversed.

There are, however, two types of cases in which none of these three verdicts applies, and the accusation--at least for the time being--cannot be considered settled:

(1) If a bhikkhu, in the course of an interrogation, admits to an action which is an offense, but either refuses to see it as an offense or refuses to confess it, he is subject to an act of banishment. Though this too may later be rescinded on the basis of good behavior--when he admits that his action was an offense and confesses it--it is a much stronger penalty than the act for further misconduct.

(2) If a bhikkhu denies having committed the act in question, and the bhikkhus are not convinced of his innocence, there are various ways to pressure him to tell the truth: The Cullavagga suggests intensive interrogation; the Commentary, long bouts of group chanting. If neither works, and the Community still has doubts about his inno-cence, the issue is to be abandoned for the time being as unsettled: The accused is neither to be punished nor declared innocent. As long as the issue remains unsettled, though, there will be no peace of mind either for the accused or for the Community as a whole.

***

Offenses. All offenses are settled by means of the principle of in the presence of. Most are also settled by means of the procedure of in accordance with what is admitted. Rare cases may be settled by covering over as with grass.

In accordance with what is admitted: When a bhikkhu has committed an offense requiring confession, and then confesses it truthfully in the presence of another bhikkhu, group of bhikkhus or complete Community, that is called settlement in accordance with what is admitted. It also counts as having been settled in the presence of the Dhamma and Vinaya and the individuals--i.e., the bhikkhu making the confession and the bhikkhu(s) witnessing it are face to face.

If a bhikkhu has committed a sanghadisesa offense, it is settled only after he has confessed it and undergone penance and probation, both of which require further confessions. Only then, when a Community of at least 20 bhikkhus have met to lift the penalty from him, is the offense considered settled. Here, in the presence of would include not only the Dhamma, Vinaya and individuals, but also the Community--when it imposes the penance and/or probation, and again when it lifts the penalty.

If a bhikkhu has committed a parajika offense, it is settled only when he admits that he is no longer a bhikkhu and returns to lay life. Here, in the presence of would have the same factors as under confessable offenses, above.

Covering over as with grass: This procedure has already been discussed in detail above, and there is no need to add any further details here. In the presence of, here, means in the presence of the Dhamma, Vinaya, individuals and the Community: In the presence of the individuals means that those who make the blanket confession and those who witness it are face to face. In the presence of the Community means that enough bhikkhus for a quorum (four) have arrived, the assembly is complete (all the bhikkhus in the sima have either joined the meeting or have sent their consent) and none of the bhikkhus, having met, makes any protest.

***

Duties are settled in the presence of--

(1) when they are properly carried out in line with the procedures set out in the Dhamma and Vinaya,

(2) if the relevant individuals are present (e.g., the ordinand in an ordination, the bhikkhu-to-be-banished in a formal act of banishment, etc.), and

(3) the Community that has met to carry them out forms a quorum and a complete assembly, with none of those present--except the bhikkhu against whom a formal act is to be carried out, if such is the case--makes any protest.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

Adhikarana-Samatha

This term means, "the settlement of issues." The seven rules in this section are actually principles and procedures for settling the four sorts of issues mentioned under Pacittiya 63: disputes, accusations, offenses and duties. The Canon's explanations of these procedures are given not in the Vibhanga, but in Cullavagga IV, which starts with a sketch of the procedures, followed by a detailed explanation of how they are applied to each of the four types of issues in practice. We will follow the same presentation here.

For the settling, the resolution of issues which arise:

1. A verdict "in the presence of" should be given. This means that the formal act settling the issue must be carried out the presence of the Sangha, in the presence of the individuals, and in the presence of the Dhamma and Vinaya.

In the presence of the Sangha means that the group of bhikkhus which has gathered is competent to carry out the formal act under question. In other words, it contains the minimum number of bhikkhus required, all the bhikkhus in the designated area (sima) either are present or have sent their consent, and none of the bhikkhus in the meeting makes protest against having the matter settled by the group--although as we noticed under Pacittiya 80, if a formal act is being carried out against a bhikkhu, his protest does not invalidate the act; any protest made by any other member of the group though, would invalidate it, even if he only informs the bhikkhu sitting next to him. (Mv.IX.4.8)

In the presence of the individuals means that all the individuals involved in the matter are present. For instance, in a dispute, both sides of the dispute must be in the meeting; when the Sangha is carrying out a formal act against one of its members, the accused must be present; in an ordination, the bhikkhu-to-be must be there. There are a few cases where this factor is not followed--such as the ordination of a bhikkhuni by messenger, and the act of turning the bowl upside down (refusing to accept donations from a layperson who has mistreated the Sangha)--but these are rare.

In the presence of the Dhamma and Vinaya means that all the proper procedures laid down in the Vinaya are followed, and that bhikkhus who speak what is not truly Dhamma are not holding sway over the group.

2. A verdict of mindfulness may be given. This is the verdict of innocence given in an accusation based on the fact that the accused remembers fully that he did not commit the offense in question.

A verdict of this sort is valid only if:

1) The bhikkhu is pure and without offense;

2) He is accused of an offense.

3) He asks for the verdict.

4) The Sangha gives him the verdict.

5) It is in accordance with the Dhamma, the assembly of bhikkhus being complete and competent to give it. (Cv.IV.4.11)

According to the Commentary, factor (1) here--the bhikkhu is pure and without offense--applies only to arahants, but the Canon makes no mention of this point. There are other points in the Khandakas where the phrase "pure and without offense" is used to refer to any bhikkhu who has not committed the offense of which he is accused (e.g. Mv.IX.1.7; Mv.IX.4.9), with nothing to indicate that he would have to be an arahant. If the Commentary's interpretation were correct here, there would be no way that a bhikkhu in his right mind who is not an arahant could be declared innocent of an offense at all, since the only three verdicts which may settle an accusation are this one, the verdict of past insanity, and the act of (punishment for) further misconduct, for a bhikkhu who is actually guilty as accused. The fourth rule below--acting in accordance with what is admitted--which is sometimes assumed to cover cases of innocence, actually applies only to cases where the bhikkhu admits to having committed an offense before the matter goes to interrogation, and not to cases where he is innocent and asserts his innocence.

Thus we will follow the general usage in the Khandakas and say that the factor "pure and without offense" is fulfilled by any bhikkhu--arahant or not--who has not committed the offense in question.

3. A verdict of past insanity may be given. This is another verdict of innocence given in an accusation, based on the fact that the accused was out of his mind when he committed the offense in question, and so is absolved of any responsibility for it.

Such a verdict is valid only if given to a bhikkhu who:

1) Does not remember what he did while insane;

2) Remembers, but only as if in a dream; or

3) Is still insane enough to believe that his behavior is proper. ("I act that way and so do you. It is allowable for me and allowable for you!") (Cv.IV.6.2)

4.Acting in accordance with what is admitted. This refers to the ordinary confession of offenses, where no formal interrogation is involved. The confession is valid only if it is in accord with the facts: For instance, a bhikkhu actually commits a pacittiya offense and then confesses it as such, and not as a stronger or lesser offense. If he were to confess it as a dukkata or a sanghadisesa, that would be invalid.

5. Acting in accordance with the majority. This refers to cases in which bhikkhus are unable to settle a dispute unanimously, even after all the proper procedures are followed, and--in the words of the Canon--are "wounding one another with weapons of the tongue." In cases such as these, decisions can be made by majority vote.

Such a vote is valid only:

1) If the issue is major.

2) If the proper procedures have already been followed (in at least two or three monasteries, says the Commentary) and have failed to achieve a result.

3) If those on the side of the Dhamma are in the majority and are perceived to be in the majority.

4) If it is felt that such an act will not divide the Community.

5) If the Community present is competent to settle the issue.

6) If all the bhikkhus present agree to take a vote.

7) If there is no cheating (e.g. one bhikkhu taking two voting tickets); and

8) If each bhikkhu honestly votes in accordance with his views, and not, for example, under fear of intimidation. (Cv.IV.10)

6. Acting in accordance with the accused's further misconduct. This refers to cases where a bhikkhu admits to having committed the offense in question only after being formally interrogated about it. He is then to be reproved for his actions, made to remember the offense and to confess it, after which the Community carries out a formal act of "further misconduct" against him, as a means of further punishment for his being so uncooperative as to require the formal interrogation in the first place.

The Cullavagga (IV.11.2-12.2) contains three separate discussions of the conditions that are necessary for the act to be valid. Since the discussion overlap, they can be summarized as follows:

The act is essentially the same thing as an act of censure, and as such can be given to a bhikkhu who:

1) is a maker of strife, quarrels and dissension in the Community;

2) is ignorant,full of offenses and has not undergone the penalty for them; or

3) lives in unbecoming association with laypeople.

What makes this act special is that it is aimed primarily at a bhikkhu who has committed an offense which requires confession, but he does not confess it until being formally interrogated. This is shown by the following factors which are required for the act to be valid:

1) The accused is impure (i.e. he actually did commit the offense, and it is an offense which requires confession).

2) He is unconscientious (i.e. he didn't voluntarily confess the offense on his own in the first place).

3) A formal meeting has been called in which he is present and has been interrogated: reproved for his actions, made to remember the offense, and formally accused of having committed it. (The Commentary translates this word--sanuvada--as meaning argumentative--saupavada--which also fits the context. If the bhikkhu has been accused of the offense but at first denies it, that would fulfill this factor.)

4) He finally admits to having committed the offense and confesses it.

5) The Community carries out the act

6) in accordance with the Dhamma and Vinaya, and with a complete assembly.

Once such an act has been carried out against a bhikkhu, he must observe the following rules:

1) He may not act as preceptor or teacher for another bhikkhu, nor is he to have a novice attend to him.

2) He may not assent to being authorized to exhort bhikkhunis; and even if authorized, he is not to exhort them.

3) He should not commit the offense for which he is being punished, a similar offense or a worse one.

4) He should not find fault with the formal act or with those who carried it out.

5) He should not accuse others of offenses, or participate actively in any of the procedures involved in a formal accusation--e.g. suspending another bhikkhu's right to join in the Patimokkha recitation, ask leave to accuse, reprove, make remember, etc.

6) He should not quarrel with bhikkhus. (Cv.IV.12.4)

If he abides by all these rules, and the community is satisfied that he has seen the error of his ways, they are to rescind the act and restore him to his former status as a full-fledged bhikkhu.

7.Covering over as with grass. This refers to situations in which both sides of a dispute realize that, in the course of their dispute, they have done much which is not worthy of a contemplative. If they were to deal with one another for their offenses, the only result would be greater divisiveness. Thus if both sides agree, all the bhikkhus gather in one place. (According to the Commentary, this means that all bhikkhus in the sima must attend. No one should send his consent, and even sick bhikkhus must go.) A motion is made to the entire group that this procedure will be followed. One member of each side then makes a formal motion to the members of his faction that he will make a confession for them. When both sides are ready, the representative of each side addresses the entire group and makes the blanket confession, using the form of a motion and one announcement (natti-dutiya-kamma).

This clears all offenses except for:

1) Any heavy offense (parajika and sanghadisesa, says the Commentary) committed by anyone in the group;

2) Any offenses dealing with the laity;

3) Any offenses of any member of either side who does not approve of the procedure;

4) Any offenses of any bhikkhu who does not attend the meeting. (This is the reason for the Commentary's statement that even sick bhikkhus must attend.)

Point (3) here is interesting. If any member of either side were to dissent, that would invalidate the whole procedure. This point is thus probably added as a reminder to any bhikkhu who might be vindictive enough to want to deal with his enemies case-by-case, that his offenses will also have to be dealt with case-by-case. This might be enough to discourage him from dissenting.

The Commentary explains the name of this procedure by comparing the offenses cleared in this way to excrement which has been so thoroughly covered with grass that it can no longer send an oppressive smell.

***

According to the Cullavagga, the principle of "in the presence of" applies to all four types of issues: disputes, accusations, offenses and duties. In addition, disputes may be settled "in accordance with the majority; accusations must be settled either by a verdict of mindfulness, a verdict of past insanity or an act "in accordance with further misconduct;" and offenses may be settled by covering them over as with grass.

What follows it a more detailed discussion of how these principles and procedures are applied in each of the four cases:

Disputes are heated disagreements over what the Buddha did and did not teach, or in the words of the Cullavagga, "when bhikkhus dispute, saying:

'It is Dhamma,' or 'It is not Dhamma;'

'It is Vinaya,' or 'It is not Vinaya;'

'It was spoken by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not spoken by the Tathagata;'

'It was regularly practiced by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not regularly practiced by the Tathagata;'

'It was formulated by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not formulated by the Tathagata;'

'It is an offense,' or 'It is not an offense;'

'It is a light offense,' or 'It is a heavy offense;'

'It is a curable offense,' or 'It is an incurable offense;'

'It is a serious offense,' or 'It is not a serious offense.'

Whatever strife, quarreling, contention, dispute, differing opinions, opposing opinions, heated words, abusiveness based on this, is an issue arising from disputes." (Cv.IV.14.2)

Thus not all disagreements on these matters are classed as issues. Friendly disagreements or differences of interpretation aren't; heated and abusive disagreements are.

The Buddha advises that a bhikkhu who wants to bring up such questions for discussion should first consider five points: 1) whether or not it is the right time for such a discussion; 2) whether of not it concerns something true; 3) whether or not it is connected with the goal; 4) whether or not he will be able to get on his side bhikkhus who value the Dhamma and Vinaya; and 5) whether or not the question will give rise to strife, quarreling, disputes, cracks and splits in the community. If the answer to the first four questions is yes, and to the fifth question no (i.e. the discussion is not likely to lead to strife), he may then go ahead and start the discussion. Otherwise, he should let the matter rest for the time being. (Cv.IX.4)

The Cullavagga quotes the Buddha as saying that there are two sorts of mental states which can turn disputes into issues: wholesome and unwholesome. The unwholesome states he lists are covetous, corrupt or confused states of mind; the wholesome ones are states of mind which are not covetous, not corrupt and not confused. He adds, however, that there are six character traits which can lead to issues arising from disputes which will act towards the detriment of many people. They are when a bhikkhu:

is easily angered and bears ill will

is mean and spiteful,

is jealous and possessive,

is scheming and deceitful,

has evil desires and wrong views,

is attached to his own views, obstinate, unable to let them go.

Such a bhikkhu, he says, lives without deference or respect for the Buddha, the Dhamma, the Sangha, and does not complete the training. If one should see any of these traits within oneself or others, one should strive for their abandonment. If there are no such traits present, one should make sure that they don't arise in the future. (Cv.IV.14.3)

As noted under Sanghadisesa 10, there are two sorts of disputes: those in which one of the parties is aiming at schism, and those in which neither is. Disputes of the first sort are to be dealt with in line with the procedures listed under Sanghadisesas 10 & 11; those of the second sort are to be settled as follows:

In the presence of--Step 1: 1) The Community meets, with at least four bhikkhus--the minimum to form a quorum--present. All of the bhikkhus in the sima are either present or have sent their consent, and none of the bhikkhus present protests against having the matter settled by the group.

2) Both sides of the dispute are present.

3) The meeting is carried out in accordance with the procedures the Buddha laid down, and the unanimous decision of the Community is in line with what the Buddha actually laid down. This point is important: It means that no Community--even if it follows the proper form for the meeting--can legitimately replace the Buddha's teachings with their own preferences on any point.

If the Community can settle the manner in this way, it is properly settled and should not be reopened.

Step 2: If the Community cannot settle the matter, they should go to a monastery where there are more bhikkhus, and ask them to help settle the matter. If it so happens that the group is able to settle the matter among themselves while they are on the way to the other monastery, then it is properly settled, and they may return home to their own monastery.

Step 3: If the matter is still unsettled by the time they reach the second monastery, they should ask the resident bhikkhus there to help settle the matter. The resident bhikkhus should then meet and consider among themselves whether or not they are competent to settle the matter. If they feel that they aren't, they shouldn't take it on. If they feel that they are, they should then ask the incoming bhikkhus how the dispute arose. (The Commentary here adds that the residents should first stall for two or three days--saying that they have to wash their robes or fire their bowls first--as a way of subduing the pride of the incoming bhikkhus.)

Once the resident bhikkhus have asked the history of the dispute, the incoming bhikkhus are to say that if the resident bhikkhus can settle the dispute, they (the incoming bhikkhus) will hand it over to them; if they can't settle it, the incoming bhikkhus will still be in charge of the matter.

If the resident bhikkhus can then settle the dispute, it is properly settled.

Step 4: If they can't settle it in this way--and, in the words of the Canon, "endless disputes arise and there is no discerning the meaning of a single statement"--the disputants should, with a motion and announcement, hand the matter over to a panel of experts. The Commentary recommends a panel of ten. To qualify as a member of the panel, a bhikkhu must have the following qualifications:

1) He is moral, abiding scrupulously by the rules of the Vinaya.

2) He is learned in all things dealing with the holy life.

3) He has memorized both Patimokkhas in detail.

4) He is firm in his knowledge of the Vinaya, and not easily led off-track.

5) He is skilled at reconciling both sides of the dispute.

6) He is skilled at settling the issue.

7) He knows what constitutes an issue.

8) He knows how an issue arises (i.e. through wholesome, unwholesome or neutral states of mind).

9) He knows when an issue is stopped.

10) He knows the way leading to the stopping of an issue. (Notice that these last four qualifications parallel knowledge of the four Noble Truths.)

The Commentary notes that while the panel is discussing the issue, none of the other bhikkhus is to speak. If the panel can settle the issue, it is properly settled, and should not be reopened.

Step 5: If the panel has trouble in settling the issue, and there are any members of the panel who "hide the Dhamma under the shadow of the letter"--i.e. use the letter of the rules to go against the spirit--they may be removed from the panel through a formal motion. If the panel can then settle the issue, it is properly settled.

If not--and by this time, the Commentary says, at least two or three monasteries have become involved--the simple procedure of "in the presence of" has been exhausted, and the dispute must go on to a settlement "in accordance with the majority."

In accordance with the majority: A decision by majority vote is valid only when the following factors are present:

1) The issue is important.

2) The procedures of "in the presence of" have all been followed, but have not succeeded in settling the issue.

3) Both sides have been made to reflect of their position.

4) The distributor of voting tickets knows that the majority is on the side of the Dhamma or

5) that the majority is probably on the side of the Dhamma.

6) The distributor of voting tickets knows that the procedure will not lead to a split in the Sangha or

7) that the procedure will probably not lead to a split in the Sangha.

8) The tickets are taken in accordance with the rule (e.g. only one ticket per bhikkhu, and the Dhamma side wins).

9) The assembly is complete; and

10) The bhikkhus take the tickets in accordance with their views (and not, e.g., under fear of coercion).

When these factors are all present, the group should first ask one of its members to act as a distributor of voting tickets. He should be free of the four kinds of prejudice, and know what does and does not constitute the taking of a voting ticket. Before accepting the role, he should reflect on whether or not the ten qualifying factors are truly present, and should accept only when they are. Once he accepts the role, he is to be authorized by means of a formal motion and announcement.

He is then to have voting tickets made--a different color for each side--and conduct the ballot in one of three ways: secretly, by whispering in the ear or openly.

In secret balloting, he is to tell each bhikkhu, "This color is for this side and that color for that. Take one, but don't show it to anyone." According to the Commentary, this method is to be used when there are many unconscientious bhikkhus in the assembly.

In "whispering in the ear" balloting, he is to whisper to each bhikkhu, "This color is for this side and that color for that. Take one, but don't tell anyone." This method, the Commentary says, is for assemblies in which there are many foolish or trouble-making bhikkhus.

In open balloting, the bhikkhus are to take the voting tickets openly. This method is for assemblies where the distributor is certain that the conscientious bhikkhus are in the majority.

Once the vote is taken, the distributor is to assess the result before announcing it. If he sees that the non-Dhamma side has won, he is to annul the balloting, and take the vote all over again. According to the Commentary, he may take the vote up to three times. If the anti-Dhamma side is still in the majority, he should announce that the time is not right for a vote, adjourn the meeting, and try to find more bhikkhus on the side of the Dhamma to join the next meeting.

These procedures make two interesting assumptions: One side of the dispute is clearly in the right, and the distributor must belong to the right side. If he belongs to the wrong side, the whole balloting is invalid, and the issue may later be reopened without penalty. If neither side is clearly in the right, the composers of the Cullavagga would probably consider the issue unimportant and not worthy of a vote in the first place. If this is true, then even if a vote is taken, it would not be a valid use of the procedure, and the results would not be binding.

In all of these steps for settling disputes, the important point to remember is that in no way is a group of bhikkhus to rewrite the Dhamma or Vinaya in line with their views. Even if they attempt it, following the procedures to the letter, the fact that their decision goes against the Buddha's teachings invalidates their efforts, and the issue may be reopened at any time without penalty.

***

Accusations. When a bhikkhu has committed an offense, it is his responsibility to undergo the penalty voluntarily so as to make amends for it. If his fellow bhikkhus see, hear or suspect that he has committed an offense without undergoing the penalty, it is their duty to question and admonish him in private, in accordance with the procedures discussed under Sanghadisesa 8. The issue can be settled informally in one of two ways: (1) The accused admits to the act, sees it as an offense and undergoes the penalty; or (2) he is truly innocent, professes his innocence, and can convince his admonishers that their suspicions were ungrounded. If both sides are acting in good faith, and without prejudice, issues of this sort are relatively easy to settle informally in this way.

If they can't be settled, they should be taken to a meeting of the Sangha so that the Community as a whole can make an interrogation and give its verdict.

When the Community meets, both the accused and the accuser must be present, and both must agree to the case's being heard by that particular group. (If the original accuser is a layperson, one of the bhikkhus is to take up the charge.) The accused is then to be asked if he remembers having committed the offense in question, and is to be dealt with in accordance with what he admits to having done (Mv.IX.6.1-4). The Cullavagga (IV.14.29) shows that the other bhikkhus are not to take his first statement at face value. They should press and cross-examine him until they are all satisfied that he is telling the truth, and only then may they pass one of three verdicts:

If he is innocent of the offense, and he can convince the group of his innocence, he is to request a verdict of mindfulness--expressing the request three times--and the Community is to give it to him by means of a formal motion with three announcements.

If he committed the offense while insane or possessed, he should request a verdict of past insanity--again, expressing the request three times--and the Community is to give it to him by means of a formal motion with three announcements.

If he did commit the offense, but admits to it only after the interrogation has begun, the other bhikkhus are to make him confess the offense, and then give him a verdict of further misconduct by means of a formal motion with three announcements.

As we noted above, each of these three verdicts is valid only if it is in line with the truth. If it so happens that a guilty bhikkhu is given a verdict of mindfulness, a bhikkhu who committed the offense in question while he was in his right mind is given a verdict of past insanity, or an innocent bhikkhu is given a verdict of further misconduct, the case may be reopened when new evidence surfaces, and the verdict rescinded or reversed.

There are, however, two types of cases in which none of these three verdicts applies, and the accusation--at least for the time being--cannot be considered settled:

(1) If a bhikkhu, in the course of an interrogation, admits to an action which is an offense, but either refuses to see it as an offense or refuses to confess it, he is subject to an act of banishment. Though this too may later be rescinded on the basis of good behavior--when he admits that his action was an offense and confesses it--it is a much stronger penalty than the act for further misconduct.

(2) If a bhikkhu denies having committed the act in question, and the bhikkhus are not convinced of his innocence, there are various ways to pressure him to tell the truth: The Cullavagga suggests intensive interrogation; the Commentary, long bouts of group chanting. If neither works, and the Community still has doubts about his innocence, the issue is to be abandoned for the time being as unsettled: The accused is neither to be punished nor declared innocent. As long as the issue remains unsettled, though, there will be no peace of mind either for the accused or for the Community as a whole.

***

Offenses. All offenses are settled by means of the principle of in the presence of. Most are also settled by means of the procedure of in accordance with what is admitted. Rare cases may be settled by covering over as with grass.

In accordance with what is admitted: When a bhikkhu has committed an offense requiring confession, and then confesses it truthfully in the presence of another bhikkhu, group of bhikkhus or complete community, that is called settlement in accordance with what is admitted. It also counts as having been settled in the presence of the Dhamma and Vinaya and the individuals--i.e. the bhikkhu making the confession and the bhikkhu(s) witnessing it are face to face.

If a bhikkhu has committed a sanghadisesa offense, it is settled only after he has confessed it and undergone penance and probation, both of which require further confessions. Only then, when a community of at least 20 bhikkhus have met to lift the penalty from him, is the offense considered settled. Here, in the presence of would include not only the Dhamma, Vinaya and individuals, but also the Community--when it imposes the penance and/or probation, and again when it lifts the penalty.

If a bhikkhu has committed a parajika offense, it is settled only when he admits that he is no longer a bhikkhu and returns to lay life. Here, in the presence of would have the same factors as under confessable offenses, above.

Covering over as with grass: This procedure has already been discussed in detail above, and there is no need to add any further details here. In the presence of, here, means in the presence of the Dhamma, Vinaya, individuals and the Community: In the presence of the individuals means that those who make the blanket confession and those who witness it are face to face. In the presence of the Community means that enough bhikkhus for a quorum (four) have arrived, the assembly is complete (all the bhikkhus in the sima have either joined the meeting or have sent their consent) and none of the bhikkhus, having met, makes any protest.

***

Duties are settled in the presence of when they are properly carried out in line with the procedures set out in the Dhamma and Vinaya, if the relevant individuals are present (e.g. the ordinand in an ordination, the bhikkhu-to-be-banished in a formal act of banishment, etc.) and the Community that has met to carry them out forms a quorum and a complete assembly, with none of those present--except the bhikkhu against whom a formal act is to be carried out, if such is the case--makes any protest.

INTRODUCTION

Dhamma-Vinaya

Dhamma-Vinaya was the Buddha's own name for the religion he founded. Dhamma--the truth--is what he discovered and pointed out as advice for all who want to gain release from suffering. Vinaya--discipline--is what he formulated as rules, ideals and standards of behavior for those of his followers who went forth from home life to take up the quest for release in greater earnestness. Although this book deals primarily with discipline, we should note at the outset that Dhamma and Vinaya in practice function only together. Neither without the other can attain the desired goal. In theory they may be separate, but in the person who practices them they merge as qualities developed in the mind and character.

"Gotami, the qualities of which you may know, 'These qualities lead to dispassion, not to passion; to being unfettered, and not to being fettered; to self-effacement, and not to self-aggrandizement; to modesty, and not to ambition; to contentment, and not to discontent; to seclusion, and not to entanglement; to energy, and not to idleness; to being unburdensome, and not to being burden-some,' you may definitely hold, 'This is the Dhamma, this is the Vinaya, this is the Teacher's instruction.'" (Cv.X.5)

Ultimately, the Buddha said, just as the sea has a single taste, that of salt, so too the Dhamma and Vinaya have a single taste: that of release. The connection between discipline and release is spelled out in a passage which recurs at several points in the Canon:

"Discipline is for the sake of restraint, restraint for the sake of freedom from remorse, freedom from remorse for the sake of joy, joy for the sake of rapture, rapture for the sake of tranquility, tranquility for the sake of pleasure, pleasure for the sake of con-centration, concentration for the sake of knowledge and vision of things as they are, knowledge and vision of things as they are for the sake of disenchantment, disenchantment for the sake of dispassion, dispassion for the sake of release, release for the sake of knowledge and vision of release, knowledge and vision of release for the sake of total unbinding without clinging." (Pv.XII.2)

In establishing his religion of release, though, the Buddha did not simply set out a body of recommendations and rules. He also founded a company (parisa) of followers. This company falls into four main groups: bhikkhus (monks), bhikkhunis (nuns), laymen and laywomen. Although the Buddha saw no need to organize the laity in any manner, he arranged for the bhikkhus and bhikkhunis--who had given up the entanglements of the household life to devote themselves more fully to the goal of release--to develop into communities; and saw that they needed, as all communities do, ideals and standards, rules and customs to ensure their stability. This need is what gave rise to the Vinaya.

In the early years of the Buddha's career, the texts tell us, there was no need to formulate disciplinary rules. All of the bhikkhus in his following--the Community of bhikkhunis had not yet been started--were men of high personal attainments, who had succeeded in subduing many or all of the defilements of their minds. They knew his teachings well, and behaved accordingly. The Canon tells of how Ven. Sariputta, one of the Buddha's foremost disciples, requested the Buddha at an early date to formulate a Patimokkha, or code of rules, to ensure that the holy life the Buddha had founded would last long, just as a thread holding together a floral arrangement ensures that the flowers are not scattered by the wind. The Buddha replied that the time for such a code had not yet come, for even the most backward of the men in the Community at that time had already had their first glimpse of the goal. Only when mental pollutants (asava) made them-selves felt in the Community would there be a need for a Patimokkha.

As time passed, the conditions that provided an opening for the pollutants within the Community eventually began to appear. The Bhaddali Sutta (M.65) presents the Buddha at a later point in his career listing these conditions as five:

Ven. Bhaddali: "Why is it, venerable sir, that there used to be fewer training rules and more bhikkhus established in the know-ledge of Awakening? And why is it that there are now more training rules and fewer bhikkhus established in the knowledge of Awakening?" (Bhaddali, who has been unwilling to abide by the training rules, seems to be suggesting that the rise in the number of training rules is itself the cause for fewer bhikkhus' attaining Awakening. The Buddha, however, offers a different explanation.)

The Buddha: "So it is, Bhaddali. When beings have begun to degenerate and the true Dhamma has begun to disappear, there are more training rules and fewer bhikkhus established in the knowledge of Awakening. The Teacher does not lay down a training rule for his disciples as long as there are no cases where the conditions that offer a foothold for the pollutants have arisen in the Community. But when there are such cases, then the Teacher lays down a training rule for his disciples so as to counteract those very conditions.

"There are no cases where the conditions that offer a foothold for the pollutants have arisen in the Community as long as the Community has not become large. But when the Community has become large, then there are cases where the conditions that offer a foothold for the pollutants arise in the Community, and the Teacher then lays down a training rule for his disciples so as to compensate for those very conditions...when the Community possesses great material gains...great status...a large body of learning...when the Community is long-standing, then there are cases where the conditions that offer a foothold for the pollu-tants arise the in the Community, and the Teacher then lays down a training rule for his disciples so as to compensate for those very conditions."

Thus the rules themselves were not the cause for degeneracy in the Community, and the conditions that provided a foothold for the pollutants were not themselves pollutants. Rather, the growing com-plexity of the Community provided the opportunity for bhikkhus to act on the basis of their defilements in a growing variety of ways, and the rules--although they could not prevent any of the five conditions--had to become correspondingly complex to compensate for the opportunities those conditions provided for unenlightened behavior.

Even when these conditions did arise, though, the Buddha did not set out a full code at once. Instead, he formulated rules one at a time, in response to particular events. The considerations that went into formulating each rule are best illustrated by the events surrounding the formulation of the first.

Ven. Sudinna, the story goes, had strong faith in the Buddha, and had ordained after receiving his parents' grudging consent. He was their only child, and though married, was childless. His parents, fearing that the government would confiscate their property at their death if it had no heir, devised various schemes to lure Ven. Sudinna back to the lay life, but to no avail. Finally, his mother realized that he was firm in his intention to stay a bhikkhu, and so asked him at least to have intercourse with his former wife so that their property would have an heir. Ven. Sudinna consented, took his wife into the forest, and had intercourse three times.

Immediately he felt remorseful, and eventually confessed his deed to his fellow bhikkhus. Word reached the Buddha, who called a meeting of the Community, questioned Ven. Sudinna and gave him a rebuke. The rebuke fell into two major parts. In the first part, the Buddha reminded Ven. Sudinna of his position as a samana--a contem-plative--and that his behavior was unworthy of his position. Also, the Buddha pointed out to him of the aims of the teaching, and noted that his behavior ran counter to them. The implication here was that Ven. Sudinna had not only acted inconsistently with the content of the teaching, but had also shown callous disregard for the Buddha's compassionate aims in making the Dhamma known.

"'Misguided man, it is unseemly, unbecoming, unsuitable and unworthy of a contemplative; improper and not to be done.... Have I not taught the Dhamma in many ways for the sake of dispassion, and not for passion; for unfettering, and not for fettering; for letting go, and not for clinging? Yet here, while the Dhamma is taught by me for dispassion, you set your heart on passion; while the Dhamma is taught for unfettering, you set your heart on being fettered; while the Dhamma is taught for letting go, you set your heart on clinging.

"'Misguided man, haven't I taught the Dhamma in various ways for the fading of passion, the sobering of pride, the subdu-ing of thirst, the destruction of attachment, the severing of the round, the depletion of craving, dispassion, stopping, unbinding? Haven't I advocated abandoning sensual pleasures, understanding sensual perceptions, subduing sensual thirst, destroying sensual preoccupations, calming sensual fevers?.... Misguided man, this neither inspires faith in the faithless nor increases the faithful. Rather, it inspires lack of faith in the faithless, and wavering in some of the faithful.'"

The second part of the rebuke dealt in terms of personal qualities: those which a bhikkhu practicing discipline is to abandon, and those he is to develop.

"Then the Exalted One, having in various ways rebuked the Ven. Sudinna, having spoken in dispraise of being burdensome, demanding, arrogant, discontented, entangled and indolent; in various ways having spoken in praise of being unburdensome, undemanding, modest, content, austere, scrupulous, gracious, self-effacing and energetic; having given a Dhamma talk on what is seemly and becoming for bhikkhus, addressed the bhikkhus."

This is where the Buddha formulates the training rule, after first stating his reasons for doing so.

"'In that case, bhikkhus, I will formulate a training rule for the bhikkhus with ten aims in mind: the excellence of the Commu-nity, the peace of the Community, the curbing of the shameless, the comfort of well-behaved bhikkhus, the restraint of pollutants related to the present life, the prevention of pollutants related to the next life, the arousing of faith in the faithless, the increase of the faithful, the establishment of the true Dhamma and the fostering of discipline.'"

These reasons fall into three main types. The first two are external: 1) to ensure peace and well-being within the Community itself; and 2) to foster and protect faith among the laity, on whom the bhikkhus depend for their support. (The origin stories of the various rules depict the laity as being very quick to generalize. One bhikkhu mis-behaves, and they complain, "How can these bhikkhus do that?") The third type of reason, though, is internal: The rule is to help restrain and prevent mental pollutants within the individual bhikkhus. Thus the rules aim not only at the external well-being of the Community, but also at the internal well-being of the individual. This latter point soon becomes apparent to anyone who seriously tries to keep to the rules, for they foster mindfulness and circumspection in one's actions, qualities that carry over into the training of the mind.

Over the course of time the Buddha formulated more than 200 major and minor rules, forming the Patimokkha that was recited fortnightly in each Community of bhikkhus. In addition, he formu-lated many other minor rules that were memorized by those of his followers who specialized in the subject of discipline, Nothing, though, is known for sure of what format they used to organize this body of knowledge during his lifetime.

After his total nibbana, however, his followers made a concerted effort to establish a standard canon of Dhamma and Vinaya, and the Pali Canon as we know it began to take shape. The Vinaya was organized into two main parts: 1) the Sutta Vibhanga, the 'Exposition of the Text' (which from here on we will refer to simply as the Vibhanga), containing almost all the material dealing with the Patimokkha rules; and 2) the Khandhakas, or Groupings, which contain the remaining material organized loosely according to subject matter. The Khan-dhakas themselves are divided into two parts, the Mahavagga, or Greater Chapter, and the Cullavagga, or Lesser Chapter. Historians estimate that the Vibhanga and Khandhakas reached their present form no later than the 2nd century B.C., and that the Parivara, or Addenda--a summary and study guide--was added a few centuries later, closing the Vinaya Pitaka, the part of the Canon dealing with discipline.

Since the purpose of this book is to translate and explain the Patimokkha, we are most directly concerned with the Vibhanga. It is organized as follows: The rules in the Patimokkha are presented one by one, each rule preceded by an origin story that tells the events that led up to its formulation. In some instances a rule went through one or more reformulations, in which case an additional story is provided for each amendment to show what prompted it.

After the final statement of the rule is a word-commentary, which explains in detail most of the important terms in the rule. For many of the rules this commentary includes one or more "wheels", or tables, which give the contingencies connected with the rule, work out all their possible permutations and pass judgment as to what penalty, if any, each permutation entails. For example, the discussion of the first rule contains a wheel in which all the objects with which a person might have sexual intercourse are listed against the variables of the sort of intercourse and whether or not the bhikkhu involved gives his consent, followed by a judgment for each possible combination of factors.

Following the word-commentary for each rule is a section of no-offense clauses, listing extenuating circumstances under which a bhikkhu would be exempted from the penalty imposed by the rule.

Finally, for the major rules, there are the Vinita Vatthu, or Precedents, which list various cases related to the rule and give verdicts as to what penalty, if any, they entail.

The Vibhanga forms the basis for most of the explanations of the training rules given in this book. However, there are occasional questions on which the Vibhanga is unclear or does not touch at all. To answer these questions, I have turned either to the Khandhakas or to the commentarial literature that has grown up around the Vinaya over the course of the centuries. The primary works I have consulted are these:

1) The Samanta-pasadika (from here on referred to as the Commentary) a commentary on the Vinaya Pitaka compiled in the 5th century A.D. by Bhadantacariya Buddhaghosa, who based his work on ancient commentaries brought to Sri Lanka from India at an unknown date and translated into Sinhalese. From internal evidence in Buddhaghosa's writings--he compiled commentaries on almost the entire Canon--historians have estimated that the ancient commen-taries were collected over a span of several centuries and closed in approximately the 2nd century A.D. Thus Buddhaghosa's work contains material much older than his date would indicate.

By Buddhaghosa's time a belief had grown up that the ancient commentaries were the work of the Buddha's immediate disciples, and thus indisputably conveyed the true intent of the Canon. However, as we shall see below, the ancient commentaries themselves did not make such exalted claims.

Still, the existence of this belief in the 5th century placed certain constraints on Buddhaghosa's work. At spots where the ancient commentaries conflicted with the Canon, he had to write the discrepancies off as copier's mistakes, or else side with the commen-taries against the Canon. At a few points, such as his explanation of Pacittiya 9, he provides arguments against the ancient commentaries' interpretation, but then backs off, saying that the ancient commen-taries must be right because their authors knew the Buddha's intentions. Perhaps pressure from the elder bhikkhus at the MahaVihara in Anuradhapura--the place where the ancient commentaries had been preserved, and where Buddhaghosa was allowed to do his work--was what made him back off in this way. At any rate, only on points where the different ancient commentaries were silent or gave divergent opinions was he fully free to express his opinions.

2) The Kankha-vitarani (the K/Commentary), a commentary on the Patimokkha also compiled by Bhadantacariya Buddhaghosa. Although this work is largely a synopsis of material in the Commentary, it contains some independent material, in particular a system of classifying the offenses under each training rule into their component factors. It also contradicts the Commentary from time to time.

3) The Sarattha-dipani (the Sub-commentary), a sub-commentary on the Commentary, written in Sri Lanka in the 12th century A.D. by a Ven. Sariputta, the first Mahasami, or head of the Sri Lankan Sangha, after that Sangha was reformed and unified under the patronage of King Parakrama Bahu I. This work not only explains the Commen-tary, but also deals with points in the Canon itself, sometimes pointing out passages where it feels the Commentary has deviated from the Canon. It also quotes as authoritative the judgments of three ancient texts, the Ganthipadesa, which are no longer extant, and of Ven. Buddhadatta, a scholar of the 4th century A.D. who wrote two extant Vinaya guides.

4) The Vimati-vinodani (the V/Sub-commentary), another medieval sub-commentary, written by Ven. Acariya Coliya Kassapa.

5) The Attha-yojana (the A/Sub-commentary), a sub-commentary that, unlike the works of Ven. Sariputta and Kassapa, does little more than analyze the language of the Commentary. This was written in the 18th century A.D. by a Burmese scholar named Ven. Nanakitti

From here on "the ancient commentaries" will denote the original commentaries that Buddhaghosa had to work with, and "the commentaries" will denote all five works listed above.

In addition to the Canon and the commentaries, I have referred to the texts listed in the Bibliography. Two of these deserve special mention here.

1) The Vinaya Mukha, a guide to the Vinaya written in Thai at the beginning of this century by Prince Vajiranana, a son of King Rama IV who ordained as a bhikkhu and eventually held the position of Supreme Patriarch of the Thai Sangha for many years. This work he wrote as part of his attempt to unite the two major sects of the Thai Sangha. The attempt failed, but the book is still used as the official textbook on Vinaya for the examinations run by the Thai Ecclesias-tical Board. Prince Vajiranana in his interpretations often disagrees openly not only with the commentaries, but also with the Vibhanga itself. Some of his disagreements with the commentaries are well-taken, some not.

I include the book here both for the valuable suggestions it makes for dealing with unclear points in the older texts, and because it is taken as authoritative through much of Thailand. It has been translated into English, as The Entrance to the Vinaya, but I have chosen to translate anew all the passages I quote from it.

2) The Book of Discipline, a translation of the entire Vinaya Pitaka into English, done by Miss I. B. Horner. Although I have learned much from Miss Horner's work, there are points where my translations and conclusions differ from hers. Since many readers will want to check the information in this book against hers, I have marked these points with a (). Anyone who is curious as to whose interpretations are correct should check the passages in question against the Royal Thai edition of the Pali Canon, my major source throughout.

Disagreements among the texts. One of the difficulties in trying to collate all these various texts is that there are points on which the Vibhanga is at variance with the wording of the Pati-mokkha rules, and the commentaries with the Canon. This forces us to decide which strata of the texts to take as authoritative. As far as discrepancies between the Vibhanga and the rules are concerned, the following passage in the Cullavagga (X.4) suggests that the Buddha himself gave preference to the way the bhikkhus worked out the rules in the Vibhanga:

"As she was standing at a respectful distance, Mahapajapati Gotami spoke thus to the Lord: 'Lord, those rules of training for the bhikkhunis which are in common with those for the bhikkhus: What line of conduct should we follow in regard to them?'

"'Those rules of training for the bhikkhunis, Gotami, which are in common with those for the bhikkhus: As the bhikkhus train themselves, so should you train yourselves'...(emphasis added).

"'And those rules of training for bhikkhunis which are not in common with those for bhikkhus: What line of conduct should we follow in regard to them?'

'"Those rules of training for the bhikkhunis, Gotami, which are not in common with those for the bhikkhus: Train yourselves in them as they are formulated."'

This passage implies that already in the time of the Buddha the bhikkhus had begun working out a way to interpret the rules which in some cases was not exactly in line with the way the Buddha had originally formulated them. Some people have read this passage as suggesting that the Buddha, although resigned to it, was displeased with this development, but this would contradict the many passages in the Canon where the Buddha speaks in high praise of Ven. Upali, the foremost of his bhikkhu disciples in terms of his knowledge of Vinaya, who was responsible for teaching the rules to the other bhikkhus and who was largely responsible for the shape of the Vinaya as we now have it. It seems more likely that the Buddha in this passage is simply saying that, to avoid unnecessary controversy, the way the bhikkhus had worked out the implications of the rules was to be accepted as is.

Because this development eventually led to the Vibhanga, we can be confident that in adhering to the Vibhanga we are acting as the Buddha would have us do. And when we check the few places where the Vibhanga deviates from the wording of the rules, we find that almost invariably it has tried to reconcile contradictions among the rules themselves, and between the rules and the Khandhakas, so as to make the Vinaya a more coherent whole. This is particularly true with rules that touch on formal acts of the Sangha. Apparently many of these rules were formulated before the general patterns for formal acts were finalized in the Khandhakas. Thus, after the patterns were formulated, the compilers of the Vibhanga--to iron out discrepancies in such cases--were sometimes forced to deviate from the wording of the rules to bring them into line with the general patterns.

As for contradictions between the Commentary and the Vibhanga, this is a more controversial area, with two extremes of thought: One is to reject the Commentary entirely because it is not the Buddha's word, inasmuch as modern historical scholarship shows decisively that it contains material dating many hundreds of years after the Buddha's passing away. This position assumes, though, that in the areas where the Canon is vague or unclear we have nothing to learn from the accumulated wisdom and experience of those who have lived the bhikkhu's life before us. The other extreme is to accept the Commentary as superseding the Vibhanga entirely, in line with the traditional belief which grew up around it: that it was composed at the First Council to express the true intent of those who composed the Vibhanga and yet somehow were unable to put what they really meant to say into the Canon itself.

Neither of these extremes is in line with the Great Standards for judging Dhamma and Vinaya that--as the MahaParinibbana Sutta (D.16) reports--the Buddha formulated at Bhoganagara shortly before his passing away:

"There is the case where a bhikkhu says this: 'In the Blessed One's presence have I heard this, in the Blessed One's presence have I received this: This is the Dhamma, this is the Vinaya, this is the Teacher's instruction.' His statement is neither to be approved nor scorned. Without approval or scorn, take careful note of his words and make them stand against the Suttas and tally them against the Vinaya. If on making them stand against the Suttas and tallying them against the Vinaya you find that they don't stand with the Suttas or tally with the Vinaya, you may conclude: 'This is not the word of the Blessed One; this bhikkhu has misunderstood it'--and you should reject it. But if...they stand with the Suttas and tally with the Vinaya, you may conclude: 'This is the word of the Blessed One; this bhikkhu has understood it rightly.'"

(The same criteria are to be used when the bhikkhu cites as his authority a Community with well-known leading elders; a monastery with many learned elders who know the tradition, who have memorized the Dhamma, the Vinaya and the Matika (the precursor to the Abhidhamma as we know it); or a single elder who knows the tradition.)

In other words the question is not one of the authority on whose word a claim is based, but one of consistency: Only if a statement stands up under comparison with the Canon should it be accepted as true Dhamma or Vinaya. The same principle holds for statements that are said to be not the word of the Buddha, but the opinion of respected teachers. This point is borne out by two important passages in the texts.

One is the narrative of the Second Council, during which the bhikkhus of Vesali defended ten practices on the grounds that they had learned them from their teachers. The elders who judged the case, though, insisted on evaluating the practices in terms of whether or not they adhered to the Canon. The primary point of controversy--the question of whose authority was greater, the Canon's or the teachers'--was point six:

"'The practice of what is habitual, sir--is it allowable?'

"'What is the practice of what is habitual, my friend?'

"'To practice (thinking), this is the way my preceptor habitually practiced; this is the way my teacher habitually practiced--is this allowable?'

"'The practice of what is habitual is sometimes allowable, sometimes not.'" (CV.XII.2.8)

In other words, as the context makes clear, one's teacher's and preceptor's practices are to be followed only when they are in accordance with the Canon.

The second passage is the discussion of the Great Standards in the Commentary to the MahaParinibbana Sutta, which concludes that the commentaries are to be accepted only where they are in agreement with the Canon. Apparently the teachers who compiled the ancient commentaries took a more modest view of their authority than did the elders of the MahaVihara at the time of Buddhaghosa, and did not pretend to supersede the Canon as the final word on what is and is not the true Dhamma and Vinaya.

Some may object that to pass judgment on the Commentary is to lack respect for the tradition, but actually it is because of respect for the compilers of the Vibhanga that I make the following assumptions in checking the Commentary against the Vibhanga:

1) The compilers of the Vibhanga were intelligent enough to be consistent within the discussion of each rule. Any explanation based on the premise that they were not consistent should give way to an explanation which finds that they were.

2) The compilers were well enough acquainted with the contin-gencies surrounding each rule that they knew which factors were and were not crucial in determining what is and is not an offense. Any explanation that adds or subtracts factors from those mentioned in the Vibhanga should give way to one that follows the Vibhanga's analysis.

3) The compilers were careful enough in reporting the Vinita Vatthu--the precedents in which the Buddha judged individual cases against an existing rule--to include all the important factors bearing on the judgment. Any explanation that requires rewriting the prece-dents, adding extra details extraneous to the Vibhanga to account for the judgment, should give way to an explanation that can make sense out of the precedents as they are reported and in terms of the analyses presented elsewhere in the Vibhanga.

It's not that I take any joy in arguing with the Commentary. In fact, wherever possible, I have been happy to give it the benefit of the doubt, and on many points I am very much in its debt. Still, now that Buddhism is coming to the West, I feel it is time to stop and take stock of the tradition, and to check the later traditions against the earliest sources. This is especially important in a way of thought and life whose primary appeal to the Western mind is in its reliance on reason and investigation, rather than on blindly accepted authority. In doing this, I am simply following a pattern that has repeated itself through the history of the Theravadin tradition: of returning to the original principles whenever the religion reaches an historic turning point.

There is, of course, a danger in being too independent in interpret-ing the tradition, in that strongly held opinions can lead to disharmony in the Community. Thus in evaluating the Commentary against the Canon, I do not want to imply that my conclusions are the only or the best ones possible. Important points may have slipped my attention or escaped my grasp. For this reason, even in rules where I think that the Commentary does not do justice to the Vibhanga, I have tried to give a faithful account of the important points from the Commentary so that those who wish to take it as their authority may still use this book as a guide. If there are any points on which I am mistaken, I would be pleased if knowledgeable people would correct me.

At the same time, I hope that this book will show that there are many areas on which the Vibhanga is unclear, and lends itself to a variety of equally valid interpretations. For proof of this, we need only look at the various traditions that have developed in the differ-ent Theravada countries, and even within each country. For some reason, although people tend to be very tolerant of different interpre-tations of the Dhamma, they can be very intolerant of different interpretations of the Vinaya, and can get into heated arguments over minor points having very little to do with the training of the mind.

I have tried to make the point throughout this book that any inter-pretation based on a reasonable interpretation of the Canon should be respected: that each bhikkhu should follow the interpretations of the Community in which he is living, as long as they do not conflict with the Canon, so as to avoid conflict over minor matters in daily life; and that he should show respect for the differing interpretations of other Communities where they too are not in conflict with the Canon, so as to avoid the pitfalls of pride and narrow-mindedness.

This is especially true now that monasteries of different nation-alities are taking root in close proximity in the West. In the past, Thais, Burmese and Sri Lankans could look down on each other's traditions without danger of causing friction, as they lived in separate countries and spoke different languages. Now, however, we have become neighbors and have begun to speak a common language, so it is best that we take to heart the writings of the Chinese pilgrims who visited India centuries ago. They reported that even after the early Buddhists had split into 18 schools, each with its own Tripitaka and Patimokkha, and the Mahayanists had added their texts to the tradition, bhikkhus belonging to different schools could be found living together in the same monastery, practicing and conducting communal business in peace and harmony. Theirs is a worthy example. We should not let our minor differences become stumbling blocks on our way.

My aim throughout this book has been practical. I have avoided dealing with academic issues concerning the authenticity and reliability of the tradition, and instead have tried simply to report and explain what the tradition has to say. Of course, I have had to be selective. Whatever the unconscious factors that have influenced my choice of material, the conscious considerations shaping this book are briefly as follows:

We are dealing primarily with rules, but rules are not the only way to express disciplinary norms, and the texts we are surveying express their norms in a variety of forms--as rules, principles, models and virtues. The different forms work best for different people, and are best suited for different purposes. Principles, models and virtues are meant as personal, subjective standards, and tend to be loosely defined. Their interpretation and application are left to the judgment of the individual. Rules are meant to serve as more objective stan-dards. To work, they must be precisely defined in a way acceptable to the Community at large. The compilers of the Canon, recognizing this need, provided definitions for most of the terms in the rules, and the authors of the commentaries continued this task, carrying it out with even greater thoroughness. Thus much of this book, in report-ing these texts, is concerned with the definition of terms.

This need for precision, though, accounts for the weakness of rules in general as universal guides to behavior. First there is the question of where to draw the line between what is and is not an infraction of the rule. There has to be a clear break-off point, because rules--unlike principles--deal in two colors: black and white. In some cases, it is difficult to find a clear break-off point that corresponds exactly with one's sense of what is right and wrong, and so it is necessary to include the areas of gray either with the white or the black. In general, but not always, the Vibhanga's position is to include the gray with the white, and to rely on the principles of the Dhamma to encourage the individual bhikkhu to stay away from the gray.

Take, for instance, the rule against masturbation. The Vibhanga limits this rule to forbidding only those forms of masturbation that aim at ejaculation, for if it had drawn the line anywhere else, it would have become an offense for a bhikkhu simply to scratch himself. Thus self-stimulation that does not aim at ejaculation is not an offense, although in many cases it is clearly against the spirit of the Dhamma. The Vinaya Mukha notes, disapprovingly, a number of older Vinaya guides that like to dwell on these areas of gray and seem to delight in figuring out ways to avoid an offense by working around the letter of the rules. In this book I am taking a different tack: Under those rules that include large areas of grey with the white, I have noted a few relevant principles from the Dhamma to spell out a wise policy with regard to the gray areas--not to refor-mulate the rule, but simply as a reminder that, as noted above, the Vinaya without the Dhamma does not suffice as a guide to the goal.

Another drawback resulting from the need for precision in rules is that the more precisely a rule is defined to suit a particular time and place, the less well it may fit other times and places. The compilers of the Canon, in order to make up for this weakness, thus provided the origin stories and precedents to show the type of situation the rule was intended to prevent, providing principles and models that indicate the spirit of the rule and aid in applying it to differing contexts. In writing this book I have often made reference to these stories, to give this added dimension.

Admittedly, the stories do not make for inspiring reading. For example, instead of reading about bhikkhus accepting a meal at a donor's house and then uplifting the donor with a talk on Dhamma, we read about Ven. Udayin accepting a meal at the dwelling of a bhikkhuni who was his former wife, and the two of them sitting there exposing their genitals to each other. Still, the stories do remind us that the more inspiring stories we read in the discourses took place in a very real human world, and they also reveal the insight and under-stated wit of those who framed and interpreted the rules. The element of wit here is especially important, for without it there is no true understanding of human nature, and no intelligent system of discipline.

Finally, in compiling this book, I have tried to include whatever seems most worth knowing for the bhikkhu who aims at fostering the qualities of discipline in his life--so as to help train his mind and live in peace with his fellow bhikkhus--and for the layperson who wants to support and encourage the bhikkhus in that aim.

CHAPTER ONE

Patimokkha

The Patimokkha is available to us in several recensions, some in Indic languages and others in Tibetan or Chinese translations. However, of the Indic recensions, only one--the Pali--is still a living tradition, recited fortnightly and put into practice by Theravadin bhikkhus throughout the world. This is the recension translated and explained in this book.

The meaning of the term patimokkha is a matter of conjecture. According to the Mahavagga, it means "the beginning, the head (or entrance--mukha), the foremost (pamukha) of wholesome qualities." (Mv.II.3.4) The term serves as the name not only of the basic code of training rules, but also of a sermon in which the Buddha enumerated the basic principles common to the teachings of all Buddhas: "The non-doing of all evil, the performance of what is wholesome, and the purification of one's heart: this is the Buddhas' message." (Dhp.183) Thus whatever the etymology of the term patimokkha, it denotes a set of principles basic to the practice of the religion.

The basic code of training rules for bhikkhus, in its Pali recension, contains 227 rules, divided into eight sections in accordance with the penalty assigned by each rule: parajika, defeat; sanghadisesa, formal meeting; aniyata, undetermined; nissaggiya pacittiya, forfeiture and confession; pacittiya, confession; patidesaniya, acknowledgement; sekhiya, training; and adhikarana-samatha, settlement of issues. The following chapters will discuss the precise meanings of these terms.

Three of these terms, though, do not denote penalties. The aniyata rules give directions for judging uncertain cases; the sekhiya rules simply say, "(This is) a training to be followed," without assign-ing a particular penalty for not following them; and the adhikarana-samatha rules give procedures to follow in settling issues that may arise in the Community. Thus there are only five types of penalty mentioned in the Patimokkha rules themselves, ranging from perma-nent expulsion from the Community to simple confession in the presence of another bhikkhu. None of the penalties, we should note, involve physical punishment of any kind. And we should also note that the purpose of undergoing the penalties is not somehow to erase any bad kamma one may incur by breaking the rules; rather, it is simply to keep one in good standing within the Community.

In addition to the penalties directly mentioned in the rules, there are also penalties derived from the rules by the Vibhanga and commentaries. These derived penalties deal with two sorts of cases: 1) A bhikkhu tries to commit an action mentioned in one of the rules, but the action for one reason or another does not reach completion (e.g., he tries to kill a person, but the person doesn't die). 2) A bhikkhu commits an action not directly covered in any rule, but similar to one that is (e.g., he strikes an unordained person, which is not directly covered in a rule, while the act of striking a bhikkhu is).

Penalties of this sort, derived from the parajika and sanghadisesa rules, include thullaccaya (grave offense) and dukkata (wrong doing); those derived from the nissaggiya pacittiya, pacittiya and patidesaniya rules--except for the rule against speaking insults--include only the dukkata. The penalties derived from the rule against speaking insults include dubbhasita (wrong speech) as well. As for the sekhiya rules, the Vibhanga states that to disobey any of them out of disrespect incurs a dukkata. All of these derived penalties may be absolved through confession.

There may, of course, be times when the assigned penalties are not enough to deter an unconscientious bhikkhu from committing an offense repeatedly. In such cases, the Community in which he lives may, if it sees fit, formally impose additional penalties on him as a means of bringing him into line. These formal acts may range from stripping him of some of the privileges of seniority, to banishment from that particular Community, and on to suspension from the Community of bhikkhus as a whole. In each case the punishment is temporary; if the bhikkhu realizes his errors and mends his ways, the Community is to revoke the act against him and return him to his former status.

Offenses. In analyzing offenses for the purpose of determining penalties, the Vibhanga divides an action into five factors: the object, the perception, the intent, the effort and the result. In some of the rules, all five of these factors play a role in determining what is and is not a full offense. In others, only two, three or four play a role. For example, under the parajika rule forbidding murder, all five factors have to be present for a full offense: The object has to be a human being, the bhikkhu has to perceive him/her as a living being, he has to have murderous intent, he has to make an effort for the person to die, and the person has to die.

If any of these factors are missing, the penalty changes. For instance, object: if the bhikkhu kills a dog, the penalty is a pacittiya. Perception: if he pulls the plug on a life support machine, thinking that the patient is already brain-dead, then even if it turns out that the patient was not yet dead, the bhikkhu would incur no penalty. Intent: if he accidentally drops a rock on a person standing below him, he incurs no penalty even if the person dies. Effort: if someone standing next to him on a river bank falls into the river, but he makes no effort to save the person, he incurs no penalty even if the person drowns. Result: if he tries to kill X, but only succeeds in injuring him, he incurs a thullaccaya.

There are instances, though, when the factors of intention, percep-tion and result do not make any difference in determining offenses. For example, if a bhikkhu is sleeping alone in room and a woman comes in and lies down in the room with him, he incurs the pacittiya for lying down in the same lodging as a woman even though his intention was to lie down alone and he was unaware of her presence. A bhikkhu who drinks a glass of wine, thinking it to be grape juice, incurs the pacittiya for taking intoxicants all the same. A bhikkhu who tries to frighten another bhikkhu incurs a pacittiya regardless of whether or not the other bhikkhu is actually frightened.

The factor of effort is basic to every rule, and is also used to determine offenses in cases where a bhikkhu intends to break a rule but does not complete the action. For instance, in the case of stealing, the efforts involved are said to begin when, acting under the intent to steal, a bhikkhu gets dressed and starts walking to the object. With each of these beginning efforts--literally, with every step--he incurs a dukkata. At first glance, this may seem extreme, but when we view his state of mind as having ultimate importance, this system of assigning penalties is appropriate. In cases like this, if the bhikkhu completes the act, the penalties he incurred in the preliminary efforts are nullified, and he is left with only the penalty imposed by the rule.

Thus it is important, when reading about each training rule, to pay attention to what role these five factors play in determining the offenses related to the rule. And, of course, it is important for each bhikkhu to pay attention to all five of these factors in all of his actions to make sure that he does not fall at any time into an offense. This is where training in discipline becomes part of the training of the mind leading to Awakening. A bhikkhu who is mindful to analyze his actions into these five factors, to be aware of them as they arise, and to behave consistently in such a manner that he avoids committing any offenses, is developing three qualities: mindfulness; an analytical attitude towards phenomena in his thoughts, words and deeds; and persistence in abandoning unwise qualities and developing wise ones within himself. These are the first three of the seven factors of Awakening, and form the basis for the remaining four: rapture, tranquility, concentration and equanimity.

The Parivara (VI.4), in reviewing the Vibhanga's five factors for analyzing offenses, devises a number of categories for classifying offenses, the most important being the distinction between rules carrying a penalty only when broken intentionally through correct perception (sacittaka), and those carrying a penalty even when broken unintentionally or through misperception (acittaka).

Although it may seem harsh to impose penalties for unintentional actions, we must again reflect on the state of mind that leads to such actions. In some acts, of course, the intention makes all the differ-ence between guilt and innocence. Taking an article with intent to return it, for example, is something else entirely from taking it with intent to steal. There are, however, other acts with damaging conse-quences which, when performed unintentionally, reveal carelessness and lack of circumspection in areas where a person may reasonably be held responsible. Many of the rules dealing with the proper care of communal property and one's basic requisites fall in this category. Except for one very unlikely situation, though, none of the major rules carry a penalty if broken unintentionally, while the minor rules that do carry such penalties may be regarded as useful lessons in mindfulness.

The Parivara (IV.7.4) also lists six ways in which offenses may be committed:

1) unconscientiously, i.e., knowing that an action is contrary to the rules, but going ahead with it anyway;

2) unknowingly, i.e., not realizing that the rules forbid that particular action;

3) absentmindedly;

4) assuming something improper to be proper, e.g., drinking a glass of apple wine perceiving it to be apple juice;

5) assuming something proper to be improper, e.g., perceiving a glass of apple juice to be apple wine, and drinking it nonetheless; and

6) acting out of uncertainty, i.e., not being sure if an action is proper, but going ahead with it anyway. In this last case, if the act is improper, one is to be treated according to the relevant rule. If it is proper, one incurs a dukkata in any event for having acted irresponsibly.

Another scheme introduced in the ancient commentaries for classifying offenses is the distinction between those that the world criticizes (loka-vajja) and those that the rules criticize (pannati-vajja). The Commentary defines this distinction by saying that the loka-vajja offenses are committed with an unwholesome state of mind (i.e., greed, anger or delusion) while pannati-vajja offenses are committed with a wholesome state of mind. Thus the concepts would seem to have been developed originally to deal with the exceptional cases in which a bhikkhu would be led by mature consideration to break a rule--e.g., where another person's life would be at stake. Under such circumstances, the world at large would not criticize his actions, although the rules would impose a penalty.

As these concepts finally took shape in the ancient commentaries, though, they became a way of classifying rules. The compilers apparently felt that some of the rules forbade actions that necessarily were motivated by an unwholesome state of mind, whereas others forbade actions that might be motivated by wholesome states of mind. Given this use of the distinction, the Vinaya Mukha redefined the terms as follows:

"Some offenses are faults as far as the world is concerned--wrong and damaging even if committed by ordinary people who are not bhikkhus--examples being robbery and murder, as well as such lesser faults as assault and verbal abuse. Offenses of this sort are termed loka-vajja. There are also offenses which are faults only as far as the Buddha's ordinances are concerned--neither wrong nor damaging if committed by ordinary people; wrong only if committed by bhikkhus, on the grounds that they run counter to the Buddha's ordinances. Offenses of this sort are termed pannati-vajja."

Even a cursory glance at the Patimokkha rules will show that many of them deal with the latter sort of offense, and that such offenses concern relatively minor affairs. The question often arises, why this concern with minutiae? The answer is that the rules deal with social relationships--among the bhikkhus themselves and between the bhikkhus and the laity--and that social relationships are defined by seemingly minor points.

Take, for instance, the rule that a bhikkhu may not eat food unless it is handed to him or to a fellow bhikkhu by an unordained person on that day. This rule has wide-ranging ramifications: It means, among other things, that a bhikkhu may not leave human society to lead a solitary hermit's existence, foraging for food on his own. He must have frequent contact with humanity, however minimal, and in that contact he performs a service to others, even if simply offering them a noble example of conduct and giving them an opportunity to develop the virtue of generosity. Many of the other seemingly trivial rules--such as those forbidding digging in the soil and damaging plant life--will reveal, on reflection, implications of a similar scope.

The Great Standards. Although the Vibhanga and Khandhakas cover an enormous number of cases, they do not, of course, cover every possible contingency in the world; and from what we have seen of the way in which the Buddha formulated the rules--dealing with cases as they arose--there is reason to doubt that he himself wanted them to be an airtight system. As for cases that did not arise during his lifetime, he established the following four guidelines for judgment--called the Great Standards (a separate set from those he formulated at Bhoganagara)--for judging cases not mentioned in the rules:

"Bhikkhus, whatever I have not objected to, saying, 'This is not allowable,' if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, this is not allowable for you.

"Whatever I have not objected to, saying, 'This is not allow-able,' if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, this is allowable for you.

"And whatever I have not permitted, saying, 'This is allowable,' if it fits in with what is not allowable, if it goes against what is allowable, this is not allowable for you.

"And whatever I have not permitted, saying, 'This is allowable,' if it fits in with what is allowable, if it goes against what is not allowable, this is allowable for you." (Mv.VI.40)

These four Great Standards, when properly applied, are an impor-tant tool for extending the principles of discipline into situations unknown in the Buddha's time. We will have occasion to refer to them frequently in the course of this book.

There is evidence in the Canon that the Buddha's own attitude towards discipline was not one of strict legalism. Take, for instance, this discourse:

"At one time the Exalted One was living in Vesali, in the Great Wood. Then a certain Vajjian bhikkhu went to the Exalted One...and said: 'Lord, more than 150 training rules come up for recitation every fortnight. I cannot train in reference to them.'

"'Can you train in reference to the three trainings, bhikkhu: the training in heightened virtue, the training in heightened mind, the training in heightened discernment?'

"'Yes, Lord, I can....'

"'Then train in reference to those three trainings...When you train in reference to the training in heightened virtue... heightened mind...heightened discernment, passion will be abandoned in you, aversion...delusion will be abandoned in you. Then with the abandoning of passion...aversion... delusion, you will not do anything unwholesome, or engage in any evil.'

"Later on, that bhikkhu trained in heightened virtue... heightened mind...heightened discernment...Passion... aversion... delusion were abandoned in him...He did not do anything unwholesome or engage in any evil." (A.III.85)

Another discourse with a similar point:

"'Bhikkhus, more than 150 training rules come up for recitation every fortnight, in reference to which young men desirous of the goal train themselves. There are these three trainings in which they (the training rules) are all contained. What three? The training in heightened virtue, the training in heightened mind, the training in heightened discernment. These are the three trainings in which they are all contained....

"'There is the case, bhikkhus, where a bhikkhu is fully accomplished in virtue, concentration and discernment (i.e., is an arahant). With reference to the lesser and minor training rules, he falls into offenses and rehabilitates himself. Why is that? Because it is not said to be an impossibility. But as for the training rules that are basic to the holy life and proper to the holy life, his virtue is steadfast and firm. Having undertaken them, he trains in reference to the training rules. Because of the wasting away of (mental) pollutants, he dwells in the unpolluted release of awareness and release of discernment, having known and made them manifest for himself right in the present....

"'Those who are partially accomplished attain a part; those who are wholly accomplished, the whole. The training rules, I say, are not in vain.'" (A.III.88)

CHAPTER TWELVE

Appendices

I. Controversial points: Dawn. The Canon lacks a clear-cut definition of precisely when dawn takes place. This lack is especially felt in connection with NP 2, but it also effects a number of other rules as well. The Khuddasikkha, a Vinaya manual composed in the medieval period by Ven. Dhammasiri, states that the sky lightens in four stages before sunrise: a slight reddening two hours before the sun appears on the horizon; a slight whitening half an hour later; a second reddening 48 minutes before sunrise; and a second whitening 24 minutes after that. Burmese, Sri Lankan and some Thai bhikkhus tend to follow this analysis, and differ among themselves only as to which of the four stages constitutes dawn, most of them favoring the first reddening. Other Thai bhikkhus ignore the Khuddasikkha entirely, and say that dawn occurs in the half hour before the point when, by natural light, one can see the lines in one's hand while holding it out at arm's length.

Pacittiya 37 & 38, taken together, require that a bhikkhu not accept alms before dawn. If he did go for alms before dawn, he would not be able to eat any of the food he accepted at that time, since Pacittiya 37 forbids him from eating before dawn, and Pacittiya 38 forbids him from eating after dawn any food he received before dawn. If the first reddening or whitening on the eastern horizon did count as dawn, then bhikkhus would be able to go for alms when it is still dark, since the dark of night does not lift until the second reddening and whitening. There is, however, a passage in the Latukikopama Sutta (M. 66) which states specifically that once the rules were established, one of their benefits was that they prevented bhikkhus from going for alms in the dark. This suggests that in the time of the Canon, the first reddening and whitening did not count as dawn. The passage runs as follows:

"(Ven. Udayin--the good Udayin, not the lax Udayin of the first five sanghadisesas--is addressing the Buddha:) 'It used to be, venerable sir, that we ate in the evening, in the morning and in the afternoon. Then there was the time when the Blessed One addressed the bhikkhus, saying, "Come now, bhikkhus, give up this afternoon meal." Because of that I felt sorry and upset: "The fine staple and non-staple food that householders give us in the afternoon--the Blessed One has us give them up! The Sugata has us abandon them!" But on considering our love and respect for the Blessed One, our sense of shame and conscience, we gave up that afternoon meal, and ate (only) in the evening and in the morning.

"'Then there was the time when the Blessed One addressed the bhikkhus, saying, "Come now, bhikkhus, give up this evening meal." Because of that I felt sorry and upset: "The more highly regarded of our two meals--the Blessed One has us give it up! The Sugata has us abandon it!" It has happened, venerable sir, that a man has gotten ingredients for curry during the day, and has told his wife, "Come, let's put this aside, and we'll all have it together in the evening." Almost all cooking is done at night, sir, and very little during the day. But on considering our love and respect for the Blessed One, our sense of shame and conscience, we gave up that evening meal.

"'It used to be that bhikkhus going for alms in the dark gloom of night would walk into a mud hole, fall into a cesspool, stumble into a thorny hedge, stumble into a sleeping cow, encounter teen-age gangs on the way to or from a theft, and be propositioned by women. Once it happened when I was going for alms in the dark gloom of night that a certain woman washing a bowl saw me by a lightning flash. Seeing me, she shrieked out in terror, "I'm doomed! A demon is after me!"

"'When she said that, I said to her, "I'm not a demon, sister. I'm a bhikkhu waiting for alms."

""'Well then you're a bhikkhu whose mom is dead and dad is dead. It would be better for you, bhikkhu, that your belly be cut open with a sharp butcher's knife, than that you go prowling around for alms for your belly's sake like this in the dark gloom of night!"

"'When I remember this, sir, the thought occurs to me: "There are so many painful things the Blessed One has rid us of, and so many pleasant ones he has provided; so many unprofitable things he has rid us of, and so many profitable ones he has provided!""

This shows clearly that once the rules were in effect, bhikkhus were saved from the dangers of going for alms in the dark; and suggests that dawn can be no earlier than the second reddening and whitening mentioned in the Khuddasikkha.

***

II. Controversial points: Sugata measures. The Commentary to Sanghadisesa 6 states that the Buddha's cubit--the distance from his bent elbow to the tips of his fingers--was three times that of a normal man. This puts all the Sugata measures--based on the Buddha's cubit, handspan and breadth of his fingers--at three times normal length, and makes the Buddha freakishly tall.

How the Commentary arrived at this figure is hard to say, for the Vinaya Mukha cites a number of passages from the Canon which show that the Buddha, though tall, was not abnormally so. The most telling passage is the one from the Samannaphala Sutta (D. 2), in which King Ajatasattu visits the Buddha while the latter is sitting in an assembly of bhikkhus, and he is unable to tell which one of the assembly the Buddha is. This, of course, is meant to indicate the king's spiritual blindness, but if the Buddha had been remarkably tall, it would have certainly been part of his general reputation, and the king would not have had to ask.

The Vinaya Mukha then goes on to suggest a variety of ways of calculating the Buddha's measurements, the most useful being to assume the Buddha's cubit to be 50 cm. This, at least roughly, fits a number of passages from the Canon, as follows:

According to the Lakkhana Sutta (D. 30), the spread of the Buddha's arms, outstretched, was equal to his height. Since a person's cubit is one-fourth the spread of his outstretched arms, this would put the Buddha's height at 2 meters, or approximately 6 feet 7 inches. The origin story to Pacittiya 92 states that his half-brother, Nanda, was four fingerbreadths shorter than he, and that when bhikkhus saw him coming from afar, they would mistake him for the Buddha, partly on the basis of his tall height. One fingerbreadth is said to be 1/24 cubit, or a little more than 2 cm. by this reckoning, which would put Nanda at 1.92 meters, or approximately 6 feet 4 inches tall.

These figures would seem to fit the information in the Canon fairly well, in that they allow for both Nanda and the Buddha to be tall, but not outlandishly so.

Another pair of passages supporting these measurements is the ruling under Pacittiya 87 that the legs of a bhikkhu's bed not be more than eight Sugata fingerbreadths tall, taken together with the passage in the Cullavagga (VIII.1.5) that one should grope under the bed with one's hand, to make sure that nothing is there, before placing one's bowl there. Our measurements would put the maximum height for the bed legs at 18 cm. If they were much taller than that, there would be no need to grope, for one could easily see under the bed with a glance. If they were much shorter than that, even a small bowl wouldn't fit.

Although there is no way of determining the Sugata measures with 100% accuracy, the above considerations suggest that the following estimates are reasonable:

The Sugata cubit = 50 cm.

The Sugata span = 25 cm.

The Sugata fingerbreadth = 2.08 cm.

Applied to the various rules, this would give us a hut 3 x 1.75 meters--small, but adequate; a rains-bathing cloth 1.5 x .625 meters--enough to cover one from the waist to the knees; and an skin-eruption covering cloth 1 x .5 meters--enough to cover one from the waist to just above the knees. All of these figures seem appropriate, and so have been accepted for the purposes of this book.

***

III.Controversial points: Meals. The Cullavagga (VI.21.1) contains a passage in which the Buddha allows bhikkhus to accept seven kinds of specially arranged meals, in addition to the meals they receive on almsround.. The passage runs as follows:

"Now at that time Rajagaha was short of food. People were not able to provide a meal for the Community, but they wanted to provide a designated meal, an invitational meal, a meal by lots, a meal on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon, on Obser-vance (uposatha) days, and on the day after each Observance day. They told this matter to the Blessed One. He said, 'I allow, bhikkhus, a Community meal, a designated meal, an invitational meal, a meal by lots, a meal on a day of the waxing or waning of the moon, on an Observance (uposatha) day, and on the day after an Observance day.'"

Unfortunately, the Canon does not give any detailed explanation of these terms. The Commentary explains Community meals as meals for the entire Community, and the other terms as follows:

"(Having said,) 'Give 1, 2...10 bhikkhus designated from the Community,' they wanted to provide a meal for the bhikkhus they got through that designation. Later, having decided on bhikkhus in the same way (i.e., 1, 2...10 bhikkhus), and having invited them, they wanted to provide a meal for them. Later, they wanted to provide a meal having decided on a lottery. Later, having fixed a date--the waxing or waning moons, the Observance day or the day after--they wanted to provide a meal for 1, 2...10 bhikkhus. This is the extent of the meals that fall under the terms "designated meals, invitational meals (the Sub-commentary adds an 'etc.' here.)"

These definitions seem fairly clear: a designated meal is one in which the donors do not specify which bhikkhus are to receive it, but simply ask for x number of bhikkhus from the Community, leaving it up to the bhattuddesaka (the 'meal designator"--the Community official responsible for managing these various meals) to designate who the recipients will be. An invitational meal is one in which the donors decide on the recipients themselves. A lot meal is one in which the recipients are chosen by drawing lots, while the remaining meals--periodic meals--are given regularly to a rotating roster of x number of bhikkhus every time the specified date comes around.

However, the Commentary's discussion of how the bhattuddesaka should manage these meals blurs the lines between the first three categories. It gives no detailed discussion of Community meals, but divides designated meals into the following two types:

1a) Meals for which the number of bhikkhus to be designated is equal to the total number of bhikkhus in the Community.

1b) Meals for which the number of bhikkhus to be designated is less than the total number of bhikkhus in the Community.

Invitational meals come in the four types:

2a) Meals to which the entire Community is invited.

2b) Meals to which specific individuals or types of bhikkhus (e.g., no one but senior bhikkhus) are invited.

2c) Meals to which one bhikkhu is invited and asked to bring x number of his friends.

2d) Meals for which the donor simply asks for x number of bhikkhus, without specifying in any way who they should be.

This typology raises two questions. For one, why aren't #1a and #2a grouped under Community meals? Is it because the donor uses the words "designated" and "invited" when announcing his/her plans for the meal?

If so, how does one arrange for a Community meal which would not fall into these two types, in line with the fact that a Community meal is said to be a separate category?

The second question is how type #2d differs from a designated meal. Is it, again, because the donor does not use the word "desig-nated" in announcing the meal? If so the difference is only formal, for the Commentary itself states that the bhattuddesaka is to treat such a meal as he would a designated meal, which shows that in essence it is the same thing.

As we argued in the discussion of Pacittiya 32, that rule applies only to invitational meals. If we follow the Commentary's original definitions of the various categories of special meal--and eliminate types 1a, 2a and 2d as redundant--it is easy enough to determine in essence which types of meals fall into this category and which don't. If we follow the detailed typologies, though, the distinctions become more a matter of formality and technicalities: For example, if the donor asks the bhattuddesaka to "designate nine bhikkhus from the Sangha," the meal would not violate Pacittiya 32, but if he simply asked for nine bhikkhus--even if he did not specify who they were to be--the meal would be a group meal, and any bhikkhus who ate it would be committing an offense. Or again, if he asked that the entire Community be "designated" to come to his meal, they would not incur a penalty in going, but if he simply asked the entire Community to a meal, they would.

Since the Commentary is a compendium of the opinions of many generations of teachers, it may have been that the definitions of the categories of meals were agreed on by one generation of teachers, and the typologies by another. This would explain the discrepancies between the two. Or it may have been that the entire discussion--definitions and typologies--was the product of one generation, who did mean the categories to depend on questions of formalities.

At any rate, as with many areas where the Canon gives no definite guidance, this is an issue where the wise policy for each bhikkhu is to follow the standards of the Community to which he belongs.

***

IV. Pali formulae: Determination. The articles a bhikkhu must determine for his use have already been mentioned under NP 1 & 21.

Determination, according to the Commentary, may be done in either of two ways: by the body or by word. To determine by the body means to grasp or touch the object in question with any part of the body, and to determine in the mind that the object is for one's own particular use, in line with the formula given below. To determine by word means to speak the formula out loud. In this case, if the object is within the reach of the hand, use the same formula as for determination with the body. If it is beyond the reach of the hand, alter the formula, changing imam, this, to etam, that. Articles which one will wear--i.e., robes, the rains-bathing cloth--must first be dyed the proper color and marked with small round dots at the corners, in accordance with Pacittiya 58.

The Canon and commentaries make no mention of any formula to repeat while marking, but in Thailand the following formula is traditionally used.

Imam bindu-kappam karomi, which means, "I make this properly marked."

The words for determination, taking the bowl as an example, are:

Imam pattam adhitthami, which means, "I determine this bowl" or "I determine this as a bowl."

To determine other requisites, replace the word pattam, bowl, with the appropriate name, as follows:

for the outer robe: sanghatim

for the upper robe: uttarasangam

for the lower robe: antaravasakam

for the sitting cloth: nisidanam

for the skin-eruption cloth: kandu-paticchadim

for the rains-bathing cloth: vassikasatikam

for the sleeping cloth: paccattharanam

for the handkerchief: mukha-punchana-colam

for other cloth requisites: parikkhara-colam

To determine many cloths of the same sort at the same time, use the plural forms: Change imam to imani; etam to etani; and the -am ending for the name of the article to -ani. For example, to determine many miscellaneous cloth requisites within reach of the hand, the formula is:

Imani parikkhara-colani adhitthami.

A bhikkhu may determine only one of each of the following five items for use at any one time: the bowl, the basic set of three robes and the sitting cloth. If he wishes to replace an old one with a new one, he must first withdraw the determination of the old item before determining the new one. The formula for withdrawal, again taking the bowl as an example, is:

Imam pattam pacchuddharami, which means, "I relinquish this bowl." To withdraw the determination of other items, replace the word pattam with the appropriate name, as above.

If an item has been stolen, burnt, destroyed, lost, given away or taken away on trust, its determination automatically lapses, and there is no need to withdraw the determination before determining a new item to replace it. The Commentary explains "destroyed" as meaning that the bowl or any of the three robes develops a hole of a certain size: for a clay bowl, a hole large enough for a millet grain to pass through; for an iron bowl, a hole large enough to let liquid pass through; for the robes, a complete break at least the size of the fingernail of the small finger, located at least one handspan in from the long edge of the robe, and four fingerbreadths from the short edge of the lower robe, and eight fingerbreadths from the short edge of the upper and outer robes.

Once the robe or bowl develops a hole of this sort, it reverts to the status of an extra robe or bowl. If the owner still wishes to use it, the hole must be mended and article re-determined before ten days elapse. Otherwise, he is subject to the penalties imposed by NP 1 or 21.

***

V. Pali formulae: Shared ownership. The topic of shared ownership, together with the various controversies connected with it, are discussed in detail under Pacittiya 59. Here we will simply give the formulae.

There are two formulae for sharing ownership in the presence of the second owner. The first--taking as an example a piece of robe cloth within reach of the hand--is this:

Imam civaram tuyham vikappemi, meaning, "I share ownership of this robe cloth with you (plural)."

To place a bowl under shared ownership, change civaram to pattam. For more than one piece of robe cloth, change imam civaram to imani civarani. For more than one bowl, change imam pattam to ime patte. For articles beyond the reach of the hand, change imam to etam; imani to etani; and ime to ete.

The second formula--less formal than the first--is:

Imam civaram itthannamassa vikappemi, which means, "I share ownership of this robe cloth with so-and-so." Suppose, for example, that the person's name is Nando. If he is one's senior, change itthannamassa to Ayasmato Nandassa; if he is one's junior, change it to Nandassa Bhikkhuno; if he is a novice, change it to Nandassa Samanerassa. If he is very much one's senior, use the first formula, above. (Mv.I.74.1 shows that the tradition in the Buddha's time was not to use a very senior or respected person's name when referring to him.)

To share a bowl in this way, change civaram to pattam. Other changes, as called for, may be inferred from the previous formulae.

To place a piece of robe cloth under shared ownership with two persons who are absent, say to a witness:

Imam civaram vikappanatthaya tuyham dammi, which means, "I give this robe cloth to you to share." The witness should ask the original owner the names of two bhikkhus or novices who are his friends or acquaintances. In Pali, this is:

Ko te mitto va sandittho va.

After the original owner tells the names, the witness says:

Aham tesam dammi,

which means, "I give it to them."

To rescind the shared ownership, the Vibhanga says that the witness in the last case should say,

Tesam santakam paribhunja va vissajjehi va yathapaccayam va karohi,

which means, "Use what is theirs, give it away or do as you like with it."

As for cases in which the article is placed under shared ownership in the presence of the second owner, the Vibhanga gives no formula for rescinding the arrangement. The K/Commentary suggests that the second owner should say,

Mayham santakam paribhunja va vissajjehi va yatha-
paccayam va karohi,

which means, "Use what is mine, give it away or do as you like with it."

The Pubbasikkha Vannana, though, suggest the following formula (for robe cloth within reach, rescinded by a bhikkhu who is senior to the original owner):

Imam civaram mayham santakam paribhunja va vissajjehi va yatha-paccayam va karohi, which means, "Use this robe cloth of mine, give it away, etc." If the bhikkhu rescinding the shared ownership is junior to the original owner, the verb endings are more formal:

Imam civaram mayham santakam paribhunjatha va vissajjetha va yatha-paccayam va karotha.

For a bowl, change civaram to pattam. If more than one piece of robe cloth is involved, the formula begins, Imani civarani mayham santakani... If more than one bowl, Ime patte mayham santake... Changes for articles outside the reach of the hand may be inferred from those for the earlier formulae.

***

VI. Pali formulae: Forfeiture. As noted in the conclusion to the chapter on Nissaggiya Pacittiya rules, articles received in defiance of NP 18, 19 & 22 must be forfeited to a Community. The words of forfeiture in these cases are:

NP 18. For receiving gold and silver (money):

> Aham bhante rupiyam patiggahesim. Idam me nissaggiyam. Imaham sanghassa nissajjami.

This means, "Venerable sirs, I have received money. This of mine is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to the Community."

NP 19. For engaging in monetary exchange:

> Aham bhante nanappakarakam rupiya-sanvoharam samapajjim. Idam me nissaggiyam. Imaham sanghassa nissajjami.

This means, "Venerable sirs, I have engaged in various types of monetary exchange. This of mine is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to the Community."

NP 22. For asking for a new bowl when one's original bowl is still usable:

Ayam me bhante patto unapanca-bandhanena pattena cetapito nissaggiyo. Imaham sanghassa nissajjami.

This means, "This bowl of mine, venerable sirs, asked for when the (previous) bowl had less than five mends, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to the Community."

Articles used or received in violation of the remaining NP rules may be forfeited to the Community, to a group or to an individual. Here only the formulae for forfeiting to an individual will be given. Formulae for rules rarely broken--e.g., involving bhikkhunis or felted rugs--are not listed.

NP 1. For an extra robe kept beyond ten days.

Idam me bhante civaram dasahatikkantam nissaggiyam.
Imaham ayasmato nissajjami.

This means, "This robe (robe cloth) of mine, venerable sir, kept beyond ten days, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you." If the speaker is senior to the listener, change bhante to avuso. If many pieces of cloth are to be forfeited at once, the forms should be changed to plural:

Imani me bhante civarani dasahatikkantani nissaggiyani. Imanaham ayasmato nissajjami.

For robes beyond the reach of the hand, change idam to etam; imaham to etaham; imani to etani; and imanaham to etanaham. For example, for one robe, one would say:

Etam me bhante civaram dasahatikkantam nissaggiyam.
Etaham ayasmato nissajjami.

For more than one robe beyond the reach of the hand, one would say:

Etani me bhante civarani dasahatikkantani nissaggiyani.
Etanaham ayasmato nissajjami.

Once the offense has been confessed, the robe is to be returned to the original owner, using this formula:

Imam civaram ayasmato dammi, which means "I give this robe (cloth) to you."

For more than one piece:

Imani civarani ayasmato dammi.

Changes in the formula for robe cloth beyond the reach of the hand may be inferred from the preceding example. These two formulae for returning cloth are used in every case involving cloth, and will not be repeated below.

NP 2. For a robe separated from one for a night or more:

Idam me bhante civaram ratti-vippavuttham annatra bhikkhu-sammatiya nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This robe of mine, separated (from me) for a night without authorization of the bhikkhus, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you." Change civaram to dvi-civaram for two robes, and to ti-civaram for three. Other changes, as necessary, may be inferred from the formulae for rule #1, above. The formulae for returning the robe(s) are also given there.

NP 3. For an out-of-season robe kept more than a month:

Idam me bhante akala-civaram masatikkantam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This out-of-season robe of mine, venerable sir, kept beyond a month, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you." For more than one robe:

> Imani me bhante akala-civarani masatikkantani nissaggiyani. Imanaham ayasmato nissajjami.

Other changes, as necessary, may be inferred from the formulae for rule #1.

NP 6. For a robe requested from an unrelated householder:

> Idam me bhante civaram annatakam gahapattikam annatra samaya vinnapitam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This robe of mine, venerable sir, requested from an unrelated householder at other than the proper occasion, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

For more than one robe:

> Imani me bhante civarani annatakam gahapattikam annatra samaya vinnapitani nissaggiyani. Imanaham ayasmato nissajjami.

NP 7. For a robe requested from an unrelated householder during an allowable occasion, but beyond the allowable limit:

> Idam me bhante civaram annatakam gahapattikam taduttarim vinnapitam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This robe or mine, requested beyond that (allowable) from an unrelated householder, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

For more than one robe:

Imani me bhante civarani annatakam gahapattikam taduttarim vinnapitani nissaggiyani. Imanaham ayasmato nissajjami.

NP 8. For a robe received after making a stipulation to an unrelated householder:

Idam me bhante civaram pubbe appavarito annatakam gahapattikam upasankamitva civare vikappam apannam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "I having approached, without prior invitation, an unrelated householder, and made stipulations about a robe, venerable sir, this robe of mine is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

NP 9. For a robe received after making stipulations to two or more unrelated householders, use the same formula as for the preceding rule, changing annatakam gahapattikam to annatake gahapattike.

NP 10. For a robe received after reminding one's steward too many times:

Idam me bhante civaram atireka-tikkhattum codanaya atireka-chakkhattum thanena abhinipphaditam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This robe of mine, venerable sir, produced after more than three reminders, after more than six standings, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

NP 18 & 19. The formulae for these rules are given at the beginning of this appendix.

NP 20. For an article received in trade:

Aham bhante nanappakarakam kaya-vikayam samapajjim. Idam me nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami,

which means, "Venerable sir, I have engaged in various types of trade. This of mine is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

To return the article:

Imam ayasmato dammi,

which means, "I give this to you."

NP 21. For an extra bowl kept beyond ten days:

Ayam me bhante patto dasahatikkanto nissaggiyo.
Imaham ayasmato nissajjami,

which means, "This bowl of mine, venerable sir, kept beyond ten days, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

To return the bowl:

Imam pattam ayasmato dammi.

NP 22. The formula for this rule is given at the beginning of this appendix.

NP 23. For any of the five tonics kept beyond seven days:

Idam me bhante bhessajjam sattahatikkantam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This medicine of mine, venerable sir, kept beyond seven days, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

To return the medicine:

Imam bhesajjam ayasmato dammi.

NP 25. For a robe snatched back in anger:

Idam me bhante civaram bhikkhussa samam datva acchinnam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This robe of mine, venerable sir, snatched back after I myself gave it to a bhikkhu, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

NP 28. For a robe offered in urgency kept beyond the robe season:

Idam me bhante acceka-civaram civara-kala-samayam atikkantam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato nissajjami, which means, "This robe-offered-in-urgency of mine, venerable sir, kept beyond the robe season, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

NP 29. For a robe separated from one for more than six nights:

Idam me bhante civaram atireka-cha-rattam vippavuttham annatra bhikkhu-sammatiya nissaggiyam.
Imaham ayasmato nissajjami,

which means, "This robe of mine, separated (from me) for more than six nights without authorization of the bhikkhus, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

NP 30. For gains intended for the Community that one has diverted to oneself:

Idam me bhante janam sanghikam labham parinatam attano parinamitam nissaggiyam. Imaham ayasmato
nissajjami,

which means, "This gift, intended for the community, and knowingly diverted for myself, is to be forfeited. I forfeit it to you."

To return the article:

> Imam ayasmato dammi.

***

VII. Pali formulae: Confession. Six types of offense may be expiated through confession: thullaccaya, nissaggiya pacittiya, pacittiya, patidesaniya, dukkata and dubbhasita.

The formula for confessing a patidesaniya is given in the training rules themselves:

> Garayham avuso dhammam apajjim asappayam patidesaniyam. Tam patidesemi, which means, "Friend, I have committed a blameworthy, unsuitable act which ought to be acknowledged. I acknowledge it."

The five remaining types of offenses are confessed as follows: One arranges one's upper robe over the left shoulder, approaches another bhikkhu, kneels down, and with hands raised palm-to-palm in respect, repeats the formula of confession. The bhikkhu to whom the offense is to be confessed must be part of the Community--i.e., he does not belong to a schismatic faction, and has not been suspended--and he must not be guilty, without having made confession, of the same offense which one is confessing.

If all the bhikkhus in a particular residence are guilty of the same offense, one of them must go to another residence to confess the offense, and then return to let the remaining bhikkhus confess their offenses in his presence, or one after another in the presence of those who have already confessed. If this cannot be arranged, then on the day of the Patimokkha recitation, one of the bhikkhus should announce the fact of their common offense in the midst of the gathering. Only then may they go ahead with the recitation.

As bhikkhus are supposed to declare their purity of unconfessed offenses before listening to the Patimokkha, a bhikkhu who listens to the Patimokkha knowing that he has an unconfessed offense must tell one of his neighboring bhikkhus of the offense when the recitation comes to the relevant rule, and promise that he will confess it when the recitation is over. Otherwise, if he tells no one, he incurs a pacittiya for telling a conscious lie.

The Cullavagga (IV.14.30) gives a formula for confessing an offense in the presence of another bhikkhu:

Aham avuso itthannamam apattim apanno. Tam patidesemi, which means, "Friend, I have fallen into an offense of such-and-such a name. I confess it."

The bhikkhu acknowledging the confession says,

Passasi?

which means, "Do you see it (the offense)?"

The bhikkhu confessing the offense says,

Ama, passami,

which means, "Yes, I see it."

The bhikkhu acknowledging the confession then says,

Ayatim sanvareyyasi,

which means, "You should restrain yourself in the future."

The formula most generally used at present is expanded from this. The major changes include a vow, made by the confessant at the end of the exchange, that he will exercise restraint; and the inclusion of the words "many" and "of various sorts" to qualify offense(s) in the original confession. This latter change is to streamline the confession. Rather than confessing each offense of a particular class separately, one gathers them into a single statement. As one is allowed to confess more offenses than one has actually committed, and as it is possible in some cases to commit offenses unknowingly, the current formula has been adopted to cover such unwitting offenses.

Since the formula is repeated by every bhikkhu before the recitation of the Patimokkha, the procedure has become little more than a formality. The Vinaya Mukha thus recommends that a bhikkhu con-scious of having committed a particular offense should mention it to the other bhikkhu in their own language, before making use of the Pali formula.

If the bhikkhu making confession is junior to the one acknowledg-ing him, the exchange is as follows (taking thullaccaya offenses as an example):

Confessant: Aham bhante sambahula nana-vatthukayo thullaccayayo apattiyo apanno. Ta patidesemi.

Acknowledger: Passasi avuso?

C: Ama bhante, passami.

A: Ayatim avuso sanvareyyasi.

C: Sadhu sutthu bhante sanvarissami. (Three times.)

This last sentence means, "Very well, venerable sir, I will be restrained."

If the bhikkhu making confession is senior to the other bhikkhu, the exchange is as follows:

C: Aham avuso sambahula nana-vatthukayo thullaccayayo apattiyo apanno. Ta patidesemi.

A: Passatha bhante?

C: Ama avuso, passami.

A: Ayatim bhante sanvareyyatha.

C: Sadhu sutthu avuso sanvarissami. (Three times.)

For other categories of offenses, change thullaccayayo to nissaggiyayo pacittiyayo, pacittiyayo,

dukkatayo, or dubbhasitayo,

as the case may be. In confessing dubbhasita offenses, drop the word nana-vatthukayo, as there is only one rule in this class.

***

VIII.The pupil's duties as attendant to his mentor. As mentioned in Chapter 2, one is required to act as one's mentor's personal attendant if he does not already have one. There we sketched out these duties in general terms. What follows is a translation from Mv.I.25.8-19, which lays them out in very specific terms. Some Communities have their members follow these duties to the letter, others have adapted a number of them to fit in with what they see as changes in culture and technology (e.g., bathing practices now differ from what they were then). Even in the latter cases, though, it is useful to have the original standards down in writing, as practical guides to mindful action in daily life and sensitivity to one's mentor's needs, for the role of attendant is an excellent opportunity for learning the Dhamma and Vinaya in action on a day-to-day basis. A bhikkhu who approaches this role with the proper attitude will benefit greatly from it, much as Ven. Ananda benefited from the care and attention he brought to bear in attending to the Buddha.

In the following passages, statements in parentheses are from the Commentary, statements in brackets are my own.

Having gotten up early, having taken off his sandals, having arranged his upper robe over one shoulder, the pupil should provide tooth-cleaning sticks [see Pacittiya 40] and water for washing the face. (On the first three days when one is performing these services, one should provide the mentor with three lengths of tooth-cleaning sticks--long, medium and short--and notice which one he takes. If he takes the same length on all three days, provide him only with that length from then on in. If he is not particular about the length, provide him with whatever length is available. A similar principle holds for the water: On the first three days, provide him with both warm and cold water. If he consistently takes either the warm or the cold, provide him only with that kind of water from then on. If not, provide him with whatever water is available.) [The Commentary suggests that in "providing" these things, one need only set them out, rather than hand them to the mentor. Once they have been set out, one should proceed to sweep out the bathroom and its surrounding area while the mentor is using the tooth-cleaning sticks and water. Then, while the mentor is using the bathroom, one should proceed to the next step.]

Make a seat ready. If there is conjey, then having washed a bowl, place the conjey near the mentor. When he has drunk the conjey, then having given him water, having received the bowl, having lowered it [so as not to let the washing water wet one's robes], wash it properly without scraping it (i.e., knocking it against the floor) and then put it away. When the mentor has gotten up, remove the seat. If the place is soiled, sweep it.

If the mentor wishes to enter the village for alms, give him his lower robe , receiving the lower robe [he is wearing] from him in return. [This is one of the few passages which shows that the practice of having spare robes was already current in the time the Canon was being compiled.] Give him his belt; give him his upper and outer robe, arranged so that the upper robe forms a lining for the outer one. [] Having rinsed out the bowl, give it to him while it is still wet [i.e., don't dry it].

If the mentor desires an attendant, one should put on one's lower robe so as to cover the three circles all around (see Sekhiya 1 & 2). Having put on the belt, having put the upper and outer robes together and having put them on, having fastened the ties, having washed and taken a bowl, one should be the mentor's attendant. Do not walk too far behind him, do not walk too close. (One to two steps behind him is appropriate.) Receive the mentor's bowl and its contents. (If the mentor's bowl is heavy or hot to the touch, take his bowl and give him one's own bowl [which is presumably lighter or less hot to the touch] in return.)

Do not interrupt the mentor when he is speaking. If he is border-ing on an offense (e.g., Pacittiya 4 or Sanghadisesa 3), one should speak in an indirect way so as to call him to his senses. (These two duties apply everywhere, not only on alms-round.) [The Sub-commentary adds that, unlike the pupil's other duties, these must also be observed even when one is ill.]

Returning ahead of the mentor, one should make a seat ready. Set out

water for washing the feet, a foot scraper and a towel for drying the feet. Having gone to meet him, receive his bowl and robe. Give him his lower robe, receive the lower robe [that he has been wearing] in return. If the upper and outer robes are damp with perspiration, dry them for a short time in the sun's warmth, but do not leave them there long in the sun. Fold up the robes [separately, says the Sub-commentary], keeping the edges four fingerbreadths apart so that neither robe becomes creased in the middle. [One should follow the same practice in folding and hanging one's own robes.] Place the belt in the fold of the robe. [From these statements it would appear the bhikkhus in those days wore only their lower robes while inside their dwellings.]

If there is almsfood and the mentor wishes to eat, give him water and place the almsfood near him. Offer him drinking water. (If there is enough time before noon, one should wait by the mentor while he is eating in order to offer him drinking water, and eat one's own meal only when he is finished. If there is not enough time for this, one should simply set out the water and proceed to one's own meal.)

When he has finished eating, then having given him water, receive the bowl, lower it, and wash it properly without scraping it. Then, having emptied out the water, dry it for a short time in the sun's warmth, but do not leave it there long.

Put away the bowl and robes. When putting away the bowl, take the bowl in one hand, feel under the bed or bench with the other hand and place the bowl there, but do not place it on the bare ground (any place where it will get soiled). When putting away the robe, take the robe with one hand, stroke the other hand along the rod or cord for the robes [to check for any rough spots or splinters on the cord or rod which will rip the cloth], place the robe over the cord or rod with the edges away from one and the fold towards one. (The fold should not be placed on the side of the wall, for if there is a splinter in the wall, it may rip the robe in the middle [making its determination lapse]). [Again, one should follow these same practices in putting away one's own robe and bowl.]

When the mentor has gotten up, remove the seat. Put away the water for washing the feet, the foot-scraper and the towel for drying the feet. If the place is soiled, sweep it.

If the mentor wishes to bathe, prepare a bath. Prepare a cold bath if he wants a cold one, a hot bath if he wants a hot one.

If the mentor wishes to enter the sauna, knead the chunam (bathing powder), moisten the bathing clay, take a chair for the sauna and follow closely behind him. Give him the chair, receive his robe in return and lay it to one side (where there is no soot or smoke). Give him the chunam and clay. If one is able to, enter the sauna, having smeared one's face with the bathing clay and covering oneself front and back.

Sit so as not to encroach on the senior bhikkhus, at the same time not depriving the junior bhikkhus of a seat. Look after the mentor's needs (stoking the fire, providing him with clay and hot water). When he is leaving the sauna, take the chair and, covering oneself front and back, leave the sauna. Provide the mentor with bathing water. When both have bathed, the pupil should come out of the water first, dry himself and put on his lower robe. Then he should dry off his mentor, give him his lower robe and then his outer robe.

Taking the chair, the pupil should return first, make ready a seat, put out water for washing the feet, a foot-scraper and a towel for drying the feet. When the mentor has sat down, offer him drinking water.

If the mentor wants one to recite (memorize passages of Dhamma or Vinaya), one should recite. If he wants to interrogate one (on the meaning of the passages) one should answer his interrogation.

If the place where the mentor is staying is soiled, the pupil should clean it if he is able to. First take out the bowl and robe and lay them to one side. Take out the sitting cloth and the sheet, and lay them to one side. Then take out the mattress and pillow and lay them to one side.

Having lowered the bed [from its supports], take it out properly, without scraping it (along the floor) or knocking it against the door or door posts, and then lay it to one side. Lower the bench, take it out properly without scraping it (along the floor) or knocking it against the door or the door posts and lay it to one side. Take out the supports for the bed and lay them to one side. Take out the spittoon and lay it to one side. Take out the reclining board [a board or stone for resting the head, arms or elbows] and lay it to one side. Take out the ground-covering, after observing how it was laid down, and put it to one side.

If there are cobwebs, sweep them out, starting from the ceiling and working down. Wipe the windows, the doors and the corners. If the wall or floor have become mouldy, moisten a rag, wring it out and wipe them with it. [] If the floor of the room is bare ground, sprinkle it all over with water before sweeping it, so that the dust does not fly up and soil the room. Look for any rubbish and throw it away.

Having dried the ground-covering in the sun, clean it, shake it out, bring it back in and lay it down as it was laid down before. Having dried the supports for the bed in the sun, wipe them, bring them back, and place them where they were before. Having dried the bed... the bench in the sun, clean them, shake them out, lower them, bring them back in properly without scraping them (against the floor) or knocking them against the door or door posts, and place them where they were placed before. Having dried the mattress and pillow in the sun, clean them, shake them out, bring them back in and place them where they were before. Having dried the sitting cloth and sheet in the sun, clean them, shake them out, bring them back in and place them where they were before. Having dried the spittoon in the sun, wipe it, bring it back in and place it where it was before. Having dried the reclining board in the sun, wipe it, bring it back in and place it where it was before. [One should follow these same procedures in cleaning one's own room.]

Put away the bowl and robes [as above].

If dusty winds blow from the east, close the eastern windows. If from the west, close the western windows. If from the north, close the northern windows. If from the south, close the southern windows. If the weather is cool, open the windows by day and close them at night. If the weather is hot, close them by day and open them at night. [Again, one should follow these same procedures in looking after one's own room.]

If a courtyard is dirty, sweep it. () If a porch...attendance hall...fire hall (sauna)..restroom is dirty, sweep it. If there is no drinking water, provide it. If there is no washing water, provide it. If there is no water in the pitcher for rinsing [in the restroom], pour it into the pitcher.

***

As noted in Chapter 2, a pupil who is not ill is expected to perform these services for his mentor, unless the mentor tells him that he already has another pupil acting as his attendant, or the other pupil says that he will accept responsibility for them. On the other hand, if the pupil is ill, the mentor is expected to perform these services for the pupil until he recovers. This reflects the Buddha's statement that the pupil should regard the mentor as his father; and the mentor, the pupil as his son. If both bear this relationship in mind, they are sure to prosper in the practice of the Dhamma-Vinaya.

CHAPTER TWO

Nissaya

The Dhamma and Vinaya touch on so many areas of one's life in such detail that no new bhikkhu can be expected to master them in a short time. For this reason, the Buddha arranged a period of appren-ticeship--called nissaya, or dependence--in which every newly ordained bhikkhu must train under the guidance of an experienced bhikkhu for at least five years, before he can be considered competent to look after himself.

This apprenticeship has formed the human context in which the practice of the Buddha's teachings has been passed down for the past 2,600 years. To overlook it is to miss one of the basic parameters of the life of the Dhamma and Vinaya. Thus we are here discussing it first, before going on to the rules of the Patimokkha.

Dependence is of two sorts: dependence on one's preceptor (upajjhaya), and dependence on a teacher (acariya). The relationships are similar--and in many details, identical--so the following discussion will use the word "mentor" to cover both preceptor and teacher wherever the pattern applies to both, and will distinguish them only where the patterns differ.

Choosing a mentor. Before ordination, one must choose a bhikkhu to act as one's preceptor. The Mahavagga (I.36-37) gives a long list of qualifications a bhikkhu must meet before he can act as a preceptor, while the Commentary divides the list into two levels: ideal and minimal qualifications. A bhikkhu who lacks the minimal qualifications incurs a dukkata if he acts as a preceptor; a bhikkhu who meets the minimal but lacks the ideal qualifications is not an ideal person to give guidance, but he incurs no offense in doing so.

The ideal qualifications: The preceptor should have an arahant's virtue, concentration, discernment, release and knowledge of release; and be able to train another person to the same level of attainment. He should have faith, a sense of shame, fear of evil, persistence in the practice and quick mindfulness (according to the Sub-commentary, this means that he is constantly mindful of whatever mental object is before the mind). He should be free of heavy and light offenses, and be possessed of right view. (This last point, the Commentary says, means that he does not adhere to the extremes of eternalism or annihilationism.) He should be competent to tend to a sick pupil, or to find someone who will tend to him, and to allay dissatisfaction in a pupil who wants to leave the celibate life.

The Mahavagga does not say outright that these are ideal, as opposed to minimal, qualifications, but the Commentary offers as proof the fact that one of a pupil's duties is to try to allay any dis-satisfaction that may arise in his preceptor. If all preceptors were arahants, no case of this sort would ever arise, and there would be no need to mention it. Thus the Commentary concludes that arahantship, although ideal in a preceptor, is not necessary.

The minimal qualifications: The preceptor must be learned and intelligent. According to the Commentary, this means that he knows enough of the Dhamma and Vinaya to govern a following, and is intelligent enough to know what is and is not an offense. He must be competent enough to allay any anxiety a pupil may have over the rules, know what is and is not an offense, what is a light offense, what is a heavy offense, and how an offense may be removed. He must have detailed knowledge of both Patimokkhas (the one for the bhikkhus and the one for the bhikkhunis), and be able to train the pupil in the bhikkhus' customs (Com.: this means that he knows the Khandhakas), in the basic rules of the chaste life (Sub-com.: he knows both Vibhangas), the higher Dhamma and the higher Vinaya. He must be able to dissuade his pupil from adhering to a wrong view, or find someone who will help dissuade him. And--the most basic requirement--he must have been ordained as a bhikkhu for ten years or more.

If, for some reason, the new bhikkhu lives in a separate monas-tery from his preceptor, he must take dependence under a teacher. The qualifications for a teacher are precisely the same as those for a preceptor. Since the Mahavagga (I.72.1) gives a dukkata for taking dependence with an unconscientious bhikkhu, the new bhikkhu is allowed four to five days to observe his potential teacher's conduct before taking dependence under him. (Mv.I.72.2)

Taking dependence. Prior to his ordination--and usually, as part of the ceremony itself--the candidate must make a formal request for dependence from his preceptor. The procedure is as follows:

Arranging his upper robe over his left shoulder, leaving his right shoulder bare, he bows down to the preceptor and then, kneeling with his hands palm-to-palm in front of his heart, repeats the following passage three times:

> Upajjhayo me bhante hohi,

which means, "Venerable sir, be my preceptor."

If the preceptor responds with any of these words--Sadhu (very well), lahu (certainly), opayikam (all right), patirupam (it is proper) or pasadikena sampadehi (manage it amiably)--the dependence has taken hold. The Vibhanga adds that if the preceptor indicates any of these meanings by gesture, that also counts; and according to the Commentary, the same holds true if he makes any equivalent statement. (Mv.I.25.7)

If, after his ordination, the new bhikkhu needs to request dependence from a teacher, the procedure is the same, except that the request he makes three times is this:

> Acariyo me bhante hohi; ayasmato nissaya vacchami, which means, "Venerable sir, be my teacher; I will live in dependence on you." (Mv.I.32.2)

Duties. The Mahavagga (I.25.6; 32.1) states that a pupil should regard his mentor as a father; and the mentor, the pupil as his son. It then goes on to delineate this relationship as a set of reciprocal duties.

The pupil's duties to his mentor fall into the following five categories:

1. Attending to the mentor's personal needs. The Mahavagga goes into great detail on this topic, giving precise instructions dealing with every conceivable way a pupil can be of service to his mentor. The Vinaya Mukha tries to reduce these duties to a few general prin-ciples, but this misses much of what the Mahavagga has to offer, for it is in the details that we can see fine examples of mindfulness in action--the best way to fold a robe, clean a dwelling and so forth--as well as indications of how one can use this aspect of one's training to develop sensitivity to the needs of others. Still, the detailed instruc-tions are so extensive that they would overburden the discussion in this chapter, so I have saved them for Appendix VIII. Here I will simply give them in outline form. The pupil should:

a. Arrange his mentor's toiletries for his morning wash-up.

b. Arrange his seat and food for his morning conjey (if he has any), and clean up after he is finished.

c. Arrange his robes and bowl for his alms round.

d. Follow him on his alms round, if the mentor so desires, and take his robes and bowl when he returns.

e. Arrange his seat and food for his alms meal, and clean up afterwards.

f. Prepare his bath. If he goes to the sauna, go with him and attend to his needs.

g. Study the Dhamma and Vinaya from him when he is prepared to teach. (The Mahavagga describes this as "recitation" and "interrogation".

Recitation, according to the Commentary, means learning to memo-rize passages; interrogation, learning to investigate their meaning.)

h. Clean his dwelling and other parts of his dwelling complex, such as the restroom and storage rooms, when they get dirty.

2. Assisting the mentor in any problems he may have with regard to the Dhamma and Vinaya. The Mahavagga lists the following examples:

a. If the preceptor begins to feel dissatisfaction with the chaste life, the pupil should try to allay that dissatisfaction, or find someone else who can.

b. If the preceptor begins to feel anxiety over his conduct with regard to the rules, the pupil should try to allay that anxiety, or find someone else who can.

c. If the preceptor begins to hold to wrong views, the pupil should try to dissuade him from those views, or find someone else who can.

d. If the preceptor has committed a sanghadisesa offense, the pupil should--to the best of his ability--help with the arrangements for penance, probation and rehabilitation, or find someone else who can.

e. If the Community is going to carry out a formal act against the mentor, the pupil should try to dissuade them from it. According to the Commentary, this means that he should go to the various members of the Community individually before the meeting and try to dissuade them from going through with the act. If he can't dissuade them, he should try to get them to lessen its severity (say, from an act of banishment to an act of censure). If they are justified in carrying out the act, though, he should not object while the meeting is in progress. Once they have carried out the act, he should concentrate on helping his mentor behave so that they will rescind the act as quickly as possible.

3. Washing, making and dyeing the mentor's robes.

4. Showing loyalty and respect for the mentor.

a. The pupil should neither give or receive gifts, nor give or receive services to/from others without first obtaining the mentor's permission. According to the Commentary, others here refers to people who are on bad terms with the mentor.

b. The pupil should obtain his mentor's permission before entering a village, going to a cemetery (to meditate, says, the Commentary), or leaving the district in which they live. The Commentary notes here, though, that if the mentor refuses one's request the first time, one should ask up to two more times, presenting one's reasons as best one can. If the mentor still refuses, the pupil should reflect on his situation. If staying with the mentor is not helping his education and meditation, and if the mentor seems to want him to stay simply to have someone to look after his (the mentor's) needs, the pupil is justified in leaving and taking dependence with a new mentor in his new residence.

5. Caring for the mentor when he falls ill, not leaving him until he either recovers or passes away. (Mv.I.25)

According to the Commentary, a pupil is freed from these duties when he is ill. Otherwise, he should observe all the above duties to his preceptor as long as he is in dependence on him, and the duties in sections 1-3 even after he is released from dependence, as long as both he and the preceptor are alive and still ordained.

As for the duties to one's teacher, the Commentary lists four types of teachers: the going-forth teacher (the one who gives one the ten precepts during one's ordination ceremony); the acceptance teacher (the one who chants the motion and announcements during the ceremony); the Dhamma teacher (the one who teaches one Pali and the Canon); and the dependence teacher (the one with whom one lives in dependence). With the dependence teacher, one must observe all the above duties only as long as one is living in dependence on him. As for the other three, one should observe sections 1-3 as long as both parties are alive and still ordained.

The Commentary adds that if the mentor already has a pupil who is performing these duties for him, he may inform his remaining pupils that they need not take them on. This exempts them from having to observe them. If he neglects to do this, the pupil who is performing the duties may inform his fellow that he will take responsi-bility for looking after the mentor. This also exempts them. Otherwise, they incur a dukkata for every duty they neglect to perform.

The mentor's duties to his pupil.

1. Furthering the pupil's education, teaching him the Dhamma and Vinaya through recitation, interrogation, exhortation and instruction.

2. Providing requisites for the pupil. If the pupil lacks any of his basic requisites, and the mentor has any to spare, he should make up the lack.

3. Attending to the pupil's personal needs when he is ill, performing the services mentioned in section 1 under the pupil's duties to his mentor.

4. Assisting the pupil in any problems he may have with regard to the Dhamma and Vinaya, performing the services mentioned in section 2 under the pupil's duties to his mentor.

5. Teaching the pupil how to wash, make and dye robes. If for some reason the pupil is unable to handle these skills, the mentor should find someone who can help the pupil with them.

6. Caring for the pupil when he falls ill, not leaving him until he either recovers or passes away. (Mv.I.26)

According to the Commentary, the preceptor, going-forth teacher and acceptance teacher must observe these duties towards the pupil as long as both parties are alive and still ordained. As for the Dhamma and dependence teachers, they must observe these duties only as long as the pupil is living with them.

Dismissal. If the pupil does not observe his duties to his mentor, the mentor is empowered to dismiss him. In fact, if the pupil deserves dismissal, the mentor incurs a dukkata if, for some reason, he does not dismiss him, just as he would for dismissing a pupil who did not deserve it. (MV.I.27.5-8) The grounds for dismissal are five:

1. The pupil has no affection for his mentor--i.e., he shows him no kindness.

2. He has no faith in his mentor--i.e., he does not regard him as an example to follow.

3. He has no shame in front of his mentor--i.e., he openly disregards the training rules in his mentor's presence.

4. He has no respect for his mentor--i.e., he does not listen to what the mentor has to say, and openly disobeys him.

5. He is not developing under his mentor--the Commentary translates developing here as developing a sense of good will for his mentor, but it could also mean developing in his general education and practice of the Dhamma and Vinaya.

The Vinaya Mukha notes that the mentor should reflect on his own conduct before dismissing such a pupil. If he has done anything that would give the pupil valid reason for losing affection, etc., he should first correct his own conduct. Only after reflecting that there is no longer anything in his own conduct that would give the pupil valid reason to disregard him should the pupil be dismissed.

The Mahavagga mentions each of the following statements as a valid dismissal: "I dismiss you." "Don't come back here." "Take away your robes and bowl." "Don't attend to me." It also states that if the mentor makes any of these meanings known by gesture--e.g. he evicts the pupil from his quarters, and throws his robes and bowl out after him--that also counts as a valid dismissal. (Mv.I.27.2) The Commentary adds that any statement conveying the same basic meaning as those above would count as well.

Once a pupil has been dismissed, it is his duty to apologize. If he doesn't, he incurs a dukkata. (Mv.I.27.3) Once the pupil has apolo-gized, the mentor's duty is to forgive him. (Mv.I.27.4) If, however, he sees that the pupil is still unconscientious, he should not take him back, for a mentor who takes on an unconscientious pupil incurs a dukkata. (Mv.I.72.1.) Thus the mentor may, if he sees fit, inflict a non-physical punishment on the pupil before taking him back on the original footing, to make sure that he has actually seen the error of his ways. An example of such punishment, mentioned in the Vinaya Mukha, is simply asking to wait to observe the pupil's behavior for a while to see whether or not his apology is sincere.

The Commentary recommends that if the mentor refuses to forgive the pupil, the latter should try to get other bhikkhus in the monastery to intercede for him. If that doesn't work, he should go stay in another monastery and take dependence under a senior bhikkhu there who is on friendly terms with the mentor, in hopes that the mentor will take this as a sign of the pupil's good intentions and will eventually grant his forgiveness.

Dependence lapses. Mv.I.36.1 says that if a pupil is staying in dependence with his preceptor, the dependence lapses if:

1. He leaves. According to the Sub-commentary, this means that the preceptor goes to spend the night outside the monastery, regard-less of whether or not he plans to return.

2. He disrobes.

3. He dies.

4. He goes over to another side--according to the Commentary, this means that he joins another religion.

In all of the above cases, the commentaries interpret "he" as referring to the preceptor, although it would seem to refer to the pupil as well. This would fit with the passages from the Mahavagga, to be mentioned below, that refer to a new bhikkhu on a journey as not being in dependence. In such cases, the new bhikkhu is most likely the one who has left the preceptor, and his leaving is what has caused the dependence to lapse.

5. He gives a command. This is the one alternative where "he" clearly refers only to the preceptor. The Commentary interprets "command" here as dismissal, as discussed above, although the Vinaya Mukha would also include cases where the preceptor sees that the pupil qualifies to be released from dependence (see below) and tells him so.

In each of these cases, a pupil who is not yet released from depen-dence must find someone else to take dependence with on that very day, except in the following instances (taken from the Commentary):

--The preceptor leaves, saying that he will be away only for a day or two, and that the pupil need not ask anyone else for dependence in the meantime. If it so happens that the preceptor's return is delayed, he should send word to his pupil, saying that he still intends to come back. If, however, the pupil receives word from his preceptor that the latter no longer intends to return, he should immediately look for a teacher to take dependence with.

--The preceptor leaves, and the only other senior bhikkhu in the monastery is one whom the pupil does not know well. In this case, the pupil is allowed four or five days to observe the senior bhikkhu's behavior (as mentioned above) before requesting dependence from him. If, though, the pupil already knows the senior bhikkhu well enough to feel confident in his conduct, he should take dependence with him on the day of his preceptor's departure.

If the pupil is staying in dependence on a teacher, the dependence can lapse for any of six reasons. The first five are identical with those above, although even the Commentary states that "he leaves", the first reason, applies not only to cases where the teacher leaves, but also to cases where the pupil leaves. The sixth reason is:

6. The pupil rejoins his preceptor. The Commentary interprets this by saying that, in effect, the pupil's original dependence on his precep-tor always overrides his dependence on a teacher. If the pupil happens to see his preceptor and recognize him, or to hear and recognize his voice--even if they just happen to pass on the street--his dependence on his teacher automatically lapses, and his dependence on his preceptor is reinstated. If he then returns to live with his teacher, he must ask for dependence from the teacher all over again.

The Vinaya Mukha objects to his judgment, saying that "rejoins the preceptor" should refer to the pupil's actually living with the precep-tor, either in another monastery or in the same monastery where the teacher lives. This, however, is an area where different Communities differ in their interpretation, and the wise policy is to follow the interpretation of the Community in which one lives.

Temporary exemption from dependence. Normally a junior bhikkhu is required to live in dependence under a mentor at all times. However, Mv.I.73 allows him not to take dependence when living in the following situations if no qualified bhikkhu is available as a mentor:

1) He is on a journey.

2) He is ill.

3) He is caring for an ill person who has requested his help ().

4) He is living alone in the forest, meditating comfortably, intending to take dependence if a qualified mentor comes along.

The Commentary, in discussing these allowances, makes the following points:

1) A bhikkhu on a journey is said to have no mentor available if no qualified senior bhikkhu is traveling with him. In other words, the fact that he happens to pass by a monastery with a qualified mentor does not mean that a mentor is available, and he is allowed to continue traveling without taking dependence. If, however, he spends the night in a place where he has taken dependence before, he should take dependence on the day of his arrival. If he reaches a place where he has never been before, and plans to spend only two or three days, he need not take dependence; but if he plans to spend a week, he must. If the senior bhikkhu he requests dependence from says, "What's the use of taking dependence for only a week?" that exempts him from this requirement.

As for the bhikkhu living in the forest, the Commentary says that "meditating comfortably" means that his tranquility and insight meditation are going smoothly. For some reason, though, it says that this allowance applies only to bhikkhus whose meditation is at a tender stage, and might deteriorate if they were to leave the forest; if a bhikkhu has attained any of the Noble Attainments--beginning with Stream-entry--he may not make use of this allowance. Why the Commentary limits the allowance in this way, it doesn't say.

At any rate, once the month before the Rains Retreat arrives, and no suitable mentor shows up, the junior bhikkhu must leave his forest abode and look for a place where he can take dependence for the Rains.

Release from dependence. According to Mv.I.53.4, a bhikkhu may be released from dependence after he has been ordained for five years, on the condition that he be experienced and competent. If he is not yet experienced and competent, he must remain under depen-dency until he is. If he never becomes experienced and competent, he must remain in dependence for his entire life as a bhikkhu. The Commentary adds that, in the last case, if he cannot find a competent experienced bhikkhu who is senior to him, he must take dependence with a competent, experienced bhikkhu who is his junior.

To be considered competent and experienced enough to deserve release from dependence, a bhikkhu must meet many of the same general qualifications as those for a mentor, except that he need not possess the competence to look after a pupil, and the minimum number of years he needs as a bhikkhu is five. None of the texts divide the qualifications here into ideal and minimal qualifications, as they do for the mentor, but it seems reasonable that the same division would apply here as well. This would give us the following list:

The ideal qualifications: The bhikkhu should have an arahant's virtue, concentration, discernment, release and knowledge of release. He should have faith, a sense of shame, fear of evil, persistence in the practice and quick mindfulness. He should be free of heavy and light offenses, and possess of right view.

The minimal qualifications: The bhikkhu must be learned and intelligent, knowing both Patimokkhas in detail, understanding what is and is not an offense, what is a light offense, what is a heavy offense, and how an offense may be removed. And--the most basic requirement--he must have been ordained as a bhikkhu for at least five years. (Mv.I.5-13)

The Commentary expands on the term learned here, saying that the bhikkhu must have memorized:

1. Both Patimokkhas.

2. The Four Bhanavaras--a set of auspicious chants that are still regularly memorized in Sri Lanka.

3. A discourse that is helpful as a guide for sermon-giving. (The Commentary lists as examples the Maha-Rahulovada Sutta [M. 62], the Andhaka-vinda Sutta and the Ambattha Sutta [D. 3].)

4. Three kinds of anumodana (rejoicing in the merit of others) chants: for meals; for auspicious merit-making ceremonies, such as blessing a house; and for non-auspicious ceremonies, i.e., any relating to a death.

The Commentary adds that he must also know the rules for such official acts of the Sangha as the Patimokkha recitation and the Invitation Ceremony at the end of the Rains; and be acquainted with themes for tranquility and insight meditation leading to arahantship.

This definition of "learned" is not universally accepted, and some traditions have reworked it. As this is another area where different Communities have different interpretations, the wise policy is to adhere to the practice followed in one's Community, as long as it follows the basic requirements in the Canon, mentioned above.

Once a pupil has been released from dependence, he need no longer perform the duties mentioned in sections 4 and 5 under the pupil's duties to his mentor.

Return to dependence. The Cullavagga (I.9-12) states that a bhikkhu released from dependence may be forced, by a formal act of the Community, to return to dependence if his conduct is so bad as to warrant it. The qualifying factors are:

1. He is ignorant and inexperienced.

2. He is full of offenses and has not made amends for them.

3. He lives in unbecoming association with laypeople.

If these factors apply to a bhikkhu to the extent that the Community is "fed up with granting him probation, sending him back to the beginning, imposing penance and rehabilitating him"--these terms refer to the procedures for dealing with a bhikkhu who has committed repeated sanghadisesa offenses (see Chapter 5)--then the Community is justified in imposing a formal "act of dependence" on him. This is identical with a formal "act for further misbehavior", to be discussed under Chapter 11, and carries the same penalties, the only difference being that the bhikkhu must live in dependence under a mentor as long as the act of dependence is in effect. If he mends his ways to the Community's satisfaction, they may rescind the act and return his independence.

***

At any rate, as we mentioned above, regardless of whether a pupil is under dependence or released from it, he is still expected to observe certain duties to his preceptor--and his preceptor, certain duties to him--as long as both are alive and ordained. This is in line with the fact that they are always to regard each other as father and son: The preceptor is to take a continuing interest in his pupil's welfare, and the pupil is to show his continuing gratitude for the initiation his preceptor has given him into the bhikkhu's life.

CHAPTER THREE

Disrobing

The first rule in the Patimokkha opens with the statement that it--and, by extension, every other rule in the Patimokkha--applies to all bhikkhus who have not disrobed by renouncing the training and returning to the lay life. Thus the Vibhanga begins its explanations by discussing what does and does not count as a valid act of disrobing. Because this is, in effect, the escape clause for all the rules, I am discussing it first as a separate chapter, for if a bhikkhu disrobes in an invalid manner, he still counts as a bhikkhu and is subject to the rules whether he realizes it or not. If he then were to break any of the Parajika rules, he would be disqualified from ever becoming a bhikkhu again in this lifetime.

To disrobe, a bhikkhu with firm intent states in the presence of a witness words to the effect that he is renouncing the training. The validity of the act depends on four factors:

1. The bhikkhu's state of mind.

2. His intention.

3. His statement.

4. The witness to his statement.

State of mind. The bhikkhu must be in his right mind. Any statement he makes while insane, crazed with pain or possessed by spirits does not count.

Intention. He must seriously desire to leave the Community. If, without actually intending to disrobe, he makes any of the state-ments usually used for disrobing, it does not count as an act of disrobing. For example, if he makes the statement in jest or is telling someone else how to disrobe, the fact that he mentions the words does not mean that he has disrobed. Also, if he says one thing and means something else--e.g., if he makes a slip of the tongue--that too does not count.

The statement. The Vibhanga gives a wide variety of statements that may be used to renounce the training. The most basic one follows the form, "I renounce x," where x may be replaced with the Buddha, the Dhamma, the Sangha, the training, the discipline (vinaya) the Patimokkha, the chaste life, one's preceptor, one's teacher, one's fellow bhikkhus, or any equivalent terms. Other examples follow similar forms, such as, "I am tired of x," "What is x to me?" "X means nothing to me," or "I am well freed of x." A separate form follows the pattern, "I will be y," where y may be replaced with a householder, a lay follower, a novice, a member of another sect, an adherent of another sect, or any other equivalent term.

The Vibhanga stipulates that the statement may not be put in the conditional tense ("Suppose I were to renounce the training,") and the Commentary further stipulates that the "x" statements must be in the present tense. Thus to say, "I have renounced the training," or "I will renounce the training," would not be a valid statement of disrobing.

The witness must be a human being in his or her right mind, and must understand what the bhikkhu says. This rules out the practice legendary in Thailand of bhikkhus who disrobe by taking a Buddha image as their witness, or who disrobe in front of a tree on the assumption that the tree deity counts.

These four factors cover all that is absolutely necessary for an act of disrobing to be valid. However, each of the different national traditions has developed a set of formal ceremonies to surround the act--such as making a final confession of all one's offenses and recit-ing the passage for reflection on one's past use of the four requisites--to give psychological weight to the occasion, and to help minimize any sense of remorse one may feel afterwards.

Because disrobing is a serious act with strong consequences for one's mental and spiritual well being, it should be done only after due consideration. Once a bhikkhu decides that he does want to disrobe, he would be wise to follow not only the stipulations given in the texts, but also any additional customs dictated by the traditions of his particular Community, as a sign to himself and to others that he is acting seriously and with due respect both for the religion and for himself.

CHAPTER FOUR

Parajika

This term, according to the Parivara, derives from a verb meaning to lose or be defeated. A bhikkhu who commits any of the four following offenses has surrendered to his own mental defilements to such an extent that he defeats the purpose of his having become a bhikkhu in the first place. The irrevocable nature of this defeat is illustrated in the Vibhanga by a number of similes: "as a man with his head cut off...as a withered leaf freed from its stem...as a flat stone that has been broken in half cannot be put together again...as a palm tree cut off at the crown is incapable of further growth." A bhikkhu who commits any of these offenses severs himself irrevocably from the life of the community and is no longer considered a bhikkhu.

1. Should any bhikkhu--participating in the training and livelihood of the bhikkhus, without having renounced the training, without having declared his weakness--engage in the sexual act, even with a female animal, he is defeated and no longer in communion.

Effort. In this rule, the term "sexual act" refers to all kinds of sexual intercourse. The Vibhanga classifies the various types inter-course by the organs involved--the genitals, the mouth, the anus--and in any of the possible combinations (except for mouth-to-mouth, which is treated separately under Sanghadisesa 2, below) the sexual act has been performed when one organ enters the other even if just to "the extent of a sesame seed." This means that a bhikkhu engag-ing in genital, oral or anal intercourse is subject to this rule regardless of which role he plays. Whether or not there is a covering, such as a condom, between the organs is irrelevant, as are the questions of whether the bhikkhu is actively or passively involved, and whether or not any of the parties involved reaches orgasm.

Object. The full penalty under this rule applies to any voluntary sexual intercourse with a human being, a "non-human" being (a yakkha, naga or peta) or a common animal, whether female, male, neuter or hermaphrodite.

Performing the sexual act with a dead body--even a decapitated head--also incurs the full penalty if the remains of the body are intact enough for the act to be accomplished.

The Vinita Vatthu also lists two examples of "self-intercourse": a bhikkhu with a supple back takes his penis into his mouth, and a bhikkhu with an unusually long penis inserts it into his anus. Both cases come under the term "sexual act" and carry the full penalty.

Knowledge & consent. For the sexual act to count as an offense, the bhikkhu must know that it is happening and give his consent. Thus if he is sexually assaulted while asleep or otherwise unconscious and remains oblivious to what is happening, he incurs no penalty. If, however, he becomes conscious during the assault, or was conscious even before the assault began, then whether or not he incurs a penalty depends on whether or not he gives his consent during any part of the sexual act.

Strangely enough, neither the Canon nor the Commentary discusses the factor of consent in any detail, except to mention by way of passing that it can apply to the stage of inserting, being fully inserted, staying in place or pulling out. From the examples given in the Vinita Vatthu, it would appear that consent refers to a mental state of taking pleasure, rather than mere physical compliance, as there are cases where bhikkhus forced into intercourse comply physically but without consenting mentally, and so are absolved of any offense.

The Vinita Vatthu contains a case where a bhikkhu wakes up to find himself being sexually assaulted by a woman, gives her a kick and sends her rolling. The Commentary states that his is how a bhikkhu still subject to sensual lust should act if he wants to preserve his state of mind. In another case, a bhikkhu who, without consent-ing, is forced by a group of Licchavi youths into having intercourse with a woman, is later absolved of any offense. Unfortunately, neither the Canon nor the Commentary tells how he was able to preserve his state of mind throughout the encounter. Perhaps he was adept at the cemetery contemplations. At any rate, the mere fact of his being forced was not what absolved him, as there are parallel cases of bhikkhus who are forced by Licchavi youths into intercourse with a variety of women, men and eunuchs but who give their consent, and so incur the full penalty. All the Commentary has to say is that this sort of behavior is what led to the downfall of the Licchavis.

Derived offenses. The derived offenses here are as follows: The only thullaccaya directly related to this rule is for the unlikely case of a bhikkhu who attempts intercourse with the decomposed mouth, anus or genitals of a corpse. (!) To attempt intercourse with any other part of a dead body or with any part of an insentient object, such as an inflatable doll or mannikin, incurs a dukkata.

The Vibhanga states that if a bhikkhu attempts intercourse with any part of a living being's body apart from the three orifices, the case falls under the Sanghadisesa rules -- either Sanghadisesa 1 for intentional ejaculation, or Sanghadisesa 2 for lustful bodily contact. As we shall see below, the penalties assigned in the latter case are as follows: if the partner is a woman, a sanghadisesa; if a pandaka (see Sanghadisesa 2), a thullaccaya; if a man or a common animal, a dukkata. We can infer from the Vibhanga's ruling here that if a bhikkhu has an orgasm while attempting intercourse with the decomposed mouth, anus or genitals of a corpse, any other part of a dead body or with any part of an insentient object, the case comes under Sanghadisesa 1.

The Commentary disagrees with the Vibhanga on these points, however, saying that the derived offenses under this rule can include only dukkata and thullaccaya penalties. In its explanation of Sanghadisesa 1, it sets forth a system of eleven types of lust in which the lust for the pleasure of bringing about an ejaculation, lust for the pleasure of bodily contact and lust for the pleasure of intercourse are treated as completely separate things, and must be treated under separate rules. Thus, it says, if a bhikkhu is aiming at intercourse and takes hold of a woman's body, it is simply a preliminary to intercourse and thus incurs only a dukkata, rather than a sangha-disesa for lustful bodily contact. Similarly, if he has a premature ejaculation before beginning intercourse, there is no offense at all.

These are fine academic distinctions, and are clearly motivated by a desire to draw neat lines between the rules, but they lead to practical problems. As the Commentary itself points out, if a bhikkhu commits an act that falls near the borderline between these rules, but cannot later report precisely which type of lust he was feeling in the heat of the moment, there is no way his case can be judged and a penalty assigned. At any rate, there is no basis in the Canon for the Commentary's system, and in fact it contradicts not only the Vibhanga's ruling mentioned above, but also its definition of "lustful" under Sanghadisesas 2, 3, and 4, which is exactly the same for all three rules and places no limits on the type of lust involved. All of this leads to the conclusion that the Commentary's neat system is invalid, and that the Vibhanga's judgment holds.

Blanket exemptions. In addition to bhikkhus who do not know they are being assaulted or do not give their consent when they do know, the Vibhanga states that there are four special categories of bhikkhus exempted from a penalty under this rule: any bhikkhu who is insane, possessed by spirits, delirious with pain, or the first offender (in this case, Ven. Sudinna) whose actions prompted the Buddha to formulate the rule in the first place. The Commentary notes that anyone who "goes about in an unseemly way, with deranged perceptions, having cast away all sense of conscience and shame, not knowing whether he has transgressed major or minor training rules" counts as insane here. It recognizes this as a medical condition, which it blames on the bile. As for spirit possession, it says that this can happen either when spirits frighten one, or when by distracting one with sensory images they insert their hands into one's heart by way of one's mouth. (!) At any rate, it notes, insane and possessed bhikkhus are exempt from penalties they incur only when their perceptions are deranged ("when their mindfulness is entirely forgotten, and they don't know what fire, gold, excrement and sandalwood are") and not from any they incur during their lucid moments. As for a bhikkhu overcome with pain, he is exempt from penalties he incurs only during periods when the pain is so great that he does not know what he is doing.

These four categories are exempted from penalties under all of the rules, although the first offender for each rule is exempted only for the one time he acted in such a way as to provoke the Buddha into formulating the rule. I will not mention these categories again, but the reader should bear them in mind as being exempt in every case.

Lastly, the Vinita Vatthu to this rule includes an interesting case that formed the basis for an additional rule:

"At that time a certain monk had gone to the Gabled Hall in the Great Wood at Vesali to pass the day, and was sleeping, having left the door open. His various limbs were stiff with the 'wind forces' (i.e., he had an erection). Now at that time a large company of women bearing garlands and scents came to the park headed for the vihara. Seeing the bhikkhu, they sat down on his male organ, and having taken their pleasure, and remarking, 'What a bull of a man!' they went on their way, taking up their garlands and scents."

The bhikkhu incurred no penalty, but the Buddha gave formal permission to close the door when resting during the day.

Summary: Voluntary sexual intercourse -- genital, anal or oral -- with a human being, non-human being or common animal is a parajika offense.

* * *

2. Should any bhikkhu, in the manner of stealing, take what is not given from an inhabited area or from the wilderness--just as when, in the taking of what is not given, kings arresting the criminal would flog, imprison or banish him, saying, "You are a robber, you are a fool, you are benighted, you are a thief"--a bhikkhu in the same manner taking what is not given is defeated and no longer in communion.

This rule against stealing is, in the working out of its details, the most complex in the Patimokkha and requires the most explanation. Not that stealing is a concept especially hard to understand: simply that it can take so many forms.

The Vibhanga defines the act of stealing in terms of four factors:

1. Object: The object belongs to another person, group of persons or place (such as the offerings made to a sacred place).

2. Perception: One perceives that the object belongs to another person, etc.

3. Intention: One decides to steal it.

4. Effort: One takes possession of it.

Stealing under any circumstances is always an offense. However, the severity of the offense depends on another factor, which is

5. The value of the object.

Object. For an object to qualify as "what is not given"--the rule's term for anything that may be the object of a theft--it must belong to another person or be guarded as common property of a group or of a location, such as the offerings to a Buddha image, chedi or other sacred place, as mentioned above. A further stipulation is that the owner or person responsible for guarding the object has neither given nor thrown it away. Thus there is no offense for a bhikkhu who takes an object that has been thrown away, such as rags from a pile of refuse; unclaimed things from a wilderness; or things unclaimed by any human being but which are in the possession of an animal or ghost. The Vinita Vatthu mentions an interesting case in which the guard of a plantation permits bhikkhus to take fruit from the planta-tion, even though he was not authorized to do so. The bhikkhus were not guilty of an offense.

The question of property belonging to the Sangha logically fits here, but since the topic is fairly complex, I will treat it as a special case below

Perception. For the act of taking "what is not given" to count as theft one must also perceive the object as being something not given. Thus there is no offense if one takes an object, even if it is "not given", if one sincerely believes that it is ownerless or thrown away. Similarly, if a bhikkhu takes an object mistaking it for his own or as belonging to a friend who has given him permission to take his things on trust, there is no offense. Or again, a bhikkhu who takes things from the Community's common stores, on the assumption that he has the right to help himself, commits no offense even if the assumption proves false.

Intention. The act of taking "what is not given", even when one perceives it as "not given", counts as theft only if one's intention is to steal it. Thus if a bhikkhu takes an object on loan or on trust, he incurs no offense. According to the Commentary, to take something on loan means that one has the intention that, "I will return it," or "I will make compensation."

As for taking an object on trust, Mv.VIII.1.19 lists five factors that are necessary if a bhikkhu is rightly to take an object on trust:

a. The owner is a friend.

b. He/she is an intimate.

c. He/she has given one permission to take from his things.

d. He/she is still alive.

e. One is confident that he/she will not mind.

If any of these factors is lacking--for example, the owner is a good friend but has never given explicit permission to take from his/her things--one has no right to take the things on trust. However, the Vinita Vatthu gives the case of a bhikkhu who takes an item mistakenly thinking that he had the right to take it on trust; the Buddha termed this a "misconception as to trust" and did not impose a penalty.

The most common problem that arises in this area is when one sincerely assumes that the owner will not mind, but it turns out that he/she does. In cases of this sort there is no offense, and the matter is left to the bhikkhu and the owner to settle on their own as amicably as possible.

A bhikkhu who, seeing an article left in a place where it might be damaged, puts it in safe keeping for the owner commits no offense.

Effort. Assuming that all of the above conditions are fulfilled-- the object belongs to someone else, one perceives it as belonging to someone else and one intends to steal it--if one then takes it, that constitutes stealing. The question then arises as to precisely what acts constitute taking. To summarize the Vibhanga's treatment of this question, we can classify objects into two broad types: moveable and immovable.

Moveable items are said to be taken when they are moved entirely from their "base(s)", i.e., the spot(s) on which they rest. An object such as a box or a trunk that lies flat along the ground or that touches its support at a single area has a single base and counts as "taken" if it has been moved entirely from its base. An object such as a table or chair that touches its support at a number of separate places has that number of bases. For instance, a stool with three legs touches the floor at three points and so has three bases. An object with more than one base is "taken" when it has been moved from all of its bases. Thus a television set standing on four legs is taken when all four of its legs have been lifted or slid away from the four spots on which they were standing.

If a moveable object is placed on another moveable object, such as a television set placed on a cart, there are two ways to count it as taken--either when it is removed from its base on the cart or when the wheels of the cart have been moved from all of their bases on the floor--whichever occurs first.

If person A is carrying an object and person B tries to take it from him, it is counted as taken even if B succeeds only in moving it from one spot on A's body to another.

According to the Vibhanga, if a person holding an object with the owner's permission then decides to abscond with it, it counts as taken when he shifts it to another part of his person (e.g., into his pocket) or places it elsewhere. The Vinaya Mukha, however, takes issue with this point, saying that cases of this sort should be treated under the terms of a breach of trust, which is discussed below.

Animals are reckoned to have one base (e.g. snakes, any reclining animal) or more (e.g., chickens or dogs on their feet) in the same way as inanimate objects, and are said to be taken when they are pulled, chased, etc., completely from their base(s).

When a bhikkhu takes a moveable object in theft, the question of whether he makes off with it is irrelevant as far as the offense is concerned. For example, if he tries to steal a radio and succeeds in moving it completely from its bases, but then hears the owner coming and so returns it to its original place, the owner would not even know that the object was in danger of being taken, and the civil law would regard the act at most as an attempted theft. As far as the Vinaya is concerned, though, the theft occurred when the bhikkhu first moved the object, and the fact that he returned it would not erase the theft. He would still be guilty of an offense.

As for immovable objects--such as land or things like buildings or trees affixed to the land--these are taken when the rightful owner unwillingly abandons his claim to them of his own accord (through fear of intimidation or reluctance to incur the expense and bother of a court battle) or when he is forced to do so by a court of law and cannot, or does not, make a further appeal. In the Buddha's time, a court dispute involving land was considered fully settled when the winner of the case staked out his claim with the permission of the court. Thus the Vibhanga states that a bhikkhu who unfairly wins a court case of this sort has "taken" the land when he formally stakes out his claim after winning the case. At present we would say that he has taken the land when he receives the deed.

Immovable objects in the secondary sense--trees, buildings, etc.--are treated in the same light as ordinary moveable objects if a bhikkhu cuts them down or dismantles them, i.e., they count as taken when removed from their bases.

These are the general considerations for determining when an object is taken. The Vibhanga, though, cites a number of additional cases involving special contingencies, as follows:

a. Fraudulence: Objects are being distributed by lot to the Sangha. A bhikkhu desiring the portion rightfully going to another bhikkhu exchanges his ticket for the ticket of the other bhikkhu. The "taking" is accomplished when the tickets have been exchanged.

b. Breach of trust: A person places goods in trust with a bhikkhu. When the owner comes to ask for their return, the bhikkhu claims that he does not have them. The taking is accomplished when the owner stops pressing his claim. If the case goes to court, the taking is accomplished when the owner loses the case in the final court to which he appeals.

c. Embezzlement: A bhikkhu responsible for items kept in a storeroom removes one of the items from the storeroom. The taking is accomplished when the item leaves the storeroom's boundary.

d. Smuggling: A bhikkhu carrying items subject to an import duty hides them as he goes through customs. The taking is accomplished when the item leaves the customs area. If, however, the bhikkhu informs the customs official that he has an item subject to customs duty, and yet the official decides not to collect the duty, the bhikkhu incurs no penalty. And there is no penalty if the bhikkhu goes through customs not knowing that an item subject to import duties is among his effects.

Special cases cited in the Commentary include the following:

a. False dealing: A bhikkhu makes counterfeit money or uses counterfeit weights. The taking is accomplished when the counterfeit is accepted.

b. Extortion: Using threats, a bhikkhu compels the owner of an object to give it to him. The taking is accomplished when the owner complies.

The value of the object. As stated above, any case of stealing counts as an offense, but the gravity of the offense is determined by the value of the object. This is the point of the phrase in the rule reading, "just as when there is the taking of what is not given, kings... would banish him, saying...'You are a thief.'" In other words, for theft to incur a parajika, it must be a case of grand larceny, which in the time of the Buddha meant that the goods involved were worth at least five masaka, a unit of money used at the time. Goods valued collectively at more than one masaka but less than five are grounds for a thullaccaya; goods valued collectively at one masaka or less are grounds for a dukkata, the worth of the articles being determined by the price they would have fetched at the time of the theft.

This leaves us with the question of how a masaka would translate into current monetary rates. No one can answer this question with any certainty, for the oldest attempt to peg the masaka to the gold standard dates from the V/Sub-commentary, which sets one masaka as equal to 5 rice grains weight of gold. At this rate, the theft of an item worth 20 rice grains (1/24 troy ounce) weight of gold or more would be a parajika offense.

One objection to this method of calculation is that some of the items mentioned in the Vinita Vatthu as being grounds for a parajika when stolen--e.g., a pillow, a bundle of laundry, a robe, a handful of rice during a famine--would seem to be worth much less than 1/24 troy ounce of gold. We must remember, though, that many items which seem commonplace now might have been regarded as expensive luxuries at that time.

In spite of this objection, there is one very good reason for adopt-ing the standard set by the V/Sub-commentary: It sets a high value for the least article whose theft would result in a parajika. Thus when a bhikkhu steals an item worth 1/24 troy ounce of gold or more, there can be no doubt that he has incurred the full offense. When the item is of lesser value there will be unavoidable doubt--and when there is any doubt concerning a parajika, the tradition of the Vinaya consistently gives the bhikkhu the benefit of the doubt: He is not compelled to disrobe. A basic principle operating throughout the Vinaya is that it is better to risk letting an offender go unpunished than to risk punishing an innocent bhikkhu.

There is a second advantage to the V/Sub-commentary's method of calculation: its precision and clarity. Some people have recom-mended adopting the standard expressed in the rule itself--that if the theft would result in flogging, imprisonment or banishment by the authorities in that time and at that place, then the theft would consti-tute a parajika--but this standard creates more problems than it would solve. In most countries the sentence is largely at the discretion of the judge or magistrate, and the factor of value is only one among many taken into account when determining the penalty. This opens a whole Pandora's box of issues, many of which have nothing to do with the bhikkhu or the object he has taken the judge's mood, his social philosophy, his religious background and so forth--issues that the Buddha never allowed to enter into the consideration of how to determine the penalty for a theft.

Thus the V/Sub-commentary's method of calculation has the benefits that it is a quick and easy method for determining the boundaries between the different levels of offense in any modern currency; it involves no factors extraneous to the tradition of the Vinaya, and--as noted above--it draws the line at a value above which there can be no doubt that the penalty is a parajika.

If a bhikkhu steals several items on different occasions, the values of the different items are added together to determine the severity of the offense only if they were stolen as part of a single plan or intention. If they are stolen as a result of separate intentions, each act of stealing is treated as a separate offense whose severity depends on the value of the individual item(s) stolen in that act. This point is best explained with examples:

In a case given in the Vinita Vatthu, a bhikkhu decides to steal a spoonful of ghee from a jar. After swallowing the spoonful, he decides to steal one more. After that he decides to steal another, and so on until he has finished the jar. Since each spoonful was stolen as a consequence of a separate plan or intention, he incurs several offenses -- probably dukkatas -- each appropriate to the theft of one spoonful of ghee.

If, however, he decides at one point to steal enough lumber to build himself a hut, and then steals a plank from here and a rafter from there, taking lumber over many days at different places from various owners, he commits one offense in accordance with the total value of all the lumber stolen, since he took al the pieces of wood as a consequence of one prior plan.

Derived offenses. If a bhikkhu tries to steal an article that would be grounds for a parajika but does not succeed--e.g. he is going to steal a book from a shelf, but before he can remove it from its place on the shelf he hears someone approaching and so walks off without taking it--he commits a lighter offense in accordance with the effort made. Offenses of this sort are called offenses committed in the pubbayoga or preliminary steps. In the case of stealing, they are determined as follows:

Inanimate moveable objects: If the article is made to budge slightly, but is not moved completely from its base, or from some but not all of its bases--thullaccaya. All actions prior to this, beginning with the act of walking towards the object with intent to steal it-- dukkata.

Animals: If in driving the animal along the bhikkhu gets it to move its front feet--thullaccaya. All actions prior to this--dukkata.

Immovable objects and articles placed in trust: If the bhikkhu creates doubt in the mind of the owner as to whether he will deprive him or her of the property in question--thullaccaya. All actions prior to this--dukkata.

Immovable objects in the secondary sense (e.g., a tree): If with one more blow of the ax the tree will fall--thullaccaya. All actions prior to this--dukkata, unless (according to the Vinaya Mukha) there is a training rule imposing a higher penalty, such as the pacittiya rule concerning injury to plant life.

For ease of remembrance, if the bhikkhu is one step away from taking the object, he incurs a thullaccaya; if he does not go that far, he incurs a dukkata.

In offenses of this sort, when a heavier offense is committed, only that offense is counted, and the preceding lighter offenses are null-ified. For example, in the case mentioned above, if the bhikkhu trying to steal the book simply touches it, he incurs a string of dukkatas for each step in walking up to the book and taking hold of it. If he budges the book slightly but not so much as to move it completely from its spot, the dukkatas are nullified and replaced with a thullaccaya. If he actually takes the book, that nullifies the thullaccaya and replaces it with a parajika.

Shared responsibility. A bhikkhu may commit an offense not only if he himself steals an object, but also if instigates another to steal. The offenses involved in working up to the crime are as follows:

If a bhikkhu tells an accomplice to steal an object that would be grounds for a parajika, he incurs a dukkata. If the accomplice agrees, the instigator incurs a thullaccaya. Once the accomplice succeeds in taking the object as instructed--whether or not he gets away with it, and whether or not he shares it with the instigator--the instigator incurs a parajika. If the accomplice is a bhikkhu, he too incurs a parajika.

If the object to be taken is grounds for a thullaccaya or a dukkata, the only offenses incurred prior to the actual theft would be dukkatas.

If there is any confusion in carrying out the instructions--e.g., if the accomplice, instead of taking the book specified by the instigator, takes something else instead, or if he is told to take it in the after-noon but instead takes it in the morning--the instigator incurs only the offenses for proposing the theft and persuading the accomplice, and not the offense for the theft itself. The same holds true if the instigator rescinds his order before the theft takes place, but the accomplice goes ahead and takes the object anyway.

According to the Commentary, an instigator who wishes to call off the theft before it is carried out, but who for one reason or another cannot get his message to the accomplice in time, incurs the full penalty for the completed theft.

If there is a chain of command--e.g. Bhikkhu A telling Bhikkhu B to tell Bhikkhu C to tell Bhikkhu D to commit the theft--then once D takes the object as instructed, all four incur the penalty coming from the theft. If there is any confusion in the chain of command--e.g., Bhikkhu B instead of telling C tells D directly--neither A nor C incurs the penalty for the theft itself.

If bhikkhus go in a group to commit a theft but only one of them does the actual taking, all still incur the penalty coming from the theft. Similarly, if they steal valuables worth collectively more than five masaka but which when shared among them yield shares worth less than five masaka each, all incur a parajika.

Special cases. As mentioned above, the notion of stealing covers a wide variety of actions. The texts deal with a number of actions that border on stealing, some of them coming under this rule and some of them not.

Belongings of the Sangha. According to the Commentary to Nissaggiya Pacittiya 30, an item belongs to the Sangha when donors, intending for it to be Sangha property, offer it to one or more bhikkhus representing the Sangha, and those bhikkhus receive it, although not necessarily into their hands. Sangha property thus counts as "what is not given" as far as individual bhikkhus are con-cerned, for it has an owner--the Sangha of all times and places--and is guarded by the individual Community of bhikkhus.

Sangha property is divided into two sorts: light (lahubhanda) and heavy (garubhanda). Light property includes such things as robes, bowls, medicine and food. Heavy property includes such things as monastery land, buildings and furnishings. The Buddha gave permis-sion for individual Communities to appoint certain of their members to be officials responsible for the proper use of Sangha property. The officials responsible for light property are to distribute it among the members of the Community, following set procedures to ensure that the distribution is fair. Once an individual member has received such property, he may regard it as his own and use it as he sees fit.

In the case of heavy property, though, the officials are responsible for seeing that it is allotted for proper use in the Community, but the individual bhikkhus who are allowed to use it may not regard it as their own personal property. This is an important point. At most, such items may be taken on loan or exchanged--with the approval of the Community--for other heavy property of equal value. A bhikkhu who gives such items away to anyone--ordained or not--perceiving it as his to give, commits a thullaccaya, no matter what the value of the object. Of course, if he knows that it is not his to give or take, then in appropriating it as his own he incurs the offense for stealing.

The Buddha was highly critical of any bhikkhu who gives away heavy property of the Sangha. In the origin story to Parajika 4, he cites the case of a bhikkhu who, hoping to find favor with a lay person, gives that person some of the Sangha's heavy property. Such a bhikkhu, he says, is one of the five great thieves of the world.

A bhikkhu who takes heavy property of the Sangha donated for use in a particular monastery and uses it elsewhere incurs a dukkata. If he takes it on loan, he commits no offense.

Receiving stolen goods. Accepting a gift of goods or purchasing them very cheaply knowing that they were stolen, would in Western criminal law result in a penalty similar to stealing itself. However, neither the Canon nor the commentaries mention this case. The closest they come is in the Vinita Vatthu, where a groundskeeper gives bhikkhus fruit from the orchard under his care, even though it was not his to give. There was no offense for the bhikkhus. Thus the implication is that there is no offense for receiving stolen goods, even knowingly, although a bhikkhu who does so would not be exempt from the civil law and the consequent proceedings, in the course of which the Community would probably urge him to disrobe. (In Thailand, the civil law empowers the police to force a bhikkhu to disrobe if he is charged with a criminal case.)

Destroying property. The Commentary maintains that a bhikkhu who knowingly destroys another's property must compensate the owner--if the owner demands it--or else face the penalty for stealing. It goes on to say that the same conditions apply to a bhikkhu who borrows or looks after something that then gets lost or destroyed through his negligence; or who takes an item mistakenly thinking that it was discarded or that he was in a position to take it on trust.

In making these judgments, the Commentary is probably following the civil law of its day, for the Canon gives it no support whatsoever. The Vinita Vatthu mentions a case in which a bhikkhu knowingly sets fire to a field of grass (which in those days would have been worth more than five masaka), and yet the penalty is a dukkata. In cases where a bhikkhu takes an item on mistaken assumptions, there is no offense at all. Of course, in all cases of this sort it would be a wise policy to offer the owner reasonable compensation, but it is by no means certain that a bhikkhu would have the wherewithal to do so. The Canon places only one responsibility on such a bhikkhu--to apologize to the owner (see Cv.I.18-20). If he doesn't apologize, the Community, if it sees fit, can force him to. Beyond that, though, the Canon does not require that he make any material compensation; and since the Commentary clearly contradicts the Canon on this point, its assertions would seem to be invalid.

Court actions. As stated above, if a bhikkhu knowingly starts an unfair court case against someone else and then wins it in the final court to which the accused makes appeal, he incurs a parajika. The Commentary to the Bhikkhuni's Sanghadisesa 1, however, states that even if a bhikkhu is actually mistreated by someone--defamed, physically injured, robbed, etc.--and then tries to take a just court action against the guilty party, then if the bhikkhu wins he commits a parajika. Again, this is an instance where the Commentary has no support from the Canon and, as the Vinaya Mukha points out, its assertion cannot stand. However, the training of a bhikkhu requires that he view all losses in the light of kamma and focus on looking after the state of his mind rather than for compensation in physical or material things.

There is no question in any of the texts that if a bhikkhu is asked to give evidence in a courtroom and does so, speaking in accordance with the facts, he commits no offense no matter what the outcome for the others involved.

Deceit. If a bhikkhu uses a deliberate lie to deceive another person into giving an item to him, the transgression is treated not as a case of stealing--since, after all, the item is given to him--but rather as a case of lying. If the lie involves making false claims to superior meditative attainments, it is treated under Parajika 4, below. Otherwise it is treated under Pacittiya 1, the general rule against lying. The Vinita Vatthu gives two examples:

During a distribution of requisites among the Sangha, a bhikkhu asks for and is given an extra portion for a non-existent bhikkhu.

A bhikkhu approaches his teacher's lay supporter and asks for medicines, saying that they will be for his teacher, although he actually has no intention of giving the medicines to the teacher and plans to use them himself instead.

In both of these cases, the penalty is a pacittiya for lying.

Compassion. The Vinita Vatthu contains a case in which a bhikkhu, out of compassion, releases an animal caught in a hunter's snare. He incurs no offense.

In another case, a bhikkhu with psychic powers uses them to retrieve a pair of kidnapped children. The Buddha states that no offense was incurred because such a thing was in the province of those with psychic power. The Vinaya Mukha, in discussing this case, takes it as a precedent for saying that if a bhikkhu returns a stolen article to its legal owner, there is no offense. The Buddha's state-ment, though, was probably meant to discourage bhikkhus without psychic powers from getting directly involved in righting wrongs of this sort. If a bhikkhu happens to learn of the whereabouts of stolen goods, kidnapped children, etc., he may inform the authorities, if he sees fit, and let them handle the situation themselves.

Taking articles from undecomposed corpses. In the early days of the Sangha, bhikkhus were expected to make their robes from dis-carded cloth, one source being the cloths used to wrap corpses laid in charnel grounds. (The bhikkhus would wash and boil the cloth before using it themselves.) However, they were not to take cloth from undecomposed bodies, and this was for a reason.

"At one time a certain bhikkhu going to the charnel ground took hold of discarded cloth on a body not yet decomposed. And the spirit of the dead one was dwelling in the body. It said to the bhikkhu, 'Honored sir, don't take hold of my cloak.' The bhikkhu, paying it no attention, went off (with the cloak). The body, arising, followed closely on the heels of the bhikkhu until the bhikkhu, entering the vihara, closed the door and the body fell down right there."

The story gives no further details, and we are left to imagine for ourselves the bhikkhu's state of mind while being chased by the body, and his friends' reaction to the event. As is usual with the stories in the Vibhanga, the more outrageous the event, the more matter-of-fact is its telling, and the more its humor lies in the understatement.

At any rate, as a result of this incident the Buddha laid down a dukkata penalty for taking cloth from an undecomposed body--which, according to the Commentary, means one that is still warm.

Modern cases. The modern world contains many forms of ownership and monetary exchange that did not exist in the time of the Buddha, and so contains many forms of stealing that did not exist then as well. Here are a handful of cases that come to mind as examples of ways in which the standards of this rule might be applied to modern situations.

Breach of copyright. The international standards for copyright advocated by UNESCO state that breach of copyright is tantamount to theft. They go on to state, however, that if one duplicates articles, books, cassette tapes or video tapes for private use, for study or for non-profit distribution, one may copy as much as one likes. In some countries, however, one is allowed to copy only small portions of copyrighted material for such purposes, although exactly how small is small is only vaguely defined. Thus, as local copyright laws do not always adopt the UNESCO standard, a bhikkhu should check with the law before copying anything. In particular, the agreements covering the copying of commercial computer software usually do not permit the owner to give copies of the software to anyone for any reason, and limit the number of copies one may make for one's own use. One should follow such agreements to the letter.

Credit cards. The theft of a credit card would of course be an offense. The seriousness of the offense would be determined by how much the owner would have to pay to replace the stolen card. Nissaggiya Pacittiya 20 would forbid a bhikkhu from using a credit card to buy anything, even if the card were his to use, although a bhikkhu who had gone to the extent of stealing a card would probably not be dissuaded by that rule from using it or having someone else use it. At any rate, each use of a stolen card would also count as a theft, the seriousness of which would be calculated in line with the principle of the "prior plan" mentioned above.

Long distance telephone calls. Unauthorized use of a telephone to place long distance calls would also count as a theft, and again the seriousness of the offense would be calculated in light of the principle of the prior plan.

Tax evasion. If a bhikkhu intentionally does not pay a tax to which he is subject--say, on an inheritance he receives--he is guilty of a theft, which would occur on the deadline for payment of the tax. Of course, a bhikkhu who fails to pay a tax out of ignorance would not be guilty of an offense.

Exchanging currency on the black market is also a form of tax evasion in countries where there is a tax on currency exchange, so a bhikkhu in such a country who directs his steward to make such an exchange would be guilty of a theft. If, however, the steward on his own initiative exchanges money on the black market for use in the bhikkhu's account, the bhikkhu commits no offense.

Summary: The theft of anything worth 1/24 ounce troy of gold or more is a parajika offense.

* * *

3.Should any bhikkhu intentionally deprive a human being of life, or search for an assassin for him, or praise the advantages of death or incite him to die (thus): "My good man, what use is this wretched, miserable life to you? Death would be better for you than life," or with such thoughts in mind, such intentions in mind, should in various ways praise the advantages of death or incite him to die, he also is defeated and no longer in communion.

This rule against intentionally causing the death of a human being is best understood in terms of five factors, all of which must be met for there to be a parajika offense.

1. Object: a human being, which according to the Vibhanga includes human fetuses as well, counting from the time conscious-ness first arises in the womb immediately after conception.

2. Intention: knowingly, consciously, deliberately and purposefully wanting to cause that person's death. "Knowingly" also includes the factor of

3. Perception: perceiving the person as a living being.

4. Effort: whatever one does with the purpose of causing that person to die.

5. Result: the person dies as the result of one's act.

Object. The Vibhanga defines a human being as a person "from the time consciousness first becomes manifest in a mother's womb, until the time of death." It follows from this that a bhikkhu who intentionally causes an abortion--by arranging for the operation, supplying the medicines or by giving advice that results in an abortion--incurs a parajika. A bhikkhu who encourages a woman to use a means of contraception that works after conception has taken place would be guilty of a parajika if she were to follow his advice.

There is a series of cases in the Vinita Vatthu in which bhikkhus provide medicines for women seeking an abortion, followed by two cases in which a bhikkhu provides medicines to a barren woman who wants to become fertile, and to a fertile woman who wants to become barren. In neither of these two latter cases does anyone die, but in both cases the bhikkhu incurs a dukkata. From this, the Commentary infers that bhikkhus are not to act as doctors to lay people, an inference supported by the Vibhanga to Sanghadisesa 13. (The Commentary, though, gives a number of exceptions to this ruling. See the discussion under Sanghadisesa 13.)

The parajika offense is for killing another human being aside from oneself. A bhikkhu who attempts suicide incurs a dukkata.

A bhikkhu who kills a "non-human being"--a yakkha, naga or peta--or a devata (this is in the Commentary) incurs a thullaccaya. According to the Commentary, when a spirit possesses a human being or animal, it can be exorcised in either of two ways. The first is to command it to leave: This causes no injury to the spirit, and results in no offense. The second is to make a doll out of flour paste or clay, and then cut off various parts of it. If one cuts off its hands and feet the spirit will lose its hands and feet. If one cuts off its head, the spirit will die, and this is grounds for a thullaccaya.

A bhikkhu who intentionally kills a common animal incurs a pacittiya.

Intention & perception. The Vibhanga defines intentionally as "having made the decision knowingly, consciously and purposefully." According to the Commentary, "having made the decision" refers to the moment when one "crushes" one's indecisiveness by taking an act. Knowingly means that one knows that, "This is a living being." Consciously means that one is aware that one's action is depriving the living being of life. Purposefully means that one's purpose in acting is to murder. Whether one is motivated by compassion, hatred or indifference is irrelevant as far as the offense is concerned.

All of the above sub-factors must be present for the factors of intention and perception under this rule to be fulfilled. Thus there is no offense for a bhikkhu who causes a death-- accidentally--e.g., accidentally dropping a rock that kills a person standing below; or toying with a gun, trying to decide whether or not to kill the person, and the gun accidentally goes off before he can make up his mind;

not knowing that a living being was there--e.g., placing a heavy load on a pile of cloth without realizing that a person was lying underneath it;

not conscious that his action is causing death--e.g., by unwittingly giving poisoned food to another bhikkhu who eats it and dies;

or when his actions are motivated by a purpose other than that of causing death--e.g., giving medicine to a fellow bhikkhu, sincerely trying to help cure him, but the sick bhikkhu chokes on the medicine and dies.

One aspect of the Commentary's definition of "knowingly" is worth noting here: One does not need to know that the living being is a human being there for the factor of intention to be fulfilled. Thus if one hears a noise in the dark and, thinking it to be a wild animal, shoots at it with intent to kill, then if it turns out to be a human being who dies from the gunshot wound, one has committed a parajika.

The Vinita Vatthu contains an unusual case of a bhikkhu who uses a friend as a guinea pig for testing poison. The friend dies, and the bhikkhu incurs only a thullaccaya. The Commentary explains this by distinguishing two types of test: one to see if a particular poison is strong enough to kill a person; the other, to see if a particular person is strong enough to survive the poison. In either of these cases, the bhikkhu incurs a thullaccaya whether or not the victim dies. If though, the bhikkhu gives poison to a person with the desire that it cause that person's death, he incurs a parajika if the victim dies, and a thullaccaya if not.

Effort. This rule covers three types of effort: taking life, assisting a murderer or suicide, and describing the advantages of death to a person in hopes that he/she will give up the will to live.

Taking life. According to the Commentary, the act of taking life has four components: a living being; the taking of life motivated by the intention to kill, as discussed above; the person taking life; and the effort to take life. All of this sounds obvious enough, but it has important implications that we will discuss below.

The Commentary lists six means by which one may make the effort to take life:

a. One's own person. This includes using not only one's hands or feet, but also such weapons as knives, sticks, clubs, etc.

b. Throwing. Hurling a stone, shooting an arrow or a gun, etc.

c. Stationary devices. Setting a trap, placing poison in food, etc.
The Vibhanga includes a number of unusual cases in which a bhikkhu arranges a terrible sight, sound, etc. to frighten a person to death, or a beautiful, "heart-stirring" sight or sound to attract a person who will then pine away to death when the sight or sound fades. These instances would probably come under this category, although if the bhikkhu creates the sight or sound using his psychic powers, they would come under (e), below.

d. Magical formulae. Calling on malevolent spirits to bring about a person's death, using voodoo, etc.

e. Psychic powers. Using the "evil eye" or other similar powers.

f. Commanding. Telling another person to do something that will result in death. This is the broadest of the categories, and can include recommendations and the use of one's rhetorical powers to inspire the death of a person without giving any express commands. A few examples:

Telling A to kill B. The way in which a bhikkhu is penalized for inciting another person to kill may be inferred from the discussion under the preceding rule. The Commentary to this rule goes into great detail concerning the six ways the command to kill can be specified: the object [the person to be killed], the time, the place, the weapon to use, the action by which the weapon is to be used [e.g. "Stab him in the neck"], and the position the victim should be in [sitting, standing, lying down] when the act is to be done. If the instigator specifies any of these things, and yet the person following his orders does not carry them out to the letter, the instigator does not incur the penalty for the actual murder. For instance, Bhikkhu A tells his student to kill B while B is sitting in meditation at midnight. The student gets into B's room at midnight, only to find B asleep in bed, which is where he kills him. Bhikkhu A thus incurs only the thullaccaya for convincing his student to accept the command.

Inciting A to kill B. The Commentary includes a case of a socially active bhikkhu who tells people, "In such-and-such a place a bandit is staying. Whoever cuts off his head will receive great honor from the King." If any of the bhikkhu's listeners kills the bandit as a result of his instigation, the bhikkhu incurs a parajika.

Recommending suicide. This includes not only telling a person to commit suicide, but also giving advice--whether asked or not--to a would-be suicide on the best ways to commit the act.

Recommending means of euthanasia. The Vinita Vatthu includes a case of a criminal who has just been punished by having his hands and feet cut off. A bhikkhu asks the man's relatives, "Do you want him to die? Then make him drink buttermilk." The relatives follow the bhikkhu's recommendation, the man dies, and the bhikkhu incurs a parajika.

Recommending means of capital punishment. Again from the Vinita Vatthu: A bhikkhu advises an executioner to kill his victims mercifully with a single blow, rather than torturing them. The executioner follows his advice, and the bhikkhu incurs a parajika. This judgment indicates that a bhikkhu should not involve himself in matters of this sort, no matter how humane his intentions. According to the Vinita Vatthu, if the executioner says that he will not follow the bhikkhu's advice, and then kills his victims as he pleases, the bhikkhu incurs no penalty. The Commentary adds that if the executioner tries to follow the bhikkhu's advice, and yet needs more than one blow to do the job, the bhikkhu incurs a thullaccaya. As we have mentioned, though, the best course is to leave matters of this sort to the laity.

Telling a person to go to a certain place, hoping that he/she will die of the dangers there.

Negligence. The Commentary's analysis of the act of taking life, in which the effort to take life must be a component factor, means that "non-action" or negligence does not come under this rule, even when motivated by the desire to have the victim die. Thus a bhikkhu who makes no effort to artificially prolong the life of a brain-damaged friend, preferring that he die rather than lead a vegetable-like existence, would incur no offense even if the friend then dies.

However, if the bhikkhu were to advise a doctor to make no effort to prolong the friend's life, this would come under the category of "command", and if the friend were to die as a result of the doctor's following the bhikkhu's advice, the penalty would be a parajika.

Assisting a murderer or suicide. A bhikkhu may commit an offense not only by using any of the six above-mentioned means of taking life, but also by intentionally assisting anyone who uses any of them to commit a murder or a suicide. This is how the Vibhanga explains the phrase, "search for an assassin" in the rule. The act of assisting includes not only finding an assassin, but also procuring weapons for the would-be murderer or suicide.

Getting a person to give up the will to live. The third type of act covered by this rule is speaking to a person of the miseries of life or the bliss of dying and going to heaven, in hopes that he/she will take the cue and either commit suicide or simply pine away to death.

Expressing a wish. According to the Vibhanga, a bhikkhu who expresses an idle wish that so-and-so be murdered would incur a dukkata, whether or not he was overheard. If, however, the bhikkhu's purpose in expressing the wish is that his listener take him up on it and commit the murder, his action would come under the factor of "command", mentioned above.

Result. If a bhikkhu intentionally tries to cause the death of a person in any of the above ways, and the person actually dies as a result, the bhikkhu incurs a parajika. This holds even if the person does not die immediately, but dies later, say, from complications arising from a wound caused by the bhikkhu's actions. If the person does not die, but experiences pain or injury as a result of the bhikkhu's efforts, the penalty is a thullaccaya. If the bhikkhu's efforts result in neither pain nor death, the penalty is a dukkata for each separate action leading up to the attempt on the person's life or the attempt to make the person give up the will to live.

If a bhikkhu intends simply to injure the victim or cause him/her pain, and yet the victim dies as a result of the bhikkhu's action, the case is treated under Pacittiya 74.

There is an apparent contradiction in the Vinita Vatthu concerning the penalty for a bhikkhu who tries to kill one person but ends up killing another instead. In one passage, it says that a bhikkhu who means to kill X but kills Y instead incurs a parajika. In another passage, it tells of a bhikkhu who gives medicine to a woman who wants to commit an abortion near the end of a full-term pregnancy. The woman takes the medicine, but instead of the fetus' aborting, the woman dies and the infant survives. In this case, the bhikkhu incurs a thullaccaya, presumably for the pain he caused the infant.

The Commentary tries to resolve this contradiction with an illus-tration: A bhikkhu with a grudge against A decides to ambush him. He sees B coming down the road and, mistaking him for A, shoots him dead on the spot. Since his intention was to kill the person he was aiming at, he incurs a parajika. We can call this a case of mistaken identity. In cases of this sort, whether the "right" or the "wrong" person dies is of no consequence to the offense.

If, however, the bhikkhu is a poor shot, takes aim at B but misses him and inadvertently kills C instead, he does not incur a parajika, for he did not intend to kill C during any part of his action. His only penalties are the dukkatas he incurs while preparing for B's murder.

If a bhikkhu means to cause the death of any member of a group, then when any member of the group dies as a result of his efforts, he incurs a parajika.

Special cases. The Vinita Vatthu includes three special cases that touch on this rule but inspired the Buddha to formulate separate rules to deal specifically with them:

A bhikkhu, throwing a stone from a precipice in fun, accidentally kills a person standing below--no penalty for the death, but the Buddha imposes a dukkata on the act of throwing a stone in fun from a precipice.

A bhikkhu, hoping to commit suicide, throws himself over a cliff. He doesn't die, but lands on and kills a hapless basket-maker standing at the foot of the cliff. Again, no offense for the death, but the Buddha imposes a dukkata on the act of throwing oneself from a high place.

A bhikkhu, sitting down hard on a chair without first checking it carefully, kills a child lying in the chair and covered with a blanket. Again, no penalty for the death, but the Buddha imposes a dukkata on the act of sitting down without first checking carefully.

Summary: Intentionally causing the death of a human being, even if it is still a foetus, is a parajika offense.

* * *

4. Should any bhikkhu, without direct knowledge, boast of a superior human state, a truly noble knowledge and vision as present in himself, saying, "Thus do I know; thus do I see," such that regardless of whether or not he is cross-examined on a later occasion, he--being remorseful and desirous of purification--might say, "Friends, not knowing, I said I know; not seeing, I said I see--vainly, falsely, idly," unless it was from over-estimation, he also is defeated and no longer in communion.

All conscious lies are forbidden by the first pacittiya rule, but knowingly to make a false claim to a superior human state is the most heinous lie a bhikkhu can tell, and so here it is given its own rule and the heaviest possible penalty.

The seriousness with which the Buddha regarded a breach of this training rule is indicated by his statements to the original instigators:

"You misguided men, how can you for the sake of your stomachs speak praise of one another's superior human states to householders? It would be better for you that your bellies be slashed open with a sharp butcher's knife than that you should for the sake of your stomachs speak praise of one another's superior human states to householders. Why is that? For that reason you would undergo death or death-like suffering, but you would not on that account, at the break-up of the body, after death, fall into deprivation, the bad bourn, the abyss, purgatory. But for this reason you would, at the break-up of the body, after death, fall into deprivation, the bad bourn, the abyss, purgatory.... Bhikkhus, in this world with its gods, maras and brahmas, its generations with priests and contemplatives, princes and men, this is the ultimate great thief: he who claims an unfactual, non-existent superior human state. Why is that? You have consumed the nation's almsfood through theft."

Superior human states. The Vibhanga lists a large number of superior human states, which the Commentary classifies into two broad categories: mahaggata dhamma, those related to the practice of meditative absorption; and lokuttara dhamma, those related to the absolute eradication of the mental fetters that bind the mind to the cycle of rebirth.

a. Meditative absorption--the Pali term is jhana--is of two major sorts: absorption in a physical object or sensation (rupa jhana) and absorption in a non-physical object or sensation (arupa jhana). Both contain four levels, and are described in the discourses (e.g., D.2) as follows:

"The bhikkhu--quite withdrawn from sensual pleasure, withdrawn from unwholesome (mental) qualities--enters and remains in the first jhana: rapture and pleasure born from withdrawal, accompanied by directed thought and evaluation. He permeates and pervades, suffuses and fills this very body with the rapture and pleasure born from withdrawal....

"And furthermore, with the stilling of directed thought and evaluation, he enters and remains in the second jhana: rapture and pleasure born of composure, one-pointedness of awareness free from directed thought and evaluation-- internal assurance. He permeates and pervades, suffuses and fills this very body with the rapture and pleasure born of composure....

"And furthermore, with the fading of rapture, he remains in equanimity, mindful and fully aware, and physically sensitive of pleasure. He enters and remains in the third jhana, and of him the Noble Ones declare, 'Equanimous and mindful, he has a pleasurable abiding.' He permeates and pervades, suffuses and fills this very body with the pleasure divested of rapture....

"And furthermore, with the abandoning of pleasure and pain--as with the earlier disappearance of elation and sorrow--he enters and remains in the fourth jhana: purity of equanimity and mindfulness, neither pleasure nor pain. He sits permeating the body with a pure, bright awareness, so that nothing of his entire body is unpervaded by pure bright awareness."

The four levels of arupa jhana are based on the fourth level of rupa jhana.

"With the complete transcending of perceptions of (physical) form, and the passing away of perceptions of resistance, and not heeding perceptions of diversity, thinking, 'Infinite space', one enters and remains in the sphere of the infinitude of space....

"With the complete transcending of the sphere of the infinitude of space, thinking, 'Infinite consciousness', one enters and remains in the sphere of the infinitude of consciousness....

"With the complete transcending of the sphere of the infinitude of consciousness, thinking, 'There is nothing,' one enters and remains in the sphere of nothingness....

"With the complete transcending of the sphere of nothingness, one enters and remains in the sphere of neither perception nor non-perception." (D.15)

The Vibhanga mentions only the four rupa jhanas in its list of superior human states, but as the four arupa jhanas are based on the fourth rupa jhana, the Commentary includes them in the list as well.

In addition to these states of absorption themselves, the category of mahaggata dhamma also includes the intuitive powers (abhinna) that can arise from them:

iddhividhi--the ability to manifest one or more images of oneself, to appear in a different bodily form, to create a "mind- made" (astral) body, to pass through solid matter, etc.

dibbasota--clairaudience, enabling one to hear sounds both heavenly and human, far and near.

cetopariyanana--the ability to read the minds of other living beings.

dibbacakkhu--clairvoyance, the ability to see beings in other realms of being, and particular to see them pass from death in one level to rebirth in another.

pubbenivasanussati--the ability to remember previous lives.

There are other occult abilities that are not based on jhana, and for this reason do not count as mahaggata dhamma: such things as divination, giving protective charms, casting malevolent spells, psychic healing, practicing as a medium, etc. These and other similar activities are listed in the discourses as "tiracchana vijja", bestial knowledge, which as the name implies is far removed from superior human states.

b. Lokuttara dhamma, in its fullest sense, refers to the series of mental states, called paths and fruitions, in which the fetters that bind the mind to the cycle of rebirth are eradicated; and to the ultimate state of nibbana, or liberation.

The paths and fruitions occur in four pairs. In the first pair, the path to and fruition of stream-entry, three fetters are abandoned: self-identity views (sakkaya-ditthi), uncertainty (vicikiccha) and attachment to precepts and practices (silabbata-paramasa). In the second pair, the path to and fruition of once-returning, two additional fetters--sensual passion (kama-raga) and irritation (patigha) are weakened, only to be abandoned fully in the third pair, the path to and fruition of non-returning. In the fourth pair, the path to and fruition of arahantship, a final set of five additional fetters is abandoned: rupa-raga--passion for physical phenomena (e.g., the objects of rupa jhana); arupa-raga--passion for non-physical phenomena (e.g., the objects of arupa jhana); mana--conceit; uddhacca--restlessness; and avijja--unawareness. With the cutting of this last set of fetters, all bonds with the cycle of rebirth are cut for good, and the mind attains nibbana.

The term nibbana literally means extinguishing, like a fire. The commentarial literature (Vism.VIII,247), derives the word etymologi-cally from nir, a negative prefix, and vana, or binding. Thus it means unbinding or liberation. In the physics of the Buddha's time, fire as it burned was said to be in a state of agitation, dependence, attachment and entrapment--both clinging to and constrained by its sustenance or fuel. Extinguished, it was said to become calm, independent and unattached. It let go of its sustenance and was released. In the mind's extinguishing, or unbinding, a parallel change occurs.

Nibbana is one; the paths and their fruitions, eight. Thus there are nine lokuttara dhammas.

Aside from jhana, the states mentioned in the Vibhanga--such as the destruction of the mental pollutants (asava), the signless libera-tion, the desireless liberation, the liberation of emptiness and so forth--are either synonymous with these transcendent states or, as with the "wings" of Awakening (bodhi-pakkhiya dhamma), conjoined with them.

The full offense under this rule has five factors:

1) Effort: One makes a direct claim

2) Object: to a superior human state

3) Perception: that one perceives as not present in oneself.

4) Intention: One's intention is to misrepresent the truth.

5) Result: One's listener understands what one is saying.

Effort. To make a direct claim means to say outright that one has attained a superior human state, saying such things as, "I have attained the first jhana," "I have seen the heavenly realms," "I know my pre-vious lifetimes," etc. Outright claims, here, include not only spoken statements, but also written statements and physical gestures. An example of a claim by gesture occurs in the Vibhanga: A group of bhikkhus make an agreement that the first to set out from their dwell-ing would, by that very gesture, be known to the rest as an arahant. One of the group, who was not an arahant but wanted to be regarded as one, set out first from the dwelling and was soon known to the rest as an ex-bhikkhu from having committed a parajika.

Indirect claims. An indirect claim to a superior human state is not grounds for a parajika. If it is a deliberate lie, it is at most grounds for a thullaccaya. Such claims, which contain an uncertainty in their wording even though the listener may feel no uncertainty in under-standing their import, may be uncertain in one of two ways: uncertain as to the person and uncertain as to the attainment.

The Vinita Vatthu contains several examples of the first sort: a bhikkhu states that whoever lives in a particular dwelling is an arahant, the dwelling being the one where he lives; a bhikkhu saying that all the disciples of his teacher are arahants, and so forth.

There is only one example in the Vinita Vatthu of a bhikkhu who makes a claim "uncertain as to the attainment": a sick bhikkhu, meaning to deceive the fellow bhikkhus nursing him, says to them, "There is no way that this sickness could be endured by an ordinary person (puthujjana)."

According to the Commentary, if the person to whom such indirect remarks are directed understands them, the penalty for the speaker is a thullaccaya. If he/she does not understand them, the penalty is a dukkata. The factor of understanding is covered in the section on "Result", below.

Claims about other people. The original instigators of this rule, instead of each making claims about his own attainments, made false claims about each others' attainments. This case is not men-tioned in the Vibhanga or the commentaries, and so is not an offense under this rule, but it would come under Pacittiya 1.

Perception. Claiming a superior human state that one mistakenly thinks one has achieved is no offense under this rule, although if addressed to a lay person the claim would come under Pacittiya 8. The same holds for a claim that is actually true.

If, however, a bhikkhu has attained a superior human state without realizing it, and then claims to have attained the state, thinking his statement to be a lie, he incurs the full offense under this rule.

Intention. To fall under this rule, a claim to have attained any of these superior human states must be a deliberate lie. "Deliberate lying", according to the Commentary, requires the arising of the intention to misrepresent the truth just prior to, and motivating, the actual statement. When the intention to misrepresent the truth is absent, the statement does not come under this rule. Examples would include

--meaning to say one thing, but accidentally saying another which comes out as a claim to a superior human state; and

--innocently making a statement that someone else misconstrues to be a claim to a superior human state.

Neither of these cases would involve an offense.

Equivocation. It is not uncommon for a bhikkhu to be put on the spot by lay people asking him point-blank about his attainments, and for him to respond by equivocating. The Vinita Vatthu contains a number of examples of this sort. In one of them, the bhikkhu responds by saying, "I have attained a state attainable through the exertion of effort," which of course could mean almost anything. Because his purpose was simply to avoid the question, he incurred no offense. Had he meant the statement as an indirect claim, he would have incurred a thullaccaya.

Result. The Vibhanga, in discussing an obscure case, states that when the listener understands a deliberate lie claiming a superior human state, the bhikkhu making the claim incurs a parajika. If the listener does not understand, the bhikkhu incurs a thullaccaya. The Vibhanga mentions this condition only in the context of a peculiar lie--one in which the speaker intends to lie saying one thing, but actually states another lie--but the Commentary generalizes from this case to say that this condition applies to all cases covered by this rule. Its explanations run as follows:

"Understanding", here, means simply that the listener hears the statement clearly enough to know that it is a claim. Whether or not he/she understands the names for the states claimed--jhana, clairvoyance, clairaudience or whatever--is not an issue here. Also, whether or not he/she believes the statement to be true is irrelevant as far as the offense is concerned. If the listener to whom the remarks are directed does not understand them, but a passer-by does, the penalty is still a parajika.

If the listener does not hear the bhikkhu clearly enough to catch all he says, the penalty is a thullaccaya. If the listener at first has some doubt as to what the bhikkhu said, but later realizes that it was a claim to a superior human state, the offense is still a thullaccaya.

If the listener does not hear the bhikkhu at all, the offense is a dukkata.

According to the Vibhanga, there is a dukkata for a bhikkhu sitting in solitude who states a deliberate lie claiming a superior human state, and another dukkata if he is overheard by a devata. The Commentary adds the same penalty applies if he is overheard by a non-human being or a common animal.

Thus, to incur a parajika, the outright claim to a superior human state must be a deliberate lie and must be heard and understood by a another human being.

Special cases in the Vibhanga:

A bhikkhu, intending to make a false claim for one superior human state, muddles his words and claims another: a parajika. The Com-mentary explains this by noting that all the factors necessary for a parajika offense are present: the bhikkhu makes a claim based on the intention to tell a deliberate lie and the listener understands the claim. The fact that the intended claim and actual claim are both superior human states is crucial; the fact that they are different states is not.

In a series of cases, a person speaking with exaggerated faith or politeness addresses bhikkhus of no particular attainment as if they were arahants ("May the arahants come....May the arahants be seated"). This puts them in a quandary, and so they ask the Buddha how to behave in such a situation. His response: There is no offense in accepting invitations such as these from a "speaker with faith"--the point being that there is no offense in coming, sitting, etc., as long as the intention is just to accept the invitation and not to imply a claim.

A bhikkhu, hoping that people will esteem him, engages in special practices--the example given in the Vinita Vatthu is living in the jungle, but from it we can extrapolate to other practices such as long periods of sitting, any of the ascetic (dhutanga) practices, vegetarianism, etc., followed so that others will esteem one. The penalty: a dukkata.

Summary: Deliberately lying to another person that one has attained a superior human state is a parajika offense.

***

A bhikkhu who commits an offense against any of these four parajika rules is automatically no longer a bhikkhu. There is no need for him to go through a formal ceremony of disrobing, for the act of committing the offense is an act of disrobing in and of itself. Even if he continues to pretend to be a bhikkhu, he does not really count as one; as soon as the facts are known he must be expelled from the Sangha. He can never again properly ordain as a bhikkhu in this life. If he tries to ordain in a Community that does not know of his offense, his ordination does not count, and he must be expelled as soon as the truth is found out.

The Commentary, however, states that such an offender may "go forth" as a novice if he wants to, although it is up to the individual Community to consider the circumstances of his offense to decide whether or not it wants to accept him.

Ignorance of these rules does not exempt an offender from the penalty, which is why the Buddha ordered that they be taught to each new bhikkhu as soon as possible after ordination (Mv.I.77). Because the rules cover a number of cases that are legal in present-day society (e.g., recommending abortion, proving to oneself how supple one has become through yoga by inserting one's penis in one's mouth) or that are common practice among people who see nothing wrong with flirting with the edges of the law (e.g., telling a doctor to turn off a life-support machine for a comatose patient, copying computer soft-ware for a friend, hiding an article subject to customs duties when entering a country), it is especially important to inform each new bhikkhu of the rules' full implications right from the very start.

If a bhikkhu suspects that he has committed a parajika, he should immediately inform a senior bhikkhu well-versed in the rules. The way the senior bhikkhu should handle the case is illustrated by a case reported in the Commentary to Parajika 2:

Once a king together with an enormous crowd came to worship the Great Stupa at a certain monastery. One of the crowd was a visiting bhikkhu from the South who was carrying an expensive roll of cloth. The commotion of the event was so great that the bhikkhu dropped the cloth, was unable to retrieve it and soon gave it up for lost. One of the resident bhikkhus happened to come across it and, desiring to steal it, quickly put it away before the owner might see it. Eventually, of course, he became tormented by guilt and went to the resident Vinaya expert to admit a parajika and disrobe.

The Vinaya expert, though, wouldn't let him disrobe until he had found the owner of the cloth and inquired about it more fully. Eventually, after a long search, he was able to track down the original owner at a monastery in the distant South, who told him that at the time of the theft he had given the cloth up for lost and had abandoned all mental attachment for it. Thus, as the cloth was ownerless, the resident bhikkhu had incurred not a parajika, but simply a dukkata for the preliminary effort with intention to steal.

This example shows several things: the great thoroughness with which a senior bhikkhu should investigate a possible parajika, the compassion he should show to the offender, and the fact that the offender should be given the benefit of the doubt wherever possible: He is innocent until the facts prove him guilty.

Finally, the Commentary concludes its discussion of the parajikas by noticing that there are altogether 24, actual and virtual, in the Vinaya. They are:

The four for bhikkhus.

The four additional parajikas for bhikkhunis.

The eleven disqualified types who should not be ordained in the first place. If they happen to be ordained, their ordination does not count, and once they are found out they must be expelled for life (Mv.I.61-68). Thus they are virtual parajikas. They are-- a pandaka (essentially, a eunuch or a person born neuter--see Sanghadisesa 2), a "non-human" being, such as a naga or yakkha, that can assume human form, a hermaphrodite,

a person who poses as a bhikkhu without having been ordained,

a bhikkhu who has ordained in another sect or religion without first giving up his status as a bhikkhu;

a person who has murdered his father;

a person who has murdered his mother;

a person who has murdered an arahant;

a person who has sexually violated a bhikkhuni;

a person who has injured a Buddha to the point of causing him to bleed;

a person who has caused a schism in the Sangha.

In addition to the above actual and virtual parajikas, the Commentary gives separate listing to the four "anulomika" (derived) parajikas, which refer to four cases included under Parajika 1: the bhikkhu with a supple back who sticks his penis in his mouth, the bhikkhu with a long penis who inserts it into his anus, the bhikkhu who performs oral intercourse with someone else, and the bhikkhu who receives anal intercourse.

The 24th Parajika refers to the case of a bhikkhuni who, taking up the role of a housewife, goes to live in a lay person's household.

CHAPTER FIVE

Sanghadisesa

This term means "involving the Community in the initial (adi) and subsequent (sesa) acts." What it refers to is the fact that the Community is the agent which initially calls on the bhikkhu who breaks any of the rules in this category to undergo the penalty (of manatta, penance, and parivasa, probation), subsequently reimposes the penalty if he does not properly carry it out, and finally lifts the penalty when he does. There are thirteen training rules here, the first nine entailing a sanghadisesa immediately on transgression, the last four only after the offender has been rebuked three times as a formal act of the Community.

1. Intentional discharge of semen, except while dreaming, entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.
The origin story to this rule is as follows:
"Now at that time Ven. Seyyasaka was leading the celibate life dissatisfied. Because of this, he was thin, wretched, unattractive and jaundiced, his body covered with veins. Ven. Udayin saw that Ven. Seyyasaka was thin... his body covered with veins; and seeing him, he said to him, 'Seyyasaka, my friend, why are you thin... your body covered with veins? Could it be that you are leading the chaste life dissatisfied?'
"'Yes, friend.'
"'In that case, eat as you like and sleep as you like and bathe as you like; and having eaten, slept and bathed as you like, when dissatisfaction arises and lust assails the mind, emit semen making do with your hand.'
"'But is it okay to do that?'
"'Of course. I do it myself.'
"So then Ven. Seyyasaka ate as he liked and slept as he liked... and when dissatisfaction arose and lust assailed his mind, he would emit semen making do with his hand. Then it wasn't long before he became attractive, with rounded features, a clear complexion and very bright skin. So the bhikkhus who were his friends said to him, 'Before, friend Seyyasaka, you were thin... your body covered with veins. But now you are attractive, with rounded features, a clear complexion and very bright skin. Could it be that you're taking medicine?'

"'No, I'm not taking medicine, my friends. I just eat as like and sleep as I like... and when dissatisfaction arises and lust assails my mind, I emit semen making do with my hand.'
"'But do you emit semen making do with the same hand you use to eat the gifts of the faithful?'
"'Yes, my friends.'
"So the bhikkhus... were upset and offended and spread it about, 'How can this Ven. Seyyasaka emit semen making do with the same hand he uses to eat the gifts of the faithful?'"
This rule, in its outline form, is one of the simplest to explain. In its details, though, it one of the most complex, not only because the subject is a sensitive matter, but also because the Commentary deviates somewhat from the Vibhanga in its explanations of two of the three factors which constitute the full offense.
The three factors are result, intention and effort: Emission of semen caused by an intentional effort. When all three factors are present, the offense is a sanghadisesa. If the last two--intention and effort--are present, the offense is a thullaccaya. Any single factor or any other combination of two factors--i.e., intention and result without making a physical effort, or effort and result without intention--is not grounds for an offense.

It may seem strange to list the factor of result first, but I want to explain it first partly because, in understanding the types of intention and act covered by this rule, it is necessary to know what they are aimed at, and also because it is the one factor where the Vibhanga and Commentary are in basic agreement.

Result. The Commentary discusses the physiology of semen as it was understood at the time, and in passing touches on the question of whether the word "semen" refers to the clear liquid produced in small quantities by the prostrate and Cooper's glands prior to ejacula-tion, or to the seminal fluid released at orgasm (in its words, "having made the whole body shake, is released and descends into the urinary tract.") It concludes that the latter is what is meant here.

As for the Vibhanga, it devotes long passages to the various colors and qualities which semen can come in, and concludes that the color and quality are irrelevant to the offense. This suggests that a bhikkhu who has had a vasectomy can still commit an offense under this rule, since he can still discharge the various components that go into seminal fluid--minus only the sperm--at orgasm.

Discharge according to the Vibhanga, refers to the point in time when the semen "falls from its base." The Commentary explains this as the point when the semen enters the urinary tract, since from that point on the process is irreversible. Thus if the process of sexual stimulation has reached this point, the factor of result has been ful-filled, even if one tries to prevent the semen from leaving the body by pinching the end of one's penis.

Intention. The Vibhanga defines intentionally as "having made the decision knowingly, consciously and purposefully." According to the Commentary, "having made the decision" refers to the moment when one "crushes" one's indecisiveness by taking an act. (These are the same terms it uses to explain the same phrase under Parajika 3 and several other rules. The meaning is that one has definitely made up one's mind to start with the act, and is not simply toying with the idea.) Knowingly means that one knows that, "I am making an exertion." Consciously means that one is aware that one's efforts are bringing about an emission of semen. Purposefully means that one's purpose is to enjoy the bringing about of an emission.

This last point is where the Commentary deviates from the Vibhanga's discussion of the factor of intention. The Vibhanga, throughout its analysis, expresses the factor of purpose simply as "aiming at causing an emission," and it lists ten possible reasons for wanting to bring the emission about:

for the sake of health,

for the sake of pleasure,

for the sake of a medicine, for the sake of a gift (to insects, says the Commentary), for the sake of merit,

for the sake of sacrifice,

for the sake of heaven,

for the sake of seed, (to produce a child--a bhikkhu who gave semen to be used in artificial insemination would fit in this category), for the sake of investigating (to see what color it will be--ancient medicine sometimes used this as part of its diagnosis of disease), or for the sake of fun.

Each of these reasons, the Vibhanga says, fulfills the factor of intention here. Thus for the Commentary to limit the question of "purpose" strictly to the enjoyment of the act of bringing about an emission (numbers 2 and 10 in the Vibhanga's list) has no basis in the Canon. And so the factor of "purpose" under this rule is fulfilled when one wants to cause an emission of semen, for no matter what reason.

Given the way intention is defined, there is no offense for a bhikkhu who brings on an emission of semen-- accidentally--e.g., toying with his penis, trying to decide whether or not to go for an orgasm, when it suddenly and unexpectedly goes off;

not knowing that he is making an effort--e.g., when he is dreaming or in a semi-conscious state before fully waking up from sleep;

not conscious that his efforts are bringing about an emission of semen--e.g., when he is so engrossed in applying medicine to a sore on his penis that he doesn't realize that he is bringing on an ejaculation;

or when his efforts are motivated by a purpose other than that of causing an emission--e.g., when he wakes up, finds that he is about to have a spontaneous ejaculation, and grabs hold of his penis to keep the semen from soiling his robes or bedding.

Effort. The Vibhanga defines four types of effort that fulfill this factor: One causes an emission making an effort (1) at an internal object, (2) at an external object, (3) at both an internal and an external object, or (4) by shaking one's pelvis in the air. It then goes on to explain these terms: The internal object is one's own living body. External objects can either be animate or inanimate objects. The third type of effort involves a combination of the first two, and the fourth covers cases when one makes one's penis erect ("workable") by making an effort in the air.

The extremely general nature of these definitions gives the impression that the compilers of the Vibhanga wanted them to cover every imaginable type of bodily effort aimed at arousing oneself sexually, and this impression is borne out by the wide variety of cases covered in the Vinita Vatthu. They include, among others, a bhikkhu who squeezes his penis with his fist, one who rubs his penis with his thumb, one who rubs his penis against his bed, one who inserts his penis into sand, one who bathes against the current in a stream, one who rubs his preceptor's back in the bathing room, one who gets an erection from the friction of his thighs and robes while walking along, one who has his belly heated in the bathing room, and one who stretches his body. In each of these cases, if the bhikkhu aims at and succeeds in causing an emission, he incurs a sanghadisesa.

The Vinita Vatthu also includes a case in which a bhikkhu, desiring to cause an emission, orders a novice to take hold of his (the bhikkhu's) penis. He gets his emission and a sanghadisesa to boot, which shows that getting someone else to make the effort for one fulfills the factor of effort here.

In discussing the factor of effort, though, the Commentary makes a slight change in the Vibhanga's definition--that one makes an effort with or upon one's own body, etc., rather than at one's own body, etc.--and adds an additional factor: that the effort must be directed at one's own penis. If this is so, then a bhikkhu who succeeds in causing an emission by stimulating any of the erogenous zones of his body aside from his penis would incur no offense. The Commentary itself actually makes this point, and the Sub-commentary seconds it, although the V/Sub-commentary says that such a bhikkhu would incur a dukkata--what it bases this opinion on, it doesn't say: perhaps a mis-reading of the Case of the Sleeping Novice, which we will discuss below.

At any rate, the Commentary in adding this last factor runs up against a number of cases in the Vinita Vatthu in which the effort does not involve the penis: the bhikkhu warming his belly, the bhikkhu rubbing his preceptor's back, a bhikkhu having his thighs massaged and others. The Commentary deals with these cases by rewriting them, stating in most cases that the effort somehow had to involve the penis, and actually contradicting the Vibhanga in the case of the bhikkhu who warms his belly, saying that this sort of effort does not involve an offense at all, even if one aims at and succeeds in causing an emission.

As stated in the Introduction, we have to go on the assumption that the compilers of the Vibhanga knew the crucial factors well enough to know what is and is not an offense, and were careful enough to include all the relevant facts when describing the precedents in the Vinita Vatthu in order to show how the Buddha arrived at his judgments. All of this suggests that the Commentary, in adding the factor that the physical effort has to involve one's own penis, is on shaky ground.

The question then is why the Commentary adds the extra factor. An answer may be found in one of the cases in the Vinita Vatthu: the Case of the Sleeping Novice.

"On that occasion a certain bhikkhu grabbed hold of the penis of a sleeping novice. His semen was emitted. He felt remorseful...'Bhikkhu, there is no sanghadisesa offense. There is a dukkata offense.'"

The issue here is whose semen was emitted. Pali syntax, unlike English, doesn't give us a clue, for there is no rule that the pronoun in one sentence should refer to the subject of the preceding sentence. There are many cases under Parajika 3 which follow the form, "A stone badly held by the bhikkhu standing above hit the bhikkhu standing below on the head. The bhikkhu died. He felt remorseful." In these cases it is obvious from the context within the story which bhikkhu died and which one felt remorseful, while with the sleeping novice we have to look for the context in terms of the other parts of the Vibhanga.

If the bhikkhu was the one who emitted semen, then perhaps there is a contradiction in the Vibhanga, and the Commentary is justified in saying that the effort must involve one's penis, for otherwise the case would seem to fulfill the Vibhanga's general definition for the factor of effort: The bhikkhu is making an effort at an outside body and has an emission. Following the general pattern of the rule, he would incur a sanghadisesa if he intended emission, and no penalty at all if he didn't. Yet the question of motivation is not mentioned at all, and the bhikkhu is given a dukkata, which suggests an inconsistency.

If, however, the novice was the who emitted, then there is no inconsistency at all: The bhikkhu gets his dukkata for making lustful bodily contact with another man (see the discussion under Sangha-disesa 2, below), and the case is included here to show that the full offense under this rule concerns cases where one makes oneself emit semen, and not cases where one makes others emit. (Other than this case, there is nothing in the rule or the Vibhanga that expressly makes this point.) And the reason the bhikkhu's motivation is not mentioned is because it irrelevant to the case.

Thus, since the second reading--the novice was the one who had an emission--does less violence to the rest of the Vibhanga, it seems the preferable one. And so it would appear that the Commentary's additional factor--that one's penis must be involved in the effort--has no real basis in the Canon, that the cases in the Vinita

Vatthu do not need to be rewritten and that the Vibhanga's original definition for the factor of effort still stands: Any bodily effort made at one's own body, at another body or physical object, at both, or any effort made in the air--like shaking one's pelvis or stretching one's body--fulfills the factor of effort here.

One case that does not fulfill the factor of effort is when one is filled with lust and stares at the private parts of a woman or girl. In the case dealing with this contingency, the bhikkhu emits semen but again no mention is made of whether he intended to. In any event, the Buddha lays down a separate rule, imposing a dukkata for staring lustfully at a women's private parts. This suggests that efforts with one's eyes do not count as bodily efforts under this sanghadisesa, for otherwise the penalty would have been a sanghadisesa if the bhikkhu had intended emission, and no offense if he hadn't. And this also suggests that the dukkata under this separate rule holds regardless of intention or result. The Commentary adds that this dukkata applies also to staring lustfully at the genitals of a female animal, or at the area of a fully-clothed woman's body where her sexual organ is, thinking, "Her sexual organ is there." At present we would impose the penalty on a bhikkhu who stares lustfully at a woman's private parts in a pornographic photograph.

Derived offenses. As stated above, a bhikkhu who fulfills all three factors--result, intention and effort--incurs a sanghadisesa. One who fulfills only the last two--intention and effort--incurs a thullaccaya.

People have sometimes asked how much of an effort is necessary to incur a thullaccaya, and in particular, whether the thullaccaya is only for cases where a bhikkhu tries to go all the way to an emission but cannot have one for physical reasons beyond his control--e.g., he is unable to have an erection or to produce semen--or whether it also covers cases where a bhikkhu starts out trying to cause an emission but stops short and changes his mind before the emission can come.

The Vibhanga suggests indirectly that the penalty covers both cases when it says simply that the thullaccaya is for one who intends, makes the effort but does not emit. If it had meant to limit the penalty to those who cannot emit it would have said so and would have set some kind of standard for determining when the bhikkhu passed the threshold from does not to cannot so that there would be not doubt as to where the realm of non-offense ends and thullaccaya begins. But it doesn't.

The Commentary is even clearer on this topic when it discusses the case of a bhikkhu who, filled with his lust, grabs his penis with the purpose of causing an emission but drifts off to sleep before an emission occurs. The emission does occur while he is asleep, though, and he incurs a sanghadisesa. Since efforts made during sleep do not count (see below), this shows that the factor of effort does not need to go all the way to ejaculation in order to count.

In discussing the case of a bhikkhu with fat thighs who develops an erection simply by walking along, the Commentary mentions that if one finds sensual "fever" arising in such a case, one must immediately stop walking and start contemplating the foulness of the body so as to purify the mind before resuming walking. Otherwise, one would risk incurring a thullaccaya. Sensual fever, here, probably refers to the desire to cause an emission, for there are several spots in the Commentary which discuss bhikkhus who stimulate an erection simply for the enjoyment of the contact rather than to cause an emission, and the judgement is that they incur no penalty, even if an emission does inadvertently result.

Aside from the thullaccaya, there are no other derived offenses under this rule. A bhikkhu who has an ejaculation while thinking sensual thoughts, but without making any physical effort to cause it, incurs no penalty regardless of whether or not the idea crosses his mind that he would like to have an emission, and whether or not he enjoys it when it occurs. However, the Commentary notes here that even though there is no offense involved, one should not let oneself be overcome by sensual thoughts in this way. This point is borne out by the famous simile that occurred to Prince Siddhattha before his Awakening, and that later, as Buddha, he related to a number of listeners:

"'Suppose there were a wet sappy piece of timber lying on dry ground far from water, and a man were to come along with an upper fire-stick, thinking, "I'll light a fire. I'll produce heat." Now what do you think? Would he be able to light a fire and produce heat by rubbing the upper fire-stick in the wet sappy timber...?'

'"No, Master Gotama. And why not? Because the wood is wet and sappy, even though it is lying on dry ground far from water. The man would reap nothing but weariness and disappointment.'

'"So it is with any priest or contemplative who lives withdrawn from sensuality only in body, but whose desire, infatuation,urge, thirst and fever for sensuality is not relinquished and stilled within him: Whether or not he feels painful, racking, piercing feelings due to his striving (for Awakening), he is incapable of knowledge, vision and unexcelled self-awakening.'" (M.36)

Non-offenses. In addition to the two cases just mentioned--the bhikkhu who stimulates himself sexually without a desire to cause an emission and inadvertently has an emission; and the bhikkhu who without making any physical effort has an ejaculation while overcome by sensual thoughts--there is no offense for one who has an ejaculation during a dream.

In the wording of the rule, the phrase "except while dreaming" is expressed by an idiom that could also mean "at the end of a dream". This second possibility, though, is ruled out by the Commentary, which states that what happens in the mind while one is sleeping falls in the bounds of the Abhidhamma, but what happens after one awakens falls within the bounds of the Vinaya; and that there is no such thing as a misdeed performed when one is in a "non-negligible" state of mind which does not count as an offense. ("Non-negligible", according to the Sub-commentary, means "normal".)

In making the exception for what happens while asleep, the Buddha states that even though there may be the intention to cause an emis-sion, it doesn't count. The Commentary goes on to say, however, that if a bhikkhu fully awakens in the course of a wet dream, he should lie still and be extremely careful not to make a move that would fulfill the factor of effort under this rule. If the process has reached the point where it is irreversible, and the ejaculation occurs spontaneously, he commits no offense regardless of whether or not he enjoys it. And as the Commentary quotes from the Kurundi, one of the ancient Sinhalese commentaries on which it is based, if he wakes up in the course of a wet dream and grabs hold of his penis so that the ejaculation will not soil his robes or bedding, he incurs no penalty.

However, the case from the Commentary mentioned above--the bhikkhu who had the desire and made the effort towards an emission before falling off to sleep--suggests that the exemption for emissions during a dream does not extend to cases where both the intention and the effort occur while one is fully conscious, for all three factors under this rule are fully present: One makes the conscious decision to cause an emission, makes a conscious effort aimed at causing the emission, and the emission occurs. Whether or not one is conscious that it is occurring is of no account.

Summary: Intentionally causing oneself to emit semen, or getting someone else to cause one to emit semen--except during a dream--is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

2. Should any bhikkhu, overcome by lust, with altered mind, engage in bodily contact with a woman, or in holding her hand, holding a lock of her hair or caressing any of her limbs, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

This rule has sometimes been viewed as a sign of prejudice against women. But, as the origin story makes clear, the Buddha formulated the rule not because women are bad, but because bhikkhus sometimes can be.

"Now at that time, Ven. Udayin was living in the forest. His dwelling was beautiful, attractive and appealing. The inner chamber was in the middle, entirely surrounded by the outer rooms. The bed and chair, the pillows and bolsters were well arranged, the water for washing and drinking well placed, the surrounding area well swept. Many people came to admire it. Even a certain Brahmin together with his wife went to where Ven. Udayin was staying, and on arrival said, 'We would like to admire your dwelling.'

"'Very well then, Brahmin, have a look.' Taking the key, unfas-tening the lock and opening the door, he entered the dwelling. The Brahmin entered after Ven. Udayin; the Brahmin lady after the Brahmin. Then Ven. Udayin, opening some of the windows and closing others, walking around the inner room and coming up from behind, rubbed up against the Brahmin lady limb by limb.

"After a while the Brahmin, having exchanged pleasantries with Ven. Udayin, left. Delighted, he burst out with an exclamation of joy: 'How splendid are are these Sakyan contemplatives who live in the forest like this! And how splendid is Ven. Udayin who live in the forest like this!'

"When he had said this, his wife said to him, 'What's so splendid about him? He rubbed up against me limb by limb just the way you do!'

"So the Brahmin was offended and annoyed and spread it about: 'How shameless these bhikkhus are, how immoral and hypocritical!...How can this contemplative Udayin rub up against my wife limb by limb? It isn't possible to go with your women-folk to a monastery or dwelling. If you go to a monastery or dwelling with your womenfolk, the Sakyan contemplatives will molest them!'"

There are two ways in which a bhikkhu can come into contact with a woman: actively (the bhikkhu makes the contact) and passively (the woman does). Since the Vibhanga uses different terms to analyse these two possibilities, we will discuss them separately.

Active contact. The full offense under this rule for active contact is composed of four factors:

1. Object: A living woman--"even one born on that very day, all the more an older one." Whether or not she is awake to realize what is going on is irrelevant to the offense.

2. Perception: The bhikkhu correctly perceives her to be a woman.

3. Intention: He is acting under the influence of lust.

4. Effort: He comes into physical contact with her.

Since the system of derived offenses based on the various permu-tations of these factors is one of the most complex in the Vibhanga, we will limit our discussion first to the full offense before going into the permutations.

Of the four factors listed above, only two--intention and effort--require detailed explanation.

Intention. The Vibhanga explains the term overcome with lust as meaning "impassioned, desiring, a mind bound by attraction." Altered, it says, can refer in general to three states of mind--passion, aversion and delusion--but here it refers specifically to passion.

The Commentary adds a piece of Abhidhamma analysis at this point, saying that altered refers to the moment when the mind leaves its state of pure neutrality in the bhavanga under the influence of desire. Thus the factor of intention here can be fulfilled not only by a prolonged or intense feeling of desire, but also by a momentary infatuation.

The Commentary also tries to limit the range of passion to which this rule applies, saying that it covers only desire for the enjoyment of contact. As we noted under Parajika 1, the ancient commentators formulated a list of eleven types of lust, each mutually exclusive, and the question of which rule applies to a particular case depends on which type of lust the bhikkhu is acting under. Thus if a bhikkhu lusting for intercourse touches a woman, it says, he incurs only a dukkata as a preliminary to sexual intercourse under Parajika 1. If he touches her from his lust for an ejaculation, he incurs a thullaccaya as a preliminary to causing an emission under Sanghadisesa 1. Only if he touches her with the simple desire to enjoy the sensation of contact does he incur a sanghadisesa under this rule.

This system, though very neat and orderly, flies in the face of common sense, and as we noted under Parajika 1, contradicts the Vibhanga as well, so there is no need to adopt it. We can stick with the Vibhanga to this rule and say that any state of passion fulfills the factor of intention here. The Commentary's discussion, though, is useful in showing that the passion needn't be full-scale sexual lust. Even a momentary desire to enjoy the sensation of physical contact is enough to fall under this rule.

Effort. The Vibhanga illustrates the effort of making physical contact with a list of activities: rubbing, rubbing up against, rubbing downwards, rubbing upwards, bending down, pulling up, drawing to, pushing away, seizing hold (or pinning down--abhinigganhana), squeez-ing, grasping or touching. The Vinita Vatthu includes a case of a bhikkhu giving a woman a blow with his shoulder: He too incurs a sanghadisesa, which shows that the Vibhanga's list is meant to cover all similar actions as well. If a bhikkhu with lustful mind does any-thing of this sort to a living woman's body, perceiving that she is a woman, he incurs the full penalty under this rule.

Derived offenses. Each of the factors of an offense allows a number of permutations that admit for different classes of offenses. Taken together, they form a complex system. Here we will consider each factor in turn.

Object. Assuming that the bhikkhu is acting with lustful intentions and is perceiving his object correctly, he incurs a thullaccaya for making bodily contact with a pandaka, a female yakkha or a dead woman; and a dukkata for bodily contact with a man (or boy), a wooden doll or a female animal.

"Pandaka" is usually translated as eunuch, but eunuchs are only one of five types of pandakas recognized by the Commentary:

(1) An asitta (literally, a "sprinkled one")--a man who finds sexual fulfillment in performing fellatio on another man and bringing him to climax. (For some reason, other homosexual acts, even though they were known in ancient India, are not included under this type nor under any of the types in this list.)

(2) A voyeur--a man who finds sexual fulfillment in watching other people have sex.

(3) A eunuch--one who has been castrated.

(4) A half-time pandaka--one who is a pandaka only during the waning moon. (! -- The Sub-commentary's discussion of this point shows that its author and his contemporaries were as unfamiliar with this type as we are today. Perhaps this was how bisexuals were understood in ancient times.)

(5) A neuter--a person born without sexual organs.

According to the Commentary, the Mahavagga's statement (I.61) that pandakas cannot receive ordination refers only to the last three types, and to the half-time pandaka only during the waning moon.

As for female yakkhas, the Commentary says that this also included female deities. There is an ancient story in Chieng Mai of a bhikkhu who was visited by a dazzling heavenly maiden late one night when he was meditating alone in a cave at Wat Umong. He couldn't resist touching her, and as soon as he did, went immediately out of his mind. The moral: This is one thullaccaya not to be taken lightly.

Also from the Commentary:

(1) The thullaccaya for lustfully touching female corpses applies only to those which would be grounds for a full offense under Parajika 1, i.e., those with an anal, oral or genital orifice intact enough for one to perform the sexual act. Other female corpses decomposed beyond that point are grounds for a dukkata here.

(2) The dukkata for lustfully touching wooden dolls (mannikins) applies also to any female form made out of other materials, and even to any picture of a woman.

(3) Female animals include female nagas and other half-animal, half-woman species as well.

According to the Sub-commentary, the dukkata for lustfully touching female animals also applies to male animals.

For some reason, male yakkhas and deities slipped out of the list. Perhaps they should come under "men".

Perception. Misperception affects the severity of the offense only in the cases of women and pandakas. A bhikkhu who makes lustful bodily contact with a woman while under the impression that she is something else--a pandaka, a man or an animal--incurs a thullaccaya. If he makes lustful bodily contact with a pandaka while under the impression that the pandaka is a woman, a man or an animal, the penalty is a dukkata. In the cases of men and animals, misperception has no effect on the severity of the case: Lustful bodily contact--e.g. with a male transvestite whom one thinks to be a woman--still results in a dukkata.

Intention. The Vinita Vatthu contains cases of a bhikkhu who caresses his mother out of filial affection, one who caresses his daughter out of fatherly affection, and one who caresses his sister out of brotherly affection. In each case the penalty is a dukkata.

The Vibhanga does not discuss the issue of bhikkhus who intentionally make active contact with women for purposes other than lust or affection--e.g., helping a woman who has fallen into a raging river--but the Commentary does. It introduces the concept of anamasa, things which carry a dukkata penalty when touched; women and clothing which belongs to a woman top the list. It then goes into great detail to tell how one should behave when one's mother falls into a raging river. Under no circumstances, it says, should one grab hold of her, although one may extend a rope, a board, etc., in her direction. If she happens to grab hold of her son the bhikkhu, he should not shake her off, but simply let her hold on as he swims back to shore.

Where the Commentary gets the concepts of anamasa is hard to say. Perhaps it came from the practices of the Brahmin caste, who are very careful not to touch certain things and people of certain lower castes. At any rate, there is no direct basis for it in the Canon. Although the concept has received universal acceptance in Theravadin Communities, many highly-respected Vinaya experts have drawn the line right here, saying that there is nothing wrong in touching a woman when one's action is based not on lust but on a desire to save her from danger. Even if there is an offense in doing so, there are other places where Buddhaghosa recommends that one be willing to incur a minor penalty for the sake of compassion (e.g., digging a person out of a hole into which he has fallen), and the same principle surely holds here.

There is no offense in touching a being other than a woman if one's intentions are not lustful, although tickling is an offense under Pacittiya 52.

The effort. Making lustful but indirect bodily contact with a woman one perceives to be a woman and a pandaka one perceives to be a woman carries the following penalties:

For the woman: Using one's body to make contact with an article connected to her body--e.g. using one's hand to touch the hem of her dress, a rope or stick she is holding: a thullaccaya.

Using an item connected with one's body to make contact with her body--e.g. using the edge of one's robe or a flower one is holding to brush along her arm: a thullaccaya.

Using an item connected with one's body to make contact with an item connected with her body: a dukkata.

Taking an object--such as a flower--and tossing it against her body, an object connected with her body, or an object she has tossed--a dukkata.

Taking hold of something she is standing or sitting on--a bridge, a tree, a boat, etc.--and giving it a shake: a dukkata.

For the pandaka one assumes to be a woman, the penalty in all the above cases is a dukkata.

These penalties for indirect contact have inspired the Commentary to say that if a bhikkhu makes contact with a clothed portion of a woman's body, or uses a clothed portion of his body to make contact with hers, and the cloth is so thick that neither his body hairs nor hers can penetrate it, the penalty is only a thullaccaya, since he did not make direct contact. Only if the contact is skin-to-skin, skin-to-hair or hair-to-hair (as might be possible through thin cloth) does he commit the full offense. Thus a bhikkhu who fondles the breasts or buttocks of a fully-clothed woman would incur only a thullaccaya since the contact was indirect.

While this point might be true in a technical sense, there are two points from the Vibhanga which indicate that its compilers did not have this sort of thing in mind when they mentioned indirect contact.

(1) In its discussion of passive contact, the Vibhanga divides the factor of effort into two parts: effort and result. The result necessary for a full offense is that the bhikkhu detects contact. The important word here is "detect" (pativijanati): The Canon uses it to refer to cases where one perceives something that may not be readily apparent, and here it seems specifically designed to cover instances where the contact may not be skin-to-skin, but still can be felt as bodily contact. Thus if the contact is such that the bhikkhu could feel the presence of the woman's body through his or under her cloth-ing, direct contact has been made. If this much contact is sufficient for a full offense under passive contact, it would seem reasonable that it should also be sufficient when the contact is active.

(2) The Vinita Vatthu contains the following case:

"Now at that time, a certain bhikkhu, seeing a woman he encountered coming in the opposite direction, was infatuated and gave her a blow with his shoulder. He was remorseful...'Bhikkhu, you have committed a sanghadisesa offense.'"

As mentioned in the Introduction, we have to go on the assump-tion that the Vibhanga compilers were careful enough to include all of the relevant facts in describing the cases in the Vinita Vatthu. Now if the Commentary's assertion were true--that the amount of cloth between the bodies of the bhikkhu and the woman is important in determining an offense--they would have mentioned this factor at least indirectly, saying, for instance, that the encounter took place in the monastery, where he might have had his shoulder uncovered, rather than outside of the monastery, where he should have had it covered; or that he had neglected to cover his shoulders when leav-ing the monastery; or that he was wearing a very fine robe which allowed his hair to pass through. But it says nothing of the sort, and its silence here suggests that such questions are irrelevant.

The only cases of indirect contact mentioned in the Vinita Vatthu refer to contact of a much more remote sort: a bhikkhu pulls a cord of which a woman is holding another end, pulls a stick of which she is holding the other end, or gives her a playful push with his bowl.

Thus in the context of this rule the Vibhanga defines "object connected to the body", through which indirect contact is made, with examples: things that the person is holding. The Vinaya Mukha adds things which are hanging from the person--like the hem of a robe or a dress. In this context, contact made through cloth which the person is wearing, if the contact can be detected, would be classed as direct. This would parallel Parajika 1, in which the question of whether there is anything covering either of the organs involved in intercourse is completely irrelevant to the offense. Thus the concept of direct and indirect contact here would seem to follow general linguistic usage: If a woman is wearing a long-sleeved shirt, for instance, grabbing her by the arm and grabbing her by the shirt-sleeve are two different things, and would receive different penalties under this rule.

According to the Vibhanga, a bhikkhu who feels desire for contact with a woman and makes an effort but does not achieve even indirect contact, the penalty is a dukkata.

Passive contact. The Vibhanga's analysis of passive contact--when the bhikkhu is the object rather than the agent making the contact--deals with only a limited number of variables.

1. Agent: Either a woman which the bhikkhu perceives to be a woman, or a pandaka he perceives to be a woman.

2. The agent's effort: Any of the actions which fulfill the factor of act for the full offense under active contact--rubbing, pulling, pushing, squeezing, etc.

3. The bhikkhu's aim: The Vibhanga lists only two here: the desire to come together and the desire to escape. () The Sub-commentary explains the first as desiring the pleasurable feeling of contact.

4. Effort: The bhikkhu either makes a physical effort or he doesn't. The Commentary includes under this factor even the slightest physical movements, such as winking, raising one's eyebrows or rolling one's eyes. At present we would include such things as inviting a woman to caress one or deliberately placing oneself in a crowded entrance to a store so that women would have to make contact with one as they walked past.

5. Result: The bhikkhu either detects the contact or he doesn't.

The most important factor here is the bhikkhu's aim: If he desires to escape from the contact, then no matter who the person making the contact is, whether or not the bhikkhu makes an effort, or whether or not he detects the contact, there is no offense. The Vinita Vatthu gives an example:

"Now at that time, many women, pressing up to a certain bhikkhu, led him about arm-in-arm. He felt conscience-stricken... 'Did you consent, bhikkhu?' (the Buddha) asked.

'No, Lord, I did not.'

'Then there was no offense, bhikkhu, as you did not consent.'"

The Commentary mentions another example, in which a bhikkhu, not desiring the contact, is molested by a lustful woman. He remains perfectly still, with the thought, "When she realizes I am not interested, she will go away." He too incurs no offense.

However, if the bhikkhu desires the contact, then the offenses are as follows:

The agent is a woman, he makes an effort and detects contact: a sanghadisesa. He makes an effort but detects no contact: a dukkata. He makes no effort (e.g., he remains perfectly still as she grasps, squeezes and rubs his body): no offense regardless of whether or not he detects contact.

The agent is a pandaka that the bhikkhu perceives to be a woman, the bhikkhu makes an effort and detects contact: a dukkata. All other possibilities--effort but no detected contact, detected contact but no effort, no effort and no detected contact: no offense.

Counting offenses. According to the Vibhanga, if a bhikkhu has lustful bodily contact with x number of people in any of the ways that constitute an offense here, he incurs x number of offenses. For example, if he lustfully rubs up against two women in a bus, he incurs two sanghadisesas. If, out of fatherly affection, he hugs his two daughters and three sons, he incurs two dukkatas for hugging his daughters and none for hugging his sons.

The Commentary adds that if he makes lustful contact with a person x number of times, he incurs x number of offenses. For instance, he hugs a woman from behind, she fights him off and he strikes her out of lust: two sanghadisesas.

The question of counting sanghadisesas, though, is somewhat academic, since the penalty for multiple offenses almost identical with the penalty for one. The only difference is in the formal announce-ments that accompany the penalty--e.g. when the Sangha places the offender under probation, when he informs others bhikkhus of why he is under probation, etc. For more on this point, see the concluding section of this chapter.

Non-offenses. There is no offense for a bhikkhu who makes contact with a woman-- unintentionally-- as when inadvertently running into a woman in a crowded place;

unthinkingly-- as when a woman runs into him and, startled, he pushes her away;

unknowingly--as when, without lustful intent, he touches a young tomboy he thinks to be a boy; or when he doesn't give his consent--as in the case of the bhikkhu led around arm-in-arm by a crowd of women.

Summary: Lustful bodily contact with a woman which one perceives to be a woman is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

3. Should any bhikkhu, overcome by lust, with altered mind, address lewd words to a woman in the manner of young men to a young woman alluding to sexual intercourse, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

"Now at that time Ven. Udayin was living in the forest. One day many women came to the monastery to admire his dwelling. They went to where he was staying and on arrival said to him, 'Ven. Sir, we would like to admire your dwelling.' Then Ven. Udayin, showing the dwelling to the women and referring to their genital and anal orifices, praised and criticized and begged and implored and asked and quizzed and advised and instructed and ridiculed them. Those of the women who were brazen, shame-less and sly giggled at Ven. Udayin, exclaimed to him, laughed aloud and teased him; while those of the women who had a sense of decency complained to the bhikkhus as they left: 'It is improper, Ven. sirs, and unbecoming! Even from our husbands we wouldn't like to hear this sort of thing, much less from Master Udayin.'"

The K/Commentary lists five factors for a full breach of this rule:

1. Object--A woman, i.e., any female human being experienced enough to know what words are and are not lewd.

2. Perception--The bhikkhu perceives her to be such a woman.

3. Intention--He is lustful. As in the preceding rule, we can take the Commentary's definition of lust here as the minimum amount of lust to fulfill this factor: He wants to enjoy saying something lewd or improper.

4. Effort--He makes remarks referring to her genitals, anus or to her performing sexual intercourse.

5. Result--The woman immediately understands.

The only factors requiring detailed explanation here are intention and effort.

Intention. The minimum level of desire required to fulfill this factor means that this rule covers cases where a bhikkhu simply gets a charge out of referring to a woman's genitals, etc., in her presence, without necessarily any desire actually to have sex with her.

The Vibhanga makes clear that this rule does not cover statements made in anger. Thus any insults a bhikkhu may direct at a woman out of anger rather than playfully in desire--even if they refer to her genitals, etc.--would come under Pacittiya 2, rather than here.

Effort. The Vibhanga states that to incur a sanghadisesa under this rule when one is speaking to a woman, one must refer to her genitals, anus or performing sexual intercourse. ()

The Commentary goes further and says that to incur the full offense one must make direct mention of one of these three things, or accuse her of being sexually deformed in a way that refers directly to her genitals. Otherwise, if one refers lustfully to these matters without directly mentioning them, there is no sanghadisesa, although the Sub-commentary quotes an ancient text called the Ganthipada as assigning a dukkata for such an act.

All of this contradicts the Vibhanga, which gives a list of ways one can refer to the woman's anus, genitals and sexual intercourse which would incur the full offense under this rule--one speaks praise, speaks criticism, begs, implores, asks, quizzes, advises, exhorts or ridicules--and many of the examples it gives, although referring to the woman's private parts or to her performing sexual intercourse, do not actually mention those words: "How do you give to your husband?" "How do you give to your lover?" "When will your mother be reconciled?" "When will you have a good opportunity?" Although all of these statements refer to sexual intercourse, and people in those days would have understood them in that light, none of them actually mentions it.

Thus the Vibhanga's examples seem to indicate that if a bhikkhu is referring lustfully to the woman's private parts or to her performing sexual intercourse, then whether or not he directly names those things, he fulfills this factor.

None of the texts mention the case in which a bhikkhu talks to one person about another person's private parts, etc.

Derived offenses. The factors of effort, object, perception and result permit a number of permutations that result in lesser offenses. As for the permutations of intention, see the section on non-offenses, below.

Effort. A bhikkhu speaks to a woman he perceives to be a woman and refers lustfully to parts of her body--aside from her private parts--below her collarbone and above her knees, such as her breasts or her thighs: a thullaccaya. If he refers to parts of her body outside of that area, such as her face or hair, or to clothing or jewelry she is wearing: a dukkata.

Object. A bhikkhu speaks to a pandaka (in this and the following cases we are assuming that he perceives his object correctly) and refers lustfully to his private parts or to his performing sexual intercourse: a thullaccaya. He refers lustfully to other parts of the pandaka's body, his clothing, etc.: a dukkata.

A bhikkhu speaks to a man (or boy) and refers lustfully to any part of his listener's body, clothing, etc.: a dukkata. The same penalty holds for speaking lustfully to a common animal about his/her body, ornaments, etc. () (This is a point with interesting implications, but unfortunately the Commentary is silent. Perhaps nagas would be included here, or perhaps the Vibhanga compilers had in mind cases where one mentions such things to an animal within earshot of a human or celestial being.)

The texts make no mention of speaking lustfully to a woman/girl too young to understand what is and is not lewd. We might argue from the cases included in the Vinita Vatthu, though--where bhikkhus make punning references to women's private parts and the women do not understand--that a bhikkhu incurs a thullaccaya for referring directly to her genitals, anus or performing sexual intercourse in her presence, and a dukkata for referring indirectly in her presence to such things.

Perception. A bhikkhu speaking to a woman whom he perceives to be something else--a pandaka, a man, an animal--incurs a thullaccaya if he refers lustfully to her genitals, anus or performing sexual intercourse. If he is speaking to a pandaka, a man or an animal which he misperceives--e.g., he thinks the pandaka is a woman, the man is a pandaka, the animals is a man--he incurs a dukkata if he refers lustfully to those topics.

Result. As mentioned above, the Vinita Vatthu contains a number cases of bhikkhus speaking to women and making punning refer-ences to the women's genitals which the women do not understand. In one case the penalty is a thullaccaya, in the others a dukkata. The thullaccaya case is the only one in which the bhikkhu uses a word synonymous with genitals (magga, which also means way or road, the meaning the woman understood). Thus we might argue that if a bhikkhu makes direct reference to the genitals, anus or sexual intercourse--and this includes slang expressions and euphem-isms--and the woman doesn't immediately understand that he is referring to those things, he incurs a thullaccaya. If he makes indirect mention of those things, and she doesn't immediately understand that that is what he is referring to, he incurs a dukkata. If it so happens that she understands later, the offense is still a dukkata.

Counting offenses. A bhikkhu making remarks of the sort covered by this rule to x number of people incurs x number of offenses, the type of offense being determined by the factors discussed above. Thus for lustful remarks to two women referring to their breasts, he would incur two thullaccayas; for lustful remarks to three men concerning their bodies, three dukkatas; for teasing a group of twenty old ladies about how their time for sexual performance is past, twenty sanghadisesas.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that there is no offense for a bhikkhu who speaks aiming at (spiritual) welfare (attha), aiming at Dhamma or aiming at teaching. Thus, for example, if one is talking in front of women and has no lustful intent, one may recite or explain the training rules that deal with these matters or go into detail on the topic of the loathsomeness of the body as a topic of meditation, all without incurring an offense. The Commentary here adds an example of a bhikkhu addressing a sexually deformed woman, telling her to be heedful in her practice so as not to be born that way again. If, however, one were to broach any of these topics out of a desire to enjoy saying something lewd to one's listeners, one would not be immune from an offense.

A bhikkhu who, without intending to be lewd, makes innocent remarks that his listener takes to be lewd, incurs no penalty.

Summary: Making lustful reference to a woman about her genitals, anus or performing sexual intercourse is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

4. Should any bhikkhu, overcome by lust, with altered mind, speak in the presence of a woman in praise of ministering to his own sensuality thus: "This, sister, is the highest ministration, that of ministering to a virtuous, fine-natured follower of the celibate life such as myself with this act"--alluding to sexual intercourse--it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

"Now at that time a certain woman, a widow, was beautiful, attractive and appealing. So Ven. Udayin, arising early in the morning, taking his robe and bowl, went to the woman's residence. On arrival, he sat on an appointed seat. Then the woman, approaching him, paying him homage, sat down to one side. As she sat there, Ven. Udayin instructed, urged, roused and encour-aged her with a talk on Dhamma. Then the woman, instructed, urged, roused and encouraged with a talk on Dhamma by Ven. Udayin, said to him, 'Tell me, Ven. sir, what would be in my power to give you for your welfare: Robe-material? Alms-food? Lodgings? Medicines for the sick?'

'"Those things aren't hard for us to come by sister.... Give just what is hard for us to come by.'

"'What, Ven. sir?'

"'Sexual intercourse.'

"'For your welfare, Ven. sir?'

"'For my welfare, sister.'

"'Then come, Ven. sir.' Entering into an inner room, taking off her cloak, she lay back on a couch. Then Ven. Udayin approached the woman and on approaching, said, 'Who would touch this foul-smelling wretch?' And he departed, spitting.

"Then the woman was offended and annoyed and spread it about... 'How can this contemplative Udayin, when he himself begged me for sexual intercourse, say, "Who would touch this foul-smelling wretch?" and depart spitting? What's wretched about me? What's foul-smelling about me? In what am I inferior to whom?'"

At first glance this rule might seem redundant with the preceding one, for what we have here is another case of a bhikkhu advising, begging or imploring a woman to perform sexual intercourse. However, there were some facts about language and belief in the Buddha's time that made this a special case which some people might have felt was not covered by the previous rule, and so here it gets separate treatment.

"Giving" in the Buddha's time, was a common term for having sex. If a woman gave to a man, that meant that she was willing to have sexual intercourse with him. Now, Buddhism was not the only religion of the time to teach that gifts--of a more innocent sort--given to contemplatives produced great reward to those who gave them, and ultimately somebody somewhere came up with the bright idea that since sex was the highest gift, giving it to a contemplative would produce the highest reward. Whether this idea was first formulated by faithful women or by clever contemplatives is hard to say. There are several cases in the Vinita Vatthu to Parajika 1 telling of bhikkhus approached or attacked by women professing this belief, which shows that it had some currency: that sex was somehow seen as a way to higher benefits through the law of kamma.

Since the preceding rule gives exemptions for bhikkhus speaking "aiming at (spiritual) welfare (attha), aiming at Dhamma," some mis-guided souls who did not comprehend the Buddha's teachings on sensuality might believe that welfare of this sort might fit under the exemption. Even today, although the rationale might be different, there are people who believe that having sex with spiritual teachers is beneficial for one's spiritual well-being. Thus we have this separate rule to show that the Buddha would have no part in such a notion, and that a bhikkhu who tried to suggest that his listener would benefit from having sex with him is not exempt from an offense.

The K/Commentary lists five factors for the full offense here.

1. Object--a woman experienced enough to know what words are or are not lewd.

2. Perception--The bhikkhu perceives her to be such a woman.

3. Intention--He is lustful. According to the Sub-commentary, this means that he wants to enjoy saying something lewd or improper. This point is borne out by the origin story, where Ven. Udayin addressed his remarks to the young widow apparently just to test her reaction. As in the preceding rules, we can take the Sub-commentary's defini-tion to stand for the minimum amount of lust needed to fulfill this factor.

4. Effort--The bhikkhu speaks to the woman in praise of her ministering to his sensual needs, making reference to sexual intercourse. The Commentary maintains that his remarks must directly mention sexual intercourse for this factor to be fulfilled, but the example in the rule itself would seem to contradict its assertion.

5. Result--The woman immediately understands.

Derived offenses. The only factors having permutations leading to lesser offenses are object and perception.

Object. A bhikkhu motivated by lust, makes such remarks to a pandaka: a thullaccaya. To a man or animal: a dukkata.

Perception. A bhikkhu, motivated by lust, makes such remarks to a woman he perceives to be something else--a pandaka, man or animal: a thullaccaya. To a pandaka he perceives to be something else: a dukkata.

Counting offenses. Offenses are counted by the number of people one makes such remarks to.

Non-offenses. The no-offense clauses in the Vibhanga, in addition to the blanket exemptions mentioned under Parajika 1, read simply: "There is no offense if he speaks saying, 'Support us with the requisites of robe-material, alms-food, lodgings or medicines for the sick.'" Thus there is apparently no way that a bhikkhu in his right mind may speak in the presence of another person in praise of that person's ministering to his (the bhikkhu's) own sexual desires, without committing an offense.

Summary: Telling a woman that she would benefit from having sexual intercourse with oneself is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

5. Should any bhikkhu engage in conveying a man's intentions to a woman, or a woman's intentions to a man, proposing marriage or paramourage--even if only for a momentary liaison--it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

There are essentially two factors for a full offense under this rule:

effort and object.

Effort. The Commentary says that to "engage in conveying" means to take on the role of a go-between. This includes helping to arrange not only marriages and affairs, but also "momentary associations" which, from the way it describes them, could include anything from appointments with a prostitute to arrangements for X to be Y's date.

The Vibhanga sets the component factors of a go-between's role at three:

1) accepting, i.e., accepting the request of one party to convey a proposal;

2) inquiring, i.e., informing the second party and learning his/her/their reaction; and

3) reporting, i.e., returning to inform the first party of the second party's reply.

The penalties for these actions are: a dukkata for performing any one of them, a thullaccaya for any two, and a sanghadisesa for the full set of three. Thus a bhikkhu acting on his own initiative to sound out the possibility of a date between a man and a woman would incur a thullaccaya for inquiring and reporting. A bhikkhu planning to disrobe who asks a woman if she would be interested in marrying him after his return to lay life would incur a dukkata for inquiring.

The penalties are the same if the bhikkhu, instead of acting as a go-between himself, gets someone else to act for him. Thus a bhikkhu who agrees to convey such a proposal, but then gets a lay follower or another bhikkhu to do the inquiring and reporting, would incur a sanghadisesa all the same.

If a group of bhikkhus are asked to act as go-betweens and they all accept, then even if only one of them takes the message, all incur the offense for his actions.

"Result" is not a mitigating factor here, and so the Commentary mentions that whether or not the arrangements succeed has no bearing on the offense.

"Intention" is also not a mitigating factor, which leads the Sub-commentary to raise the issue of a man who writes his proposal in a letter and then, without disclosing the contents, gets a bhikkhu to deliver it. Its conclusion, though, is that this case would not qualify as an offense under this rule, in that both the Vibhanga and the Commentary define the action of conveying as "telling": Only if the bhikkhu himself tells the proposal--whether repeating it orally, making a gesture or writing a letter--does he incur an offense here.

Object. The full offense is for acting as a go-between between a man and a woman who are not married to each other. If, instead of dealing directly with the man and woman, one deals with people speaking on their behalf (their parents, a pimp), one incurs the full offense all the same.

There is no offense for a bhikkhu who tries to effect a reconciliation between an estranged couple who are not divorced; but a full offense for one who tries to effect a reconciliation between a couple who are. "Perception" is also not a mitigating factor here, which inspires the Commentary to note that even an arahant could commit an offense under this rule if he tried to effect a reconciliation between his parents whom he assumed to be separated when they actually were divorced.

A bhikkhu incurs a thullaccaya for acting as a go-between for a pandaka; and, according to the Commentary, the same penalty for acting as a go-between for a female yakkha or peta. (!)

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that, in addition to the usual exemptions, there is no offense if a bhikkhu conveys a message from a man to a woman or vice versa dealing with "business of the sangha, of a shrine or of a sick person." The Commentary illustrates the first two instances with cases of a bhikkhu conveying a message dealing with construction work for the sangha or a shrine; and the third with a case where a bhikkhu, acting on behalf of a fellow bhikkhu who is sick, is sent by a lay-follower to a female lay-follower for medicine.

The Sub-commentary adds that any similar errand is also exempt from penalty as long as it is not a form of subservience to lay people (see Sanghadisesa 13, below).

Summary: Acting as a go-between to arrange a marriage, an affair or a date between a man and a woman not married to each other is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

6. When a bhikkhu is building a hut from (gains acquired by) his own begging--having no sponsor, destined for himself--he is to build it to the standard measurement. Here the standard is this: twelve spans, using the sugata span, in length (measuring out-side); seven in width, (measuring) inside. Bhikkhus are to be assembled to designate the site. The site the bhikkhus designate should be without disturbances and with adequate space. If the bhikkhu should build a hut from his own begging on a site with disturbances and without adequate space, or if he should not assemble the bhikkhus to designate the site, or if he should exceed the standard, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

"At that time the bhikkhus of Alavi were having huts built from their own begging--having no sponsors, destined for themselves, not to any standard measurement--which did not come to completion. They were continually begging, continually hinting: 'Give a man, give labor, give an ox, give a wagon, give a knife, give an ax, give an adze, give a spade, give a chisel, give rushes, give reeds, give grass, give clay.' People, harassed with the begging, harassed with the hinting, on seeing bhikkhus would feel apprehensive, alarmed, would run away; would take another route, face another direction, close the door. Even on seeing cows they would run away, imagining them to be bhikkhus."

This rule and the following one concern the procedures a bhikkhu should follow when he wants to build a dwelling for his own use. The following rule deals with cases where he has a sponsor to provide him with funds and materials. This rule deals with cases where he doesn't. The Vibhanga and Commentary define the word "hut" and "dwelling" in these rules in such a way that they apply only to a limited range of structures, but the Commentary's discussion of what a bhikkhu may and may not beg for when building anything at all guarantees that even in cases not covered by these rules he is not allowed to be burdensome to the people he asks for help. In discuss-ing this rule, we will first cover what kinds of begging are proper and improper in connection with any kind of construction work, and then go on to treat the particular case coming under this rule.

Begging. A bhikkhu may ask for people to give labor in any situation. Thus he may go to stone masons and ask them to carry stone posts to his construction, or to carpenters and ask them to carry boards to the site. If, after he has asked them to help with the labor, they volunteer to donate the materials as well, he may accept them without penalty. Otherwise, he has to reimburse them for the materials.

As for tools, vehicles and other things he will use in the process of construction, he may ask only to borrow them from other people, and may not ask for them outright. If the tools get damaged, he is responsible for getting them repaired before returning them to the owner. The only things he needn't return to the owner are light articles (lahubhanda), which the Sub-commentary defines as such things as reeds, rushes, grass and clay--i.e., things having little or no monetary value at all.

In effect, this means that unless a bhikkhu is going to build his dwelling out of reeds, etc., or out of thrown-away scraps, he may not ask for any of the materials that will actually go into the dwelling. Keep in mind that these rules were made during a period when wilderness was still plentiful and solid building materials, such as timber and stones, were free for the taking. At present, unless a bhikkhu has access to unclaimed wilderness of this sort, to unclaimed garbage, or has enough funds on deposit with his steward (see NP 10) to cover the cost of materials, his only recourse if he wants a solid structure is either to rammed earth or to hinting.

The Commentary notes that while hinting is not allowed with regard to food or cloth, it is allowed with regard to construction materials. One example it gives is asking, "Do you think this is a good place to build a hut? An ordination hall?" Another example is staking out a construction site in hope that someone will ask, "What are you planning to do here?" If people get the hint and offer the materials, the bhikkhu may accept them. If they don't, he may not ask them directly for any materials except the "light articles" mentioned above.

From this it should be obvious that even in cases not covered by this rule--i.e., the dwelling he is building doesn't qualify as a "hut", or he is building something for other people to use--a bhikkhu engaged in construction work is not allowed to be burdensome to the laity. This is an important point, as the Buddha illustrated in a story he told to the bhikkhus at Alavi. A certain bhikkhu had once come to him with a complaint, and he reports the conversation as follows:

"'Lord, there is a large forest on the slopes of the Himalayas and not far from it is a broad, low-lying marsh. A great flock of birds, after feeding all day in the marsh, goes to roost in the forest at night-fall. That is why I have come to see the Blessed One--because I am annoyed by the noise of that flock of birds.'

"'Bhikkhu, you want those birds to go away for good?'

"'Yes, Lord, I want them to go away for good.'

"'Then go back there, enter the forest and in the first watch of the night make this announcement three times: "Listen to me, good birds. I want a feather from everyone roosting in this forest. Each of you give me one feather." In the second watch... In the third watch of the night make this announcement three times: "Listen to me, good birds. I want a feather from everyone roosting in this forest. Each of you give me one feather."...(The bhikkhu did as he was told.) Then the flock of birds, thinking, 'The bhikkhu asks for a feather, the bhikkhu wants a feather,' left the forest. And after they were gone, they never again returned. Bhikkhus, begging is unpleasant, hinting is unpleasant even to these common animals--how much more so to human beings?"

The hut. Now we turn to the particular case covered by this rule. The Vibhanga defines a hut as "plastered inside, outside or both." It also states that this rule does not apply to a lena, a guha or to a grass hut. A lena, according to the Commentary, is a cave. A guha it doesn't define, except to say that it may be built out of wood, stone or earth. And as for a grass hut, it says that this refers to any building with a grass roof, which means that even a dwelling with plastered walls but a grass roof would not count as a hut under this rule (although a hut whose roof has been plastered and then covered with grass would count as a hut here).

The Commentary goes on to stipulate that the plastering men-tioned in the Vibhanga refers to a plastered roof, that the plaster must be either clay or white lime (plastering with cow dung or mud doesn't count, although cement would probably come under "white lime" here), and that the plastering on the inside or outside of the roof must be contiguous with the plastering on the inside or outside of the walls. Thus if the builder leaves a gap in the plastering around the top of the wall, so that the plastering of the roof and the plaster-ing of the walls don't touch at any point, the building doesn't qualify as a hut, and so doesn't come under the rule.

The Commentary's stipulations on these point may seem like attempts to create gaping loopholes in the rule, but there is nothing in the Vibhanga to prove them wrong. Perhaps in those days only fully plastered buildings were considered to be finished, permanent structures, while everything else was considered makeshift and temporary, and thus not worth the fuss and bother of the procedures we will discuss below.

At another point in its discussions, the Commentary adds that any building three sugata spans wide or less is not big enough to move a bed around in, and so does not count as a hut under this rule. The Commentary itself defines a sugata span as three times the span of a normal person, which would put it at approximately 75 cm. More recent calculations, based on the fact that the Buddha was not abnormally tall, set the sugata span at 25 cm.

The procedures. If, for his own use, a bhikkhu is planning to build a hut as defined in this rule, he must chose a site, clear it and ask for the local Sangha to inspect and approve it before he can go ahead with the actual construction.

The site. The site must be free of disturbances and have adequate space.

"Free of disturbances" means that the site is not the abode of creatures which will do harm to the building--e.g. termites, ants, rats--or to its inhabitant--e.g. snakes, scorpions, tigers, lions, elephants or bears. The Commentary states that the Vibhanga's purpose in forbid-ding a bhikkhu from building on a site where termites and other small animals have their home is to show compassion to these and other small creatures like them by not destroying their nests. As for the stipulation against building where snakes, etc., live, this also extends, it says, to the areas where such animals regularly forage for food.

In addition, the Vibhanga says that a site without disturbances is one which is not near any places which will disturb the bhikkhu's peace and quiet. Examples it gives are: fields, orchards, places of execution, cemeteries, pleasure groves, royal property, elephant stables, horse stables, prisons, taverns, slaughter-houses, highways, crossroads, public rest-houses and meeting places.

"Adequate space" means that there is enough room on the site for a yoked wagon to go around, or for a man to carry a ladder around, the proposed hut. The question arises as to whether this means that all trees within that radius of the hut must be cut down, or whether it simply means that there must be enough land around the hut so that if the trees were not there, it would be possible to go around the hut in the ways mentioned. The Sub-commentary states that the stipula-tion for adequate space is so that the hut will not be built on the edge of a precipice or next to a cliff wall, and the Vinaya Mukha notes that the Vibhanga here is following the Laws of Manu (an ancient Indian legal text) in ensuring that the dwelling not be built right against someone else's property. Both of these statements suggest that it is not necessary to cut the trees down.

The Vinaya Mukha's observation on this point--that the procedures for getting the site approved are concerned basically with laying claim to unclaimed land--has led many Communities in Thailand to say that the need to have the Sangha approve the site does not apply to places where the Sangha already owns the land, such as in a monastery. If a bhikkhu in such Communities wishes to build a hut for his own use on monastery land, he need only get the approval of the abbot. The ancient texts say nothing on this point, so it is an area where the wise policy is to follow the views of the Community to which one belongs.

Clearing the site. Before notifying the local Sangha, the bhikkhu must get the site cleared--so says the Vibhanga, and the Commentary adds that he should get it leveled as well. In both cases, he should arrange to have this done in such a way that does not violate Pacittiyas 10 & 11. Again, the question arises as to whether clearing the site means cutting down the trees on the spot where one proposes building the hut. In the origin story to the following rule, Ven. Channa caused an uproar by cutting down a venerated tree on a site where he planned to build, which led the Buddha to formulate the rule that the Sangha must inspect and approve the site to prevent uproars of this sort. This suggests that clearing the site here means clearing the underbrush. Only after the Sangha has approved the site should one have the necessary trees cut down.

Getting the site inspected. The bhikkhu then goes to the local Sangha and formally asks them to inspect the site. (The Pali passages for this and the remaining formal requests and announcements are in the Vibhanga.) Either the entire Sangha will go to inspect the site, or it will select two or three of its members to go and inspect the site in its stead. The Vibhanga says that these inspectors should know what does and does not constitute a disturbance and adequate space, and requires that they be chosen by a formal motion with one announce-ment. The Commentary, for some reason, says that they may also be chosen by an informal announcement.

The inspectors then visit the site. If they find any disturbances, or see that that the site has inadequate space, they should tell the bhikkhu not to build there. If the site passes inspection, though, the bhikkhu may go on to the next step.

Getting the site approved. The bhikkhu returns to the Sangha and formally asks them to approve the site. The formal act involves a motion and one announcement. Once this has passed, the bhikkhu may start construction.

The size of the hut. As the rule states, the hut may be no more than twelve spans long and seven spans wide, or approximately 3 x 1.75 meters. For some reason the Vibhanga states that the length of the hut is measured from the outside (excluding the plastering, says the Commentary), while the width is measured from the inside. The Commentary adds that neither of these measurements may be exceeded. Thus a hut ten by eight spans wide, even though it has less floor area than a twelve by seven span hut, would exceed the standard width, and so would be a violation of this rule.

Offenses. The Vibhanga allots the penalties for building a hut without a sponsor, for one's own use, without regard for the stipula-tions in this rule as follows:

an oversized hut--a sanghadisesa;

a hut on an unapproved site--a sanghadisesa;

a hut on a site without adequate space--a dukkata;

a hut on a site with disturbances--a dukkata.

These penalties are additive. Thus, for example, an oversized hut on an unapproved site would incur a double sanghadisesa.

The wording of the training rule, though, suggests that building a hut without a sponsor, for one's own use, on a site with disturbances and without adequate space would incur a sanghadisesa; but the Sub-commentary says--without offering explanation--that to read the rule in this way is to misinterpret it. Since the penalty for a multiple sanghadisesa is the same as that for a single one, there is only one case where this would make an appreciable difference: a hut of the proper size, built on a designated site which has disturbances or does not have adequate space. This is a case of a formal act of the Sangha improperly performed: Either the bhikkhus inspecting the site were incompetent or the disturbances were not immediately apparent. Since the usual penalty for improperly performing an act of the Sangha is a dukkata (Mv.II.16.4), this may be why the Vibhanga allots penalties as it does.

As we noted in the Introduction, in cases where the Vibhanga is explaining the training rules that deal with formal acts of the Sangha it sometimes has to deviate from the wording of the rules so as to bring them in line in with the general pattern for such acts, a pattern that was probably formulated after the rules, and which came to take precedence over them.

Getting others to build the hut. If, instead of building the hut himself, a bhikkhu gets others to build it for him, he must inform them of the four stipulations mentioned in this rule. If he neglects to inform them, and they build the hut in such a way that it does not meet any or all of the stipulations, he must either have it torn down (to the ground, says the Commentary) and have it rebuilt in line with the stipulations, give it to another, or face the full penalty for each of the stipulations which he neglected to tell and which they violated.

For example: He tells them to build a hut of the right size, but neglects to tell them to have the site approved. They build it to the right size, the site is without disturbances and has adequate space but is not approved. Unless he has it torn down or gives it to another, he incurs a sanghadisesa.

If the bhikkhu mentions the proper stipulations, but learns that the builders are ignoring them, he must go himself or send a messenger to reiterate the stipulations. Not to do so incurs a dukkata. If, having been reminded of the stipulations, the builders still ignore them, the bhikkhu incurs no penalty; but they--if they are bhikkhus--incur a dukkata for each of the three criteria regarding the site which they disobey. As for the standard measurement, they are not bound by it as they are building the hut for another's use.

If a bhikkhu, intending it for his own use, completes a hut that others have started, or gets others to complete a hut he has started, he is still bound by the stipulations given in this rule.

Preliminary offenses. The penalties in the preliminary steps are as follows: If the hut is such that when finished it will incur a sangha-disesa or two, each act in its construction incurs a dukkata, until the next to the last act, which incurs a thullaccaya. Once the hut is com-pleted and he incurs the sanghadisesa, the dukkatas and thullaccaya are nullified.

Non-offenses. The no-offense clauses mention, in addition to the usual exemptions, that there is no offense "in a lena, in a guha, in a grass hut, in (a dwelling) for another's use or in anything other than a dwelling." The Commentary explains that no offense here means that these cases are not subject to any of the four stipulations given in this rule. As for the last case, if a bhikkhu is building e.g., a meeting hall for the Community, he is not bound by this rule, but if he plans to live there as well, he is. This last case suggests that if a bhikkhu is building a dwelling, planning to donate it formally to the Sangha, but also planning to live there himself, he is not exempt from this rule.

Summary: Building a plastered hut without a sponsor, destined for one's own use--or having it built--without having obtained the Sangha's approval is a sanghadisesa offense. Building a plastered hut without a sponsor, destined for one's own use--or having it built--exceeding the standard measurements, is also a sanghadisesa offense.

***

7. When a bhikkhu is building a large dwelling--having a sponsor and destined for himself--he is to assemble bhikkhus to desig-nate the site. The site the bhikkhus designate should be without disturbances and with adequate space. If the bhikkhu should build a large dwelling on a site with disturbances and without adequate space, or if he should not assemble the bhikkhus to designate the site, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

The Vibhanga defines "dwelling" here with the same terms it uses for "hut" in the preceding rule. All explanations for this rule may be inferred from those above, the only difference being that, as the dwelling here has a sponsor, no begging is involved in its construction, and so there is no need to limit its size.

If a sponsor is building a dwelling for a bhikkhu, and the bhikkhu is not involved in any way in building it or getting it built, this rule does not apply.

Summary: Building a hut with a sponsor, destined for one's own use--or having it built--without having obtained the Sangha's approval is a sanghadisesa offense.

* **

8. Should any bhikkhu, malicious, angered, displeased, charge a (fellow) bhikkhu with an unfounded case involving defeat, (thinking) , "Surely with this I may bring about his fall from the holy life," then regardless of whether or not he is cross-examined on a later occasion, if the issue is unfounded and the bhikkhu confesses his anger, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

"Now at that time a householder who served fine food gave food to the Sangha on a regular basis, four bhikkhus every day. (One day) he happened to go on some business to the monastery. He went to where Ven. Dabba Mallaputta was staying and on arrival bowed to him and sat down to one side...Ven. Dabba Mallaputta roused..him with a Dhamma talk. Then the house-holder with fine food...said to Dabba Mallaputta, 'To whom, sir, is tomorrow's meal in our house assigned?'

"'To (the) followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, householder.' (Mettiya and Bhummajaka were among the leaders of the group-of-six, a faction notorious for its shameless behavior, and instigators of many of the situations that compelled the Buddha to formulate training rules.)

"This upset the householder with fine food. Thinking, 'How can these evil bhikkhus eat in our house?' he returned home and ordered his female slave: 'Hey. Those who are coming for a meal tomorrow: Prepare a seat for them in the storeroom and serve them unhusked rice porridge with pickle brine.'

"'As you say, master,' the female slave answered...

"Then the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka said to each other, 'Yesterday we were assigned a meal at the house of the householder with fine food. Tomorrow, attending with his wife and children, he will serve us. Some will offer rice, some will offer curry, some oil and some dainties.' Because of their joy they didn't sleep as much that night as they had hoped.

"Early the next morning...they went to the home of the householder with fine food. The female slave saw them coming from afar. Preparing them a seat in the storeroom, she said to them, 'Have a seat, honored sirs.'

"The thought occurred to the followers of Mettiya and Bhumma-jaka, 'No doubt the food isn't ready yet, which is why we are being made to sit in the storeroom.'

"Then the female slave brought them unhusked rice porridge with pickle brine, and said, 'Eat, honored sirs.'

"'Sister, we've come for the regular meal.'

"'I know you have come for the regular meal. But yesterday the householder ordered me, "Hey. Those who are coming for a meal tomorrow: Prepare a seat for them in the storeroom and serve them unhusked rice porridge with pickle brine." So eat, honored sirs.'

"Then the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka said to one another 'Yesterday the householder with fine food went to the monastery and met with Dabba Mallaputta. No doubt Dabba Mallaputta turned him against us.' Because of their disappoint-ment they didn't eat as much as they had hoped.

"Then they returned to the monastery, and putting away their robes and bowls, went to the storeroom outside the gate and sat on their outer cloaks, their arms around their knees, silent, abashed, their shoulders drooping, their heads down, brooding, at a loss for words.

"Then Mettiya Bhikkhuni came along and said to them, 'I salute you, masters.' But when she had said this, they didn't respond. A second time...A third time she said, 'I salute you, masters.' And a third time they didn't respond.

"'Have I offended you, masters? Why don't you respond to me?'

"'Because you stand by doing nothing, sister, when Dabba Mallaputta treats us like dirt.'

"'What can I do?'

"'If you like, you could get the Blessed One to expel Dabba Mallaputta right this very day.'

"'What can I do? How could I do that?'

"'Come, sister. Go to where the Blessed One is, and say this: "It is unfitting, Lord, and improper. The quarter without dread, without harm, without danger, is (now) the quarter with dread, with harm, with danger. Where there is calm, there is a windstorm. The water, as it were, is ablaze. I have been raped by Master Dabba Mallaputta.'"

"'As you say, masters.' (And she went to do their bidding.)"

This is just the heart of the origin story to this rule, which is one of the longest and most controversial accounts in the Vinaya. After Mettiya Bhikkhuni made her charge, the Buddha convened a meeting of the Sangha to question Ven. Dabba Mallaputta. The latter, who had attained arahantship at the age of seven, responded truthfully that he could not call to mind ever having indulged in sexual intercourse even in a dream, much less when awake. The Buddha then told the Sangha to expel Mettiya Bhikkhuni, and returned to his quarters.

According to the Commentary, the expulsion of Mettiya Bhikkhuni was one of the controversial points in the split between the Mahayanist bhikkhus in the Abhayagiri Vihara and the Theravadin bhikkhus of the MahaVihara in the old Sri Lankan capital of Anuradha-pura. Even modern scholars have objected to the Buddha's treatment of Mettiya Bhikkhuni, and interpret this passage as a "monkish gloss," as if the Buddha himself were not a monk and the entire Tripitaka were not the work of monks and nuns. The Commentary maintains that the Buddha acted as he did because he knew if he treated her less harshly, the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka would never have volunteered the information that they had put her up to making the charge in the first place, and the truth would never have come out.

At any rate, what concerns us here is that at some point after this rule was formulated the Buddha put the Sangha in charge of judging accusations of this sort, and gave them a definite pattern to follow in order to ensure that their judgments would be accurate and fair. Since the Vibhanga and Commentary to this rule are based on this pattern, we will discuss it first before dealing with the special case--unfounded charges--covered by this rule.

Admonition. As the Buddha states in Sanghadisesa 12, one of the ways bhikkhus may hope for growth in his teachings is through mutual admonition and mutual rehabilitation. If a bhikkhu commits an offense, the responsibility is his to inform his fellow bhikkhus so that they may help him through whatever procedures the offense may entail. Now of course, human nature being what it is, there are bound to be bhikkhus who neglect this responsibility, in which case the responsibility falls to the offender's fellow bhikkhus who know of the matter to admonish him in private, if possible, or--if he is stubborn--to make a formal charge in a meeting of the Sangha.

The pattern here is this: Before speaking to the bhikkhu, one must first make sure that one is qualified to admonish him. According to Cv.IX.1-2, this means one knows:

1) One is pure in bodily conduct.

2) One is pure in verbal conduct.

3) One is motivated by kindness, not vengeance.

4) One is learned in the Dhamma.

5) One knows both Patimokkhas (the one for the bhikkhus and the one for the bhikkhunis) in detail.

Furthermore, one determines that:

1) I will speak at the right time, and not at the wrong time.

2) I will speak the truth, and not untruths.

3) I will speak gently, and not harshly.

4) I will speak what is connected with the goal, and not what is unconnected with the goal.

5) I will speak out of kindness, and not out of inner anger.

The Parivara (XV.5.3) adds that one should keep five qualities in mind: compassion, solicitude for the other's welfare, sympathy, desire to see him rehabilitated, and a desire to keep the Vinaya foremost.

If one feels that one is unqualified, yet believes that another bhikkhu has committed an offense for which he has not made amends, one should find another bhikkhu who is qualified to handle the charge and inform him. Not to inform anyone in cases like this--if the case involves a parajika or sanghadisesa offense--is to violate Pacittiya 64, except in the extenuating circumstances discussed under that rule.

The next step, if one is qualified to make the charge, is to look for a proper time and place to talk with the other party--e.g., when he is not likely to get embarrassed or upset--and then to ask his leave, i.e., to ask permission to speak with him: "Let the Ven. One give me leave. I want to speak with you." To accuse him of an offense without asking leave is to incur a dukkata (Mv.II.16.1).

As for the other party, the Buddha recommends that he should give leave only after assessing the person asking for leave, for it is possible that someone might ask for leave without any real grounds, and simply to be abusive. (A bhikkhu who asks for leave with no grounds--i.e. he has not seen the other party commit the offense, has heard no reliable report to that effect, and has no reason to suspect anything to that effect--incurs a dukkata.) (Mv.II.16.3) The Parivara (XV.4.8) suggests that one should not give leave to a bhikkhu who:

1) is unconscientious,

2) is ignorant,

3) is not a bhikkhu in regular standing,

4) speaks intent on creating a disturbance,

5) is not intent on rehabilitating the bhikkhu he is accusing.

In another passage (XV.5.4), it suggest further that one should not give leave to a bhikkhu who:

1) is not pure in bodily conduct.

2) is not pure in verbal conduct.

3) is not pure in his livelihood.

4) is foolish, childish and unintelligent.

5) is unable to give a consistent line of reasoning when questioned.

If the bhikkhu, however, is not unqualified in any of these ways, one should willingly give him leave to speak. The Cullavagga (IX.5.7) says that, when being admonished or accused, one should keep two qualities in mind: truth, and lack of anger. The Patimokkha also contains a number of rules which impose penalties on behaving improperly when one is being admonished formally or informally: Sanghadisesa 12 for being difficult to admonish in general, Pacittiya 12 for being evasive or refusing to answer when being formally questioned, Pacittiya 54 for being disrespectful to one's accuser or to the rule one is being accused of breaking, and Pacittiya 71 for finding excuses for not listening to a particular training rule.

If both sides act in good faith and without prejudice, accusations of this sort are easy to settle on an informal basis. If they can't be settled informally, they should be taken to a meeting of the Sangha so that the Community as a whole may pass judgment. The proce-dures for this sort of formal meeting will be discussed under the Aniyata and Adhikarana-samatha rules, below.

Abuse of the system. As the origin story to this rule shows, it can easily be the case that a bhikkhu making a charge against another bhikkhu is acting out of a grudge, and has simply made up the charge. This rule and the following one cover cases where the made-up charge is that the other bhikkhu has committed a parajika. Pacittiya 76 covers cases where the made-up charge is that the other bhikkhu has broken a less serious rule.

The full offense under this rule involves four factors:

1. Object: The other bhikkhu is regarded as ordained.

2. Perception: One perceives him to be innocent of the offense one is charging him with.

3. Intent: One wants to drive him out of the monkhood.

4. Effort: One makes an unfounded charge in his presence that he is guilty of a parajika offense.

Object. The definition of this factor--the other bhikkhu is regarded as ordained--may sound strange, but it comes from the K/Commentary, and is phrased that way with a reason: In normal cases the object of this rule will be an innocent bhikkhu, but there may be cases where a bhikkhu has actually committed a parajika offense which no one knows about, and yet instead of disrobing he acts as if he were still a bhikkhu, and everyone else assumes that he still is. Yet even a "bhikkhu" of this sort would fulfill this factor as far as this rule is concerned.

For example, Bhikkhu X steals some of the monastery funds, but no one knows about it, and he continues to act as if he were a bhikkhu. Bhikkhu Y later develops a grudge against him, and makes an unfounded charge that he has had sexual intercourse with one of the monastery supporters. Even though Bhikkhu X is not really a bhikkhu, the fact that people in general assume him to be one means that he fulfills this factor.

Perception. If one perceives the bhikkhu one is charging with a parajika offense to be innocent of the offense, that is enough to fulfill this factor, whether or not the accused is actually innocent or not. If one makes an accusation based on the assumption or suspicion that the accused is not innocent, one incurs no offense here.

Intention. If, in making an unfounded charge of a parajika offense against another bhikkhu, one's purpose is to see him expelled from the monkhood, that fulfills this factor. If one's purpose is simply to insult him, one's actions would come under Pacittiya 2. If one's purpose is both to see him expelled and to insult him, one incurs both a sanghadisesa and a pacittiya. If one has a strange sense of humor and is making the charge as some sort of joke, the penalty is either a pacittiya under Pacittiya 1, or a dubbhasita under Pacittiya 2: The texts are not clear on this point, but in either case this sort of thing is no joking matter.

According to the Vibhanga, "confessing one's anger" can simply mean that one admits that one made the charge idly. Thus the amount of malice motivating one to want to see the other bhikkhu expelled can be minimal indeed: If one wants to see him expelled just for the fun of it, that would fulfill the factor of intention here

Effort. The act covered by this rule is that of making an unfounded charge of a parajika in the accused's presence. Whether one makes the charge oneself, or gets someone else to make it, the offense is the same. If that "someone else" is a bhikkhu and knows the charge is unfounded, he too incurs the full offense.

The Vibhanga defines an unfounded charge as one having no basis in what has been seen, heard or suspected. In other words, the accuser has not seen the accused committing the offense in question, nor has he heard anything reliable to that effect, nor is there anything in the accused's behavior to give rise to any honest suspicion.

"Seeing" and "hearing", according to the Commentary, also include the powers of clairvoyance and clairaudience one may have developed through meditation. Thus if one charges X with having committed a parajika offense on the basis of what one has seen clairvoyantly, this would not be an unfounded charge, although one should be careful to make clear from the very beginning what kind of seeing the charge is based on.

If there is some basis in fact, but one changes the status of the evidence, the penalty is the same. Changing the status means, e.g., saying that one saw something when in actuality one simply heard about it or suspected it; or that one saw it clearly when in actuality one saw it indistinctly.

An example from the Commentary: Bhikkhu X goes into a grove to relieve himself. Ms. Y goes into the same grove to get something there. One sees them leaving the grove at approximately the same time--which could count as grounds for suspicion--but one then accuses Bhikkhu X, saying that one actually saw him having sex with Ms. Y: This would count as an unfounded charge here. Another example: In the dark of the night, one sees someone stealing some-thing from the monastery storehouse. It looks vaguely like Bhikkhu Z, but one can't be sure. Still, one firms up one's accusation by saying that one definitely saw him steal the item. Again, this would count as an unfounded charge.

The Commentary states that for an unfounded charge to count under this rule, it must state explicitly (a) the precise act the accused supposedly committed (e.g., having sexual intercourse, getting a woman to have an abortion) or (b) that the accused is guilty of a parajika or (c) that the accused is no longer a true bhikkhu. If one simply says or does something which might imply that the accused is no longer a bhikkhu--e.g., refusing to show him respect in line with his seniority--that does not yet count as a charge.

The Commentary adds that charging a bhikkhu with having committed a virtual parajika, as discussed in the conclusion to the preceding chapter, would fulfill this factor as well. For instance, one makes an unfounded charge accusing Bhikkhu A of having killed his father before his ordination: This would incur the full offense here.

All of the charges given as examples in the Vibhanga are expressed directly to the accused--"I saw you have sexual intercourse," "I heard you claim a superior human state you haven't attained"--and the Commentary concludes from this that the full penalty is incurred only when one makes the charge in the accused's presence, in line with the pattern for admonition discussed above. To make an unfounded charge behind the accused's back, it states, incurs a dukkata.

Some people have objected to this point, saying that this gives a very light penalty for backhanded character assassination, but there is nothing in the Vibhanga to indicate that the Commentary is wrong here. Remember that the correct procedures for making an accusation require that an earnest charge be made in the presence of the accused. If a bhikkhu spreads gossip about another bhikkhu, accus-ing him of having committed a parajika, he should be asked whether he has taken up the matter with the accused or not. If he hasn't, he should be told to speak to the accused before he speaks to anyone else. If he says that he doesn't feel qualified, or that he fears the accused will retaliate, he should be told to take the matter up with the bhikkhus who will be responsible for calling a meeting of the Sangha. If he refuses to do that, he shouldn't be listened to.

For some reason, the Commentary maintains that a charge made in writing does not count, although a charge made by gesture--e.g. pointing at the accused when one is asked who committed the parajika--does. Perhaps in those days they felt that a written charge was too cowardly to take seriously.

The rule seems to require that the accused confess that he was acting out of anger, although the Vibhanga states that this means simply that he admits the charge was a lie. The Commentary states further that here the rule is showing the point where the rest of the Sangha knows that the bhikkhu making the charge is guilty of a sanghadisesa: He actually incurred the offense when he made the charge.

The Commentary adds a further factor to the offense under this rule, i.e., result: The accused understands the charge in a reasonable amount of time. There is nothing in the Vibhanga to support this, however.

Whether or not anyone actually believes the charge is not a factor here.

Non-offenses. If one understands the accused to be guilty of a parajika and accuses him accurately on the basis of what one has seen, heard or suspected, then--regardless of whether he is guilty or not--one has not committed an offense. Even in a case such as this, though, one incurs a dukkata if one makes the charge without asking leave of the accused; and a pacittiya if one makes the charge so as to insult him.

Summary: Making an unfounded charge to a bhikkhu that he has committed a parajika offense, in hopes of having him disrobed, is a sanghadisesa offense.

* **

9. Should any bhikkhu, malicious, angered, displeased, using as a mere ploy an aspect of an issue pertaining otherwise, charge a bhikkhu with a case involving defeat, (thinking), "Surely with this I may bring about his fall from the holy life," then regardless of whether or not he is cross-examined on a later occasion, if the issue pertains otherwise, an aspect used as a mere ploy, and the bhikkhu confesses his anger, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

"At that time the followers of Mettiya and Bhummajaka, descending from Vulture Peak Mountain, saw a billy-goat copulating with a nanny-goat.

Seeing them, they said, 'Look here, friends, let's name this billy-goat Dabba Mallaputta, and this nanny-goat Mettiya Bhikkhuni. Then we'll phrase it like this: "Before, my friends, we accused Dabba Mallaputta on the basis of what we had heard, but now we have seen him with our very own eyes fornicating with Mettiya Bhikkhuni!"""

Some grudges die hard. This rule is almost identical with the preceding one, and involves the same factors except for one of the sub-factors under "Effort": "Unfounded charge" here becomes "a charge based on an issue which pertains otherwise." The phrase sounds strange, but the origin story gives a perfect example of what it means.

The precise difference between the two is this: With an unfounded charge, one has neither seen, heard or suspected that an offense has been committed, or if one has, one changes the status of the evi-dence--e.g., one states something one has suspected as if one has heard it, or something one has heard as if one has seen it. In a charge based on an issue which pertains otherwise, one has seen an offense being committed, and one does not change the status of the evidence, but one distorts the facts of the case.

To summarize the Vibhanga, there are two basic ways in which this can be done:

1) X, who may or may not be a bhikkhu, has something in common with Bhikkhu Y--they are both tall, short, dark, fair, have the same name, or whatever. One sees X committing an action which would amount to an offense, and then on the basis of the similarity between the two, claims that one has seen Bhikkhu Y committing a parajika. For instance, X and Y are both very tall. Late at night one sees X--knowing that it is X--stealing tools from the monastery storeroom. One has a grudge against Y, and so accuses him of being the thief, saying, "I saw this big tall guy stealing the tools, and he looked just like you. It must have been you."

2) One sees Bhikkhu Y actually committing an offense. Although one perceives that it is a lesser offense, one magnifies the charge to a parajika. For instance, one sees him get into an argument with Bhikkhu Z and in a fit of anger give him a blow to the head. Z goes unconscious, falls to the floor and suffers a severe concussion which results in his death. Since Y's intention was simply to hurt him, not to kill him, he incurs only a pacittiya. If one realizes the nature of Y's intention, and the fact that the penalty is a pacittiya, and yet accuses him of having committed a parajika, one would incur a sanghadisesa under this rule.

If one sees Y committing an action which one knows not to be an offense, but which bears some resemblance to one, and then accuses him of having committed a parajika, it would not fit under this cate-gory. For instance, Y is teaching Vinaya to some new bhikkhus, and quotes a few of the statements which would count as claims of superior human states. One overhears him, and although realizing the context, later accuses him of having violated Parajika 4. Since one knows that Y committed no offense, this would count as an unfounded charge, and so would come under the preceding rule.

The other explanations here are exactly the same as those for the preceding rule, except that in the non-offense clauses the Vibhanga states that if one makes a charge against the accused based on what one actually perceives, then there is no offense even if the issue turns out to pertain otherwise. For instance, from the examples already given: One sees X stealing tools in the dark, and because of his resemblance to Y, actually thinks Y is the thief. One sees Y give a fatal blow to Z, and actually thinks that Y's intention was to kill Z. In either of these cases, if one then accuses Y of a parajika offense, one incurs no penalty regardless of how the case comes out, although--as in the preceding rule--one should be careful to ask Y's leave before making the charge, and to have no intention of insulting him.

Summary: Distorting the evidence while accusing a bhikkhu of having committed a parajika offense in hopes of having him disrobed, is a sanghadisesa offense.

* **

10. Should any bhikkhu agitate for a schism in a Community in concord, or should he persist in taking up an issue conducive to schism, the bhikkhus should admonish him thus: "Do not, Ven. sir, agitate for a schism in a Community in concord, or persist in taking up an issue conducive to schism. Let the venerable one be reconciled with the Community, for a Community in concord, on complimentary terms, free from dispute, having a common recitation, dwells in peace."

And should that bhikkhu, admonished thus by the bhikkhus, persist as before, the bhikkhus are to rebuke him up to three times so as to desist. If while being rebuked up to three times he desists, that is good. If he does not desist, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

This rule dates from Devadatta's attempt to create a schism in the Sangha during the Buddha's life, and is designed to help prevent such an attempt from ever happening again.

Disputes. Schisms arise from disputes over what the Buddha did and did not teach, or in the words of the Cullavagga, "when bhikkhus dispute, saying:

'It is Dhamma,' or 'It is not Dhamma;'

'It is Vinaya,' or 'It is not Vinaya;'

'It was spoken by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not spoken by the Tathagata;'

'It was regularly practiced by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not regularly practiced by the Tathagata;'

'It was formulated by the Tathagata,' or 'It was not formulated by the Tathagata;'

'It is an offense,' or 'It is not an offense;'

'It is a light offense,' or 'It is a heavy offense;'

'It is a curable offense,' or 'It is an incurable offense;'

'It is a serious offense,' or 'It is not a serious offense.'

Whatever strife, quarreling, contention, dispute, differing opinions, opposing opinions, heated words, abusiveness based on this, is an issue arising from disputes." (Cv.IV.14.2)

Thus not all disagreements on these matters are classed as issues. Friendly disagreements or differences of interpretation aren't; heated and abusive disagreements are.

The Buddha advises that a bhikkhu who wants to bring up such questions for discussion should first consider five points: 1) whether or not it is the right time for such a discussion; 2) whether of not it concerns something true; 3) whether or not it is connected with the goal; 4) whether or not he will be able to get on his side bhikkhus who value the Dhamma and Vinaya; and 5) whether or not the ques-tion will give rise to strife, quarreling, disputes, cracks and splits in the Community. If the answer to the first four questions is yes, and to the fifth question no (i.e., the discussion is not likely to lead to strife), he may then go ahead and start the discussion. Otherwise, he should let the matter rest for the time being. (Cv.IX.4)

The Cullavagga quotes the Buddha as saying that there are two sorts of mental states which can turn disputes into issues: wholesome and unwholesome. The unwholesome states he lists are covetous, corrupt or confused states of mind; the wholesome ones are states of mind which are not covetous, not corrupt and not confused. He adds, however, that there are six character traits which can lead to issues arising from disputes which will tend towards the detriment of many people.

They are when a bhikkhu--

is easily angered and bears ill will,

is mean and spiteful,

is jealous and possessive,

is scheming and deceitful,

has evil desires and wrong views,

is attached to his own views, obstinate, unable to let them go.

Such a bhikkhu, he says, lives without deference or respect for the Buddha, the Dhamma, the Sangha, and does not complete the train-ing. If one should see any of these traits within oneself or others, one should strive for their abandonment. If there are no such traits present, one should make sure that they don't arise in the future. (Cv.IV.14.3)

Not all disputes, even when prolonged, will lead to schism. An example is the dispute which led to the Second Council. Even though it was bitterly fought, there was never a point when either faction thought of splitting off and conducting communal business separately. In fact, even after the early Buddhists had formed into 18 separate schools and the Mahayana movement added its schools of interpre-tation, Chinese visitors to India reported that bhikkhus belonging to the different schools of thought could be found living together harmoniously in the same monastery, performing communal business together in peace.

Thus there are two sets of procedures to follow when a dispute becomes an issue: For a dispute in which none of the partisans is aiming at a schism, there are the procedures listed in Cv.IV.14.16-26. For one which is heading towards a schism (and only for one in which at least one side is aiming at schism, the Commentary implies and the Sub-commentary states explicitly), we have this rule and the following one.

Schism. The Cullavagga (VII.5.1), states that schism occurs when the leader of a schism puts the matter to a vote in a Community of at least nine bhikkhus, and with at least four on either side of the split. It further adds that all the bhikkhus involved must be bhikkhus of regular standing in communion with the group as a whole (i.e., they haven't been suspended from the Community), living in the same boundary.

If one or the other of these qualifications is lacking--the issue goes to a vote in a Community of less than nine bhikkhus, one side or the other gets less than four adherents, or the bhikkhus involved are not on regular standing or do not belong to the same boundary--the efforts at schism count as a crack (raji) in the Sangha, but not as a full split (bheda).

However, the Parivara (XV.10.9), drawing on material in A.X.35 & 37, lists five ways in which a schism can take place: discussion, announce-ment, vote, act and recitation. The Commentary, trying to reconcile the Cullavagga and Parivara on this point, interprets the five ways as four steps in a single process (the last two ways counting as alterna-tive forms of a single step):

1) Discussion. A bhikkhu aiming at schism begins a dispute over the Buddha's teachings, explaining Dhamma as not-Dhamma; not-Dhamma as Dhamma; Vinaya as not-Vinaya; not-Vinaya as Vinaya; what was not spoken by the Buddha as having been spoken by him; what was spoken by the Buddha as not; what was not regularly practiced by him as having been regularly practiced by him; what was regularly practiced by him as not; what was not formulated by him as having been formulated by him; what was formulated by him as not; an offense as a non-offense; a non-offense as an offense; a heavy offense as a light offense; a light offense as heavy; a curable offense as incurable; an incurable offense as curable; a serious offense as not serious; or a not-serious offense as serious.

2) Announcement. He announces that he is splitting off from the Community, and asks other bhikkhus to take sides.

3) Vote. The issue goes to a vote in a Community of at least nine bhikkhus, with at least four on either side.

4) Act or recitation. The bhikkhus who side with the schismatic split from the others and recite the Patimokkha or perform other communal business separately.

According to the Commentary, the actual schism has not taken place until step 4, when the schismatic group conducts communal business or recites the Patimokkha separately. This is in accordance with A.X.35 but seems to conflict with the Cullavagga, so the Commentary explains that if the vote is taken in a split-off meeting of the Sangha, steps 3 and 4 happen simultaneously and the schism has been accomplished. Otherwise, if the vote is taken outside of the boundary, the schism is not finalized until the split-off faction conducts communal business separately within the same boundary as the Community. (Pv.VI.2 & XV.10.10)

We can notice from the way the Vibhanga and Commentary analyze the steps leading up to schism, that if a group of bhikkhus is living in a Community which does not adhere to the Buddha's teach-ings, and they wish to leave the group so that they may more easily follow those teachings, they do not count as schismatics. However, they should be careful first to make sure that their views are genuinely in line with the Buddha's teachings and then conduct their departure in as amenable and unprovocative a manner as possible. In other words, instead of announcing a split, they should simply say that they want to go to a more congenial place to practice.

Schism is serious business--one of the five most heinous crimes a person can commit. The other four are killing one's mother, killing one's father, killing an arahant and maliciously causing a Buddha to shed blood. A bhikkhu who creates a schism is expelled and can never be readmitted into the Sangha during this lifetime. (Mv.I.67) If he knows that his schism is against the Dhamma, then after death he will go immediately to Hell and be boiled there for an aeon. The same fate awaits those who join his schismatic group knowing that what he teaches is not the true Dhamma or Vinaya. Those, however, who follow him not knowing that his teaching is not the true Dhamma or Vinaya will not necessarily suffer that fate. If they realize their mistake and ask to be allowed back into the Community, they need only confess a thullaccaya, and they are members of the Community in full standing as before. (Cv.VII.4.4; Cv.VII.5.1-6)

Preventing a schism. The Vibhanga states that if a bhikkhu sees or hears of an attempt at a schism, it is his duty to reprimand the instigator three times, for the instigator, if he goes unreprimanded, may continue with his efforts as he likes without incurring an offense. A bhikkhu who neglects this duty incurs a dukkata. The Commentary adds that this dukkata applies to every bhikkhu within a half-yojana (five-mile) radius who learns of the attempt at a schism; any bhikkhu outside that radius, even though he may not be subject to the offense, should still regard it as his duty, if he is able, to go reprimand the instigator as well. (According to the Sub-commentary, any bhikkhu within the five-mile radius who is ill or otherwise unable to go reprimand the instigator is not subject to this offense.) If the attempt takes place during the Rains Retreat, other bhikkhus are allowed to cut short their stay at other monasteries to help end the attempt. (Mv.III.6-9)

If, after being reprimanded three times, the instigator abandons his efforts, he incurs no offense and nothing further need be done.

If he is still recalcitrant, though, he incurs a dukkata; and the next step is to take him into the midst of a formal meeting of the Commun-ity (by force, if necessary, says the Commentary) and admonish him formally three more times. If he abandons his efforts before the end of the third admonition, well and good. If not, he incurs another dukkata; and the next step is to recite a formal rebuke, by mandate of the Community, using the formula of one motion and three announce-ments given in the Vibhanga. If the instigator remains obstinate, he incurs an additional dukkata at the end of the motion, a thullaccaya at the end of each of the first two announcements, and the full sanghadisesa at the end of the third. Once he commits the full offense, the penalties he incurred in the preliminary stages are nullified.

Perception. The Vibhanga states that if the act of admonition and rebuke is carried out properly--i.e. the bhikkhu really is mis-stating the Buddha's teachings, is really aiming at a schism, and the various other formal requirements for a formal act are fulfilled--then if he does not abandon his intention to agitate for a schism, he incurs the full sanghadisesa regardless of whether he perceives the act to be proper, improper or doubtful. If the act is improperly carried out, then regardless of how he perceives its validity, he incurs a dukkata for not abandoning his intention. ()

The fact that the bhikkhu is not free from an offense in the latter case is important: There are several other, similar points in the Vinaya--such as the Buddha's advice to the Dhamma-expert in the controversy at Kosambi (Mv.X.1.8)--where for the sake of the harmony of the Community in cases which threaten to be divisive, the Buddha advises bhikkhus to abandon controversial behavior and to yield to the mandate of the Community even if it seems unjust.

Non-offenses. The non-offense clauses, in addition to the usual exemptions, state simply that there is no offense if the bhikkhu is not reprimanded or if he gives up his attempt at a schism.

Further steps. If the bhikkhu is truly stubborn, it is possible that he may continue in his efforts at a schism even after this sanghadi-sesa is imposed on him. However, the fact that the Community met to deal with his case should be enough to alert well-meaning bhikkhus that the schismatic is following a wrong course of action, and this should help unite the Community against his efforts. If they deem it necessary--to keep the laity from being taken in by his arguments--they may authorize one or more of their members to inform the lay community that the schismatic has incurred this offense (see Pacittiya 9) and explain why. If he refuses to undergo the penalty or remains divisive, they may suspend him. If, unrepentant, he leaves to go else-where, they may send word to whatever Community he tries to join.

All of this shows one of the reasons why schism is regarded so seriously: As the Buddha states in the Discourse on Future Dangers (A.V.78), it is difficult to find time to practice when the Community is embroiled in controversy this way.

Summary: To persist in one's attempts at a schism after the third announce-ment of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Sangha, is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

11. Should bhikkhus--one, two or three--who are followers and partisans of that bhikkhu, say, "Do not, Ven. sirs, admonish that bhikkhu in any way. He is an exponent of the Dhamma, an exponent of the Vinaya. He acts with our consent and approval. He knows, he speaks for us, and that is pleasing to us," other bhikkhus are to admonish them thus: "Do not speak thus, Ven. sirs. That bhikkhu is not an exponent of the Dhamma, and he is not an exponent of the Vinaya. Do not, Ven. sirs, approve of a schism in the Community. Let the venerable ones' (minds) be reconciled with the Community, for a Community in concord, on complimentary terms, without dispute, with a common recitation, dwells in peace."

And should those bhikkhus, thus admonished, persist as before, the bhikkhus are to rebuke them up to three times so as to desist. If while being rebuked up to three times by the bhikkhus they desist, that is good. If they do not desist, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

If the schismatic mentioned in the preceding rule begins to attract adherents, they are to be treated under this rule--and quickly, before the schismatic gains a fourth adherent. The reasons are these:

1) One Sangha cannot impose a penalty on another Sangha (four or more bhikkhus) in any one formal act. (Mv.IX.2)

2) Penalties of this sort may be imposed only with the unanimous agreement of all the bhikkhus present in the meeting. If there is a fourth adherent, and he is present in the meeting, he can prevent the rebuke from being completed.

3) As the Sub-commentary points out, once a potential schismatic has gained four adherents he has enough of a following to go through with his split.

The procedures for dealing with these partisans--reprimanding them in private, admonishing and rebuking them in the midst of the Sangha--are the same as in the preceding rule.

Summary: To persist in supporting a potential schismatic, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Sangha, is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

12.In case a bhikkhu is by nature difficult to admonish--who, when being legitimately admonished by the bhikkhus with reference to the training rules included in the (Patimokkha) recitation, makes himself unadmonishable (saying), "Do not, venerable ones, say anything to me, good or bad; and I will not say anything to the venerable ones, good or bad. Refrain, venerable ones, from admonishing me"--the bhikkhus should admonish him thus: "Let the venerable one not make himself unadmonishable. Let the venerable one make himself admonishable. Let the venerable one admonish the bhikkhus in accordance with what is right, and the bhikkhus will admonish the venerable one in accordance with what is right; for it is thus that the Blessed One's following is nurtured: through mutual admonition, through mutual rehabilitation."

And should that bhikkhu, thus admonished by the bhikkhus, persist as before, the bhikkhus are to be rebuke him up to three times so as to desist. If while being rebuked up to three times he desists, that is good. If he does not desist, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

If a bhikkhu breaks any of the rules of the Vinaya without undergoing the penalties they entail, or if he breaks them habitually even when undergoing the penalties, the other bhikkhus have the duty to admonish him, as explained under Sanghadisesa 8. If he shows disrespect while being admonished, or refuses to mend his ways, he incurs a further penalty under Pacittiya 54. If his lack of respect while being admonished becomes habitual, he is to be treated under this rule.

The Commentary defines "difficult to admonish" as "impossible to speak to", and then further clarifies by saying that a bhikkhu difficult to admonish is one who cannot stand being criticized, or who does not mend his ways after his faults are pointed out to him. It quotes from the Anumana Sutta (M.15) a list of traits, any one of which makes a bhikkhu difficult to admonish: He has evil desires; exalts himself and degrades others; is easily angered; because of this he harbors ill will, holds a grudge, utters angry words; accused, he throws a tantrum (literally, "explodes"); accused, he is insulting; accused, he returns the accusation; he evades back and forth; he does not respond (to advice); he is mean and spiteful; jealous and possessive; scheming and deceitful; stubborn and proud; attached to his own views, obstinate, unable to let them go.

A good number of these traits are exemplified by Ven. Channa--according to tradition, the Buddha's horseman on the night of the great Going Forth--in the origin story to this rule.

"Who do you think you are to admonish me? It is I who should admonish you! The Buddha is mine, the Dhamma is mine, it was by my young master that the Dhamma was realized. Just as a great wind blowing would gather up grass, sticks, leaves and rubbish, or a mountain-born river would gather up water weeds and scum, so you, in going forth, have been gathered up from various names, various clans, various ancestries, various families. Who do you think you are to admonish me? It is I who should admonish you!"

The procedures to follow when a bhikkhu is difficult to admonish--reprimanding him in private, admonishing and rebuking him in a formal meeting of the Community--are the same as under Sanghadi-sesa 10, beginning with the fact that a bhikkhu who, hearing that Bhikkhu X is being difficult to admonish, does not reprimand him, incurs a dukkata. The question of perception and the non-offenses are also the same as under that rule.

If the bhikkhu difficult to admonish carries on as before, even after incurring the full penalty under this rule, the Community may perform an act of banishment (pabbajaniya-kamma) against him for speaking in dispraise of the Community (Cv.I.13) or--if he admits to performing acts which are offenses, but refuses to see that they are offense or refuses to undergo the penalty--the Community may exclude him from participating in the Patimokkha and Pavarana ceremonies (Mv.IV.16.2; Cv.IX.2) or suspend him from the Community entirely (Cv.I.26; Cv.I.31).

Summary: To persist in being difficult to admonish after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Sangha is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

13. In case a bhikkhu living in dependence on a certain village or town is a corrupter of families, a man of depraved conduct--whose depraved conduct is both seen and heard about, and the families corrupted by him are both seen and heard about--the bhikkhus are to admonish him thus: "You, Ven. sir, are a corrupter of families, a man of depraved conduct. Your depraved conduct is both seen and heard about; the families corrupted by you are both seen and heard about. Leave this monastery, Ven. sir. Enough of your staying here."

And should that bhikkhu, thus admonished by the bhikkhus, say about the bhikkhus, "The bhikkhus are prejudiced by favoritism, prejudiced by aversion, prejudiced by delusion, prejudiced by fear, in that for this sort of offense they banish some and do not banish others," the bhikkhus are to admonish him thus: "Do not say that, Ven. sir. The bhikkhus are not prejudiced by favoritism, are not prejudiced by aversion, are not prejudiced by delusion, are not prejudiced by fear. You, Ven. sir, are a corrupter of families, a man of depraved conduct. Your depraved conduct is both seen and heard about, and the families corrupted by you are both seen and heard about. Leave this monastery, Ven. sir. Enough of your staying here."

And should that bhikkhu, thus admonished by the bhikkhus, persist as before, the bhikkhus are to rebuke him up to three times so as to desist. If while being rebuked up to three times he desists, that is good. If he does not desist, it entails initial and subsequent meetings of the Community.

A "corrupter of families" is a bhikkhu who--behaving in a demean-ing, frivolous or subservient way--succeeds in ingratiating himself to lay people to the point where they withdraw their support from bhikkhus who are earnest in the practice, and give it to those who are more ingratiating instead. This is illustrated in the origin story of this rule, in which the followers of Assaji and Punabbasu (leaders of one faction of the group-of-six) had thoroughly corrupted the lay people at Kitagiri.

"Now at that time a certain bhikkhu, having finished his rains-residence among the people of Kasi, and on his way to Savatthi to see the Blessed One, arrived at Kitagiri. Arising early in the morning, taking his robe and bowl, he entered Kitagiri for alms: gracious in the way he approached and departed, looked forward and behind, drew in and stretched out his arm; his eyes downcast, his every movement consummate. People seeing him said, 'Who is this weakest of weaklings, this dullest of dullards, this most snobbish of snobs? Who would go up and give him alms? Our masters, the followers of Assaji and Punabbasu, are compliant, genial, pleasing in conversation. They are the first to smile, saying, "Come, you are welcome." They are not snobbish. They are approachable. They are the first to speak. It is to them that alms should be given.'"

The Vibhanga lists the ways of corrupting a family as giving gifts of flowers, fruit, etc., practicing medicine and running messages--although the Commentary qualifies this by saying there is no harm in delivering messages that have to do with religious activities, such as inviting bhikkhus to a meal or to deliver a sermon, or in conveying a lay person's respects to a senior bhikkhu.

"Depraved conduct" the Vibhanga defines merely as growing flowers and making them into garlands, but this, the Commentary says, is a shorthand reference to the long list of bad habits mentioned in the origin story, which includes such things as presenting garlands to women, eating from the same dish with them, sharing a blanket with them, eating at the wrong time, drinking intoxicants, wearing garlands, using perfumes and cosmetics, dancing, singing, playing musical instruments, playing games, performing stunts, learning archery, swordsmanship and horsemanship; boxing and wrestling. Any one of these actions taken in isolation carries only a minor penalty--a dukkata or a pacittiya--but if indulged in habitually to the point where its bad influence becomes "seen and heard about", i.e., common knowledge, it can become grounds for his fellow bhikkhus to banish him from their particular Community until he mends his ways.

The Cullavagga, in a section which begins with the same origin story as that in this rule (Cv.I.13-16), treats the act of banishment in full detail, saying that a Community of bhikkhus, if it sees fit, has the authority to perform an act of banishment against a bhikkhu with any of the following qualities:

1) He is a maker of strife, disputes, quarrels and issues in the Community.

2) He is ignorant, inexperienced and has many offenses for which he has not made amends.

3) He lives in unbecoming association with householders.

4) He is corrupt in his precepts, corrupt in his conduct, or corrupt in his views.

5) He speaks in dispraise of the Buddha, Dhamma or Sangha.

6) He is frivolous in word, deed or both.

7) He misbehaves in word, deed or both.

8) He is vindictive in word, deed or both.

9) He practices wrong modes of livelihood.

This last category includes such practices as:

a) running messages and errands for kings, ministers of state, householders, etc. A modern example would be participating in political campaigns.

b) scheming, talking, hinting, belittling others for the sake of material gain; pursuing gain with gain (giving items of small value in hopes of receiving items of larger value in return, making invest-ments in hopes of profit, offering material incentives to those who make donations). (For a full discussion of these practices, see Ven. Nanamoli's translation of the Visuddhi Magga, The Path of Purification, pp. 24-30.)

c) Practicing worldly arts, e.g., medicine, fortune telling, astrology, exorcism, reciting charms, casting spells, performing ceremonies to counteract the influence of the stars, determining propitious sites, setting auspicious dates (for weddings, etc.), interpreting oracles, auguries or dreams, or--in the words of the Vibhanga to the Bhikkhunis' Pacittiya 49 & 50--any art which is

"external and unconnected with the goal." The Cullavagga (V.33.2) gives a dukkata for studying and teaching worldly arts or hedonist doctrines (lokayata). For extensive lists of worldly arts, see the Brahmajala and Samannaphala Suttas--pp. 62-65 and pp. 35-38 in Ven. Bodhi's translations. For the connection between lokayata and hedonism (e.g., the Kama Sutra), see Warder, Outline of Indian Philosophy, pp. 38-39.

A bhikkhu banished for indulging in any of these activities is duty-bound to undergo the eighteen observances listed in Cv.I.15, and to mend his ways so that the Community will revoke the act of banishment. The Commentary adds that a bhikkhu banished for corrupting families may not live in the monastery where he was misbehaving, nor enter the city or town where he was corrupting families until after the banishment is revoked (this point is based on Cv.I.16.1). Also, even after the revoking of the banishment, he may never again accept gifts from the families he had corrupted. If they ask him why, he may tell them. If they then explain that they are giving the gift not because of his former behavior but because he has now mended his ways, he may then accept it.

If a bhikkhu, instead of mending his ways after being banished, criticizes the act of banishment or those who performed it, he is subject to this rule. The procedure to follow in dealing with him--reprimanding him in private, admonishing and rebuking him in a formal meeting of the Community--is the same as under Sanghadisesa 10, beginning with the fact that a bhikkhu who, hearing that Bhikkhu X is criticizing his act of banishment, does not reprimand him, incurs a dukkata. The question of perception and the non-offenses are also the same as under that rule.

Summary: To persist--after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Sangha--in criticizing an act of banishment performed against oneself is a sanghadisesa offense.

***

A bhikkhu who commits an offense against any of these thirteen sanghadisesa offenses is duty-bound to inform a fellow bhikkhu and to ask a Community of at least four bhikkhus to impose a six-day period of penance (manatta) on him. (The Canon says, literally, a six-night period: At the time of the Buddha, the lunar calendar was in use, and just as we using the solar calendar count the passage of days, they counted the passage of nights; a 24-hour period, which is a day for us, would be a night for them, as in the Bhaddekaratta Sutta (M.131), where the Buddha explicitly says that a person who spends a day and night in earnest practice has had an "auspicious night".)

Penance. Penance does not begin immediately, but only at the convenience of the Community giving it. During his period of penance, the offender is partially stripped of seniority and must observe a number of restrictions--94 in all (Cv.II.5-6). The four most important are:

1) He must not live under the same roof as a full-fledged bhikkhu.

2) He must live in a monastery with at least four full-fledged bhikkhus.

3) He may not go anywhere outside the monastery unless accompanied by four full-fledged bhikkhus.

4) Every day he must inform all the bhikkhus in the monastery of the fact that he is observing penance and the precise offense for which the penance was imposed. If visiting bhikkhus come to the monastery, he must inform them as well, and if he goes to another monastery, he must inform all the bhikkhus there, too.

If, on any day of his penance, the bhikkhu neglects to observe any of these four restrictions, that day does not count towards the total of six. In addition, he incurs a dukkata each time he fails to observe any of the 94 restrictions.

Once the bhikkhu has completed his penance, he may ask a Community of at least 20 bhikkhus to give him rehabilitation. Once rehabilitated, he returns to his previous state as a full-fledged bhikkhu in good-standing.

Probation. If a bhikkhu who commits a sanghadisesa offense conceals it from his fellow bhikkhus past dawn of the day following the offense, he must observe an additional period of probation (parivasa) for the same number of days as he concealed the offense. Only after he has completed his probation may he then ask for the six day period of penance.

The Commentary sets the factors of concealment at ten, which may be arranged in five pairs as follows:

1) He has committed a sanghadisesa offense, and perceives it as a sanghadisesa offense.

2) He has not been suspended, and perceives that he has not been suspended. (If a bhikkhu has been suspended, no other bhikkhus will speak with him, and thus he cannot tell them until after his suspension has been lifted.)

3) There are no obstacles (e.g. a flood, a forest fire, dangerous animals), and he perceives that there are none.

4) He is able to inform another bhikkhu (i.e. a fellow bhikkhu suitable to be informed lives in a place that may be reached in that day, one is not too weak or ill to go, etc.), and he perceives that he is able. A bhikkhu suitable to be informed means:

a) One who is a bhikkhu in good standing (e.g., not under-going penance or probation himself).

b) One who is not on unfriendly terms with the offender.

5) He (the offender) desires to conceal the offense, and conceals it.

If any of these factors is lacking, there is no penalty for not informing another bhikkhu that day. For instance, the following cases do not count as concealment:

A bhikkhu is not sure whether or not the action he has done qualifies as a sanghadisesa, and so waits until he can consult with a knowledgeable bhikkhu before informing anyone else.

A bhikkhu lives alone in a forest and commits a sanghadisesa in the middle of the night. Afraid of the snakes or other wild animals he might encounter in the dark, he waits until daylight before going to inform a fellow bhikkhu.

A bhikkhu lives alone in a forest, but the only other bhikkhu within one day's traveling time is a personal enemy who, if he is informed, will use this as an opportunity to smear the offender's name. So the offender travels another day or two before reaching a friendly bhikkhu whom he informs.

But once all of the first eight factors are complete, one must inform another bhikkhu before dawn of the next day, or else incur a dukkata and undergo the penalty for concealment.

A bhikkhu who commits a slighter offense which he thinks is a sanghadisesa and then conceals it, incurs a dukkata (Cv.III.34.1).

The restrictions for a bhikkhu undergoing probation are similar to those for one undergoing penance, and are discussed in detail at Cv.II.1.

Sanghadisesas are classified as heavy offenses (garukapatti), both because of the seriousness of the offenses themselves and because the procedures of penance, probation and rehabilitation are burden-some by design, not only for the offender but also for the Community of bhikkhus in which he lives--a fact intended to act as added deterrent to anyone who feels tempted to transgress.

CHAPTER SIX

Aniyata

This term means undetermined or uncertain. The rules in this section do not determine fixed penalties, but instead give procedures by which the Community may pass judgment when a bhikkhu in uncertain circumstances is accused of having committed an offense. There are two training rules here.

1. Should any bhikkhu sit in private, alone with a woman in a seat secluded enough to lend itself (to the sexual act) so that a female lay follower whose word can be trusted, having seen (them) might describe it as constituting any of three cases--involving either defeat, communal meetings or confession--then the bhikkhu, acknowledging having sat (there), may be dealt with for any of the three cases--involving defeat, communal meetings or confession--or he may be dealt with for whichever case the female lay follower described. This case is undetermined.

Woman here means a female human being, "even one born that very day, all the more an older one." To sit also includes lying down. Whether the bhikkhu sits near the woman when she is already seated, or the woman sits near him when he is already seated, or both sit down at the same time, makes no difference here.

Private means private to the eye and private to the ear. Two people sitting in a place private to the eye means that no one else can see if they wink, raise their eyebrows or nod. If they are in a place private to the ear, no one else can hear what they say in an normal voice. A secluded seat is one behind a wall, a closed door, a large bush or any-thing at all that would afford them enough privacy to commit the sexual act.

For a bhikkhu to sit in such a place with a woman can be in itself a breach of Pacittiya 44 (see the explanations for that rule), and affords the opportunity for breaking Parajika 1, and Sanghadisesa 1, 2, 3 & 4 as well--which is why this case is called uncertain or undetermined.

If a trustworthy female lay follower happens to see a bhikkhu with a woman in such circumstances, she may inform the Community and charge him on the basis of what she has seen. Female lay follower here means one who has taken refuge in the Buddha, Dhamma and Sangha. Trustworthy means that she is at least a Stream-winner. Even if she is not a Stream-winner, the Community may chose to investigate the case anyway; but if she is, they have to. If the person making the accusation is a man, the case comes not under this rule but under the general pattern for dealing with accusations, discussed below.

The wording of the rule suggests that once the matter is investi-gated and the bhikkhu in question has stated his side of the story, the bhikkhus are free to judge the case either in line with what he admits to having done or in line with the trustworthy female lay follower's charge. In other words, if his admission and her charge are at variance, they may decide which side seems to be telling the truth and impose a penalty--or no penalty--on the bhikkhu as they see fit.

The Vibhanga, however, says that they may deal with him only in line with what he admits to having done. The Commentary offers no explanations for this point aside from saying that in uncertain cases things are not always as they seem, and cites the story of an arahant who was wrongly charged by another bhikkhu of having broken Pacittiya 44.

Actually, the Vibhanga in departing from the wording of the rule is simply following the general guideline the Khandhakas give for handling accusations. Apparently what happened was that this rule and the following one were formulated early on. Later, when the general guidelines were first worked out, some group-of-six bhikkhus abused the system to impose penalties on innocent bhikkhus they didn't like (Mv.IX.3.1), so the Buddha formulated a number of checks to prevent the system from working against the innocent. We will cover the guidelines in detail under the Adhikarana-samatha rules, but here we may note a few of their more important features.

As explained under Sanghadisesa 8, if Bhikkhu X is charged with an offense, the bhikkhus who learn of the charge are duty-bound to question him first in private. If he admits to the charge, agrees that it is an offense and then undergoes the penalty, nothing further need be done. (Mv.IX.5.6) If he admits that he did the act, but refuses to see that it is an offense and/or refuses to undergo the penalty, then if the act really did constitute an offense, the Community may meet and suspend him. (Mv.IX.5.8) The Khandhakas (Mv.IX.1.3 and Cv.XI.1.10) show that "not seeing an offense" does not mean that one denies doing the act; simply that one does not agree that the act was against any of the rules.

If, however, X denies the charge and yet some of the members of the Community suspect him of not telling the truth, the issue has to go to a formal meeting. Once the case reaches this stage, one of only three verdicts is possible: that the accused is innocent, that he was insane at the time he committed the offense (and so absolved of guilt), or that he is not only guilty as charged but also guilty of "further misconduct" in having dragged out his confession to this point. (Cv.IV.14.27-29) If the last verdict is the true one, then the bhikkhu must not only undergo the penalty for the offense, but also be penalized with an act of further misconduct, which is the same as an act of censure. (Cv.IV.11-12)

When the Community meets, both the accused and the accuser must be present, and both must agree to the case's being heard by that particular group. (If the original accuser is a lay person, one of the bhikkhus is to take up the charge.) The accused is then asked to state his version of the story, and is to be dealt with in accordance with what he admits to having done (Mv.IX.6.1-4). The Cullavagga (IV.14.29) shows that the other bhikkhus are not to take his first statement at face value. They should press and cross-examine him until they are all satisfied that he is telling the truth, and only then may they pass one of the three verdicts mentioned above.

If necessary, they should be prepared to spend many hours in the meeting to arrive at a unanimous decision, for if they cannot come to a unanimous agreement, the case has to be left as unsettled, which is a very bad question mark to leave in the communal life. The Commen-tary to Sanghadisesa 8 suggests that if one side or the other seems unreasonably stubborn, the senior bhikkhus present should lead the group in long periods of chanting to wear down the stubborn side.

If a verdict is reached, but later discovered to be wrong--the accused got away with a plea of innocence when he actually was guilty, or he admitted to being guilty simply to end the interrogation when he was actually innocent--the Community may reopen the case and reach a new verdict. (Cv.IV.4.11; Cv.IV.8). If a bhikkhu learns that a fellow bhikkhu actually was guilty and yet got away with a verdict of innocence, and he then helps conceal the truth, he is guilty of an offense under Pacittiya 64.

Obviously, the main thrust of these guidelines is to prevent an innocent bhikkhu from being unfairly penalized. As for the opposite case--a guilty bhikkhu getting away with no penalty--we should remember that the laws of kamma guarantee that in the long run he is not getting away with anything at all.

Although these guidelines supercede both Aniyata rules, the rules still serve two important functions:

1) They remind the bhikkhus that charges made by lay people are not to be lightly ignored, and that the Buddha at one point was willing to let the bhikkhus give more weight to the word of a female lay follower than to that of the accused bhikkhu. This in itself, considering the general position of women in Indian society at the time, is remarkable.

2) As we will see under Pacittiya 44, it is possible under some circumstances--depending on the bhikkhu's state of mind--to sit alone with a woman in a secluded place without incurring a penalty. Still, a bhikkhu should not blithely take advantage of the exemptions under that rule, for even if his motives are pure, it doesn't look good to anyone who may come along and see him there. These rules serve to remind such a bhikkhu that he could easily be subject to a charge that would lead to a formal meeting of the Community. Even if he were to be declared innocent, the meeting would waste a great deal of time both for himself and for the Community. And in some people's minds--given the Vibhanga's general rule that he is innocent until proven guilty--there would remain the belief that he was actually guilty and got off with no penalty simply from lack of hard evidence. A bhikkhu would be wise to avoid such situations altogether, and remember the what Lady Visakha told Ven. Udayin in the origin story to this rule:

"It is unfitting, sir, and improper, for the master to sit in private, alone with a woman...Even though the master may not be aiming at that act, it is difficult to convince those who are unbelievers."

Summary: When a trustworthy female lay follower accuses a bhikkhu of having committed a parajika, a sanghadisesa or a pacittiya while sitting alone with a woman in a private, secluded place, the Community should investigate the charge and deal with the bhikkhu in accordance with whatever he admits having done.

***

2. In case a seat is not sufficiently secluded to lend itself (to the sexual act) but sufficiently so to address lewd words to a woman, should any bhikkhu sit in private, alone with a woman in such a seat, so that a female lay follower whose word can be trusted, having seen them, would describe it as constituting either of two cases--involving communal meetings or confession--then the bhikkhu, acknowledging having sat (there), is to be dealt with for either of the two cases--involving communal meetings or confession--or he is to be dealt with for whichever case the female lay follower described. This case too is undetermined.

This rule differs from the preceding one mainly in the type of seat it describes--private to the eye and private to the ear, but not secluded. Examples would be an open-air meeting hall or a place out in the open far enough away from other people so that they could not see one wink, etc., or hear what one is saying in a normal voice. Such a place, although inconvenient for committing Parajika 1, Sanghadisesa 1 & 2 or Pacittiya 44, would be convenient for committing Sanghadi-sesa 3 & 4 or Pacittiya 45. As a result, the term "woman" under this rule is defined as under those rules: one experienced enough to know what is and is not lewd.

Otherwise, all explanations for this rule are the same as under the preceding rule.

Summary: When a trustworthy female lay follower accuses a bhikkhu of having committed a sanghadisesa or a pacittiya while sitting alone with a woman in a private place, the Community should investigate the charge and deal with the bhikkhu in accordance with whatever he admits having done.

CHAPTER SEVEN

Nissaggiya Pacittiya

The term nissaggiya, used in connection with training rules, means "entailing forfeiture". Used in connection with articles, it means "to be forfeited". Pacittiya is a word of uncertain etymology. The Parivara gives a didactic derivation--that it refers to letting profitable qualities fall away (patati) with a deluded mind (citta)--but the term is more likely related to the verb pacinati (pp. pacita), which means to discern, distinguish or know.

Each of the rules in this category involves an object that a bhikkhu has acquired or used wrongly, and that he must forfeit before he may "make the offense known"--confess it--to a fellow bhikkhu or group of bhikkhus. Once he has made his confession, he is absolved from the offense. In most cases, the forfeiture is symbolic--after his con-fession, he receives the article in return--although three of the rules require that the offender give up the article for good.

There are thirty rules in this category, divided into three chapters (vagga) of ten rules each.

One: The Robe-cloth Chapter

1. When a bhikkhu has finished his robe-making and the frame is destroyed (his kathina privileges are in abeyance), he is to keep an extra robe cloth ten days at most. Beyond that, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The origin story for this rule is retold with more detail in the Mahavagga (VIII.13.4-8). Since the added details are what make it interesting, that is the version translated here.

"(The Buddha addresses the bhikkhus:) 'As I was on the road from Rajagaha to Vesali, I saw many bhikkhus coming along buried in robe cloth, with a mattress of robe cloth on their heads and a mattress of robe cloth on their backs and a mattress of robe cloth on their hips. Seeing them, I thought, "All too soon have these foolish men come under the spell of luxury in terms of robe cloth. What if I were to set a boundary, to lay down a restriction on robe cloth for the bhikkhus."

'"Then traveling by stages, I came to Vesali. There I stayed at the Gotamaka Shrine. Now at that time, during the cold winter middle-eight nights (the four nights on either side of the full moon in February, the coldest time of the year in India) when snow was falling, I sat outside wearing one robe and was not cold. Towards the end of the first watch I became cold. I put on a second robe and was not cold. Towards the end of the middle watch I became cold. I put on a third robe and was not cold. Towards the end of the final watch, as dawn arose and the night smiled, I became cold. I put on a fourth robe and was not cold. The thought occurred to me, "Those in this doctrine and discipline who are sons of respectable families--sensitive to cold and afraid of the cold--even they are able to get by with three robes. Suppose I were to set a boundary, to lay down a restriction on robes for the bhikkhus, and were to allow three robes." Bhikkhus, I allow you three robes: a double-layer outer robe, a single-layer upper robe and a single-layer inner robe (thus, four layers of cloth).'

"Now at that time, some group-of-six bhikkhus, thinking, 'The Blessed One allows three robes,' entered the village wearing one set of robes, stayed in the monastery wearing another set, and went down to bathe in still another. Modest bhikkhus...were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can the group of six bhikkhus keep extra robe cloth?'

They told this matter to the Blessed One. He...addressed the bhikkhus, saying, 'Bhikkhus, an extra robe cloth is not to be kept.'

"Now at that time an extra robe cloth accrued to Ven. Ananda, and he wanted to give it to Ven. Sariputta, but Ven. Sariputta was at Saketa. He thought, '...Now what should I do?' He told this matter to the Blessed One, who said, 'But how long is it, Ananda, before Sariputta will come here?'

"'Nine or ten days.'

"Then the Blessed One... addressed the bhikkhus, 'I allow an extra robe cloth to be kept at most ten days.'

"Now at that time an extra robe accrued to the bhikkhus. They thought, 'Now what should we do?' They told this matter to the Blessed One, who said, 'I allow you, bhikkhus, to place an extra robe cloth under dual ownership.'"

The offense under this rule involves two factors:

1. Object--A piece of extra robe cloth, i.e., a piece of cloth suitable to be made into a robe or other cloth requisite, measuring at least four by eight inches (fingerbreadths), which has not been formally determined for use or placed under dual ownership. This category includes finished requisites as well as simple pieces of cloth, but does not include robe-cloth belonging to the Sangha.

2. Effort--One keeps it for more than ten days (except during the allowed period) without determining it for use, placing it under dual ownership, abandoning it (giving or throwing it away); or without the cloth's being lost, destroyed, burnt, stolen or taken by someone else on trust within that time.

Object. According to the Mahavagga (VIII.3.1), six kinds of cloth are suitable for making into cloth requisites: linen, cotton, silk, wool, hemp or canvas (any of the five preceding types mixed with jute). By extension, nylon, rayon and other synthetic fibers would count as suitable as well. Unsuitable materials--such as cloth made of hair, horse-hair, grass, bark, wood-shavings or antelope hide (and by extension, leather)--do not come under this rule. (For a full list of unsuitable materials, see Mv.VIII.28.) Mv.VIII.29 gives a list of colors--such as black, blue and crimson--and patterns which are not suitable robes but which, according to the Commentary, are suitable for things like handkerchiefs and bed sheets. Pieces of cloth dyed these colors or printed with these patterns would come under this rule.

If a bhikkhu receives a piece of suitable cloth measuring four by eight fingerbreadths or more, but does not yet plan to use it, he may place it under dual ownership (vikappana) until he has need for it. Once he decides to make use of the cloth, he must rescind the dual ownership (see Pacittiya 59) before making it into a finished requisite (if it isn't already). Once it is finished, he may then determine it for use (adhitthana) or place it under dual ownership again, depending on the nature of the article:

Each of the three basic robes, handkerchiefs, bed sheets and the sitting cloth are to be determined, and may not be placed under dual ownership.

A rains-bathing cloth (see NP 24) may be determined for the four months of the rainy season, and is to be placed under dual ownership for the remainder of the year.

A skin-eruption cloth (see Pacittiya 90) may be determined when needed, and is to be placed under dual ownership when not.

Other items of cloth may be determined as "accessory cloths".

(The procedures for determining and placing under dual ownership are given in Appendices IV & V.)

Any cloth made of any of the suitable materials and of the requisite size counts as an extra cloth if-- it has not been determined for use or put under dual ownership, it has been improperly determined or placed under dual ownership, or its determination or dual ownership has lapsed.

Many of the cases in which determination and dual ownership lapse also exempt the cloth from this rule: e.g., the owner disrobes or dies, he gives the cloth away, it gets stolen, destroyed (bitten by things such as termites, says the Commentary), burnt, lost or some-one else takes it on trust. There are a few cases, however, where determination and dual ownership lapse and the cloth does fall under this rule. They are--

Under dual ownership: The first owner takes the cloth on trust; or the second owner formally rescinds the dual ownership.

Under determination: The owner rescinds the determination; or (if the cloth has been determined as one of the three basic robes) the cloth develops a hole. This latter case comes in the Commentary, which gives precise standards for deciding what kind of hole does and does not make the determination of the robe lapse:

1) Size. The hole has to be a full break (through both layers of cloth, on the outer robe) at least the size of the nail on one's little finger. If a single thread remains across the hole, then the hole makes the determination lapse only if either of the two "halves" divided by the thread is the requisite size.

2) Location. On an upper robe or outer robe, the hole has to be at least one span (25 cm.) from the longer side and eight fingerbreadths from the shorter; on an under robe, at least one span from the longer side and four fingerbreadths from the shorter. Any hole closer to the edge of the robe than these measurements does not make the determination lapse.

Because of these stipulations, the Commentary notes that if one is patching a worn spot--not a hole as defined above--the requisite distance away from the edge of one's robe, the determination lapses if one cuts out the worn spot before applying the patch, but not if one applies the patch before cutting out the worn spot. If the determination lapses, it is an easy matter to redetermine the robe, but one must be mindful to do it within the time span allotted by this rule.

Effort. According to the Vibhanga, if one keeps a piece of extra robe cloth past the eleventh dawn (except when the end-of-vassa and kathina privileges are in effect), one incurs the full offense under this rule. The Commentary explains this by saying that the dawn of the day on which one receives the cloth or lets its determination/dual ownership lapse, counts as the first dawn. Thus the eleventh dawn would actually be the tenth dawn after one receives, etc., the cloth. (The precise definition of dawn is a controversial point. See Appendix I.)

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Thus even if one mis-counts the days, or perceives a robe to be determined when it actually is not, one is not immune from the offense: The robe is to be forfeited and the offense confessed.

To use such a robe or piece of robe cloth before one has forfeited it and confessed the offense, incurs a dukkata. This point holds for each of the nissaggiya pacittiya rules.

End of vassa and kathina privileges. The fourth lunar month of the rainy season--beginning the day after the first full moon in October and lasting to dawn of the day following the next full moon--is termed the robe season, a period traditionally given over to robe-making. In the early days, when most bhikkhus spent the cold and hot season wandering, and stayed put in one place only during the Rains, this would have been the ideal period to prepare robes for their wandering, and would have been the ideal time for lay people, who had come to know the bhikkhus during the Rains, to show their gratitude and respect for them by presenting them with gifts of cloth for this purpose.

During this robe season, six of the training rules--NP 1, 2 & 3; Pacittiya 32, 33 & 46-- are relaxed as a privilege for bhikkhus who have observed the three-month rains residence (vassa), to make it more convenient for them to make robes. Also, any cloth accruing to a particular monastery during this period may be shared only among the bhikkhus who spent the Rains there, and not with any incoming visitors.

If the bhikkhus who have spent the rains in a particular monastery number five or more, they are also entitled to participate in a kathina ceremony in which they receive a gift of cloth from lay people, bestow it on one of their members, and then as a group make it into a robe before dawn of the following day. ("Kathina" means frame, and refers to the frame over which the robe cloth is stretched, much like the frame used in America to make a quilt.) After participating in this ceremony, the bhikkhus may take advantage of the above-mentioned privileges for an additional four lunar months, up to the dawn after the full-moon day that ends the cold season in late February or early-to-mid March (called Phagguna in Pali). However, a bhikkhu's kathina privileges may be rescinded earlier than that for either of two reasons:

1) He participates in a Community meeting in which all the bhikkhus in the monastery, as a formal act of the Sangha, voluntarily relinquish their kathina privileges. (This act is discussed under Bhikkhunis' Pacittiya 30.)

2) He abandons both his concern for the monastery (avasa-palibodha) and his concern for making a robe (civara-palibodha). (See Mv.VII.1.7; Mv.VII.2 & Pv.XIV.6)

a) Concern for the monastery becomes abandoned when either of the following things happen:

--One leaves the monastery without intending to return before the four lunar months are up.

--One has left the monastery, planning to return, but learns that the bhikkhus in the monastery have formally decided to relinquish their kathina privileges.

b) Concern for making a robe becomes abandoned when any of the following occur:

--One finishes making a robe.

--One decides not to make a robe,

--One's robe cloth gets lost.

--One expects to obtain robe cloth, but doesn't obtain it as expected.

Only if Point 1 happens, or both Points 2a and 2b happen, do one's kathina privileges lapse before the dawn after the full moon day that marks the end of the cold season.

During the period in which one's end-of-vassa privileges or kathina privileges are in effect, one may keep an extra piece of robe cloth for more than ten days without incurring an offense under this rule. Once these privileges lapse, though, one must determine the cloth, place it under dual ownership or abandon it within ten days. If one fails to do so by the 'eleventh dawn' after the privileges lapse, the cloth is to be forfeited and the offense confessed.

Forfeiture and confession. To be absolved of the offense under this rule, one must first forfeit the robe cloth kept over ten days, and then confess the offense. This may be done in the presence of one other bhikkhu, a group of two or three, or a Community of four or more. After confessing the offense, one receives the robe cloth in return. This is the pattern followed under all the nissaggiya pacittiya rules, except for the few in which forfeiture and confession must be done in the presence of a full Community, and in which the article may not be returned to the offender. (We will note these rules as we come to them.)

The Pali formulae to use in forfeiture, confession and return of the article for this and all the following rules are given in Appendix VI. We should note, though, that according to the Commentary one may conduct these procedures in any language at all.

In this and every other rule under which the article may be returned to the offender, it must be returned to him. According to the Vibhanga, a bhikkhu who receives the article being forfeited without returning it incurs a dukkata. The Commentary qualifies this by say-ing that this penalty applies only to the bhikkhu who assumes that, in receiving an article being forfeited in this way, it is his to take as he likes. For the bhikkhu who knows that it is not his to take--and this includes every bhikkhu who has read this passage and remembered it--the offense is to be treated under Parajika 2, and the penalty determined by the value of the article.

A bhikkhu who has received the robe cloth in return after forfeit-ing it and confessing the offense may use it again without incurring an offense, unless he keeps it as a piece of extra robe cloth for more than an additional ten days.

Non-offenses. Aside from extra robe cloth kept more than ten days while one's end-of-vassa or kathina privileges are in effect, the Vibhanga says that there is no offense if within ten days the cloth is determined, placed under dual ownership, lost, stolen, destroyed, burnt, taken by someone else on trust, thrown away or given away.

In connection with this last point, the Commentary discusses proper and improper ways of giving things away. The article counts as having been properly given if one says, "I give this to you," or "I give this to so-and-so" or "Take this, it's yours," but not if one says things like, "Make this yours," or "May this be yours." And also, apparently, if one simply hands the article over without saying anything to show that one is transferring ownership, it again does not count. As we noted above, perception is not a mitigating factor under this rule. If one gives extra robe cloth away in an improper manner, then even though one may assume that the cloth has been given away, it still counts as one's own extra robe cloth under this rule.

Current practice. As the origin story shows, the purpose of this rule was to prevent bhikkhus from having more than one set of the three robes at any one time. With the passage of time, though, gifts of cloth to the Community became more numerous, and the need for stringency in this matter became less and less felt. Exactly when spare robes became accepted is not recorded, although the passage on a student's duties to his preceptor (Mv.I.25.9) shows that the practice of having a spare lower robe was already current when that part of the Canon was compiled. (See Appendix VIII.) Mv.VII.1 also makes mention of a group of forest dwelling monks who were "wearers of the three robes" as if this were a special distinguishing characteristic. The Parivara (V.5) mentions the practice of using only one set of three robes as special, and the Visuddhi Magga (5the century A.D.) classes this practice as one of the thirteen optional dhutanga (ascetic) practices.

As we will see below, Pacittiya 92 suggests that in the early days the under, upper and outer robes were all nearly the same size, so there would have been no difficulties in washing one robe and using the other two while the first one dried. Later, when the compilers of the ancient commentaries greatly enlarged the size of the upper and outer robes after deciding that the Buddha was much larger than an ordinary human being, it became less convenient to get by with just one set of three robes. Thus at present many teachers suggest that even a frugal bhikkhu should use one spare under robe, or a spare under and upper robe when staying in monasteries--so that he will have no trouble keeping his robes clean and presenting an acceptable appearance at all times--and save the three-robe dhutanga practice for periods when alone in the wilderness.

At any rate, since only one set of three robes may be determined as such, spare robes--once they became generally accepted--were determined as "accessory cloths". This point may be inferred from the Commentary's explanation of this rule, and the Sub-commentary's explanation of NP 7. The Commentary even contains a discussion of the views of various elders as to whether or not a bhikkhu who wished to avoid the special rules surrounding the use of the three robes (such as the following rule) may determine his basic set as accessory cloths as well. The majority opinion--there was only one voice dissenting--was yes, although at present many Communities do not follow this opinion.

The Sub-commentary suggests an alternative way of dealing with spare robes: placing them under dual ownership and--since none of the three robes may be placed under dual ownership--calling them simply "cloth" (civara). This, however, plays havoc with Pacittiya 59, and the general use of the idea of dual ownership in the Canon, as a way of keeping cloth that one is not yet using.

Still, both methods of dealing with spare robes--determining them as "accessory cloths" and placing them under dual ownership as "cloths"--are in practice at present. And since spare robes have been accepted, the current effect of this rule is mainly to deter a bhikkhu from hoarding up robe-cloth in secret, and from letting a hole in any of his basic set of three robes go unmended for more than ten days. Nevertheless, the spirit of the rule makes it incumbent on each bhikkhu to keep his cloth requisites to a minimum.

Summary: Keeping a piece of robe-cloth for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it under dual ownership--except when the end of vassa or kathina privileges are in effect--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

2.When a bhikkhu has finished his robe-making and the frame is destroyed (his kathina privileges are in abeyance): If he dwells apart from (any of) his three robes even for one night--unless authorized by the bhikkhus--it is to be forfeited and confessed.

In the origin story here, a number of bhikkhus went off on tour, leaving their outer robes with their friends at the monastery. Eventually the robes became moldy, and the bhikkhus at the monastery were burdened with having to sun them to get rid of the mold. The Buddha thus formulated this rule so that bhikkhus would be responsible for looking after their own robes.

The offense here is composed of two factors: object and effort.

Object. Any one of the robes that a bhikkhu has determined as his basic set of three: the antaravasaka (under robe), uttarasanga (upper robe) and sanghati (outer robe). This rule thus does not apply to spare robes or other cloth requisites.

Effort. Greeting dawn at a place outside of the zone in which any of ones robes are located, except when the exemptions mentioned in the rule are in effect.

Dawn is a concept that would seem intuitive enough, but the lack of a definition for the term in the Vibhanga has given rise to a variety of later interpretations. The Khuddasikkha, a Vinaya manual written in the medieval period by Ven. Dhammasiri, states that the sky lightens in four stages before sunrise: a slight reddening 2 hours before sunrise; a slight whitening 1/2 hour later; a second reddening 48 minutes before sunrise; and a second whitening 24 minutes after that. Burmese, Sri Lankan and some Thai bhikkhus tend to follow this analysis, and differ among themselves only as to which of the four stages constitutes dawn, most of them favoring the first reddening. Other Thai bhikkhus ignore the Khuddasikkha entirely, and say that dawn occurs in the half hour before the point when, by natural light, one can see the lines in one's hand while holding it out at arm's length.

Appendix 1 discusses a passage from the Canon--M. 66--which suggests that the first reddening and whitening is probably not the dawn meant by the Vibhanga, but as with many other controversial points of this sort, the wise policy is usually to adhere to the traditions of one's Community.

Zones. This is the most complex facet of this rule. The zone where a bhikkhu must be at dawn depends on the type of location where his robes are placed, whether or not the property around the location is enclosed (with a wall, a fence or a body of water such as a moat, river or lake, says the Sub-commentary) and--if it is enclosed--whether it belongs to one or more than one kula.

The term kula has different meanings for the different types of locations. According to the Commentary, a village, town or city is one-kula if ruled by a single ruler; and multi-kula if ruled by a council--as in the case of Vesali and Kusinara during the time of the Buddha. At present, cities or towns governed under a social contract--such as a town charter--would count as multi-kula regardless of whether the highest authority in the government is invested in a single individual or not.

A building, a vehicle or a piece of land is one-kula if it belongs to one family; and multi-kula if it belongs to more than one (as in an apartment house).

According to the Sub-commentary, a monastery is one-kula if the people who initiated it belong to one kula--of either type, apparently--and multi-kula if they belong to several.

What follows is a synopsis of the specific cases listed in the Vibhanga, together with explanations from the commentaries:

1. A village, town or city:

a. Enclosed and one-kula: If the robes are in the enclosure, one may greet dawn anywhere in the enclosure.

b. Enclosed and multi-kula: If the robes are in a house, greet dawn anywhere in the house, in the public meeting hall, at the town gate or one hatthapasa (1.25 meters) around any of these places. () If the robes are in the public meeting hall or in the area one hatthapasa around it, greet dawn in the public meeting hall, at the town gate, or in the area one hatthapasa around either of the two.

c. Unenclosed: If the robes are in a one-kula dwelling, greet dawn in the house or in the area one hatthapasa around it. () (See 2 & 3 below for further details.)

2. A dwelling with a yard:

a. Enclosed and one-kula: If the robes are within the enclosure, greet dawn anywhere within the enclosure.

b. Enclosed and multi-kula: Greet dawn in the room where the robes are located, at the entrance to the enclosure, or in the area one hatthapasa around either of the two. ()

c. Unenclosed: Greet dawn in the room where the robes are located, or in the area one hatthapasa around it. ()

3. A monastic dwelling (vihara--according to the Sub-commentary, this includes entire monasteries):

a. Enclosed and one-kula: If the robes are within the enclosure, greet dawn anywhere within the enclosure.

b. Enclosed and multi-kula: Greet dawn in the dwelling where the robes are located, at the entrance to the enclosure, or in the area one hatthapasa around either of the two. ()

c. Unenclosed: Greet dawn in the dwelling where the robes are located or in the area one hatthapasa around it. ()

4. A field, orchard garden (park) or threshing floor:

a. Enclosed and one-kula: If the robes are within the enclosure, greet dawn anywhere within the enclosure.

b. Enclosed and multi-kula: If the robes are within the enclosure, greet dawn in the area one hatthapasa around the entrance to the enclosure or in the area one hatthapasa around the robes.

c. Unenclosed: Greet dawn within one hatthapasa of the robes.

5. Buildings with no yard (such as a fortress or city apartment block):

a. One-kula: If the robes are in the building, greet dawn anywhere within the building.

b. Multi-kula: Greet dawn within the room where the robes are located, or in the area one hatthapasa around it. ()

6. A boat (and by extension, other vehicles):

a. One-kula: If the robes are in the vehicle, greet dawn anywhere within the vehicle.

b. Multi-kula (as in a commercial airplane or bus): If the robe is within a room, greet dawn in the room or in the area one hatthapasa around it. () (For this reason, a bhikkhu traveling in an airplane overnight should wear his complete set of robes or have it with him in his cabin baggage, and not store it with his checked baggage.)

7. A caravan (according to the Sub-commentary, this includes groups traveling by foot as well as by cart; group hiking trips would thus be included here):

a. One-kula: If the robes are anywhere in the caravan, greet dawn anywhere up to seven abbhantaras (98 meters) in front of or behind the robes, or up to one abbhantara (14 meters) to either side.

b. Multi-kula: If the robes are anywhere in the caravan, greet dawn within one hatthapasa of the caravan.

8. At the foot of a tree:

a. One-kula: If the robes are in the area shaded by the tree at noon, greet dawn within that area. According to the Commentary, this does include spots where sun leaks through gaps in the foliage, so be careful.

b. Multi-kula (as a tree on the boundary between two pieces of land): Greet dawn within one hatthapasa of the robes.

9. In a wilderness area (where there are no villages):

Greet dawn anywhere within a seven-abbhantara (98 meter) radius of the robes.

10. In other areas:

If the robes are located in a place other than those mentioned above (e.g., in the unshaded yard of an unenclosed monastery), greet dawn within one hatthapasa of the robes.

Exemptions. 1) As in the preceding rule, this rule does not apply when the end-of-vassa and kathina privileges are in effect.

2) In the origin story to this rule, the Buddha gives permission for a Community of bhikkhus to authorize an ill bhikkhu to be separated from his robes at dawn throughout the course of his illness without incurring an offense. This authorization is to be given as a formal act with one motion and one announcement (natti-dutiya-kamma).

The Commentary contains a discussion of how long this authoriza-tion is to last, and concludes that once the bhikkhu has recovered, he should make every reasonable effort to get back to his robes as soon as possible without jeopardizing his health. The authorization then automatically subsides, with no further formal act being required. If his illness returns, the authorization is automatically reinstated.

3) In Mv.II.12.1-3, the Buddha directs the bhikkhus to declare a sima--or territory in which formal acts of the Community are enacted--as a ticivara-avippavasa, which means that if a bhikkhu's robes are anywhere within the territory, he may greet dawn at any other part of that territory without incurring an offense under this rule. In those days, when such a territory might cover many monas-teries (the maximum allowable size is 3x3 yojanas, approximately 48x48 kilometers), this was a definite convenience for bhikkhus who had to leave one monastery to join in Community meetings at another one in the same territory. Since it was possible for such territories to include villages and homes as well, the Buddha added the extra stipulation that robes left in the houses of lay people lying in such a territory were not covered by the ticivara-avippavasa agreement.

At present the custom is to designate much smaller areas as simas--usually only a fraction of the land in one monastery--and although these are also designated as ticivara-avippavasa, this arrangement in such cases is not the great convenience it is in the larger simas.

Forfeiture and confession. If a bhikkhu greets dawn outside of the zone where any one of his three determined robes is placed--except when the exemptions are in effect--the robe is to be forfeited and the offense confessed. Perception and intention are not mitigat-ing factors here. If he thinks that he is in the same zone when he actually isn't, if he thinks the robe is not determined when it actually is, or if he means to be in the same zone when circumstances prevent him, he incurs the penalty all the same. If he then uses the robe before forfeiting it and confessing the offense, he incurs a dukkata.

The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the robe are the same as in the preceding rule. For the Pali formula to use in forfeiture, see Appendix VI. Once the robe has been forfeited, its determination lapses, so when the bhikkhu receives it in return he must re-determine it for use or give it away within ten days so as not to commit an offense under the preceding rule.

Non-offenses. In addition to the above-mentioned exemptions, there is no offense if, before dawn, the robe is lost, destroyed, burnt or stolen; if someone else takes it on trust; or if the bhikkhu gives it away or rescinds its determination. Because of this last allowance, the Commentary recommends that if a bhikkhu realizes that he will not be able to get back to his robe before dawn, he should verbally rescind the robe's determination before dawn arrives so as to avoid an offense, and then redetermine the robe after dawn has passed.

A note on Thai practice. The author of the Vinaya Mukha missed the Sub-commentary's discussion of monastic residences under this rule, and so came to the conclusion that none of the texts discuss the question of zones in a monastery. As a result, he formulated his own system, treating each separate monastic dwelling as a lay dwelling with a yard. Furthermore, he neglected to discuss the question of what counts as single-kula and multi-kula in such a dwelling. In the absence of any other standard, Thai bhikkhus have come to view a dwelling of two or more bhikkhus, in which the bhikkhus come from different families, as a several-kula dwelling. If the bhikkhus live in separate rooms, then the room where the robes are placed, plus a radius of one hatthapasa around it, is the bhikkhu's zone. If two or more bhikkhus are spending the night in a single room, each bhikkhu must greet dawn within one hatthapasa of his robes.

Although there is no basis in the Canon or commentaries for this practice, it is so widely accepted in Thailand that the wise policy for anyone spending the night in the same dwelling or the same room with a Thai bhikkhu is to be aware of it and abide by it, to avoid the useless controversies that can arise over minor matters like this.

Summary: Being in a separate zone from any of one's three robes at dawn--except when the end-of-vassa or kathina privileges are in effect, or one has received formal authorization from the Sangha--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

3. When a bhikkhu has finished his robe-making and the kathina privileges are in abeyance: If out-of-season robe cloth accrues to him, he may accept it if he so desires. Once he accepts it, he is to make it up immediately (into a cloth requisite). If it should not be enough, he may lay it aside for a month at most if he has an expectation for filling the lack. Should he keep it beyond that, even when there is an expectation (for further cloth), it is to be forfeited and confessed.

There are two factors for an offense here:

Object: (a) out-of-season robe cloth, made of any of the proper six kinds of material, in pieces measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths;

(b) the cloth is not enough to make the cloth requisite one has in mind, but one expects to receive more.

Effort: One keeps the cloth for more than 30 days, except when the privileges are in effect.

Object. Any gift of robe cloth presented to the Sangha when the end-of-vassa or kathina privileges are in effect is an in-season robe cloth. Thus, out-of-season robe cloth includes any gift of robe cloth:

1) presented to the Sangha at any other time,

2) presented at any time to a bhikkhu or group of bhikkhus (except for in-season cloth allotted to him/them by the Sangha); or

3) presented to the Sangha when the privileges are in effect, with the stipulation that it be treated as out-of-season cloth.

The reason why a donor would present cloth under category (3) is because, according to Mv.VIII.24-25, in-season cloth may be shared among only the bhikkhus who spent the vassa in that particular Community, and not among any visiting bhikkhus. The Bhikkhunis' NP 2 tells of a case where well-behaved but shabbily dressed bhikkhunis visited a Community of bhikkhunis when the end-of-vassa privileges were in effect, and so the lay donors, wishing to help them out, gave cloth to the Sangha with the stipulation that it be treated as out-of-season robe cloth so that the visiting bhikkhunis would also have a share.

Out-of-season cloth, if it is enough to make the cloth requisite one has in mind, is treated as extra robe cloth under NP 1. If, however, it is not enough, and one expects to get further cloth from any source--lay donors, the Sangha, cast-off cloth or one's own resources--it may be kept for up to 30 days with no need to be determined or placed under dual ownership.

The further cloth, when one receives it, has a life-span of ten days, as under NP 1, and one must finish making one's requisite within the time period determined by whichever cloth has the shorter life span. Thus, if one obtains the expected cloth during the first 20 days, the requisite must be made within ten days, this being the life span of the second cloth. If one obtains it after the 21st day, the requisite must be made before the original 30 days are up.

If the second cloth turns out to be of different quality from the first, one is under no compulsion to put the two cloths together to make up the requisite if one does not want to, and may continue waiting for further cloth as long as the life span of the first cloth allows. The Commentary recommends that if the second cloth is of poorer quality than the first, one may determine it as accessory cloth; if the second cloth is of better quality, one may determine the first cloth as accessory cloth, and start a new 30-day countdown from the day one receives the second cloth.

Effort. Days are counted by dawns. If, by the 30th dawn after one receives the original cloth, one has not determined it, placed it under dual ownership or abandoned it, it is to be forfeited and the offense confessed. The Sub-commentary adds that if at any time after the first ten days have elapsed one abandons any expectation for further cloth, one must determine the original cloth, place it under dual ownership or abandon it before the following dawn. Otherwise, one incurs an offense under NP 1.

As in the preceding rules, perception is not a mitigating factor here. If one miscounts the dawns, or thinks the cloth is properly determined, etc., when in fact it isn't, one commits an offense all the same.

As for the question of out-of-season cloth that crosses the boundary between times when the privileges are and are not in effect--i.e., cloth received less than a month before the privileges start, or less than a month before they end: The K/Commentary to NP 24 indicates that if cloth received when the privileges are still in effect is not enough to make a robe, the one-month grace period allowed in this rule begins the day after the privileges are rescinded. And the Commentary to NP 28 indicates that if the cloth covered in this rule comes toward the end of the rains retreat, and the date on which the robe has to be finished falls in the robe season, one is allowed the entire robe season to finish it.

Still, these questions rarely come up in practice, as it is a simple enough matter to determine the original cloth as accessory cloth or place it under dual ownership until one has enough cloth to make one's requisite, remove it from those arrangements to make the requisite, and so avoid having to worry about this rule at all.

Forfeiture and confession. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as in the preceding rules. The Pali formula to use in forfeiting the cloth is given in Appendix VI. Once the cloth is received in return, and it is now enough for the requisite on has in mind, it is classed as extra robe cloth under NP 1. If not, the 30-day countdown starts all over again.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, before the 30 days are up, the original cloth is stolen, lost, destroyed, burnt; if someone else takes it on trust; or if the owner determines it for use, places it under dual ownership or abandons it. And, as stated above, this rule does not apply when the end-of-vassa and kathina privileges are in effect.

Summary: Keeping out-of-season cloth for more than 30 days when it is not enough to make a requisite and one has expectation for more--except when the end-of-vassa and kathina privileges are in effect--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

4. Should any bhikkhu have a used robe washed, dyed or beaten by a bhikkhuni unrelated to him, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The origin story here is one of the classics of Vinaya literature, although it is hard to say which is more memorable--the dry, matter-of-fact style with which the narrative relates the improbable events, or the reaction of the bhikkhunis when they hear what has happened.

"Now at that time Ven. Udayin's wife had gone forth among the bhikkhunis. She often went to his dwelling, and he often went to hers. One day he went to her dwelling for a meal. Arising early in the morning, carrying his robe and bowl, he went to where she was staying and on arrival sat down in front of her, exposing his male organ. She sat down in front of him, exposing her female organ. He, full of lust, stared at her organ. His organ emitted semen. He said to her, 'Go and fetch some water, sister. I'll wash my under robe.'

"'Give it to me. I'll wash it.'

"Then she took some of the semen in her mouth and inserted some of it in her female organ. With that, she conceived a child.

"The bhikkhunis said, 'This bhikkhuni has been practicing unchastity. She's pregnant.'

"'It's not that I've been practicing unchastity.' And she told them what had happened. The bhikkhunis were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can this Master Udayin get a bhikkhuni to wash his used robe?'"

There are three factors for an offense here: object, effort and result.

Object. A used robe. "Robe", here, according to the Commentary, means any robe that has been dyed and properly marked (see Pacittiya 58). This is its way of saying that the robe must be a finished cloth requisite of the type suitable for wearing, but it need not be determined as one of one's basic three robes. In other words, it could also be as yet undetermined, or a spare robe determined as an accessory cloth.

"Used", according to the Vibhanga, means worn or used at least once.

Other cloth requisites, such as sitting cloths and bed sheets, are grounds for a dukkata. Non-cloth requisites are not grounds for an offense.

Effort: One tells an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or beat the robe.

A bhikkhuni, here, means one who has received the double ordination: first in the Bhikkhuni Sangha and second in the Bhikkhu Sangha. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination is grounds for a dukkata. Female probationers and novices and not grounds for an offense.

"Unrelated" is explained by the Vibhanga as meaning unrelated back through seven grandfathers, either on the father's or the mother's side. The Commentary explains further that this means seven generations counted back starting from one's grandfather. Thus all descendants of one's great-great-great-great-great-great-great-grandfathers are counted as one's relatives. In-laws, though, are not counted. This definition of unrelated applies wherever the Vibhanga mentions the word. At the time of the Buddha, perceived ties of kinship extended more widely than they do today, and a bhikkhu at present would be well-advised to regard as his relatives only those blood-relations with whom ties of kinship are actually felt.

Perception is not an issue here. If a bhikkhu perceives a bhikkhuni as related when in fact she isn't, he is subject to the penalty all the same.

Telling, according to the Commentary, includes gesturing as well. Thus if a bhikkhuni is washing her robes, and a bhikkhu throws his robe down next to her, that would fulfill the factor here.

Result. The bhikkhuni washes, dyes or beats the robe as requested.

Offenses. A bhikkhu who tells an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, etc., his used robe incurs a dukkata in the telling. For every effort she then makes towards washing it, he incurs an extra dukkata. When she actually starts washing it, the robe is to be forfeited and the pacittiya offense confessed. He incurs a nissaggiya pacittiya and a dukkata if he gets her to do two of the three actions mentioned in the rule--e.g., washing and dyeing the robe; and a nissaggiya pacittiya and two dukkatas if he gets her to do all three.

The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the robe are the same as in the preceding rules. Once the robe is returned, it counts as an extra robe cloth under NP 1.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if the bhikkhuni is related to the bhikkhu, if an unrelated bhikkhuni washes the robe unasked, if an unrelated bhikkhuni helps a related bhikkhuni wash it, if the robe has not yet been used, if one gets an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash a non-cloth requisite, or if one gets an unrelated female probationer or female novice to wash a used robe.

The Commentary discusses the case of a bhikkhu who gives a used robe to a female probationer to wash: She takes it, becomes ordained as a bhikkhuni in the meantime, and then washes it. The verdict: He incurs the full penalty under this rule. For the fun of it, the Commentary then goes on to discuss the case of a bhikkhu who gives his used robe to a layman to wash. The layman undergoes a spontaneous sex change and becomes a bhikkhuni before washing the robe, and again, the bhikkhu incurs the full penalty. What lesson is intended here is hard to say.

Summary: Getting an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or beat a robe that one has worn at least once is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

5. Should any bhikkhu accept robe cloth from a bhikkhuni unrelated to him--unless it is in exchange--it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The reason behind this rule is expressed by a single sentence in the origin story: 'It's hard for a woman to come by things.' In the original version of the rule, the Buddha made no allowance for accepting robe cloth in exchange, but this point was later changed at the request of the bhikkhunis. They had tried to exchange robe cloth with the bhikkhus, who refused because of the rule as it stood at that time, and this upset the bhikkhunis. As the Commentary explains, their poverty was what made them complain, "If the Masters are not on familiar terms with us even to this extent, how are we supposed to keep going?"

The offense under this rule is composed of two factors: object and effort.

Object. Any piece of robe cloth of the six suitable kinds, measur-ing at least four by eight fingerbreadths. Other requisites are not grounds for an offense.

Effort. The bhikkhu receives such cloth from an unrelated bhikkhuni and does not give her anything in exchange.

"Unrelated bhikkhuni" here is defined in the same terms as under the preceding rule: a bhikkhuni who has received the double ordina-tion and is not related to the bhikkhu back through their great x 7 grandfathers. A bhikkhuni who has received only her first ordination, from the bhikkhunis, is grounds for a dukkata. Female probationers and female novices are not grounds for an offense.

Perception here is not a mitigating factor: According to the Vibhanga, even if a bhikkhu perceives an unrelated bhikkhuni as related, he is still subject to the penalty. The Commentary adds that even if one does not know that the robe comes from a bhikkhuni--as when many donors place robes in a pile for a bhikkhu, and one of the donors, unbeknownst to the bhikkhu, is a bhikkhuni--this factor is fulfilled all the same. If a bhikkhuni gives robe cloth to someone else to present to a bhikkhu, though, the bhikkhu incurs no offense in accepting it.

The Commentary also states that receiving need not be hand-to-hand. If a bhikkhuni simply places robe cloth near a bhikkhu as her way of giving it to him, and he accepts it as given, this factor is fulfilled.

As for the item given in exchange for the cloth, the Vibhanga states that it can be worth much more then the cloth or much less. Buddhaghosa quotes the Mahapaccari, one of the ancient commen-taries, saying that even if, in return for the cloth, the bhikkhu gives the bhikkhuni a piece of yellow myrobalan--a medicinal fruit, one of the cheapest things imaginable in India--he escapes the penalty under this rule.

Offenses. If all three factors of the offense here are fulfilled, then the bhikkhu incurs a dukkata in accepting the cloth, which is then to be forfeited and the additional offense of a nissaggiya pacittiya confessed. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as in the preceding rules.

Non-offenses. There is no offense:

if the bhikkhuni is a relation;

if the bhikkhuni is not related, but the bhikkhu gives her something in exchange;

if the bhikkhu takes the cloth on trust;

if he borrows the cloth;

if he accepts a non-cloth requisite;

if he accepts robe cloth from a female probationer or female novice.

Exchange. The origin story to this rule is where the Buddha explicitly gives permission for bhikkhus, bhikkhunis, female probationers, male novices and female novices to trade items with one another. NP 20 forbids bhikkhus from trading items with lay people and people ordained in other religions.

Summary: Accepting robe cloth from an unrelated bhikkhuni without giving her anything in exchange is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

6. Should any bhikkhu ask for robe cloth from a man or woman householder unrelated to him, except at the proper occasion, it is to be forfeited and confessed. Here the proper occasion is this: The bhikkhu's robe has been stolen or destroyed. This is the proper occasion in this case.

"Now at that time Ven. Upananda the Sakyan had become skilled in giving Dhamma talks. A certain millionaire's son went to where he was, and on arrival bowed down and sat to one side. As he was sitting there, Ven. Upananda the Sakyan instructed, urged, roused and encouraged him with a Dhamma talk. Then the millionaire's son...said to him, 'Tell me, Ven. sir, what would be in my power to give you for your welfare: Robe material? Alms-food? Lodgings? Medicines for the sick?'

"'If you want to give me something, friend, then give me one of those cloths (you are wearing).'

"'I'm the son of a good family, Ven. sir. How can I go about wearing one cloth? Wait until I've returned home. After going home, I will send you one of these cloths, or a finer one.'

"A second time...A third time, Ven. Upananda said to him, 'If you want to give me something, friend, then give me one of those cloths.'

"'I'm the son of a good family, Ven. sir. How can I go about wearing one cloth? Wait until I've returned home. After going home, I will send you one of these cloths, or a finer one.'

"'Are you making an offer when you don't want to give me anything, in that having made the offer you don't give?'

"So the millionaire's son, being pressured by Ven. Upananda, left having given him one cloth. People seeing him said to him, 'Why is it, master, that you go around wearing only one cloth?'

"He told them what had happened. So the people were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'They're insatiable, these Sakyan contemplatives, and not easily contented. It's no simple matter to make a reasonable request of them. How can they, after being made a reasonable request by the millionaire's son, take his cloth?'"

The factors for an offense here are three: object, effort and result.

Object. A piece of any of the six suitable kinds of robe cloth, measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths.

Effort. One asks, except at the proper time, for such cloth from a lay person who is not related back through one's great x 7 grand-fathers. Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Even if one perceives the lay person to be related when in fact he/she isn't, that fulfills the factor here.

Result. One receives the cloth.

The proper occasions. "Stolen", according to the Vibhanga, refers to a robe stolen by anyone at all. "Destroyed" means burnt, carried away by water, eaten by such things as rats or termites, or worn out by use--although the Sub-commentary adds here that worn out by use means worn to the point where the robe can no longer cover the body.

If all of a bhikkhu's robes are stolen or destroyed, he is not to go about naked. To do so incurs a dukkata (as opposed to the thullac-caya Mv.VIII.28.1 imposes on a bhikkhu who chooses to go about naked when he has robes to wear). A bhikkhu who has no cloth to cover his body should make a covering of grass and leaves. If he happens on an unoccupied residence of the Sangha, he is permitted to take any cloth he finds there--robes, sheets, mats, pillow cases or whatever--to wear as a makeshift robe as long as he has the intention of returning it when he obtains a proper robe.

The Commentary adds several points here:

If one picks leaves or cuts grass to make a covering for oneself under these circumstances, one is exempt from the penalty for damaging plant life under Pacittiya 11.

If, after getting one's makeshift robe, one has to go a great distance before getting a proper robe, one may leave the makeshift robe with any convenient monastery as property of the Sangha.

If, under these circumstances, one asks lay people for cloth and receives cloth of a type or color that normal is not allowed, one incurs no offense in wearing it until one can obtain suitable cloth.

The following rule adds extra stipulations on how much cloth one may ask for in circumstances like this.

Offenses. The act of asking for robe cloth, not at the proper time, from an unrelated lay person incurs a dukkata; and the cloth, when one receives it, is to be forfeited and the nissaggiya pacittiya offense confessed. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as in the preceding rules, except for the Pali formula to use in forfeiting the cloth, which is given in Appendix VI.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense if one asks at the right time, or from one's relations, from people who have invited one to ask for cloth, if one obtains cloth through one's own resources, or if one asks for the sake of another bhikkhu. The Commentary explains that this last point means two things: One may ask for cloth for the sake of another bhikkhu (1) from one's own relations or from people who have invited one to ask for cloth or (2) from the relatives of that bhikkhu, or people who have invited him to ask. This point applies for all rules where one is allowed to ask for the sake of another.

As for obtaining cloth through one's own resources, the Sub-commentary notes that one should be careful to do it in such a way as not to incur an offense under NP 20. Again, this applies to all rules that contain this exemption.

Summary: Asking for and receiving robe cloth from an unrelated lay person, except when one's robes have been stolen or destroyed, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

7. If that unrelated man or woman householder presents the bhikkhu with many robes (pieces of robe cloth), he is to accept at most (enough for) an upper and an under robe. If he accepts more than that, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

This rule is a continuation of the preceding one, dealing with the protocol in asking for robe material when one's robes have been stolen or destroyed. The origin story is as follows:

"At that time the group of six bhikkhus, having approached bhikkhus whose robes had been stolen, said, 'Friends, the Blessed One has allowed those whose robes are stolen or destroyed to ask an unrelated man or woman householder for robe cloth. Ask for robe cloth, friends.'

"'Never mind, friends. We have already received (enough) robe cloth.'

"'We are asking in your name, friends.'

"'Then go ahead and ask.'

"So the group of six bhikkhus, having approached unrelated householders, said, 'Bhikkhus have come whose robes were stolen. Give us robe cloth for them.' And they asked for a lot of robe cloth. Then a certain man, sitting in a meeting hall, said to another man, 'Master, bhikkhus have come whose robes were stolen. I gave robe cloth for them.'

"And he said, 'I gave, too.'

"And another said, 'I gave, too.'

"They were offended and annoyed and spread it about: 'How can these Sakyan contemplatives, not knowing moderation, ask for a lot of robe cloth? Will the Sakyan contemplatives deal in the cloth business? Or will they set up a shop?'"

Protocol. The Vibhanga states that when a bhikkhu's robes are stolen or destroyed, the amount of cloth he may ask for and accept from an unrelated householder who has not previously invited him to ask for cloth depends on the number of robes stolen or destroyed. If three, he may ask for and accept only enough for two. If two, he may ask for and accept only enough for one. If one, he should not ask for any cloth at all.

The K/Commentary mentions that these stipulations apply only when robes from one's determined set of three are stolen or destroyed. The way it phrases this suggests that if one's spare robes are stolen or destroyed, one has no right to ask for robe cloth at all. The Sub-commentary, though, interprets the passage as opening a loophole so that if one loses any of one's spare robes, one may ask for as much cloth as one likes. It then accuses the K/Commentary of contradicting the Canon and Commentary, and ignoring the purpose of the rule, which is to teach moderation and fewness of wants. Its conclusion: The protocol applies when any of one's robes are stolen or destroyed--whether determined as the basic set of three, undetermined or determined as accessory cloths.

If, however, we recall that in the time of the Canon each bhikkhu had only one set of three robes, and that the allowance in the preced-ing rule was to relieve the hardship of having little or nothing to wear, we can agree with the K/Commentary's interpretation: that the allowance in the preceding rule applies only when robes from one's basic set of three are stolen and destroyed, and that this is the case we are concerned with here. If one's spare robes get stolen or destroyed, one may not make use of the allowance to ask for robe cloth at all.

The Vibhanga states further that if the householder presents one with a great deal of cloth, with the invitation to take as much as one likes, one should take only enough cloth to make the allowable number of robes. The no-offense clauses add that one may take excess cloth if one promises to return the excess when one has finished making one's robe(s). And if the donor tells one to keep the excess, one may do so without incurring a penalty.

The factors of the offense for overstepping the bounds of this protocol are three:

Object--Any piece of the six kinds of suitable robe cloth, measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths.

Effort--One asks for more than the allowable amount of robe cloth from an unrelated householder who has not previously made an invitation to ask. Perception is not a mitigating factor here: Even if one perceives the householder to be related when in fact he/she isn't--or feels that he/she would be happy to offer the excess cloth even though he/she has given no previous invitation to ask--this factor is fulfilled all the same.

Result--One gets the excess robe cloth.

The offenses here are as follows: a dukkata for asking in the way that fulfills the factor of effort, and a nissaggiya pacittiya when all three factors are fulfilled. The procedures to follow in forfeiture, confession and receiving the cloth in return are the same as in the preceding rules. For the Pali formula to use in forfeiting the cloth, see Appendix VI.

Non-offenses. In addition to the two cases mentioned above--one takes excess cloth with the promise to return the excess when one has finished one's robe(s), and the donors tell one to keep the excess--there is no offense in taking excess cloth if:

the donors are offering cloth for reasons other than that one's robes were stolen or destroyed (e.g., they are impressed with one's learning, says the Commentary);

one is asking from one's relatives or people who have previously made one an invitation to ask for cloth (before one's robes were stolen or destroyed, says the Sub-commentary);

or one gets the cloth by means of one's own property.

The Commentary calls attention to the fact that the Vibhanga's no-offense clauses make no mention of asking for the sake of another. It then draws the conclusion, based on the fact that the rule was formulated in response to bhikkhus' requesting excess cloth for the sake of others, that in the circumstances mentioned in this rule, one may not ask for excess cloth for the sake of others. The Sub-commentary takes issue with this, and presents three arguments for its case:

1) There is no requirement that the working out of a training rule has to follow from the origin story. (It gives no examples, but Parajika 3 & 4, Sanghadisesa 8 & 9, NP 4 and Pacittiya 8 & 58 are all cases in point.)

2) The Ganthipadas state that since this training rule deals with what to do when presented with offerings for one's own sake, there is no need for the Vibhanga to mention the case of asking for another's sake.

3) If asking for another's sake is not allowable here, it should also not be allowable in the preceding rule.

Thus it concludes that here, as under the preceding rule, there is no offense in asking for excess cloth for Bhikkhu X from one's own relatives or people who have invited one to ask, or from Bhikkhu X's relatives or people who have invited X to ask.

Summary: Asking for and receiving excess cloth from unrelated lay people when one's robes have been stolen or destroyed is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

8. In case a man or woman householder prepares a robe fund for the sake of an unrelated bhikkhu, thinking. "Having purchased a robe with this robe fund, I will supply the bhikkhu named so-and-so with a robe:" If the bhikkhu, not previously invited, approach-ing (the householder) should make a stipulation with regard to the robe, saying, "It would be good indeed, sir, if you supplied me (with a robe), having purchased a robe of such-and-such a sort with this robe fund"--out of a desire for something fine--it is to be forfeited and confessed.

"Now at that time a certain householder said to his wife, 'I will supply Master Upananda with a robe.' A certain bhikkhu on his almsround overhead the man saying this, went to where Ven Upananda the Sakyan was staying and on arrival said to him, 'You have a lot of merit, friend Upananda. A certain man over there said to his wife, 'I will supply Master Upananda with a robe.'

"'He's my supporter, my friend.'

"So Ven. Upananda the Sakyan went to where the man was staying and on arrival said to him, 'My friend, is it true that you want to supply me with a robe?'

"'Now, wasn't I just thinking, 'I will supply Master Upananda with a robe'?

"'Well, if you want to supply me with a robe, supply me with a robe like this. What use is it to me to be supplied with a robe I won't use?'

"So the man was offended, annoyed and spread it about, 'They're insatiable, these Sakyan contemplatives, and not easily contented. It's no simple matter to supply them with a robe. How can this Master Upananda, without having first been invited by me, make stipulations concerning a robe?'"

The situation covered by this rule is this: An unrelated lay person has put aside resources to purchase a robe to present to a bhikkhu, but without yet asking the bhikkhu what kind of robe he wants. The factors for the offense here are four:

Object. The texts mention only that this rule concerns funds for a robe (civara), but without specifying whether this means funds only for finished robes or pieces of robe cloth suitable for making into robes as well. They also do not mention whether funds for other requisites would be grounds for a lesser offense or no offense, although given the spirit of the rule, it would be a wise policy for a bhikkhu not to make stipulations, when uninvited, to a lay person who has pre-pared funds for purchasing any kind of requisite for his use.

Intention. One wants to get a better robe than the lay person is planning to buy.

Effort. One makes a request to the unrelated lay person that would involve raising the cost of the robe. As in the previous rules, perception is not a factor here. Even if one perceives the lay person to be related when he/she actually isn't, that would fulfill the factor here all the same.

Result. One gets the robe. The way the texts define this factor suggests that whether or not the lay person actually spends more on the robe than he/she actually planned is not an issue here.

Offenses. In the act of making a request that would fulfill the factors of intention and effort, the penalty is a dukkata. When one receives the robe it is to be forfeited and the nissaggiya pacittiya offense confessed. The procedures to follow in forfeiture, confession and receiving the cloth in return are the same as in the preceding rules. For the Pali formula to use in forfeiting the cloth, see Appendix VI.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense if:

the lay person is a relative or has invited one to ask for cloth;

one asks for another's sake;

one is getting the robe with one's own resources;

or if one asks the lay person to get a robe less expensive than the one he/she is planning to get. The Commentary adds here that there is also no offense if one's request would result in a robe equal in price to the one the lay person has in mind.

Summary: When a lay person who is not a relative is planning to get a robe for one, but has yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving the robe after making a request that would raise its cost is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

9. In case two householders--men or women--prepare separate robe funds for the sake of a bhikkhu unrelated to them, thinking, "Having purchased separate robes with these sepa-rate robe funds of ours, we will supply the bhikkhu named so-and-so with robes:" If the bhikkhu, not previously invited, approaching (them) should make a stipulation with regard to the robe, saying, "It would be good indeed, sirs, if you supplied me (with a robe), having purchased a robe of such-and-such a sort with these separate robe funds, the two (funds) together for one (robe)"--out of a desire for something fine--it is to be forfeited and confessed.

Explanations for this training rule are the same as those for the preceding one, the only difference being in the factor of effort: One asks the two donors to put their funds together to purchase one robe. Whether or not the request would raise the amount of money they would have to spend is not an issue here, although the Vibhanga says that if one makes a request that would reduce the amount of money they would spend, there is no offense.

The Commentary adds that, under the conditions mentioned here, making requests of three or more people to combine their robe funds into one is also covered by this rule.

Summary: When two or more lay people who are not one's relatives are planning to get separate robes for one, but have yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving a robe from them after asking them to pool their funds to get one robe--out of a desire for something fine--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

10.In case a king, a royal official, a brahman or a householder sends a robe fund for the sake of a bhikkhu via a messen-ger (saying), "Having purchased a robe with this robe fund, supply the bhikkhu named so-and-so with a robe:" If the messenger, approaching the bhikkhu, should say, "This is a robe fund which is being delivered for the sake of the venerable one. May the venerable one accept this robe fund," then the bhikkhu is to address the mes-senger thus: "We do not accept robe funds, my friend. We accept robes (robe cloth) as are proper according to season."

If the messenger should say to the bhikkhu, "Then does the vener-able one have a steward?" then, bhikkhus, if the bhikkhu desires a robe, he may indicate a steward--either a monastery attendant or a lay follower--(saying), "That, my friend, is the bhikkhus' steward."

If the the messenger, having instructed the steward and going to the bhikkhu, should say, "I have instructed the steward the venerable one indicated. May the venerable one go (to him) and he will supply you with a robe in season," then the bhikkhu, desiring a robe and approaching the steward, may prompt and remind him two or three times, "I have need of a robe." Should (the steward), being prompted and reminded two or three times, produce the robe, that is good.

If he does not produce the robe, (the bhikkhu) should stand in silence four times, five times, six times at most for that purpose. Should (the steward) produce the robe after (the bhikkhu) has stood in silence for the purpose four, five, six times at most, that is good.

If he should not produce the robe (at that point), should he then produce the robe after (the bhikkhu) has endeavored further than that, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

If he should not produce (the robe), then the bhikkhu himself should go to the place from which the robe fund was brought, or a messenger should be sent (to say), "The robe fund that you, venerable sirs, sent for the sake of the bhikkhu has given no benefit to the bhikkhu at all. May the you be united with what is yours. May what is yours not be lost." This is the proper course here.

The protocols surrounding gifts of money and their proper use are quite complex--much more complex than even this long training rule would indicate--and require a detailed explanation. What follows is an attempt to make them clear. If it seems long and involved, remember that the purpose of the protocols is to free bhikkhus from the even more bothersome worries and complexities that come with participating in buying, selling and monetary matters in general.

This rule is one of four nissaggiya pacittiya rules covering a bhikkhu's proper relationship to money. The others are # 18, 19 & 20. Although they sometimes seem to be splitting hairs, they focus precisely on the two acts involving money that are most burden-some to a sensitive mind: In the act of accepting money, or having it accepted in one's name, one is accepting all the cares, responsibilities and dangers that come with its ownership; in the act of arranging a trade, one is accepting responsibility for the fairness of the trade: that it undervalues neither the generosity of the person who donated the money, nor the goods or services of the person receiving the money in trade.

Thus to protect a bhikkhu from these mental burdens, this rule sets up protocols so that lay donors may have the convenience of dedicating amounts of money and other valuables to provide for a bhikkhu's needs, and so that the bhikkhu may benefit from such gifts without having to bear the responsibilities of ownership or of having to arrange fair trades.

If a bhikkhu follows the protocols recommended here, the money placed with the steward still belongs to the donor, and the responsi-bility for making a fair trade lies with the steward. The bhikkhu's only responsibility is to inform the original donor if, after a reason-able number of promptings, the steward entrusted with the money does not provide him with the requisite the donor had in mind, and then let the donor look after the matter if he/she cares to.

Although the rule itself mentions only funds for robe cloth intended for individual bhikkhus, we should note from the outset that the Commentary extends it to cover all funds--composed of money, jewels, commodities, land livestock or other valuables that bhikkhus are not allowed to accept--not only for individual bhikkhus, but also for Sanghas, groups of bhikkhus and buildings in a monastery .

The money rules and allowances: an overview. NP 18 forbids a bhikkhu from accepting gifts of money, from getting others to accept them, and from consenting to gifts of money meant for him being placed down next to him. NP 19 &20 forbid him from engaging in buying, selling or bartering, regardless of whether or not it involves money. In the Mahavagga, however, the Buddha makes the following allowance, called the Mendaka Allowance, after the donor who inspired it:

"There are people of conviction and confidence, bhikkhus, who place gold and silver in the hand of stewards, saying 'Give the master whatever is allowable.' I allow you, bhikkhus, to accept whatever is allowable coming from that. But in no way at all do I say that money is to be accepted or sought for." (Mv.VI.34.21)

Even given this allowance, though, it is important that the bhikkhu, in his dealings with the steward, does not say or do anything that would transgress NP 18-20. At the same time, it is important that he does not abuse the steward's services. Otherwise the steward will never want to perform this service for bhikkhus again. This is the main point of the origin story to this rule:

"Then Ven. Upananda the Sakyan approached the lay follower (his steward), and on arrival said, 'My friend, I have need of a robe.'

"'Wait just today, sir. Today there is a town meeting, and the town has made a rule that whoever comes late is fined fifty (kahapana).'

"'Friend, give me the robe this very day!' (Saying this,) he grabbed hold of him by the belt. So the lay follower, being pres-sured by Ven. Upananda the Sakyan, purchasing a robe for him, arrived late. The people said to the lay follower, 'Why, master, have you come late? You have lost fifty.' So he told them what had happened. They were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'They're insatiable, these Sakyan contemplatives, and not easily contented. It's no simple matter even to render them a service. How can Upananda the Sakyan, being told by a layman, "Wait just today, sir," not wait?'"

Stewards. According to the Commentary, there are three ways money may be placed with a steward: the steward is either indicated by the bhikkhu, indicated by the donor or his/her messenger, or else indicated by neither.

1) "Indicated by the bhikkhu" covers two sorts of cases:

a) The donor asks the bhikkhu who his steward is, and the bhikkhu points him out, as mentioned in the training rule.

b) The donor, knowing that a particular lay person has volun-teered to act as a steward or is on familiar terms with the bhikkhu, gives the money to the lay person and informs the bhikkhu--or has someone else inform him--either before or after the fact.

2) "Indicated by the donor" covers cases where the donor chooses one of his/her own friends or employees to act as the steward for that particular gift, and informs the bhikkhu--or has someone else inform him--either before or after the fact.

3) "Indicated by neither" covers two separate cases:

a) The donor asks the bhikkhu who his steward is, and the bhikkhu says that he has none. Another person happens to overhear the conversation and volunteers to act as the steward for that particular gift.

b) The donor gives the gift to the lay person who is normally the bhikkhu's steward or is on familiar terms with the bhikkhu, but does not inform the bhikkhu or have him informed of the fact.

According to the Commentary, this training rule covers only cases of the first sort: the steward is indicated by the bhikkhu. I will discuss this case in detail first before going on to discuss the protocol in the other two.

The protocol in accepting. The Vibhanga gives the following guidelines:

If donors offer money, they are to be told that bhikkhus do not accept money.

If they ask who the bhikkhus' steward is, one may point out any lay person at all, saying, "That's the steward." One is not to say, "Give it to him/her" or "He/she will keep (the money)," for that would be an infraction of the rule against accepting money. Also, one is not to say, "He/she will buy (the requisite)" or "He/she will get it in exchange," for even this much would be an infraction of the rules against trading.

The K/Commentary adds that if the donor asks, "To whom should I give this?" or "Who will keep this?" one is not to point anyone out. It doesn't say what one may do in such a situation, although a wise policy would be to broach the topic of stewards so that the donor will ask a question to which one may give a allowable answer.

The protocol in obtaining requisites from the fund. The rule states that a bhikkhu may give his steward up to three verbal and six silent promptings in order to get a requisite from the fund. The Vibhanga works out an arrangement whereby he may exchange two silent promptings for one verbal prompting, which leads the Commentary to lay out the following scheme: A bhikkhu may make up to--

6 verbal & 0 silent promptings

5 verbal & 2 silent promptings

4 verbal & 4 silent promptings

3 verbal & 6 silent promptings

2 verbal & 8 silent promptings

1 verbal & 10 silent promptings, or

0 verbal & 12 silent promptings.

When giving a verbal prompting, one may say only, "I need a robe (or whatever the requisite may be)" or statements to that effect. One may not say, "Give me a robe," "Get me a robe," "Buy me a robe," or "Get a robe in exchange or me," for these statements would be violations of the rules against trading.

According to the Commentary, promptings are counted not by the number of visits to the steward, but by the number of times the bhikkhu states his need/desire for the requisite. Thus if, in one visit, he states his need for a robe three times, that counts as three verbal promptings.

As for silent promptings--or "standings"--the bhikkhu merely stands in the steward's presence. If he/she asks, "What have you come for?' the bhikkhu should say, "You know," or "You should know." This would make sense only after he has given the steward at least one verbal prompting, which means that the last possibility in the Commentary's list--0 verbal and 12 silent promptings--is very unlikely in practice.

The Vibhanga also notes that during the period when a bhikkhu has yet to receive the requisite, he should not accept an invitation to sit down at the steward's place, to accept alms or to teach Dhamma there. If he does any of these things, that cuts back his number of allowed standings. The Sub-commentary contains a long discussion of what precisely this means, and finally sides with the decision in the Three Ganthipadas: that each time a bhikkhu sits, receives alms or teaches one sentence of Dhamma (see Pacittiya 7) under these circumstances, he cuts down his allowed number of standings by one.

If one obtains the requisite after making the allowable number of verbal and silent promptings--or less--there is no offense. If one does not obtain the requisite after the maximum allowable number of promptings, one should inform the original donor, and then leave the issue up to him/her. Not to inform the donor here, the Commentary says, entails a dukkata. If the donor, being informed, then makes arrangements to get the requisite for the bhikkhu, there is no offense.

The factors of an offense here are three:

Object: A fund left with a steward pointed out by a bhikkhu.

Effort: One makes an excessive number of promptings.

Result: One obtains a requisite as a result of those promptings.

There is a dukkata for the excessive promptings, and the requisite, when obtained, is to be forfeited and the nissaggiya pacittiya offense confessed. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and receiving the requisite in return are the same as in the preceding rules. The Pali formula to use in forfeiture is given in Appendix VI.

Cases where this rule does not apply. According to the Commentary, if the steward has been indicated by the donor, one may make any number of promptings at all without committing an offense. If the article is not forthcoming, one may get another lay person to handle the issue (although one should be careful to phrase one's request to this lay person so as not to transgress the rules against accepting money, trading and buying). If the article is not forthcoming, one is not duty-bound to inform the original donor.

There is nothing in the Canon to indicate that the Commentary is wrong on any of these points, but simple etiquette would suggest that one not harass the steward excessively, and that one should inform the donor if the article is not forthcoming, so as to let the donor handle the matter from there on in.

As for the third case, in which the steward is not indicated either by the donor or by a bhikkhu, the Commentary says that, as far as that fund is concerned, the steward should be treated as a person who is not related and has not made an invitation to ask. In other words, one may not make any requests of the steward at all, unless he/she happens to invite one to make a request. We can qualify this by saying that if the article is not forthcoming after a reasonable amount of time, one may inform the original donor.

Other funds. The Commentary includes a long discussion of how this rule applies to funds other than those intended for an individual bhikkhu's requisites. A few of the more relevant cases:

Monetary funds for Sangha or group requisites. If a donor comes with a gift of money and says that it is being offered to the Sangha or to a group for whatever purpose, one should follow the protocol for accepting as under this rule. For instance, if the donor says, "I'm giving this to the Sangha for you to make use of the four requisites," one may not accept it in any of the three ways covered by NP 18. As we will see under NP 18, there is a dukkata for the bhikkhu who con-sents to money's being placed next to him under these circumstances. There is also a dukkata, says the Sub-commentary, for every bhikkhu who uses any article bought with the money.

If, however, the donor says, "The money will be with your steward" or "with my people" or "with me: All you need to do is make use of the four requisites," then there is no offense in accepting and making use of this arrangement. The etiquette to follow in obtaining requisites depends on who the money is left with: If the bhikkhus' steward, follow the protocol under this rule. If the donor's workers, one may make any number of promptings. If the donor, follow the guidelines under Pacittiya 47.

Non-monetary funds for Sangha or group requisites. There are a number of other articles that may not be owned by bhikkhus, and that carry a dukkata penalty if they are. They include land, fields and orchards; jewels; slaves; commodities (e.g., unhusked grain); and animals. If a donor wants to make a gift of such things to the Sangha, the Commentary says, the question of whether or not they may be accepted depends on how the donation is phrased. If the donor says, "I'm giving this to the Sangha" for whatever the purpose, the gift may not be accepted. As in the previous case, there is a dukkata for whoever receives it, and also for whoever uses an article obtained from proceeds coming from the gift.

If the donor says, "This is for the purpose of the four requisites," or "Accept whatever is allowable coming from this," without mention-ing the Sangha or any bhikkhu as custodians or recipients of the unallowable object, the arrangement may be accepted without penalty. For instance, if a donor wants to present a herd of cows, saying, "These are for the purpose of milk-products for the Sangha" (perhaps this sounds less stilted in Pali than it does in English), this is an acceptable arrangement. But if he/she says, "I am giving these cows to the Sangha to provide milk products for the Sangha," then it is not.

If a donor proposes to give pigs, chickens or other animals used only for their meat to the Sangha, the bhikkhus are to say, "We can't accept gifts like this, but we will be glad to set them free for you."

If, after setting up an allowable arrangement, the donor asks the bhikkhus to appoint a steward to look after it, they may. If not, they are to do nothing about the arrangement at all.

How the proceeds from such arrangements are to be used depends on what they are: If money, and a bhikkhu tells the steward, "Use this money to buy such-and-such," no bhikkhu can make use of what is bought with the money. If the proceeds are commodities, such as unhusked rice, and a bhikkhu tells the steward, "Use this rice to trade for such-and-such," the bhikkhu who makes the order may not use whatever is obtained from the trade, but other bhikkhus may without incurring a penalty. If the proceeds are allowable goods, such as fruit, and a bhikkhu tells the steward, "Use this fruit to trade for such-and-such," the Commentary says that any bhikkhu may use what is obtained from the trade, but this would seem to contradict NP 20.

Building funds. If a donor comes with money or other unallowable gift, and says, "I am giving this to the Sangha for the meditation hall (or any other building)," the gift may not be accepted. But if the donor says, "I am giving this to (or for) the meditation hall," without mentioning any individual bhikkhu, group of bhikkhus or the Sangha as custodians or recipients of the gift at all, then this arrangement is not to be refused, and the monastery steward is to be informed of what the donor said.

In the context of NP 18, this means that the bhikkhus are not to take the money directly, or to get anyone else to take it, but may consent to its being placed next to them, since it is not meant as a gift for them.

Many monasteries have donation boxes, and there is a small point of controversy over whether or not the bhikkhus may tell a donor in this case to put the money in the box. The Commentary to NP 18 states that when a donation has been placed down for a bhikkhu--over his protests--and someone besides the donor offers to put it in a safe place, the bhikkhu may point out a safe place to put money, but may not tell him/her to put it there. If this also applies to funds given "to a building", then the bhikkhus should be able to say to the donor of such funds, "The donation box is over there," but they are not to say, "Put it there."

The alternative interpretation is based on one of the cases given below, where the bhikkhus--after the donor volunteers to act as steward for the funds--may tell him/her to whom the money is to be given. Again, whether this applies to the case where the donor simply presents the money for the building, but does not volunteer to act as steward for the funds, is a moot point. The wise policy here is to follow the practice of the Community in which one lives.

At any rate, after the money has been placed by the donor, the bhikkhus may then tell the monastery steward what the donor said, but are not to tell him/her to take the money, as this would violate NP 18. Since the steward in this case would be classed as "indicated by the bhikkhus", they are to follow the protocol in this rule when they indicate their need to the steward for building materials, wages for the workers, and other necessities that come up in the course of the of the building's construction or maintenance.

The Commentary mentions two other acceptable arrangements:

(1) The donor places the money with the workmen, and tells the bhikkhus that their only responsibility is to check on whether the work is being done poorly or well.

(2) The donor says that the money will be kept with him/her or with his/her employees, and that the bhikkhus' only responsibility is to inform them of whom the money is to be given to. At present such a donor would be able to set up a checking account for the construction and upkeep of monastery buildings. In this case, the bank would be the steward "indicated by the donor", and the autho-rized bhikkhu signing a check drawing on the fund would be informing the steward of where the money should go. He should not, however, be the one who hands the check over to the payee or payee's repre-sentative. This point will be discussed in more detail under NP 20.

Since the steward in both of these cases is indicated by the donor, the bhikkhus may make as many requests as they like--i.e., in the first case, telling the workers what to do; in the second case, telling the steward or donor who is to be paid--but here again in this second case they should be careful to phrase their requests so as not to violate the rules against trading and buying.

In addition to building funds, it would seem that any charitable fund for schools, hospitals, etc.--such as some wealthy monasteries have--would come under this category, as long as the fund is not for requisites for the Sangha, either as a group or individually.

Fund management. The Commentary states that if a Sangha fund has been set up for a particular requisite, it should as a general rule be used to buy only that requisite. If, however, the Sangha has enough of one kind of lahubhandha--goods that may be shared among the bhikkhus--but not enough for another, the fund for the first kind may be diverted to the second kind by an apalokana-kamma: a formal meeting of the Sangha in which the motion is phrased in one's own words and unanimously accepted.

Funds for lodgings and furniture, though, since they are garu-bhandha (goods that may not be shared among the bhikkhus), may not be diverted to lahubhandha at all. But if there is Sangha furni-ture that is going unused, and is in danger of deteriorating before it gets used, the Sangha may arrange to have it exchanged--using the procedure allowed under NP 20, and making sure not to let it go for less than its full value--and then use the proceeds for lahubhandha. The Commentary adds that proceeds of this sort should be used 'frugally, just enough to keep life going.' In other words, don't use them to splurge on anything excessive.

Summary: When a fund has been set up with a steward indicated by a bhikkhu: Obtaining an article from the fund as a result of having prompted the steward more than the allowable number of times is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

11.Should any bhikkhu have a felt (blanket/rug) made of a mixture containing silk, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

Santhata, defined here as a felt blanket/rug, is a type of cloth described in the texts simply by its method of manufacture: Instead of being woven, it is made by strewing threads over a smooth surface, sprinkling them with a glue-like mixture made from boiled rice, rolling it smooth, and then repeating the process until the felt is thick and strong enough for one's purposes. Although felt made like this can be used for a number of purposes, its major use in the time of the Vibhanga and Commentary seems to be as a small personal rug for sitting or lying down, or as a rough blanket for wearing around oneself when sick or cold. Blanket/rugs like this are still made and used in Kashmir and other parts of India even today, and as the no-offense clauses to this and the following rules show, it is precisely to this type of blanket/rug that these rules apply.

There are three factors for the full offense under this rule:

Object: A felt blanket/rug containing silk threads and intended for one's own use.

Effort: One either makes it oneself, gets someone else to make it, finishes what others have let unfinished, or gets someone else to finish what one has left unfinished.

Result: One obtains it after it is finished (or finishes it, if one is making it oneself).

According to the Commentary, intention and perception are not mitigating factors here. Thus if one is making a felt blanket/rug and silk threads happen to float in on the breeze and land in the felt, one commits an offense all the same. Perhaps the Commentary's interpretation here is why bhikkhus no longer use felt rugs, for there is no way of knowing whether or not there are any stray silk filaments in them which would make them unsuitable for use.

There is a dukkata in the effort of making a blanket/rug with silk mixed in it--or in having it made--and once it is obtained (or finished, if one is making it oneself), it is to be forfeited and the nissaggiya pacittiya offense confessed. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and receiving the blanket/rug in return are the same as in the preced-ing rules. Since there is a dukkata in using any felt blanket/rug made with silk in it, the bhikkhu receiving such a rug in return after forfeit-ing it may use it only in the ways described in the no-offense clauses.

According to the Vibhanga, there is a dukkata in making a blanket/rug with silk mixed in it for another's use; and a dukkata in acquiring or using such a blanket/rug made for someone else.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in making felt with silk mixed in it to use as a canopy, a floor-covering, a wall screen, a pillow or a kneeling mat.

Summary: Making a felt blanket/rug with silk mixed in it for one's own use--or having it made--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

12.Should any bhikkhu have a felt (blanket/rug) made of pure black wool, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The origin story to this rule indicates that a pure black felt blanket/rug was considered stylish at that time, and thus inappro-priate for a bhikkhu's use. This is a recurrent theme throughout the Vinaya: that stylish, luxurious or elegant articles are not in keeping with the bhikkhus' way of life.

All other explanations for this training rule are the same as for the preceding rule, simply replacing "a felt blanket/rug made with silk mixed in it" with "a felt blanket made entirely of black wool."

Summary: Making a felt blanket/rug entirely of black wool for one's own use--or having it made--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

13.When a bhikkhu is making a new felt (blanket/rug), two parts of pure black wool are to be incorporated, a third (part) of white and a fourth of brown. If a bhikkhu should have a new felt (blanket/rug) made without incorporating two parts of pure black wool, a third of white and a fourth of brown, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

This is a continuation of the preceding rule, and its purpose is to set the maximum amount of black wool a bhikkhu may include when making his felt blanket/rug or having it made for his own use. The Vibhanga gives precise measures for how much black, white and brown wool one should use in making the rug, but the Commentary says that these quantities are relative: As long as black wool constitutes no more than half the total amount of wool used, the bhikkhu making the rug incurs no offense.

As in the preceding rules, there is a dukkata in acquiring and using a felt blanket/rug that is more than one-half black wool no matter who it is made for. Thus if a bhikkhu makes such a rug, forfeits it and receives it in return, he may use it only in the ways indicated by the no-offense clauses.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that there is no offense if the rug is more than one-quarter white wool, more than one-quarter brown wool, or made entirely of white wool or of brown. The Sub-commentary here reiterates that the important point is that the rug be no more than one-half black wool. There is also no offense if one is making the felt--or having it made--for a canopy, a floor-covering, a wall screen, a pillow or a kneeling mat.

Summary: Making a felt blanket/rug that is more than one-half black wool for one's own use--or having it made--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

14.When a new felt (blanket/rug) has been made by a bhikkhu, it is to be kept for (at least) six years. If after less than six years he should have another new felt (blanket/rug) made, regardless of whether or not he has disposed of the first, then--unless he has been authorized by the bhikkhus--it is to be forfeited and confessed.

"Now at that time bhikkhus were (each) having a new felt blanket/rug made every year. They were constantly begging, constantly hinting, 'Give wool. We need wool.' People were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'How can these Sakyan contemplatives have a new felt blanket/rug made every year?...The felt blanket/rugs we make for ourselves last five or six years, even though our children wet them and soil them and they get chewed on by rats. But these Sakyan contemplatives have a new felt blanket/rug made every year, and are constantly begging, constantly hinting, 'Give wool. We need wool.'"

There are three factors for an offense here.

Object: A new felt blanket/rug for one's own use.

Effort: One makes it or has it made less than six vassa after one's last one was made, even though one has not been formally authorized by the bhikkhus to do so.

Result: One acquires the rug when it is finished.

The texts are silent on the factor of perception here, which suggests that if a bhikkhu miscounts the passage of years--making a new rug when six years haven't passed even though he thinks they have--he fulfills the factor of effort all the same.

According to the Vibhanga, there is a dukkata in the effort of making the rug or having it made. Once it is obtained (or finished, if one is making it oneself), it is to be forfeited and the nissaggiya pacittiya offense confessed. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and receiving the blanket/rug in return are the same as in the preceding rules. Since the no-offense clauses allow one under these conditions to use a felt blanket/rug made for someone else, it would seem that the rug here , unlike the rugs forbidden by the preceding rules, is not ipso facto unusable as a rug. Thus a bhikkhu who has forfeited his rug under this rule should be able to use it as a blanket/rug after receiving it in return.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if a bhikkhu makes a new felt blanket/rug after six or more years have past; if he makes one for another's use; if he uses one made for someone else; or if he makes felt to use as a canopy, a floor-covering, a wall screen, a pillow or a kneeling mat.

Also, as the rule indicates, there is also no offense if within less than six years he makes a felt blanket/rug for his own use after being authorized to do so by the bhikkhus. The Vibhanga explains this by saying that the Sangha, if it sees fit, may formally give this authori-zation to a bhikkhu who is too ill to do without a new felt blanket/rug before his six years are up. The pattern for this formal act--one motion and one announcement (natti-dutiya-kamma)--is in the Vibhanga.

Summary: Unless one has received authorization to do so from the Sangha, making a felt blanket/rug for one's own use--or having it made--less than six years after one's last one was made is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

15. When a felt sitting rug is being made by a bhikkhu, a piece of old felt a sugata span (25 cm.) on each side is to be incorporated for the sake of discoloring it. If, without incorporating a piece of old felt a sugata span on each side , he should have a new felt sitting rug made, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

A sitting cloth--for protecting his robes from getting soiled by any place where he sits down, and to protect any place where he sits down from being soiled by him--is one of the requisites a bhikkhu is allowed to have. (Mv.VII.16.3) In fact, if he goes without one for more than four months, he incurs a dukkata. (Cv.V.18) Pacittiya 89 gives stipulations for its size, and for the fact that it should have a at least one border piece.

There is some question as to whether the felt sitting rug described in this rule counts as a sitting cloth. The Sub-commentary thinks not, but the definition for sitting cloth under Pacittiya 89 states simply that it "has a border" and since the felt sitting rug also "has a border", it would seem to come under that definition, too.

The Commentary to Pacittiya 89 describes the border piece of a felt sitting rug as follows: "Having made made a felt rug, then on one end in an area of one sugata span, cutting it at two points, one makes three border pieces." Whether these three pieces are to be left flap-ping, or are to be sewed back together, it doesn't say.

According to the Vibhanga, when one is making a felt sitting rug, one should take a piece of old felt--at least one span in diameter or one span square--and then either place it down in one part of the new felt as is, or else shred it up and scatter the pieces throughout the new felt. This, it says, will help to strengthen the new felt.

"Old felt" the Vibhanga defines as worn wrapped around oneself at least once: This is one of the few places that indicate that felt was commonly used as a blanket. The Commentary rewords the Vibhanga's definition, saying "sat on or lied down upon at least once," which--at least in the days of the commentators--was the more common usage. The Commentary adds that, in addition to wanting to discolor the new felt sitting rug and make it stronger, one of the Buddha's purposes in formulating this rule was to teach bhikkhus how to make good use of old, used requisites, so as to maintain the good faith of those who donated them.

Offenses. As with the previous rules, there is a dukkata for the bhikkhu who makes a sitting rug--or has one made--that violates this rule, whether it is for his own use or for that of another; and a nissaggiya pacittiya offense when he acquires the rug thus made for his own use (or finishes it, if he is making it himself). The procedures for forfeiture, confession and receiving the rug in return are the same as in the preceding rules. Since the no-offense clauses here, as under the preceding rule, allow one to use a felt sitting rug made without old felt for the sake of another, it would seem that a bhikkhu, having forfeited his rug, should be able to use it as a sitting rug after receiving it in return.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, being unable to find a large enough piece of old felt to provide the one-span piece, one includes a smaller piece of old felt in the sitting rug; if, being unable to find any old felt at all, one does not include any old felt in the rug; if one makes use of a felt sitting rug made without old felt for the sake of another; or if one is making a canopy, a floor-covering, a wall screen, a pillow or a kneeling mat. It seems logical that there would also be no offense for the bhikkhu making a felt blanket/rug which does not have any border pieces and which he is not planning to use for sitting, but for some reason none of the texts mention this point.

Summary: Making a felt sitting rug for one's own use--or having it made--without incorporating a one-span piece of old felt is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

16. If wool accrues to a bhikkhu as he is going on a journey, he may accept it if he so desires. Once he accepts it, he may carry it by hand--there being no one else to carry it (for him)--three leagues (48 km.=30 miles) at most. Should he carry it further than that, even if there is no one else to carry it for him, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

"At that time wool accrued to a bhikkhu as he was on the road in the Kosalan districts, going to Savatthi. So, tying the wool into a bundle with his upper robe, he went along his way. People seeing him teased him, 'How much did you pay for it, venerable sir? How much will the profit be?'"

There are, in essence, three factors for an offense here: object, effort and intention.

Object. Wool, under this rule, refers to wool that has not been made into goods. () The Commentary explains that wool here thus does not refer to woolen cloth, woolen felt, woolen yarn or even raw wool tied up with a thread, although this last point is in contradiction to the origin story, where the bhikkhu carried his wool tied up with a robe.

The Commentary goes on to say, though, that wool here does refer to even small quantities of 'unmade' wool, such as wool placed in the ear when one has an earache, or wrapped around scissors in their sheath to protect them from rusting, so a bhikkhu should be careful not to travel more than 30 miles (48 km.) with such things.

Effort. This factor includes not only carrying unmade wool more than three leagues oneself, but also placing it in a bundle or vehicle belonging to someone else without his/her knowing about it, and then letting him/her take it more than three leagues. Perception is not a mitigating factor here: If one travels more than three leagues, even if one thinks one hasn't, that fulfills this factor all the same.

Intention. The Vibhanga says that there is no offense for the bhikkhu who, after traveling three leagues, cannot find a proper place to stay, and so carries his wool further until finding a proper place. Thus the offense under this rule is only for a bhikkhu who carries wool past the three-league mark for reasons other than looking for a place to stay.

Non-offenses. In addition to the issue of intention just mentioned, the no-offense clauses say that there is no offense for the bhikkhu who is retrieving lost or stolen wool; for the bhikkhu who carries the wool three leagues and then carries it back; or for the bhikkhu who gets someone else to carry the wool for him.

Summary: Carrying wool which has not been made into cloth or yarn for more than three leagues is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

17.Should any bhikkhu have wool washed, dyed or carded by a bhikkhuni unrelated to him, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The reason behind this rule is expressed succinctly in the following conversation from the origin story:

"Then Mahapajapati Gotami went to the Blessed One, and on approaching, greeting him, stood to one side. As she was stand-ing there, the Blessed One said to her, 'I trust, Gotami, that the bhikkhunis remain uncomplacent, ardent and resolute?'

"'Since when, Lord, is there uncomplacency among the bhik-khunis? The masters--the group of six bhikkhus--keep having the bhikkhunis wash, dye and card wool. The bhikkhunis, washing, dyeing and carding wool, neglect...the training in heightened virtue, the training in heightened awareness and the training in heightened discernment.'"

Wool, here, as in under the preceding rule, refers to wool which has not been made into cloth or yarn. Thus there is no offense for a bhikkhu who gets a bhikkhuni unrelated to him to wash woolen cloth or yarn which has not yet been used.

Otherwise, all the explanations for this training rule are identical with those for NP 4, except that here "beating" is replaced by "carding".

Summary: Getting an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or card wool which has not been made into cloth or yarn is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

18. Should any bhikkhu take gold and silver, or have it taken, or consent to its being deposited (near him), it is to be forfeited and confessed.

As mentioned under NP 10, one of the purposes of this rule is to relieve a bhikkhu of the burden of ownership which comes as the result of accepting gifts of money or having them accepted in one's name. The discourses contain passages, though, which indicate that there are other purposes for this rule as well:

"For whomever gold and silver are suitable, headman, the five strands of sensuality are also suitable. And for whomever the five strands of sensuality are suitable, gold and silver are suitable. You may take it for certain that this is not the way of a contemplative, not the way of a son of the Sakyan." (S.XLII.10)

"Bhikkhus, there are these four stains because of which the sun and moon do not glow, do not shine, are not radiant. What four? Rain clouds...snow clouds...smoke and dust...an eclipse. In the same way, there are these four stains because of which contemplatives and priests do not glow, do not shine, are not radiant. What four? Drinking alcoholic beverages...indulging in sexual intercourse... accepting gold and silver...obtaining requisites through a wrong mode of livelihood." (A.IV.50)

Bhikkhus, in abandoning the use of money, make real their abandonment of worldly pursuits, and show others by example that the struggle for wealth is not the true way to find happiness.

The factors for an offense under this rule are two: object and effort.

Object. The Vibhanga defines "gold" so that it includes anything made of gold. "Silver" it defines to cover coins made of copper, wood or lac, or whatever is used as a medium of exchange in busi-ness. The Commentary adds such examples as bones, pieces of hide, fruit, seeds of trees used as currency, whether they have been stamped with a figure or not. At present, the term would include coins and paper currency, but not checks, credit cards, bank drafts or promis-sory notes, as these--on their own and without further identification of the person carrying them--do not function as true currency.

The Commentary, in discussing this training rule, also gathers a list of items from the Canon which carry a dukkata, rather than a nissaggiya pacittiya, when accepted by a bhikkhu. They include pearls and precious stones, unhusked grain, slaves, farming land, gardens and livestock. For convenience's sake, we will refer to these items from here on in as dukkata objects (dukkata-vatthu), or D.O. for short.

Effort. This factor may be fulfilled by any of three actions:

1) Accepting. According to the K/Commentary, this includes receiving gold or money when it is offered as a gift or picking up gold or money left lying around ownerless. (As the no-offense clauses show, this factor does not cover cases where one picks up money left lying around the monastery or a house where one is visiting if one's purpose is to keep it in safekeeping for the owner. See Pacittiya 84) According to the Commentary, a bhikkhu who accepts money wrapped up in a bolt of cloth would also incur an offense here, which shows that this act includes receiving or taking the money not only with one's body, but also with items connected with the body. Thus accepting money in an envelope or having it placed in a bag on one's shoulder would fulfill this factor as well.

The Vibhanga states that perception is not a mitigating factor. Thus a bhikkhu accepting an envelope which, unbeknownst to him, contains money, would fall under this factor, too.

The K/Commentary adds the stipulation that in the taking there must be some movement of the money from one place to another. It offers no explanation for this point, but it probably refers to cases where money is forced on a bhikkhu, as when he is on alms round and a lay donor, against the bhikkhu's protestations, places money in his bowl. In this case, the bhikkhu could simply stand right there until he gets the donor or someone else to remove the money, and he would be absolved of an offense under this rule.

The commentaries add an extra factor here--the full offense is incurred only if the bhikkhu is taking the money for his own sake--but there is no mention of this in the Vibhanga, and so the added factor does not seem valid. Thus whether the bhikkhu takes the money for himself or for others is not an issue here.

2) Having money accepted. This, according to the K/Commentary, includes getting someone else to do any of the actions covered under accepting, as described above. Examples from the texts include such things as telling the donor to give the money to a steward, telling the donor that so-and-so will take the money for him, telling the steward to take the money, to put it in a donation box or to 'do what he thinks appropriate', or any similar command.

Anything which falls short of a command, though, would not fulfill this factor, as we have already seen under NP 10. Thus simply telling the donor that X is the bhikkhus' steward--or that the monastery's stewards have placed a donation box in such-and-such a place--would not be a factor for an offense here. Also, if the donor leaves money, say, on a table as a gift for a bhikkhu, then if the bhikkhu tells his steward what the donor did and said, without telling the steward to do anything with the money--letting the steward figure things out on his/her own--this too would not incur an offense. The Commentary's discussion of stewards under the next point shows that while a bhikkhu who tells a volunteer steward to put such a donation in a donation box would incur an offense, a bhikkhu who simply points out the donation box would not.

3) Consenting to money being deposited. The Vibhanga defines this action as follows: "He (the donor), saying, 'This is for the master,' places it, and the bhikkhu consents." () According to the K/Commen-tary, "placing" covers two sorts of situations:

(1) The donor places money anywhere in the bhikkhu's presence, and says, "This is for the master;" OR

(2) The donor tells him, "I have some money placed in such-and-such a location. It's yours." (One of the implications of this second case is that any monastery with a donation box should make clear that money left in the box is being placed with the steward.)

"Consenting" in either of these cases, says the Commentary, means that one does not refuse either in thought, word or deed. Refusing in thought means thinking, "This is not proper for me." Refusing in word means telling the donor that such a gift is not allowable. Refus-ing in deed means making a gesture to the same effect. If one refuses in any of these ways--e.g., one wants to accept the money, but tells the donor that it is not allowable; or one says nothing, but simply reminds oneself that such gifts are not proper to accept--one absolves oneself from an offense here.

The question of whether or not it is best to express one's refusal outwardly lies beyond the scope of the Vinaya, and often depends on the situation. Ideally, one should inform the donor, so that he/she will know enough not to present such gifts in the future, but there are also cases where the donor is still new to the idea of rules, and will simply be offended if the bhikkhu objects to what he/she means as a well-intentioned gesture. This is thus a matter where a bhikkhu should use his discretion.

The Commentary contains a long discussion of what a bhikkhu should do if, after he refuses such a donation, the donor goes off leaving it there anyway: If someone else comes along and asks the bhikkhu, "What is this?" the bhikkhu may tell him/her what he and the donor said, but may not ask him/her to do anything about it. If the person volunteers to put the money into safekeeping, the bhikkhu may point out a safe place, but may not tell him/her to put it there.

Once the money is in a safe place, one may point it out to other people--one's steward, for instance--but may not tell anyone to take it. The Commentary gives directions for how to arrange an exchange with such money so as not to violate NP 19 & 20, but I will save this part of the discussion until we come to those rules.

The Vibhanga's definition of the action of "placing" money for a bhikkhu indicates that in this case the question of who the money is for does make a difference, since the nature of the donor's action is defined by what he or she says. If the donor means the money for the bhikkhu, and the bhikkhu accepts, that fulfills the factor here. This covers cases where the donor says, "This is for you," or "This is for you to give to X."

If the donor simply says, "This is for the Sangha," or "This is for Bhikkhu Y," and Bhikkhu X consents to its being placed down near him, then according to the Commentary, X incurs a dukkata. It does not say, though, what should be done with the money, aside from the fact that any bhikkhu who uses anything bought with it also incurs a dukkata. Its discussion of the following rule, though, would seem to imply that it should be returned to the original donor.

If money for Bhikkhu Y is placed near Bhikkhu X in this way, and Y in turn accepts the donation for himself, then of course Y would incur the full offense under this rule. The Commentary's discussion under NP 10 indicates that if money for the Sangha is placed near Bhikkhu X, the Sangha is said to have accepted it only when all members of the Sangha unanimously agree to it. If one member disagrees, he saves all the other members from committing an offense--except for X, who still has his dukkata.

The Commentary here also says that a bhikkhu who accepts monetary donations "placed nearby" him for monastery buildings incurs a dukkata as well. This refers to cases where the donor says, "This is for the Sangha to use in building such-and-such," and places the money down next to the bhikkhu. As the Commentary itself says under NP 10, if the donor does not mention the name of the bhikkhu or the Sangha as custodians or recipients of the funds, the donations are not to be refused. Rather, they are to be left there and the steward told of what the donor said.

Forfeiture and confession. A bhikkhu who accepts money or gold, has it accepted or consents to its being placed down for him must forfeit the money and confess the offense in the midst of a formal meeting of the Sangha. The formula for forfeiture is given in Appendix VI. This is one of the few rules where the offender may not confess the offense to an individual bhikkhu or group of less than four. Once he has forfeited the money, the Sangha is not to return it to him, as there is no way a bhikkhu is allowed to possess money.

If a lay person then comes along, the bhikkhus should tell him, "Look at this." If he asks, "What should be bought with this"' the bhikkhus are not to tell him to buy anything, although they may tell him what in general is allowable for bhikkhus, such as the five tonics, as under NP 23 below. If he takes the money and purchases them, all the bhikkhus except for the one who originally accepted the money may make use of them. If it so happens that one of the bhikkhus tells him explicitly to buy something, then the Commentary says that the item(s) bought this way may be used by all the bhikkhus except for the original offender and the bhikkhu who gave the order to buy. If the lay person does not volunteer to buy anything with the money, the bhikkhus should tell him to get rid of it.

If he does not get rid of it, they are to choose one of their number as the "money-remover", by means of the formal act--one motion and one announcement (natti-dutiya-kamma)--given in the Vibhanga. The money-remover's duty is to throw the money away without tak--ing note of where it falls. If he does take note, he incurs a dukkata. The Commentary recommends that, "Closing his eyes, he should throw it into a river, over a cliff or into a jungle thicket without paying attention to where it falls, disinterested as if it were excrement."

None of the texts mention what a bhikkhu is to do with dukkata objects he has received, but as we shall see under the following rule, the Commentary would seem to suggest that he return them to their donors.

Non-offenses. As mentioned above, there is no offense for the bhikkhu who finds money lying around the monastery or in a house he is visiting, and he puts it away in safe keeping for the owner. This point is discussed in detail under Pacittiya 84.

Summary: Taking gold or money, having someone else take it, or consenting to its being placed down as a gift for oneself is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

19. Should any bhikkhu engage in various types of monetary exchange, it (the income) is to be forfeited and confessed.

There are two factors for an offense here: object and effort.

Object. The Vibhanga defines money in the same terms it uses to define gold and silver in the preceding rule: any type of gold, whether shaped into an ornament or not; and any coins or currency used in business exchange.

Effort. The Vibhanga's description of the kind of exchange covered by this rule differs from that given in the Commentary, so it is best to discuss them separately.

The Vibhanga's interpretation. Monetary exchange refers primarily to the type of business and speculation a gold dealer would engage in--exchanging currency, trading gold ore for gold shaped into orna-ments or vice versa, trading gold ore for gold ore, or gold ornaments for gold ornaments--but the Vibhanga's discussion of the factor of perception shows that the factor of effort here includes any exchange in which the bhikkhu ends up with gold or money as the result of the exchange. Thus it would cover cases where a bhikkhu sells any kind of item--allowable or unallowable--for money.

At first glance, this would seem redundant with the preceding rule against receiving money, and the following rule, against engaging in trade, but actually it closes a number of loopholes in those rules. In the preceding rule, a bhikkhu may point out a steward to a person who brings money intended for him; and in the following rule he can, if he words it right, propose a trade or tell a steward to arrange a trade for him. Thus, given just those two rules, it would be possible for a bhikkhu using 'proper' procedures to have his steward engage in currency speculation and other money-making activities without incurring an offense.

This rule, though, includes no such exceptions for 'wording things right (kappiya vohara)', and so closes those loopholes as far as this type of trading is concerned. As a result, a bhikkhu may not express a desire to his steward that he/she sell something belonging to him, or take funds dedicated for his use and invest them for monetary return. And if the bhikkhu is going abroad, he must leave it up to his steward to figure out that his funds may have to be exchanged for foreign currency if they are going to be of any use.

The Commentary's interpretation. According to the Commentary, monetary exchange refers to any trade in which money is involved--whether as the item the bhikkhu brings into the trade, gets out of the trade or both. Buddhaghosa states that this interpretation is based on a passage which is not in the Vibhanga but which logically should be. The Sub-commentary supports him, explaining that if monetary exchange covers trades in which money forms one side of the trade, it shouldn't matter which side of the trade it is on.

This, however, contradicts a number of points in the Vibhanga. (1) Its table of the possible actions covered by this rule includes only cases where the outcome of the trade for the bhikkhu is money. As we noted in the Introduction, we have to trust that the Vibhanga arrangers knew what was and was not an offense under a certain rule, and that if they had meant the rule to cover more than the alternatives listed in the table, they would have included them. (2) In the Vibhanga's discussion of how the forfeiture is to be conducted, it consistently refers to the offender as the 'one who purchased money', and to the bhikkhu who throws the forfeited object away as the 'one who removes the money.' (3) If monetary exchange covers cases where the bhikkhu uses money to buy allowable things, then the discussion of how a bhikkhu could get his steward to use money rightfully placed with the steward to buy such things would have been included under this rule; instead, it is included under the following rule. All of this seems to indicate that the Commentary is on shaky ground when it tries to force its interpretation on the Vibhanga here.

Still, the Commentary's interpretation is widely followed and fairly complex, so it will be good to discuss it in some detail here.

As under the preceding rule, the Commentary divides articles into three sorts:

nissaggiya objects (N.O.), i.e., articles such as gold and money, that entail a nissaggiya pacittiya when they are accepted, dukkata objects (D.O.), articles such as precious stones, unhusked grain, land, slaves and livestock that entail a dukkata when they are accepted;

allowable objects (A.O.), articles that a bhikkhu may rightfully accept and possess.

It then works out the following scheme to cover all possible sorts of trade involving these objects:

Using	to buy	results in
N.O. >	N.O.	a nissaggiya pacittiya
N.O. >	D.O.	a nissaggiya pacittiya
N.O. >	A.O.	a nissaggiya pacittiya
D.O. >	N.O.	a nissaggiya pacittiya
D.O. >	D.O.	a dukkata*
D.O. >	A.O.	a dukkata*
A.O. >	N.O.	a nissaggiya pacittiya
A.O. >	D.O.	a dukkata*
A.O. >	A.O.	a nissaggiya pacittiya under NP 20

The trades marked with asterisks point out one of the anomalies of the Commentary's interpretation: Why trades involving D.O. should incur only a dukkata, while A.O. > A.O. trades should incur a nissaggiya pacittiya is hard to fathom.

At any rate, to continue with the Commentary's explanations: N.O. > A.O. trades cover two possible cases, depending on whether the money was obtained properly or improperly under the preceding rule. If improperly, the object bought with the money is unallowable for all bhikkhus. This holds whether the bhikkhu makes the purchase himself or a steward makes it for him. The only way the item can be made allowable is to have an equal sum of money returned to the original donor and the item returned to the person who sold it, and then arrange for a proper exchange, as allowed under the following rule.

If, however, a bhikkhu engages in a N.O. > A.O. trade using money obtained properly under the preceding rule, the item bought is unallowable only for him, but allowable for other bhikkhus once he has forfeited it. If N.O. > A.O. exchanges really were covered by this rule, though, this would contradict the Vibhanga, which insists that the item obtained as a result of this rule either has to be given to a lay person or thrown away. Thus it seems better to follow the Vibhanga in treating cases of this sort under the following rule.

The Commentary makes no mention of what should be done with items resulting from trades that carry a dukkata here, but its discussion of how to 'undo' a trade so as to make the item allowable suggests the following scheme:

For a D.O > D.O. trade: Return the object bought to the person who sold it, return the original object to the donor, and confess the offense.

For a D.O. > A.O. trade: Return the object bought to the person who sold it, return the original object to the donor, and confess the offense. If one wants to, one may then approach the person who sold the allowable object and arrange a proper trade in accordance with the following rule.

For an A.O. > D.O. trade: Return the object bought to the person who sold it and confess the offense.

As an intellectual exercise, the Commentary considers the question of a trade that results in an A.O. that can never be made allowable, and comes up with the following scenario: A bhikkhu takes money improperly obtained under the preceding rule, uses it to get iron mined, smelted and made into a bowl. Since there is no way to undo these transactions--the iron can never be returned to its state as ore--there is no way any bhikkhu can ever possibly make use of the iron no matter what is done with it.

As mentioned above, the Commentary's explanations here contra-dict the Vibhanga on a number of points, and contain a number of anomalies as well. It seems preferable to treat a number of cases it mentions here--N.O. > D.O., N.O. > A.O., D.O. > D.O., D.O. > A.O., A.O. > D.O.. or in other words, any trade in which the resulting object is an allowable or a dukkata object--under the following rule instead.

Forfeiture and confession. When a bhikkhu has obtained gold or money in violation of this rule he is to forfeit it in the midst of a formal meeting of the Sangha, following the procedures explained under the preceding rule. The Pali formula for forfeiture is in Appendix VI.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga's no-offense clauses contain nothing but the blanket exemptions mentioned under Parajika 1.

Summary: Obtaining gold or money through trade is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

20. Should any bhikkhu engage in various types of trade, (the article obtained) is to be forfeited and confessed.

"Now at that time Ven. Upananda the Sakyan had become skilled at robe making. Having made an outer robe of old rags, having dyed it well and stitched it nicely, he wore it. A certain wanderer, wearing a very expensive cloak, went to where he was staying and on arrival said to him, 'Your outer robe is beautiful, my friend. Give it to me in exchange for this cloak.'

"'Do you know (what you are doing), my friend?'

"'Yes, I know.'

"'Very well, then.' And he gave him the robe.

"Then the wanderer went to the wanderers' park wearing the outer robe. The other wanderers said to him, 'Your outer robe is beautiful, friend. Where did you get it?'

"'I got it in exchange for my cloak.'

"'But how long will this outer robe last you? That cloak of yours was better.'

"So the wanderer, thinking, 'It's true what the wanderers said. How long will this outer robe last me? That cloak of mine was better,' went to where Ven. Upananda the Sakyan was staying, and on arrival said, 'Here is your outer robe, my friend. Give me my cloak.'

"'But didn't I ask you, "Do you know what you are doing?" I won't give it to you.'

"So the wanderer was annoyed and offended and spread it about, 'Even a householder will give another householder the item he regrets (trading). How can one who has gone forth not give (extend the same courtesy) to one who has gone forth?'"

As we noted under NP 10, one of the purposes of this rule is to relieve bhikkhus of the responsibilities that come with making trades--the responsibility of having to get a fair price for one's goods and at the same time offering a fair deal to the person making the trade.

The factors for an offense here are two: object and effort.

Object. The Vibhanga defines "various types of trade" as covering deals involving the four requisites, "even a lump of powder, a tooth-cleaner or unwoven thread"--these being its standard examples of objects with the least possible material value. The Commentary interprets this as limiting this rule to deals involving nothing but allowable objects (A.O. > A.O.), but there is nothing in the Vibhanga to suggest that this is necessarily so. The emphasis in the Vibhanga seems to be that this rule covers even allowable objects of the least possible value, and all the more so more valuable and restricted objects. In fact, since the Vibhanga explicitly limits the preceding rule to trades which result in money for the bhikkhu (N.O. > N.O.; D.O. > N.O.; A.O. > N.O.), it seems best to interpret this rule as covering all types of trade not covered in that rule:

N.O. > A.O.; N.O. > D.O.;

D.O. > D.O.; D.O. > A.O.:

A.O. > D.O.; and A.O. > A.O.

The Vibhanga and commentaries also mention that the goods one offers in trade are one's own goods, but they do not mention explicitly whether or not this also includes goods which belong to someone else but which have been placed on trust in one's keeping (such as monastery funds placed under the supervision of a monastery offi-cial). Since the no-offense clauses make no exemptions for a bhikkhu who trades using goods received on trust from someone else, though, it would seem that such cases do fall under this rule as well.

Effort. "Engaging in trading," according to the Vibhanga, involves two steps:

(1) The bhikkhu proposes an exchange, saying, "Give this for that," or "Take this for that," or "Exchange this for that," or "Purchase this for that."

(2) The goods exchange hands, the bhikkhu's goods ending up with the other person, and the other person's goods ending up with the bhikkhu.

The first step incurs a dukkata; both steps together, a nissaggiya pacittiya. Perception is not a mitigating factor here: If a bhikkhu manages an exchange in a way which he thinks avoids a penalty under this rule but in fact doesn't (see below), he incurs the full offense all the same.

Forfeiture and confession. Once a bhikkhu has received an article from trading, he is to forfeit it either to an individual bhikkhu, to a group of two or three, or to a full Sangha of four or more. Only then may he confess the offense. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and the return of the article are the same as under NP 1. The Pali formula for forfeiture is in Appendix VI. The Vibhanga makes no mention of what the bhikkhu may and may not do with after receiving it in return, but we may borrow a page from the Commen-tary's discussion of the preceding rule and say that:

If the exchange was N.O. > D.O., he should return the D.O. to its seller. If the N.O. was properly obtained under NP 18, there is nothing further to be done. If not, the bhikkhu should confess the offense for violating that rule. (If the the purchase price is refunded, the bhikkhu should forfeit it in the midst of the Sangha. If not, he should simply confess the pacittiya offense.)

If the exchange was N.O. > A.O., then if the N.O. was obtained in violation of NP 18, no bhikkhu may make use of the A.O. unless it is returned to the seller, the price of the article is turned over to the original donor of the money, and the A.O. is then repurchased in a way which does not violate this rule. (Again, if the seller refunds the purchase price, the offender should forfeit it in the midst of the Sangha. If not, he should simply confess the pacittiya offense.)

If the N.O in this case was properly obtained, then the purchased article is allowable for other bhikkhus, but not for the offender. (Some might object that if the N.O. was properly obtained it should be treated as A.O., but we must remember that a bhikkhu who orders his steward to use money to buy an object is assuming ownership of the money, which goes against the spirit of NP 18 and the protocol of having a steward in the first place.)

If the exchange was D.O. > D.O., the bhikkhu should return the purchased article to the seller and the original article (if the seller returns it to him) to the original donor.

If the exchange was D.O. > A.O., the purchased article is not allow-able for any bhikkhu unless it is returned to the seller, the D.O. is returned to the original donor, and the A.O. is then repurchased in a way which does not violate this rule.

If the exchange was A.O. > D.O., the bhikkhu should return the purchased article to the seller.

If the exchange was A.O. > A.O., the bhikkhu may make use of the article as he likes.

If the exchange was wages in payment for services rendered, the Commentary notes that there is no way the bhikkhu can rightfully get the payment back, so he should simply confess a pacittiya offense.

Non-offenses. In the origin story to NP 5, the Buddha allows bhikkhus to trade allowable articles with other bhikkhus, bhikkhunis, female probationers, and male or female novices. The present rule thus covers trades made only with people who are not one's co-religionists.

As for trades with people who are not one's co-religionists, the Vibhanga here adds that a bhikkhu commits no offense--

if he asks the price of an object;

if he tells a steward (wording the request properly, as under NP 10); or if he tells the seller, "I have this. I have need of such-and-such," and then lets the seller arrange the exchange as he/she sees fit.

This last point may seem like a lot of hair-splitting, but we must remember that if a trade is arranged in this way, the bhikkhu is absolved from any responsibility for the fairness of the deal, which seems to be the whole point of the rule.

The Commentary, in discussing these exemptions raises the following points:

1) A bhikkhu who tries to avoid the technicalities of what is defined as engaging in trading by saying simply, "Give this. Take that" may do so only with his close relatives. Otherwise, telling a lay person to take one's belongings as his/her own is a "theft of faith" (saddha-deyya)--i.e., a misuse of the donations that lay supporters have sacrificed for the bhikkhu's use. (See Mv.VIII.22.1) On the other hand, telling an unrelated lay person to give something is a form of begging, which carries a dukkata unless the lay person has invited one to ask in the first place. (From this we may deduce that bhikkhus should not bargain after having asked the price of a good or service--e.g., a taxi fare--even in situations where bargaining is the norm.)

2) A bhikkhu desiring to get an article may tell his steward, "Having taken that, give (the seller) this." This, however, contradicts other passages in the Commentary itself, in which this form of speech is said to violate this rule when spoken directly to the seller. Since the Vibhanga includes orders to purchase an item as coming under this rule, it would seem that only the forms of speech allowed under NP 10--"I have need of such-and-such;" "I want such-and-such"--would be allowed under the no-offense clauses here as well.

3) Under the previous rule, the Commentary mentioned that a bhikkhu engaging in an otherwise allowable trade for profit incurs a dukkata. Here it says that if a bhikkhu, proposing a trade by wording it right (kappiya vohara), deceives the seller as to the value of his goods, he is to be treated under Parajika 2.

4) If a bhikkhu goes with his steward to a store, and sees that the steward is getting a bad deal, he may simply tell the steward, "Don't take it."

5) The Commentary to NP 10 describes how a bhikkhu may make a purchase when his steward has left funds in safe-keeping on the bhikkhu's premises, but is not around to arrange a trade when, say, a bowl-seller comes along. The bhikkhu may tell the seller, "I want this bowl, and there are funds of equal value here, but there is no steward to make them allowable." If the seller volunteers to make them allowable, the bhikkhu may show him where they are, but may not tell him how much to take. If the seller takes too much, the bhikkhu may cancel the sale by saying, "I don't want your bowl after all."

In general it is not a wise policy to have funds left for safe-keeping on one's premises--a Community that allows it exposes itself to the dangers of robbery and assault--but the Commentary's discussion of this point seems less interested in describing ideal behavior than in drawing where the line between an offense and no offense lies.

Special cases. 1) The Bhikkhunis' Nissaggiya Pacittiya rules 4-10 show that if a lay donor has given money to a store owner to pay for whatever a bhikkhuni requests from the store, the bhikkhuni may take advantage of the arrangement without incurring an offense. If the donor stipulates that this arrangement applies only to certain things, or to things worth a certain amount, the bhikkhuni may take only those things which fall under the stipulation: This is the point of the rules. In effect, what this is doing is making the storeowner the bhikkhuni's steward. Such an arrangement would thus also seem allowable for bhikkhus, as long as they word their requests to the store owner properly, as advised under NP 10.

2) As mentioned under NP 18, checks, credit cards, bank drafts and traveler's checks do not count as gold or money, but any trade arranged with them would come under this rule. With checks, the point where the full offense is committed is when the bhikkhu hands the check over to the seller--or tells his steward to hand it over--in exchange for goods or services. Simply signing a check does not come under this rule. Thus a monastic official responsible for monas-tery building funds of the sort discussed in the Commentary to NP 10--where the donor makes the bhikkhu(s) responsible for saying who money is to be given to--may sign checks drawing on the fund without incurring an offense here, unless he hands the check over to the seller or tells the steward, "Use this to buy X."

Similarly with credit cards: The offense is committed when the bhikkhu hands the signed credit card receipt--or has it handed--to the seller. The receipt is an acknowledgement of goods purchased or services rendered, which in the context of the card holder's agreement with the credit card company is his promise to repay the loan he is making on the company. This promise is what he is trading with the seller.

Summary: Engaging in trade with anyone except one's co-religionists is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

21. An extra alms bowl may be kept ten days at most. Beyond that, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

Alms bowls. This rule deals only with alms bowls that are fit to be determined for use. According to the Commentary, this means any that are--

1) made of the proper material;

2) the proper size;

3) fully paid for;

4) properly fired; and

5) not damaged beyond repair.

Material. In the Cullavagga (V.8.2 & V.9.1), the Buddha allows two kinds of alms bowls--made of clay and made of iron--and forbids eleven: made either of wood, gold, silver, pearl, beryl, crystal, bronze, glass, tin, lead or copper. Using the Great Standards, it has recently been decided that stainless steel bowls are allowable, but aluminum bowls not. In the time of the Buddha, clay bowls were the more common. At present, iron and steel bowls are.

Size. The Vibhanga contains a discussion of three proper sizes for a bowl--the medium size containing twice as much volume as the small, and the large twice as much as the medium--but they are based on measurements which are not known with any precision at present. The author of the Vinaya Mukha reports having experi-mented with various sizes of bowls based on a passage in the story of Mendaka in the Dhammapada Commentary. His conclusion: a small bowl is just a little larger than a human skull, and a medium bowl approximately 27 1/2 English inches (70 cm.) in circumference, or about 8.75 inches (22.5 cm.) in diameter. He did not try making a large bowl. Any size larger than the large size or smaller than the small is inappropriate; any size in between falls under this rule.

Fully paid for. According to the Commentary, if a bowl-maker makes a gift of a bowl, it counts as fully paid for. If a bowl has been delivered to a bhikkhu but has yet to be fully paid for it may not be determined, and does not come under this rule until paid for in full.

Fired. The Commentary states that a clay bowl must be fired twice before it can be determined, to make sure it is properly hardened; and an iron bowl five times, to prevent it from rusting. Since stainless steel does not rust it need not be fired, but the accepted practice is to find some way to make it grey--either by painting it on the outside or firing the whole bowl with leaves which will give it a smoky color--so that it will not stand out.

Not damaged beyond repair. According to the Commentary, a clay bowl is damaged beyond repair if it has at least ten inches (finger-breadths) of cracks in it, the smallest of the cracks being at least two inches long. (Cracks less than two inches long are said not to merit mending, and so do not count.) If a bowl has fewer cracks than that, they should be mended either with tin wire, sap (but for some reason not pure pine sap) or a mixture of sugar cane syrup and powdered stone. Other materials not to be used for repair are beeswax and sealing wax. If the total number of countable cracks equals ten inches or more, the bowl becomes a non-bowl, and the owner is entitled to ask for a new one.

As for iron and steel bowls, a hole in the bowl large enough to let a millet grain pass through is enough to make the determination lapse, but not enough to make the bowl a non-bowl. The bhikkhu should plug the hole--or have a blacksmith plug it--with powdered metal or a tiny metal plug polished smooth with the surface of the bowl, and then re-determine the bowl for use.

If the hole is small enough to be plugged in this way, then no matter how many such holes there are in the bowl, they do not make it a non-bowl, and the bhikkhu should mend it and continue using it. If, however, there is even one hole so large that the metal used to plug it cannot be polished smooth with the surface of the rest of the bowl, the tiny crevices in the patch will collect food. This makes it unfit for use, and the owner is entitled to ask for a new one to replace it.

An extra alms bowl, according to the Vibhanga, is any which has not yet been determined for use or placed under shared ownership. Since a bhikkhu may have only one bowl determined for use at any one time, he should place any additional bowls he receives under dual ownership if he plans to keep them on hand. (The procedures for placing bowls under determination and dual ownership, and for rescinding their determination and dual ownership, are given in Appendices IV & V.)

Effort. According to the Commentary, once a bowl belonging to a bhikkhu fulfills all the requirements for a determinable bowl, he is responsible for it even if he has not yet received it into his keeping. For example, if a blacksmith promises to make him a bowl and send word when it is finished, the bhikkhu is responsible for the bowl as soon as he hears word from the blacksmith's messenger that the bowl is ready, even though he has yet to receive it. If the blacksmith, prior to making the bowl, promises to send it when it is done, then the bhikkhu is not responsible for it until the blacksmith's messenger brings it to him. (All of this assumes that the bowl is already fully paid for.)

If, within ten days after becoming responsible for a new bowl, a bhikkhu does not determine it for use, place it under dual ownership, abandon it (give it or throw it away), or if the bowl is not lost, stolen, damaged beyond repair or taken on trust, then on the tenth dawn after he receives it he incurs the full offense under this rule.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Even if the bhikkhu thinks that ten days have not passed when they have, or if he thinks that the bowl is damaged beyond repair or placed under dual ownership, etc., when it isn't, he incurs the penalty all the same.

Forfeiture and confession. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the bowl are the same as under NP 1. The Pali formulae to use in forfeiting and returning the bowl are given in Appendix VI. As with the rules concerning robe cloth, the bowl must be returned to the offender after he has confessed his offense. Not to return it incurs a dukkata. Once the bowl is returned, the ten-day countdown starts all over again.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if within ten days the bhikkhu determines the bowl for use, places it under dual ownership, abandons it, loses it, or if the bowl is stolen, damaged beyond repair or taken on trust.

Summary: Keeping an alms bowl for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it under dual ownership is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

22. Should a bhikkhu with an alms bowl having less than five mends ask for another new bowl, it is to be forfeited and confessed. The bowl is to be forfeited by the bhikkhu to the company of bhikkhus. That company of bhikkhus' final bowl should be presented to the bhikkhu, (saying,) "This, bhikkhu, is your bowl. It is to be kept until broken." This is the proper procedure here.

"Now at that time a certain potter had invited the bhikkhus, saying, 'I will supply a bowl for whichever one of the masters needs a bowl.' So the bhikkhus, knowing no moderation, asked for many bowls. Those with small bowls asked for large ones. Those with large ones asked for small ones. The potter, making many bowls for the bhikkhus, could not make other goods for sale. (As a result,) he could not support himself, and his wife and children suffered."

According to the Commentary, the phrase, a bowl "having less than five mends" refers to one that is not beyond repair, as explained under the preceding rule. Thus this rule does not apply to a bhikkhu whose bowl is beyond repair: As the K/Commentary notes, whether or not the damage in his bowl is actually mended is not an issue here.

A bhikkhu whose bowl is not beyond repair incurs a dukkata in asking for a new bowl, and a nissaggiya pacittiya in receiving it.

Forfeiture, confession and bowl exchange. Once a bhikkhu has received a bowl in violation of this rule, he must forfeit it and confess the offense in the midst of the Community. (See Appendix VI for the Pali formula used in forfeiture.) He then receives the Community's "final bowl" to use instead of the new one he has forfeited.

The Community's final bowl is selected in the following way: Each bhikkhu coming to the meeting to witness the offender's forfeiture and confession must bring the bowl he has determined for his own use. If a bhikkhu has an inferior bowl in his possession--either extra or placed under dual ownership--he is not to determine that bowl and take it to the meeting in hopes of getting a more valuable one in the exchange which is to take place. To do so incurs a dukkata.

Once the bhikkhus have assembled, the offender forfeits his bowl and confesses the offense. The Community, following the pattern of one motion and one announcement (natti-dutiya-kamma) given in the Vibhanga, then chooses one of its members as bowl exchanger. The bowl exchanger's duty is to take the forfeited bowl and show it to the most senior bhikkhu, who is to choose whichever of the two bowls pleases him more--his own or the new one. If the new bowl is preferable to his own, and yet he does not take it out of sympathy for the offender, he incurs a dukkata. The K/Commentary and Sub-commentary add that if he does not prefer the new bowl, there is no offense in not taking it.

Once the most senior bhikkhu has taken his choice, the remaining bowl is then shown to the bhikkhu second in seniority, who repeats the process, and so on down the line to the most junior bhikkhu. The bowl exchanger then takes the bowl left over from this last bhikkhu's choice--the least desirable bowl belonging to that company of bhikkhus--and presents it to the offender and tells him to determine it for his use and care for it as best he can.

If the offender treats it improperly--putting in a place where it might get damaged, using it in the wrong sort of way--or tries to get rid of it, thinking, "How can this bowl be lost or destroyed or broken," he incurs a dukkata.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga states that a bhikkhu whose bowl is not beyond repair incurs no penalty if he asks for a new bowl from relatives or from people who have invited him to ask, or if he gets a new bowl with his own resources. He is also allowed to ask for a bowl for the sake of another, which--following the Commentary to NP 6--means that Bhikkhu X may ask for a bowl for Y only if he asks from his own relatives or people who have invited him to ask for a bowl OR if he asks from Y's relatives or people who have invited Y to ask. Asking for and receiving a bowl for Y from people other than these would incur the full offense.

Summary: Asking for a new alms bowl when one's current bowl is not beyond repair is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

23.There are these tonics to be taken by sick bhikkhus: ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, sugar/molasses. Having been received, they are to be used from storage seven days at most. Beyond that, they are to be forfeited and confessed.

Tonics. The five tonics mentioned in this rule form one of four classes of edibles grouped according to the time period within which they may be eaten after being received. The other three--food, juice drinks and medicines--are discussed in detail at the beginning of the Food Chapter in the pacittiya rules. Here is the story of how this group came to be a special class:

"Then as the Blessed One was alone in seclusion, this line of reasoning occurred to him: 'At present the bhikkhus, afflicted by the autumn disease, bring up the conjey they have drunk and the food they have eaten. Because of this they are thin, wretched, unattractive and jaundiced, their bodies covered with veins. What if I were to allow medicine for them--which would be both medicine and agreed to be medicine for the world, and serve as food, yet would not be considered gross (substantial) food.'

"Then this thought occurred to him: 'There are these five tonics--ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey, sugar/molasses--which are both medicine and agreed to be medicine for the world, and serve as food yet would not be considered gross food. What if I were now to allow the bhikkhus, having accepted them at the right time (from dawn to noon), to consume them at the right time'....

"Now at that time bhikkhus, having accepted the five tonics at the right time, consumed them at the right time. Because of this they could not stomach even their ordinary coarse meals, much less greasy ones. As a result, afflicted both by the autumn disease and this loss of appetite for food, they became even more thin and wretched...So the Blessed One, for this cause, for this reason, having given a Dhamma talk, addressed the bhikkhus: 'I allow you, bhikkhus, having accepted the five tonics, to consume them both at the right time and at the wrong time (from noon to dawn).'" (Mv.VI.1)

The Vibhanga defines the five tonics as follows:

Ghee (butter oil) made from the milk of any animal whose flesh is allowable for bhikkhus to eat (see the introduction to the Food Chapter in the pacittiya rules).

Fresh butter, again, made from the milk of any animal whose flesh is allowable. None of the Vinaya texts go into detail on how fresh butter is made, but the Bhumija Discourse (M.126) describes the process as "having sprinkled curds in a pot, one twirls them with a churn." Fresh butter of this sort is still made in India today by taking a small churn--looking like an orange with alternate sections removed, attached to a small stick--and twirling it in curds, all the while sprinkling them with water. The fresh butter--mostly milk fat plus some milk solids--coagulates on the churn, and when the fresh butter is removed what is left in the pot is diluted buttermilk. Fresh butter, unlike creamery butter--made by churning cream--may be stored unrefrigerated in bottles for several days even in the heat of India without going rancid.

Arguing by the Great Standards, creamery butter would obviously come under fresh butter here. A more controversial topic is cheese.

In Mahavagga VI.34.21, the Buddha allows bhikkhus to consume five products of the cow: milk, curds, buttermilk, fresh butter and ghee. Apparently, cheese--curds which have been heated to evaporate their liquid content and then cured with or without mold--was not known in those days, but it seems proper to include it under one of the five. The question is which one. Some have argued that it should come under fresh butter, since the composition is similar--milk fat and solids derived from curds. Others have argued that it should come under curds, as it generally regarded to be more of a gross food. Since the texts give no guidance here, the best policy would seem to be to follow the views of the Community to which one belongs.

Oil, according to the Vibhanga, includes sesame oil, mustard seed oil, "honey tree" oil, castor oil and oil from tallow. The Mahavagga (VI.2.1) allows oil made from five kinds of tallow: bear, fish, alligator (shark?), pig and donkey tallow. Since bear meat is one of the kinds normally unallowable for bhikkhus, the Sub-commentary interprets this list as meaning oil from the tallow of any animal whose flesh is allowable--and from any animal whose flesh, if eaten, carries a dukkata--is allowable here. Since human flesh, if eaten, carries a thullaccaya, oil from human fat is not allowed. The Commentary adds that oil made from any plants not listed in the Vibhanga carries a dukkata if kept more than seven days.

Honey means the honey of bees, although the Commentary lists two species of bee--cirika, long and with wings, and tumbala, large, black and with hard wings--whose honey it says is very viscous and ranks as a medicine, and not one of the five tonics.

Sugar/molasses the Vibhanga defines simply as essence of sugar cane. The Commentary interprets this as meaning not only sugar and molasses, but also fresh sugar cane juice. The Vinaya Mukha disagrees here, saying that sugar cane juice, if kept overnight, can quickly turn into alcohol, and so should be classed as a juice drink. The Commentary also says that sugar or molasses made from any fruit which is classed as a food--e.g., coconut, date palm, sugar beet etc.--ranks as a food and not as a tonic, but it is hard to guess at its reasoning here, since sugar cane itself is also classed as a food. The Vinaya Mukha seems more correct in using the Great Standards to say that all forms of sugar and molasses, no matter what the source, would be included here. Thus artificial sweeteners would also come under this rule.

According to Mv.VI.16.1, even if the sugar has a little flour mixed in with it to make it firmer--as sometimes happens in sugar cubes and blocks of palm sugar--it is still classed as a tonic.

Proper use. According to the Commentary, any tonic received in the morning may be eaten with food that morning. For the rest of the seven days, it may be eaten only if not taken with food. Any tonic received in the afternoon may not be eaten mixed with food at any time at all.

Also, the Commentary says at one point, one may take the tonic at any time during those seven days regardless of whether or not one is ill. At another point, though, it says that one may take the tonic after the morning of the day on which it is received only if one has a reason. This statement the Sub-commentary explains as meaning that any reason suffices--e.g., hunger, weakness--as long as one is not taking the tonic for nourishment as food. In other words, one may take enough to assuage one's hunger, but not to fill oneself up.

Mv.VI.27, though, contains stipulations for the use of sugar. If one is ill, one may take it as-is at any time during the seven days; if not, then one must take it mixed with water after noon of the first day.

Forfeiture and confession. If a bhikkhu keeps a tonic past the seventh dawn after receiving it, he is to forfeit it and confess the nissaggiya pacittiya offense. Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Even if he thinks that seven days have not yet passed when they actually have--or thinks that the tonic is no longer in his possession when it actually is--he incurs the offense all the same. ()

The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the tonic are the same as under NP 1. The formula to use in forfeiting the tonic is given in Appendix VI. Once the bhikkhu receives the tonic in return, he may not use it to eat or to apply to his body, although he may use it for other external purposes, such as oil for a lamp, etc. Other bhikkhus may not eat the tonic either, but they may apply it to their bodies--for example, as oil to rub down their limbs.

Non-offenses. According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense if within seven days the tonic gets lost, destroyed, burnt, stolen or taken on trust; or if the bhikkhu determines it for use, abandons it or--having given it away to an unordained person, abandoning possession of it in his mind--he receives it in return and makes use of it. ()

The Commentary has an extended discussion of the last three points.

1) Determining the tonic for use means that, within the seven days, the bhikkhu determines that he will use it not as a medicine, but only to apply to the outside of his body or for other external purposes instead. In this case, he may keep the tonic as long as he likes without incurring a penalty.

2) Unlike the other rules dealing with robe cloth or bowls kept X number of days, the no-offense clauses here do not include exemp-tions for tonics placed under dual ownership, but the Commentary discusses "abandons it" as if it read "places it under dual ownership". Its verdict: Any tonic placed under dual ownership may be kept for more than seven days without incurring a penalty, as long as the owners do not divide up their shares, but after the seventh day they may not use it for internal purposes. The Sub-commentary adds that any tonic placed under dual ownership may not be used at all until the arrangement is rescinded.

3) The Commentary reports a controversy between two Vinaya experts on the meaning of the last exemption in the list--i.e., "having given it away to an unordained person, abandoning possession of it in his mind, he receives it in return and makes use of it." Ven. Maha Sumatthera states that the phrase, "if within seven days" applies here as well: If within seven days the bhikkhu gives the tonic to an unordained person, having abandoned possession of it in his mind, he may then keep it and consume it for another seven days if the unordained person happens to return it to him.

Ven. Maha Padumathera disagrees, saying that the exemption "abandons it" already covers such a case, and that the exemption here refers to the situation where a bhikkhu has kept a tonic past seven days, has forfeited it and received it in return, and then gives it up to an unordained person. If the unordained person then returns the tonic to him, he may use it to rub on his body.

The K/Commentary agrees with the latter position, but this creates some problems, both textual and practical. To begin with, the phrase, "if within seven days," modifies every one of the other no-offense clauses, and there is nothing to indicate that it does not modify this one, too. Secondly, every one of the other exemptions refers directly to ways of avoiding the full offense, and not to ways of dealing with the forfeited article after it is returned, and again there is nothing to indicate that the last exemption breaks this pattern.

On the practical side, if the exemption "abandons it" covers cases where a bhikkhu may give up the tonic to anyone at all and then receive it in return to use for another seven days, bhikkhus could spend their time trading hoards of tonics among themselves indefinitely, and the rule would become meaningless. But as the origin story shows, it was precisely to prevent them from amassing such hoards that the rule was formulated in the first place.

"Then Ven. Pilindavaccha approached the residence of King Seniya Bimbisara of Magadha, and on arrival sat down on an appointed seat. Then King Seniya Bimbisara... approached Ven. Pilindavaccha and, paying homage, sat down to one side. As he sat there, Ven. Pilindavaccha addressed him: 'For what reason, great king, has the monastery attendant's family been imprisoned?'

"'Sir, in the monastery attendant's house was a garland of gold: beautiful, attractive, exquisite. There is no garland of gold like it even in our own women's quarters. From where could he have gotten it? It must have been stolen.'

"Then Ven. Pilindavaccha willed that the palace of King Seniya Bimbisara be gold. And it became made entirely of gold. 'But from where have you gotten so much gold, great king?'

"(Saying,) 'I understand, sir. This is simply the master's psychic power,' he had the monastery attendant's family released.

"The people, saying, 'The master Pilindavaccha displayed a psychic wonder, a superior human feat, to the king and his retinue,' were gladdened and delighted. They presented Ven. Pilindavaccha with the five tonics: ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey and sugar.

"Now ordinarily Ven. Pilindavaccha was already a receiver of the five tonics, so he distributed his gains among his company, who came to live in abundance. They put away their gains having filled pots and pitchers. They hung up their gains having filled water strainers and bags. These kept oozing and seeping, and their dwellings were crawling and creeping with rats. People, engaged in a tour of the dwellings, having seen this, were offended and annoyed and spread it about, 'These Sakyan contemplatives have inner store rooms like the king....'"

Thus it seems more likely that the Vibhanga's no-offense clauses should be interpreted like this: A bhikkhu is no longer held respon-sible for a tonic if he abandons it or gives it away--no matter who he gives it to, or what his state of mind--but he may receive it in return and use it another seven days only if he has given it to an unordained person, having abandoned all possession of it in his mind.

Summary: Keeping any of the five tonics--ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey or sugar/molasses--for more than seven days, unless one determines to use them only externally, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

24. When a month is left to the hot season, a bhikkhu may seek a rains-bathing cloth. When a half-month is left to the hot season, (the cloth) having been made, may be worn. If when more than a month is left to the hot season he should seek a rains-bathing cloth, (or) when more than a half-month is left to the hot season, (the cloth) having been made should be worn, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

Bhikkhus in the time of the Buddha commonly bathed in a river or lake. Passages in the Canon give an indication of some of the dangers involved: They had to watch over their robes to make sure that they weren't stolen or washed away by the river, and they had to make sure that they didn't expose themselves. (S.II.10 tells of a female deity who, seeing a young bhikkhu bathing, became smitten with the sight of him wearing only his under robe. She appeared to him, sug-gesting that he leave the monkhood to take his fill of sensual pleasures before his youth had past, but fortunately he was far enough in the practice to resist her advances.) A further danger during the rainy season was that the rivers would become swollen and their currents strong. During this time, then, bhikkhus would bathe in the rain.

Rains-bathing cloth. The Mahavagga (Mv.VIII.15.1-7) contains the story of a servant girl who went to a monastery and--seeing bhikkhus out bathing naked in the rain--concluded that there were no bhikkhus there, but only naked ascetics. She returned to tell her mistress, Lady Visakha, who realized what was actually happening, and made this the occasion to ask permission of the Buddha to provide rains-bathing cloths for the bhikkhus, because as she put it, "Nakedness is repulsive." He granted her request, and at a later point (Mv.VIII.20.2) stated that a rains-bathing cloth could be determined for use during the four months of the rainy season--beginning with the day after the full moon in July, or the second if there are two--and that at the end of the four months it was to be placed under dual ownership. This training rule deals with the protocol for seeking and using such a cloth during the rains and the period immediately preceding them.

The protocol is sketched out in the Vibhanga, the details being filled in by the Commentary as follows: During the first two weeks of fourth lunar month of the hot season--the lunar cycle ending with the full moon in July, or the first if there are two--a bhikkhu may seek a rains-bathing cloth, and make it if he gets enough material, but may not yet use it or determine it for use. In seeking the cloth he may directly ask for it from relatives or people who have invited him to ask, or he may approach people who have provided rains-bathing cloths in the past and give them such hints as: "It is the time for material for a rains-bathing cloth," or "People are giving material for a rains-bathing cloth." If he asks directly from people who are not relatives or who have not invited him to ask, he incurs a dukkata; if he then receives cloth from them, he incurs the full offense under NP 6. If he gives hints to people who have never provided rains-bathing cloths in the past, he incurs a dukkata.

During the last two weeks of the fourth lunar month of the hot season he may now begin using his cloth, although he may not yet determine it for use. This shows clearly that this rule is providing an exemption to NP 1, under which he otherwise would be forced to determine the cloth within ten days after receiving it. If he has not yet received enough material, he may continue seeking for more, in the way described above, and make himself a cloth when he receives enough.

When the first day of the rainy season arrives, he may determine the cloth. If he does not yet have enough material to make his rains-bathing cloth, he may continue seeking it throughout the four months of the rains. If he bathes naked in the rain when he has a cloth to use, he incurs a dukkata, although he may bathe naked in a lake or river without incurring any penalty. If he has no cloth to use, he may also bathe naked in the rain.

At the end of the four months, he is to wash his cloth, place it under dual ownership and put it aside if it is still usable. He may begin using it again the last two weeks of the last lunar month before the next rainy season, and is to re-determine it for use on the day the rainy season officially begins.

Towards the end of his discussion of this rule, Buddhaghosa adds his own personal opinion on when the rains-bathing cloth should be determined for use if it is finished during the rains--on the grounds that the ancient commentaries do not discuss the issue--one of the few places where he overtly gives his own opinion anywhere in the Commentary. His verdict: If one receives enough material to finish the cloth within ten days, one should determine within those ten days. If not, one may keep what material one has, undetermined and throughout the rainy season if need be, until one does obtain enough material, and then determine the cloth on the day it is completed.

Offenses. As the K/Commentary points out, this rule covers two separate offenses whose factors are somewhat different: the offense for seeking a rains-bathing cloth at the wrong time, and that for using it at the wrong time.

Seeking. The factors here are three: object, effort and result. The bhikkhu is looking for material for a rains-bathing cloth, he makes hints to people during the time he is not allowed to make hints, and he receives the cloth. There is a dukkata in the hinting, and a full offense in receiving the cloth.

Using. The factors here are two: object--he has a rains-bathing cloth--and effort--he has other robes to use, there are no dangers, and yet he wears the cloth during the period when he is not allowed to wear it. (The conditions here are based on the no-offenses clauses, which we will discuss below.)

In neither of these cases is perception a mitigating factor. Even if a bhikkhu thinks that the right time to hint for the cloth or to wear it has come when it actually hasn't, he is not immune from an offense.

Forfeiture and confession. A bhikkhu who has committed either of the two full offenses here is to forfeit the cloth and confess the offense. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as under NP 1.

Non-offenses. As the rule states, there is no offense for the bhikkhu who hints for a rains-bathing cloth within the last lunar month of the hot season, or for one who wears his rains-bathing cloth during the last two weeks of that month.

The Vibhanga then refers to a situation which occasionally happens under the lunar calendar: The four months of the hot season end, but the rains retreat is delayed another lunar cycle due to the fact that a thirteenth lunar month has to be added to that year in order to bring the lunar year back into line with the solar year. (This usually occurs when there are two full moons in July.) In this case, it says that the rains-bathing cloth--having been sought for during the fourth month of the hot season and worn during the last two weeks--is to be washed and then put aside. When the proper season arrives, it may be brought out for use. ()

The Commentary adds that there is no need to determine the cloth in this period until the day the rains retreat officially starts, but it doesn't say whether the proper season to use the cloth begins with the rains retreat or two weeks before. It would make sense to allow the bhikkhu to begin using the cloth two weeks before, but this is simply my own opinion.

The Vibhanga then adds three more exemptions: There is no offense for a "stolen-robe" bhikkhu, a "destroyed-robe" bhikkhu or when there are dangers. The Commentary interprets "robe" here as meaning rains-bathing cloth, and says that these exemptions apply to the dukkata offense for bathing naked in the rain. A bhikkhu whose rains-bathing cloth has been stolen or destroyed may bathe naked in the rain without incurring an offense, as may a bhikkhu with an expensive bathing cloth who would rather bathe naked because of his fear of cloth thieves.

Strangely enough, Buddhaghosa's own K/Commentary makes the Vibhanga's exemptions refer also to the full offense. If a bhikkhu's other robes have been stolen or destroyed, he may wear his rains-bathing cloth out of season. The same holds true when--in the words of the K/Commentary--"naked thieves are plundering," a bhikkhu decides to wear his rains-bathing cloth out-of-season in order to protect either it or his other robes from being stolen.

The Sub-commentary follows the K/Commentary in holding to both interpretations.

At present, much of this discussion is purely academic, inasmuch as most bhikkhus--if they use a bathing cloth--tend to determine it for use as a "cloth accessory" so as to avoid any possible offense under this rule.

Summary: Seeking and receiving a rains-bathing cloth before the fourth month of the hot season is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

Using a rains-bathing cloth before the last two weeks of the fourth month of the hot season is also a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

25. Should any bhikkhu, having himself given a robe cloth to (another) bhikkhu, and then being angered and displeased, snatch it back or have

it snatched back, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

"At that time Ven. Upananda the Sakyan said to his brother's student, 'Come, friend, let's set out on a tour of the countryside.'

"'I can't go, sir. My robe is threadbare.'

"'Come, friend, I'll give you a robe.' And he gave him a robe. Then that bhikkhu heard, 'The Blessed One, they say, is going to set out on a tour of the countryside.' The thought occurred to him: 'In that case I won't set out on a tour of the countryside with Ven. Upananda the Sakyan. I'll set out on a tour of the countryside with the Blessed One.'

"Then Ven. Upananda said to him, 'Come, friend, let's set out on that tour of the countryside now.'

"'I won't set out on a tour of the countryside with you, sir. I'll set out on a tour of the countryside with the Blessed One.'

"'But the robe I gave you, my friend, will set out on a tour of the countryside with me.' And angered and displeased, he snatched the robe back."

As the Commentary points out, this rule applies to cases where one perceives the robe cloth as being rightfully one's own, even after having given it away, as when giving it on an implicit or explicit condition which the recipient does not later fulfill. Thus the act of snatching away here does not incur a parajika. If, however, one has mentally abandoned ownership of the robe, and then for some reason snatches it back, the case would come under Parajika 2.

The factors for an offense here are two.

Object. A piece of any of the six allowable kinds of robe cloth, measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths.

Effort. One has given the cloth to another bhikkhu on one condi-tion or another, and then angered and displeased with him, snatches it back or has someone else snatch it back. In the latter case, one incurs a dukkata in giving the order to snatch the robe, and the full offense when the robe is snatched. Perception (with regard to the recipient/victim) is not a mitigating factor here. If he actually is a bhikkhu, then whether or not one perceives him to be so makes no difference as far as the offense is concerned.

Forfeiture and confession. A bhikkhu who has obtained robe cloth in violation of this rule is to forfeit it and confess the offense. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as under NP 1. The formula to use in forfeiting the cloth is given in Appendix VI.

Lesser offenses. There is a dukkata for angrily snatching back from a bhikkhu requisites other than cloth; and for angrily snatching back any kind of requisite--cloth or otherwise--that one has given to someone who is not a bhikkhu. The Sub-commentary adds that to give robe cloth to a layman planning to be ordained, and then to snatch it back in this way after his ordination, entails the full offense.

According to the Vibhanga, there is no offense if the recipient returns the robe of his own accord, or if the donor takes it back on trust. () The Commentary's discussion of the first exemption shows that if the recipient returns the robe after receiving a gentle hint from the donor--"I gave you the robe in hopes that you would study with me, but now you are studying with someone else"--the latter incurs no offense. But if the donor's hint shows anger--"I gave this robe to a bhikkhu who would study with me, not to one who would study with somebody else!"--he incurs a dukkata for the hint, but no offense when the recipient returns the robe.

Summary: Having given another bhikkhu a robe on a condition and then--angry and displeased--snatching it back or having it snatched back is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

26. Should any bhikkhu, having requested thread, have a robe woven by weavers, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The factors for an offense here are three: object, effort and result.

Object. Thread or yarn of the six allowable types for robe cloth, that a bhikkhu--with the purpose of making a robe--has requested from people who are not his relatives or who have not invited him to ask.

Effort. He then takes this thread to weavers who are unrelated to him and have not offered their services for free, and gets them to weave him robe cloth measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths.

Result. He receives the cloth.

Offenses. The Commentary has a table which works out the various combinations of offenses here based on two variables: whether the bhikkhu has obtained the thread properly or not, and whether or not the weavers are proper for him to ask. Thread properly received is that which he has requested from people who either are related to him or who have invited him to ask. Similarly, weavers proper for him to ask are any who are related to him or who have offered him their services.

If both the thread and the weavers are classed as not proper, there is a dukkata in getting them to weave cloth, and a nissaggiya pacittiya in receiving the cloth when it is done.

There is a dukkata in receiving the cloth if the thread is proper, but the weavers not; OR if the thread is not proper, but the weavers are. (For ease of remembrance: a dukkata if one variable is proper and the other not.)

If both variables are proper, there is no offense.

The Commentary then has a field day working out the permuta-tions if two different weavers--one proper and one improper--work on the cloth, or if proper and improper thread are used in the cloth--proper warp and improper woof, or alternating strands of proper and improper thread--which if nothing else goes to show how few truly burning issues have sprung up around this rule.

Forfeiture and confession. Robe cloth received in a way which incurs the full offense under this rule is to be forfeited and the offense confessed, following the same procedure as under NP 1.

Non-offenses. The Vibhanga says that there is no offense "to sew a robe, or in a binding, a belt, a shoulder-strap, a bag for carrying the bowl, or a water-strainer." The Commentary interprets this as meaning that there is no offense in asking for thread or yarn to sew a robe or to make any of the other things listed. Since these articles are small, and since bhikkhus are allowed looms (Cv.V.28.2), perhaps they are things that bhikkhus could be expected to make themselves.

The no-offense clauses also say that there is no offense if they--the donors or the weavers--are relatives, if they have invited one to ask, if the cloth is for the sake of another, or if it is by means of one's own property. These exemptions apply both to asking for thread and for getting weavers to weave cloth. As under NP 6 & 22, "for the sake of another" means that one may ask from one's own relatives or from those who have invited one to ask OR from relatives of the other or people who have invited him to ask. Asking for his sake from people other than these would incur the full offense.

If the cloth is obtained by means of one's own property--i.e., one arranges to pay for the thread and hire the weavers--the Commentary states that one is responsible for the cloth as soon as it is finished and fully paid for, whether or not it is delivered into one's possession: One must therefore determine it for use within 10 days of that date so as not to incur an offense under NP 1. If the weavers have promised to send word when the cloth is done, one's responsibility starts when one receives word from their messenger;

similarly, if they have promised to send the cloth when done, one's responsibility begins when their messenger delivers it.

Summary: Taking thread which one has asked for improperly, and getting weavers to weave cloth from it--when they are unrelated and have not made a previous offer to weave--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

27. In case a man or woman householder unrelated to a bhikkhu has weavers weave robe cloth for his sake, and if the bhikkhu, not previously invited (by the householder), having approached the weavers, should make stipulations with regard to the cloth, saying, "This cloth, friends, is to be woven for my sake. Make it long, make it broad, make it tightly woven, well woven, well spread, well scraped, well smoothed, and perhaps I may reward you with a little something;" and should the bhikkhu, having said that, reward them with a little something, even as much as alms food, it (the cloth) is to be forfeited and confessed.

Here the factors for an offense are four:

Object. A piece of any of the six allowable types of robe cloth, measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths, which is being made for one's sake by the arrangement of a donor who is unrelated and has not given an invitation to ask.

Intention. One wants to get better cloth than what the donors are planning to give.

Effort. One approaches the weavers and gets them to increase the amount of thread going into the robe. The Commentary explains that the bhikkhu's words quoted in the rule are meant simply to be an example of any way in which one might do this. The Vibhanga defines the reward of "alms food" as covering anything of even the slightest material value--food, a lump of powder, tooth wood, unwoven thread or even a phrase of Dhamma. A bhikkhu who offers to pay for the extra thread in full would thus also fulfill this factor.

The Sub-commentary adds that even if the bhikkhu doesn't deliver the reward, this factor is fulfilled all the same as long as the weavers, as a result of his stipulations, actually increase the amount of thread from that which they and the donors had agreed on.

Result. One receives the cloth.

Offenses. The bhikkhu incurs a dukkata as soon as the weavers add even a little extra thread to the cloth, and the full offense when he receives it. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as under NP 1.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if-- the donors are relatives,

they have invited one to ask,

one asks for the sake of another, one gets the weavers to make the cloth less expensive than the donors had ordered, or if it is by means of one's own property. (This last point refers only to cases where the bhikkhu was the one who had the weavers hired in the first place.)

Summary: When donors who are not relatives--and have not invited one to ask--have arranged for weavers to weave robe cloth intended for one: Receiving the cloth after getting the weavers to increase the amount of thread used in the cloth is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

28.Ten days prior to the third-month Kattika full moon, should a robe offered in urgency accrue to a bhikkhu, he is to accept it if he regards it as offered in urgency. Once he has accepted it, he may keep it the length of the robe season. Beyond that, it is to be forfeited and confessed.

The third-month Kattika full moon is the full moon in October, or the first if there are two. This is the final day of the rains retreat, and the day before the beginning of the robe season.

A robe offered in urgency is any piece of the six allowable kinds of robe cloth, measuring at least four by eight fingerbreadths, offered by a person who does not want to wait until the robe season to make an offering, either because his/her survival is in doubt--as when a soldier is going into war, a traveler is about to set out on a journey, or a woman has become pregnant--or because he/she has developed new-found faith in the religion.

The Commentary points out that the period allowed for giving a robe offered in urgency begins on the fifth day of the waxing moon before the end of the rains retreat; and that a robe offered to an individual bhikkhu beginning on the sixth day of the waning moon can, under NP 1, be kept throughout the robe season because the tenth dawn after the sixth waning moon is the beginning of the robe season. Thus it would seem that this rule is giving only a one-day special allowance.

However, we should note that the Vibhanga implicitly, and the Commentary explicitly, treat a robe offered in urgency as in-season cloth (see NP 3): In other words, the cloth goes to the Community, and is to be divided only among those bhikkhus who spend the rains retreat in that Community. Thus if a bhikkhu has broken the retreat, he must return his share to the Community, as he no longer has any right to it.

The factors for an offense here are two: object--a robe offered in urgency-- and effort--one keeps it past the end of the robe season: the dawn after the full moon following the rains retreat, if one does not participate in a kathina; or the end of one's kathina privileges, if one does. And, as noted above, if one has broken one's retreat, one has no right to any share in such a robe, and must return it to the Community immediately.

Perception is not a mitigating factor here. Thus if the period to keep the cloth has passed even though one thinks it hasn't--or if it is not determined for use, etc., when one thinks it is--one is still subject to the offense all the same.

The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the cloth are the same as under NP 1. See Appendix VI for the Pali formula to use in forfeiting the cloth.

Non-offenses. There is no offense if, before the robe season is over, one determines the cloth, places it under dual ownership or abandons it (gives it away or throws it away); if it is lost, destroyed, burnt or stolen, or if someone else takes it on trust.

Summary: Keeping a robe offered in urgency past the end of the robe season after having accepted it during the last eleven days of the rains retreat is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

29. There are wilderness abodes that are considered dubious and risky. A bhikkhu living in such abodes after the (fourth-month) Kattika full moon has passed may keep any one of his three robes in a village if he so desires. Should he have any reason to live apart from the robe, he may do so for six nights at most. If he should live apart from it longer than that--unless authorized by the bhikkhus--it is to be forfeited and confessed.

As we noted under NP 2, every bhikkhu who has spent the rains retreat has the right to live separated from his set of three robes during the following month. This rule is a partial one-month extension of this right for bhikkhus living in dangerous wilderness areas. The reason for this extension is that this one-month period was when thieves were active--perhaps because they knew that bhik-khus had just received new cloth, or simply because now that roads were passable again it was time for them to get back to their work.

The Commentary defines this situation in terms of four factors:

1) The bhikkhu has spent the first rains retreat--the one beginning with the full moon in July, or the second full moon if there are two in that month--without break.

2) He is staying in a wilderness abode, defined in the Vibhanga as one at least 500 bow-lengths, or one kilometer, from the nearest village, this distance being measured by the shortest walkable path between the two, and not as the crow flies. At the same time, he is not so far from a village that he cannot go for alms there in the morning and then return to eat in his abode before noon.

3) The abode is dubious and risky: dubious in that thieves are known to be about, and risky in that people are known to have been hurt or plundered by them.

4) The time period for the extension is one month beginning the day after the fourth Kattika moon, the full moon one month after the end of the rains retreat.

The dawn after this full moon day is when the robe season normally ends for those bhikkhus who have not participated in a kathina. However, a bhikkhu living in the situation outlined above may keep one of his set of triple robes in the village where he normally goes for alms, and--if he has a reason--may stay apart from it six nights at most. As usual, nights are counted by dawns.

The factors for an offense here are two: object--one of a bhik-khu's basic set of three robes-- and effort--staying away from the robe past the sixth dawn after first being apart from it. Perception is not a mitigating factor here: Even if one thinks that six nights have not passed when they actually have, one is not immune from the offense.

As the Sub-commentary points out, the Commentary and K/Commentary differ in their definition of the factor of effort here. According to the K/Commentary, the bhikkhu staying in a forest abode during the period in question is counted as being apart from his robe when it is placed in the village, and thus can keep it there while he is in his forest abode only six nights at a stretch. Thus, it says, if he is in his wilderness abode at the sixth dawn, he incurs the full offense.

The Commentary, however, maintains that the bhikkhu staying in the wilderness abode is not counted as being apart from his robe when it is placed in the village, but if he leaves that abode on busi-ness and lets his robe remain in the village, he may stay away from the abode only six nights at a stretch. Thus, it says, if in returning from his business he cannot make it to his forest abode by the sixth dawn, and the village is closer, he may stop over in the village long enough to check up on the robe and still be immune from the offense.

The second interpretation makes more sense, in that if the bhikkhu is staying in his abode and going for alms in the village, he may check up on his robe every day. It is also more in line with the Vibhanga's definition of "any reason"--i.e., "any business"--which indicates situa-tions where the bhikkhu would be away from his abode. The Sub-commentary, following Bhadanta Buddhadatta Thera, adopts the second interpretation.

Forfeiture and confession. A bhikkhu under these conditions who has been away from his robe for more than six nights is to forfeit it and confess the offense. The procedures for forfeiture, confession and return of the robe are the same as under NP 1. The Pali formula for forfeiting the robe is in Appendix VI.

Non-offenses. There is no offense for a bhikkhu who has stayed away from his robe six nights or less; or if, having been apart from his robe six nights he enters the village boundary (and, according to the Commentary, stays long enough to check up on his robe);

if, within the six nights, he rescinds the determination of the robe, places it under dual ownership, abandons it; or the robe gets lost, burnt, destroyed, stolen or taken by someone on trust;

or if he has been authorized by the Community to be apart from his robe. (This, according to the Commentary, refers to the authorization discussed under NP 2.)

The commentaries refer the reader to NP 2 for the remaining explanations to this rule, which would seem to indicate that if a bhikkhu's kathina privileges are still in effect, he is also immune from an offense under this rule during the period in question no matter how many nights he is away from his robe.

Summary: When one is living in a dangerous abode during the month after the fourth Kattika full moon, and has left one of one's robes in the village where one normally goes for alms: Being away from the abode and the village for more than six nights at a stretch--except when authorized by the Community--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

***

30. Should any bhikkhu knowingly divert to himself gains which had been intended for a Community, they are to be forfeited and confessed.

"Now in Savatthi at that time a certain guild had prepared a meal with cloth for the Community, (thinking,) 'Having fed (the bhikkhus) we will supply them with cloth.'

"Then some group-of-six bhikkhus went to where the guild members were staying, and on arrival said, 'Give us these cloths, friends.'

"'We can't, sirs. We arrange alms with cloth for the Community (like this) on a yearly basis.'

"'The Community has lots of donors, my friends. The Commu-nity gets lots of meals. It is in dependence on you, looking to you, that we live here. If you won't give to us, is there anyone who will? Give us the cloths, friends.'

"So the guild, pressured by the group-of-six bhikkhus, gave them what cloth they had prepared and then served the meal to the Community. The bhikkhus who knew that a meal with cloth had been prepared, but not that the cloth had been given to the group-of-six bhikkhus, addressed the guild members: 'Present the cloth to the Community, friends.'

"'There isn't any, sirs. What cloth we had prepared, the masters--the group-of-six bhikkhus--have diverted to themselves.'

"Those bhikkhus who were of few wants...were offended and annoyed and spread it about: 'How can these group-of-six bhikkhus divert to themselves gains intended for the Community?'"

There are four factors for an offense here.

Object. Any requisite--"robes, alms food, lodgings, medicine, even a lump of powder, toothwood or unwoven thread"--that donors have indicated by word or gesture that they intend to give to a Community. As the Commentary notes, "donors" here include not only lay people in general, but also one's fellow bhikkhus and relatives--even one's own mother: The fact that a gift is intended for a Community over-rides all other considerations, even when one is ill.

Perception. One perceives that the donors have intended the requisite for a Community. ()

Effort. One tries to persuade them that they should give it to oneself instead. This in itself, following on the first two factors, incurs a dukkata.

Result. One receives the article from the donors. This incurs the full offense.

Forfeiture and confession. Any gains that one has received in violation of this rule are to be forfeited and the offense confessed. The procedures here are the same as under NP 1. The Pali formula for forfeiting the gains is in Appendix VI.

Related offenses. If one knowingly tries to divert gains intended for a Community to oneself, but the donors go ahead and give the gains to the Community anyway, then the Commentary says that one should not have a share in them. If one does receive a share from the Community, one should return it. If, instead of returning it, one shares it among lay people, the case is to be treated under Parajika 2.

If one is in doubt as to whether items are intended for the Community, but goes ahead and diverts them anyway, one incurs a dukkata regardless of whether the items really were intended for the Community or not. ()

To divert items intended for a Community to another individual incurs a pacittiya under Pacittiya 82. To divert items intended for one Community of bhikkhus to another Community or to a shrine, incurs a dukkata. The same holds true for diverting items intended for a shrine to a Community, to an individual or to another shrine; and for diverting items intended for an individual to a Community, to a shrine or to another individual.

The Commentary states that the term "individual" here can mean common animals as well as human beings, and that this last case thus includes even such things as saying, "Don't give it to that dog. Give it to this one." This point is well-taken: A bhikkhu has no business interfering with the gains that are to be freely given to another being, no matter what that being's current status.

The Sub-commentary holds that once an item has been presented by a donor, there is nothing wrong in diverting it elsewhere. Thus, it says, taking flowers presented to one shrine and placing them at another--or chasing a dog away from food which has been given to it so that another dog can have a share--would be perfectly all right, but the Thai editors of the Sub-commentary state in a footnote that they disagree.

Non-offenses. There is no offense in diverting items to oneself if one does not perceive them as intended for a Community, another individual or a shrine, regardless of whether or not the donors intended them that way or not. Still, one should be careful not to do this in such a way as to violate any of the other rules on asking from people who are unrelated or have not given an invitation to ask.

The no-offense clauses recommend a safer line of conduct: If one is asked, "To whom should we give this?" one may answer, "Give wherever your gift would be used, or would be well-cared for, or would last long, or wherever your mind feels inspired."

Summary: Persuading a donor to give to oneself a gift which he or she had planned to give to the Community--when one knows that it was intended for the Community--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense

***

A bhikkhu who commits an offense against any of these thirty nissaggiya pacittiya offenses must first forfeit the item in question before confessing the offense. If he makes use of the item before forfeiting it, he incurs an extra dukkata--except for money received in violation of NP 18 or 19, which would involve another nissaggiya pacittiya if used in trade. If the item gets lost or destroyed before the bhikkhu forfeits it, he may simply confess a pacittiya.

Except in cases where forfeiture must be made to a Community of four bhikkhus or more (NP 18, 19 & 22), the offender may forfeit the item to a single bhikkhu, a group of two or three, or a Community of four or more. Once he has confessed the offense, he is cleared of the penalty.

In cases where he must forfeit the item to the Community, he may not receive it in return. In the remaining cases, though, the item must be returned to him. Not to do so incurs a dukkata for the bhikkhu(s) to whom it is forfeited. In a few cases, there are restrictions as to what use a bhikkhu may make of an item received in return after forfeiture--he may not use the five tonics to treat his body internally or externally, and may not use felt made with silk or composed of more than 1/2 black wool as a rug--but apart from this he is free to use the returned item as he likes.

The act of forfeiture is thus symbolic in most cases, and the effect of the rules is more internal: The offender may not make use of the item until he has confessed his wrong-doing, and this in itself should give him time to reflect on his actions. Similarly, in the act of handing the nissaggiya item over to another, he has an opportunity to reflect on whether or not is it worth whatever greed, anger or delusion it has sparked in his mind.

Offenses of this and the remaining categories in this book are classed as light offenses (lahukapatti), and are also termed desana-gamini, meaning that they are cleared through confession.

Rule Index

This index lists the summaries of the training rules given in this book, orgainized by topic. T rules have not been included, because they are short, deal almost exclusively with etiquette orgainized by topic in their own chapter. I have included short summaries of the Adhikarana even though these summaries do not appear in the chatper discussing those rules.

The rules are divided into five major categories, dealing with Right Speech, Right Action, Rig Communal harmony and the etiquette of a contemplative. The first three categories--the fac Eightfod Path that make up the training in heightened virtue--are especially useful for showin training rules relate to the Buddhist path as a whole.

These five categories are not sharply distinct types. Instead, they are more like the colors in light thrown off by a prism--discernably different, but shading into one another with no sharp Right Speech, for instance, often shades into Commu-nal harmony, just as Right Livelihood personal etiquette. Thus the placement of a particular rule in one category rather than anoth somewhat arbitrary process. There are a few cases--such as Pacittiyas 46 & 84--where the the rule in a particular category will become clear only after reading the detailed discussions in question.

Each rule is followed by a two-part code. The first part, before the slash, gives the rule's num section of the Patimokkha. The second part gives the page number in this book on which th rule is located.

Right Speech

M.117 defines wrong speech as lying, divisive speech, abusive speech and idle chatter.

Lying

Making an unfounded charge to a bhikkhu that he has committed a parajika offense, in hope
disrobed, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 8/106)

Distorting the evidence while accusing a bhikkhu of having committed a parajika offense in h
disrobed, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 9/115)

The intentional effort to misrepresent the truth to another individual is a pacittiya offense.. (P

Making an unfounded charge in the presence of another bhikkhu--or getting someone else t his presence--that he is guilty of a sanghadisesa offense is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 76/395)

Divisive speech

Tale-bearing among bhikkhus, in hopes of winning favor or causing a rift, is a pacittiya offen

Abusive speech

An insult made with malicious intent to another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 2/227)

Idle chatter

Visiting lay families--without having informed an available bhikkhu--before or after a meal to been invited is a pacittiya offense except during the robe season or any time one is making a 46/342)

Entering a village, town or city during the period after noon until the following dawn, without leave of an available bhikkhu--unless there is an emergency--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 85/4

Right Action

M.117 defines wrong action as killing living beings, taking what is not given, and engaging in misconduct.

Killing

Intentionally causing the death of a human being, even if it is still a fetus, is a parajika offens
(Pr3/55)

Pouring water that one knows to contain living beings--or to have it poured--on grass or clay anything which would kill the beings into such water--or to have it poured--is a pacittiya offen 20/277)

Deliberately killing an animal--or having it killed--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 61/369)

Using water, knowing that it contains living beings which will die from one's using it, is a pac
offense. (Pc 62/371)

Giving a blow to another bhikkhu, when motivated by anger, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 74/3

Making a threatening gesture against another bhikkhu when motivated by anger is a pacittiy 75/394)

Taking what is not given

The theft of anything worth 1/24 ounce troy of gold or more is a parajika offense. (Pr 2/42)

Having given another bhikkhu a robe on a condition and then--angry and displeased--snatch it snatched back is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 25/212)

Making use of cloth or a bowl which is stored under shared ownership--unless the shared ov rescinded or one is taking the item on trust--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 59/365)

Sexual Misconduct

Voluntary sexual intercourse -- genital, anal or oral -- with a human being, non-human being is a parajika offense. (Pr 1/38)

Intentionally causing oneself to emit semen, or getting someone else to cause one to emit s a dream--is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 1/72)

Lustful bodily contact with a woman whom one perceives to be a woman is a sanghadisesa

Making lustful reference to a woman about her genitals, anus or performing sexual intercour sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 3/90)

Telling a woman that she would benefit from having sexual intercourse with oneself is a san (Sg 4/94)

Getting an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or beat a robe that one has worn at least once i pacittiya offense. (NP 4/153)

Getting an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or card wool that has not been made into cloth nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 17/183)

Lying down at the same time in the same lodging with a woman is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 6

Teaching more than six sentences of Dhamma to a woman except in response to a questior unless a knowledgeable man is present. (Pc 7/243)

Exhorting the bhikkhunis about the eight vows of respect--except when one has been autho bhikkhus--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 21/229)

Exhorting bhikkhunis on any topic at all after sunset--except when they request it--is a pacitt (Pc 22/282)

Going to the bhikkhunis' quarters and exhorting a bhikkhuni about the eight vows of respect- is ill or has requested the instruction--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 23/283)

Giving robe cloth to an unrelated bhikkhuni without receiving anything in exchange is a paci (Pc 25/285)

Sewing a robe--or having one sewn--for an unrelated bhikkhuni is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 26

Traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhuni from one village to another--except when the roa are other dangers--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 27/288)

Traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhu upriver or downriver in the same boat--except whe river--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 28/289)

Sitting or lying down with a bhikkhuni in a place out of sight and out of hearing with no one e
a pacittiya offense. (Pc 30/293 & 341)

Sitting or lying down with a woman or women in a private, secluded place with no other man
pacittiya offense. (Pc 44/338)

Sitting or lying down alone with a woman in an unsecluded but private place with no one els
pacittiya offense. (Pc 45/341)

Traveling by arrangement with a woman from one village to another is a pacittiya offense. (

Right Livelihood

M.117 defines wrong livelihood as scheming, persuading, hinting, belittling and pursuing gai

General

Deliberately lying to another person that one has attained a superior human state is a paraji
4/62)

Acting as a go-between to arrange a marriage, an affair or a date between a man and a wor
each other is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 5/96)

Engaging in trade with anyone except one's co-religionists is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense.

Persuading a donor to give to oneself a gift that he or she had planned to give to the Comm knows that it was intended for the Community--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 30/221

Telling unordained people of one's actual superior human attainments is a pacittiya offense.

Persuading a donor to give to another individual a gift which he or she had planned to give t
Community--when one knows that it was intended for the Community--is a pacittiya offense

Robes

Keeping a piece of robe-cloth for more than ten days without determining it for use or placin ownership--except when the end of vassa or kathina privileges are in effect--is a nissaggiya offense. (NP 1/137)

Being in a separate zone from any of one's three robes at dawn--except when the end-of-va privileges are in effect, or one has received formal authorization from the Community--is a n
pacittiya offense. (NP 2/145)

Keeping out-of-season cloth for more than 30 days when it is not enough to make a requisit expectation for more--except when the end-of-vassa and kathina privileges are in effect--is a pacittiya offense. (NP 3/151)

Accepting robe cloth from an unrelated bhikkhuni without giving her anything in exchange is pacittiya offense. NP 5/156)

Asking for and receiving robe cloth from an unrelated lay person, except when one's robes h destroyed, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 6/158)

Asking for and receiving excess cloth from unrelated lay people when one's robes have bee is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 7/160)

When a lay person who is not a relative is planning to get a robe for one, but has yet to ask robe one wants: Receiving the robe after making a request that would raise its cost is a niss
offense. (NP 8/164)

When two or more lay people who are not one's relatives are planning to get separate robes yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving a robe from them after asking them t to get one robe--out of a desire for something fine--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 9/

Making a felt blanket/rug with silk mixed in it for one's own use--or having it made--is a nissa

pacittiya offense. (NP 11/176)

Making a felt blanket/rug entirely of black wool for one's own use--or having it made--is a nis
pacittiya offense. (NP 12/177)

Making a felt blanket/rug that is more than one-half black wool for one's own use--or having nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 13/178)

Unless one has received authorization to do so from the Community, making a felt blanket/r use--or having it made--less than six years after one's last one was made is a nissaggiya pa
(NP 14/178)

Making a felt sitting rug for one's own use--or having it made--without incor-porating a one-s felt is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 15/180)

Seeking and receiving a rains-bathing cloth before the fourth month of the hot season is a ni pacittiya offense. Using a rains-bathing cloth before the last two weeks of the fourth month season is also a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 24/208)

Taking thread that one has asked for improperly, and getting weavers to weave cloth from it unrelated and have not made a previous offer to weave--is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (N

When donors who are not relatives--and have not invited one to ask--have arranged for wea cloth intended for one: Receiving the cloth after getting the weavers to increase the amount in the cloth is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 27/216)

Keeping a robe offered in urgency past the end of the robe season after having accepted it eleven days of the rains retreat is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 28/217)

When one is living in a dangerous abode during the month after the fourth Kattika full moon, of one's robes in the village where one normally goes for alms: Being away from the abode more than six nights at a stretch--except when authorized by the Community--is a nissaggiy
(NP 29/218)

Making use of an unmarked robe is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 58/363)

Acquiring an overly large sitting cloth after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is offense which requires that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense. (P

Acquiring an overly large skin-eruption covering cloth after making it--or having it made--for is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing th 90/421)

Acquiring an overly large rains-bathing cloth after making it--or having it made--for one's ow pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the off 91/422)

Acquiring an overly large robe after making it--or having it made--for one's own use is a paci which requires that one cut the robe down to size before confessing the offense. (Pc 92/422

Food

Eating any of the five staple foods that a lay person has offered as the result of a bhikkhuni's prompting--unless the lay person was already planning to offer the food before her promptin
offense. (Pc 29/291)

Eating food obtained from the same public alms center two days running, unless one is too i center, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 31/298)

Eating a meal to which four or more individual bhikkhus have been specifically invited--exce occasions--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 32/299))

Eating a meal before going to another meal to which one was invited, or accept-ing an invita and eating elsewhere instead, is a pacittiya offense except when one is ill or at the time of g making robes. (Pc 33/305)

Accepting more than three bowlfuls of food which the donors prepared for their own use as p provisions for a journey is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 34/309)

Eating staple or non-staple food which is not left-over, after having earlier in the day finished during which one turned down an offer to eat further staple food, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 3

Eating staple or non-staple food in the period after noon until the next dawn is a pacittiya off 37/317)

Eating food that a bhikkhu--oneself or another--formally received on a previous day is a paci
(Pc 38/319)

Eating finer foods, after having asked for them for one's own sake--except when ill--is a paci
(Pc 39/322)

Eating food that has not been formally given is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 40/324)

Eating staple or non-staple food, after having accepted it from the hand of an unrelated bhik village area, is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 1/424)

Eating staple food accepted at a meal to which one has been invited and where a bhikkhuni directions, based on favoritism, as to which bhikkhu should get which food and none of the b dismissed her, is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 2/426)

Eating staple or non-staple food, after accepting it--when one is neither ill nor invited--at the family formally designated as "in training", is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 3/427)

Eating an unannounced gift of staple or non-staple food after accepting it in a dangerous wil when one is not ill is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 4/429)

Lodgings

Building a plastered hut without a sponsor, destined for one's own use--or having it built--wit obtained the Community's approval is a sanghadisesa offense. Building a plastered hut with destined for one's own use--or having it built-- exceeding the standard measurements, is als offense. (Sg 6/98)

Building a hut with a sponsor, destined for one's own use--or having it built--without having o
Community's approval is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 7/106)

When a bhikkhu is building or repairing a large dwelling for his own use, using resources do he may not reinforce the window or door frames with more than three layers of roofing mate exceed this is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 19/224)

Acquiring a bed or bench with legs longer than eight Sugata fingerbreadths after making it--o made--for one's own use is a pacittiya offense which requires that one cut the legs down bef
offense. (Pc 87/416)

Acquiring a bed or bench stuffed with cotton down after making it--or having it made--for one pacittiya offense which requires that one remove the stuffing before confessing the offense.

Medicine

Keeping any of the five tonics--ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey or sugar/molasses--for more tha unless one determines to use them only externally, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 23

When a supporter has made an offer to supply medicines to the Community: Asking the don outside of the terms of the offer when one is not ill, or asking him/her for medicine to use for non-medicinal purpose, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 47/345)

Money

When a fund has been set up with a steward indicated by a bhikkhu: Obtaining an article fro result of having prompted the steward more than the allowable number of times is a nissagg
offense. (NP 10/166)

Taking gold or money, having someone else take it, or consenting to its being placed down a oneself is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 18/183)

Obtaining gold or money through trade is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 19/188)

Bowls and other requisites

Carrying wool that has not been made into cloth or yarn for more than three leagues is a nis

offense. (NP 16/181)

Keeping an alms bowl for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it und
is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 21/198)

Asking for a new alms bowl when one's current bowl is not beyond repair is a nissaggiya pa
(NP 22/201)

Acquiring a needle box made of ivory, bone or horn after making it--or having it made--for or pacittiya offense which requires that one break the box before confessing the offense. (Pc 8

Communal Harmony

To persist in one's attempts at a schism after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a Community, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 10/117)

To persist in supporting a potential schismatic, after the third announcement of a formal rebu of the Community, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 11/123)

To persist in being difficult to admonish after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in th a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 12/124)

To persist--after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Community--in criticizing a banishment performed against oneself is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 13/126)

When a trustworthy female lay follower accuses a bhikkhu of having committed a parajika, a pacittiya while sitting alone with a woman in a private, secluded place, the Community shoul charge and deal with the bhikkhu in accordance with whatever he admits having done. (Ay

When a trustworthy female lay follower accuses a bhikkhu of having committed a sanghadis while sitting alone with a woman in a private place, the Community should investigate the ch
the bhikkhu in accord-ance with whatever he admits having done. (Ay 2/136)

Telling an unordained person of another bhikkhu's serious offense--unless one is authorized to do so--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 9/250)

Persistently replying evasively or keeping silent when being questioned in a meeting of the C to conceal one's own offenses--after a formal charge of evasiveness or uncooperativeness h against one--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 12/261)

If a Community official is innocent of prejudice, criticizing him within earshot of another bhikk
pacittiya offense. (Pc 13/264)

Setting a bed, bench, mattress or stool belonging to the Community out in the open and ther immediate vicinity without putting it away or arranging to have it put away is a pacittiya offen 14/266)

Departing from a monastery, having left bedding spread out in a dwelling belonging to the C taking leave or arranging to have it put away, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 15/268)

Encroaching on another bhikkhu's sleeping or sitting place in a dwelling belonging to the Co sole purpose of making him uncomfortable and forcing him to leave, is a pacittiya offense. (

Causing a bhikkhu to be evicted from a dwelling belonging to the Community--when one's p anger--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 17/271)

Sitting or lying down on a bed or bench with detachable legs on an unplanked loft in a dwelli
the Community, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 18/273)

Saying that a properly authorized bhikkhu exhorts the bhikkhunis for the sake of personal ga that is not the case--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 24/284)

Deliberately tricking another bhikkhu into breaking Pacittiya 35, in hopes of finding fault with
pacittiya offense. (Pc 36/315)

Speaking or acting disrespectfully when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 54/357)

Agitating to re-open an issue, knowing that it was properly dealt with, is a pacittiya offense.

Not informing other bhikkhus of a serious offense which one knows another bhikkhu has cor a desire to protect him from having to undergo the penalty, or out of a desire to protect him f

remarks of other bhikkhus--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 64/374)

Acting as the preceptor in the ordination of a person one knows to be less than 20 years old
offense. (Pc 65/376)

Refusing to give up the wrong view that there is nothing wrong in intention-ally transgressing ordinances--after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community
offense. (Pc 68/382)

Consorting, joining in communion or lying down under the same roof with a bhikkhu who has not been restored--knowing that such is the case--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 69/384)

Supporting, receiving services from, consorting or lying down in the same lodging with an ex novice--knowing that he has been expelled--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 70/386)

Saying something as a ploy to excuse oneself from training under a training rule when bein another bhikkhu for a breach of the rule is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 71/389)

Criticizing the discipline in the presence of another bhikkhu, in hopes of preventing its study,
pacittiya offense. (Pc 72/390)

Using half-truths to deceive others into believing that one is ignorant of the rules in the Patim
one has already heard the Patimokkha in full three times, and a formal act exposing one's d brought against one, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 73/391)

Saying to another bhikkhu that he may have broken a rule unknowingly, simply for the purpo anxiety, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 77/396)

Eavesdropping on bhikkhus involved in an argument over an issue--with the intention of usi against them--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 78/397)

Complaining about a formal act of the Community to which one gave one's consent--if the a accordance with the rule, and one knows that it was--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 79/399)

Getting up and leaving a meeting of the Community in the midst of a valid formal act--withou given one's consent to the act--in hopes of invalidating it, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 80/401)

After participating in a formal act of the Community giving robe-cloth to a Community official that the Community acted out of favoritism is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 81/404)

When the Community is dealing formally with an issue, the full Community must be present, individuals involved in the issue; the proceedings must follow the patterns set out in the Dha
(As 1/452)

If the Community unanimously believes that a bhikkhu is innocent of a charge made against declare him innocent on the basis of his memory of the events. (As 2/453)

If the Community unanimously believes that a bhikkhu was insane while committing offense they may absolve him of any responsibility for the offenses. (As 3/454)

If a bhikkhu commits an offense, he should willingly undergo the appropriate penalty in line actually did and the actual seriousness of the offense. (As 4/454)

If an important dispute cannot be settled by a unanimous decision, it should be submitted to opinion of the majority, if in accord with the Dhamma and Vinaya, is then considered decisiv

If a bhikkhu admits to an offense only after being interrogated in a formal meeting, the Comm carry out an act of censure against him, rescinding it only when he has mended his ways. (

If, in the course of a dispute, both sides act in ways unworthy of contemplatives, and the so penalties would only prolong the dispute, the Commu-nity as a whole may make a blanket c offenses. (As 7/456)

The Etiquette of a Contemplative

Training a novice or lay person to recite passages of Dhamma by rote is a pacittiya offense

Lying down at the same time, in the same lodging, with a novice or layman for more than thr
is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 5/234)

Digging soil or commanding that it be dug is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 10/254)

Intentionally cutting, burning or killing a living plant is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 11/256)

Giving food or medicines with one's own hand to a mendicant ordained outside of Buddhism
offense. (Pc 41/333)

When on almsround with another bhikkhu: Sending him back so that he won't witness any r planning to indulge in, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 42/335)

To sit down intruding on a man and a woman in their private quarters-- when one or both are and when another bhikkhu is not present--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 43/336)

Watching a field army--or similar large military force--on active duty, unless there is a suitabl
a pacittiya offense. (Pc 48/348)

Staying more than three consecutive nights with an army on active duty--even when one has be there--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 49/350)

Going to a battlefield, a roll call, the troops in battle formation or to see a review of the battle while one is staying with an army is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 50/351)

Taking an intoxicant is a pacittiya offense regardless of whether one is aware or not that it is intoxicant. (Pc 51/352)

Tickling another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 52/355)

Jumping and swimming in the water for fun is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 53/356)

Attempting to frighten another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 55/359)

Lighting a fire to warm oneself--or having it lit--when one does not need the warmth for one's pacittiya offense. (Pc 56/359)

Bathing more frequently than once a fortnight when residing in the middle Ganges Valley, ex
occasions, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 57/361)

Hiding another bhikkhu's bowl, robe, sitting cloth, needle case or belt--or to have it hidden--e joke or with the purpose of annoying him, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 60/368)

Traveling by arrangement with a group of thieves from one village to another--knowing that t thieves--is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 66/378)

Entering a king's sleeping chamber, unannounced, when both the king and queen are in the pacittiya offense. (Pc 83/407)

Picking up a valuable, or having it picked up, with the intent of keeping it in safe keeping for owner--except when one finds it in a monastery or in a dwelling one is visiting--is a pacittiya 84/409)

INTRODUCTION TO THE PATIMOKKHA RULES

~~~~~~

by Thanissaro Bhikkhu

In recent years more and more Westerners have come into contact with Theravada Buddhist monks, and many have become curious about the rules governing the monks' life. This introduction is meant to help satisfy that curiosity by giving a brief explanation of the rationale behind the rules and their enforcement, and by providing summaries of the rules, classed according to topic. Anyone interested in more information on the rules and their interpretation may look into the book, The Buddhist Monastic Code (TBMC), which is also available on DharmaNet (VINAYA.ZIP).

Rules

~~~~~

One of the first questions that many people ask is why the monks have rules in the first place. Since the Dhamma aims at freedom and depends on self-reliance, wouldn't it be better to let the monks develop their own innate sense of right and wrong unfettered by legalisms?

The answer to this question lies in the fact that the monks form a Community, reliant on the support of lay Buddhists, and anyone who has lived for any time in a communal situation knows that communities need rules in order to function peacefully. The Buddha, in laying down each rule, gave ten reasons for doing so: for the excellence of the Community, the peace of the Community, the curbing of the shameless, the comfort of well-behaved bhikkhus, the restraint of pollutants related to the present life, the prevention of pollutants related to the next life, the arousing of faith in the faithless, the increase of the faithful, the establishment of the true Dhamma and the fostering of discipline.

These reasons fall into three main types. The first two are external: to ensure peace and well-being within the Community itself, and to foster and protect faith among the laity, on whom the monks depend for their support. The third type of reason is internal: to help restrain and prevent mental pollutants within the individual monks. This last point quickly becomes apparent to anyone who seriously tries to keep to the rules, for they encourage mindfulness and circumspection in one's actions, qualities that carry over into the training of the mind.

Rules, however, are not the only way to express ethical norms, and the Buddha also made use of principles and models in teaching the virtues he wanted his following to develop. The rules thus function in a wider context than simple legality, and work together with the principles and models formulated by the Buddha to provide a complete training in behavior, with each side making up for the weaknesses of the other.

Principles and models serve as personal, subjective standards, and tend to be loosely defined. Their interpretation and application are left to the judgment of the individual. Thus they are difficult to enforce when an individual has blatantly overstepped the bounds of proper behavior.

Rules serve as more objective standards, and thus are more enforceable. To work, they must be precisely defined in a way acceptable to the Community at large. This precision, though, accounts for their weakness in general as universal guides to behavior. To begin with, a clear, practical line must be drawn between black and white, i.e., between what is and is not an infraction of the rule. In some cases, it is difficult to find a practical break off point that corresponds exactly to one's intuitive sense of what is right and wrong, so it is sometimes necessary to include the areas of gray either with the black or the white.

Secondly, the more precisely a rule is defined to suit a particular time and place, the less well it may fit other times and places. This is where principles and models come in: They indicate the spirit of the rules and aid in applying them to differing contexts.

Thus as you look at the rules and contemplate them, you should keep in mind that they function in a larger context: the teachings and practice of the Dhamma as a whole. The Buddha's own name for the religion he founded was Dhamma-Vinaya, so remember that neither half was meant to function without the other.

Origin of the Rules

The Buddha did not set out a code of rules all at once. Instead, he formulated rules one by one, in response to particular incidents. The Canon reports these incidents in each case, and often a knowledge of these "origin stories" can help in understanding the reasons behind the rules. For instance, the origin story to the rule forbidding lustful conduct between monks and women shows that the Buddha did not view women as somehow inferior or unclean. Rather, the rule comes from an incident where a monk was fondling the wife of a Brahmin who had come to visit his hut, and the Buddha wanted women to feel safe in the knowledge that when visiting monasteries they would not be in danger of being molested.

Some of the stories are classics of Buddhist literature, and show a dry, understated sense of humor together with a perceptive insight into human foibles. The element of humor here is very important, for without it there can be no intelligent set of rules to govern human behavior.

As time passed, and the number of rules grew, some of the Buddha's followers, headed by Ven. Upali, gathered the major rules into a set code -- the Patimokkha -- that eventually contained 227 rules. The minor rules, which came to number several hundred, they gathered into chapters loosely organized according to topic, called Khandhakas.

The Patimokkha as we now have it is embedded in a text called the Sutta Vibhanga. This presents each rule, preceded by its origin story, and followed by what permutations, if any, it went through before reaching its final form. The rule is then analyzed into its component elements, to show how the factors of effort, object, perception, intention and result do or do not mitigate the penalty assigned by the rule. The discussion then concludes with a list of extenuating circumstances for which there is no offense in breaking the rule.

Penalties

The system of penalties the Buddha worked out for the rules is based on two principles. The first is that the training aims primarily at the development of the mind. Thus the factors of intention and perception often determine whether or not a particular action is an infringement of a rule. For instance, killing an animal accidentally is, in terms of the mind of the agent, very different from killing it purposefully, and does not count as an infringement of the rule against killing.

There are a few rules where the factors of intention and perception make no difference at all -- such as in the rule forbidding a monk to drink alcohol -- but they almost always deal with situations where one would be expected to be mindful and perceptive enough to know what's going on, and so these rules too help in the training of the mind.

In any event, the system of analyzing each offense into the factors of effort, object, perception, intention and result shows how adherence to the rules leads directly to the development of concentration and discernment. If a monk is careful to view his actions in terms of these factors, he is developing mindfulness, an analytical approach to events in the present, and persistence. These are the first three factors of Awakening, and form the basis for the remaining four: rapture, serenity, concentration and equanimity.

The second principle used in determining penalties is based on the Buddha's observation to Ananda, one of his chief disciples, that friendship and companionship with the good is the whole of the religious life. Anyone who approaches the Dhamma seriously should be wise enough to realize that without the opportunity of associating and learning from people who are experienced on the path, it is well nigh impossible to make any progress on one's own. The monks are thus expected to value their good standing vis a vis the well-behaved members of their group, and so the system of punishments worked out by the Buddha revolves entirely around affecting the offender's status within the Community.

The Patimokkha classifies its rules into seven levels:

parajika, defeat;
sanghadisesa, entailing Communal meetings;
nissaggiya pacittiya, entailing forfeiture and confession;
pacittiya, entailing confession;
patidesaniya, entailing acknowledgement;
sekhiya, trainings; and adhikarana samatha, the settlement of issues.

If a monk breaks one of the four most serious rules -- the parajikas (Pr) -- he is expelled from the Community for life. If he breaks one of the next most serious classes of the rules -- the sanghadisesas (Sg) -- he is put on probation for six days, during which time he is stripped of his seniority, is not trusted to go anywhere unaccompanied by four other monks of regular standing, and daily has to confess his offense to every monk who lives in or happens to visit the monastery. At the end of his probation, twenty monks have to be convened to reinstate him to his original status.

The next three levels of rules -- nissaggiya pacittiya (NP), pacittiya (Pc), and patidesaniya (Pd) -- entail simple confession to a fellow monk, although the NP rules involved an article that has to be forfeited -- in most cases temporarily, although in a few cases the object has to be forfeited for good, in which case the offender has to confess his offense to the entire Community.

If a monk commits an offense and refuses to undergo the penalty, the Community may decide how seriously they take the matter. Since there is no monks' police beyond the individual's conscience, it may often happen that no one else knows of the offense to begin with, and nothing is done. If however it becomes common knowledge, and the Community regards it as a serious matter, they should talk privately with the monk to help him see the error of his ways. If he is recalcitrant, they may strip him temporarily of his status, either by censuring him, stripping him of his seniority, driving him from the Community, or suspending him from the Order of monks as a whole. If the offender sees the error of his ways and reforms his behavior accordingly, the Community may return him to his former status.

Now of course there may be some hardened souls among the monks who are unfazed by punishments of this sort, but we should note that the Buddha saw no use for physical coercion in enforcing his rules. If a monk had to be physically forced into abiding by the training, his heart wouldn't be in it, and there is no way that he could benefit from it. Such monks the Buddha considered beyond the pale, although he allowed them to stay on in the Community in hopes that eventually their conscience would get the better of them. In the meantime, the law of karma would guarantee that in the long run, they would not be getting away with anything at all.

The final two levels of rules in the Patimokkha do not give a particular penalty. The sekhiya (Sk) rules -- dealing primarily with etiquette -- simply state that one should work at following them. The Sutta Vibhanga explains that if one oversteps them out of disrespect, one should confess the fact. The adhikarana samatha (As) rules are not so much rules as they are principles to follow in dealing with issues that arise in the Community. If monks try to settle an issue without following these principles, their decision is invalid, and they must confess their wrongdoing to other monks who took no part in the decision.

Rule summaries

With this background, we may now look at the content of the rules. What follows is a list summarizing the basic meanings of the rules, organized into five major categories: dealing with Right Speech, Right Action, Right Livelihood, Communal harmony and the etiquette of a contemplative. The first three categories -- the factors of the Noble Eightfold Path that make up the training in heightened virtue -- are especially useful for showing how the rules relate to the Buddhist path as a whole.

These five categories are not sharply distinct types. Instead, they are more like the colors in the band of light thrown off by a prism -- discernably different, but shading into one another with no sharp dividing lines. Right Speech, for instance, often shades into Communal harmony, just as Right Livelihood shades into personal etiquette. Thus the placement of a particular rule in one category rather than another has been a somewhat arbitrary process. There are a few cases -- such as Pacittiyas 46 & 84 -- where the reason for placing the rule in a particular category will become clear only after reading the detailed discussions in TBMC.

Each rule is followed by a code giving the rule's number in its section of the Patimokkha.

If you count the number of rules in the list, you will see that they do not quite equal 227. This is because there are a couple of cases where I have condensed two or three Sekhiya rules into one summary.

RIGHT SPEECH
~~~~~~~~~~~~

M.117 defines wrong speech as lying, divisive speech, abusive speech and idle chatter.

Lying
~~~~~

Making an unfounded charge to a bhikkhu that he has committed a parajika offense, in hopes of having him disrobed, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 8)

Distorting the evidence while accusing a bhikkhu of having committed a parajika offense, in hopes of having him disrobed, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 9)

The intentional effort to misrepresent the truth to another individual is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 1)

Making an unfounded charge to a bhikkhu -- or getting someone else to make the charge to him -- that he is guilty of a sanghadisesa offense is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 76)

Divisive speech
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Tale-bearing among bhikkhus, in hopes of winning favor or causing a rift, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 3)

Abusive speech
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

An insult made with malicious intent to another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 2)

Idle chatter
~~~~~~~~~~~~

Visiting lay families -- without having informed an available bhikkhu -- before or after a meal to which one has been invited is a pacittiya offense except during the robe season or any time one is making a robe. (Pc 46)

Entering a village, town or city during the period after noon until the following dawn, without having taken leave of an available bhikkhu -- unless there is an emergency -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 85)

RIGHT ACTION

M.117 defines wrong action as killing living beings, taking what is not given, and engaging in sexual misconduct.

Killing
~~~~~~~

Intentionally causing the death of a human being, even if it is still a fetus, is a parajika offense. (Pr 3)

Pouring water that one knows to contain living beings -- or having it poured -- on grass or clay is a pacittiya offense. Pouring anything that would kill the beings into such water -- or having it poured -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 20)

Deliberately killing an animal -- or having it killed -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 61)

Using water, knowing that it contains living beings that will die from one's using it, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 62)

Taking what is not given

The theft of anything worth 1/24 ounce troy of gold or more is a parajika offense. (Pr 2)

Having given another bhikkhu a robe on a condition and then -- angry and displeased -- snatching it back or having it snatched back is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 25)

Making use of cloth or a bowl stored under shared ownership -- unless the shared ownership has been rescinded or one is taking the item on trust -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 59)

Sexual Misconduct

Voluntary sexual intercourse -- genital, anal or oral -- with a human being, non-human being or common animal is a parajika offense. (Pr 1)

Intentionally causing oneself to emit semen, or getting someone else to cause one to emit semen -- except during a dream -- is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 1)

Lustful bodily contact with a woman whom one perceives to be a woman is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 2)

Making a lustful remark to a woman about her genitals, her anus or about her performing sexual intercourse is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 3)

Telling a woman that she would benefit from having sexual intercourse with oneself is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 4)

Getting an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or beat a robe that one has worn at least once is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 4)

Getting an unrelated bhikkhuni to wash, dye or card wool that has not been made into cloth or yarn is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 17)

Lying down at the same time in the same lodging with a woman is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 6)

Teaching more than six sentences of Dhamma to a woman except in response to a question, is a pacittiya offense unless a knowledgeable man is present. (Pc 7)

Exhorting a bhikkhuni about the eight vows of respect -- except when one has been authorized to do so by the Community -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 21)

Exhorting a bhikkhuni on any topic at all after sunset -- except when they request it -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 22)

Going to the bhikkhunis' quarters and exhorting a bhikkhuni about the eight vows of respect -- except when she is ill or has requested the instruction -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 23)

Giving robe cloth to an unrelated bhikkhuni without receiving anything in exchange is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 25)

Sewing a robe -- or having one sewn -- for an unrelated bhikkhuni is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 26)

Traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhuni from one village to another -- except when the road is risky or there are other dangers -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 27)

Traveling by arrangement with a bhikkhuni upriver or downriver in the same boat -- except when crossing a river -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 28)

Sitting or lying down alone with a bhikkhuni in a place out of sight and out of hearing is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 30)

Sitting or lying down with a woman or women in a private, secluded place with no other man present is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 44)

Sitting or lying down alone with a woman in an unsecluded but private place is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 45)

Traveling by arrangement with a woman from one village to another is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 67)

RIGHT LIVELIHOOD

M.117 defines wrong livelihood as scheming, persuading, hinting, belittling and pursuing gain with gain.

General

Deliberately lying to another person that one has attained a superior human state is a parajika offense. (Pr 4)

Acting as a go-between to arrange a marriage, an affair or a date between a man and a woman not married to each other is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 5)

Engaging in trade with anyone except one's co-religionists is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 20)

Persuading a donor to give to oneself a gift that he or she had planned to give to the Community -- when one knows that it was intended for the Community -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 30)

Telling an unordained person of one's actual superior human attainments is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 8)

Persuading a donor to give to another individual a gift that he or she had planned to give to a Community -- when one knows that it was intended for the Community -- is a pacittiya offense (Pc 82)

Robes

Keeping a piece of robe-cloth for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it under dual ownership -- except when the end-of-vassa or kathina privileges are in effect -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 1)

Being in a separate zone from any of one's three robes at dawn -- except when the end-of-vassa or kathina privileges are in effect, or one has received formal authorization from the Community -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 2)

Keeping out-of-season cloth for more than 30 days when it is not enough to make a requisite and one has expectation for more -- except when the end-of-vassa and kathina privileges are in effect -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 3)

Accepting robe cloth from an unrelated bhikkhuni without giving her anything in exchange is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. NP 5)

Asking for and receiving robe cloth from an unrelated lay person, except when one's robes have been stolen or destroyed, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 6)

Asking for and receiving excess cloth from unrelated lay people when one's robes have been stolen or destroyed is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 7)

When a lay person who is not a relative is planning to get a robe for one, but has yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving the robe after making a request that would raise its cost is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 8)

When two or more lay people who are not one's relatives are planning to get separate robes for one, but have yet to ask one what kind of robe one wants: Receiving a robe from them after asking them to pool their funds to get one robe -- out of a desire for something fine -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 9)

Making a felt blanket/rug with silk mixed in it for one's own use -- or having it made -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 11)

Making a felt blanket/rug entirely of black wool for one's own use -- or having it made -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 12)

Making a felt blanket/rug that is more than one-half black wool for one's own use -- or having it made -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 13)

Unless one has received authorization to do so from the Community, making a felt blanket/rug for one's own use -- or having it made -- less than six years after one's last one was made is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 14)

Making a felt sitting rug for one's own use -- or having it made -- without incorporating a one-span piece of old felt is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 15)

Seeking and receiving a rains-bathing cloth before the fourth month of the hot season is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. Using a rains-bathing cloth before the last two weeks of the fourth month of the hot season is also a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 24)

Taking thread that one has asked for improperly, and getting weavers to weave cloth from it -- when they are unrelated and have not made a previous offer to weave -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 26)

When donors who are not relatives -- and have not invited one to ask -- have arranged for weavers to weave robe cloth intended for one: Receiving the cloth after getting the weavers to increase the amount of thread used in it is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 27)

Keeping robe cloth offered in urgency past the end of the robe season after having accepted it during the last eleven days of the Rains Retreat is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 28)

When one is living in a dangerous wilderness abode during the first month of the cold season, and has left one of one's robes in the village where one normally goes for alms: Being away from the abode and the village for more than six nights at a stretch -- except when authorized by the Community -- is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 29)

Making use of an unmarked robe is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 58)

Acquiring an overly large sitting cloth after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense. (Pc 89)

Acquiring an overly large skin-eruption covering cloth after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense. (Pc 90)

Acquiring an overly large rains-bathing cloth after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one cut the cloth down to size before confessing the offense. (Pc 91)

Acquiring an overly large robe after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one cut the robe down to size before confessing the offense. (Pc 92)

Food

~~~~

Eating any of the five staple foods that a lay person has offered as the result of a bhikkhuni's prompting -- unless the lay person was already planning to offer the food before her prompting -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 29)

Eating food obtained from the same public alms center two days running, unless one is too ill to leave the center, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 31)

Eating a meal to which four or more individual bhikkhus have been specifically invited -- except on special occasions -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 32)

Eating a meal before going to another meal to which one was invited, or accepting an invitation to one meal and eating elsewhere instead, is a pacittiya offense except when one is ill or at the time of giving cloth or making robes. (Pc 33)

Accepting more than three bowlfuls of food that the donors prepared for their own use as presents or for provisions for a journey is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 34)

Eating staple or non-staple food that is not left-over, after having earlier in the day finished a meal during which one turned down an offer to eat further staple food, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 35)

Eating staple or non-staple food in the period after noon until the next dawn is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 37)

Eating food that a bhikkhu -- oneself or another -- formally received on a previous day is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 38)

Eating finer foods, after having asked for them for one's own sake -- except when ill -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 39)

Eating food that has not been formally given is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 40)
~~~~

Eating staple or non-staple food, after having accepted it from the hand of an unrelated bhikkhuni in a village area, is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 1)

Eating staple food accepted at a meal to which one has been invited and where a bhikkhuni has given directions, based on favoritism, as to which bhikkhu should get which food and none of the bhikkhus have dismissed her, is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 2)

Eating staple or non-staple food, after accepting it -- when one is neither ill nor invited -- at the home of a family formally designated as "in training," is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 3)

Eating an unannounced gift of staple or non-staple food after accepting it in a dangerous wilderness abode when one is not ill is a patidesaniya offense. (Pd 4)

A bhikkhu who is not ill should not ask for rice, bean curry or any other food not covered by Pacittiya 39. (Sk 37)

Lodgings

Building a plastered hut -- or having it built -- without a sponsor, destined for one's own use, without having obtained the Community's approval, is a sanghadisesa offense. Building a plastered hut -- or having it built -- without a sponsor, destined for one's own use, exceeding the standard measurements, is also a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 6)

Building a hut with a sponsor -- or having it built -- destined for one's own use, without having obtained the Community's approval, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 7)

When a bhikkhu is building or repairing a large dwelling for his own use, using resources donated by another, he may not reinforce the window or door frames with more than three layers of roofing material or plaster. To exceed this is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 19)

Acquiring a bed or bench with legs longer than eight Sugata fingerbreadths after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one cut the legs down before confessing the offense. (Pc 87)

Acquiring a bed or bench stuffed with cotton down after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one remove the stuffing before confessing the offense. (Pc 88)

Medicine

Keeping any of the five tonics -- ghee, fresh butter, oil, honey or sugar/molasses -- for more than seven days, unless one determines to use them only externally, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 23)

When a supporter has made an offer to supply medicines to the Community: Asking the donor for medicine outside the terms of the offer when one is not ill, or asking him/her for medicine to use for a non-medicinal purpose, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 47)

Money

When a fund has been set up with a steward indicated by a bhikkhu: Obtaining an article from the fund as a result of having prompted the steward more than the allowable number of times is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 10)

Taking gold or money, having someone else take it, or consenting to its being placed down as a gift for oneself, is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 18)

Obtaining gold or money through trade is a nissaggiya pacittiya

offense. (NP 19)

Bowls and other requisites
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Carrying wool that has not been made into cloth or yarn for more than three leagues is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 16)

Keeping an alms bowl for more than ten days without determining it for use or placing it under dual ownership is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 21)

Asking for a new alms bowl when one's current bowl is not beyond repair is a nissaggiya pacittiya offense. (NP 22)

Acquiring a needle box made of ivory, bone or horn after making it -- or having it made -- for one's own use is a pacittiya offense requiring that one break the box before confessing the offense. (Pc 86)

COMMUNAL HARMONY
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

To persist in one's attempts at a schism, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 10)

To persist in supporting a potential schismatic, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community, is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 11)

To persist in being difficult to admonish, after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Community, is a sanghadisesa

offense. (Sg 12)

To persist -- after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in the Community -- in criticizing an act of banishment performed against oneself is a sanghadisesa offense. (Sg 13)

When a trustworthy female lay follower accuses a bhikkhu of having committed a parajika, sanghadisesa or pacittiya offense while sitting alone with a woman in a private, secluded place, the Community should investigate the charge and deal with the bhikkhu in accordance with whatever he admits having done. (Ay 1)

When a trustworthy female lay follower accuses a bhikkhu of having committed a sanghadisesa or pacittiya offense while sitting alone with a woman in a private place, the Community should investigate the charge and deal with the bhikkhu in accordance with whatever he admits having done. (Ay 2)

Telling an unordained person of another bhikkhu's serious offense -- unless one is authorized by the Community to do so -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 9)

Persistently replying evasively or keeping silent when being questioned in a meeting of the Community in order to conceal one's own offenses -- after a formal charge of evasiveness or uncooperativeness has been brought against one -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 12)

If a Community official is innocent of prejudice, criticizing him within earshot of another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 13)

When one has set a bed, bench, mattress or stool belonging to the Community out in the open: Leaving its immediate vicinity without putting it away or arranging to have it put away is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 14)

When one has spread bedding out in a dwelling belonging to the Community: Departing from the monastery without putting it away or arranging to have it put away is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 15)

Encroaching on another bhikkhu's sleeping or sitting place in a dwelling belonging to the Community, with the sole purpose of making him uncomfortable and forcing him to leave, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 16)

Causing a bhikkhu to be evicted from a dwelling belonging to the Community -- when one's primary motive is anger -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 17)

Sitting or lying down on a bed or bench with detachable legs on an unplanked loft in a dwelling belonging to the Community, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 18)

Saying that a properly authorized bhikkhu exhorts the bhikkhunis for the sake of personal gain -- when in fact that is not the case -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 24)

Deliberately tricking another bhikkhu into breaking Pacittiya 35, in hopes of finding fault with him, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 36)

Speaking or acting disrespectfully when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach of the training rules is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 54)

Agitating to re-open an issue, knowing that it was properly dealt with, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 63)

Not informing other bhikkhus of a serious offense that one knows another bhikkhu has committed -- either out of a desire to protect him from having to undergo the penalty, or to protect him from the jeering remarks of other bhikkhus -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 64)

Acting as the preceptor in the ordination of a person one knows to be less than 20 years old is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 65)

Refusing to give up the wrong view that there is nothing wrong in intentionally transgressing the Buddha's ordinances -- after the third announcement of a formal rebuke in a meeting of the Community -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 68)

Consorting, joining in communion or lying down under the same roof with a bhikkhu who has been suspended and not been restored -- knowing that such is the case -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 69)

Supporting, receiving services from, consorting or lying down under the same roof with an expelled novice -- knowing that he has been expelled -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 70)

Saying something as a ploy to excuse oneself from training under a training rule when being admonished by another bhikkhu for a breach of the rule is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 71)

Criticizing the discipline in the presence of another bhikkhu, in hopes of preventing its study, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 72)

Using half-truths to deceive others into believing that one is ignorant of the rules in the Patimokkha, after one has already heard the Patimokkha in full three times, and a formal act exposing one's deceit has been brought against one, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 73)

Giving a blow to another bhikkhu, when motivated by anger, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 74)

Making a threatening gesture against another bhikkhu when motivated by anger is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 75)

Saying to another bhikkhu that he may have broken a rule unknowingly, simply for the purpose of causing him anxiety, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 77)

Eavesdropping on bhikkhus involved in an argument over an issue -- with the intention of using what they say against them -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 78)

Complaining about a formal act of the Community to which one gave one's consent -- if one knows that the act was carried out in accordance with the rule -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 79)

Getting up and leaving a meeting of the Community in the midst of a valid formal act -- without having first given one's consent to the act, and with the intention of invalidating it -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 80)

After participating in a formal act of the Community giving robe-cloth to a Community official: Complaining that the Community acted out of favoritism is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 81)

When the Community is dealing formally with an issue, the full Community must be present, as must all the individuals involved in the issue; the proceedings must follow the patterns set out in the Dhamma and Vinaya. (As 1)

If the Community unanimously believes that a bhikkhu is innocent of a charge made against him, they may declare him innocent on the basis of his memory of the events. (As 2)

If the Community unanimously believes that a bhikkhu was insane while committing offenses against the rules, they may absolve him of any responsibility for the offenses. (As 3)

If a bhikkhu commits an offense, he should willingly undergo the appropriate penalty in line with what he actually did and the actual seriousness of the offense. (As 4)

If an important dispute cannot be settled by a unanimous decision, it should be submitted to a vote. The opinion of the majority, if in accordance with the Dhamma and Vinaya, is then considered decisive. (As 5)

If a bhikkhu admits to an offense only after being interrogated in a formal meeting, the Community should carry out an act of censure against him, rescinding it only when he has mended his ways. (As 6)

If, in the course of a dispute, both sides act in ways unworthy of contemplatives, and the sorting out of the penalties would only prolong the dispute, the Community as a whole may make a blanket confession of its light offenses. (As 7)

THE ETIQUETTE OF A CONTEMPLATIVE

Training a novice or lay person to recite passages of Dhamma by rote is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 4)

Lying down at the same time, in the same lodging, with a novice or layman for more than three nights running is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 5)

Digging soil or commanding that it be dug is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 10)

Intentionally cutting, burning or killing a living plant is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 11)

Handing food or medicine to a mendicant ordained outside of Buddhism is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 41)

When on almsround with another bhikkhu: Sending him back so that he won't witness any misconduct one is planning to indulge in is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 42)

To sit down intruding on a man and a woman in their private quarters -- when one or both are sexually aroused, and when another bhikkhu is not present -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 43)

Watching a field army -- or similar large military force -- on active duty, unless there is a suitable reason, is a pacittiya

offense. (Pc 48)

Staying more than three consecutive nights with an army on active duty -- even when one has a suitable reason to be there -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 49)

Going to a battlefield, a roll call, an array of the troops in battle formation or to see a review of the battle units while one is staying with an army is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 50)

Taking an intoxicant is a pacittiya offense regardless of whether one is aware or not that it is an intoxicant. (Pc 51)

Tickling another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 52)

Jumping and swimming in the water for fun is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 53)

Attempting to frighten another bhikkhu is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 55)

Lighting a fire to warm oneself -- or having it lit -- when one does not need the warmth for one's health is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 56)

Bathing more frequently than once a fortnight when residing in the middle Ganges Valley, except on certain occasions, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 57)

Hiding another bhikkhu's bowl, robe, sitting cloth, needle case or belt -- or having it hid -- either as a joke or with the purpose of annoying him, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 60)

Traveling by arrangement with a group of thieves from one village to another -- knowing that they are thieves -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 66)

Entering a king's sleeping chamber, unannounced, when both the king and queen are in the chamber, is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 83)

Picking up a valuable, or having it picked up, with the intent of putting it in safe keeping for the owner -- except when one finds it in a monastery or in a dwelling one is visiting -- is a pacittiya offense. (Pc 84)

A bhikkhu should wear his upper and lower robes even all around. (Sk 1 & 2)

Etiquette in Inhabited Areas

When going or sitting in inhabited areas, a bhikkhu should:

wear his robes so that they hang down evenly, covering his chest, knees, wrists, and everything in between.

refrain from playing with his hands or feet.

keep his gaze lowered except when it is necessary to look up.

refrain from hitching up his robe so that it exposes the side of his body.

refrain from laughing loudly or speaking loudly.

refrain from swinging his body, arms or head.

refrain from putting his arms akimbo.

refrain from covering his head unless the weather is unbearably cold or hot.

refrain from walking on tiptoe or just on his heels.

refrain from sitting with his arms around his knees. (Sk

3-26)

Receiving and eating alms food

When receiving alms, a bhikkhu should:

be mindful to receive them appreciatively.

focus his attention on the alms bowl.

take bean curry only in proper proportion to the rice.

accept no more food than will fill the bowl level to the top rim. (Sk 27-30)

When eating, a bhikkhu should:

be mindful to eat his food appreciatively.

focus his attention on the bowl.

eat his food methodically, from one side of the bowl to the other.

eat bean curry only in proper proportion to the rice.

level his rice before eating from it.

refrain from hiding his substantial food with rice, out of a hope of getting more.

refrain from looking at another bhikkhu's bowl intent on finding fault with him for not sharing his food.

refrain from making extra-large mouthfuls.

eat his rice in rounded mouthfuls.

refrain from opening his mouth until he has brought food to it.

refrain from putting his whole hand in his mouth.

refrain from speaking when there is so much food in his mouth that it affects his pronunciation.

refrain from lifting a large handful of food from his bowl and breaking off mouthfuls with the other hand.

refrain from nibbling bit by bit at his mouthfuls of food.

refrain from stuffing out his cheeks.

refrain from shaking food off his hands or scattering rice about.

refrain from sticking out his tongue or smacking his lips.

refrain from making a slurping noise.

refrain from licking his hands, his bowl or his lips.

refrain from accepting a water vessel with a hand soiled by food.

refrain from throwing away -- in an inhabited area -- bowl-rinsing water that has grains of rice in it.(Sk 31-36, 38-56)

Teaching Dhamma

When his listener is not ill, a bhikkhu should not teach Dhamma if the listener:

has an umbrella in his/her hand.

has a staff in his/her hand.

has a knife in his/her hand.

has a weapon in his/her hand.

is wearing shoes, boots or sandals.

is sitting in a vehicle when the bhikkhu is in a lower vehicle or not in a vehicle at all.

is lying down when the bhikkhu is sitting or standing.

is sitting holding his/her knees.

is wearing a hat or a turban, or has covered his/her head with a scarf or shawl.

is sitting on a seat while the bhikkhu is sitting on the ground.

is sitting on a high seat while the bhikkhu is sitting on a lower seat.

is sitting while the bhikkhu is standing.

is walking ahead of the bhikkhu.

is walking on a path while the bhikkhu is walking beside the path. (Sk 57-72)

Urinating, defecating & spitting
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Unless he is ill, a bhikkhu should not urinate or defecate while standing. (Sk 73)

Unless he is ill, a bhikkhu should not urinate, defecate or spit on living crops or in water that is fit for bathing or drinking. (Sk 74-75)

VIOLENCE AND DISRUPTION IN SOCIETY

A Study of the Early Buddhist Texts

by Elizabeth J. Harris

The Wheel Publication No. 392/393
ISBN 955-24-0119-4

Published in 1994

Copyright 1990 by Elizabeth J. Harris

Originally published in //Dialogue//, New Series Vo. XVII (1990) by The Ecumenical Institute for Study & Dialogue, 490/5 Havelock Road, Colombo 6, Sri Lanka. Reprinted in the Wheel Series with the consent of the author and the original publisher.

BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
KANDY SRI LANKA

* * *

DharmaNet Edition 1994

Formatted for DharmaNet by John Bullitt

This electronic edition is offered for free distribution via DharmaNet by arrangement with the publisher.

DharmaNet International
P.O. Box 4951, Berkeley CA 94704-4951

* * * * * * * *

CONTENTS

Introduction
Part 1. The Forms of Violence
Part 2. Reasons for Buddhism's Attitude to Violence Part 3. The Roots of Violence
Part 4. Can Violent Tendencies Be Eradicated?
Conclusion
Notes

* * * * * * * *

INTRODUCTION

At 8.15 a.m. Japanese time, on August 6th 1945, a U.S. plane dropped a bomb named "Little Boy" over the center of the city of Hiroshima. The total number of people who were killed immediately and in the following months was probably close to 200,000. Some claim that this bomb and the one which fell on Nagasaki ended the war quickly and saved American and Japanese lives -- a consequentialist theory to justify horrific violence against innocent civilians. Others say the newly developed weapons had to be tested as a matter of necessity.

Hiroshima and Nagasaki ushered in a new age. Humankind's tendency towards conflict and violence can now wipe out the entire human habitat. The weapon used on Hiroshima had a destructive force of 12.5 kilotons; a contemporary cruise missile has the power of 200 kilotons. All war, violence and conflict at national and international levels in the last quarter of the twentieth century has thus taken on sinister proportions. It is not that human nature has changed but that the resources at our disposal have. No country is free from the threat of nuclear annihilation; no country is free from internal conflict and the barrel of the gun. It is against the urgency of this background that the teachings of Buddhism about violence must be studied and interpreted.

Excerpts such as the following have been extracted and used to sum up the Buddhist attitude to this issue:

> All tremble at violence,
> All fear death;
> Comparing oneself with others
> One should neither kill nor cause others to kill.

Dhp. v. 129

> Victory breeds hatred,
> The defeated live in pain.
> Happily the peaceful live,
> Giving up victory and defeat.

Dhp. v. 201

These verses would seem to indicate a clearly defined Buddhist perspective. Yet such text extraction can lead to misrepresentation if not undergirded with a strong supporting framework. Furthermore, if Buddhism has a message for a violent world, it must do more than condemn violence. It must be able to interpret its nature, its roots, its hold on the world and the possibilities for its transformation. It must dialogue with other philosophies and ideologies such as utilitarianism, [1] scientific socialism and the belief in a just or "holy" war. For instance, utilitarianism still lives among those who believe that violence can be justified if more people will benefit than will be hurt, and the consequentialist theory mentioned with reference to Hiroshima is similar to this. Then there are those who hold that certain forms of injustice and exploitation can only be destroyed through violence and that history will justify its legitimacy. The view that violent change is a historical inevitability is close to this. Buddhism must be able to comment on the stance which argues that if Hitler had been assassinated early in his career numerous deaths would have been avoided, or the claim that force is justified against a government which is using violence against its people under the pretext of law. If it cannot, it will stand accused of irrelevance.

In this study, I define violence as that which harms, debases, dehumanizes or brutalizes human beings, animals or the natural world; and the violent person, as one who causes harm in speech or action, either directly or indirectly, or whose mind is filled with such thoughts. [2] The approach will be scriptural, and the resource I use will be the Pali texts. The basic issue I investigate is what this resource says on the subject of violence. Identity is not assumed between the sixth century B.C. and the twentieth century A.D. Rather, the potential of the scriptures of any religion to provide guidelines for action and models for contemporary interpretation is recognized. Hence, the following specific questions will provide the framework for my study:

(1) What different forms of violence do the Buddhist texts show knowledge of?

(2) For what reasons do the texts condemn violence or call it into question?

(3) What do they see to be the roots of violence?

(4) Do the texts give any guidelines for the eradication of violence in the individual or in society?

* * * * * * * *

1

THE FORMS OF VIOLENCE

The Buddha's Awareness

The sermons of the Buddha, as they have been handed down to us, are replete with details about the contemporary realities of the times. They reveal much about the social contexts within which the Buddha moved and the faces of society with which he was familiar.

The Canki Sutta shows a brahmin overlord insisting that the Buddha is equal to him in birth, riches and the knowledge of the Vedas. He continues:

> Indeed, sirs, King Seniya Bimbisara of Magadha with his wife and children has gone to the recluse Gotama for refuge for life. Indeed, sirs, King Pasenadi of Kosala with his wife and children has gone to the recluse Gotama for refuge for life. Indeed, sirs, the brahmin Pokkharasati with his wife and children has gone to the recluse Gotama for refuge for life. [3]

Important here is the reference to kings. The texts show clearly that the Buddha had an intimate knowledge of statecraft. Records of his conversations with Pasenadi and Bimbisara show him speaking in a language which those involved in government could understand. Pasenadi, for instance, comes through as a man torn between his duties as king, involving some degree of ruthlessness, and his concern for spiritual things. At one moment, he is seen preparing a sacrifice in which many animals are to be slaughtered and menials beaten and, at another, speaking seriously with the Buddha about the dangers of wealth, power and evil conduct. [4] What is significant is the level of knowledge shown by the Buddha about the pressures on a king such as Pasenadi. His use of similes and illustrations, for instance, appeals to Pasenadi's experience, including the central concern of all rulers at that time -- defense against aggression. At one point Pasenadi asks about the value of gifts and to whom a gift should be given for the gift to bear much fruit. The Buddha replies:

> A gift bears much fruit if given to a virtuous person, not to a vicious person. As to that, sire, I also will ask you a question. Answer it as you think fit. What think you, sire? Suppose that you were at war, and that the contending armies were being mustered. And there were to arrive a noble youth, untrained, unskilled, unpracticed, undrilled, timid, trembling, affrighted, one who would run away -- would you keep that man? Would such a man be any good to you? [5]

The Buddha thus uses similes from Pasenadi's military world to indicate that virtue does not depend on birth but on qualities of character. In fact, in a number of texts, illustrations drawn from the context of the state, defense and martial arts can be found. Not only does the Buddha make use of military metaphors, but the texts show that he had extensive knowledge of the strategies of war, punishment and political patronage. The Mahadukkhakkhandha Sutta, for instance, uses graphic description to show that war and conflict spring from sensual desires:

> And again, monks, when sense pleasures are the cause ... having taken sword and shield, having girded on bow and quiver, both sides mass for battle and arrows are hurled and knives are hurled and swords are flashing. Those who wound with arrows and wound with knives and decapitate with their swords, these suffer dying then and pain like unto dying....
>
> And again, monks, when sense pleasures are the cause ... having taken sword and shield, having girded on bow and quiver, they leap on to the newly daubed ramparts, and arrows are hurled and knives are hurled and swords are flashing. Those who wound with arrows and wound with knives and pour boiling cow-dung over them and crush them with the portcullis and decapitate them > with their swords, these suffer dying then and pain like unto dying. [6]

In the next part of the sutta, a variety of horrific punishments are described and a keen awareness of their nature is seen:

> Kings, having arrested such a one, deal out various punishments: they lash him with whips and they lash him with canes and they lash him with rods, and they cut off his hand ... his foot ... his hand and foot ... his ear ... and they give him the "gruel-pot" punishment ... the "shell-tonsure" punishment ... "Rahu's mouth" ... the "fire-garland" ... the "flaming hand" ... etc.[7]

In another sermon handed down to us, two men are pointed out while the Buddha is talking to a headman, Pataliya. One of them is garlanded and well-groomed; the other is tightly bound, about to lose his head. We are told that the same deed has been committed by both. The difference is that the former has killed the foe of the king and has been rewarded for it, whilst the latter was the king's enemy. [8] Hence it is stressed that the laws of the state are not impartial: they can mete out punishment or patronage according to the wish of the king and his cravings for revenge or security.

It cannot be argued that the Buddha was ignorant of the political realities of his day. He spurned frivolous talk about such things as affairs of state [9] but he was neither indifferent to them nor uninformed. On the contrary, his concern for the human predicament made him acutely aware of the potential for violence within the economic and political forces around him. The political milieu of rival republics and monarchies in northern India forms a backdrop to his teaching, whether the rivalries between the kingdoms of Kosala and Magadha or the struggles of the republics to maintain their traditions and their independence in the face of the rising monarchies. [10]

However, the violence attached to politics and statecraft forms one section only of the picture which emerges from the texts. Violence is detected in the brahminical sacrificial system, in the austerities practiced by some wanderers, and in the climate of philosophical dispute among the many //sramana// groupings as well as in the area of social discrimination and the economic order.

Religion, to take this first, is seen as a cause of physical, verbal and mental violence. The violence inflicted through sacrifices is described thus:

> Now at that time a great sacrifice was arranged to be held for the king, the Kosalan Pasenadi. Five hundred bulls, five hundred bullocks and as many heifers, goats and rams were led to the pillar to be sacrificed. And they that were slaves and menials and craftsmen, hectored about by blows and by fear, made the preparations with tearful faces weeping. [11]

In contrast, the //sramana// groupings within this period eschewed sacrifice. Denying the authority of the Vedas and a realm of gods to be manipulated, their emphasis was on renunciation, the gaining of insight and philosophical debate. Nevertheless, a form of violence was present. The austerities practiced by some of those who came to the Buddha were worse than any enemy might inflict as punishment. The Buddha himself confessed to having practiced them before his enlightenment. In the Mahasaccaka [12] and the Mahasihanada [13] Suttas there is vivid description of the excesses undertaken. Taken together, the two suttas cover the complete range of contemporary Indian practices, which included nakedness or the wearing of rags, tree-bark fiber, kusa grass, wood shavings or human hair; deprivation of food to the extent of existing on a single fruit or rice grain; self-mortification through lying on thorns or exposing the body to extremes of heat and cold; copying the habits of animals such as walking on all fours or eating similar food. It was the Buddha's view that such practices were a form of violence, although undertaken in the name of religion and truth-seeking. [14]

Undertaken also in the name of truth were verbal battles between different groups of wanderers. The Buddha's followers, in fact, were frequently at the receiving end of an aggressive campaign by other groups to ridicule their beliefs. The description of these incidents gives useful evidence of the prevailing atmosphere. [15] In the Udumbarika Sihanada Sutta, Nigrodha the Jain claims:

> Why, householder, if the Samana Gotama were to come into this assembly, with a single question only could we settle him; yea, methinks we could roll him over like an empty pot. [16]

In the Kassapa Sihanada Sutta, the Buddha speaks out:

> Now there are, Kassapa, certain recluses and brahmins who are clever, subtle, experienced in controversy, hair splitters, who go about, one would think, breaking into pieces by their wisdom the speculations of their adversaries. [17]

Violence of state and violence in the name of religion were two faces of the Buddha's society. Violence within the economic order was another. The sixth century B.C. in India witnessed urbanization and commercial growth. Savatthi, Saketa, Kosambhi, Benares, Rajagaha and Champa would have been some of the most important centers known to the Buddha, who spent much time in urban environments. As Trevor Ling argues in his study, //The Buddha//, [18] the growth of these cities spawned individualism and competition in response to changing economic patterns and social dislocation. The potentially violent tensions generated are reflected in the Buddha's teachings through such themes as the rightful gaining of wealth, the place of service and work, [19] correct duties towards employees, and the wise choosing of friends. For instance, a Samyutta Nikaya text contains a conversation between Rasiya the Headman and the Buddha. The Buddha speaks out against those who gain wealth by unlawful means, especially with violence. [20] Then, in the Sigalovada Sutta, the Buddha outlines rights and duties for the different social relationships in society. [21] An employer is advised to: assign work according to the strength of the employee; supply food and wages; tend workers in sickness; share with them unusual delicacies; grant them leave. The same sutta comments on friendship and says that four foes in the likeness of friends should be avoided: a rapacious person, a man of words not deeds, the flatterer and the fellow-waster.

The study of what the Early Buddhist texts say about violence must be seen against this background of political violence and social change. The empiricism of Early Buddhism also demands this -- the Buddha's appeal to what is observed in society as a basis for evaluating the truth of his teachings. [22]

The analysis of historical context calls into question whether any philosophy or thought system can have universal relevance. Since the human situation across the permutations of history is indeed subject to change, the issue is a valid one. Yet there is also a continuity in evolution such that parallels can be drawn between the forces at work in the sixth century B.C. and those operating in the latter part of the twentieth century. The sixth century B.C. is not identical to the twentieth but neither is it completely different. The teaching of Early Buddhism on violence, therefore, should not be used as if there were either identity or utter separateness. In each new context and historical period, there is a need for re-interpretation and re-evaluation. At this point, it is enough to stress that the texts reveal much about Indian society at the time of the Buddha and about the Buddha's own breadth of awareness. It cannot be argued that he had no knowledge of the violence within his own society or that his words were divorced from the tensions around him. On the contrary, their import drew urgency from contemporary observable reality.

The Buddha's Approach to Empirical Questions

Central to Buddhism's approach to the analysis of social phenomena is the doctrine of //paticca samuppada// or dependent origination, which can be expressed thus:

> When this is, that is; this arising, that arises.
> When this is not, that is not; this ceasing, that ceases.
>
> //Imasmim sati idam hoti; imass' uppada idam uppajjati//.
> //Imasmim asati idam na hoti;imassa nirodha idamnirujjhati//.

Events and tendencies within the material world are interpreted from the standpoint of causality. Phenomena are conditioned. Buddhism, therefore, calls for an analytical attitude in dealing with anything to do with human life, including the question of violence. [23]

One consequence which flows from this is that generalizations and statements based on categories of pure reason are suspect. Evidence can be drawn from the suttas to show that the Buddha insisted on making discriminations when presented with dogmatically held views. For instance, in the Subha Sutta, Subha comes out with the view that a householder is accomplishing the right path and one who has renounced is not. The Buddha replies: "On this point, brahmin youth, I discriminate, on this point I do not speak definitely." He stresses that both householder (//gihin//) and the one who has renounced (//pabbajita//) can be living wrongly; both can be living rightly. The deciding factor is not the label, but rightness of action, speech and thought. [24]

A similar approach can be seen in the Esukari Sutta where the Buddha speaks about service. In this case, the deciding factor as to whether a person should serve is whether the one who serves is better for the service in terms of such things as growing in moral habit and wisdom. [25] Then, when faced with the question of sacrifice by the brahmin Ujjaya, there is again discrimination according to condition. Not every sacrifice is blameworthy. Where living creatures are not killed or where the sacrifice is an offering for the welfare of the family, there is no blame: "No, brahmin, I do not praise every sacrifice. Yet, I would not withhold praise from every sacrifice." [26] The deciding factor here is the presence of suffering for animals.

//Paticca samuppada// opposes the human tendency to generalize and encourages analysis on the basis of empirical data and moral values applied to these. [27] It criticizes standpoints which use inappropriate categories through insufficient observation and dogmatic statements about right and wrong which do not take empirically observed facts into account.

To understand Early Buddhism's analysis of violence, this conditionality is important. When the Buddha speaks about the causes and the remedies of violence, his approach is dependent on the conditions prevalent in a particular situation. For instance, psychological factors are not emphasized when the Buddha is speaking to those in power about societal disruption; social and economic causes are stressed instead. [28] Yet, in other contexts, particularly when monks are addressed, it is the psychological factor which is given prominence. [29] In contrast again, with King Pasenadi, the Buddha does not condemn violence in defense of the realm but places it within the larger context of impermanence and death to encourage reflection. [30]

It is possible to hold together the above divergent emphases if we bear in mind the full implications of conditionality and the empiricism of Early Buddhism. We should not expect dogmatic, non-empirical generalizations. For instance, if craving (//tanha//) is to be posited as the root of much violence, it would not follow that every situation was conditioned by //tanha// in the same way or that the remedy in each situation would be identical. Likewise, it would not follow that what was incumbent on one type of person in one situation would be incumbent on all sections of society in all contexts.

* * * * * * * *

2

REASONS FOR BUDDHISM'S ATTITUDE TO VIOLENCE

Before looking more closely at what is said about the roots of violence, it is worth drawing out reasons given in the texts for the avoidance, questioning or non-espousal of violence. Interconnected frameworks emerge: //nibbana// as the goal of the spiritual life; the demands of //metta// and //karuna// (loving kindness and compassion); the need for peace, concord and harmony within society.

Since the ultimate goal of the spiritual path for the Buddhist is //nibbana//, attitudes towards violence must first be seen in relation to it. //Nibbana// is the ultimate eradication of //dukkha//. It is a possible goal within this life and, among other things, involves a complete de-toxification of the mind from greed, hatred and delusion, a revolution in the way the world is perceived, freedom from craving and liberation from the delusion of ego. The //Therigatha// or Songs of the Sisters contain some of the most moving testimonies to this reality; they are paeans of joy about liberation:

> Mine is the ecstasy of freedom won
> As Path merges in Fruit and Fruit in Path.
> Holding to nought, I in Nibbana live,
> This five-grouped being have I understood.
> Cut from its root, all onward growth is stayed,
> I too am stayed, victor on basis sure > Immovable. Rebirth comes never more. [31]

//Nibbana// and //samsara// are antithetical. One is the ceasing of the other. In the context of the goal of //nibbana//, actions, thoughts and words can be evaluated as to whether they build //samsara// or lead to //nibbana//: whether they are unskilled (//akusala//) or skilled (//kusala//). Indulgence in violence is normally deemed //akusala//. In other words, it cannot lead to the goal of //nibbana//. In the Ambalatthika-Rahulovada Sutta, the Buddha says to the Venerable Rahula:

> If you, Rahula, are desirous of doing a deed with the body, you should reflect on the deed with the body, thus: "That deed which I am desirous of doing with the body is a deed of the body that might conduce to the harm of self and that might conduce to the harm of others and that might conduce to the harm of both; this deed of body is unskilled (//akusala//), its yield is anguish, its result is anguish." [32]

Harm to others is central to what is unskilled. In the Sallekha Sutta advice is given to monks about the cleansing of the mind as the basis of spiritual progress. Foremost among the thoughts which have to be cleansed are those connected with harming and violence; both represent unskilled states which lead downwards:

> Cunda, as every unskilled state leads downwards, as every skilled state leads upwards, even so, Cunda, does non-harming (//avihimsa//) come to be a higher state for an individual who is harmful, does restraint from onslaught on creatures come to be a higher state for the individual who makes onslaught on creatures. [33]

When the Buddha is in conversation with Bhaddiya, //sarambha// is added to //lobha//, //dosa// and //moha// (lust, hatred and delusion) as a defilement which flows from them. //Sarambha// can be translated as "accompanied by violence." As the mind filled with //lobha//, //dosa// and //moha// is led to actions which are //akusala//, so is the mind filled with the violence which accompanies the triad. All lead to a person's loss:

> "Now what think you, Bhaddiya? When freedom from malice (//adosa//) ... from delusion (//amoha//) ... from violence (//asarambha//) that goes with these arises within oneself, does it arise to one's profit or to one's loss?" -- "To one's profit, sir." [34]

The point of the above suttas is that violent action and violent thought, actions which harm and debase others and thoughts which contemplate the same, stand in the way of spiritual growth and the self-conquest which leads to the goal of existence. In this respect, indulging in violence is doing to oneself what an enemy would wish. It is a form of self-harming:

> He who is exceedingly corrupt > like a //maluva// creeper strangling a //sal// tree

does to himself what an enemy would wish.

Dhp. v. 162

In contrast, abstaining from violence has personal benefit in the present and in the future. It is part of the training of mind and body which lays the foundation for spiritual progress.

The accusation has been made that the application of the terms //kusala// and //akusala// are oriented only towards an individualistic goal, making the motivation for abstention from violence a selfish one. But it can be argued that the distinction between altruism and egoism breaks down for anyone truly following the Noble Eightfold Path. There are also many textual references to the inherent importance of harmony, justice and compassion in society to balance those passages which seem to be solely individualistic. Harmony and justice are recognized as worthwhile in themselves as well as a prerequisite for the spiritual progress of society's members. Hence, in society, violence is to be eschewed because it brings pain to beings with similar feelings to oneself:

All tremble at violence,
Life is dear to all.
Comparing others with oneself
One should neither kill nor cause others to kill.

Dhp. v. 130

On the level of personal analogy, men and women are to condemn violence. It is an analogy which demands //metta// (loving kindness) and //karuna// (compassion) of the human being. [35] They call on a frame of mind which cannot remain insensitive to suffering in others or untouched by the agony produced by violence. Non-violence, therefore, arises through the urge to prevent anguish in others:

Comparing oneself with others in such terms as "Just as I am so are they, just as they are so am I" (//yatha aham tatha ete yatha ete tatha aham//), one should neither kill nor cause > others to kill.

>
> Snp. v. 705

The Buddha, however, did not credit all people with this level of awareness. He is recorded as saying that shame and fear of blame protect the world, and if there were not these forces, the world would come to confusion and promiscuity. [36] Not all beings rally to the call for compassion on the grounds that others have like feelings to themselves or that harmony in society is necessary. Therefore, some texts invoke the concepts of heaven and hell, rewards and punishments, to control violence. Vivid pictures are drawn of the agonies of hell:

> Brahmin youth, here some woman or man is one who makes onslaught on creatures, is cruel, bloody-handed, intent on injuring and killing, and without mercy to living creatures. Because of that deed, accomplished thus, firmly held thus, he, at breaking up of the body after dying, arises in the sorrowful way, the bad bourn, the Downfall, the Niraya. [37]
>
> Even so, monks, that anguish and dejection that man experiences while he is being stabbed with three hundred spears, compared with the anguish of Niraya Hell does not count, it does not amount even to an infinitesimal fraction of it, it cannot even be compared to it. Monks, the guardians of Niraya Hell subject him to what is called the fivefold pinion. They drive a red-hot iron stake through each hand and each foot and a red-hot iron stake through his breast. Thereat, he feels feelings that are painful, sharp and severe. But he does not do his time until he makes an end of that evil deed. [38]

Here, self-interest in terms of avoidance of future pain is appealed to as a reason to desist from violence. This emphasis can also be seen in the Petavatthu in which those fallen to the realm of the //petas// speak to those on the human level about the reasons for their suffering. [39] Falsehood, failing in the duties of wife or husband, stinginess and fraud are some of the actions mentioned. Story No. 32, however, speaks of a deerhunter who explains that he was "a ruthless man of bloody hands": "Among harmless creatures, I, with wicked mind, walked about, very ruthless, ever finding delight in slaying others unrestrained," he declares in verse three. His punishment is to be devoured by dogs during the daytime, the hours when he used to be involved in slaughter. He is able to teach the living that the First Precept should be kept and that it applies not only to the killing of human beings but also to animals. The deerhunter, therefore, is held up as an authoritative witness to what happens to violent individuals. His story is useful as a deterrent to socially disruptive elements and is confirmation of the importance Buddhism places on non-violence within the social fabric. The threat of future punishment is used to control potentially violent elements.

Two broad, interconnected areas, therefore, emerge in the reasons for the condemnation of violence within the Early Buddhist texts. Firstly, thoughts of violence and violent action are defilements and must be eradicated if //nibbana// is to be reached. In this light, //nibbana// is the highest ethical good. This stress alone, however, can lead to distortion if //nibbana// is seen as a metaphysical state above the empirical world and the path to it as divorced from society. Early Buddhism was rooted in the empirical. Violence was to be repudiated because it caused anguish to men and women and disruption in society. The human person was seen as precious. Harming a being who desired happiness and felt pain could rarely be right. If a society was to be established in which people could live without fear and with the freedom of mind to follow the Eightfold Path, violence had to be eschewed.

The question of political, defensive violence, however, must be mentioned here. Can violence be justified in a situation where the state needs to defend its citizens against external and internal threats? Is this a situation in which violence is not condemned? The texts suggest Buddhism would here insist on discrimination. The Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta gives this advice to the righteous king:

> This, dear son, that you, leaning on the Dhamma, honouring, respecting and revering it, doing homage to it, hallowing it, being yourself a Dhamma-banner, a Dhamma-signal, having the

> Dhamma as your master, should provide the right watch, ward and protection for your own folk, for the army, for the nobles, for vassals and brahmins and householders, for town and country dwellers, for the religious world and for beasts and birds. [40]

This passage implies that the need for an army and consequently for the use of force in defense is accepted as a worldly necessity. But the picture which emerges is not glorification of the "just" war but an appeal for war and violence to be seen against a higher set of values.

Relevant perspectives on these political realities are seen in the Buddha's advice to the Vajjians and to King Pasenadi. The Vajjians are faced with vicious aggression from King Ajatasattu, King of Magadha, who is bent on destroying them. The latter sends a brahmin to the Buddha for advice and a prediction about how successful he will be in war. The very fact that he does so shows that he does not consider the Buddha either ill-informed or dismissive of such political conflicts. The reply he receives is significant. The Buddha does not refer directly to Ajatasattu but implies that the use of arms against a people who are morally pure and in concord would be fruitless. His words to Ajatasattu become words of advice to the Vajjians that they should meet together in concord and give respect to their elders, their ancient institutions, their traditions and their women. No mention is made of the Vajjian military strength; only of their moral strength. Moral strength is held up as defense against violence. Yet it is not denied but implicitly understood that the Vajjians would have to use force to repulse aggression, and also present is an implicit condemnation of Ajatasattu's intentions. [41]

King Pasenadi is also seen in conflict with Ajatasattu, meeting force with force. At first, Ajatasattu is the aggressor and the victor. The reported response of the Buddha is significant:

> Monks, the King of Magadha, Ajatasattu, son of the Vedehi Princess, is a friend to, an intimate of, mixed up with, whatever is evil. The Kosalan King Pasenadi is a friend to, an intimate of, mixed up with, whatever is good. [42]

Thus Pasenadi's role as defender of the nation against aggression is accepted as necessary and praiseworthy. In the next battle, Pasenadi is the victor. Ajatasattu's army is confiscated but Pasenadi is merciful enough to grant Ajatasattu his life. It is still Ajatasattu who is condemned. His fate is seen in kammic terms:

A man may spoil another just so far
As it may serve his ends, but when he's spoiled
By others he, despoiled, spoils yet again.
So long as evil's fruit is not matured
The fool does fancy: "Now's the hour, the chance!"
But when the deed bears fruit, he fareth ill.
The slayer gets a slayer in his turn,
The conqueror gets one who conquers him,
The abuser wins abuse, the annoyer frets:
Thus by the evolution of the deed
A man who spoils is spoiled in his turn. [43]

In one respect, Pasenadi becomes an instrument of kamma for Ajatasattu. At another level, acceptance of political realities emerges. The king has a duty to protect his citizens from external threats of violence. Therefore, the advice given to a king or those with responsibility for government about reacting to the violence of others is fitted to the situation, a situation in which the use of violence may become a political necessity in a world governed by craving (//tanha//). Yet, even with affairs of state, war is placed in the perspective of a more important set of values. To Pasenadi, burdened by responsibility, the Buddha says:

Noble and brahmin, commoner and serf,
None can evade and play the truant here:
The impending doom overwhelms one and all.
Here is no place for strife with elephants
Or chariots of war or infantry,
Nay, nor for war or woven spell or curse
Nor may finance avail to win the day. [44]

War is not presented as worthy of praise in itself. It is recognized that battle cannot take place without hatred and the wish to kill, in both the mind of aggressor and victim. A Samyutta Nikaya passage illustrates this. A fighting man comes to the Buddha and explains his belief that the warrior who is killed whilst fighting energetically in battle is reborn in the company of the Devas of Passionate Delight. The Buddha's answer condemns this idea as perverted. A warrior is always led by the idea, "Let those beings be exterminated so that they may be never thought to have existed." Such a view can only lead downwards rather than to any heavenly world. The Buddha thus rejects any glorification of war, since there can be no glory when the mind is dominated by hate.

Another duty of the state is to punish. Punishment, although a harming of creatures and a cause of pain to them, is nevertheless seen as a social necessity because of the need to protect society from the greater violence which would flow from undeterred greed. Fear of punishment (//dandabhaya//) is described in vivid terms, with the mention of specific punishments. A man sees them and thinks: "If I were to do such deeds as those for which the rajahs seize a bandit, a miscreant, and so treat him ... they would surely treat me in like manner." [46] Important here is the fact that Early Buddhism would make discriminations about the question of punishment. As a deterrent, punishment has value. Meted out as an expression of hate, it is to be rejected. Inflicted where social justice is the requisite, it is also condemned, as seen in the Kutadanta Sutta, referred to in the next part.

* * * * * * * *

3

THE ROOTS OF VIOLENCE

The Attadanda Sutta of the Sutta Nipata is the voice of someone overcome by despair because of the violence he sees:

> Fear results from resorting to violence -- just look at how people quarrel and fight. But let me tell you now of the kind of dismay and terror that I have felt.
>
> Seeing people struggling like fish, writhing in shallow water, with enmity against one another, I became afraid.
>
> At one time, I had wanted to find some place where I could take shelter, but I never saw such a place. There is nothing in this world that is solid at base and not a part of it that is changeless.
>
> I had seen them all trapped in mutual conflict and that is why I had felt so repelled. But then I noticed something buried deep in their hearts. It was -- I could just make it out -- a dart. [47]

The above is from a translation of the Sutta Nipata which attempts to preserve the spirit of the text rather than the letter. Here it is the spirit of dismay and fear leading to discovery which is of prime importance. The speaker detects a common root -- the dart of craving (//tanha//) and greed (//lobha//) -- a view directly in line with the Four Noble Truths. Violence arises because the right nourishment is present.

However, it has been pointed out earlier that differences may exist in the way in which //tanha// conditions situations of violence. On analysis, two broad and mutually interdependent areas emerge: (1) violence arising from an individual's maladjustment, and (2) craving and violence arising from unsatisfactory social and environmental conditions, caused by the craving of others.

The latter can be taken first with reference to the following texts: The Kutadanta Sutta; the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta; and certain Anguttara Nikaya passages. The first weaves a myth within a myth. The inner myth tells the story of a king, King Wide-Realm, whose land is wracked with discontent and crime such that people are afraid to walk in the streets for fear of violence.

The king's solution is to hold a sacrifice for the nation and he goes to a holy man for advice. But the king is not given what he expects. The sage tells the king that fines, bonds and death for the wrongdoers would be self-defeating. Punishment is not the right path. On the contrary, it would increase the malady because the root causes remained untouched, in this instance, economic injustice and poverty. King Wide-Realm is advised to give food and seed corn to farmers, capital to traders and food to those in government service:

> But perchance his majesty might think: "I'll soon put a stop to these scoundrels' game by degradation and banishment and fines and bonds and death." But their license cannot be satisfactorily put a stop to so. The remnant left unpunished would still go on harassing the realm. Now there is one method to adopt to put a thorough end to this disorder. Whosoever there be in the king's realm who devote themselves to keeping cattle and the farm, to them let his majesty give food and seed corn. Whosoever there be in the king's realm who devote themselves to trade, to them let his majesty give capital. Whosoever there be in the king's realm who devote themselves to government service, to them let his majesty give wages and food. Then those men, following each his own business, will no longer harass the realm; the king's revenue will go up; the country will be quiet and at peace; and the populace pleased with one another and happy, dancing their children in their arms, will dwell with open doors. [48]

The above analysis recognizes that men and women can be pushed to violence if the prevailing conditions do not enable them to preserve their own lives without it. The instinct to survive is credited with enough strength to push people to struggle before they will sink into need. In such a situation, it follows that to press down the hand of the law will not be effective. In fact, it could encourage a growth in serious crime.

This is what happens in the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta, another mythological story dealing with disruption in society. It has already been mentioned with reference to the duty of kingship. But there is one clause concerning his duty that has not yet been mentioned: "Throughout your kingdom let no wrongdoing prevail. And whosoever in your kingdom is poor, to him let wealth be given." [49] The kings of the story who keep to this are blessed with peace. Yet a king eventually arises who neglects the giving of wealth to the poor. He is soon faced with a situation beyond his control. Poverty becomes rampant and this leads to theft, since people would rather steal than die. When the king realizes the cause, he starts by being lenient on the wrongdoer, by giving him the means to live. Such kindness too late leads others to see the only way to survive is turning to theft and receiving a royal handout in return. The king has given charity, not justice, and crime increases leading to a return to brutal punishments. The brutality of the punishments encourages the people to be more extreme in their own crime as they try to survive. Punishment here fails to deter because of the desperation of the people.

The sutta presents a disturbing picture of how a society can fall into utter confusion because of a lack of economic justice. The extremes reached are far greater than anything envisaged in the Kutadanta Sutta and they stem from the state's blindness to the realities of poverty. Thus the sutta states in refrain after every deterioration:

> Thus from goods not being bestowed on the destitute, poverty ... stealing ... violence ... murder ... lying ... evil-speaking ... immorality grew rife.
>
> Theft and killing lead to false speech, jealousy, adultery, incest and perverted lust until:
>
> Among such humans, brethren, there will arise a sword-period (//satthantarakappa//) of seven days during which they will look on each other as wild beasts; sharp swords will appear > ready to their hands, and they thinking, "This is a wild beast, this is a wild beast," will with their swords deprive each other of life. [50]

In the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta, the nourishment of the violence is the state's neglect of the poor. The whole myth illustrates the principle of //paticca samuppada//. Each state of degeneration is dependent on the state before it. An evolutionary process is seen. An inevitability seems to emerge, an inevitable movement towards bestiality. It is significant that the sutta does not concentrate on the psychological state of the people. The obsessive cravings which overtake them are traced back to the failure of the state rather than to failings in their own adjustment to reality. The root is the defilement in the state -- the //raga//, //dosa// and //moha// in the king which afflict his perception of his duty.

An Anguttara Nikaya passage states this principle in simple and direct terms. If the king is righteous, his ministers will be righteous, the country will be righteous and the natural world will be a friend rather than an enemy. The opposite, of course, is also true and is placed first in the sutta:

> At such time, monks, as rulers are unrighteous (//adhammika//), their ministers are unrighteous, brahmins and householders are also unrighteous....[51]

The above passages show that a change of heart is needed where violence exists but this change is needed in those who wield power in society. When a state is corrupt, the citizens become victims of the state and their own wish to survive and they are then led to actions they would never consider if they were free from want. There is an understanding that, besides those who do evil, there exists a category of people to whom wrong is done and whose reactions are conditioned by the original wrongdoing.

To pass now to the psychological roots of violence, another myth can be cited, the Agganna Sutta. Like the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta, it describes an evolutionary process which takes on its own momentum.

The root of the process is significant -- the craving of beings. The sutta explains, in myth form, the process by which undifferentiated beings come to earth from a World of Radiance to eat the earth's savory crust, to the point where there is private property and the division of labor. One of its purposes is to challenge the static, non-evolutionary theory of a divinely ordained caste system but it is significant also because evolution is guided by the growth of craving and individualism. The whole sutta turns on the individual and his craving as the root of violence. It depicts a situation before state power is established. Craving first enters when the beings taste the crust of the earth:

> Then, Vasettha, some being of greedy disposition said, "Lo now, what will this be?" and tasted the savory earth with his finger. He thus, tasting, became suffused with the savor, and craving (//tanha//) entered into him. [52]

The craving develops. The natural world evolves to accommodate the beings, becoming ever less easy to manage. The bodies of the beings become gross and individually differentiated into male and female, comely and unlovely. Jealousy and competition enter. The savory crust disappears. Vegetables and plant life evolve. An important point is reached when the beings establish boundaries around their individually owned rice plots. Individualism is therefore institutionally consolidated and the consequence is violence:

> Now some being, Vasettha, of greedy disposition, watching over his plot, stole another plot and made use of it. They took him and, holding him fast, said, "Truly, good being, you have done evil in that, while watching your own plot, you have stolen another plot and made use of it. See, good being, that you do no such thing again." "Aye, sirs," he replied. And a second time he did so. And yet a third. And again they took him and admonished him. Some smote him with the hand, some with clods, some with sticks. With such a beginning, Vasettha, did stealing appear and censure and lying and punishment became known. [53]

The sutta illustrates that //tanha// coupled with individualism nourishes violence and conditions the necessity for state power to curb excesses. As such, its teaching is directly in the mainstream of Buddhist thought: craving and grasping lie at the root of negative and unwholesome states in society. However, more needs to be said about the causes and consequences of individualism.

The term "//puthujjana//" is used to describe the ordinary, average person:

> Herein, monks, an uninstructed ordinary person, taking no account of the pure ones (//ariyanam//), unskilled in the Dhamma of the pure ones, untrained in the Dhamma of the pure ones, taking no account of the true men, unskilled in the Dhamma of the true men, untrained in the Dhamma of the true men, does not comprehend the things that should be wisely attended to, does not comprehend the things that should not be wisely attended to. [54]

The term "//puthu//" has two main meanings: "several, many, numerous," on one hand, and "separate, individual," on the other. The usual definition of //puthujjana// is "one of the many folk," linking it with the first of the above-mentioned meanings. However, a case can be made for the second meaning also. In this analysis, the //puthujjana// is one who believes himself to be separate from the rest of humankind; one who believes he has a self to be protected, promoted and pampered. It is this assumption which leads to so much that is disruptive in society.

Violent tendencies link, at this point, with the defilement of //moha// (delusion): delusion in terms of a misunderstanding of //anicca// and //anatta//. The latter states that there is no abiding, unchanging substance within the human being. Men and women are verbs rather than nouns, causal processes rather than unchanging souls. Buddhism does not deny that there is a person, but it reformulates the definition of what constitutes a person to embrace continuity rather than static entity. As the sound of the lute cannot be found within the lute as it is taken apart, so the "I am" cannot be found in the human personality when it is dissected into the five //khandhas//. [55]

Much anger and violence stem from the felt need to defend what is seen to be one's own or to grasp personal gain. It is a need which sees the gain of others as a threat to personal power and the rights of others as an attack on personal prestige. This is none other than the fault of the //puthujjana//, a failure to see the truth of //anatta// and the interdependence of all phenomena. It is this failure which leads to the self becoming the touchstone and measuring rule for every perception and judgment. It is the failure which leads to the urge to be violent in defense of needs and seeming rights. The Agganna Sutta shows this ego illusion manifesting itself in the form of competitive individualism. That the ego illusion and //tanha// feed on one another is a theme found in many texts:

> Monks, I will teach you the craving that ensnares, that floats along, that is far flung, that clings to one, by which this world is smothered, enveloped, tangled like a ball of thread, covered as with blight, twisted up like a grass rope, so that it does not pass beyond the Constant Round, the Downfall, the Way of Woe, the Ruin....
>
> Monks, when there is the thought: "I am" -- there come to be the thoughts: "I am in this world; I am thus; I am otherwise; I am not eternal; I am eternal; Should I be? Should I be in this world? Should I be thus? Should I be otherwise? May I become. May I become in this world. May I become thus. May I become otherwise. I shall become. I shall become otherwise." These are the eighteen thoughts which are haunted by craving (//tanhavicaritani//) concerning the inner self (//ajjhattikassa//). [56]

One result of this interdependent feeding, the Buddhist texts assert, is disruption in society.

Another important area of study is the mechanism through which the "I" notion helps to generate unwholesome states. Buddhism sees a danger in the view of some schools of psychology that there is a creative use of the concept of self. In this respect, the Pali term "//papanca//," commonly translated as proliferation, is important. The Madhupindika Sutta declares //papanca// to be the root of taking up weapons, and the defeat of //papanca// is the way to end such violence:

> This is itself an end to the propensity to ignorance, this is itself an end of taking a weapon, of quarreling, contending, disputing, accusation, slander, lying speech. [57]

As the previous analysis in this paper points out, discrimination is central to the Buddhist approach and therefore generalizations such as the above need to be studied carefully. There is no doubt, however, that //papanca// is central to a Buddhist psychology of violence and to an understanding of the danger in the "I am" notion.

A study by Bhikkhu Nanananda, //Concept and Reality//, gives extensive coverage to the term "//papanca//".[58] He puts forward the view that it is linked with the final stage of sense cognition and that it signifies a "a spreading out, a proliferation" in the realm of concepts, a tendency for the conceptual process to run riot and obscure the true reality of things. He makes much use of the above-quoted Madhupindika Sutta and quotes the following:

> Visual consciousness, brethren, arises because of eye and visible forms; the meeting of the three is sensory impingement; because of sensory impingement arises feeling (//vedana//); what one feels, one perceives (//sanjanati//); what one perceives, one reasons about (//vitakketi//); what one reasons about, one turns into //papanca// (//papanceti//); what one turns into //papanca//, due to that //papanca-sanna-sankha// assail him in regard to visible forms cognizable by the eye belonging to the past, the future and the present. [59]

The same is said of the other senses.

Nanananda points out that a grammatical analysis of the above reveals that the process of perception involves deliberate activity up until //papanceti//. After this, deliberation vanishes. The subject becomes the object. The person who reasons conceptually becomes the victim of his own perceptions and thought constructions. So Nanananda writes:

> Like the legendary resurrected tiger which devoured the magician who restored it to life out of its skeletal bones, the concepts and linguistic conventions overwhelm the worldling who evolved them. At the final and crucial stage of sense-perception, the concepts are, as it were, invested with an objective character. [60]

His analysis is of immense significance to the study of how certain negative and destructive tendencies can grow in society; how objective perception and reason can seem to fade before the force of what might be irrational and obsessive. He roots the cause in the nature of language in the minds of persons governed by //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi// -- craving, conceit (the tendency to measure oneself against others), and views -- which in themselves flow from ego-consciousness. //Papanca//, according to this analysis, manifests itself through //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi//. It underlies each of these qualities and breeds conflict in society.

To look at the process in more detail: The conventions of language enter near the beginning of the process of sense perception, at the point where feeling gives rise to mental activity and concepts. The mind, if unchecked, will attempt to place order on its feelings through language. This language immediately introduces the duality of subject and object, subject and feeling. The "I" enters with "I feel aversion" or "I feel attraction" or "I like this" or" I don't like this." This emphasis on the "I" is predetermined by the very nature of language and reinforces the strength of the feeling and the tendency for the person to identify completely with what is felt. What seems to happen after that is that language takes on a dynamism of its own. Concepts proliferate and leave the empirical behind, under the driving force of //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi//. For instance, the observation, "I feel aversion" might lead to further thoughts such as:

> I am right to feel aversion.... Therefore, the object is inherently worthy of aversion.... So, the object must threaten me and others.... Therefore the objects must be got rid of.... I cannot survive unless the object is annihilated from my sphere of vision and feeling.... It is my duty to annihilate this for my sake and the sake of others.

Thus the entrance of "I" leads to the urge to protect the wishes of the ego and what is ego-based becomes a seemingly rational decision about duty. The above is a purely hypothetical progression, yet it is not an implausible one. It illustrates the way in which thought progresses further and further away from what is empirically observed. Speculation enters as the mind attempts to reason. Eventually, as the thought process develops further, what might appear to be reason cloaks obsession which, in turn, can make the person a victim of the apparent logic of language.

Kant in his //Critique of Pure Reason// [61] seems to adopt a similar point of view. He challenged the view that speculative metaphysics using the categories of pure reason could extend our knowledge of reality. He attacked particularly those theologians who believed that the existence of God could be proved through logic alone. There was, he claimed, an irresistible impulse of the mind towards seeking unification and synthesis which led to the illegitimate use of language. It is this which is particularly relevant to this study. For instance, he posited that the mind assumed an unconditional personal ego just because all representations were unified by the "I think" construction. It also assumed a concept of God because of the drive to find an unconditioned unity. Such concepts, Kant felt, arose through the impulse of the mind and passed beyond the legitimate purview of language. It passed beyond the perceptions which could add knowledge and were not based on truly empirical data. Therefore, they could not give statements with any factual reality.

Kant grasped that there was an irresistible impulse which led to concepts taking on an unwarranted life of their own. Buddhism says that these concepts can generate obsessions, victimize the person who believes he or she is thinking logically, and lead to disruption in society. What is lost in the process is the ability to see objectively and value the empirical through senses unclouded by craving, conceit and views, or by greed, hatred and delusion.

//Papanca//, fed and generated by //tanha//, is therefore central to the theme of violence in the thoughts and actions of human beings. Buddhism suggests that the human person can become the victim of obsessive actions, thoughts and inclinations. It holds that the drift towards violence within one person or within society, especially if a communal or cultural obsession has arisen, may become an inevitable causal process unless the inner mechanism is discovered. Related to this is the danger and motivating force of dogmatic and speculative views as one of the roots of violence -- the //ditthi//, connected in the above analysis with //papanca//. In his advice to the Kalamas and to Bhaddiya, the Buddha said:

> Be not mislead by report or tradition or hearsay. Be not misled by proficiency in the Collections, nor by mere logic or inference, nor after considering reasons, nor after reflection on or approval of some theory, nor because it fits becoming, nor by the thought: the recluse is revered by us. [62]

Here, logic and inference are deemed to be as dangerous as what is passed on by doubtful report and tradition. The same approach is seen in the Brahmajala Sutta [63] where a number of mistaken views, according to Buddhist analysis, are discussed. //Tanha// is seen as the root of these but logic and inference are also mentioned.

In the following, the question of conflict in relation to dogmatic views is more clearly expressed. The Buddha points out the danger of saying, "This is indeed the truth, all else is falsehood" (//idam-eva saccam//, //mogham-annam//). For dispute is the result and: "If there is dispute, there is contention; if there is contention, there is trouble; if there is trouble there is vexation." [64] Adhering dogmatically to views is a form of //papanca//, a particularly dangerous form. Several suttas in the Sutta Nipata take up this theme: the Pasura Sutta and the Kalahavivada Sutta, [65] for instance. The former speaks of the person who goes forth roaring, looking for a rival to contest with, filled with pride and arrogance over his theories. A battle-like situation is implied, an attitude closely allied to that which actually results in warfare and armed struggle. Contemporary struggles in the world give ample evidence to prove that war and struggle are caused by the conflict of ideas, ideologies and concepts. They show how powerful and charismatic a force ideas can be. Whether it is nationalism, ethnicity or religion, groups can be pushed towards violence in defense of them. Buddhist analysis points out that some ideologies which might appear logical could, in fact, be the fruit of //papanca//. Adherents may be convinced of their truth but they might have progressed far from analysis based on empirical data.

In the above analysis of the roots of violence, two broad areas have been studied: the external and the internal, the environmental and psychological. Yet the two are not separate. They interconnect and feed one another, just as external sense objects interconnect with the senses, giving rise to consciousness and psychological processes. If a people's environment is unhealthy, corrupt or unjust, the seeds are sown for violent resistance, through the growth of motivating ideologies which take on a life of their own as they grip the minds of those who are being oppressed. If the environment is excessively competitive, consumer-oriented and materialistic, //tanha// will quickly arise, develop and expand into obsessive patterns of greed, taking over and dominating the perception of people who find themselves victims of craving rather than masters of their own perceptual processes. The step to violence is then small. If other elements are present, such as a group without access to the wealth visible in others, discrimination against minorities or racism, then the drive towards violence will be more rapid.

* * * * * * * *

4

CAN VIOLENT TENDENCIES BE ERADICATED?

There is an optimism at the heart of Buddhism. The Four Noble Truths and //paticca samuppada// present a doctrine of hope because they affirm change and evolution. Men and women are not pawns of fate, chance or a capricious metaphysical being. [66] They can be makers of their own future. Applied to the issue of violence and disruption, this means that violence within the individual and in society is not intransigent, although the Buddhist texts make it quite clear that the obstacles to transformation are large.

Buddhism has no concept of a worldly utopia. //Samsara// is //samsara//, characterized by //dukkha//. //Nibbana// is a victory over //samsara//, not a destruction of //samsara//. The doctrine of //anicca// (impermanence), in fact, undermines any dream of a golden future or a straight road of development towards harmony and peace. Yet the worth of working for conditions for concord is never denied. The important questions which emerge are: How feasible is the lessening of violent tendencies in society? Can changes in the individual affect society as a whole? When there is violence inherent in the structures of society, what steps can be taken?

To take the possibility for change within the individual first, certain passages from the texts suggest that the Buddha had rather a low opinion of the //puthujjana// and his or her ability to change. Verse 174 of the Dhammapada reads:

> Blind is the world
> Few are those who clearly see.
> As birds escape from a net
> Few go to a blissful state.

His sermons show that he recognizes that reaching people set on material things with a new message is difficult because their perception and ability to hear has been conditioned by the pattern of their craving:

> But this situation exists, Sunakkhatta, when some individual here may be set on the material things of this world (//lokamisadhimutto//), and the talk of the individual who is set on the material things of this world follows a pattern in accordance with which he reflects and ponders, and he associates with that man under whom he finds felicity; but when there is talk about imperturbability (//ananja//) he does not listen, does not lend an ear, does not rouse his mind to profound knowledge, and he does not associate with that man under whom he does not find felicity. [67]
>
> A bad man, monks, is possessed of bad states of mind, he consorts with bad men, he thinks as do bad men, he advises as do bad men, he speaks as do bad men, he acts as do bad men, he has the views of bad men, he gives gifts as do bad men....
>
> And how, monks, does a bad man act as do bad men? As to this monks, a bad man is one to make onslaught on creatures, to take what has not been given, to enjoy himself wrongly...[68]

In one passage, a prince, Prince Jayasena, is pictured in conversation with a novice monk who speaks about aloofness and one-pointedness of mind. On the evidence given, the prince declares such an achievement to be impossible. Confused, the novice goes to the Buddha, who says that such direct teaching could not possibly have been understood by one of such a lifestyle as the prince:

> That Prince Jayasena, living as he does in the midst of sense pleasures, enjoying sense pleasures, being consumed by thoughts of sense pleasures, burning with the fever of sense pleasure, eager in the search of sense pleasures, should know or see or attain or realize that which can be known by renunciation, realized by renunciation -- such a situation does not exist. [69]

The above passages might seem to imply the reverse of hope on the very same ground as hope was confirmed in the introduction to this section -- //paticca samuppada//. If perception is conditioned by a person's lifestyle, the friends he or she chooses, and greed for material objects, then appreciation of another set of values will not arise from that nourishment. Such an argument would seem to be realistic given the framework of conditionality. However, this realism must be balanced with instances in the texts where change does take place in the lives of individuals.

The case of Angulimala is one of the best known and most frequently quoted. Angulimala is a multiple murderer, the terror of Savatthi. He is described as having depopulated villages and districts through his urge to kill. The Angulimala Sutta describes the story. [70] The Buddha, ignoring the fear of the people, sets out by himself toward where Angulimala is said to be. Angulimala, on seeing him, decides to give him the same fate as others who had dared to walk the roads. However, at this point, the Buddha uses a technique which slaps Angulimala so hard that he gains sudden insight into the futility of the path he had been taking. The Buddha uses his psychic power to ensure that Angulimala cannot catch up with him, however much effort he applies. This opens up the opportunity for the question of walking and standing still to be raised. Angulimala is forced into the realization that his life has been a futile chase, a fretful searching, without peace or fulfillment. The tranquillity of the Buddha contrasts sharply with his own turbulence and the destructive state of his mind. The contrast makes him see the nature of his mind. A revolution -- in its true sense of a complete turning around -- takes place. Angulimala, the murderer, becomes a completely changed person. He asks the Buddha for ordination as a monk, and soon becomes an Arahant, a saint.

Some interpretations have attempted to explain this in terms of a form of grace coming from the Buddha to the murderer. No doubt the person of the Buddha had a profound effect on the man. The sheer contrast between the states of mind and consequent physical appearance and bearing of the two would have shaped the event. Yet it is perhaps more helpful to think of Angulimala as being ready to change, ready to face what he was doing to his life. The Buddha's words acted as a sudden jolt to shock him into realization and change. A similar transformation can be seen at the end of the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta, mentioned earlier, when bestiality has overtaken society to the point that a reaction takes place. At the point when beings think of one another as wild beasts, some begin to think:

> Let us not slay anyone; nor just let anyone slay us. Let us now, therefore, take ourselves to dens of grass, or dens in the jungle, or holes in trees, or river fastnesses, or mountain clefts and subsist on fruits and on roots of the jungle. [71]

The depth of barbarism causes a reversal, a disgust with the nourishment on which violent thoughts were feeding. Something new seems to enter but it is nevertheless part of the ongoing causal process. The important point is that there can be a stage at which the unwholesome is recognized as such by those who are perpetrating it. The process through which those who followed the Buddha saw the household life as a fetter, a state in which it was difficult to avoid greed, materialism and competitiveness, to a certain extent parallels this. [72]

That it is possible for people to change accords with human experience. It is also worth going back to the advice given to the novice who had tried to instruct Prince Jayasena. [73] The story does not end with the Buddha's words about the impossibility of reaching the mind of the prince. An alternative method is stressed -- gradual training. The Buddha explains that the prince might have understood if told that the process of understanding was gradual. The simile of the training of an elephant is used: At first, the elephant is brought from the forest into the open; he is addressed with kindly words and fed; then tasks are given to him, progressing from the simple to the more complex up to the point where the animal can endure blows of the sword and the din of war without flinching.

The stress on a gradual process of change and training, beginning with moral habit, stretches like a thread across the Buddhist texts.

There is a firm belief that discipline, education and the taking of one step at a time can lead people from a state of relative ignorance to greater wisdom. The possibility of gradual change must be admitted alongside the sudden change of Angulimala. The two are complementary.

In the Kevaddha Sutta, Kevaddha, a young householder, comes to the Buddha and pleads with him to perform a mystic wonder. [74] The Buddha names three wonders of which he has knowledge: the mystic, the wonder of manifestation, and the wonder of education. The first two are to be feared and abhorred. It was the latter which was to be praised as the most worthy -- the wonder of education. Change through a gradual process is, therefore, deemed possible but it is also recognized as something of a wonder, given the strength of craving and grasping.

Evidence that groups of both lay and ordained people were following the gradual training comes from the Mahaparinibbana Sutta. The sutta speaks of the fourfold society being a reality -- the fourfold society as composed of monks, nuns, laymen and laywomen. Mara is seen to approach the Buddha, urging him to die because the task he had set himself earlier had been completed:

> Now is the time for the Exalted One to pass away -- even according to the word which the Exalted One spoke when he said, "I shall not die, O Evil One, until the brethren and the sisters of the Order and until the lay disciples of both sex shall have become true hearers, wise and well-trained, ready and learned, carrying the doctrine in their memory, masters of the lesser corollaries that follow from the larger doctrine, correct in life, walking according to the precepts -- until they, having thus themselves learnt the doctrine, shall be able to tell others of it, preach it, make it known, establish it, open it, minutely explain it and make it clear." [75]

In the above description, both lay and ordained are described with the same adjectives. Lay people as well as ordained are credited with considerable knowledge. There are grounds of hope here, since the first stage of gradual training is morality, the foundation of which is the Five Precepts. All of these are linked with abstaining from different forms of violence: direct and indirect killing; theft; the exploitation of women; the violence connected with speech; violence to oneself through the use of drugs. The Early Buddhist texts are replete with exhortations to keep the precepts. Heaven and hell, bliss and torture, are held up and paeans of praise are given to those who follow them:

> Faint is the fragrance of //tagara// and sandal
> But the fragrance of the virtuous is excellent > Wafting even among the gods.

Dhp. v. 56.

There are examples, however, of lay people going beyond morality. Pessa, the son of an elephant trainer, claims:

> And, revered sir, we householders too, dressed in white, from time to time dwell with our minds well applied to the four applications of mindfulness (//catusu satipatthanesu//). [76]

Pessa receives the recognition and praise of the Buddha for this. It is significant that mindfulness is crucial in halting the flow of mind, in halting //papanca//, as described earlier, and the violent thoughts which might consequently flow. The key to mindfulness is the development of the ability to stand aside, detached from what is happening to the body, to feeling, to thought processes and mental objects, [77] so that ever arising and passing movement, feelings and thoughts are carefully charted. It is an approach which recognizes both //anicca// and //anatta//: //anicca// because what is attended to is seen as an ever-changing process; //anatta//, because the elements of the process are not assumed to belong to the person and therefore are not clung to as unchanging truths. Mindfulness (//satipatthana//) in fact can stop the mind before obsessions based on //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi// can grow.

Guarding the doors of the senses (//indriya samvara//) is one form of practice of mindfulness, frequently mentioned as the second step in the gradual training. The traditional way of describing this is:

> Having seen a visible form with the eye, he is not entranced by the general appearance, he is not entranced by the detail. If he dwells with his organ of sight uncontrolled, covetousness and dejection, evil unskilled states of mind, might predominate. So he fares along controlling it, he guards the organ of sight, he achieves control over the organ of sight. [78]

The same is said of the other sense organs. A guard is placed at the point where contact between the sense and the sense object results in feeling (//vedana//). Knowledge of how the mind works is gained. Mindfulness is thus an antidote to //papanca// and stops the mechanism through which //papanca// develops. It demands effort and discipline. The texts show that such mind-culture is possible and suggest that it would lead to the lessening of violence as an expression of personal greed.

The example of the Sangha, the Order of Monks, must also be looked at. No compromises were made concerning violence when it came to the monk. The Sangha was intended to be a model of harmonious interpersonal relationships. It was to provide an alternative set of values to lay people, to present a pattern of sharing rather than of competitive individualism. [79] If the Sangha had been able to carry out successfully this role, a disturbing challenge would have been presented to the communities among which the monks walked.

The Kakacupama Sutta is one of the best examples of the extent to which violent retaliation was condemned for the monk. The key sentence, repeated many times, speaks of the attitude to be cultivated in the face of abuse or violence:

> Neither will my mind become perverted, nor will I utter evil speech, but kindly and compassionate will I dwell with a mind of friendliness and devoid of hatred (//mettacitto no dosantaro//).

What is significant is the extent to which this is to be taken:

> Monks, as low-down thieves might carve one limb from limb with a double-handed saw, yet even then whoever sets his mind at enmity, he, for this reason, is not a doer of my teaching. Herein, monks, you must train yourself: Neither will our minds become perverted ... devoid of hatred. [80]

The Punnovada Sutta describes a monk who took this teaching to heart. He intends to travel to a district where the people are known to be hostile. The Buddha questions him about how he will deal with abuse and violence. Possibilities are mentioned, increasing each time in intensity from verbal abuse to loss of life. After each one, Punna responds by saying that he would be thankful that the abuse was not even more serious. When the Buddha finally mentions murder, he says:

> If the people of Sunaparanta deprive me of life with a sharp knife, revered sir, it will be thus for me there; I will say, "There are disciples of the Lord who, disgusted by the body and the life-principle and ashamed of them, look about for a knife. I have come to this knife without having looked for it." [81]

He is said to have made a thousand followers, suggesting that his attitude became a true inspiration to a people who were characterized by violence.

In contrast to the above, there are examples of monks presenting a harmful example to lay people. As the Sangha grew in number and in reputation, the initial enthusiasm of the first disciples became diffused. Evidence in suttas such as the Bhaddali Sutta, the Kakacupama Sutta, the Kitagiri Sutta and the Anumana Sutta [82] shows that there were forces of deterioration. Some monks were difficult to exhort; some were rebellious towards the rules; some were incapable of taking correction from others. In this way, their ability to provide an example to lay people would have been weakened. Yet it would be wrong to place too much emphasis on this weakness. Other suttas can be quoted to show what an impact the Buddha's followers had on other groups of wanderers and even on kings. [83]

The important point here is that hope for change in the Early Buddhist texts also lies in the Sangha as example and educator. Lay people were encouraged to show devotion to the Sangha and to listen to its teaching. As outlined above, there is evidence that there was a body of lay people who were very serious in their striving to undertake the precepts and to train their mind so that //tanha// could be reduced. That change in the individual is possible is confirmed by a study of the early followers.

The above picture combines hope with realism. The obstacles mentioned at the beginning of the section must not be overlooked; the barriers to change are great. According to Buddhism the average person (//puthujjana//) will often need the threat of punishment, either in the present or in a future life, to be deterred from socially disruptive activities. It has also been pointed out that it is not enough to concentrate on the individual. A society is more than the sum of its individuals. Just as the human person is such because of the specific relationship between the five //khandhas//, so a society takes on its character because of the way in which its parts are organized through institutions, traditions and external influences.

The next question which must be looked at is how the individual can affect society as a whole or, more exactly, what the consequences are when a person follows the gradual training of Buddhism. As with the other questions raised, the method of this paper is to discover what the texts say, to uncover the guidelines or resources they provide for the analysis of contemporary issues.

In a previous section it was suggested that one of the causes of violence was the proliferation of concepts and ideas flowing from the perceptual process when governed by //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi//. Is the answer, then, a retreat into silence and inaction away from all concepts? The evidence suggests not. The Buddha was quick to condemn any inference that he taught a doctrine of either inaction or apathy. One example will illustrate this. The Buddha is seen in conversation with a person called Potaliya. Potaliya declares that the most worthy person is the one who speaks neither in dispraise of what deserves not praise nor in praise of the praiseworthy. He advocates what would seem a complete withdrawal from judgment and a supreme detachment from the issues governing society. And the term Potaliya uses to describe the frame of mind he is talking about is //upekkha// -- equanimity.

The Buddha, however, disagrees with him. Far better is the person of discrimination who speaks in dispraise of the unworthy and in praise of the praiseworthy, saying seasonably what is factual and the truth. In other words, he challenges the view that //upekkha// (equanimity) means the quality Potaliya advocates. The Buddha puts forward another quality:

> Now, Potaliya, there are these four persons existing in the world.... Of these four persons, Potaliya, he who speaks in dispraise of what deserves not praise and in praise of the praiseworthy, saying seasonably what is fact and true -- he is the most admirable and rare. Why so? Because, Potaliya, his discrimination of proper occasions (//kalannuta//) is admirable. [84]

The Buddha mentions the quality of //kalannuta//, in place of the word used by Potaliya -- //upekkha//. The translation given by the Pali Text Society is "discrimination of proper occasions." The ability to discriminate and make objective evaluations, not indifference, is the consequence of curbing //papanca//. A certain silence of the mind is indicated but it is not the silence of apathy. The proliferation of concepts which is //papanca// results in an obscuring of the empirical, since this proliferation moves one further and further away from the empirical because of the linguistic edifice of "therefore" and "therein" erected on top of the initial emotion of like or aversion. Preventing the erection of this edifice on the foundation of //tanha// leads to a clearer perception of the empirical and to judgments and analyses being made with greater validity. The conclusions reached through //papanca// may seem to be analytical. They are not. Resisting //papanca// is not a moving away from analysis but a moving towards objective analysis unclouded by emotional responses. It is this kind of analysis which is so often lacking when there is violence and conflict in society.

When perceptions, judgments and consequent action are governed by the roots of //papanca//, there will be no objectivity but a danger that obsessions will grow. When //papanca// is allayed, what is good and bad, //kusala// and //akusala//, praiseworthy and blameworthy, will be more clearly visible. The injustices in society, for instance, will be more apparent. Judgments about those who are oppressed in society or about those who gain wealth illegally through violence and extortion will not be clouded either by the tendency to look down on those who suffer or the wish to gain patronage from the wealthy. What is wrong and what is right, what harms and what promotes happiness, will stand out untouched by personal wishes or personal greed.

This clarity of judgment can be seen in the words of the Buddha. In the Assalayana Sutta, the Agganna Sutta and the Madhura Sutta the caste system is vigorously opposed. [85] The Esukari Sutta condemns the kind of service which becomes slavery. [86] Meaningless ritual is attacked in the Sigalovada Sutta. [87] Brahminical excesses are uncovered in the Brahmajala Sutta, the Ambattha Sutta and the Tevijja Sutta. [88] The violence and shame of sacrifices is condemned in the Kutadanta Sutta. [89] These are not the only examples. The Buddha is revealed as a person who was unafraid to point out wrong when he saw it and to use uncompromising words. It is this kind of effective speech and action which should flow when //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi// are reduced.

Abstention from the harmful or violent is not enough by itself. The texts stress that the active cultivation of the opposite is necessary. A replacement is needed as well as an annihilation. This is seen at lay level as well as among the ordained. For instance, in the Saleyyaka Sutta, addressed specifically to lay people, the two courses of faring by Dhamma and not-Dhamma are explained. Malevolence is explained by reference to the wish to kill:

> He is malevolent in mind, corrupt in thought and purpose, and thinks: "Let these beings be killed or slaughtered or annihilated or destroyed or may they not exist at all." [90]

Faring by Dhamma is explained in opposite terms and yet the effect is not merely a negation of or a restraining from not-Dhamma but the practice of positive virtue. So, the one who abandons slanderous speech becomes "a reconciler of those who are at variance and one who combines those who are friends." The one who restrains himself from malevolent thought is the one who thinks: "Let those beings, friendly, peaceful, secure, happy, look after self." [91] Similarly, during meditation, positive qualities are to be cultivated to replace the five hindrances. For instance:

> Putting away ill-will and hatred (//vyapadapadosa//), he abides with heart free from enmity (//avyapannacitta//), benevolent and compassionate towards every living being (//sabbe panabhutahitanukampi//) and purifies his mind of malevolence. [92]

The Early Buddhist emphasis, therefore, indicates that the eradication of the tendencies which cause violence leads to greater realism, the growth of positive, wholesome qualities and more effective speech and action against what is unjust and exploitative. An important question, however, remains unanswered, the third question mentioned at the beginning of this section: When there is violence inherent in the structures of society as a whole, what steps can be taken?

In many societies, violence is institutionalized in structures which oppress certain sections of the people. Some would mention the caste system in India in this context, corrupt trading practices, or the forces which keep some groups of people poor. On the other hand, violence can flow from the monarchy or state, from internal terrorist groups or an outside threat. In these situations, violence is rarely lessened by changes in a few individuals, unless these individuals have considerable power. What strategies should be used to oppose such violence? Is there any situation where violence should be met with violence? Is there a different path for the lay person than for the monk? Is there a situation where it might be justifiable to overthrow the state? If so, could this lead to a changed society? If undeserved suffering occurs because of the greed of others, do the demands of compassion (//karuna//) ever involve what could be called violent resistance to the perpetrators? These are crucial questions in the light of current world tensions such as racial injustice, capitalistic monopolies, terrorism and fascism. The question here is whether any guidelines can be gained from the Buddhist texts themselves.

There is no doubt that the person who renounces the household life is called to abstain from violence completely. It is one of the hallmarks of the bhikkhu. Not to react in violent retaliation to abuse was part of the training of the disciple. Where there was state-instigated violence, the Early Buddhist position seems to have been that the Sangha could act as advisers to rulers and, in this capacity, could raise issues connected with righteous government, but it could not become involved in violent resistance. As for the lay follower of the Buddha, he or she undertakes to desist from harming others through the first precept. To break this intentionally is to risk serious kammic consequences. For the lay person, as for the monk, the approved line of action would seem to be advice and non-violent pressure or resistance towards those in a position to change violent structures.

A different set of responsibilities, however, is laid on the state itself. As previously discussed, rulers with the protection of their citizens at heart were inevitably drawn into conflict when threatened by aggression. The question can therefore be raised as to whether non-violence is an absolute value in Buddhism. For instance, is a father, as head and protector of the family, justified in using violence against a person forcefully entering his house with the intention to kill? Has an elder sister the duty to protect a younger brother if he is attacked violently, by using similar violence? Has a group of citizens the right to kill a dictator if, by doing so, they might save the lives of oppressed minorities to whom the citizens feel a duty? Should the terrorist gun be challenged with similar methods? These are areas where absolutes seem to break down. As a ruler might realize that some aggressor cannot be deterred by persuasion, so some citizens might feel that violence or injustice in society cannot be stopped merely by giving advice to those in power. That lay people should never initiate violence where there is harmony or use it against the innocent is very clear. That they should not attempt to protect those under their care if the only way of doing so is to use defensive violence is not so clear.

Guidelines about the consequences of violence, however, are laid down. The danger of violence, even if it is defensive, is that it will generate further violence. Non-hatred (//avera//) and loving kindness are the powers which halt it. //Metta// (loving kindness) is shown to have great power: it can turn away the poison of a snake or the charge of an elephant; [93] it can render burning ghee harmless. [94] The latter story concerns a wife, Uttara, who is married to an unbeliever. A courtesan, Sirima, is given to her husband so that Uttara can be released to attend on religious duties. A quarrel arises between the two women which ends in Sirima pouring boiling ghee over Uttara. As she prepares to do this, Uttara thinks: "My companion has done me a favor. The circle of the earth is too narrow, the world of the devas is too low, but the virtue of my compassion is great because by her help, I have become able to give alms and listen to Dhamma. If I am angry with her may this ghee burn me; if not, let it not burn me." The ghee does not burn. Sirima tries again. Then the other women present attack Sirima and throw her to the ground. Uttara continues to show compassion by coming to her rescue, by preventing her from being hurt.

Responding to violence with //metta// and non-anger is deemed superior to any other path. Non-violent resistance is clearly the best path. Yet Buddhism cannot claim to be completely pacifistic. Absolutes of that kind cannot be found and perhaps should not be sought for in a teaching which spoke of the danger of claiming of a view, "this alone is truth, all else is falsehood." The person who feels violence is justified to protect the lives of others has indeed to take the consequences into account. He has to remember that he is risking grave consequences for himself in that his actions will inevitably bear fruit. He or she has to be aware that there is a dynamism within hatred and violence when the causal chain has not had its nourishment removed. Such a person needs to evaluate motives in the knowledge that violent tendencies are rooted in the defilements of //lobha//, //dosa// and //moha//, and in the obsessions generated by //papanca//.

Yet that person might still judge that the risks are worth facing to prevent a greater evil. Whether the assassination of Hitler would have prevented numerous innocent deaths is still an open question.

In conclusion, it can be said that Buddhism lays down a form of mental culture to lessen the mind's tendency to veer towards violence. However, it is a culture which involves qualities of faith (//saddha//) and effort (//vayama//) that many in society are unable to cultivate. Therefore punishment either by the state or in an after-life is seen as a valid deterrent for extremes of violence. However, where violence flows directly and unjustifiably from the state or from other groups or institutions, questions are raised which are not dealt with directly by the texts. The drawing of conclusions is therefore fraught with difficulty. Yet these questions must be tackled if Buddhism is to provide guidelines in a violent world. What seems to emerge from the above analysis is that non-violence in the face of violence, although preferable for all and incumbent on the monk, is not a moral absolute in all circumstances.

* * * * * * * *

CONCLUSION

It was claimed at the beginning that the advent of the nuclear bomb had issued in a new era of violence and that Buddhism should be able to address this development. The foregoing analysis started from a study of the Buddha's awareness of violence in his own society and passed to questions concerning the condemnation of violence, the roots of violence, and the possibilities for its eradication or reduction.
Each of these issues has relevance for the present age, although it has been pointed out that many conditions have changed between the sixth century B.C. and the twentieth century A.D.

One area in which difference can be seen is in the nature of warfare. In the Buddha's time, professional armies were used to settle conflicts. Although civilians were no doubt killed as victorious armies took their plunder, it was the army itself which bore the brunt of the slaughter. Today the cost in civilian, animal and plant life in any future nuclear war is thinkable only in terms of the most horrific nightmare. The duty of the Cakkavatti King might be to defend his people. Yet no nuclear weapon can be used in defense. If it was, it would prove the Buddhist view that the use of violence leads to escalation. The slim, ever-shaky defense that nuclear weapons provide is MAD -- Mutually Assured Destruction -- an uneasy, computer-controlled peace feeding on fear and the willingness to annihilate millions in retaliation, if the other side dares to be the aggressor.

It would seem that, in nuclear weapons, man has created something out of his greed which now makes him victim. The analysis given earlier about the effects of //papanca// and the process of perception is relevant here. Some people might see the development of ever more sophisticated weapons of destruction as the result of objective, scientific probing into the nature of reality, in this case the use of the atom. An approach more in accordance with Buddhism would be to see the root as //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi//: the craving for power over the material world and over other people; the wish to protect self and judge other groups as inferior; the clinging to one ideology whilst condemning all others. The result of //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi// is //papanca//, the proliferation of ideas which turn the so-called perceiver into the victim of obsessions bearing little relation to the empirical. Nuclear and chemical weapons are horrific projections of the human mind. It has come to the point where they possess the mind rather than the mind the weapons. Humanity is now the victim.

Within this atmosphere, one may ask how effective change in the individual is and whether the few who work to conquer //tanha//, //mana// and //ditthi// can act as leaven within the whole. The obstacles are great today as they were in the Buddha's time. The Buddha saw the //puthujjana// as a person hard to convince or change, given the strength of craving and views. Today, ideas have a charismatic force. Nationalism, ethnicity and religion, for instance, push groups towards violence. They form ego-feeding, identity-creating creeds which are hard to break down. In such situations, empirical evidence shows that some who try to show the alternative force of //metta// become the victims of violence, at least in the frame of their present life.

Two insights from the foregoing study are relevant here: the reaction which took place in the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta and the interdependent nature of the environmental and the psychological. In the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta, the truth that violence leads to greater violence and crime to ever-deepening bestiality eventually pierces the consciousness of some members of society as they see what is happening around them. Some realize that change is possible through a change in thought patterns. A reaction takes place after the trough of bestiality has been reached. Today, there are those who are "turning around," who are realizing how destructive and bestial is the present and potential violence in the world. However, for just as long as the external environment remains tension-creating, the rise of violent tendencies will continue. Similar injustices exist today as are mentioned in the Kutadanta Sutta, but their scope has altered and widened to include relationships between blocks of countries as well as within countries. In most countries of the world, the poor are becoming poorer. Between countries, the richer nations are becoming richer at the expense of the poorer. The warning which the Buddhist texts give is that such conditions breed violence and that the arm of the law or the gun will not curb it. Only change at the level of the root causes will create more peaceful conditions. This is one of the gravest challenges which the world faces, since it points to a complete re-drawing of the world economic system. The formidable obstacle in the way of such change is //tanha// in those with power or economic might -- for profit, influence and a luxurious lifestyle.

One reaction of the individual to the above tension is complete withdrawal into a life of inaction. This was evidently a temptation in the sixth century B.C. It has been a temptation across all religions throughout the centuries. The mistake is to confuse renunciation and inaction, detachment (//viraga//) and apathy. The life of renunciation aims at detachment from //raga//, //dosa// and //moha//, but the result should not be apathy but rather greater compassion (//karuna//) and loving kindness (//metta//). In the Samanamandika Sutta, a wanderer, Uggahamana, declares that the one who does no evil deed with his body, speaks no evil speech, intends no evil intention and leads no evil livelihood is the recluse who has obtained the most worthy end. The Buddha responds:

> This being so carpenter, then according to the speech of Uggahamana a young baby boy lying on its back would be of abounding skill, of the highest skill, an unconquerable recluse, attained to the highest attainments. [95]

In contrast, the Buddha lays down the importance of developing wholesome qualities, not merely abstaining from what is unwholesome. The demands of the Eightfold Path are stressed, demands incumbent not only on the monk but on all followers:

> As to this, carpenter, a monk is endowed with the perfect view of an adept, he is endowed with the perfect intention of an adept, ... the perfect speech ... the perfect action ... the perfect mode of livelihood ... the perfect endeavor ... the perfect mindfulness ... the perfect concentration ... the perfect knowledge of an adept (//sammananena//), he is endowed with the perfect freedom of an adept. [96]

In a violent world, therefore, the duty of the Buddhist disciple is not inactive withdrawal or apathy but culture of the mind to root out personal defilements so that perception and judgment can be unbiased and objective; cultivation of positive qualities which will create harmony and peace; and, most important, a readiness to speak out and act against what is blameworthy and in praise of what is worthy of praise.

* * * * * * * *

NOTES

Abbreviations

DN	Digha Nikaya
MN	Majjhima Nikaya
SN	Samyutta Nikaya
AN	Anguttara Nikaya
Dhp	Dhammapada
Snp	Sutta Nipata

Textual references have been taken from the Pali Text Society's editions of the Nikayas. Unless specified otherwise, English translations have been taken from the PTS versions, though some have been slightly altered.

1. Utilitarianism is a philosophy which claims that the ultimate end of action should be the creation of human happiness. Actions should be judged according to whether they promote the greatest happiness of the greatest number. The most important exponent of this philosophy was the nineteenth century British thinker John Stuart Mill. One of the weaknesses of utilitarianism is that it can be used to justify the violation of minority rights.
2. Reference may be made to many texts which stress that encouraging others to do harm is blameworthy. AN ii,215, for instance, speaks of the unworthy man and the more unworthy man, the latter being one who encourages others to do harmful actions such as killing living beings.
3. MN 95/ii,167.
4. The Kosala Samyutta (Samyutta Nikaya, vol. 1) records the conversations which this king had with the Buddha. The examples mentioned have been taken from this section.
5. SN i,97.
6. MN 13/i,86-87.

7. MN 13/i,87.
8. SN iv,343.
9. In several suttas, the Buddha comes across groups of wanderers engaged in heated discussions about kings, robbers, armies, etc. (e.g. DN iii,37; MN ii,1). In contrast, the Buddha advised his disciples either to maintain noble silence or to speak about the Dhamma.
10. See Romila Thapar, //A History of India// (Pelican Books UK, 1966), chapter 3.
11. SN i,75.
12. MN 36/i,227ff.
13. MN 12/i,68ff.
14. At the end of the Buddha's description of his austerities in the Mahasaccaka Sutta he says: "And some recluses and brahmins are now experiencing feelings that are acute, painful, sharp, severe; but this is paramount, nor is there worse than this. But I, by this severe austerity, do not reach states of further men, the excellent knowledge and vision befitting the Ariyans. Could there be another way to awakening?" (MN i,246).
15. The Mahasakuludayi Sutta (MN 77/ii,1ff.) reflects contemporary realities when a town plays hosts to various groups of wanderers.
16. DN 25/iii,38.
17. DN 8/i,162.
18. Trevor Ling, //The Buddha -- Buddhist Civilisation in India and Ceylon// (Penquin Books UK, 1973).
19. See Esukari Sutta, MN 96.
20. SN iv,330ff.
21. DN 31.
22. Reference can be made to the following:
    (a) AN i,188ff. The Buddha's advice to the Kalamas.
    (b) AN ii,167ff. The Buddha advises the monks to scrutinize closely anything said to have come from his mouth.
    (c) Canki Sutta: MN 95/ii,170-71. The Buddha says that belief, reasoning and personal preference are not guarantees of truth.
    (d) Vimamsaka Sutta: MN 47. The Buddha urges his disciples to examine his own conduct before deciding whether he is an Enlightened One, and to investigate empirical evidence rather than accept things through blind faith.

23. The following texts provide fuller discussions about //paticca samuppada//:
    (a) Sammaditthi Sutta: MN 9.
    (b) Mahatanhasankhaya Sutta: MN 38.
    (c) Mahanidana Sutta: DN 15.
24. MN 99/ii,197.
25. MN 96/ii,177ff.
26. AN ii,42.
27. Reference may be made to the following:
    (a) Assalayana Sutta: MN 93.
    (b) Madhura Sutta: MN 84.
    (c) AN ii,84. Here, four types of people are mentioned, two of whom are bound for light and two of whom are bound for darkness. Deeds, not birth, is the criterion for the divisions between the two sets.
28. For instance, the Kutadanta Sutta and the Cakkavatti Sihanada Sutta, to be discussed below.
29. The Mahadukkhakkhandha Sutta (MN 13) is an example.
30. SN i,100ff.
31. Therigatha vv. 105-6 (Sona).
32. MN 61/i,415-16.
33. MN 8/i,44-45.
34. AN ii,191.
35. //Metta// and //karuna//, as two of the //brahmaviharas//, are mentioned at DN i,250-51, MN i,38, etc.
36. AN i,51.
37. MN 135/iii,303.
38. MN 129/iii,169-70. A similar approach is adopted in the Devaduta Sutta: MN 130/iii,178ff.
39. The Petavatthu is one of the books of the Khuddaka Nikaya. It contains 51 stories in four chapters, all concerning the //petas//, a class of ghost-like beings who have fallen from the human plane because of misdeeds done.
40. DN 26/iii,61.
41. DN 16/iii,72ff.
42. SN i,82.
43. SN i,83.

44. SN i,101.
45. SN iv,308.
46. AN ii,121ff.
47. Snp. vv. 935-38. Translation by H. Saddhatissa (Curzon Press, 1985).
48. DN 5/i,135.
49. DN 26/iii,61.
50. DN iii,73.
51. AN ii,74.
52. DN 27/iii,85.
53. DN iii,92.
54. MN 2/i,7. The description of the //puthujjana// is a stock passage recurring throughout the Canon.
55. See SN iv,195.
56. AN ii,211.
57. MN 18/i,109-10.
58. Bhikkhu Nanananda, //Concept and Reality in Early Buddhist Thought// (Kandy: Buddhist Publication Society, 1971).
59. MN 18/i,111-12.
60. //Concept and Reality//, p.6.
61. Immanuel Kant, 1724-1804. His major work, //The Critique of Pure Reason//, studies the place of //a priori// ideas in the formation of concepts and examines the role of reason and speculative metaphysics.
62. AN i,188; AN ii,190.
63. DN 1. See e.g. DN i,16: "In the fourth case, monks, some recluse or brahmin is addicted to logic and reasoning. He gives utterance to the following conclusion of his own, beaten out by his argumentations and based on his sophistry...."
64. MN 74/i,497.
65. Snp. 824-34; Snp. 862-77.
66. AN ii,173ff. The Buddha here quotes three views which result in inaction: (i) that all feelings are due to previous kamma; (ii) that all feelings are due to a supreme deity; and (iii) that all feelings are without cause or condition.
67. MN 105/ii,253.
68. MN 110/iii,21-22.
69. MN 125/iii,129-30.

70. MN 86/ii,98ff.
71. DN 26/iii,73.
72. A stock passage found in many suttas (e.g. MN 51/i,344) extols the homeless life as the only way "to fare the holy life completely fulfilled, completely purified, polished like a conch shell."
73. Dantabhumi Sutta: MN 125/iii,128ff.
74. DN 11/i,211.
75. DN 16/ii,104.
76. MN 51/i,340.
77. Body, feelings, thoughts and mental objects are the four foundations of mindfulness (see DN 22, MN 10).
78. MN 27/i,181, and elsewhere.
79. This point is developed in Trevor Ling, //The Buddha//.
80. MN 21/i,129.
81. MN 145/iii,269.
82. Respectively MN 65, MN 21, MN 70, MN 15.
83. The Mahasakuludayi Sutta (MN 77) and the Dhammacetiya Sutta (MN 89) describe the impact which the general concord of the Buddha's followers had respectively on groups of wanderers at Rajagaha and on King Pasenadi.
84. AN ii,100.
85. Respectively MN 93, DN 27, MN 84.
86. MN 96.
87. DN 31/iii,181.
88. Respectively DN 1, DN 3, DN 11.
89. DN 5.
90. MN 41/i,287.
91. MN 41/i,288.
92. DN 2/i,71 and elsewhere.
93. See AN ii,71. A monk dies of snakebite, and the Buddha declares that if he had suffused the four royal families of snakes with a heart of //metta//, he would not have died. A story in the Cullavagga of the Vinaya Pitaka relates how the Buddha's envious cousin, Devadatta, tried to kill him by releasing a notoriously ferocious elephant called Nalagiri at him in the streets of Rajagaha. The Buddha is said to have subdued it by exercising //metta// and //karuna//, so that the elephant lowered its trunk and stopped before the Buddha. Hiuen-Tsang refers to a stupa at the place where this is said to have happened.

94. Vimanavatthu, No. 15.
95. MN 78/ii,24.
96. MN 78/ii,29.

* * * * * * * *

THE BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY

The BPS is an approved charity dedicated to making known the Teaching of the Buddha, which has a vital message for people of all creeds. Founded in 1958, the BPS has published a wide variety of books and booklets covering a great range of topics. Its publications include accurate annotated translations of the Buddha's discourses, standard reference works, as well as original contemporary expositions of Buddhist thought and practice. These works present Buddhism as it truly is -- a dynamic force which has influenced receptive minds for the past 2500 years and is still as relevant today as it was when it first arose. A full list of our publications will be sent upon request with an enclosure of U.S. $1.00 or its equivalent to cover air mail postage.

Write to:

The Hony. Secretary
BUDDHIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY
P.O. Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy Sri Lanka

or

The Barre Center for Buddhist Studies
Lockwood Road
Barre, MA 01005
Tel: (508) 355-2347

* * * * * * * *

DISTRIBUTION AGREEMENT
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

TITLE OF WORK: Violence and Disruption in Society: A Study of the Early Buddhist Texts (The Wheel Publication No. 392/393)
FILENAME: WHEEL392.ZIP
AUTHOR: Elizabeth J. Harris
AUTHOR'S ADDRESS: c/o Buddhist Publication Society
PUBLISHER'S ADDRESS: Buddhist Publication Society
P.O. Box 61
54, Sangharaja Mawatha
Kandy, Sri Lanka
COPYRIGHT HOLDER: Elizabeth J. Harris & Buddhist Publication Society (1994)
DATE OF PUBLICATION: 1994
RIGHTS AND RESTRICTIONS: See paragraph below.
DATE OF DHARMANET DISTRIBUTION: November 1994
ORIGIN SITE: Access to Insight BBS, Pepperell MA * (508) 433-5847 (96:903/1)

The copyright holder retains all rights to this work and hereby grants electronic distribution rights to DharmaNet International. This work may be freely copied and redistributed electronically, provided that the file contents (including this Agreement) are not altered in any way and that it is distributed at no cost to the recipient. You may make printed copies of this work for your personal use; further distribution of printed copies requires permission from the copyright holder. If this work is used by a teacher in a class, or is quoted in a review, the publisher shall be notified of such use. See the title page of this work for any additional rights and restrictions that may apply.

It is the spirit of dana, freely offered generosity, which has kept the entire Buddhist tradition alive for more than 2,500 years. If you find this work of value, please consider sending a donation to the author or publisher, so that these works may continue to be made available. May your generosity contribute to the happiness of all beings everywhere.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

DharmaNet International, P.O. Box 4951, Berkeley, CA 94704-4951

[end]

ÚÄÄÄ

2. 'Seela' Morality to prevent remorse
3. 'Thiyagga','Caga' Generosity and sharing for common good
4. 'Panna' Wisdom, through 'Bhavana' or mental culture

ÉÍÍÍ

Sujiva
Santisukharama, Kota Tinggi 6 Nov 1994

If a person is energetic, mindful, pure in his thought, word and deed,
and if he does everything with care and consideration in senses restrain,
he earns his living according to the Truth.
And if the person is not unheedful, the fame and fortune of that mindful person steadily increases.

VOLCANO
Contents

1 Volcano
2 The Magic of the Mind
3 The Main Control
Benefits of Mindfulness - Worlds of Difference
Gaining Hold on the Main Controls
l Walking Meditation
l Sitting Meditation
l Daily Activities
4 Insight and Concentration
l Follow-up Advice
5 Our Path is the Waterway

CHAPTER ONE

I think that great Indian Sage would have, if there were volcanoes where he lived, used them in his teachings as he did it with the lofty snow-capped Himalayas.

Not until recently, did I have an opportunity to behold these fascinating spouts for the boiling bowels of the earth except in geographical magazines and television screens. The craters that I visited on my trip to Indonesia were not the most spectacular ones, but they were enough to give me the idea that those people who devote their entire lives studying this area of science concerning volcanic activity may not be just for the sake of concern for human safety.

We live quite indifferent and unaware of many things around us. Coming face to face with a volcanic crater jolted me to sudden awareness of the superficial stability of the very earth we are standing on. Where we live in Malaysia, just outside the ring of fiery volcanic regions, tremors once in a blue moon do occur but earthquakes and volcanic eruptions are generally regarded as something not part of our world. People living on its slopes, should be more aware of the dangers but this is not always so, for people often prefer to be like an ostrich - remain blind to the dangers. Warnings will be issued, but still there will be casualties. The fertile soil for one promises abundant harvests and people grow attached to their homes. The earth, the blood and emotions soon become quite inseparable.

There are many types of volcanoes, our guide informed us: Live volcanoes, sleeping volcanoes and dead volcanoes.

Living volcanoes which are active as can be seen by its still fuming crater, can blow up anytime although modern science has instruments that can forewarn us to some degree.

Sleeping volcanoes are dormant because they have for some time not shown any activity. But it can still "wake up" when the conditions play up again. Pinatubo of Philippines which blew up in 1991 had been sleeping for about 600 years.

When they are more sure of the extinction, the mounts which were once active volcanoes are now considered dead. But then we can never be truly sure unless we know what's going on underneath.

Think of the hot molten rocks called lava cascading at great speed down those steep slopes and burning everything on its way although it's other things such as pyroclastic flows that kill people. It doesn't need much to kill man or inflict more suffering than man can bear, but Nature's moods are impersonal and so when they blow their top, it's 'run for your lives'.

Java is the most volcanic riddled region in the world. Two of the most disastrous, Tambora and Krakatau which claimed many thousands of lives not to mention property loss, exist here.

People can also be seen in the same way - active volcanoes, dormant volcanoes and dead volcanoes.

When you are in a fit of anger, consumed by lust or buried by delusion, you are undergoing an eruption. It strikes terror in and around you and you may lose some good things in life. Although it may not take lives, it can and may even be more lethal than the actual volcano. How about the atomic bombs at Hiroshima and Nagasaki as an example. The Japanese themselves killed some millions of Chinese in World War Two. Atrocities by Man on himself can do more than Natural Disasters.

Therefore, if I may add, there are three types of eruptions - minor, major and catastrophic:

Minor eruptions cause minor damage such as loss of wealth and "face".

Major eruptions cause more permanent losses such as loss of body parts, permanent separation from loved ones and even loss of one's own life.

Catastrophic eruptions cause large scale wars, massacres and other forms of unimaginable sufferings.

You may survive many minor eruptions but one major one is enough to drive quite a few people off the rockers. Hope (against all odds) that such unfortunate happenings will not come nigh unto you but tragedies eventually will play its part. Look deep into your heart and you will know what I mean. Look at all the other walking volcanoes around you and at the instability of the world and you will be convinced. The fires of greed, hatred and delusion run deep in everyone's veins. A dormant volcano can sleep through centuries but these defilements spew out dirt everyday.

What is it that can quell these fires? The answer is found where the problem began - hidden underground where there are veins of hot molten lava, there can also be the cool refreshing springs of life, that is in the Mind itself - The cooling waters of mindfulness!

Resting for a minute on the largest stupa in the world, I could see the distant volcano Merapi mixing its fumes with the clouds. Borobudur, sometimes referred to as the Mountain of Buddhas, may have actually been inspired by the presence of volcanoes.

Whilst watching the magnificent statues of our Lord serenely seated with various hand gestures, it occurred to me that this is a genuinely dead volcano, the fires of defilements which have long been extinct. How marvelous it is to be part of the picture with this symbol of peace!

CHAPTER TWO
Magic of the Mind

Magic can be broadly classified into two types: White and Black. We are not talking about skin color but on mental states. Mental states are called dark or black when they are enshrouded by delusion with regards to reality. For example, one in a fit of temper is oblivious to the goodness of the other party just as one obsessed by craving is blind to the faults of the thing he wishes to possess. Such states as you can see, finally will lead to no good.

Mental states on the other hand are described as bright or white when they are pure and clear. You can experience its freshness and radiance when you are mindful and at peace. It is not difficult to understand why happiness follows such people like a shadow that never seems to leave them.

The mind is indeed a magician's box. Out from it come things beyond your comprehension. You may liken it to a television set, a computer, a transistor radio and more, all in one. When every thing is in order then you can have all the fun you want, but if it gets out of hand, then it's the gates of Hell opened wide.

You may be acquainted with what kids play with nowadays - video games. They put you into all sorts of situations ranging from participating in the World's Grand Prix, fighting aliens to saving damsels in distress. You are even given a choice of vehicle, lethal weapon and who you want to be. The idea is to overcome all obstacles, shoot down all alien ships and collect the most points. However, if you do not happen to be like one of those whiz kids who have spent hours without end fiddling those buttons with nimble fingers, then you are more like a born loser. But it's all right, it's all in a game and with some practice you'll acquire the skill. It also won't be long before they come up with 3-D video games.

Life is something like that, with the mind creating situations, but the trouble here is that you can't switch it off whenever you are tired. You can't consider getting cancer a nice game to play can you? Nor is becoming a schizophrenic or neurotic much fun.

Even suicide will not be an answer to it all. The mind, we are told, will lead you to a worse nightmare.

How, you may ask, does this happen?

The Mind is a complex of forces, or some may prefer to call it energies. Try to sit quietly and watch your thoughts and you will see them at work. It is endlessly trying to create new situations, real and otherwise and responding to them. It is unfortunate many don't bother to take a good look at the machinery and hence all those problems, problems, problems! It is there that you have all those power, answers and the fountain of joy.

Although the whole thing can be complicated, it is not too difficult with some useful tips on the main points of control, to make this magic box work for you.

CHAPTER THREE
The Main Control

The main controlling faculty of the mind is mindfulness. Remember the moments you were calm and composed? The awareness that comes with them are also bright and clear. As a direct opposite of it are those times you were panic stricken or completely confused. Therefore with mindfulness you can do any job as well as you possibly can, be it drive a car, cook a meal or answer some examination questions. But this potential is not as recognized as other things like faith and concentration and so not emphasized. If we are to develop it until it is really strong, lasting and revealing, then life will breeze by if not ecstatically, then at least smoothly.

Benefits of Mindfulness - Worlds of Difference

Sometimes people say it is a thin line between sanity and insanity. The mad genius, for example, is not far from a maniac. That's why Frankenstein was invented and so was the Terminator. In any case, bombs of all sort is bad . But no matter how thin a line it is, it is still a line and even if it is real thick, if you are confused, you will still miss it.

Mindfulness actually is the line. When you are un-mindful, such as when you are in a rage, you are indeed not different from a madman. It is only a matter of degree. When you have zero mindfulness over an extended period, then one can safely conclude that you are crazy. So if you don't want to go mad then hang on to your dear mindfulness, for on the other side, that is at the bottom, is living hell. Sanity indeed is a thin line. It really does not need much, so to speak, to break a person. Lock him up without contact for a few days or weeks and there you are, someone fit for the mental ward.

If you are a meditator, you'll have some fighting chance and may be even end up saner than anyone else. But they may still call you mad because you are different. I remember how some people considered a friend mad because he was not his usual excitable and irritable self after a retreat. They were satisfied only when they managed to infuriate him. Can you imagine how this can be so when they themselves are supposed to be regular meditators? Who then is mad? But if you're really mindful then you know for yourself without doubt that your mind is clear and thinking rationally. It is they who are confused.

If it goes to say that with mindfulness, the mind is pure of defilements such as greed, anger and delusion, then it will also mean that it draws the line between genuine happiness and suffering. We can understand why anger and delusion are suffering but not greed, especially when it comes with joy. That is because joy tends to muffle up the real state of mind. Take away the joy and what do you have left? There will be a really restless state of craving and tenacious clinging. It is like someone who is hungry. Therefore if you will have real happiness, then look for peace of mind that is born of purity and mindfulness.

It is a kind of happiness that is truly satisfying, strenghtened by noble purpose. No sensual pleasure can be equal to it. Besides, it can be freely obtain at hand (as long as you practice) and you don't have to pay anything to acquire it.

Mindfulness can also be the deciding factor whether it will be life or death. A lot of careless mistakes and overlooking end up in death. It may be just a slip from the stairs, ladder or along the road. Traffic accidents claim lives daily. Then there are electrical short circuits, or even choking through unmindful eating. It means not only your life, but also others. What happens after that? If you are mindful at the moment of death, it can mean a happy rebirth. If not it can mean hell. Buddhists believe in the Law of Kamma (Law of Retribution). Mindfulness means meritorious kamma and defilements mean unwholesome kamma. All these done throughout one's life also add to the store of forces that decide what will happen next - heaven or hell.

Last but not least, Mindfulness is also the factor that differentiates between Nibbana and Samsara (Cycle of birth and death, suffering). In the Noble Eightfold Path, the fulfilment of morality, concentration and understanding depends on the build up of mindfulness. Without mind-fulness, there cannot even be any moral base. Finally the culmination of insight is that extremely strong and sharp mindfulness that penetrates through the thick veil of ignorance to realize that everlasting Peace, Nibbana. So until then please try to be as mindful as possible to get out of the cycle of birth and death, suffering, Samsara.

Gaining Hold on the Main Controls

Now that you realize (I hope) how important it is to have mindfulness, you may perhaps be interested to know how to go about cultivating it to make all the difference.

The main idea is to develop this awareness until it becomes habitual and continuous, and then apply it for more specialized purposes such as gaining knowledge and skills.

To begin with, let me offer you certain suggestions which will be definitely be helpful in some way. These are simple exercises which you can safely try out. They come under three sub-headings:

* Walking Meditation
* Sitting Meditation
* Mindfulness of Daily Activities.

Walking Meditation

Can you imagine the extent of things involved with walking? You walk to the office, walk for exercise, sight-seeing, to the dinner table, to ease yourself and many other wonderful as well as unmentionable things.

But one can feel and think quite differently when taking a casual walk along an isolated beach in the light of dawn from a walk heading for the dentist's chair. It's all in the state of mind. And mind you, that state of mind can determine where you will end up and how you fare. If you walk so unmindfully, you may end up either in the hospital or grave. Of course many people nowadays cut down on the walking, they go on wheels. At such speed that modern technology provides, you may have to come out with even more mindfulness to ensure safety.
Let me offer you a few tips to start off your walking meditation:
þ To learn walking mindfully, you have to find a quiet spot with a fair distance, say at least, about thirty feet. Preferably it is a straight clean and level path without anyone around staring at what you are about to do. Failing this, any distance of up to ten steps will also do.

þ First, you must try to bring to mind the clear awareness of your own standing posture. It's not visualization, but feeling one's body as it is - the tension, firmness and maybe a bit of swaying. Make sure you are relaxed with a straight posture. Hold or fold your hands together to help keep the composure. You may close your eyes and make the mind free, calm, relaxed and happy. Learnt to let go of all your problems and thoughts. They are not worth clinging on to all the time. Give your mind a break. Just be with the present moment and be aware.

þ Now, after having gathered your calm composure, start walking, keeping the attention at the lower part of the moving foot, below the calves. Walk freely (with eyes opened) at a pace you feel most comfortable and relaxed. To help keep the mind at the feet you may mentally say right, left or walking, walking or whichever word you prefer. And remember, don't think, just keep the mind to the present moment.

þ When it's time to turn, be aware of the turning action.

þ Whenever the attention runs to thoughts, you will then have to recall your awareness, noting mindfully thinking, thinking and then return to the footsteps. If tension or boredom creeps up, you will again have to stop walking to bring back your awareness in the way you did.While standing, note tension or boredom mindfully, before resuming the walking meditation.

þ I would advise to walk at a certain rhythm which the mind can catch on to. Once caught on, it will tend to flow along. Then maintain that rhythm for the time being.

þ When you feel much calmer or somewhat tired, then you can slow down your pace, at the same time be even more relaxed mentally and physically. People who have gained concentration in this way can walk for an hour or more and yet feel as if only a minute has passed. They feel weightless and seem to be walking on clouds. You can end up very blissful!

þ There is however, one thing to add. When you feel really relaxed, keep your mind keenly aware as it flows along with the footsteps. Try to feel or sense the sensations that flow along - the tension, pulling and pushing forces, the lightness or weight and finally the contact of the soles on the ground.

þ To help the beginner gain a keener perception of this, teachers have devised a method breaking each step to various phases starting from two to six. Although three phases is sufficient for most people, it can be increased progressively but only when one is ready for it.

þ During an intensive retreat or formal meditation exercise, the standard procedure is to do one hour walking meditation, dividing it into three periods - the first twenty minutes for one phase walking, second twenty minutes for two phase walking and final twenty minutes (adding up to one hour) for three phase walking.

þ The principle behind this is to gradually bring the mind to a more concentrated awareness which can come about with slowing down and a more thorough observation. As to the most suitable type of walking, it will be the type that arouses the most mindfulness.

þ The phases of the steps from one to six are:

1. right/left
2. lifting, stepping
3. lifting, pushing, stepping
4. (heels) raising, lifting, pushing, stepping
5. raising, lifting, pushing, lowering, stepping
6. raising, lifting, pushing, lowering, treading, pressing.

(Refer DIAGRAM A on various phases of walking)

þ At each phase of a step, when observing closely, one will be able to perceive the sensations or forces that can be felt along with it. One can actually experience it as a flow of tension, thrusting forces or a spread of hardness when stepping.

þ To make the picture complete, the intentions that arise prior to each length of walking, the intentions to stop, turn, are also mindfully noted.

þ If you can do this, you may actually arrive at a point where you completely forget about yourself and what is left is the process of awareness with its objects. Then you have begun the journey within, the path to realize the Nature of Who and What we really are. Then all conflicts with Reality, due to ignorance, which is the root problem of suffering may finally see the end.

Sitting Meditation

The same principle used in walking meditation is appli-cable to sitting meditation only with a difference of basic objects. What principle?
The principle of three steps in mindful observation:

1. To be mindful
2. To follow or attend to the object of observation mindfully.
3. To observe into the Nature of the object without thinking and concepts.

This Nature here refers to the process of sensations which goes to make up the object which we are observing.

While one is walking, one mindfully follows the footsteps and observes the process of sensations that make it up. Sitting meditation makes use of the sensations of the abdomen as one breathes. Some, however, use the sensation of the breath at the nose tip.

þ Usually people who meditate will sit cross-legged with their back straight (eyes closed) when they intend to meditate. Those with stiff knees can sit on chairs. Do not lean back as that will not be too helpful for keeping up the awareness although it will do very well if you intend to relax completely into sleep, in which case you might as well lie down.

(Refer DIAGRAM B on various sitting postures)

þ Breathe normally, and as one does, keep the mindful attention on the sensations of the movement as the abdomen rises up and down.

þ Mentally say rising and falling in conjunction with the respective movements.

þ To help beginners keep track of the sensations of motion, one may rest one's palm lightly at that area until one becomes familiar with the object.

þ When the mind wanders off to other objects such as thoughts, sounds, itches and so forth, recall one's awareness as soon as one realizes, noting mentally thinking, hearing, etc. and then return to one's original object.

þ You will notice that when you try to do this, how intractable and slippery the mind is. Well, at least you are getting to know yourself better and doing something about it!

þ With practice the mind will wander less and stay with the rising and falling movements. Then one can proceed to the next step of thorough observation. At first one can only perceive up and down move-ments. With effort one can notice much more. The movements vary greatly from time to time. They can be long or short, fast or slow, smooth or jerky and so on. Even within the rising movement there can be many various sensations arising and passing away. Again it finally ends up as mere processes of the mind and its object.

þ Finally, pain is often the last to call before you give up. Try to ignore it if it is minor, but if it stands out and grabs your attention, then you will have to make it as your main subject of observation.

þ The idea is to make use of it to train up mindfulness (and in this case also patience). The three point observation principle also holds water here. You first has to watch pain with mindfulness. Then watch it for sometime without being irritated by it.

þ If you can do that, then you can observe into the Nature of the pain, whether it is hard, hot or numb. It could also be pulling, twisting or cutting. There are more types than you can imagine and it can be very interesting.

After that you can proceed to discover about its process - how it arises, changes and break up. It is possible to gain deeper understanding of your own Nature through observation of pain. Pain is part of your individual set up. When you cannot bear it any longer, then it's time to get up.

(Refer DIAGRAM C on flow chart)

Daily Activities

One of the first things to learn is about mindfulness itself. We read about it, hear about it, now it's getting to know it through direct experience. It's not just knowing some-thing. It's knowing it with a clear, steady mind. In that way you can't be wrong. Besides there cannot be any defilements - attachment, anger, delusion, sloth, restles-sness, skeptical doubts, jealousy, and so on. Once you can define it, it is not difficult to call it up. It's just a matter of will. How wonderful it is to be mindful all the time! But before that can be so, you will have to be able to distinguish clearly between the states of mindfulness and non-mindfulness. After that it is up to you to practise, practise and practise.

In a way, maintaining mindfulness is comparable to making a journey. There you are on your bicycle going along the rough roads and crossing torrential streams. You need to keep an eye on the road, balance your bicycle and keep on paddling. It needs considerable trials and errors before you acquire the skill. Similarly, in life or in meditation one needs to have the experience in handling various situations and objects that one comes across. And when something particularly trying comes along, one can become bogged down for quite a while until he has learned to get over it. Pain is an example. It is also an unescapable feature in life.

Once one is able to know what this mindfulness and maintenance of it are all about, then one may go on to be mindful of all own activities as best as one can and as often as it is practical. It will begin from the moment one wakes up from slumber, one notes mindfully the opening of the eyes. In the same way one maintains mindfulness when gets up, washes up, eats, drinks and so on through-out the day until finally lies down to sleep again at the end of the day.

During eating, for example, one will have to mindfully note the actions involved step by step. Firstly, the intention to eat, then the looking at the food, the stretching of the hands, the scooping of the food, the bringing to the mouth, the opening of the mouth, chewing, biting, swallowing and all other steps. During a meditation retreat, one can afford to slow down one's actions to help concentrate the awareness as much as possible. In fact one can be quite oblivious to the surroundings. Finally one will, as in sitting and walking, be left with mere processes.

However, at home or at work one will not be able to practise mindfulness in this concentrated manner. Usually one will be able to do so only at a general level. Only when one is free can one resume one's mindfulness during the formal exercises with the desired intensity.

CHAPTER FOUR
Insight and Concentration

The next thing that one needs is to be able to differentiate between concentration and mindfulness. It will determine the direction you are heading - whether you are on the path to tranquility or insight development.

Most meditation methods emphasize on concentration. They bring the mind to focus on one point or object thereby achieving strength of concentration. The results are very peaceful states and in extreme cases give rise to supernormal powers. Isn't this what people are hoping to achieve? No wonder most head towards that direction!
For Buddhists, that way does not lead us completely away from all our sufferings although it can lighten it considerably for a period of time. The answer to the predicament is Insight, which is the realization of the real Nature of the world as it is, freed from concepts. In simple words, all mental and material processes that make up this world is really impermanent, unsatisfactory and non-self. Seeing thus one turns away from them and finds refuge in the unconditioned state, the everlasting peace of the absolute reality, Nibbana. Without realizing the unsatisfactory state of conditioned existence, one is greatly attached to it, and therefore emancipation is impossible.

To develop this Insight, mindfulness is emphasized as the main feature and concentration steps down to second place as another necessary factor.

To differentiate between mindfulness and concen-tration we can quote their characteristics:

þ Concentration holds on to and fixes the mind to the object. It is like when you are holding tightly to something and not letting go. It is also like you are staring at the television screen unable to tear yourself away from it.

þ Mindfulness however is like making a careful observation of what is happening on the tele-vision screen.

In other words, concentration pins the mind to its object while it is mindfulness that carefully and thoroughly gets a good look at it. When you have found out what that thing really is, then you have developed insight wisdom.

From here we can conclude that concentration can come without mindfulness but when mindfulness is present, to some degree, there is concentration.

Normally in tranquillity practice, although concen-tration is the main objective, there must also be mind-fulness to bring it about. But that mindfulness is not as thorough as you would achieve in Insight meditation. Besides, its objects differ i.e. a conceptual one with tranquility practice.

If one's aim is to really look within to discover who and what one really is, then mindful observation must be borne in mind as the main factor. Then one is like a scientist making a close and thorough observation of his subject. Once there is enough, one gets the full picture with all its details. That is when mindfulness is transformed into insight. So in insight meditation, one observes with concentrated awareness on the objects eg. rising/falling of the abdomen, sitting/touching, pain, thinking, right foot/left foot, etc. and will soon discover that all these (including the observing mind) are just processes that arises and passes away so rapidly. The meditator then realises that all these processes are changing (impermanent), beyond individual control and unsatisfactory. In insight meditation this also means the abandoning of the clinging to the false self and there is a return of original natures.

The abolishing of the "I am" - that is truly supreme bliss.
"Udana"

Follow-up Advice

Welcome to my favorite world. This world with nobody around, just mental and material processes going on. This is what I find most meaningful. This is where the real meaning of life is! When you are really aware of these things, there's no place for attachment, anger, hallucinations and all those negative qualities. They just don't fit in when one is really aware of these things. There you are - the peace and meaning to live by and that is to discover the final journey within, to be home with the absolute.

Unfortunately, the scope of this little booklet has it that, I can only give as much as an introduction to what Insight meditation is and the basic exercises. There are definitely much more steps to be taken and it will be best that you approach the people who have done it before and is able to give you suitable advice. For this purpose there is an attached reference to the various Vipassana (Insight meditation) centers in Malaysia. It is of course preferred that you attend a more complete course under a qualified instructor on a part time basis or at an intensive retreat.

For those who are daring enough to try even with whatever they have in this pamphlet, I have one or two more things to say.

Firstly, these minimal instructions are meant only for those without any serious psychological problems. If one under medication or treatment for mental abnormalities, it is stressed further that this pamphlet is insufficient. They has to get in touch with a qualified teacher.

Secondly, if one gains concentration, one may meet with various experiences. There may be joyful feelings, visions, voices, or even fear. The simplest step is to note them mindfully. They should eventually subside and pass away within a minute. Do not be attached or panic if they don't. Worse comes to worse, just open your eyes and get up. Do this also if the mind goes into worse states of restlessness when the sitting progresses after half an hour. This can happen when your mind is burdened by tons of problems or unresolved issues. Do quick walking instead. The principle is to be MINDFUL. If mindfulness does not increase, but worsen instead, something is wrong.

Last but not least, seize an opportunity to attend an intensive course or retreat on Insight (Vipassana) med-itation. Please enquire from the list of contacts given at the end of this booklet. The progress and understanding of the practice in a retreat of about ten days can be better than that achieved in a period of one year done by oneself on a daily basis.

CHAPTER FIVE
Our Path is a Waterway

Water is an element that we are all quite familiar with. Especially for us in the hot climate, it brings a thrill even when we touch it. When it comes in a pure form in nature, it's even more exciting. This element has a strong similarity to the universal processes in Nature in that it "flows". In Nature, it flows from the future to the present and into the past. Each event is like a wave, and strong these waves can be. Whether we sink or swim will depend very much on a number of things. Beings who are infatuated and intoxicated by sensual pleasures are described as those swept away by floods. They may think how blissful it is at first, but the wise with far-sightedness will think otherwise.

To remain afloat we must have mindfulness. It keeps our head above the waters and with energy work towards safer shores. If mindfulness is well developed, we are as if on a boat, riding along the waves to Nibbana which is described as the Safe Island.

Insight Meditation is itself a process of processes. At first we try to keep ourselves afloat with strong continuous mindfulness. After that, the practice becomes a journey of discovery. Every experience we come across undergo minute scrutiny. Our mind like a microscope of ever increasing power of magnification, we discover the secrets of existence which we have misunderstood for so long. With each realization we move closer and closer where the waves break and cease altogether - that absolute reality, the utter end of all Suffering. Is that not the noblest aim for which man may live for? Wonderful knowledge like this should not be postponed. Hop on board the ship of mindfulness!

INSIGHT MEDITATION CENTRES IN MALAYSIA

Malaysian Buddhist Meditation Center
355 Jln Mesjid Negri
11600 Pulau Pinang.
Tel: 04-6572534

Kota Tinggi Buddhist Society / Santisukharama*
30, Jalan Johor
81900 Kota Tinggi, Johor.
Tel: 07-8831803

Taiping Insight Meditation Center
2, Lorong 9, Taman Lake View 34000 Taiping, Perak.
Tel: 05-834128

Metta Lodge Buddhist Center*
26 Jalan Rengas, Taman Melodies
80250 Johor Bahru, Johor
Tel: 07-3325500

*Buddhist Wisdom Center
5, Jln 16/3
46350 Petaling Jaya, Selangor.
Tel: 03-7568019

Mr./Mrs. Wung Wei Kee

1215 Lorong 2, Jalan Keranji
Tabuan Jaya 93350 Kuching, Sarawak.
Tel: 082-368105

Selangor Vipassana Center
29-B, Jln 17/45
46400 Petaling Jaya, Selangor.
Tel: 03-7550596

Mr. Tan Jin Kok
247 Setia Raje Road
Goh Mee Loke Building 98000 Miri, Sarawak.
Tel: 085-416611

Buddha Sasananuggaha Society
795-K, Jln Mas 8
Taman Kerjasama, Bkt Beruang 75450 Melaka, Melaka.
Tel: 06-325346

Sabah Vipassana Meditation Center
1st. Floor, Lot 30-32
Kian Yap Industries Estate
Mile 5.5, off Jalan Tuaran
P.O.Box 10298
88803 Kota Kinabalu, Sabah
Tel: 088-427589

Mr. Seow Liew Kiat
21 Jln Zapin, Taman Kemajuan, 83000 Batu Pahat, Johor
Tel: 07-421330

<end of file>

This document can be acquired from a sub-directory coombspapers via anonymousFTP and the node COOMBS.ANU.EDU.AUThe document's ftp filename and the full directory path are thecoombspapers top level INDEX file.Date of the document's last update/modification 03/09/93----------THE VOW OF THE 'TEN FOOTSTEPS'd filename: zenvow.txt----------This file is the work of Stan Rosenthal. It has been placed here, with his kindpermission, by Bill Fear. The author has as copies, ie. papercopies, are made.Stan Rosenthal may be contacted at 44 High street, St. D Pembrokeshire,Dyfed, Wales, UK. Bill Fear may be contacted at 29 Blackweir Terrace, Cath Glamorgan, Wales, UK. Tel (0222) 228858 email fear@thor.cf.ac.uk.Please use email as firs if possible. Messages can be sentto Stan Rosenthal via the above email address - they will inperson by myself - B.F.NOTE:You may find and odd sentence or missing information eve in thefiles. Hopefully not to frequently. This is because the files were originallywritten on a m using CP/M and had to be converted to dos format. Many ofthe 5.25 disks were very old and thus missing info.....Beginning of file.....THE VOW OF THE 'TEN FOOTSTEPS' USED BY 'TRUE FOLLOWERS' OF CH'AN TAO CHIAI will have c beings;and will not cause needless hurtor unnecessary harm.Through my training,I will seek enlightenment,the distinction between right and wrong,liberation from delusionand the malev of greed, jealousy and rage.I will seekto transcend unnecessary dichotomy,and learn to acc differences are often an attitude of mind.I acceptthat of greater value than the accumulation goods,are justice and creativity,right motive and action, and essentiality,love and peace, and to grow.I will actwith honour,without contriving for self-advantageor egotistical effort,false pri humility. I will try to live my life so as not to give cause for later regrets.I will helpthose who a suffering,or disadvantaged,and those who seek liberation or enlightenment.....End of file.....

VYAGGHAPAJJA SUTTA

(Conditions of Welfare)

In this sutta, the Buddha instructs rich householders how to preserve and increase their prosperity and how to avoid loss of wealth. Wealth alone, however, does not make a complete man nor a harmonious society. Possession of wealth all too often multiplies man's desires, and he is ever in the pursuit of amassing more wealth and power. This unrestrained craving, however, leaves him dissatisfied and stifles his inner growth. It creates conflict and disharmony in society through the resentment of the underprivileged who feel themselves exploited by the effects of unrestrained craving.

Therefore the Buddha follows up on his advice on material welfare with four essential conditions for spiritual welfare: confidence (in the Master's enlightenment), virtue, liberality and wisdom. These four will instill in man a sense of higher values. He will then not only pursue his own material concern, but also be aware of his duty towards society. To mention only one of the implications: a wisely and generously employed liberality will reduce tensions and conflicts in society. Thus the observing of these conditions of material and spiritual welfare will make for an ideal citizen in an ideal society.

* * *

Thus have I heard. Once the Exalted One was dwelling amongst the Koliyans,<1> in their market town named Kakkarapatta. Then Dighajanu,<2> a Koliyan, approached the Exalted One, respectfully saluted Him and sat on one side. Thus seated, he addressed the Exalted One as follows:

"We, Lord, are laymen who enjoy worldly pleasure. We lead a life encumbered by wife and children. We use sandalwood of Kasi. We deck ourselves with garlands, perfume and unguents. We use gold and silver. To those like us, O Lord, let the Exalted One preach the Dhamma, teach those things that lead to weal and happiness in this life and to weal and happiness in future life."

Conditions of Worldly Progress

Four conditions, Vyagghapajja,<3> conduce to a householder's weal and happiness in this very life. Which four?

The accomplishment of persistent effort (//utthana-sampada//), the accomplishment of watchfulness (//arakkha-sampada//), good friendship (//kalyanamittata//) and balanced livelihood (//sama-jivikata//).

What is the accomplishment of persistent effort?

Herein, Vyagghapajja, by whatsoever activity a householder earns his living, whether by farming, by trading, by rearing cattle, by archery, by service under the king, or by any other kind of craft -- at that he becomes skillful and is not lazy. He is endowed with the power of discernment as to the proper ways and means; he is able to carry out and allocate (duties). This is called the accomplishment of persistent effort.

What is the accomplishment of watchfulness?

Herein, Vyagghapajja, whatsoever wealth a householder is in possession of, obtained by dint of effort, collected by strength of arm, by the sweat of his brow, justly acquired by right means -- such he husbands well by guarding and watching so that kings would not seize it, thieves would not steal it, fire would not burn it, water would not carry it away, nor ill-disposed heirs remove it. This is the accomplishment of watchfulness.

What is good friendship?

Herein, Vyagghapajja, in whatsoever village or market town a householder dwells, he associates, converses, engages in discussions with householders or householders' sons, whether young and highly cultured or old and highly cultured, full of faith (//saddha//),<4> full of virtue (//sila//), full of charity (//caga//), full of wisdom (//panna//). He acts in accordance with the faith of the faithful, with the virtue of the virtuous, with the charity of the charitable, with the wisdom of the wise. This is called good friendship.

What is balanced livelihood?

Herein, Vyagghapajja, a householder knowing his income and expenses leads a balanced life, neither extravagant nor miserly, knowing that thus his income will stand in excess of his expenses, but not his expenses in excess of his income.

Just as the goldsmith,<5> or an apprentice of his, knows, on holding up a balance, that by so much it has dipped down, by so much it has tilted up; even so a householder, knowing his income and expenses leads a balanced life, neither extravagant nor miserly, knowing that thus his income will stand in excess of his expenses, but not his expenses in excess of his income.

If, Vyagghapajja, a householder with little income were to lead an extravagant life, there would be those who say -- 'This person enjoys his property like one who eats wood-apple'.<6> If, Vyagghapajja, a householder with a large income were to lead a wretched life, there would be those who say -- 'This person will die like a starveling.'

The wealth thus amassed, Vyagghapajja, has four sources of destruction:

(i) Debauchery, (ii) drunkenness, (iii) gambling, (iv) friendship, companionship and intimacy with evil-doers.

Just as in the case of a great tank with four inlets and outlets, if a man should close the inlets and open the outlets and there should be no adequate rainfall, decrease of water is to be expected in that tank, and not an increase; even so there are four sources for the destruction of amassed wealth -- debauchery, drunkenness, gambling, and friendship, companionship and intimacy with evil-doers.

There are four sources for the increase of amassed wealth: (i) abstinence from debauchery, (ii) abstinence from drunkenness, (iii) non- indulgence in gambling, (iv) friendship, companionship and intimacy with the good.

Just as in the case of a great tank with four inlets and four outlets, if a person were to open the inlets and close the outlets, and there should also be adequate rainfall, an increase in water is certainly to be expected in that tank and not a decrease, even so these four conditions are the sources of increase of amassed wealth.

These four conditions, Vyagghapajja, are conducive to a householder's weal and happiness in this very life.

Conditions of Spiritual Progress

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Four conditions, Vyagghapajja, conduce to a householder's weal and happiness in his future life. Which four?

The accomplishment of faith (//saddha-sampada//), the accomplishment of virtue (//sila-sampada//), the accomplishment of charity (//caga-sampada//) and the accomplishment of wisdom (//panna-sampada//).

What is the accomplishment of faith?

Herein a householder is possessed of faith, he believes in the Enlightenment of the Perfect One (//Tathagata//): Thus, indeed, is that Blessed One: he is the pure one, fully enlightened, endowed with knowledge and conduct, well-gone, the knower of worlds, the incomparable leader of men to be tamed, the teacher of gods and men, all-knowing and blessed. This is called the accomplishment of faith.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

What is the accomplishment of virtue?

Herein a householder abstains from killing, staling, sexual misconduct, lying, and from intoxicants that cause infatuation and heedlessness. This is called the accomplishment of virtue.

What is the accomplishment of charity?

Herein a householder dwells at home with heart free from the stain of avarice, devoted to charity, open-handed, delighting in generosity, attending to the needy, delighting in the distribution of alms. This is called the accomplishment of charity.

What is the accomplishment of wisdom?

Herein a householder is wise: he is endowed with wisdom that understands the arising and cessation (of the five aggregates of existence); he is possessed of the noble penetrating insight that leads to the destruction of suffering. This is called the accomplishment of wisdom.

These four conditions, Vyagghapajja, conduce to a householder's weal and happiness in his future life.

"Energetic and heedful in his tasks,
Wisely administering his wealth,
He lives a balanced life,
Protecting what he has amassed.

"Endowed with faith and virtue too,
Generous he is and free from avarice;
He ever works to clear the path
That leads to weal in future life.

"Thus to the layman full of faith,
By him, so truly named 'Enlightened,'
These eight conditions have been told
Which now and after lead to bliss.

NOTES
~~~~~

<1> The Koliyans were the rivals of the Sakyans. Queen Maha Maya belonged to the Koliyan clan and King Suddhodana to the Sakyan clan.

<2> Literally, 'long-kneed'

<3> 'Tiger's Path'; he was so called because his ancestors were born on a forest path infested with tigers. Vyagghapajja was Dighajanu's family name

<4> //Saddha// is not blind faith. It is confidence based on knowledge.

<5> //Tuladharo//, lit., 'carrier of the scales.'

<6> //Udambarakhadaka//. The Commentary explains that one who wishes to eat wood-apple shakes the tree, with the result that many fruits fall but only a few are eaten, while a large number are wasted.
~~~~~

[end of file]

Velthuis Scheme

Long a = aa
Long i = ii
long u = uu

n dot below = .n
m dot below = .m
l dot below = .l
d dot elow = .d

spanish n = ~n
n dot above = "n

namo tassa bhagavato arahato sammÄ• sambuddhassa.

vessantarÄ• gÄ«ti

[ka]

bÄ• ttiá¹ƒ salakkhaá¹‡Å«peta \Be 1/, dÄ• tabbaá¹ƒ dadataá¹ƒ vara.

vessantaratta mÄ• pÄ• di,

saÃ±caraá¹ƒ bhavasÄ• gare ||

[kha] dvandaá¹ƒ dvandaá¹ƒ \Be 2/ saÃ±carantÄ«, janÄ• nande yasodhÄ«re.

maddittaá¹ƒ samupÄ• gaÃ±chi,

tvaá¹ƒ pitena bhavaá¹‡á¹‡ave ||

[ga] tumhaá¹ƒ dÄ• ni pavakkhÄ• mi, upattiá¹ƒ nandiniá¹ƒ tahiá¹ƒ.

dajjahvovo mamokÄ• saá¹ƒ,

kavayo pyÄ• bhinandatha ||

<1> á¹• 21 ekanavutehito kappe, vipassÄ«nÄ• ma nÄ• yako.

vineyye \Be 3/ tÄ• rayaá¹ƒkhemaá¹ƒ,

loke uppajjicakkhumÄ• ||

<2> á¹• 21 khemÄ• rÄ• mamhi sambuddho, migadÄ• ye manorame.

nissÄ• ya bandhumatiá¹ƒso,

vihÄ• si nagaraá¹ƒtadÄ• ||

<3> á¹• 21 rajjaá¹ƒdhammena kÄ• resi, nagaretamhi bandhumÄ• .

rÄ• jÄ• tassa duvedhÄ«tÄ• ,

Ä• suá¹ƒ sabbaá¹…gasobhaá¹‡Ä• ||

<4> á¹• 21 ekohi \Be 4/ ekadÄ• rÄ• jÄ• , bandhumassa supesayi.

sahassagghanikaá¹ƒ soá¹‡á¹‡a-

mÄ• laÃ±cÄ• naggha candanaá¹ƒ ||

<5> á¹• 21 adÄ• si bandhumÄ• rÄ• jÄ• , pitÄ• jeá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya candanaá¹ƒ.

soá¹‡á¹‡amÄ• laá¹ƒ kaniá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya,

tahiá¹ƒ viyÄ• ya dhÄ«tuyÄ• ||

<6> á¹• 21 ubhotÄ• pÄ«ti \Be 5/ cintesuá¹ƒ, natthatthovata tehino.

bhagyavantassa pÅ«jema,

saá¹ƒpasÄ• dena cetasÄ• ||

<7> á¹• 21 tatosÄ• candanaá¹ƒ cuá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ-kÄ• rÄ• petvÄ• na jeá¹-á¹-hakÄ• .

gantvÄ• na vihÄ• raá¹ƒ soá¹‡á¹‡a,

vaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒpÅ«jesi nÄ• yakaá¹ƒ ||

<8> á¹• 21 vikiritvÄ• tu sÄ• gandha, kuá¹-iyaá¹ƒ sesacandanaá¹ƒ.

evaÃ±hi patthanaá¹ƒ kÄ• si,

buddhamÄ• tÄ• bhavÄ• mahaá¹ƒ ||

<9> á¹• 21 kÄ• retvÄ• \Be 6/ soá¹‡á¹‡amÄ• laá¹ƒtu, uracchada pasÄ• danaá¹ƒ.

pÅ«jesi hemavaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒsÄ• ,

bhagavantaá¹ƒ kaniá¹-á¹-hakÄ• ||

<10> á¹• 21 evampi patthanaá¹ƒkÄ• si, idaá¹ƒmama pasÄ• danaá¹ƒ.

sarÄ«re niccalÄ• á¹-hÄ• tu,

carantiyÄ• bhavÄ• bhavaá¹ƒ ||

<11> á¹• 21 ubhopi \Be 7/ rÄ• jakaÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• , á¹-hatvÄ• na yÄ• vatÄ• yukaá¹ƒ.

upapajjiá¹ƒsu sovaggaá¹ƒ,

cutÄ• sukha pamodanaá¹ƒ ||

<12> á¹• 21 manussadeva lokesu, saá¹ƒsariá¹ƒsu sukhaá¹ƒduve.

ekanavuti kappÄ• ni,

muccitvÄ• pÄ• yadukkhato ||

<13> á¹• 21 kassapassa kÄ• letÄ• su, kaniá¹-á¹-hÄ• kikirÄ• jino.

dhÄ«tÄ• uracchadÄ• nÄ• ma,

hutvÄ• na parinibbutÄ• ||

<14> á¹• 21 jeá¹-á¹-hakÄ• \Be 8/ pana dhÄ«tÄ• si, kikissa rÄ• jino tahiá¹ƒ.

dhammÄ• nÄ• ma damitÄ• sÄ• ,

komÄ• ra brahmacÄ• rinÄ« ||

<15> á¹• 21 tatoca vitvÄ• na sÄ• deva,

manussesu punappunaá¹ƒ.

saá¹ƒsarantÄ« mahesÄ«si,

pÅ«rindadassa ekadÄ• ||

<16> á¹• 21 rattacandana \Be 9/ lepena, limpita dehinÄ« hisÄ• .

katapuÃ±Ã±a visesena,

nÄ• mena phussatÄ«hvitÄ• ||

<17> á¹• 21 devindo aÃ±Ã±adÄ• disvÄ• , parikkhÄ«á¹‡Ä• yukaá¹ƒ viyaá¹ƒ.

deviá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ parivÄ• rena,

mahatÄ• nesinandanaá¹ƒ ||

<18> á¹• 21 sirÄ«sayana piá¹-á¹-hamhi, taá¹ƒsayÄ• viya mÄ• ghavÄ• .

á¹-hito \Be 10/ sayanapassamhi,

phussatiá¹ƒ etadabravÄ« ||

<19> á¹• 21 varetedasadassÄ• mi, phussatevaravaá¹‡á¹‡ike.

tvaá¹ƒÃ±hiicchasiyeladdhuá¹ƒ,

labhÄ• pessÄ• mitevare ||

<20> á¹• 21 sutvÄ• taá¹ƒ phussatÄ«devÄ«, lomahaá¹ƒ sanarÅ«pinÄ«.

khÄ«á¹‡Ä• yutamajÄ• nantÄ«,

attano etadabravÄ« ||

<21> á¹• 21 pÄ• paá¹ƒnu \Be 11/ tvayi deviá¹ƒnda, kataá¹ƒme appiyÄ• thate.

rammÄ• me cavanaá¹ƒ icchaá¹ƒ,

maÃ±Ã±ebhaá¹‡aá¹ƒti Ä«disaá¹ƒ ||

<22> á¹• 21 natebhadde kataá¹ƒpÄ• paá¹ƒ, nacame appiyÄ• tuvaá¹ƒ.

puÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒtute parikkhÄ«á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

tasmÄ• te vaá¹ƒvadÄ• mahaá¹ƒ ||

<23> á¹• 21 santike \Be 12/ maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ tuyhaá¹ƒ, vinÄ• bhÄ• vo bhavissati.

paá¹-iggaá¹‡hÄ• hi me ete,

varedasa pavacchato ||

<24> á¹• 21 sakkassavacanaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• ,

Ã±Ä• tvÄ• maraá¹‡a mattano.

varesÄ• laddhumicchantÄ«,

devindameta dabravÄ« ||

<25> á¹• 21 ito cutÄ• sahassakkhi, sÄ«virÄ• janivesane.

mahesÄ« phussatÄ«nÄ• ma,

nÄ«lanettÄ• yathÄ• migÄ« ||

<26> á¹• 21 assaá¹ƒ \Be 13/ nÄ«labhamukÄ• haá¹ƒ, labheyyaá¹ƒ puttamuttamaá¹ƒ.

dhÄ• renti yÄ• camegabbhaá¹ƒ,

majjhimaá¹…gaá¹ƒ anunnataá¹ƒ ||

<27> á¹• 21 palitÄ• na virÅ«hantu, alambÄ• ca payoro.

kÄ• yerajo nalimpetha,

vajjhaÃ±cÄ• pi pamocaye ||

<28> á¹• 21 yeyÄ• citÄ• \Be 14/ varÄ• bhadde, tayÄ• dasa mayÄ• tava.

dinnÄ• te tuá¹-á¹-hacittena,

sabbelacchasi mÄ• nuse ||

<29> á¹• 21 tatocavitvÄ• na sÄ• deva-

lokÄ• nibbatti icchiyaá¹ƒ.

mahesiyÄ• paá¹-isandhi-

vasena maddarÄ• jino ||

<30> á¹• 21 dasamÄ• \Be 15/ saccayenesÄ• , dhÄ«taraá¹ƒ maddarÄ• jinÄ«.

heá¹-á¹-hÄ• susetacchattassa,

vijÄ• yi seá¹-á¹-harÅ«piniá¹ƒ ||

<31> á¹• 21 rattacandana lepena, esÄ• limpi tadehinÄ«.

tenassÄ• brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• nÄ• maá¹ƒ,

akaá¹ƒsu phussatÄ«iti ||

<32> á¹• 21 saÃ±Ã±Ä• kÄ• ra doá¸·Ä• ruá¸·a-maá¹…galÄ• dÄ«ni kÄ• tuna.

mahatÄ• parihÄ• rena,

posiá¹ƒsu khattiyÄ• niyo ||

<33> á¹• 21 madhÅ«rakhÄ«ra \Be 16/ sampannÄ• , siniddhapÄ«á¹‡a yobbanÄ• .

dhÄ• tiyo khattiyÄ• nÄ«taá¹ƒ,

khÄ«raá¹ƒpÄ• yiá¹ƒsu yÄ• panaá¹ƒ ||

<34> á¹• 21 saá¹…kamantÄ«va vuddhÄ• sÄ• , aá¹…kÄ• aá¹…kaá¹ƒ karÄ• karaá¹ƒ.

rÄ• jakaÃ±Ã±Ä• ca tosiá¹ƒsu,

naccagÄ«tehi nÄ• á¹-akÄ« ||

<35> á¹• 21 devaccharÄ• varÅ«pena, subhÄ• soá¸·asa vassikÄ• .

harantÄ« \Be 17/ nettarasaá¹ƒsÄ• ,

passantÄ• naá¹ƒsukhedhitÄ• ||

<36> á¹• 21 siviraá¹-á¹-he tadÄ• rajjaá¹ƒ, sivirÄ• jÄ• jetuttare.

kÄ• resisiÃ±cayonÄ• ma,

puttotassa mahÄ• yaso ||

<37> á¹• 21 vayappatto bhirÅ«posi, devaputtova siÃ±cayo.

aroha pariá¹‡Ä• hena,

nÄ• nÄ• sibbesu kovido ||

<38> á¹• 21 siÃ±cayassa \Be 18/ niyyÄ• desi, rajjaá¹ƒputtassa attano.

jÄ«vanto passituá¹ƒrÄ• ja-

siriá¹ƒicchaá¹ƒ mahÄ• rahaá¹ƒ ||

<39> á¹• 21 Ä• netvÄ• maddarÄ• jassa, dhÄ«taraá¹ƒ phussatiá¹ƒtahiá¹ƒ.

soá¸·asitthi sahassÄ• naá¹ƒ,

mahesiá¹ƒkÄ• si jeá¹-á¹-hikaá¹ƒ ||

<40> á¹• 21 phussatÄ«siÃ±cayoÃ±Ã±oÃ±Ã±a- \Be 19/

mukhaá¹ƒdvepiyacakkhunÄ• .

passamÄ• nÄ• vaacchiá¹ƒsu,

aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±apiyaá¹ƒvadÄ• ||

<41> á¹• 21 athacinti yadevindo, dinnÄ• phussatiyÄ• mayÄ• .

varÄ• dasa tesuputta-

varonahisamijjhati ||

<42> á¹• 21 samijjhÄ• pesÄ• mietaá¹ƒti, ajeyyebhidasÄ• laye.

upadhÄ• ritthatissÄ• ya,

puttabhÄ• vÄ• rahaá¹ƒmaruá¹ƒ ||

<43> á¹• 21 cavitvÄ• huuddhaá¹ƒgÄ• mÄ« \Be 20/, bodhidevotatotahiá¹ƒ.

brahmaá¹ƒgantvÄ• sahassakkhÄ«,

tassataá¹ƒetadabravÄ« ||

<44> á¹• 21 ito bho sugatiá¹ƒgaccha, anukampÄ• himarisa.

siÃ±cayaá¹ƒdeviyaá¹ƒtassa,

sandhiá¹ƒ gaá¹‡hajutindhara ||

<45> á¹• 21 aÃ±Ã±epi \Be 21/ saá¹-á¹-hisahassadeve cavana dhammine.

upasaá¹…kamma soyÄ• ci,

gacchahvo sugatiá¹ƒiti ||

<46> á¹• 21 bodhisattoca aÃ±Ã±eca, sÄ• dhÅ«ti sampaá¹-icchisuá¹ƒ.

tatocutÄ• catedevÄ• ,

Ä• guá¹ƒ mÄ• nusakaá¹ƒimaá¹ƒ ||

<47> á¹• 21 phussatyaá¹ƒhi \Be 22/ mahÄ• satto, nibbatti paá¹-isandhiyÄ• .

kulesvaÃ±Ã±eca maccÄ• naá¹ƒ,

nibbattiá¹ƒsu visuá¹ƒvisuá¹ƒ ||

<48> á¹• 21 kucchiá¹…gate mahÄ• satte, devÄ« do haá¸·inÄ«ahu.

dÄ• tukÄ• mÄ• mahÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ,

visajjiya buhuá¹ƒdhanaá¹ƒ ||

<49> á¹• 21 rÄ• jamandiradvÄ• ramhi, vemajjhenagarassaca.

catudvÄ• resuchaddÄ• na-

sÄ• lÄ• yo deyyapÅ«ritÄ• ||

<50> á¹• 21 kÄ• rÄ• petvÄ• na \Be 23/ chassata-sahassÄ• ni dinedine.

visajjitvÄ• na sabbesaá¹ƒ,

icchantÄ« Ä• sidÄ• tave ||

<51> á¹• 21 utvÄ• taá¹ƒ kÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒrÄ• jÄ• , pakkosÄ• viya brÄ• hmaá¹‡e.

nimitta pÄ• á¹-hakepucchi,

kiá¹ƒ bhavissatÄ«tiÃ±Ä• tave ||

<52> á¹• 21 jÄ• nÄ• ma no mahÄ• rÄ• ja, gatokucchimhi deviyÄ• .

hehitya \Be 24/ bhiratodÄ• ne,

evaá¹ƒvadiá¹ƒsu brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• ||

<53> á¹• 21 brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ vacosutvÄ• , narindo tuá¹-á¹-hamÄ• naso.

dÄ• naá¹ƒadÄ• si chaddÄ• na-

sÄ• lÄ• yo suá¹-á¹-humÄ• viya ||

<54> á¹• 21 paá¹-isandhiggahaá¹‡amhÄ• , bodhisattassa viÃ±Ã±uno.

paá¹-á¹-hÄ• yaá¹‡á¹‡ava vegova,

lÄ• bhoá¸·Ä• ro anappako ||

<55> á¹• 21 paá¹‡á¹‡Ä• kÄ• raá¹ƒ \Be 25/ pahiá¹‡iá¹ƒsu, rÄ• jino jambumaá¹‡á¸• ale.

bodhisattÄ• nubhÄ• vena,

nÄ• nÄ• raá¹-á¹-hindakhattiyÄ• ||

<56> á¹• 21 parihÄ• raá¹ƒ pavacchesi, mahesiá¹ƒ paá¹-isandhiniá¹ƒ.

rÄ• jÄ• sukhaá¹ƒ vasÄ• pesi,

kÄ• resiicchiticchitaá¹ƒ ||

<57> á¹• 21 buddhaá¹…kurÄ• nubhÄ• vena, janÄ• suá¹ƒ modamÄ• nasÄ• .

kÄ• levassatimeghopi,

subhikkhosamayoahu ||

<58> á¹• 21 saddhiá¹ƒputtena \Be 26/ juá¹‡hÄ• ya, kiá¸·antiyÄ• vamÄ• tuyÄ• .

mahantÄ«ratisabbesaá¹ƒ,

janÄ• naá¹ƒvipulÄ• tahiá¹ƒ ||

<59> á¹• 21 gabbhaá¹ƒhi dhÄ• rentÄ«devÄ«, dasamÄ• samhipÅ«rite.

nagaraá¹ƒdaá¹-á¹-hu kÄ• mÄ• si,

tadÄ• rocesirÄ• jino ||

<60> á¹• 21 sÄ• dhubhaddeti \Be 27/ vatvÄ• na, puraá¹ƒdeva puraá¹ƒviya.

rÄ• jÄ• alaá¹…karÄ• pesi,

deviyÄ• pitivaá¸• á¸• hanaá¹ƒ ||

<61> á¹• 21 Ä• ropiya tatodeviá¹ƒ, vicittaá¹ƒ lakkhikaá¹ƒrathaá¹ƒ.

padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ kÄ• rÄ• pesi, nagaraá¹ƒ sabbalaá¹…kataá¹ƒ ||

<62> á¹• 21 vessÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 28/ vÄ«thiyÄ• majjhe, á¹-hÄ• nÄ• á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ pathÄ• pathaá¹ƒ.

caliá¹ƒsu kammajÄ• vÄ• tÄ• ,

carantiyÄ• va deviyÄ• ||

<63> á¹• 21 utvÄ• maccÄ• pavattiá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ, raÃ±Ã±orociá¹ƒsusÄ«ghaso.

sutigehaá¹ƒkÄ• rÄ• pesi,

taá¹ƒvÄ«thiyaá¹ƒvasiÃ±cayo ||

<64> á¹• 21 tatthasÄ• vasamÄ• nÄ• va, vijÄ• yiakutobhayÄ• .

nimmalaá¹ƒsusuddhaá¹ƒputtaá¹ƒ,

suvaá¹‡á¹‡akkhandhasannibhaá¹ƒ ||

<65> á¹• 21 akkhÄ«niummilitvÄ• na \Be 29/, nikkhantomÄ• tu kucchito.

pasannappiyÄ• kÄ• rena,

passittamÄ• tuyÄ• mukhaá¹ƒ ||

<66> á¹• 21 amma dÄ• naá¹ƒ dadissÄ• mi, atthinu kiÃ±ci tedhanaá¹ƒ.

hattaá¹ƒso pasÄ• retvÄ• na,

itibravitahiá¹ƒ muhuá¹ƒ ||

<67> á¹• 21 sutvÄ• modiya \Be 30/ taá¹ƒmÄ• tÄ• , dehidÄ• naá¹ƒ yathicchitaá¹ƒ.

tÄ• tÄ• ti tassapÄ• dÄ• si,

sahassatthavikaá¹ƒtahiá¹ƒ ||

<68> á¹• 21 mahosadha vessantara-mahÄ• siddhattha jÄ• tisu.

kathesi mÄ• tarÄ• bodhi-

sasatto jÄ• takkhaá¹‡etisu ||

<69> á¹• 21 acchera mabbhutaá¹ƒdisvÄ• , janÄ• modiá¹ƒ sutÄ• vade.

apphoá¹-ento hasantÄ• ca,

jayanÄ• daá¹ƒ panÄ• dayuá¹ƒ ||

<70> á¹• 21 vessantaroti \Be 31/ hvÄ• yiá¹ƒsu, nÄ• maggahaá¹‡a maá¹…galaá¹ƒ.

saá¹…khatÄ• brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• tassa,

jÄ• tattÄ• vessavÄ«thiyaá¹ƒ ||

<71> á¹• 21 vijÄ• ta divasetassa, ekÄ• Ä• kÄ• sacÄ• rinÄ«.

hatthinÄ«hi sabbasetaá¹ƒ,

ekaá¹ƒ kuÃ±jaraposakaá¹ƒ ||

<72> á¹• 21 bodhisattÄ• nubhÄ• vena,

Ä• netvÄ• maá¹…galasammataá¹ƒ.

thapetvÄ• na pakkÄ• mi,

hatthisÄ• lÄ• ya sÄ• dhukaá¹ƒ ||

<73> á¹• 21 uppannattÄ• mahÄ• sattaá¹ƒ \Be 32/, tassakatvÄ• napaccayaá¹ƒ.

akaá¹ƒsunÄ• garÄ• nÄ• maá¹ƒ,

samaggÄ• paccayoiti ||

<74> á¹• 21 taddinevavijÄ• yiá¹ƒsu, amaccÄ• naá¹ƒkumÄ• rakÄ• .

gehesusaá¹-hisahassÄ• ,

mahÄ• sattasajÄ• takÄ• ||

<75> á¹• 21 atidÄ«ghÄ• dayodose \Be 33/, vivajjetvÄ• nasiÃ±cayo.

kumÄ• raá¹ƒcatussaá¹-hikÄ• ,

upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• pesidhÄ• tiyo ||

<76> á¹• 21 alambatthaniyocetÄ• , bhirÅ«pÄ• yobbaneá¹-hitÄ• .

Ä• suá¹ƒmadhurathaÃ±Ã±Ä• yo,

saá¹ƒsuddhÄ• seá¹-á¹-hakoliyo ||

<77> á¹• 21 sususaá¹-á¹-hisahassÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 34/, ekekÄ• dhÄ• tiyotathÄ• .

buddhaá¹…kurasajÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ,

upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• pesisuá¹ƒndarÄ• ||

<78> á¹• 21 saddhiá¹ƒ saá¹-á¹-hisahassehi, kumÄ• rehimahÄ• yaso.

mahatÄ• parivÄ• rena,

saá¹ƒvaá¸• á¸• hibodhisattavo ||

<76> á¹• 21 rÄ• jÄ• satasahassagghanikaá¹ƒ susupiá¸·andhanaá¹ƒ.

kÄ• rÄ• petvÄ• vibhÅ«sesi,

attajaá¹ƒdÄ• nanandanaá¹ƒ ||

<80> á¹• 21 omuÃ±citvÄ• nadhÄ• tÄ«naá¹ƒ \Be 35/, taá¹ƒcatuppaÃ±cavassiko.

adÄ• sisomahÄ• satto,

bodhiá¹ƒ apekkhamÄ• naso ||

<81> á¹• 21 punataá¹ƒtÄ• hidhÄ• tÄ«hi, diyyamÄ• naá¹ƒpisÄ• daraá¹ƒ.

nasogaá¹‡hitthakumÄ• ro,

dinnesuanapekhavÄ• ||

<82> á¹• 21 Ä• rociá¹ƒsupavattiá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ \Be 36/, raÃ±Ã±otÄ• dhÄ• tiyotadÄ• .

sutvÄ• muditacittena,

taá¹ƒsothomitthaattajaá¹ƒ ||

<83> á¹• 21 puttenamamadinnaá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ, brahmadeyyaá¹ƒpiá¸·andhanaá¹ƒ.

tumhÄ• kaá¹ƒsantakaá¹ƒhotu,

iccÄ• pibravisiÃ±cayo ||

<84> á¹• 21 punÄ• paraá¹ƒpikÄ• retvÄ• , pÄ• dÄ• siputtanandano.

puttassadÄ• tukÄ• massa,

suvicittapiá¸·andhanaá¹ƒ ||

<85> á¹• 21 omuÃ±citvÄ• naetaá¹ƒpi \Be 37/,

dhÄ• tÄ«naá¹ƒdÄ• sidÄ• yako.

dÄ• rakotuá¹-á¹-hacittena,

sabbaÃ±Ã±utappiyÄ• yano ||

<86> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒvutta nayeneva, nava vÄ• re piá¸·andhanaá¹ƒ.

daharodÄ• si dhÄ• tÄ«naá¹ƒ,

nÄ• thÄ• nÄ• tha parÄ• yano ||

<87> á¹• 21 aá¹-á¹-havassi \Be 38/ kakÄ• letu, evaá¹ƒcintesi buddhimÄ• .

nisinno sirisayano,

pÄ• sÄ• do parimaá¹‡á¸• ale ||

<88> á¹• 21 demibÄ• hira dÄ• naá¹ƒva, natÄ• va mama mÄ• nasaá¹ƒ.

parito setievaÃ±hi,

ajjhattikaá¹ƒdadÄ• mahaá¹ƒ ||

<89> á¹• 21 sacemaá¹ƒ kociyÄ• ceyya, sÄ«saá¹ƒsa moá¸·imuttadhaá¹ƒ.

chijja taá¹ƒ tassadajjeyyaá¹ƒ,

naheyyaá¹ƒ lÄ«nacetaso ||

<90> á¹• 21 hadayaá¹ƒmama \Be 39/ yÄ• ceyya, bhinditvÄ• asinÄ• uraá¹ƒ.

nÄ«haritvÄ• nataá¹ƒtassa,

dajjeyyaá¹ƒ tuá¹-á¹-hamÄ• nasÄ• ||

<91> á¹• 21 akkhÄ«ni mamayÄ• ceyya, uppÄ• á¹-etvÄ• na tÄ• vade.

satthena tassadajjeyyaá¹ƒ,

salohitÄ• ni tÄ• nime ||

<92> á¹• 21 hatthepÄ• decakaá¹‡á¹‡eca \Be 40/, yÄ• ceyyamamasÄ• dhukaá¹ƒ.

chinditvÄ• tÄ• nidajjeyyaá¹ƒ,

tassapÅ«re manorathaá¹ƒ ||

<93> á¹• 21 maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒmekociyÄ• ceyya, sÄ«ghaá¹ƒsabbasarÄ«rato.

khaá¹‡á¸• Ä• khaá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒ chinditvÄ• na,

dajje maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ salohitaá¹ƒ ||

<94> á¹• 21 hohitvaá¹ƒmamadÄ• soti, vadeyyakocicetahiá¹ƒ.

sayaá¹ƒÄ• mÄ• tisÄ• vetvÄ• ,

attÄ• naá¹ƒpi dadÄ• mahaá¹ƒ ||

<95> á¹• 21 tassevaá¹ƒ \Be 41/ cintayantassa, kampittha pathavÄ«mahÄ• .

samantÄ• gajjamÄ• nÄ• yaá¹ƒ,

mattova kuÃ±jarovane ||

<96> á¹• 21 merurÄ• jo namitvÄ• nabhimukhova jetuttaraá¹ƒ.

nagaraá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• si serita-

vettaá¹…kurova tÄ• vade ||

<97> á¹• 21 mahÄ«saddasantÄ• sena \Be 42/,

meghopÄ• vassi tÄ• vade.

ghanavassaá¹ƒmahÄ• dhÄ• raá¹ƒ,

gajjamÄ• no disodisaá¹ƒ ||

<98> á¹• 21 niccharia¹ƒsu bahÅ«vijju-

latÄ• yoca samantato.

indacÄ• pÄ• uá¹-á¹-hahiá¹ƒsu,

ukkÄ• pÄ• to tadÄ• ahu ||

<99> á¹• 21 apphoá¹-esi tahiá¹ƒdevarÄ• jÄ• tuá¹-á¹-ho sujampati.

sÄ• dhusÄ• dhÅ«ti sÄ• vesi,

mahÄ• brahmÄ• kataÃ±calÄ« ||

<100> á¹• 21 brahmalokÄ• \Be 43/ tadÄ• yÄ• va, itopathavi maá¹‡á¸• alÄ• .

accheraá¹ƒ abbhutaá¹ƒ Ä• si,

ekakolÄ• halaá¹ƒ mahÄ• ||

<101> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒÃ±hi nekabbhÅ«tÄ• ni, janetvÄ• na mahÄ• janaá¹ƒ.

hÄ• sayaá¹ƒ susukhaá¹ƒvaá¸• á¸• ha-

mÄ• nosoá¸·asa vassiko ||

<102> á¹• 21 kumÄ• ro \Be 44/ sabbasibbesu, kovidoca pÄ• raá¹…gato.

phullasÄ• lova sobhanto,

vaá¹‡á¹‡ena vayasÄ• tadÄ• ||

<103> á¹• 21 athassa dÄ• tukÄ• mova, rajjaá¹ƒmantiya deviyÄ• .

pitÄ• si siÃ±cirÄ• jatte,

puttaá¹ƒsoá¸·asa vassikaá¹ƒ ||

<104> á¹• 21 maddaraá¹-á¹-he tadÄ• maddarÄ• jakulÄ• bhivaá¹‡á¹‡iniá¹ƒ.

netvÄ• mahe sittemaddiá¹ƒ-

bhisiÃ±ci dhammacÄ• riniá¹ƒ ||

<105> á¹• 21 maddÄ«mÄ• tuladhÄ«tÄ• sÄ• \Be 45/, bhaginÄ« mandahÄ• sinÄ«.

vessantarakumÄ• rassa,

seá¹-á¹-halakkhaá¹‡adhÄ• rinÄ« ||

<106> á¹• 21 pubbauá¹-á¹-hÄ• yinÄ« maddÄ«, niccaá¹ƒ pacchÄ• nipÄ• tinÄ«.

manÄ• pacÄ• rinÄ« devÄ«,

kiá¹ƒkÄ• ra paá¹-isÄ• vinÄ« ||

<107> á¹• 21 soá¸·asitthi \Be 46/ sahassÄ• taá¹ƒ, maddiá¹ƒsabbaá¹…ga sobhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

naccavÄ• dita gÄ«tehi,

paricÄ• riá¹ƒsu sabbadÄ• ||

<108> á¹• 21 vessantaro mahÄ• rÄ• jÄ• , rajjebhi sittakÄ• lato.

paá¹-hÄ• ya dÄ• nasÄ• lÄ• yo,

chaddÄ• naá¹ƒ dÄ• sikÄ• riya ||

<109> á¹• 21 mahÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ pavattesi, vissajjanto dinedine.

sammodamÄ• no chassata-

sahassÄ• ni dhanÄ• niso ||

<110> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒdÄ• ne \Be 47/ ramantassa, mahesÄ«tassarÄ• jino.

puttaá¹ƒvijÄ• yiapara-

bhÄ• gemaddÄ« sudassanaá¹ƒ ||

<111> á¹• 21 sampaá¹-icchiá¹ƒsu vijÄ• takÄ• letaá¹ƒ soá¹‡á¹‡asannitaá¹ƒ.

soá¹‡á¹‡a jÄ• lenatenassa,

nÄ• maá¹ƒjÄ• lÄ«ti voharuá¹ƒ ||

<112> á¹• 21 padasÄ• \Be 48/ gamane kÄ• le, puttassa tassajÄ• lino.

vijÄ• yi dhÄ«taraá¹ƒekaá¹ƒ,

nÄ• rÄ«naá¹ƒ seá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒsammataá¹ƒ ||

<113> á¹• 21 kaá¹‡hÄ• jinena dhÄ«taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ, sampaá¹-icchiá¹ƒsu sÄ• daraá¹ƒ.

tenassÄ• dhituyÄ• nÄ• maá¹ƒ,

kaá¹‡hÄ• jinÄ• ti voharuá¹ƒ ||

<114> á¹• 21 mahatÄ• parivÄ• rena, vuddhiá¹ƒnvÄ• yiá¹ƒsu teduve.

sayantÄ• naccagÄ«tena,

naccagÄ«ta pabodhanÄ• ||

<115> á¹• 21 mahÄ• sattohi \Be 49/ mÄ• sassa, chakkhattuá¹ƒ dÄ• namaá¹‡á¸• ape.

olokesi alaá¹…kata-

hatthikkhandha vareá¹-hito ||

<116> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒ kaliá¹…karaá¹-á¹-hamhi, dubbuá¹-á¹-hikÄ• bhayÄ• nakÄ• .

sassÄ• ni nasampajjiá¹ƒsu,

dubbhikkho samayoahu ||

<117> á¹• 21 corakammaá¹ƒ \Be 50/ akariá¹ƒsu, asakkontÄ• va jÄ«vituá¹ƒ.

janÄ• nigamagÄ• mesu,

vilumpanti dÄ• marikÄ• ||

<118> á¹• 21 kaliá¹…karaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ sakalaá¹ƒ, dubbhikkhabhayapÄ«á¸·itaá¹ƒ.

ghaá¹-e vilolapÄ• rÄ«va,

saá¹…khumbhittha anÄ• thakaá¹ƒ ||

<119> á¹• 21 negamÄ• jÄ• napadÄ• sabbe, nÄ• garÄ• ca samaggatÄ• .

rÄ• jaá¹…gaá¹‡e ukkosiá¹ƒsu,

dubbhikkhabhaya coditÄ• ||

<120> á¹• 21 tadÄ• sutvÄ• na \Be 51/ taá¹ƒrÄ• jÄ• , sÄ«ghaá¹ƒubbigga mÄ• nasÄ• .

koyaá¹ƒsaddoti pucchittha,

mahÄ• macce sakantike ||

<121> á¹• 21 Ä• rocayiá¹ƒsu rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ, pavattiá¹ƒ taá¹ƒasesato.

rÄ• jÄ• pi paá¹-ijÄ• nÄ• si,

meghaá¹ƒ vassÄ• paye-iti ||

<122> á¹• 21 tatoso patthanaá¹ƒkÄ• si, samÄ• diya uposathaá¹ƒ.

devaá¹ƒ vassÄ• panatthÄ• ya,

sattÄ• haá¹ƒsattakÄ• ruá¹‡o ||

<123> á¹• 21 nahievaá¹ƒpisosakkhi \Be 52/, vassÄ• petuá¹ƒ narissaro.

meghaá¹ƒkaliá¹…ka raá¹-á¹-hamhi,

dubbuá¹-á¹-hikÄ• va jÄ• yahi ||

<124> á¹• 21 tatoso sannipÄ• tetvÄ• , nÄ• gare etadabravÄ«.

vasÄ• petuá¹ƒ nasakkomi,

devaá¹ƒ kiá¹ƒ nukare-iti ||

<125> á¹• 21 tadÄ• evamavociá¹ƒsu \Be 53/, narÄ• kaliá¹…karÄ• jino.

devaá¹ƒ vassÄ• panatthÄ• ya,

subhikkhakÄ• lakÄ• mino ||

<126> á¹• 21 siviraá¹-á¹-hemahÄ• rÄ• ja, rajjedhammenayoá¹-hito.

jetuttaremahÄ• vessa-

ntaro siÃ±cayaoraso ||

<127> á¹• 21 dÄ• nesubhiratohesa, kiramaá¹…galakuÃ±jaro.

tassatthipaccayonÄ• ma,

pavarosabbapaá¹‡á¸• aro ||

<128> á¹• 21 gataá¹-hÄ• nekuÃ±jarassa \Be 54/, tassekantenakhattiya.

pÄ• vassikiragajjanto,

mahÄ• meghosavijjuko ||

<129> á¹• 21 pesetvÄ• brÄ• hmÄ• á¹‡erÄ• ja, yÄ• cÄ• petuá¹ƒsupaá¹‡á¸• araá¹ƒ.

hatthiá¹ƒvaá¹-á¹-atitaá¹ƒtena,

sÄ«ghaá¹ƒpesehibrÄ• hmaá¹‡e ||

<130> á¹• 21 sampaá¹-icchiyasÄ• dhÅ«ti, sutvÄ• taá¹ƒtuá¹-á¹-hamÄ• naso.

rÄ• jaá¹…gaá¹‡amhirÄ• jÄ• so,

sannipÄ• tesibrÄ• hmaá¹‡e ||

<131> á¹• 21 guá¹‡avaá¹‡á¹‡ehisampanne \Be 55/, vicinitvÄ• nabrahmaá¹‡e.

aá¹-á¹-hatesurÄ• jÄ• tesaá¹ƒ,

nekaá¹ƒdÄ• siparibbayaá¹ƒ ||

<132> á¹• 21 Ä• nethakuÃ±jaraá¹ƒbhonto, vessantarassasantikaá¹ƒ.

gantvÄ• yÄ• ciya-evaá¹ƒte,

rÄ• jÄ• vatvÄ• napesayiá¹ƒ ||

<133> á¹• 21 brÄ• hmÄ• á¹‡Ä• \Be 56/ aá¹-á¹-harÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ, tekatvÄ• na padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

gaÃ±chiá¹ƒsu jetuttaraá¹ƒ nÄ• gaá¹ƒ,

nethuá¹ƒ sabbaá¹…gasundaraá¹ƒ ||

<134> á¹• 21 anupubbena gantvÄ• na, tepÄ• puá¹‡iá¹ƒsu brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• .

jetuttaraá¹ƒ bhuÃ±jamÄ• nÄ• ,

dÄ• nasÄ• lÄ• su acchayuá¹ƒ ||

<135> á¹• 21 tatopuá¹‡á¹‡a madinamhi, katvÄ• sarÄ«ramattano.

tepaá¹ƒsumakkhitaá¹ƒÄ• guá¹ƒ,

pÄ• cÄ«nadvÄ• ramaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ ||

<136> á¹• 21 saá¹ƒyÄ• cissÄ• manÄ• ganti \Be 57/, cintamÄ• nÄ• varÄ• jino.

Ä• gamentÄ• Ä• gamanaá¹ƒ,

tatthaacchiá¹ƒ subrÄ• hmÄ• á¹‡Ä• ||

<137> á¹• 21 dÄ• naggaá¹ƒ olekeyyanti, tadÄ• sura sabhojano.

pÄ• tonÅ«tvÄ• mahÄ• satto,

alaá¹…kÄ• rena laá¹…kari ||

<138> á¹• 21 alaá¹…kata hatthikkhandhaá¹ƒ, aruyha agamÄ• tato.

rÄ• jÄ• \Be 58/ puratthimaá¹ƒ dvÄ• raá¹ƒ,

parisÄ• ya mahantiyÄ• ||

<139> á¹• 21 mahantiá¹ƒ parisaá¹ƒdisvÄ• , bhitÄ• ubbigga mÄ• nasÄ• .

tatthokÄ• saá¹ƒ nalabhiá¹ƒsu,

yÄ• cituá¹ƒ brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• tahiá¹ƒ ||

<140> á¹• 21 tamhÄ• dakkhiá¹‡advÄ• raá¹ƒ te, saá¹…kamitvÄ• na unnate.

padese seá¹-á¹-harÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ,

Ä• gamesuá¹ƒ á¹-hitÄ• tato ||

<141> á¹• 21 oloketvÄ• na \Be 59/ pÄ• cÄ«na-dÄ• ramhi dÄ• namaá¹‡á¸• ape.

hatthikkhandhagato rÄ• jÄ• ,

dvÄ• ramÄ• gaÃ±cidakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ ||

<142> á¹• 21 rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• gataá¹ƒ disvÄ• , pasÄ• retvÄ• na brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• .

hatthe ``vessantarojetuâ€™â€™

tikkhattuá¹ƒ itibhÄ• siá¹ƒsu ||

<143> á¹• 21 jayasaddaá¹ƒ panÄ• dante, rÄ• jÄ• disvÄ• na brÄ• hmaá¹‡e.

hatthiá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaá¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ,

pÄ• jesi dÄ• namÄ• nasÄ• ||

<144> á¹• 21 hatthikkhandhe \Be 60/ nisinnova, pasannena mukhenaso.

mhitapubbaá¹ƒ tatovoca,

girevaá¹ƒ hadayaá¹…gamaá¹ƒ ||

<145> á¹• 21 dakkhiá¹‡Ä• vaá¹-á¹-asaá¹…khena, bÄ• huá¹ƒpaggayha dakkhiá¹‡a.

purato mama tiá¹-á¹-hantÄ• ,

kiá¹ƒ maá¹ƒyÄ• canti brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• ||

<146> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒsÄ«ghama \Be 61/ vociá¹ƒsu, pahaá¹-á¹-hÄ• brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• tahiá¹ƒ.

ratanaá¹ƒrÄ• ja yÄ• cÄ• ma,

kuÃ±jaraá¹ƒ sabbapaá¹‡á¸• araá¹ƒ ||

<147> á¹• 21 idaá¹ƒsutvÄ• nasocinti, ajjhattikaá¹ƒ pidÄ• tave.

ahamicchÄ• mitedÄ• ni,

mamaá¹ƒ yÄ• canti bÄ• hiraá¹ƒ ||

<148> á¹• 21 idÄ• ni pÅ«rayissÄ• mi, yÄ• cantÄ• naá¹ƒ manorathaá¹ƒ.

evaá¹ƒcintiyasobhÄ• si \Be 62/,

hatthikkhandhaá¹-hito iti ||

<149> á¹• 21 demitaá¹ƒ navikampÄ• mi, yaá¹ƒmaá¹ƒyÄ• canti brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• .

kelÄ• sa sadisaá¹ƒ setaá¹ƒ,

alaá¹…kataá¹ƒ gajuttamaá¹ƒ ||

<150> á¹• 21 hatthikkhandhÄ• tato ruyha, rÄ• jÄ• cÄ• gÄ• dhimÄ• naso.

olokesitikkhattuá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ,

katvÄ• nÄ• gaá¹ƒ padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ ||

<151> á¹• 21 gahetvÄ• \Be 63/ soá¹‡á¹‡abhiá¹…gÄ• raá¹ƒ, sugandhodaka pÅ«ritaá¹ƒ.

ahvÄ• yi etha bhontoti,

kuÃ±jaraá¹ƒesa dÄ• tave ||

<152> á¹• 21 gahetvÄ• rajatadÄ• ma-sadisaá¹ƒ seta hattino.

soá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒá¹-á¹-hapiya hatthesu,

brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ gajissaro ||

<153> á¹• 21 sÄ• laá¹…kataá¹ƒ mahÄ• nÄ• gaá¹ƒ, pÄ• tetvÄ• dakkhiá¹‡odakaá¹ƒ.

adÄ• si seá¹-á¹-hadantiá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ, asallinena cetasÄ• ||

<154> á¹• 21 saddhiá¹ƒ \Be 64/ vÄ«satilakkhena, catulakkhÄ• ni agghati.

alaá¹…kÄ• rohi nÄ• gassa,

nÄ• nÄ• ratanacittito ||

<155> á¹• 21 athÄ• pianagghÄ• honti, chaá¸·eva aá¹…kusÄ• disu.

maá¹‡ayo vÄ• raá¹‡ocÄ• pi,

anaá¹…gho sattanagghikÄ• ||

<156> á¹• 21 yatÄ• vutta ratanehi, saddhiá¹ƒ adÄ• si kuÃ±jaraá¹ƒ.

nÄ• gopiyopi teneva,

tato sabbaÃ±Ã±utaá¹ƒ piyaá¹ƒ ||

<156> á¹• 21 athÄ• pi \Be 65/ paÃ±casatÄ• ni, paricÄ• rÄ• ni hatthino.

kulÄ• ni hatthigopehi,

saddhiá¹ƒ adÄ• si sÄ• daraá¹ƒ ||

<158> á¹• 21 vessantarena dinnamhi, seta maá¹…gala kuÃ±jare.

acetanÄ• pinÄ• dentÄ«,

medanÄ« sampa kampatha ||

<159> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒ \Be 66/ bhÄ«sanakaá¹ƒ Ä• si, nÄ• naá¹ƒ lomahaá¹ƒsanaá¹ƒ.

mahanto vipulo ghoso,

khumbhittha sakalaá¹ƒ puraá¹ƒ ||

<160> á¹• 21 mahÄ«saddasantÄ• sena,

megho pÄ• vassi tÄ• vade.

ghanavassaá¹ƒ mahÄ• dhÄ• raá¹ƒ,

gajjamÄ• no diso disaá¹ƒ ||

<161> á¹• 21 niccharia¹ƒsu bahÅ«vijju-

latÄ• yoca samantato.

indacÄ• pÄ• uá¹-á¹-hahÄ«á¹ƒsu,

ukkÄ• pÄ• to tadÄ• ahu ||

<162> á¹• 21 hatthiá¹ƒ \Be 67/ laddhÄ• nate tuá¹-á¹-hÄ• , brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• kiradakkhiá¹‡Ä• - dvÄ• rÄ• nagara majjhena,

gajakkhandha gatÄ• nayuá¹ƒ ||

<163> á¹• 21 mahÄ• janaparivÄ• re, gajÄ• ruá¸·heá¹-á¹-ha brÄ• hmaá¹‡e.

passiá¹ƒ sunÄ• garÄ• sabbe,

tadÄ• te etadabravuá¹ƒ ||

<164> á¹• 21 amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ \Be 68/ kuÃ±jaraá¹ƒ hambho,

Ä• ruá¸·hÄ• vo idhÄ• gatÄ• .

dinnoyaá¹ƒ kena tumhÄ• kaá¹ƒ,

kadÄ• laddho kuto-iti ||

<165> á¹• 21 vessantarena dinno no, kathaá¹ƒtumhe vadissatha.

nakatheyyÄ• ma vitthÄ• raá¹ƒ,

gacchema nagaraá¹ƒ mayaá¹ƒ ||

<166> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒvatvÄ• nikkhamiá¹ƒsu, dvÄ• rena uttarenate.

cittaá¹ƒvilola \Be 69/ mÄ• nÄ• va,

nÄ• garÄ• naá¹ƒ kaliá¹…kajÄ• ||

<167> á¹• 21 tadÄ• hi nÄ• garÄ• sabbe, bodhisattassa kujjhitÄ• .

rÄ• jadvÄ• re sannipacca,

upakkosamakaá¹ƒsu te ||

<168> á¹• 21 adhammenevabhonttono, nÄ• gaá¹ƒ raá¹-á¹-hassa pÅ«jitaá¹ƒ.

adÄ• vessantaroduá¹-á¹-ha-

brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• namalaá¹…kataá¹ƒ ||

<169> á¹• 21 saá¹…khumbhitacittÄ• \Be 70/ sabbe, tatonagaravÄ• sino.

gantvÄ• siÃ±cayarÄ• jassa,

santikaá¹ƒ evamabravuá¹ƒ ||

<170> á¹• 21 vidhamaá¹ƒdevateraá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, puttovessantarotava.

kataá¹ƒsokuÃ±jaraá¹ƒdÄ• si,

siviraá¹-á¹-hassapÅ«jitaá¹ƒ ||

<171> á¹• 21 kathaá¹ƒso \Be 71/ vÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒdÄ• si, setaá¹ƒ kelÄ• sasannibhaá¹ƒ.

paá¹‡á¸• ukampalasaÃ±channaá¹ƒ,

jaya bhÅ«mi vijanÄ• naá¹ƒ ||

<172> á¹• 21 sace so dÄ• tumiccheyya, annaá¹ƒpÄ• á¹‡aÃ±cabhojanaá¹ƒ.

vatthaá¹ƒ senÄ• sanaá¹ƒ soá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

yuttaá¹ƒdÄ• tuá¹ƒ yathicchitaá¹ƒ ||

<173> á¹• 21 sacetvaá¹ƒ nakarissasi, sivÄ«naá¹ƒ vacanaá¹ƒidaá¹ƒ.

maÃ±Ã±etaá¹ƒ sahaputtena,

sivÄ«hatthe karissare ||

<174> á¹• 21 tajjamÄ• nÄ• hi \Be 72/ evaÃ±hi, sutvÄ• sivÄ«hi bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ.

maÃ±Ã±ittha siÃ±cayo puttaá¹ƒ,

mÄ• retuá¹ƒ icchareiti ||

<175> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒbyÄ• kÄ• si teneva, sÄ«ghaá¹ƒvibbhanta mÄ• naso.

puttapema codito so,

sokasalla samappito ||

<176> á¹• 21 kÄ• maá¹ƒ \Be 73/ janapado sabbaá¹ƒ, raá¹-á¹-haÃ±cÄ• pi vinassatu.

nÄ• haá¹ƒ sivÄ«naá¹ƒvacanÄ• ,

pabbÄ• jeyyaá¹ƒ mamatrajaá¹ƒ ||

<177> á¹• 21 kathaá¹ƒ haá¹ƒ tamhi dubbheyyaá¹ƒ, santoso suddhacetaso.

puttaá¹ƒkathaÃ±ca niddosaá¹ƒ,

satthena ghÄ• taye mama ||

<178> á¹• 21 sivayo tassa sutvÄ• na,

bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ puttagiddhino.

avocuá¹ƒ visaá¹-á¹-hÄ• vÄ«ta-

bhahÄ• evaá¹ƒ yathÄ• tathaá¹ƒ ||

<179> á¹• 21 mÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 74/ daá¹‡á¸• ena satthena, nÄ• pi so bandhanÄ• raho.

pabbÄ• jehi vanaá¹ƒ raá¹-á¹-hÄ• ,

vaá¹…ke vasatu pabbate ||

<180> á¹• 21 tadÄ• cintayi sorÄ• jÄ• , nayuttaá¹ƒ panÅ«detave.

chandaá¹ƒ hi sivinaá¹ƒ dÄ• ni,

tato voca subhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ ||

<181> á¹• 21 yathÄ• chandaá¹ƒ \Be 75/ kareyyÄ• mi, raá¹-á¹-ha pabbÄ• jayetha taá¹ƒ.

ekokÄ• saÃ±ca yÄ• cÄ• ma,

rattiá¹ƒ so vasataá¹ƒ imaá¹ƒ ||

<182> á¹• 21 amantetu yathÄ• kÄ• maá¹ƒ, kaá¹‡hÄ• jinÄ• ya jÄ• linÄ• .

tathÄ• ca maddiyÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ,

kÄ• meca paribhuÃ±jatu ||

<183> á¹• 21 tato ratyÄ• vivasÄ• ne,

sÅ«riyuggamanesati.

samaggÄ• sivayo hutvÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hÄ• pabbajayantu taá¹ƒ ||

<184> á¹• 21 paccÄ• gaÃ±chuá¹ƒ \Be 76/ tadÄ• sabbe, sivayo tuá¹-á¹-hamÄ• nasÄ• .

sampaá¹-icchitvÄ• na sÄ• dhÅ«ti,

vacanaá¹ƒ sivirÄ• jino ||

<185> á¹• 21 tatoso siÃ±cayoekaá¹ƒ, kattÄ• raá¹ƒ puttasantikaá¹ƒ.

sÄ• sanaá¹ƒ pesanatthÄ• ya,

turitaá¹ƒ evamabravÄ« ||

<186> á¹• 21 uá¹-á¹-hehi katte taramÄ• no, gantvÄ• vassantaraá¹ƒ vada.

sivayo deva tekuddhÄ• ,

negamÄ• ca samÄ• gatÄ• ||

<187> á¹• 21 asmÄ• \Be 77/ ratyÄ• vivasÄ• ne,

sÅ«riyuggamane sati.

samaggÄ• sivayo hutvÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hÄ• pabbÄ• jayantitaá¹ƒ ||

<188> á¹• 21 sakattÄ• taramÄ• nova, sivirÄ• jena pesito.

upÄ• gami puraá¹ƒrammaá¹ƒ,

vessantara nivesanaá¹ƒ ||

<189> á¹• 21 tatthaddasa \Be 78/ kuraá¹ƒso, ramamÄ• naá¹ƒ sake pure.

parikiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ amaccehi,

tidasÄ• naá¹ƒva vÄ• savaá¹ƒ ||

<190> á¹• 21 vanditvÄ• rodamÄ• noso, kattÄ• vessantaraá¹ƒ bravÄ«.

dukkhaá¹ƒ te vedayissÄ• mi,

mÄ• mekujjha rathesabha ||

<191> á¹• 21 asmÄ• ratyÄ• vivasÄ• ne,

sÅ«riyuggamane sati.

sivayo deva tekuddhÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hÄ• pabbÄ• jayantitaá¹ƒ ||

<192> á¹• 21 sutvÄ• na \Be 79/ bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ etaá¹ƒ, hasamÄ• no pamodayaá¹ƒ.

evaá¹ƒpucchittha kattÄ• raá¹ƒ,

vessantaro sudhÄ«timÄ• ||

<193> á¹• 21 kismiá¹ƒ me sivayo kuddhÄ• , yaá¹ƒ napassÄ• mi dukkaá¹-aá¹ƒ.

taá¹ƒme katte viyÄ• cikkha,

kasmÄ• pabbÄ• jayanti maá¹ƒ ||

<194> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒ \Be 80/ kattÄ• idaá¹ƒvoca, hatthidÄ• nena kujjhare.

khÄ«yanti sivayo rÄ• ja,

tasmÄ• pabbÄ• jayanti taá¹ƒ ||

<195> á¹• 21 taá¹ƒsutvÄ• na mahÄ• satto, dÄ• nesu thÄ«ramÄ• naso.

vacanaá¹ƒ mhitapubbaá¹ƒ so,

kattÄ• raá¹ƒ etadabravÄ« ||

<196> á¹• 21 hadayaá¹ƒ \Be 81/ cakkhumahaá¹ƒ dajjaá¹ƒ, bÄ• huá¹ƒpi dakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ mama.

hiraÃ±Ã±a maá¹‡isoá¹‡á¹‡Ä• diá¹ƒ,

nakiá¹ƒ bÄ• hirakaá¹ƒ dhanaá¹ƒ ||

<197> á¹• 21 kÄ• maá¹ƒmaá¹ƒsi vayosabbe, pabbÄ• jentu hanantuvÄ• .

nevadÄ• nÄ• viramissaá¹ƒ,

kÄ• maá¹ƒchindantu sattadhÄ• ||

á¹• 21 tatoso devatÄ• viá¹-á¹-ho, kattÄ• maggama desayi.

pabbÄ• jitÄ• naá¹ƒ sabbesaá¹ƒ,

gatapubbaá¹ƒ purÄ• á¹‡akaá¹ƒ ||

<199> á¹• 21 kontÄ«mÄ• rÄ• ya \Be 82/ tÄ«rena, gÄ«rimÄ• raÃ±caraá¹ƒ pati.

yenapabbÄ• jitÄ• yanti,

tenagacchatu subbato ||

<200> á¹• 21 taá¹ƒsutvÄ• na bodhisatto, sÄ• dhÅ«ti sampaá¹-icchiya.

ekokÄ• saá¹ƒ nÄ• garÄ• naá¹ƒ,

yÄ• cetuá¹ƒ evamabravÄ« ||

<201> á¹• 21 dÄ• naá¹ƒsattasatakaá¹ƒhaá¹ƒ \Be 83/, kattedajjaá¹ƒ suvetato.

parasve nikkhamissÄ• mi,

rattiá¹ƒdivaá¹ƒ khamantume ||

<202> á¹• 21 sÄ• dhudevapavakkhÄ• mi, khamÄ• petuá¹ƒnisÄ• divaá¹ƒ.

nÄ• garÄ• naá¹ƒtivatvÄ• na,

tadÄ• kattÄ• pipakkami ||

<203> á¹• 21 mahÄ• sattomahÄ• yena- \Be 84/

kuttaá¹ƒsakalakammikaá¹ƒ.

pakkosÄ• viyasvedÄ• naá¹ƒ,

evaá¹ƒbyÄ• kÄ• sidÄ• tave ||

<204> á¹• 21 hatthÄ«asserateitthÄ«, dÄ• sÄ«dÄ• secadhenuyo.

paá¹-iyÄ• dehitvaá¹ƒsatta-

satecÄ• gÄ• yamÄ• risa ||

á¹• 0 205__._ á¹• 21 athonÄ• nappakÄ• rÄ• ni, annapÄ• nÄ• nisabbaso.

suraá¹ƒpi paá¹-iyÄ• dehi,

sabbaá¹ƒdÄ• tabbayuttakaá¹ƒ ||

<206> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒsobyÄ• karitvÄ• na \Be 85/, pemacittenacodito.

ekovamaddiyÄ• rammaá¹ƒ,

pÄ• sÄ• damabhirÅ«hatha ||

<207> á¹• 21 rattacandana gandhehi, gandhodakehivÄ• sitaá¹ƒ.

sopÄ• vekkhisirÄ«gabbhaá¹ƒ,

maddÄ«devÄ«nivÄ• sanaá¹ƒ ||

<208> á¹• 21 maddÄ«disvÄ• naÄ• yantaá¹ƒ \Be 86/, mhitÄ• nanenasÄ• mikaá¹ƒ.

uá¹-á¹-hÄ• siÄ• sanÄ• sÄ«ghaá¹ƒ, reá¹‡umattÄ• vakinnarÄ« ||

<209> á¹• 21 uá¹-á¹-hÄ• hitvÄ• nasÄ• maddÄ«, vÄ• mahatthesu rÄ• jino.

dakkhiá¹‡e nasahatthena,

gaá¹‡hitthamandahÄ• sinÄ« ||

<210> á¹• 21 tatosirisayanamhi \Be 87/, nasinnaá¹ƒsakasÄ• mikaá¹ƒ.

bÄ«jayantÄ«vasÄ• á¹-á¹-hÄ• si,

maddÄ«saÃ±Ã±atavÄ• sinÄ« ||

<211> á¹• 21 maddiá¹ƒaá¹…keá¹-á¹-hapetvÄ• tha, gaá¹‡haá¹ƒhattesudeviyÄ• .

mukhaá¹ƒmukhenakatvÄ• na,

rÄ• jÄ• mandamabhÄ• satha ||

<212> á¹• 21 yaá¹ƒtesacemayÄ• dinnaá¹ƒ, yaÃ±catepettikaá¹ƒdhanaá¹ƒ.

sabbaá¹ƒtaá¹ƒnidaheyyÄ• si,

bhaddekomÄ• rapemike ||

<213> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒnavuttapubbaá¹ƒme \Be 88/, sÄ• mikenamamÄ«disaá¹ƒ.

kadÄ• cietthakaá¹ƒkÄ• laá¹ƒ,

maddÄ«evaÃ±hicintayi ||

<214> á¹• 21 tato ubbiggacittena, maddÄ«eva mabhÄ• satha.

kuhiá¹ƒ deva nidahÄ• mi,

taá¹ƒme akkhÄ• hi pucchito ||

<215> á¹• 21 sÄ«lavantesu \Be 89/ dujjÄ• si, dÄ• naá¹ƒ maddÄ« yathÄ• rahaá¹ƒ.

nahidÄ• nÄ• paraá¹ƒatthi,

patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• sabbapÄ• á¹‡inaá¹ƒ ||

<216> á¹• 21 nidhÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• ma etaá¹ƒva, dhanÄ• naá¹ƒ nandivaá¸• á¸• hane.

dÄ• naá¹ƒhi nidhi sattÄ• naá¹ƒ,

evaá¹ƒbyÄ• kÄ• si khattiyo ||

<217> á¹• 21 maddÄ«vatvÄ• na \Be 90/ sÄ• dhÅ«ti, onamitvÄ• siruttamaá¹ƒ.

sampaá¹-icchi tato rÄ• jÄ• ,

punÄ• pi evamabravÄ« ||

<218> á¹• 21 jÄ• limhimaddidayesi, sÄ• dhukaá¹‡hÄ• jinÄ• yaca.

gÄ• ravaá¹ƒnivÄ• taá¹ƒkÄ• si,

sassuyÄ• sassuramhica ||

<219> á¹• 21 yohitaá¹ƒ pema cittena,

mayÄ• vippavasena te.

icche cebhavituá¹ƒ attÄ• ,

sakkaccaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒupaá¹-á¹-hahe ||

<220> á¹• 21 sace \Be 91/ evaá¹ƒ nabhaveyya, bhattÄ• raá¹ƒ mÄ• disaá¹ƒ viyaá¹ƒ.

parire sehi aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ tvaá¹ƒ,

mÄ• ki ssittho mayÄ• vinÄ• ||

<221> á¹• 21 tadÄ• hi dummukhÄ« maddÄ«, rÄ• jÄ• na meva mabravÄ«.

dussutaá¹ƒ vata suá¹‡omi,

Ä«disaá¹ƒ kinnubhÄ• sasi ||

<222> á¹• 21 viyÄ• cikkhÄ• mi \Be 92/ mebha dde, sakalaá¹ƒ dÄ• ni kÄ• riá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

hatthidÄ• nenakujjhanti,

samaggÄ• sivayo mama ||

<223> á¹• 21 pabbÄ• jenti mamaá¹ƒ tena, sivayo siviraá¹-á¹-hato.

mahÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ dadissÄ• mi,

suve komÄ• rasaá¹…game ||

<224> á¹• 21 parasve nikkhamissÄ• mi, raá¹-á¹-hÄ• ekova sobhaá¹‡e.

nÄ• nÄ• bhayehi saá¹ƒkiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ

vaá¹…kaá¹ƒ gacchÄ• mi pabbata ||

<225> á¹• 21 pÄ• á¹‡Ä«katapiye \Be 93/ jÄ• liá¹ƒ, kaá¹‡hÄ• jinaÃ±ca attajaá¹ƒ.

taÃ±caohÄ• ya gaccheyyaá¹ƒ,

vaseyyaá¹ƒ ekakovane ||

<226> á¹• 21 raÃ±Ã±o sutvÄ• na saá¹…kampi, vacanaá¹ƒsokavaá¸• á¸• hanaá¹ƒ.

mÄ• luteritapattaá¹ƒva,

maddÄ«yÄ• hadayaá¹ƒ tadÄ• ||

<227> á¹• 21 mÄ• mamevamavacuttha \Be 94/, kampesi hadayaá¹ƒ mama.

tattatelenasittaá¹ƒva,

sariraá¹ƒ rÄ• ja dayhate ||

<228> á¹• 21 nesadhammo mahÄ• rÄ• ja, yaá¹ƒ tvaá¹ƒ gaccheyya ekako.

ahaá¹ƒpi tena gacchÄ• mi,

yenagacchasi khattiya ||

<229> á¹• 21 maraá¹‡aá¹ƒvÄ• \Be 95/ tayÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ, jÄ«vitaá¹ƒvÄ• tayÄ• vinÄ• .

tadeva maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ seyyo,

yaÃ±cejÄ«ve tayÄ• pinÄ• ||

<230> á¹• 21 aggiá¹ƒ ujjÄ• layitvÄ• na, ekajÄ• la samÄ• hitaá¹ƒ.

tatthe vamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ seyyo,

yaÃ±ce jÄ«ve tayÄ• vinÄ• ||

<231> á¹• 21 carantÄ• raÃ±Ã±anÄ• gaá¹ƒva, duggesvanvetti hatthinÄ«.

evaá¹ƒtaá¹ƒ \Be 96/ anugacchÄ• mi,

putteÄ• dÄ• yapacchato ||

<232> á¹• 21 vimaá¹ƒsetuá¹ƒ tadÄ• rÄ• jÄ• , mÄ• nasaá¹ƒ maddideviyÄ• .

nÄ• nÄ• bhayaá¹ƒ pakÄ• sento,

evaá¹ƒbravi bhayÄ• payaá¹ƒ ||

<233> á¹• 21 viyÄ• cikkhÄ• mi \Be 97/ tesaccaá¹ƒ, vanamhi mudumÄ• nase.

nÄ• nÄ• bhayaá¹ƒ kharaá¹ƒ ghoraá¹ƒ,

hesmaá¹ƒ hadayakampanaá¹ƒ ||

<234> á¹• 21 kesarÄ«nÄ• ma yebhadde, migarÄ• jÄ• kharassarÄ• .

hiá¹ƒ santiá¹ƒ te sasaddena,

migetikkhagga dÄ• á¹-hino ||

<235> á¹• 21 dÄ«pÄ«byagghÄ• kaá¹‡hÄ• cchÄ• ca, tikkhagga nakha dhÄ• rino.

khaggÄ• \Be 98/ vanamahiá¹ƒsÄ• ca,

tikkhaggasiá¹…gadhÄ• rino ||

<236> á¹• 21 tikkhagga nakha siá¹…gehi, ete posaá¹ƒpi chindiya.

khaá¹‡á¸• Ä• khaá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒ karitvÄ• na,

mÅ«lÄ• laá¹ƒviya bhakkhare ||

<237> á¹• 21 yÄ• cayakkhiniyoyakkhÄ• , bahÅ«manussakhÄ• dakÄ• .

naraá¹ƒnÄ• riá¹ƒ gavesanti,

dummukhÄ• khaggapÄ• á¹‡ino ||

<238> á¹• 21 atho \Be 99/ ajagarÄ• sappÄ• , ghoravÄ«sÄ• ca vijjare.

viá¹ƒsÄ• cÄ• rakkhasÄ• vÄ• á¸·Ä• ,

sajjulohitabhojanÄ• ||

<139> á¹• 21 aÃ±Ã±epi bahavosanti, bhayÄ• bhesmakÄ• rakÄ• .

kiá¹ƒnabhÄ• yasi etesaá¹ƒ,

bhayÄ• naá¹ƒ bhayamÄ• nase ||

<240>á¹• 21 mÄ• \Be 100/ mamaá¹ƒ tvaá¹ƒ nugacchÄ• hi, gacchantaá¹ƒ bhayasaá¹ƒyutaá¹ƒ.

vanaá¹ƒ idheva acchÄ• hi,

vuttehisahabhÄ«ruke ||

<141> á¹• 21 tvekadÄ• sirigabbhamhi, vasantÄ« sahame subhe.

sutvÄ• gavesitÄ• á¹‡aá¹…ke,

kiá¹ƒme maÃ±jÄ• ragajjitaá¹ƒ ||

<242> á¹• 21 tvekadÄ• kiá¹ƒvibodhesi \Be 101/, bhemibhemÄ«ti bhÄ• siya.

rattiyaá¹ƒ hi sayantaá¹ƒ maá¹ƒ,

sutvÄ• nuluá¹…kavassitaá¹ƒ ||

<243> á¹• 21 tvekadÄ• meghasaddaá¹ƒhi, sutvÄ• divÄ• mamantikaá¹ƒ.

dhÄ• vitvÄ• maá¹ƒ parissajja,

kiá¹ƒ mucchilomahaá¹ƒsÄ«nÄ« ||

<144> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒbhaya \Be 102/ caÃ±calÄ• ya, sukhumÄ• lÄ• ya deviyÄ• .

nÄ• laá¹ƒhi vasituá¹ƒraÃ±Ã±e,

bhesme avanavÄ• sike ||

<245> á¹• 21 maddÄ«sutvÄ• na rÄ• jassa, bhÄ• sittaá¹ƒ thÄ«ramÄ• nasÄ• .

visÄ• radena cittena,

sÄ• mikaá¹ƒ evamabravÄ« ||

<246> á¹• 21 tayime pema cittaÃ±ca,

araÃ±Ã±e bhayamÄ• nasaá¹ƒ.

tayitesumahÄ• rÄ• ja \Be 103/,

sutikkhaá¹ƒ pema cetasaá¹ƒ ||

<247> á¹• 21 sandate sÄ«ghasotaá¹ƒme, tayisÄ• gara sannibhe.

niccaá¹ƒpemodakaá¹ƒrÄ• ja,

gaá¹…godakaá¹ƒva sÄ• gare ||

<248> á¹• 21 maraá¹‡aá¹ƒpemacittena, jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ bhaya cetasÄ• .

tadeva maraá¹‡aá¹ƒseyyo,

yaÃ±cetaá¹ƒ jÄ«vitaá¹ƒciraá¹ƒ ||

<249> á¹• 21 pÄ• kÄ• raá¹ƒ \Be 104/ mamÅ«raá¹ƒrÄ• ja, katvÄ• na puratovanaá¹ƒ.

nÄ• nÄ• bhayaá¹ƒ nivÄ• rentÄ«,

gacchaá¹ƒ haá¹ƒverahiá¹ƒsinÄ« ||

<250> á¹• 21 tayihaá¹ƒ pemacittÄ• siá¹ƒ, gahettvÄ• vaá¹…kapabbate.

phalÄ• phalaá¹ƒgavesantÄ«,

vaseyyÄ• mi tayÄ• saha ||

<251> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒÃ±hi \Be 105/ sÅ«rabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ sÄ• , dassayitvÄ• na attano.

himavanta vÄ• sinÄ«va-

rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ«titosayi ||

<252> á¹• 21 yadÄ• dakkhasinaccante, kumÄ• re mÄ• ladhÄ• rine.

kÄ«á¸·ante assameramme,

narajjassa sarissasi ||

<253> á¹• 21 yadÄ• dakkhasigÄ• yante \Be 106/, aÃ±Ã±oÃ±Ã±amukhadassine.

kumÄ• revanagumbamhi,

narajjassa sarissasi ||

<254> á¹• 21 yadÄ• dakkhasimÄ• taá¹…gaá¹ƒ, sÄ• yaá¹ƒpÄ• taá¹ƒbrahÄ• vane.

asahÄ• yaá¹ƒvicarantaá¹ƒ,

narajjassa sarissasi ||

<255> á¹• 21 nÄ• daá¹ƒkareá¹‡usaá¹…ghassa \Be 107/, nadamÄ• nassapÅ«rato.

nÄ• gassavajatosutvÄ• ,

narajjassasarissasi ||

<256> á¹• 21 migaá¹ƒdisvÄ• nasÄ• yanhaá¹ƒ, paÃ±camÄ• linamÄ• gataá¹ƒ.

kiá¹ƒ pÅ«risecanaccante,

narajjhassasarissasi ||

<257> á¹• 21 yadÄ• sussasinigghosaá¹ƒ \Be 108/, sandamÄ• nÄ• yasindhuyÄ• .

gÄ«taá¹ƒkiá¹ƒpurisÄ• naÃ±ca,

narajjassasarissasi ||

<258> á¹• 21 saratassacasÄ«hassa, byagghassacchassadivino.

saddaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• nakhaggassa,

narajjassasarissasi ||

<259> á¹• 21 yadÄ• morÄ«hiparikiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ \Be 109/, vicitrapucchapakkhinaá¹ƒ.

moraá¹ƒdakkhasinaccantaá¹ƒ,

narajjassa sarissasi ||

<260> á¹• 21 yadÄ• dakkhasi hemante, pupphitedharaá¹‡Ä«ruhe.

surabbhisampavÄ• yante,

narajjassa sarissasi ||

<261> á¹• 21 yadÄ• \Be 110/ hemanti kemÄ• se, haritaá¹ƒ dakkhasi medaniá¹ƒ.

indagopaka saÃ±channaá¹ƒ,

narajjassa sarissasi ||

<162> á¹• 21 tadÄ• hiphussatÄ«devÄ«, á¹-hitÄ• si puttasokinÄ«.

sÄ«rÄ«pagabbhassadvÄ• ramhi,

vimaá¹ƒsantÄ«kathÄ• kathaá¹ƒ ||

<263> á¹• 21 kalunaá¹ƒparidevittha \Be 111/, aÃ±Ã±oÃ±Ã±Ä• bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒgiraá¹ƒ.

sutvÄ• naphussatÄ«devÄ«,

vuttassasuá¹‡isÄ• yaca ||

<264> á¹• 21 visaá¹ƒmekhÄ• ditaá¹ƒseyyo, pabbatÄ• ca papÄ• tanaá¹ƒ.

mataÃ±carajjuyÄ• bajjha,

natthatthojÄ«vitename ||

<265> á¹• 21 ajjhÄ• yakaá¹ƒ \Be 112/ dÄ• na patiá¹ƒ, yasassinaá¹ƒ amacchariá¹ƒ.

kasmÄ• vessaraá¹ƒ puttaá¹ƒ,

pabbÄ• janti adÅ«sakaá¹ƒ ||

<266> á¹• 21 pÅ«jitaá¹ƒ patirÄ• jÅ«hi, sabbalokahi tesinaá¹ƒ.

kasmÄ• vessanttaraá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ,

pabbÄ• jentiadÅ«sakaá¹ƒ ||

<267> á¹• 21 kalunaá¹ƒ pari devitvÄ• , assÄ• setvÄ• na phussatÄ«.

vuttaÃ±ca suá¹‡isaá¹ƒ sÄ«ghaá¹ƒ,

agÄ• siÃ±caya santikaá¹ƒ ||

<268> á¹• 21 tatotaá¹ƒ \Be 113/ siÃ±cayaá¹ƒ devÄ«, visaá¹-á¹-hÄ• etadabravÄ«.

nÄ• nÅ«pÄ• yaá¹ƒ pakÄ• sentÄ«,

vicitta vÄ• da viÃ±Ã±unÄ« ||

<269> á¹• 21 madhÅ«niva palÄ• tÄ• ni, ambÄ• vapati tÄ• chamÄ• .

evaá¹ƒ he ssatite raá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ,

pabbÄ• jiteadÅ«sake ||

<270> á¹• 21 haá¹ƒ so \Be 114/ nikhÄ«á¹‡a pattova, pallasmiá¹ƒ anÅ«dake.

apaviá¹-á¹-ho amaccehi,

ekorÄ• jÄ• vihiyyasi ||

<270> á¹• 21 tantaá¹ƒ brÅ«mi mahÄ• rÄ• ja, atthotemÄ• upaccagÄ• .

mÄ• naá¹ƒ sivÄ«naá¹ƒ vacanÄ• ,

pabbÄ• jesiadÅ«sakaá¹ƒ ||

<172> á¹• 21 deviyÄ• vacanaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• \Be 115/, dhammarÄ• jÄ• dhammaÃ±caro.

dhammenadhammikaá¹ƒ brÅ«si,

mahesiá¹ƒ puttasokiniá¹ƒ ||

<273> á¹• 21 esovessantarobhadde, pÄ• á¹‡Ä• piyatarohime.

tathÄ• pinaá¹ƒ pabbÄ• jemi,

dhammasatthavasÄ• nugo ||

<274> á¹• 21 sÄ«viraá¹-á¹-hamhiporÄ• á¹‡a- \Be 116/rÄ• jÅ«naá¹ƒ dhammatantiyÄ• .

ahaÃ±hipacitiá¹ƒ kummi,

vinayantomamorasaá¹ƒ ||

<275> á¹• 21 raÃ±Ã±otaá¹ƒ vacanaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• , khinnÄ• hadayakampinÄ«.

punasÄ• paridevantÄ«,

evaá¹ƒ vilaviphussatÄ« ||

<276> á¹• 21 yassapubbedhajaggÄ• ni, kaá¹‡ikÄ• rÄ• vapupphitÄ• .

yÄ• yantamanuyÄ• yanti,

svajjekovagamissati ||

<277> á¹• 21 indagopakavaá¹‡á¹‡Ä• bhÄ• \Be 117/, gandhÄ• rÄ• paá¹‡á¸• ukampalÄ• .

yÄ• yantamanuyÄ• yanti,

svajjekovagamissasi ||

<278> á¹• 21 yopubbehatthinÄ• yÄ• ti,

sivikÄ• yarathenaca.

svajjavessarorÄ• jÄ• ,

kathaá¹ƒgacchatipatthikÄ• ||

<279> á¹• 21 kathaá¹ƒcandanalittaá¹…go \Be 118/, naccagÄ«tapabodhano.

khurÄ• jinaá¹ƒ pharusaÃ±ca,

khÄ• rikÄ• jaÃ±cahÄ• hiti ||

<280> á¹• 21 pavÄ«santo brahÄ• raÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, kÄ• sÄ• vaá¹ƒ ajinÄ• nivÄ• .

kharaá¹ƒ kusa mayaá¹ƒ cÄ«raá¹ƒ,

kathaá¹ƒ pari dahissati ||

<281> á¹• 21 kÄ• siyÄ• nica \Be 119/ dharetvÄ• , khomako á¹-umparÄ• nica.

kusacÄ«rÄ• ni dhÄ• rentÄ«,

kathaá¹ƒmaddÄ«karissati ||

<282> á¹• 21 vayhÄ• hi pariyÄ• yitvÄ• ,

sivikÄ• ya rathenaca,

sÄ• kathajja anujjhaá¹…gÄ«,

pathaá¹ƒ gacchati patthikÄ• ||

<283> á¹• 21 sukhedhitÄ• hihiraÃ±Ã±a- \Be 120/

pÄ• dukÄ• ruá¸·hagÄ• minÄ«, sÄ• kathajjasukhÄ• nandÄ«,

pathaá¹ƒgacchatipatthikÄ• ||

<284> á¹• 21 gantvÄ• itthisahassÄ• naá¹ƒ, pÅ«ratoyÄ• himÄ• linÄ«.

sÄ• kathajjayasÄ• nandÄ«,

vanaá¹ƒgacchatiekikÄ• ||

<285> á¹• 21 saddaá¹ƒsivÄ• yasutvÄ• yÄ• \Be 121/, muhuá¹ƒuttassatepure.

vasantÄ«sÄ• brahÄ• raÃ±Ã±e,

kathaá¹ƒ vacchatibhÄ«rukÄ• ||

<289> á¹• 21 saddaá¹ƒsutvÄ• nuluá¹…kassa, muhuá¹ƒuttasatepure.

vasantÄ«sÄ• brahÄ• raÃ±Ã±e,

kathaá¹ƒvacchatibhÄ«rukÄ• ||

<287> á¹• 21 sakuá¹‡Ä«hata \Be 122/ puttÄ• va, suÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒdisvÄ• kulÄ• vakaá¹ƒ.

cÄ«raá¹ƒdukkhena jhÄ• yissaá¹ƒ,

suÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒÄ• gammimaá¹ƒpuraá¹ƒ ||

<288> á¹• 21 kururÄ« hatachÄ• pÄ• va,

suÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒdisvÄ• kulÄ• vakaá¹ƒ.

tenatena padhÄ• vissaá¹ƒ,

piyeputteapassatÄ« ||

<289> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒmevila \Be 123/ pantiyÄ• , rÄ• japuttaá¹ƒ adÅ«sakaá¹ƒ.

pabbÄ• jesi vanaá¹ƒraá¹-á¹-hÄ• ,

maÃ±Ã±ehissÄ• mijÄ«vitaá¹ƒ ||

<290> á¹• 21 phussatyÄ• lavitaá¹ƒsutvÄ• , sabbÄ• siÃ±cayarÄ• jino.

bÄ• hÄ• paggayha pakkanduá¹ƒ,

sivikaÃ±Ã±Ä• samÄ• gatÄ• ||

<291> á¹• 21 pakkanditaravaá¹ƒtÄ• saá¹ƒ \Be 124/, sutvÄ• sokapamadditÄ• .

sivikaÃ±Ã±Ä• ca pakkanduá¹ƒ,

vessantaranivesane ||

<292> á¹• 21 orodhÄ• ca kumÄ• rÄ• ca, vesiyÄ• nÄ• brahmaá¹‡Ä• .

bÄ• hÄ• paggayhapakkanduá¹ƒ,

vessanttaranivesane ||

<293> á¹• 21 hatthÄ• rohÄ• anÄ«kaá¹-á¹-hÄ• \Be 125/, rathikÄ• patthikÄ• rakÄ• .

bÄ• hÄ• paggayha pakkanduá¹ƒ,

vessantara nivesane ||

<294> á¹• 21 tassÄ• ratyÄ• accayena, sÅ«riye uggatesati.

Ä• rocayiá¹ƒsu rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ,

dÄ• naggaá¹ƒ upagantave ||

<295> á¹• 21 athapÄ• tova sorÄ• jÄ• , nhatvÄ• bhÅ«sana bhÅ«sito.

dÄ• nasÄ• la mupÄ• gaÃ±chi,

mahÄ• jana purakkhato ||

<296> á¹• 21 dÄ• nasÄ• lÄ• su \Be 126/ dÄ• tabbaá¹ƒ, disvÄ• na paá¹-iyÄ• ditaá¹ƒ.

amacceva mÄ• á¹‡Ä• pesi,

rÄ• jÄ• bhi tuá¹-á¹-hamÄ• nato ||

<297> á¹• 21 vattÄ• nivatthakÄ• mÄ• naá¹ƒ, soá¹‡á¸• Ä• naá¹ƒ dethavÄ• ruá¹‡iá¹ƒ.

bhojanaá¹ƒ bhojanatthinaá¹ƒ,

sammadeva pavacchatha ||

<298> á¹• 21 yeyaá¹ƒyaá¹ƒ \Be 127/ laddhumicchanti, taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒtassapavacchatha.

mÄ• yÄ• cake nivÄ• retha,

dÄ• nasÄ• lÄ• su Ä• gate ||

<299> á¹• 21 tadÄ• siyaá¹ƒ bhÄ«sanakaá¹ƒ, tadÄ• si lomahaá¹ƒsanaá¹ƒ.

mahÄ• dÄ• ne padinnamhi

medinÄ« sampakampatha ||

<300> á¹• 21 parideviá¹ƒsu vessanttararÄ• jaá¹ƒ patitÄ• vade.

pakittetvÄ• na nÄ• nappa-

kÄ• raá¹ƒ evaá¹ƒ vaá¹‡ibbakÄ• ||

<301> á¹• 21 amhehitvÄ• na \Be 128/ vessanta-rarÄ• jÄ• dÄ• nadÄ• yako.

acire neva raá¹-á¹-hamhÄ• ,

nikkhamissatikÄ• nanaá¹ƒ ||

<302> á¹• 21 sattahatthisatedatvÄ• , sabbÄ• laá¹…kÄ• ra bhÅ«site.

esavessantaro samhÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hamhÄ• nikkhamissati ||

<303> á¹• 21 sattaassa sate datvÄ• , sindhave sÄ«gha vÄ• hane.

esa vessantarosamhÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hamhÄ• nikkhamissati ||

<304> á¹• 21 rathesattasatedatvÄ• \Be 129/, sannandhe ussitaddhaje.

esa vessantarosamhÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hamhÄ• nikkhamissati ||

<305> á¹• 21 sattakaÃ±Ã±Ä• satedatvÄ• , surÅ«pinÄ« vibhÅ«sitÄ• .

esa vessantarosamhÄ• ,

raá¹-á¹-hamhÄ• nikkhamissati ||

<306> á¹• 21 sattadhenu \Be 130/ sate datvÄ• , sabbÄ• kaá¹ƒsu padhÄ• raá¹‡Ä• .

esavessantarorÄ• jÄ• ,

samhÄ• raá¹-á¹-hÄ• niracchati ||

<307> á¹• 21 sattadÄ• si sate datvÄ• , sattadÄ• sa satÄ• nica.

esavessantarorÄ• jÄ• ,

samhÄ• raá¹-á¹-hÄ• niracchati ||

<308> á¹• 21 athetthavattatesaddo, tumulobhe ravomahÄ• .

samÄ• kulaá¹ƒ puraá¹ƒÄ• si,

ahosi lomahaá¹ƒsanaá¹ƒ ||

<309> á¹• 21 sodatvÄ• na \Be 131/ mahÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ, vessantaro amaccharÄ«.

purakkhato amaccehi,

agÄ• sakanivesanaá¹ƒ ||

<310> á¹• 21 tatohi maddiyÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ, mÄ• tÄ• pitÅ«na santikaá¹ƒ.

vandanatthÄ• ya agaÃ±chi,

alaá¹…kata rathenaso ||

<311> á¹• 21 vanditvÄ• \Be 132/ pitaraá¹ƒbodhisattobravikataÃ±jalÄ«.

evaá¹ƒÄ• vÄ«karontova,

gamissamÄ• naaÃ±jasaá¹ƒ ||

<312> á¹• 21 mamaá¹ƒtÄ• ta pabbÄ• jesi, yamhÄ• raá¹-á¹-hÄ• adÅ«sakaá¹ƒ.

sivÄ«naá¹ƒ vacanatthena,

tenaá¹ƒ-gacchÄ• mi kÄ• nanaá¹ƒ ||

<313> á¹• 21 suveahaá¹ƒ mahÄ• rÄ• ja,

sÅ«riyugga mane sati,

nikkhamissÄ• mi raá¹-á¹-hamhÄ• ,

vaá¹…kaá¹ƒ gacchÄ• mi pabbataá¹ƒ ||

<314> á¹• 21 vanevÄ• á¸·a \Be 133/ migÄ• kiá¹‡á¹‡e, khaggadÄ«piniise vite.

ahaá¹ƒpuÃ±Ã±Ä• ni karomi,

tumhe paá¹…kamhÄ« sÄ«datha ||

<315> á¹• 21 tatosotaramÄ• nova, gantvÄ• namÄ• kusantikaá¹ƒ.

vandamÄ• noÄ• rocitta,

evaá¹ƒÃ±hisakamÄ• tuyÄ• ||

<316> á¹• 21 anujÄ• nÄ• himaá¹ƒammÄ• , gacchÄ• mivaá¹…kapabbataá¹ƒ.

vanepuÃ±Ã±Ä• nikÄ• hÄ• mi \Be 134/,

pabbajjÄ• mamaruccati ||

<317> á¹• 21 taá¹ƒsuttvÄ• ruá¹‡á¹‡amukhena, jananÄ«evamabravÄ«.

anujÄ• nÄ• mitaá¹ƒvuttaá¹ƒ,

pabbajjÄ• tesamijjhabhu ||

<318> á¹• 21 ayaÃ±hivutta memaddÄ«, suá¹‡hÄ• sukhumavaddhinÄ«.

acchataá¹ƒ saha vuttehi,

kiá¹ƒ araÃ±Ã±ekarissati ||

<319> á¹• 21 mÄ• tuyÄ• vacanaá¹ƒsutvÄ• \Be 135/, vessantaro kataÃ±jalÄ«.

mhitapubbamabhÄ• sitta,

Ã±Ä• pentoattanomatiá¹ƒ ||

<320> á¹• 21 nÄ• haá¹ƒakÄ• mÄ• dÄ• saá¹ƒvi, araÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒnetu mussahe.

saceiccha tianvetu,

sacenicchati acchatu ||

<321> á¹• 21 tatosuá¹‡haá¹ƒmahÄ• rÄ• jÄ• \Be 136/, yÄ• cituá¹ƒpaá¹-ipajjatha.

mÄ• candanasamÄ• cÄ• re,

rajojallaá¹ƒmadhÄ• rayi ||

<322> á¹• 21 kÄ• siyÄ• nicadhÄ• retvÄ• ,

kusacÄ«ramadhÄ• rayi.

dukkhovÄ• soaraÃ±Ã±asmiá¹ƒ,

mÄ• hitvaá¹ƒlakkhaá¹‡egami ||

<323> á¹• 21 tato \Be 137/ patibbatÄ• suá¹‡hÄ• , sassuraá¹ƒ evamabravÄ«.

nÄ• haá¹ƒ taá¹ƒsukhamicchayyaá¹ƒ,

yaá¹ƒme vessantaraá¹ƒ vinÄ• ||

<324> á¹• 21 tato suá¹‡haá¹ƒ mahÄ• rÄ• jÄ• , dussahÄ• ni brahÄ• vane.

nÄ• nÄ• bhayÄ• ni Ã±Ä• pento,

vanaá¹ƒ yÄ• ci agantave ||

<325> á¹• 21 yÄ• na santi mahÄ• rÄ• ja, bhayÄ• nitÄ• ni kÄ• nane.

sabbÄ• ni \Be 138/ haá¹ƒ sahissami,

anugacchÄ• mi mepatiá¹ƒ ||

<326> á¹• 21 pÅ«ratohaá¹ƒ gamissÄ• mi, dadantÄ« bhatthuno pathaá¹ƒ.

urasÄ• panudahitvÄ• na,

kusa naá¸·a vanÄ• dayo ||

<327> á¹• 21 bahÅ«hi vatavariyÄ• hi, kumÄ• rÄ« vindate patiá¹ƒ.

vedhabyaá¹ƒ kaá¹-ukaá¹ƒ loke,

gacchaÃ±Ã±eva rathesabha ||

<328> á¹• 21 nÄ• nÄ• kÄ• rehi \Be 139/ pÄ«á¸·enti, anÄ• thaá¹ƒvidhavaá¹ƒ janÄ• .

ativÄ• kyena bhÄ• santi,

mittÄ• cÄ• pi salohitÄ• ||

<329> á¹• 21 naggÄ• nadÄ« anÅ«dakÄ• , naggaá¹ƒ raá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ arÄ• jakaá¹ƒ.

itthÄ«pi vidhavÄ• naggÄ• ,

yassÄ• suá¹ƒdasa bhÄ• taro ||

<330> á¹• 21 dhajo \Be 140/ rathassa paÃ±Ã±Ä• naá¹ƒ, dhumo paÃ±Ã±Ä• namaggino.

rÄ• jÄ• raá¹-á¹-hassa paÃ±Ã±Ä• naá¹ƒ,

bhattÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• namitthiyÄ• ||

<331> á¹• 21 yÄ• daliddassa posassa, daliddÄ« bhariyÄ• siyÄ• .

aá¸• á¸• hÄ• aá¸• á¸• hassa rÄ• jinda,

taá¹ƒ ve devÄ• pasaá¹ƒsare ||

<332> á¹• 21 kathaá¹ƒ nutÄ• saá¹ƒ hadayaá¹ƒ, sukharÄ• vata itthiyo.

yÄ• \Be 141/ sÄ• mike dukkhitamhi,

sukhamicchanti attano ||

<333> á¹• 21 apisÄ• garapariyantaá¹ƒ, bahuvittadharaá¹ƒmahiá¹ƒ.

nÄ• nÄ• ratanaparipÅ«raá¹ƒ,

nicchevessantaraá¹ƒvinÄ• ||

<334> á¹• 21 sÄ• mikaá¹ƒ anugacchissaá¹ƒ, ahaá¹ƒ kÄ• sÄ• yavÄ• sinÄ«.

dhÄ«ratthutaá¹ƒ \Be 142/ nissÄ«rikaá¹ƒ,

vedhabyaá¹ƒyaÃ±ca nÄ• riyÄ• ||

<335> á¹• 21 suá¹‡hÄ• ya bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• ,

sassuro nikkhipetave.

duve idheva nattÄ• ro,

suá¹‡haá¹ƒso eva mabravÄ« ||

<336> á¹• 21 imete daharÄ• puttÄ• ,

jÄ• lÄ«kaá¹‡hÄ• jinÄ• cubho.

nikkhippa lakkhaá¹‡e gaccha,

mayaá¹ƒte posisÄ• mase ||

<337> á¹• 21 piyÄ• me \Be 143/ puttakÄ• deva,

jÄ• lÄ« kaá¹‡hÄ• jinÄ• cubho.

tyamhaá¹ƒ tattha ramessanti,

araÃ±Ã±e jÄ«viso kinaá¹ƒ ||

<338> á¹• 21 puttenetvÄ• na gacchÄ• ma, dvemayaá¹ƒ vaá¹…kapabbataá¹ƒ,

dakkhamÄ• nÄ• vasissÄ• ma,

ete pamodamÄ• nasÄ• ||

<339> á¹• 21 suá¹‡amÄ• nÄ• \Be 144/ vasissÄ• ma, gÄ«taÃ±ca viyabhÄ• á¹‡inaá¹ƒ.

etesaá¹ƒ naccamÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ,

araÃ±Ã±e mÄ• ladhÄ• rinaá¹ƒ ||

<340> á¹• 21 suá¹‡hÄ• ya bhÄ• sitaá¹ƒsutvÄ• ,

sassurokhinna mÄ• naso.

evaÃ±hiso vilavittha,

paá¹-iccadÄ• rake duve ||

<341> á¹• 21 sÄ• linaá¹ƒ \Be 145/ odanaá¹ƒ bhutvÄ• , suciá¹ƒ maá¹ƒsupasecanaá¹ƒ.

rukkhaphalÄ• ni bhuÃ±jantÄ• ,

kathaá¹ƒkÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<342> á¹• 21 bhutvÄ• satapale kaá¹ƒse, sovaá¹‡á¹‡e satarÄ• jite.

rukkhapattesu bhuÃ±jantÄ• ,

kathaá¹ƒkÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<343> á¹• 21 kÄ• siyÄ• nica dhÄ• retvÄ• ,

khoma koá¹-umparÄ• nica.

kusacÄ«rÄ• ni \Be 146/ dhÄ• rentÄ• ,

kathaá¹ƒ kÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<344> á¹• 21 vayhÄ• hipariyÄ• yitvÄ• ,

sivikÄ• ya rathenaca.

patthikÄ• paridhÄ• vantÄ• ,

kathaá¹ƒ kÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<345> á¹• 21 kuá¹-Ä• gÄ• re sayitvÄ• na, nivÄ• te phusitaggale.

sayantÄ• rukkhamÅ«lasmiá¹ƒ,

kathaá¹ƒkÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<346> á¹• 21 pallaá¹…kesu \Be 147/ sayitvÄ• na, gonake cittasanthate.

sayantÄ• tiá¹‡asanthÄ• re,

kathaá¹ƒkÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<347> á¹• 21 gandhakena vilimpetvÄ• , agalucandanenaca.

rajojallÄ• ni dhÄ• rentÄ• ,

kathaá¹ƒkÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<348> á¹• 21 cÄ• marÄ« \Be 148/ mora hatthehi, bÄ«jitaá¹…gÄ• sukhedhitÄ• .

phuá¹-á¹-hÄ• á¸• aá¹ƒsehi makasehi,

kathaá¹ƒkÄ• hanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<349> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒvaá¹ƒbravi rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ, vilapantaá¹ƒ sokaá¹-á¹-itaá¹ƒ.

paá¹-icca dÄ• rake suá¹‡hÄ• ,

vessantarapiyaÃ±janÄ• ||

<350> á¹• 21 mÄ• \Be 149/ deva paridevesi, mÄ• ca tvaá¹ƒ vimanoahu.

yathÄ• mayaá¹ƒ bhavissÄ• ma,

tathÄ• hessanti dÄ• rakÄ• ||

<351> á¹• 21 evaÃ±hi sallapantÄ• naá¹ƒ, tesaá¹ƒ khattiyajÄ• tinaá¹ƒ.

aÃ±Ã±oÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ vibhÄ• tÄ• ratti,

samuggaÃ±chittha sÅ«riyo ||

<352> á¹• 21 tadÄ• netvÄ• \Be 150/ á¹-hapayiá¹ƒsu, catusindhavayuÃ±jitaá¹ƒ.

alaá¹…kata rathaá¹ƒrÄ• ja-

dvÄ• re maá¹…galasammataá¹ƒ ||

<353> á¹• 21 vanditvÄ• sassure maddÄ«,

Ä• dÄ• ya puttake duve.

bhattuno purato gantvÄ• ,

pathamaá¹ƒ rathamÄ• ruhi ||

<354> á¹• 21 tatovessantaromÄ• tÄ• - pitaro ativandiya.

padakkhiá¹‡aÃ±ca katvÄ• na,

sÄ«ghaso rathamÄ• ruhi ||

<355> á¹• 21 tato \Be 151/ maá¹…galadvÄ• rena, rathaá¹ƒ pesesi laá¹…kataá¹ƒ.

tosÄ• payaá¹ƒ mahÄ• satto,

maddiá¹ƒ jÄ• lissa mÄ• taraá¹ƒ ||

<356> á¹• 21 pathantesu bhivandanti, sakkaccaá¹ƒ bahavo janÄ• .

vessantaraÃ±ca maddiÃ±ca,

passamÄ• nÄ• kataÃ±calÄ« ||

<357> á¹• 21 Ä• pucchantoca \Be 152/ pakkÄ• mi, gacchissÄ• mÄ«hi patthayaá¹ƒ.

nidukkhÄ• sukhitÄ• hotha,

itiso vandake jane ||

<358> á¹• 21 rathe á¹-hitova sorÄ• jÄ• , ovadanto apakkami.

dÄ• naÄ• dÄ«ni puÃ±Ã±Ä• ni,

karothÄ• ti mahÄ• janaá¹ƒ ||

<359> á¹• 21 gacchante bodhisattamhi, mÄ• tÄ• evaÃ±hi cintayi.

dÄ• tukÄ• mosi mevutto,

paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya jÄ• takÄ• lato ||

<360> á¹• 21 tatodÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 153/ dadopetuá¹ƒ, puttaá¹ƒratana pÅ«rite.

puttassubhosu passesu,

pesesi sakaá¹-ebahÅ« ||

<361> á¹• 21 vessantarohi samparohi sampattayÄ• cakÄ• naá¹ƒ asesakaá¹ƒ.

aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasavÄ• re dÄ• si,

kÄ• yÄ• ruá¸·haá¹ƒpiattano ||

<362> á¹• 21 nagarÄ• \Be 154/ nikkhamantamhi, vessantaresa pettikaá¹ƒ.

nagaraá¹ƒ daá¹-á¹-hukÄ• mosi,

tadÄ• saá¹…kampi medanÄ« ||

<363> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒ rathappamÄ• á¹‡amhi, á¹-hÄ• ne bhijjiya medanÄ«, parivattittha kulÄ• la-

cakkaá¹ƒvanagarÄ• mukhÄ« ||

<364> á¹• 21 nagaraá¹ƒ oloketvÄ• na,

nagarÄ• bhimukhe rathe,

á¹-hitomaddiá¹ƒpi dakkhetuá¹ƒ,

evaá¹ƒsobravi hÄ• sayaá¹ƒ ||

<365> á¹• 21 iá¹…gha \Be 155/ maddi nisÄ• mehi, rammarÅ«paá¹ƒva dissati.

Ä• vÄ• so siviseá¹-á¹-hassa,

pettikaá¹ƒ bhavanaá¹ƒ mama ||

<366> á¹• 21 sahajÄ• taamacceca, nivattetvÄ• mahÄ• janaá¹ƒ.

rathaá¹ƒ pÄ• jesi so sÄ«ghaá¹ƒ,

modantomaddiyÄ• tato ||

<367> á¹• 21 anvÄ• gamiá¹ƒsu \Be 156/ pÄ• jentaá¹ƒ, cattÄ• ro brahmaá¹‡Ä• tahiá¹ƒ.

yÄ• cituá¹ƒ sindhave ete,

maddÄ« passittha tÄ• vade ||

<368> á¹• 21 maddÄ«pi mandasaddena, yÄ• cakÄ• viya Ä• gatÄ• .

ityÄ• rocesi bhattÄ• raá¹ƒ,

gaá¹‡hantÄ« tassa piá¹-á¹-hiyaá¹ƒ ||

<369> á¹• 21 sÄ• dhu \Be 157/ bhaddeti vatvÄ• na, rathassÄ• gamanaá¹ƒ akÄ• .

brahmaá¹‡Ä• upagantvÄ• na,

yÄ• ciá¹ƒsu sindhave tahiá¹ƒ ||

<370> á¹• 21 modamÄ• nova sodÄ• si, brahmaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ susindhave.

brahmaá¹‡Ä• dÄ• ya gaÃ±chiá¹ƒsu,

assesaka nivesanaá¹ƒ ||

<371> á¹• 21 assesu pana dinnesu, cattÄ• ro devaputtakÄ• .

rohiccamigavaá¹‡á¹‡ena,

rathaá¹ƒ vahiya gaÃ±chisuá¹ƒ ||

<372> á¹• 21 devÄ• \Be 158/ rohiccavaá¹‡á¹‡ena, vahantÄ«ti subuddhimÄ• .

vijÄ• nitvÄ• na maddiá¹ƒpi,

Ã±Ä• pento evamabravÄ« ||

<373> á¹• 21 iá¹…ghapmaddi nisÄ• mehi, cittarÅ«paá¹ƒva dissati.

migaro hiccavaá¹‡á¹‡ena,

dakkhiá¹‡assÄ• vahantimaá¹ƒ ||

<374> á¹• 21 maddÄ«cevaá¹ƒ \Be 159/ nicchÄ• resi, giraá¹ƒ accherarÅ«pinÄ«.

vessantarassatejena,

rathaá¹ƒvahantidevatÄ• ||

<375> á¹• 21 Ä• gantvÄ• na rathaá¹ƒ yÄ• ci, aparo brÄ• hmaá¹‡o tato.

bodhisattopisodÄ• si,

rathaá¹ƒ tassa anigghiyaá¹ƒ ||

<376> á¹• 21 sakappiye dadantamhi, maddÄ« pahaá¹-á¹-hamÄ• nasÄ• .

sÄ• dhukÄ• raá¹ƒ pavattesi,

sadÄ• maccherahiá¹ƒsinÄ« ||

<377> á¹• 21 dinne \Be 160/ rathamhi antaradhÄ• riyiá¹ƒsu devaputtakÄ• .

sabbe te patthikÄ• Ä• suá¹ƒ,

rÄ• jÄ• maddiá¹ƒ tadÄ• bravÄ« ||

<378> á¹• 21 tvaá¹ƒ maddi kaá¹‡haá¹ƒgaá¹‡hÄ• hi, lahuesÄ• kaniá¹-á¹-hakÄ• .

ahaá¹ƒ jÄ• liá¹ƒ gahessÄ• mi,

garuko bhÄ• tikohiso ||

<379> á¹• 21 rÄ• jÄ• \Be 161/ kumÄ• ramÄ• dÄ• ya, rÄ• japuttÄ«ca dÄ• rikaá¹ƒ.

sammodamÄ• nÄ• pakkÄ• muá¹ƒ,

aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±a piyaá¹ƒ vadÄ• ||

<380> á¹• 21 Ä• gacchante paá¹-ipathaá¹ƒ, disvÄ• na addhikejane.

evaá¹ƒ pucchiyagaÃ±chiá¹ƒsu,

kuhiá¹ƒ vaá¹…katapabbato ||

<381> á¹• 21 kaluá¹‡aá¹ƒ \Be 162/ paridevitvÄ• , pucchitÄ• addhikÄ• janÄ• .

evaá¹ƒ te paá¹-ivedesuá¹ƒ,

dÅ«revaá¹…katapabbato ||

<382> á¹• 21 maggÄ• sannesu passantÄ• , dÄ• rakÄ• phaline dume.

tesaá¹ƒphalÄ• naá¹ƒ hetumhi,

pitaro uparodare ||

<383> á¹• 21 rodante dÄ• rake disvÄ• , ubbiggÄ• vipulÄ• dumÄ• .

yasamevonamitvÄ• na,

upagacchanti dÄ• rake ||

<384> á¹• 21 idaá¹ƒ \Be 163/ accherakaá¹ƒ disvÄ• , maddÄ« sasaá¹…kasannibhÄ• .

pitipuá¹‡á¹‡ena kÄ• yena,

evaá¹ƒgÄ• yittha nandanÄ• ||

<385> á¹• 21 accheraá¹ƒ vata lokasmiá¹ƒ, abbhÅ«taá¹ƒ lomahaá¹ƒsanaá¹ƒ,

vessantarassa tejena.

sayame vonatÄ• dumÄ• ||

<386> á¹• 21 saá¹ƒkhipiá¹ƒsu \Be 164/ pathaá¹ƒ yakkhÄ• , anukampÄ• ya dÄ• rake.

nikkhantadivaseneva,

jetaraá¹-á¹-hamupÄ• gamuá¹ƒ ||

<387> á¹• 21 ekÄ• henevate tiá¹ƒsayojanÄ• ni atikkamuá¹ƒ.

sÄ• yanhe mÄ• tulaá¹ƒnÄ• ma,

sampattÄ• nagaraá¹ƒ subhaá¹ƒ ||

<388> á¹• 21 nagarassassa dvÄ• ramhi, sÄ• lÄ• yaá¹ƒ nisidiá¹ƒ sute.

khedaá¹ƒ vinodamÄ• nÄ• va,

tosentÄ• dÄ• rake duve ||

<389> á¹• 21 maddÄ«pi \Be 165/ bodhisattassa, rajaá¹ƒ pÄ• desu puÃ±chiya.

sambahitvÄ• na pÄ• deca,

vijayantÄ« á¹-hitÄ• tadÄ• ||

<390> á¹• 21 sÄ• lÄ• ya nikkhamitvÄ• na, bhattucakkhupathe á¹-hitÄ• .

disodisaá¹ƒ olokesi,

maddÄ« kantÄ• rakhedinÄ« ||

<391> á¹• 21 jetiyo \Be 166/ parivÄ• riá¹ƒsu, disvÄ• na asahÄ• yikaá¹ƒ

maddiá¹ƒ evaá¹ƒugghosiá¹ƒsu,

itthÄ« iccherarÅ«vinÄ« ||

<392> á¹• 21 vayhÄ• hi pariyÄ• yitvÄ• ,

sivikÄ• ya rathenaca.

sÄ• jja maddÄ«araÃ±Ã±asmi,

patthikÄ• paridhÄ• vati ||

<393> á¹• 21 anÄ• thÄ• gamanaá¹ƒ maddiá¹ƒ, bhattÄ• rÄ• puttakehica, disvÄ• gantvÄ• nÄ• cikkhaá¹ƒsu,

jetindÄ• naá¹ƒ khaá¹‡ena tÄ• ||

<394> á¹• 21 taá¹ƒ \Be 167/ sutvÄ• jetapÄ• mokkhÄ• , rodamÄ• nÄ• upÄ• gamuá¹ƒ.

vessantarassa pÄ• desa,

nipacca iti pucchisuá¹ƒ ||

<395> á¹• 21 kiccinu deva kusalaá¹ƒ, kicci deva anÄ• mayaá¹ƒ.

kiccipitÄ• arogote,

sivÄ«naÃ±ca anÄ• mayaá¹ƒ.

ko te balaá¹ƒ mahÄ• rÄ• ja,

konu te rathamaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ ||

<396> á¹• 21 anassako \Be 168/ arathako, dÄ«ghamaddhÄ• na mÄ• gato.

kiccÄ• mittehi pakato,

anuppatto simaá¹ƒdisaá¹ƒ ||

<397> á¹• 21 atha vessantarorÄ• jÄ• ,

Ä• gatahetumattano.

Ã±Ä• petuá¹ƒ jetarÄ• jÅ«naá¹ƒ,

imÄ• gÄ• thÄ• abhÄ• satha ||

<398> á¹• 21 kusalaÃ±ceva \Be 169/ mesamma, atho samma anÄ• mayaá¹ƒ.

atho vibhÄ• arogome,

sivÄ«naÃ±ca Ä• nÄ• mayaá¹ƒ ||

<399> á¹• 21 ahaÃ±hikuÃ±jaraá¹ƒ dajjaá¹ƒ, sabbasetaá¹ƒ gajuttamaá¹ƒ.

brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ sÄ• laá¹…kÄ• raá¹ƒ,

khettaÃ±Ã±uá¹ƒ raá¹-hapÅ«jitaá¹ƒ ||

<400> á¹• 21 tasmiá¹ƒ me sivayokuddhÄ• , vibhÄ• upahatomano.

avaruddhasi maá¹ƒ rÄ• jÄ• ,

vaá¹…kaá¹ƒgacchÄ• mipabbataá¹ƒ ||

<401> á¹• 21 tadÄ• \Be 170/ te jetarÄ• jÄ• no, balÄ• nuppadamÄ• nasÄ• .

evaá¹ƒ tosiá¹ƒsu rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ,

nikkhantaá¹ƒ sakaraá¹-hato ||

<402> á¹• 21 svÄ• gatante mahÄ• rÄ• ja, athoteadurÄ• gataá¹ƒ.

issaro sianuppatto,

yaá¹ƒidhatthipavedaya ||

<403> á¹• 21 idheva \Be 171/ tÄ• va acchassu, jetaraá¹-á¹-he rathesabha.

yÄ• va jetÄ• gamissanti,

raÃ±Ã±o santika yÄ• cituá¹ƒ ||

<404> á¹• 21 tadÄ• vessantaro Ä• ha, mÄ• vogamittha santikaá¹ƒ.

yÄ• cituá¹ƒ mama pitussa,

rÄ• jÄ• pi tattha nissaro ||

<405> á¹• 21 accuggatÄ• hi sivayo,

balaggÄ• ne gamÄ• caye, tepaadhaá¹ƒsi tumicchanti,

rÄ• jÄ• naá¹ƒ mama kÄ• raá¹‡Ä• ||

<406> á¹• 21 saceevaá¹ƒ \Be 172/ mahÄ• rÄ• ja, siyÄ• jetuttare pure.

idhevarajjaá¹ƒ kÄ• rehi,

jetehi parivÄ• rito ||

<407> á¹• 21 iddhaá¹ƒ phitaÃ±cidaá¹ƒraá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, iddho janapado mahÄ• .

matiá¹ƒ karohi tvaá¹ƒ deva,

rajjassa manussatituá¹ƒ ||

<408> á¹• 21 alaá¹ƒ \Be 173/ me rajjasukhena, pabbÄ• jitassa raá¹-á¹-hato.

atuá¹-á¹-hÄ• sivayocÄ• suá¹ƒ,

maÃ±cerajjebhisecayyÅ«á¹ƒ ||

<409> á¹• 21 asammodanÄ« yampivoassa, accantaá¹ƒ mamakÄ• raá¹‡Ä• .

sivÄ«hi bhaá¹‡á¸• anaÃ±cÄ• vi,

viggaho me naruccati ||

<410> á¹• 21 paá¹-iggahitaá¹ƒ yaá¹ƒ dinnaá¹ƒ, sabbassa agghiyaá¹ƒ kataá¹ƒ.

avaruddhasi maá¹ƒ rÄ• jÄ• ,

vaá¹…ka gacchÄ• mipabbataá¹ƒ ||

<411> á¹• 21 aneka \Be 174/ pariyÄ• yena, jetarÄ• jÅ«hi yÄ• cito.

anicchanto paá¹-ikkhÄ«pi,

rajjaá¹ƒ so jetaraá¹-á¹-hake ||

<412> á¹• 21 nagaraá¹ƒ apavÄ«sitvÄ• , sÄ• laá¹ƒ sÄ• á¹‡iparikkhipaá¹ƒ.

kÄ• retvÄ• ekarattiá¹ƒso,

sayÄ« saputtadÄ• rako ||

<413> á¹• 21 pubbaá¹‡hasamaye \Be 175/ bhutvÄ• , nÄ• naggaá¹ƒ rasabhojanaá¹ƒ.

nÅ«tvÄ• so jetarÄ• jÅ«hi,

parivutova nikkhami ||

<414> á¹• 21 jetarÄ• jÄ• pannarasayojanaá¹ƒ jetaraá¹-á¹-hato.

gantvÄ• na vanadvÄ• ramhi

á¹-hitÄ• magga mabhÄ• sisuá¹ƒ ||

<415> á¹• 21 esaselomahÄ• rÄ• ja, pabbato gandhamÄ• dano.

yatta tvaá¹ƒ saha puttehi,

sahabhariyÄ• ya vacchasi ||

<416> á¹• 21 taá¹ƒ \Be 176/ jetÄ• anusÄ• siá¹ƒsu, assunettÄ• rudammukhÄ• .

ito gacchaá¹ƒmahÄ• rÄ• ja,

ujuá¹ƒ yenuttarÄ• bhimukho ||

<417> á¹• 21 atha dakkhasi bhaddante,

vepullaá¹ƒnÄ• ma pabbataá¹ƒ.

nÄ• nÄ• dumagaá¹‡Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

sÄ«tacchÄ• yaá¹ƒ manoramaá¹ƒ ||

<418> á¹• 21 tamatikkamabhaddante \Be 177/, athadakkhasiÄ• pagaá¹ƒ.

nadiá¹ƒketumadiá¹ƒnÄ• ma,

gambhÄ«raá¹ƒgirigabbharaá¹ƒ ||

<419> á¹• 21 puthulomacchaÄ• kiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

suppatitthaá¹ƒmahodakaá¹ƒ.

thattanÅ«tvÄ• pivitvÄ• ca,

assÄ• setvÄ• saputtake ||

<420> á¹• 21 athadakkhasibhaddante,

nagrodhaá¹ƒmadhuvipphalaá¹ƒ.

rammake sikharejÄ• taá¹ƒ,

sÄ«tacchÄ• yaá¹ƒmanoramaá¹ƒ ||

<421> á¹• 21 atha \Be 178/ dakkhasi bhaddante, nÄ• á¸·ikaá¹ƒnÄ• ma pabbataá¹ƒ.

nÄ• nÄ• dija gaá¹‡Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

selaá¹ƒ kiá¹ƒ purisÄ• yutaá¹ƒ ||

<422> á¹• 21 tassauttarapubbena, mucalindonÄ• masosaro.

puá¹‡á¸• arikehisaÃ±channo,

setasogandhikehica ||

<423> á¹• 21 sovanaá¹ƒ meghasaá¹…kÄ• saá¹ƒ, dhuvaá¹ƒ haritasaddalaá¹ƒ.

sÄ«hovÄ• misapekkhÄ«va,

vanasaá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒ vigÄ• haya ||

<424> á¹• 21 tattha \Be 179/ bindussarÄ• vaggÅ«, nÄ• nÄ• vaá¹‡á¹‡Ä• bahÅ«dijÄ• .

kÅ«janti mupakÅ«janti,

utusaá¹ƒpupphite dume ||

<425> á¹• 21 gantvÄ• girividuggÄ• naá¹ƒ, nadÄ«naá¹ƒ pabhavÄ• nica.

so addasa pokkharaá¹‡iá¹ƒ,

karaÃ±ca-ka kudhÄ• yutaá¹ƒ ||

<426> á¹• 21 puthulo macchaÄ• kiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

suppatitthaá¹ƒ mahodakaá¹ƒ.

samaÃ±ca caturaá¹ƒ saÃ±ca,

sÄ• duá¹ƒ appatigandhiyaá¹ƒ ||

<427> á¹• 21 tassÄ• \Be 180/ uttarapubbena, paá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• laá¹ƒ amÄ• paya.

paá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• laá¹ƒ amÄ• petvÄ• ,

uÃ±chÄ• cariyÄ• ya Ä«hatha ||

<428> á¹• 21 evaÃ±hi jetarÄ• jÄ• no,

Ä• cikkhitvÄ• na aÃ±jasaá¹ƒ.

ekaá¹ƒ jetaputtaá¹ƒ byattaá¹ƒ,

Ä• mantesuá¹ƒ susikkhitaá¹ƒ ||

<429> á¹• 21 gacchantecÄ• \Be 181/ gacchanteca, pariggaá¹‡hassu luddhaka.

iccevaá¹ƒ saÃ±Ã±Ä• petvÄ• na,

vanadvÄ• re á¹-hapiá¹ƒ sutaá¹ƒ ||

<430> á¹• 21 nÄ• nÄ• bhaya vinodÄ• ya, vessantarassa rÄ• jino.

Ä• rakkhaá¹ƒ te á¹-hapetvÄ• na,

Ä• gamiá¹ƒsu sakaá¹ƒpuraá¹ƒ ||

<431> á¹• 21 vessantaroca gacchanto, gandha mÄ• danapabbataá¹ƒ.

saputta \Be 182/ dÄ• rako patto.

vissamÄ« divasaá¹ƒ tahiá¹ƒ ||

<432> á¹• 21 tatottarÄ• hi mukhoso, gaccha vepulla pabbataá¹ƒ.

patvÄ• tappÄ• da maggena,

patto ketumatiá¹ƒ nadiá¹ƒ ||

<433> á¹• 21 tissÄ• tÄ«re nisÄ«ditvÄ• , maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒkhÄ• diya sundaraá¹ƒ.

dinnamekena luddhena,

nÅ«tvÄ• pitvÄ• ca vissamÄ« ||

<434> á¹• 21 soá¹‡á¹‡asÅ«ciá¹ƒ \Be 183/ luddhakassa, datvÄ• na so tatoparaá¹ƒ.

gacchanto dakkhinigrodhaá¹ƒ,

pabbatasikhare á¹-hitaá¹ƒ ||

<435> á¹• 21 tassamÅ«le nisÄ«ditvÄ• , thokaá¹ƒphalÄ• ni bhuÃ±jiya.

tatoparaá¹ƒ sa gacchanto,

patto nÄ• á¸·ikapabbataá¹ƒ ||

<436> á¹• 21 nÄ• á¸·ikaá¹ƒ pariharitvÄ• , gacchanto so mahÄ• saraá¹ƒ.

mucalindaá¹ƒ upÄ• gaÃ±chi,

nÄ• nÄ• kamala bhÅ«sitaá¹ƒ ||

<437> á¹• 21 tassa \Be 184/ pubbauttarena, khuddamaggena gacchatÄ• .

diá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ brahÄ• vanaá¹ƒ rammaá¹ƒ,

phala pupphÄ• na pÅ«ritaá¹ƒ ||

<438> á¹• 21 tamatikkamma gacchanto, anupubbena khatthiyo.

caturaá¹ƒsa pokkharaá¹‡iá¹ƒ,

sampatto, si mahodakaá¹ƒ ||

<439> á¹• 21 vessantaroca \Be 185/ maddÄ«ca,

jÄ• lÄ«kaá¹‡hÄ• jinÄ• cubho.

tattheva te vissamiá¹ƒsu,

aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±apiyaá¹ƒvadÄ• ||

<440> á¹• 21 Ä• vajjanto tadÄ• sakko, passittha devakuÃ±jaro.

himavantaá¹ƒ mahÄ• sattaá¹ƒ,

paviá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒbhayabheravaá¹ƒ ||

<441> á¹• 21 vissukammaá¹ƒ devaputtaá¹ƒ, pakkosÄ• piya so tato.

assamaá¹ƒ mÄ• panatthÄ• ya,

pesesi vaá¹…kapabbataá¹ƒ ||

<442> á¹• 21 vissukammopi \Be 186/ so sÄ«ghaá¹ƒ, otaritvÄ• devalokato.

vaá¹…kapabbata kucchimhi,

mÄ• pesi assame duve ||

<443> á¹• 21 duveca caá¹…kameratti-divÄ• á¹-hÄ• nÄ• nimÄ• payi.

paá¹-irÅ«pesu á¹-hÄ• nesu,

pupphite phalite dume ||

<444> á¹• 21 paá¹-iyÄ• diyitvÄ• samaá¹‡a-parikkhÄ• re asesato.

akkharÄ• nipi sokÄ• si,

evaá¹ƒassama bhittiyaá¹ƒ ||

<445> á¹• 21 pabbajjaá¹ƒ \Be 187/ icchamÄ• nÄ• ce, yote ime gaá¹‡hantuve.

pabbajitvÄ• na acchantu,

imamhiassame sukhaá¹ƒ ||

<446> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒlikhitvÄ• na sodevo, amanusseca bherave.

mige khage palÄ• petvÄ• ,

sakaá¹-hÄ• na gato ahu ||

<447> á¹• 21 so \Be 188/ ekapadikaá¹ƒ maggaá¹ƒ, disvÄ• vessantaro tato.

pabbajitÄ• na mÄ• vÄ• so,

ayaá¹ƒ hehÄ«ti cintiya ||

<448> á¹• 21 maddiá¹ƒ assama dvÄ• ramhi, á¹-hapetvÄ• puttakepica.

assamaá¹ƒ pavisitvÄ• na,

passittha akkharÄ• niso ||

<449> á¹• 21 idaá¹ƒsakkena dinnaá¹ƒti, utvÄ• so tuá¹-á¹-hamÄ• naso.

paá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• laá¹ƒ pavisittha,

ekako pabbajetave ||

<450> á¹• 21 tahiá¹ƒ \Be 189/ dhanuÃ±ca khaggaÃ±ca, apanetvÄ• sasÄ• á¹-ake.

omuÃ±citvÄ• na soratta-

vÄ• kacÄ«raá¹ƒ nivÄ• sayi ||

<451> á¹• 21 aá¹ƒse katvÄ• na ajinacammaÃ±ca sakkadattiyaá¹ƒ.

gaá¹‡hittha isivesaá¹ƒso,

bandhitvÄ• jaá¹-amaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ ||

<452> á¹• 21 daá¹‡á¸• amÄ• dÄ• ya \Be 190/ nikkhamma, paá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• lÄ• ya caá¹…kamaá¹ƒ.

Ä• ruyha uda, netvÄ• naá¹ƒ,

caá¹…kamÄ« aparÄ• paraá¹ƒ ||

<453> á¹• 21 tatoso puttadÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ, santikaá¹ƒ saá¹ƒvutindriyo.

Ä• gaÃ±chi saá¹-á¹-hi vassova,

thero oruyha caá¹…kamÄ• ||

<454> á¹• 21 maddÄ«disvÄ• mahÄ• sattaá¹ƒ, kalunaá¹ƒ paridevayi.

nipacca tassa pÄ• desu,

purÄ• á¹‡Ä• ni anutthunaá¹ƒ ||

<455> á¹• 21 tato \Be 191/ sÄ• bodhisattena, saddhiá¹ƒ pavisi assamaá¹ƒ.

gantvÄ• sakapaá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• laá¹ƒ,

isivesaggahÄ• ahu ||

<456> á¹• 21 pacchÄ• puttepi tÄ• pasa-kumÄ• rake kariá¹ƒsute.

vasiá¹ƒsu vaá¹…kakucchimhi,

cattÄ• ro khattiyÄ• janÄ• ||

<457> á¹• 21 athamaddÄ« varaá¹ƒyÄ• ci, mahÄ• sattaá¹ƒ mahÄ• isiá¹ƒ.

mÄ• tumhe devagaÃ±chittha,

phalÄ• phala gavesanaá¹ƒ ||

<458> á¹• 21 idhaputte \Be 192/ gahetvÄ• na, vaseyyÄ• tha yathÄ• sukhaá¹ƒ.

ahamevÄ• harissÄ• mi,

mÅ«lÄ• leca phalÄ• phale ||

<459> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒvaraá¹ƒ yÄ• citvÄ• na, araÃ±Ã±ato phalÄ• phalaá¹ƒ.

Ä• haritvÄ• na posesi,

jaá¹-inÄ«sÄ• tayojane ||

<460> á¹• 21 bodhisattopi \Be 193/ yÄ• citta, varaá¹ƒmaddiá¹ƒ sucÄ• riniá¹ƒ.

mÄ• gaccha Ä• kÄ• lebhadde,

paá¹-á¹-hÄ• yito mamantikaá¹ƒ ||

<461> á¹• 21 itthÄ«ca brahmacariya-malaá¹ƒnÄ• ma sumedhase.

brahmacÄ• riá¹ƒhi nÄ• senti,

tasmÄ• yÄ• cÄ• mi maá¹ƒvaraá¹ƒ ||

<462> á¹• 21 sampaá¹-icchittha sÄ• dhÅ«ti, sÄ• maddÄ« brahmacÄ• rinÄ«.

sakaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne te vasiá¹ƒsu,

bhÄ• ventÄ• piya bhÄ• vanaá¹ƒ ||

<464> á¹• 21 mettÄ• ya \Be 194/ Ä• nubhÄ• vena, mahesissa tiyojane.

aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ mettÄ• yiá¹ƒsu,

samantÄ• sabbapÄ• á¹‡ino ||

<464> á¹• 21 pÄ• tovuá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya maddÄ«pi, upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• piya pÄ• niyaá¹ƒ.

paribhojaniyaÃ±ceva,

mukhodakaÃ±ca Ä• hari ||

<465> á¹• 21 dantakaá¹-á¹-haÃ±ca \Be 195/ pÄ• dÄ• si, tato assamamaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ.

sammajitvÄ• na dveputte,

á¹-hapetvÄ• pitusantike ||

<466> á¹• 21 khaá¹‡ittiá¹ƒ pacchi mÄ• dÄ• ya, aá¹…kusaÃ±cÄ• pi gaá¹‡hiya.

vanamÅ«laphalatthÄ• ya,

pÄ• vekkhi ekikÄ• vanaá¹ƒ ||

<497> á¹• 21 sÄ• yanhasamaye pacchiá¹ƒ, mÅ«lÄ• lehi phalehica.

pÅ«rÄ• petvÄ• na sÄ• gaÃ±chi,

paá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• laá¹ƒ araÃ±Ã±ato ||

<468> á¹• 21 phalapacchiá¹ƒ \Be 196/ nikkhipetvÄ• , sayaá¹ƒ nhÄ• tvÄ• na puttake.

nhÄ• petvÄ• ca bhuÃ±jiá¹ƒsu,

modentÄ• caturojanÄ• ||

<469> á¹• 21 bhutvÄ• nallÄ• pa sallÄ• paá¹ƒ, katvÄ• na puttake duve.

maddÄ«Ä• dÄ• ya pÄ• vÄ«si,

sÄ• paá¹‡á¹‡asÄ• lamattano ||

<470> á¹• 21 evaá¹ƒvuttaniyÄ• mena,

cattÄ• rokhattiyÄ• janÄ• .

vaá¹…kapabbatakucchimhi,

sattamÄ• sevasiá¹ƒsute ||

<471> á¹• 21 tadÄ• kaliá¹…garaá¹-á¹-hamhi \Be 197/, gÄ• mamhidunniviá¹-á¹-hake.

brahmaá¹‡ojÅ«cakonÄ• ma,

bhikkhÄ• cÄ• ro alakkhiko ||

<472> á¹• 21 kahÄ• paá¹‡asataá¹ƒ laddhÄ• , bhikkhÄ• cÄ• renabrÄ• hmaá¹‡o.

ekabrÄ• hmaá¹‡akulamhi,

thapetvÄ• punasogato ||

<473> á¹• 21 anÄ• gantvÄ• cirÄ• yante, jÅ«cakamhigahÄ• paá¹‡aá¹ƒ, khÄ«á¹‡aá¹ƒ brÄ• hmaá¹‡agehamhi,

valaÃ±jetvÄ• asesato ||

<474> á¹• 21 codesigahÄ• paá¹‡aá¹ƒ so \Be 198/, pacchÄ• gantvÄ• najÅ«cako.

kahÄ• paá¹‡assakhÄ«á¹‡attÄ• ,

dÄ• tuá¹ƒ nÄ• sakkhibrÄ• hmaá¹‡o ||

<475> á¹• 21 dhÄ«tÄ• tassa brÄ• hmaá¹‡assa, nÄ• menÄ• mittatÄ• panÄ• .

yuvatÄ«rÅ«pavantÄ«ca,

jÅ«cakassaadaá¹ƒ sutaá¹ƒ ||

<476> á¹• 21 vasitthadunniviá¹-á¹-hamhi \Be 199/,

Ä• dÄ• yÄ• mittatÄ• panaá¹ƒ.

dahariá¹ƒjiá¹‡á¹‡akopÄ• po,

jÅ«cakoyÄ• cajÄ«vako ||

<477> á¹• 21 amittatÄ• panÄ• sammÄ• , garuá¹ƒkatvÄ• nabrÄ• hmaá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

paá¹-ijaggatiindaá¹ƒva,

sÅ«jÄ• uá¹-á¹-hÄ• nasÄ«linÄ« ||

<478> á¹• 21 yuvÄ• nobrÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä• aÃ±Ã±e, disvÄ• nÄ• mittatÄ• panaá¹ƒ.

jÄ• yÄ• vattenasampannaá¹ƒ,

sadÄ• reititajjare ||

<479> á¹• 21 ayaá¹ƒmahallakaá¹ƒsammÄ• \Be 200/, paá¹-ijaggatijÅ«cakaá¹ƒ.

kiá¹ƒ pamajjatha amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ,

yuvÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒtu vo sataá¹ƒ ||

<480> á¹• 21 paá¹-ijaggathanobÄ• lÄ• , passitvÄ• mittatÄ• panaá¹ƒ.

nocepaá¹-ijaggeyyÄ• tha,

daá¹‡á¸• essÄ• makharaá¹ƒbhusaá¹ƒ ||

<481> á¹• 21 tajjitÄ• \Be 201/ bhariyÄ• sabbÄ• , patÄ«hi bhayamÄ• nasÄ• .

sannisinnÄ• mantaliá¹ƒsu.

Ä• rabbhÄ• mittatÄ• panaá¹ƒ ||

<482> á¹• 21 palÄ• pessÄ• ma ayyÄ• yo, imamhÄ• dunni viá¹-á¹-hato.

evaá¹ƒsukhaá¹ƒ vihissÄ• ma,

jÅ«cakassa pajÄ• patiá¹ƒ ||

<483> á¹• 21 mantayitvÄ• natÄ• evaá¹ƒ,

nadiá¹ƒ udakahÄ• riyÄ• .

samÄ• gantÄ• ujjhÄ• yiá¹ƒsu,

titthe amittatÄ• panaá¹ƒ ||

<484> á¹• 21 amittÄ• nunatemÄ• tÄ• \Be 202/, amittonunatepitÄ• .

yesaá¹ƒjiá¹‡á¹‡assapÄ• daá¹ƒsu,

evaá¹ƒ dahariyaá¹ƒ satiá¹ƒ ||

<485> á¹• 21 ahitaá¹ƒvatateÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ«, mantayiá¹ƒsu rahogatÄ• .

yetaá¹ƒjiá¹‡á¹‡assa pÄ• daá¹ƒsu,

evaá¹ƒ dahariyaá¹ƒsatiá¹ƒ ||

<486> á¹• 21 amanÄ• pavÄ• saá¹ƒvasati \Be 203/,

jiá¹‡á¹‡enapatinÄ• saha.

yÄ• tvaá¹ƒvasasijiá¹‡á¹‡assa,

matantejÄ«vitÄ• varaá¹ƒ ||

<487> á¹• 21 nahinunatevindiá¹ƒsu, mÄ• tÄ• pitÄ• casobhaá¹‡e.

tuyhatthÄ• yajÅ«cakamhÄ• ,

patiá¹ƒaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒsuyobbanaá¹ƒ ||

<488> á¹• 21 duyiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒtenavamiyÄ• , akataá¹ƒaggihutakaá¹ƒ.

yetaá¹ƒjiá¹‡á¹‡assapÄ• daá¹ƒsu,

evaá¹ƒdahariyaá¹ƒsatiá¹ƒ ||

<489> á¹• 21 samaá¹‡e \Be 204/ brÄ• hmaá¹‡e suddhe, akkosi brÄ• hmacÄ• rine.

yenatenadaharÄ«tvaá¹ƒ,

maÃ±Ã±ejiá¹‡á¹‡enasaá¹…gamÄ« ||

<490> á¹• 21 nadukkhaá¹ƒahinÄ• daá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, nadukkhaá¹ƒsattiyÄ• hataá¹ƒ.

taÃ±cadukkhaÃ±catibbaÃ±ca,

yaá¹ƒpassejiá¹‡á¹‡akaá¹ƒpatiá¹ƒ ||

<491> á¹• 21 natthikhiá¹-á¹-Ä• natthirati \Be 205/,

jiá¹‡á¹‡enapatinÄ• saha.

natthiallÄ• pasallÄ• po,

jagghituá¹ƒvinasobhati ||

<492> á¹• 21 yadÄ• daharodaharÄ«,

mantayiá¹ƒsurahogatÄ• .

sabbasokÄ• vinassanti,

yekecihadayassitÄ• ||

<493> á¹• 21 daharÄ«tvaá¹ƒrÅ«pÄ• tÄ«, purisÄ• tvamabhipatthitÄ• .

gaccha Ã±Ä• tikule accha,

kiá¹ƒ jiá¹‡á¹‡o ramayissati ||

<494> á¹• 21 rodamÄ• nÄ• vaÄ• gaÃ±chi \Be 206/, sÄ• gharaá¹ƒparibhÄ• sitÄ• .

brÄ• hmaá¹‡Ä«hi hirÄ• yantÄ«,

ghaá¹-amÄ• dÄ• yasÄ«ghaso ||

<495> á¹• 21 rodantiá¹ƒ Ä• gataá¹ƒjÄ• yaá¹ƒ, disvÄ• kiá¹ƒ bhotirodiya.

Ä• gaccha sÄ«tipucchittha,

paccuggacchaá¹ƒ vajÅ«cako ||

<496> á¹• 21 natebrÄ• hmaá¹‡a \Be 207/ gacchÄ• mi,

nadiá¹ƒ udakahÄ• riyÄ• .

thiyomaá¹ƒparibhÄ• siá¹ƒsu,

tayÄ• jiá¹‡á¹‡enabrÄ• hmaá¹‡a ||

<497> á¹• 21 brÄ• hmaá¹‡yÄ• bhÄ• samÄ• nÄ• ya, kathaá¹ƒsutvÄ• nabrÄ• hmaá¹‡o.

tosentobhariyaá¹ƒruá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ,

jiá¹‡á¹‡osoetadabravÄ« ||

<498> á¹• 21 mÄ• metvaá¹ƒakarÄ• kammaá¹ƒ, mameudakamÄ• hari.

ahaá¹ƒudakamÄ• hissaá¹ƒ,

mÄ• bhotikupitÄ• ahu ||

<499> á¹• 21 nÄ• haá¹ƒtamhikulejÄ• tÄ• \Be 208/, yaá¹ƒtvaá¹ƒudakamÄ• hari.

evaá¹ƒbrÄ• hmaá¹‡ajÄ• nÄ• hi,

natevacchÄ• mihaá¹ƒghare ||

<500> á¹• 21 sacemedÄ• saá¹ƒdÄ• siá¹ƒ vÄ• , nÄ• nayissasibrÄ• hmaá¹‡a.

evaá¹ƒbrÄ• hmaá¹‡ajÄ• nÄ• hi,

natevacchÄ• masantike ||

<501> á¹• 21 natthime \Be 209/ sibbaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒvÄ• , dhanadhaÃ±Ã±aÃ±ca brahmaá¹‡i.

kutotaá¹ƒ dÄ• saá¹ƒdÄ• siá¹ƒ vÄ• ,

Ä• nayissÄ• mi bhotiyÄ• , ahaá¹ƒbhotiá¹ƒ upaá¹-á¹-hissaá¹ƒ,

mÄ• bhotiku pitÄ• ahu ||

<502> á¹• 21 ehite aha makkhissaá¹ƒ, yathÄ• mevacanaá¹ƒsutaá¹ƒ.

esavessantaro rÄ• jÄ• ,

vaá¹…kevasati pabbate ||

<503> á¹• 21 taá¹ƒtvaá¹ƒgantvÄ• na yÄ• cassu, dÄ• saá¹ƒdÄ• siÃ±ca brahmaá¹‡a.

sotedassati yÄ• cito,

dÄ• saá¹ƒdÄ• siÃ±ca khatthiyo ||

<504> á¹• 21 jiá¹‡á¹‡ohasmi \Be 210/ dubbalo, dÄ«ghocaddhÄ• su duggamo.

kathaá¹ƒgantuá¹ƒ sakkhissami,

upaá¹-hissÄ• mi taá¹ƒ ahaá¹ƒ ||

<505> á¹• 21 yathÄ• agantvÄ• saá¹…gÄ• maá¹ƒ, ayuddhova parÄ• jito,

evameva tuvaá¹ƒbrahme,

agantvÄ• va parÄ• jito ||

<506> á¹• 21 saceme \Be 211/ dÄ• saá¹ƒdÄ• siá¹ƒ vÄ• , nÄ• nayissasi brahmaá¹‡a.

evaá¹ƒ brahmaá¹‡a jÄ• nÄ• hi, natevacchÄ• mahaá¹ƒghare.

amanÄ• paá¹ƒ tekarissÄ• mi,

taá¹ƒtedukkhaá¹ƒ bhavissati ||

<507> á¹• 21 nakkhatte utupupphesu, yadÄ• maá¹ƒdakkhasi laá¹…kataá¹ƒ.

aÃ±Ã±ehi saddhiá¹ƒ ramamÄ• naá¹ƒ,

tantedukkhaá¹ƒ bhavissati ||

<508> á¹• 21 adassanena \Be 212/ mayhaá¹ƒte, jiá¹‡á¹‡assa paridevato.

bhiyyovaá¹…kÄ• palitÄ• ca,

bahÅ«hessanti brahmaá¹‡a ||

<509> á¹• 21 tato so brahmaá¹‡o bhÄ«to, brahmaá¹‡iyÄ• va sÄ• nugo.

aá¹-á¹-ito kÄ• marÄ• gena,

brahmaá¹‡iá¹ƒ etadabravÄ« ||

<510> á¹• 21 pÄ• theyyaá¹ƒmekarohitvaá¹ƒ \Be 213/, saá¹ƒkulyÄ• sakalÄ• nica.

madhupiá¹‡á¸• ikÄ• casukatÄ• yo,

satthu bhattaÃ±cabrahmaá¹‡i ||

<511> á¹• 21 Ä• nayissaá¹ƒ methunake, ubhodÄ• sakumÄ• rake.

tetaá¹ƒparicarissanti,

rattiá¹ƒdivamatanditÄ• ||

<512> á¹• 21 sÄ• khippaá¹ƒpaá¹-iyÄ• desi \Be 214/, pÄ• theyyaá¹ƒmittatÄ• panÄ• .

paá¹-iyÄ• ditanti Ä• cikkhi,

brahmaá¹‡assaalakkhino ||

<513> á¹• 21 gehedubbalaá¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒso, thiraá¹ƒkatvÄ• nabrahmaá¹‡o.

bhariyÄ• yagopanatthaá¹ƒ,

guttadvÄ• raÃ±casaá¹…khari ||

<514> á¹• 21 dÄ• rÅ«niÄ• haritvÄ• na, ghaá¹-epÅ«resivÄ• rinÄ• .

jÄ• yÄ• yasukhavÄ• satthaá¹ƒ,

anikkhantuá¹ƒcagehato ||

<515> á¹• 21 paccakkheyeva \Be 215/ jÄ• yÄ• ya, isivesaá¹ƒsamÄ• diya.

passitvÄ• bhariyaá¹ƒevaá¹ƒ,

ovadesisajÅ«cako ||

<516> á¹• 21 itopaá¹-hÄ• yatvaá¹ƒbhadde, vikÄ• lemÄ• ssunikkhami.

mamaÄ• gamanÄ• yÄ• va,

vasesiappamattakÄ• ||

<517> á¹• 21 idaá¹ƒvatvÄ• nalaggitvÄ• \Be 216/, sopÄ• theyyapasibbahaá¹ƒ.

upÄ• hanaÃ±caÄ• ruyha,

gaá¹‡hÄ«kattaradaá¹‡á¸• akaá¹ƒ ||

<518> á¹• 21 tatosoruá¹‡á¹‡amukhena, bhariyaá¹ƒkatvÄ• padakkhiá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

socamÄ• no vapakkÄ• mi,

dÄ• sake pariyesituá¹ƒ ||

|| namo tassa bhagavato arahato sammÄ• sambuddhassa ||

abhidhammapiá¹-ake

sammohavinodanÄ« nÄ• ma

vibhaá¹…ga-aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ•

1. khandhavibhaá¹…go

1. suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

catusaccadaso \Ee 1/ \Be 1/ \Ne 1/ nÄ• tho, catudhÄ• dhammasaá¹…gaá¹‡iá¹ƒ.

pakÄ• sayitvÄ• sambuddho, tasseva samanantaraá¹ƒ ||

upeto buddhadhammehi, aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasahi nÄ• yako.

aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasannaá¹ƒ khandhÄ• di-vibhaá¹…gÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena yaá¹ƒ ||

vibhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ \Ne 2/ desayÄ« satthÄ• , tassa saá¹ƒvaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• kkamo.

idÄ• ni yasmÄ• sampatto, tasmÄ• tassatthavaá¹‡á¹‡anaá¹ƒ || karissÄ• mi vigÄ• hetvÄ• , porÄ• á¹‡aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• nayaá¹ƒ.

saddhamme gÄ• ravaá¹ƒ katvÄ• , taá¹ƒ suá¹‡Ä• tha samÄ• hitÄ• ti ||

<1> __paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• --- rÅ«pakkhandho ... pe ... viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandho_ti idaá¹ƒ vi Ä• dibhÅ«te khandhavibhaá¹…ge suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tattha __paÃ±cÄ• _ti g tato heá¹-á¹-hÄ• na uddhanti dasseti. __khandhÄ• _ti paricchinnadhammanidassanaá¹ƒ. ta sambahulesu á¹-hÄ• nesu dissati --- rÄ• simhi, guá¹‡e, paá¹‡á¹‡attiyaá¹ƒ, ruá¸·hiyanti. ``sey bhikkhave, mahÄ• samudde na sukaraá¹ƒ udakassa pamÄ• á¹‡aá¹ƒ gahetuá¹ƒ --- ettakÄ• n ettakÄ• ni udakÄ• á¸·hakasatÄ• nÄ«ti vÄ• ettakÄ• ni udakÄ• á¸·hakasahassÄ• nÄ«ti vÄ• e udakÄ• á¸·hakasatasahassÄ• nÄ«ti vÄ• , atha kho asaá¹…khyeyyo appameyyo mahÄ• uda saá¹…khyaá¹ƒ \Ee 2/ gacchatÄ«â€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (AN a IV 51; b VI 37) hi rÄ• sito khand parittakaá¹ƒ udakaá¹ƒ udakakkhandhoti vuccati, bahukameva vuccati. tathÄ• na parittako ra appamattakÄ• gÄ• vo gavakkhandho, na appamattakaá¹ƒ balaá¹ƒ balakkhandho, na appar

puÃ±Ã±akkhandhoti vuccati. bahukameva hi rajo rajakkhandho, bahukÄ• va gavÄ• dayo ga puÃ±Ã±akkhandhoti vuccanti. ``sÄ«lakkhandho samÄ• dhikkhandhoâ€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (D khandho nÄ• ma. ``addasÄ• kho bhagavÄ• mahantaá¹ƒ dÄ• rukkhandhaá¹ƒ gaá¹…gÄ• ya nti (SN b IV 241). ettha paá¹‡á¹‡attito khandho nÄ• ma. ``yaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ mano mÄ• nasaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandhoâ€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (Dhs 63, 65) ruá¸·hito khan adhippeto. ayaÃ±hi khandhaá¹-á¹-ho nÄ• ma piá¹‡á¸• aá¹-á¹-ho pÅ«gaá¹-á¹-ho ghaá¹-aá¹-á¹ `rÄ• silakkhaá¹‡Ä• khandhÄ• â€™ ti veditabbÄ• . koá¹-á¹-hÄ• saá¹-á¹-hotipi vattuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á iá¹‡aá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• codiyamÄ• nÄ• `dvÄ«hi khandhehi dassÄ• ma, tÄ«hi khandhehi dassÄ• `koá¹-á¹-hÄ• salakkhaá¹‡Ä• khandhÄ• â€™ tipi vattuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ati. evamettha __rÅ«pakkh rÅ«pakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• so, __vedanÄ• kkhandho_ti vedanÄ• rÄ• si vedanÄ• koá¹-á¹-hÄ• soti imin saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ attho veditabbo.

ettÄ• vatÄ• \Ne 3/ sammÄ• sambuddho yvÄ• yaá¹ƒ ``cattÄ• ro ca mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• catunn upÄ• dÄ• yarÅ«paâ€™â€™ nti atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccuppannÄ• dÄ«su ekÄ• dasasu okÄ• s rÅ«pakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sÄ• â€™ ti ca `channavuti rÅ«pakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sÄ• â€™ ti ca evaá¹ƒpabhe paripiá¹‡á¸• etvÄ• rÅ«pakkhandho nÄ• mÄ• ti dassesi. yo panÄ• yaá¹ƒ ``sukhÄ• vedanÄ• adukkhamasukhÄ• vedanÄ• â€™â€™ ti tesuyeva ekÄ• dasasu okÄ• sesu vibhatto catubh sabbaá¹ƒ paripiá¹‡á¸• etvÄ• vedanÄ• kkhandho nÄ• mÄ• ti dassesi. yo panÄ• yaá¹ƒ ``cakk pe ... manosamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• â€™â€™ ti tesuyeva ekÄ• dasasu okÄ• sesu vibhatto 3/, taá¹ƒ sabbaá¹ƒ paripiá¹‡á¸• etvÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandho nÄ• mÄ• ti dassesi. yo panÄ• ya cetanÄ• ... pe ... manosamphassajÄ• cetanÄ• â€™â€™ ti tesuyeva ekÄ• dasasu okÄ• ses catubhÅ«mikacetanÄ• rÄ• si, taá¹ƒ sabbaá¹ƒ paripiá¹‡á¸• etvÄ• saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandho nÅ panÄ• yaá¹ƒ ``cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ, sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ, manc manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«â€™â€™ ti tesuyeva ekÄ• dasasu okÄ• sesu vibhatto catubh paripiá¹‡á¸• etvÄ• viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandho nÄ• mÄ• ti dassesi.

apicettha sabbampi catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ rÅ«pakkhandho, kÄ• mÄ• vacara ekÅ«nanavuticittehi sahajÄ• tÄ• vedanÄ• vedanÄ• kkhandho, saÃ±Ã±Ä• saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhan saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandho, ekÅ«nanavuti cittÄ• ni viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandhoti. evampi paÃ±cas veditabbo.

1. rÅ«pakkhandhaniddeso

<2> idÄ• ni te rÅ«pakkhandhÄ• dayo vibhajitvÄ• dassetuá¹ƒ __tattha katamo rÅ«pakkhand __tatthÄ• _ti tesu paÃ±casu khandhesu. __katamo_ti kathetukamyatÄ• pucchÄ• . __rÅ«pak pucchitadhammanidassanaá¹ƒ. idÄ• ni taá¹ƒ vibhajanto __yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci rÅ«pa_ntiÄ• dimÄ• k kiÃ±cÄ«_ti anavasesapariyÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ. __rÅ«pa_nti atippasaá¹…ganiyamanaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ anavasesapariggaho kato hoti.

tattha kenaá¹-á¹-hena rÅ«panti? ruppanaá¹-á¹-hena rÅ«paá¹ƒ. vuttaÃ±hetaá¹ƒ bhagavatÄ•

``kiÃ±ca \Ne 4/, bhikkhave, rÅ«paá¹ƒ vadetha? ruppatÄ«ti \Ee 4/ kho, bhikkhave, tasmÄ• rÅ ruppati? sÄ«tenapi ruppati, uá¹‡henapi ruppati, jighacchÄ• yapi ruppati, pipÄ• sÄ• yapi rupp á¸• aá¹ƒsamakasavÄ• tÄ• tapasarisapasamphassenapi ruppati. ruppatÄ«ti kho, bhikkhave, vuccatÄ«â€™â€™ ti (SN b III 79).

tattha __ki_nti kÄ• raá¹‡apucchÄ• ; kena kÄ• raá¹‡ena rÅ«paá¹ƒ vadetha, kena kÄ• raá¹‡e attho. ruppatÄ«ti ettha __itÄ«_ti kÄ• raá¹‡uddeso. yasmÄ• ruppati tasmÄ• rÅ«panti vuccat __ruppatÄ«_ti kuppati ghaá¹-á¹-Ä«yati pÄ«á¸·iyati bhijjatÄ«ti attho. evaá¹ƒ iminÄ• ettakena ruppanaá¹-á¹-hena rÅ«paá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ. ruppanalakkhaá¹‡ena rÅ«pantipi vattuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ati.
ruppanalakkhaá¹‡aÃ±hetaá¹ƒ.

__sÄ«tenapi_ \Be 4/ __ruppatÄ«_tiÄ• dÄ«su pana __sÄ«tena_ tÄ• va __ruppanaá¹ƒ lokant tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ tiá¹‡á¹‡aÃ±hi cakkavÄ• á¸·Ä• naá¹ƒ antare ekeko lokantarikanirayo nÄ• ma ho aá¹-á¹-hayojanasahassappamÄ• á¹‡o, yassa neva heá¹-á¹-hÄ• pathavÄ« atthi, na upari candimasÅ«riyadÄ«pamaá¹‡iÄ• loko, niccandhakÄ• ro. tattha nibbattasattÄ• naá¹ƒ tigÄ• vu vagguliyo viya pabbatapÄ• de dÄ«ghaputhulehi nakhehi laggitvÄ• avaá¹ƒsirÄ• olambanti.
aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±assa hatthapÄ• sagatÄ• honti atha `bhakkho no laddhoâ€™ ti maÃ±Ã±am viparivattitvÄ• lokasandhÄ• rake udake patanti, sÄ«tavÄ• te paharantepi pakkamadhukaph udake patanti. patitamattÄ• va accantakhÄ• rena sÄ«todakena chinnacammanhÄ• rumaá¹ƒ tattatele patitapiá¹-á¹-hapiá¹‡á¸• i viya paá¹-apaá¹-Ä• yamÄ• nÄ• vilÄ«yanti. evaá¹ƒ sÄ«ten lokantarikaniraye pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ. mahiá¹ƒsakaraá¹-á¹-hÄ• dÄ«supi himapÄ• tasÄ«talesu pa pÄ• kaá¹-ameva. tattha hi sattÄ• sÄ«tena bhinnacchinnasarÄ«rÄ• jÄ«vitakkhayampi pÄ• p __uá¹‡hena ruppanaá¹ƒ avÄ«cimahÄ• niraye_ pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ. tattha hi tattÄ• ya lohapatha paÃ±cavidhabandhanÄ• dikaraá¹‡akÄ• le sattÄ• mahÄ• dukkhaá¹ƒ anubhavanti.

__jighacchÄ• ya ruppanaá¹ƒ_ pettivisaye ceva dubbhikkhakÄ• le ca \Ee 5/ pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ. p dve tÄ«á¹‡i buddhantarÄ• ni kiÃ±cideva Ä• misaá¹ƒ hatthena gahetvÄ• mukhe pakkhipantÄ antoudaraá¹ƒ Ä• dittasusirarukkho viya hoti. dubbhikkhe kaÃ±jikamattampi alabhitvÄ• mara pamÄ• á¹‡aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma natthi.

__pipÄ• sÄ• ya ruppanaá¹ƒ kÄ• lakaÃ±jikÄ• _dÄ«su pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ. tattha hi sattÄ• dve tÄ hadayatemanamattaá¹ƒ vÄ• jivhÄ• temanamattaá¹ƒ vÄ• udakabinduá¹ƒ laddhuá¹ƒ na sakk pivissÄ• mÄ• â€™ ti nadiá¹ƒ gatÄ• nampi nadÄ« vÄ• likÄ• talaá¹ƒ sampajjati. mahÄ• samu mahÄ• samuddo piá¹-á¹-hipÄ• sÄ• á¹‡o hoti. te sussantÄ• balavadukkhapÄ«á¸·itÄ• vicara

eko \Be 5/ kira kÄ• lakaÃ±jikaasuro pipÄ• saá¹ƒ adhivÄ• setuá¹ƒ asakkonto yojanagambhÄ mahÄ• gaá¹…gaá¹ƒ otari. tassa gatagataá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne udakaá¹ƒ chijjati, dhÅ«mo uggacchat piá¹-á¹-hipÄ• sÄ• á¹‡e caá¹…kamanakÄ• lo viya hoti. tassa udakasaddaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• ito cito vibhÄ• yi. atha naá¹ƒ pÄ• tova bhikkhÄ• cÄ• raá¹ƒ gacchantÄ• tiá¹ƒsamattÄ• piá¹‡á¸• acÄ ``ko nÄ• ma tvaá¹ƒ, sappurisÄ• â€™â€™ ti pucchiá¹ƒsu. ``petohamasmi, bhanteâ€™â€™ t ti? ``pÄ• nÄ«yaá¹ƒ, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti. ``ayaá¹ƒ gaá¹…gÄ• paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• , kiá¹ƒ tvaá¹ƒ na upakappati, bhanteâ€™â€™ ti. ``tena hi gaá¹…gÄ• piá¹-á¹-he nipajja, mukhe te pÄ• nÄ«yaá
ti. so vÄ• likÄ• puá¸·ine uttÄ• no nipajji. bhikkhÅ« tiá¹ƒsamatte patte nÄ«haritvÄ• udakaá¹ƒ
Ä• haritvÄ• tassa mukhe Ä• siÃ±ciá¹ƒsu. tesaá¹ƒ tathÄ• karontÄ• naá¹ƒyeva velÄ• upaka ``bhikkhÄ• cÄ• rakÄ• lo amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ, sappurisa; kacci te assÄ• damattÄ• laddhÄ• â€™â€ bhante, tiá¹ƒsamattÄ• naá¹ƒ ayyÄ• naá¹ƒ tiá¹ƒsamattehi pattehi Ä• sittaudakato aá¸• á¸• ha paragalagataá¹ƒ, petattabhÄ• vato mokkho mÄ• hotÅ«â€™â€™ ti Ä• ha. evaá¹ƒ pipÄ• sÄ• pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ.

__á¸• aá¹ƒsÄ• dÄ«hi ruppanaá¹ƒ_ á¸• aá¹ƒsamakkhikÄ• disambabahulesu padesesu pÄ• k __á¸• aá¹ƒsÄ• _ti piá¹…galamakkhikÄ• , __makasÄ• _ti makasÄ• va __vÄ• tÄ• _ti kucchivÄ veditabbÄ• . sarÄ«rasmiÃ±hi \Ee 6/ vÄ• tarogo uppajjitvÄ• hatthapÄ• dapiá¹-á¹-hiÄ• dÄ«ni karoti, khujjaá¹ƒ karoti, pÄ«á¹-hasappiá¹ƒ karoti. __Ä• tapo_ti sÅ«riyÄ• tapo. tena ruppanaá __marukantÄ• rÄ• _dÄ«su pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ. ekÄ• kira itthÄ« marukantÄ• re rattiá¹ƒ satthato uggacchante vÄ• likÄ• ya tappamÄ• nÄ• ya pÄ• de á¹-hapetuá¹ƒ asakkontÄ« sÄ«sato pacc pacchiyÄ• uá¹‡hÄ• bhitattÄ• ya \Ne 6/ á¹-hÄ• tuá¹ƒ asakkontÄ« tassÄ• upari sÄ• á¹-akaá¹ tasmimpi santatte aá¹…kena gahitaá¹ƒ puttakaá¹ƒ adhomukhaá¹ƒ nipajjÄ• petvÄ• kandanta saddhiá¹ƒ tena tasmiá¹ƒyeva á¹-hÄ• ne uá¹‡hÄ• bhitattÄ• kÄ• lamakÄ• si.

__sarÄ«sapÄ• _ti ye keci dÄ«ghajÄ• tikÄ• sarantÄ• gacchanti. tesaá¹ƒ samphassena rup Ä• sÄ«visadaá¹-á¹-hÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ vasena veditabbaá¹ƒ.

idÄ• ni \Be 6/ `yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci rÅ«paâ€™ nti padena saá¹ƒgahitaá¹ƒ paÃ±cavÄ«satikoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sachannavutikoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sappabhedaá¹ƒ sabbampi rÅ«paá¹ƒ at pakkhipitvÄ• dassetuá¹ƒ __atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccuppanna_nti Ä• ha. tato paraá¹ƒ tadeva a dukesu pakkhipitvÄ• dassetuá¹ƒ __ajjhattaá¹ƒ vÄ• bahiddhÄ• vÄ• _tiÄ• di vuttaá¹ƒ. tato p ekÄ• dasasu padesesu pariyÄ• diyitvÄ• dassitaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ ekato piá¹‡á¸• aá¹ƒ katvÄ• d __tadekajjha_ntiÄ• di vuttaá¹ƒ.

tattha __tadekajjha_nti taá¹ƒ ekajjhaá¹ƒ; __abhisaÃ±Ã±Å«hitvÄ• _ti abhisaá¹ƒharitvÄ• ; __a saá¹…khepaá¹ƒ katvÄ• ; idaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ hoti --- sabbampetaá¹ƒ vuttappakÄ• raá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ ruppanalakkhaá¹‡asaá¹…khÄ• te ekavidhabhÄ• ve paÃ±Ã±Ä• ya rÄ• siá¹ƒ katvÄ• rÅ«pakk

etena sabbampi rÅ«paá¹ƒ ruppanalakkhaá¹‡e rÄ• sibhÄ• vÅ«pagamanena rÅ«pakkhandho rÅ«pato aÃ±Ã±o rÅ«pakkhandho nÄ• ma atthi. yathÄ• ca rÅ«paá¹ƒ, evaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• dayo rÄ• sibhÄ• vÅ«pagamanena. na hi vedanÄ• dÄ«hi aÃ±Ã±e vedanÄ• kkhandhÄ• dayo nÄ• n

<3> idÄ• ni ekekasmiá¹ƒ okÄ• se pakkhittaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ bhÄ• jetvÄ• dasse rÅ«paá¹ƒ atÄ«ta_ntiÄ• dimÄ• ha. tattha __tatthÄ• _ti ekÄ• dasasu okÄ• sesu pakkhipitvÄ• bhummaá¹ƒ. idaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ hoti --- atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccuppannantiÄ• dinÄ• \Ee 7/ nayen yaá¹ƒ atÄ«taá¹ƒ rÅ«panti vuttaá¹ƒ, taá¹ƒ katamanti? iminÄ• upÄ• yena sabbapucchÄ• su a __atÄ«taá¹ƒ niruddha_ntiÄ• dÄ«ni padÄ• ni nikkhepakaá¹‡á¸• assa atÄ«tattikabhÄ• janÄ«y 1044) vuttÄ• neva. __cattÄ• ro ca mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• _ti idaá¹ƒ atÄ«tanti vuttarÅ«passa sabhÄ cettha evaá¹ƒ sabbattha attho veditabbo. iminÄ• idaá¹ƒ dasseti --- atÄ«tarÅ«pampi bhÅ«tÄ upÄ• dÄ• ya nibbattarÅ«paÃ±ca, anÄ• gatampi ... pe ... dÅ«rasantikampi \Ne 7/. na hi bhÅ« upÄ• dÄ• ya pavattarÅ«pato ca aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ nÄ• ma atthÄ«ti.

aparo nayo --- __atÄ«taá¹ƒsena saá¹…gahita_nti atÄ«takoá¹-á¹-hÄ• seneva saá¹…gahitaá gataá¹ƒ. kinti? cattÄ• ro ca mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• catunnaÃ±ca mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 7/ upÄ sabbattha attho veditabbo. anÄ• gatapaccuppannaniddesapadÄ• nipi heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttatthÄ

idaá¹ƒ pana atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma suttantapariyÄ• yato abhidhamman suttantapariyÄ• ye bhavena paricchinnaá¹ƒ. paá¹-isandhito hi paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya atÄ«tabhavesu anantarabhave vÄ• nibbattaá¹ƒ hotu kappakoá¹-isatasahassamatthake vÄ• , sabbaá¹ƒ atÄ« paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya anÄ• gatabhavesu nibbattanakarÅ«paá¹ƒ, anantarabhave vÄ• nibbattaá¹ƒ h kappakoá¹-isatasahassamatthake vÄ• , sabbaá¹ƒ anÄ• gatameva nÄ• ma. cutipaá¹-isandhia paccuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. abhidhammaniddese pana khaá¹‡ena paricchinnaá¹ƒ. tayo hi rÅ« á¹-hiti, bhaá¹…goti. ime tayo khaá¹‡e patvÄ• niruddhaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ, samanantaraniruddhaa kappakoá¹-isatasahassamatthake vÄ• , sabbaá¹ƒ atÄ«tameva nÄ• ma. tayo khaá¹‡e asamp ekacittakkhaá¹‡amattena vÄ• asampattaá¹ƒ hotu anÄ• gate kappakoá¹-isatasahassamattha anÄ• gatameva nÄ• ma. ime tayo khaá¹‡e sampattaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ pana paccuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ, evaá¹ƒ santepi abhidhammaniddeseneva atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccu niddiá¹-á¹-hanti \Ee 8/ veditabbaá¹ƒ.

aparo nayo --- idaÃ±hi rÅ«paá¹ƒ addhÄ• santatisamayakhaá¹‡avasena catudhÄ• atÄ«taá¹
anÄ• gatapaccuppannaá¹ƒ. addhÄ• vasena tÄ• va ekassa ekasmiá¹ƒ bhave paá¹-isandhito uddhaá¹ƒ anÄ• gataá¹ƒ, ubhinnamantare paccuppannaá¹ƒ. santativasena sabhÄ• gaekautu ekÄ• hÄ• rasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naÃ±ca pubbÄ• pariyavasena pavattamÄ• nampi paccuppannaá visabhÄ• gautuÄ• hÄ• rasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ atÄ«taá¹ƒ, pacchÄ• anÄ• gataá¹ƒ. cittajaá¹ƒ ekavÄ«thiekajavanaekasamÄ• pattisamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ paccuppannaá¹ƒ. tato pubbe atÄ« kammasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nassa pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ƒ santativasena atÄ«tÄ• dibhedo natthi. tesaÃ± utuÄ• hÄ• racittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ upatthambhakavasena tassa atÄ«tÄ• dibhedo ve ekamuhuttapubbaá¹‡hasÄ• yanharattidivÄ• dÄ«su samayesu santÄ• navasena \Ne 8/ pava samayaá¹ƒ paccuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tato pubbe atÄ«taá¹ƒ, pacchÄ• anÄ• gataá¹ƒ. khaá¹‡ uppÄ• dÄ• dikkhaá¹‡attayapariyÄ• pannaá¹ƒ \Be 8/ paccuppannaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tato pubbe at apica atikkahetupaccayakiccaá¹ƒ atÄ«taá¹ƒ. niá¹-á¹-hitahetukiccaá¹ƒ aniá¹-á¹-hitapaccayak paccuppannaá¹ƒ. ubhayakiccamasampattaá¹ƒ anÄ• gataá¹ƒ. sakiccakkhaá¹‡e vÄ• paccup atÄ«taá¹ƒ, pacchÄ• anÄ• gataá¹ƒ. ettha ca khaá¹‡Ä• dikathÄ• va nippariyÄ• yÄ• , sesÄ• s nippariyÄ• yakathÄ• idha adhippetÄ• . ajjhattadukassÄ• pi niddesapadÄ• ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ• aj 1050) vuttatthÄ• neva. oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• dÄ«ni rÅ«pakaá¹‡á¸• avaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• yaá¹ƒ (Dhs-a 674)

<6> hÄ«nadukaniddese __tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ sattÄ• na_nti bahÅ«su sattesu sÄ• mivacanaá¹ƒ aparassÄ• pÄ«ti hi vuccamÄ• ne divasampi kappasatasahassampi vadanto ettakameva vad padehi anavasese satte pariyÄ• diyanto `tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ sattÄ• naâ€™ nti Ä• ha. ettakena aparadÄ«panaá¹ƒ \Ee 9/ siddhaá¹ƒ hoti. __uÃ±Ã±Ä• ta_nti avamataá¹ƒ. __avaÃ±Ã±Ä• ta_n rÅ«pantipi na viditaá¹ƒ. __hÄ«á¸·ita_nti agahetabbaá¹-á¹-hena khittaá¹ƒ chaá¸• á¸• itaá¹ƒ, jig vadanti. __paribhÅ«ta_nti kimetenÄ• ti vÄ• cÄ• ya paribhavitaá¹ƒ. __acittÄ«kata_nti na garu lÄ• makaá¹ƒ. __hÄ«namata_nti hÄ«nanti mataá¹ƒ, lÄ• makaá¹ƒ katvÄ• Ã±Ä• taá¹ƒ. __hÄ«n sammataá¹ƒ, hÄ«nehi vÄ• sammataá¹ƒ, gÅ«thabhakkhehi gÅ«tho viya. __aniá¹-á¹-ha_nti a paá¹-ilÄ• bhatthÄ• ya vÄ• apariyesitaá¹ƒ. sacepi naá¹ƒ koci pariyeseyya, pariyesatu. etassa etadeva nÄ• maá¹ƒ. __akanta_nti akÄ• mitaá¹ƒ, nissirikaá¹ƒ vÄ• . __amanÄ• pa_nti manasi tÄ• disaÃ±hi Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ manasmiá¹ƒ na appÄ«yati. atha vÄ• manaá¹ƒ appÄ• yati va manÄ• paá¹ƒ amanÄ• paá¹ƒ.

aparo nayo --- __aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ_ sampattivirahato. taá¹ƒ ekantena kammasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• n akusalakammasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ. __akantaá¹ƒ_ sukhassa ahetubhÄ• vato. __amanÄ• p __rÅ«pÄ• saddÄ• _ti idamassa sabhÄ• vadÄ«panaá¹ƒ. imasmiÃ±hi pade akusalakammaja kÄ• maguá¹‡Ä• vibhattÄ• . kusalakammajaá¹ƒ pana aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nÄ• ma natthi, sabbaá¹

paá¹‡Ä«tapadaniddeso \Ne 9/ vuttapaá¹-ipakkhanayena veditabbo. imasmiá¹ƒ pana pade k iá¹-á¹-hÄ• paÃ±ca kÄ• maguá¹‡Ä• vibhattÄ• . kusalakammajaÃ±hi aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nÄ• ma iá¹-á¹-hameva. yathÄ• ca kammajesu evaá¹ƒ utusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• dÄ«supi iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá imasmiá¹ƒ duke iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-hÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ paá¹-ivibhattanti veditabbaá¹ƒ. ayaá¹ƒ samÄ• natthakathÄ• . vitaá¹‡á¸• avÄ• dÄ« panÄ• ha --- __iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ_ nÄ• ma paá¹-ivibhattaá¹ƒ natthi, tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ rucivasena kathitaá¹ƒ.

yathÄ• ha ---

``manÄ• papariyantaá¹ƒ khvÄ• haá¹ƒ, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, paÃ±casu kÄ• maguá¹‡esu agganti va ekaccassa manÄ• pÄ• honti, ekaccassa amanÄ• pÄ• honti. teva, mahÄ• rÄ• ja, saddÄ• , g ekaccassa manÄ• pÄ• honti, ekaccassa amanÄ• pÄ• hontÄ«â€™â€™ ti \Ee 10/ (SN a I 12

evaá¹ƒ yasmÄ• teyeva rÅ«pÄ• dayo eko assÄ• deti abhinandati, tattha lobhaá¹ƒ uppÄ• de paá¹-ihaÃ±Ã±ati, tattha dosaá¹ƒ uppÄ• deti. ekassa iá¹-á¹-hÄ• honti kantÄ• manÄ• pÄ• , e akantÄ• amanÄ• pÄ• . eko cete `iá¹-á¹-hÄ• kantÄ• manÄ• pÄ• â€™ ti dakkhiá¹‡ato gaá¹‡ akantÄ• amanÄ• pÄ• â€™ ti vÄ• mato. tasmÄ• iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nÄ• ma pÄ• á¹-iye natthi. paccantavÄ• sÄ«naÃ±hi gaá¹‡á¸• uppÄ• dÄ• pi iá¹-á¹-hÄ• honti kantÄ• manÄ• pÄ• atijegucchÄ• . tesaÃ±ca moramaá¹ƒsÄ• dÄ«ni iá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni honti, itaresaá¹ƒ tÄ• ni atijeguc

so vattabbo --- ``kiá¹ƒ pana tvaá¹ƒ iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-hÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ƒ p natthÄ«ti vadesÄ«â€™â€™ ti? ``Ä• ma natthÄ«â€™â€™ ti vadÄ• mi. puna tatheva yÄ• vat paÃ±ho pucchitabbo --- ``nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• ma iá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ udÄ• hu aniá¹-á¹-haâ€™â€™ n ``iá¹-á¹-haâ€™â€™ nti vakkhati. sacepi na vadeyya, mÄ• vadatu. nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ pana ekant eko nibbÄ• nassa vaá¹‡á¹‡e kathiyamÄ• ne kujjhitvÄ• --- `tvaá¹ƒ nibbÄ• nassa vaá¹‡á¹‡aá annapÄ• namÄ• lÄ• gandhavilepanasayanacchÄ• danasamiddhÄ• paÃ±ca kÄ• maguá¹‡Ä• vutte `alaá¹ƒ tava nibbÄ• nenÄ• â€™ ti nibbÄ• nassa vaá¹‡á¹‡e kathiyamÄ• ne kujjhitvÄ• u iá¹-á¹-hetaá¹ƒ. etassa pana \Ne 10/ vasena tava vÄ• de nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nÄ• ma panetaá¹ƒ evaá¹ƒ gahetabbaá¹ƒ. eso hi viparÄ«tasaÃ±Ã±Ä• ya katheti. saÃ±Ã±Ä• vipallÄ• s Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ ekassa iá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ hoti, ekassa aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒâ€™â€™.

iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-hÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ pana pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ƒ vibhattaá¹ƒ atthÄ«ti. kassa vas majjhimakasattassa. idaÃ±hi na atiissarÄ• naá¹ƒ mahÄ• sammatamahÄ• sudassanadhamm vibhattaá¹ƒ. tesaÃ±hi dibbakappampi Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ amanÄ• paá¹ƒ upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti. na a dullabhannapÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena vibhattaá¹ƒ. tesaÃ±hi kaá¹‡Ä• jakabhattasitthÄ• nipi pÅ« amatasadiso ca hoti. majjhimakÄ• naá¹ƒ pana \Ee 11/ gaá¹‡akamahÄ• mattaseá¹-á¹-hikuá¹ kÄ• lena iá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• lena aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ labhamÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena vibhattaá¹ƒ. eva iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ paricchindituá¹ƒ sakkontÄ«ti.

tipiá¹-akacÅ«á¸·anÄ• gatthero panÄ• ha --- ``iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nÄ• ma vipÄ• kavase javanavasena. javanaá¹ƒ pana saÃ±Ã±Ä• vipallÄ• savasena iá¹-á¹-hasmiá¹ƒyeva rajjati, iá¹-dussati; aniá¹-á¹-hasmiá¹ƒyeva rajjati, aniá¹-á¹-hasmiá¹ƒyeva dussatÄ«â€™â€™ ti. vipÄ• ka ekantato paricchijjati. na hi sakkÄ• vipÄ• kacittaá¹ƒ vaÃ±cetuá¹ƒ. sace Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ iá kusalavipÄ• kaá¹ƒ uppajjati. sace aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, akusalavipÄ• kaá¹ƒ uppajjati. kiÃ±cÄ• pi h micchÄ• diá¹-á¹-hikÄ• buddhaá¹ƒ vÄ• saá¹…ghaá¹ƒ vÄ• mahÄ• cetiyÄ• dÄ«ni vÄ• uá¸·Ä• akkhÄ«ni pidahanti, domanassaá¹ƒ Ä• pajjanti, dhammasaddaá¹ƒ sutvÄ• kaá¹‡á¹‡e thaken cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡asotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• ni pana nesaá¹ƒ kusalavipÄ• kÄ• neva honti.

kiÃ±cÄ• pi gÅ«thasÅ«karÄ• dayo gÅ«thagandhaá¹ƒ ghÄ• yitvÄ• `khÄ• dituá¹ƒ labhissÄ• m honti, gÅ«thadassane pana tesaá¹ƒ cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ, tassa gandhaghÄ• yane ghÄ rasasÄ• yane jivhÄ• viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±ca akusalavipÄ• kameva hoti. bandhitvÄ• varasayan kiÃ±cÄ• pi viravati, saÃ±Ã±Ä• vipallÄ• sena panassa javanasmiá¹ƒyeva domanassaá¹ƒ upp kusalavipÄ• kameva. kasmÄ• ? Ä• rammaá¹‡assa iá¹-á¹-hatÄ• ya.

apica dvÄ• ravasenÄ• pi iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-hatÄ• veditabbÄ• . sukhasamphassaÃ±hi gÅ«th
cakkhudvÄ• raghÄ• nadvÄ• resu \Ne 11/ aniá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ, kÄ• yadvÄ• re iá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ hoti. ca \Be 11/ pothiyamÄ• nassa, suvaá¹‡á¹‡asÅ«le uttÄ• sitassa ca maá¹‡iratanasuvaá¹‡á¹‡asÅ« iá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni honti, kÄ• yadvÄ• re aniá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni. kasmÄ• ? mahÄ• dukkhassa uppÄ• dana iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ ekantato vipÄ• keneva paricchijjatÄ«ti veditabbaá¹ƒ.

__taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti ettha na heá¹-á¹-himanayo oloketabbo. na hi bhagavÄ• samm puggalamanÄ• paá¹ƒ pana bhindati. tasmÄ• taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒvÄ• panavaseneva upÄ• dÄ• yupÄ• veditabbÄ• . nerayikÄ• naÃ±hi rÅ«paá¹ƒ \Ee 12/ koá¹-ippattaá¹ƒ __hÄ«naá¹ƒ_ nÄ• ma; taá¹ nÄ• gasupaá¹‡á¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ __paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ_ nÄ• ma. tesaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ hÄ«naá¹ rÅ«paá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tesampi hÄ«naá¹ƒ; taá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya jÄ• napadÄ• naá¹ƒ tesampi hÄ«naá¹ƒ; taá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya gÄ• mabhojakÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• m upÄ• dÄ• ya janapadasÄ• mikÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tesampi hÄ«naá¹ƒ padesarÄ• jÅ«naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tesampi hÄ«naá¹ƒ; taá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. tassÄ• pi hÄ«naá¹ƒ; taá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya bhummadevÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá hÄ«naá¹ƒ; taá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya cÄ• tumahÄ• rÄ• jikÄ• naá¹ƒ devÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«t taá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya tÄ• vatiá¹ƒsÄ• naá¹ƒ devÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• ma ... pe pana rÅ«paá¹ƒ matthakappattaá¹ƒ paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ nÄ• ma.

<7> dÅ«radukaniddese __itthindriyÄ• _dÄ«ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vibhattÄ• neva. imasmiá¹ƒ pana duppariggahaá¹-á¹-hena lakkhaá¹‡aduppaá¹-ivijjhatÄ• ya sukhumarÅ«paá¹ƒ __dÅ«re_ti kath sukhapariggahaá¹-á¹-hena lakkhaá¹‡asuppaá¹-ivijjhatÄ• ya oá¸·Ä• rikarÅ«paá¹ƒ __santike_ kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• rapariyosÄ• ne ca niyyÄ• tanaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nepi `idaá¹ƒ vuccati rÅ«paá¹ nÄ«yyÄ• titaá¹ƒ. kasmÄ• ? duvidhaÃ±hi dÅ«re nÄ• ma --- lakkhaá¹‡ato ca okÄ• sato cÄ• ti.
dÅ«reti na kathitaá¹ƒ, taá¹ƒ okÄ• sato kathetabbaá¹ƒ. tasmÄ• dÅ«reti akathitaá¹ƒ. oá¸·Ä• ri dÅ«reti dassetuá¹ƒ aniyyÄ• tetvÄ• va __yaá¹ƒ vÄ• panaÃ±Ã±ampÄ«_tiÄ• dimÄ• ha. santik tattha __anÄ• sanne_ti na Ä• sanne, __anupakaá¹-á¹-he_ti nissaá¹-e, __dÅ«re_ti dÅ«ramhi santike. __idaá¹ƒ vuccati rÅ«paá¹ƒ dÅ«re_ti idaá¹ƒ paá¹‡á¹‡arasavidhaá¹ƒ sukhumarÅ«paá dasavidhaá¹ƒ pana oá¸·Ä• rikarÅ«paá¹ƒ yevÄ• panakavasena okÄ• sato dÅ«reti vuccati. sa uttÄ• natthoyeva.

__idaá¹ƒ_ \Be 12/ \Ne 12/ __vuccati rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike_ti idaá¹ƒ dasavidhaá¹ƒ oá¸·Ä• rikarÅ
santike, paÃ±cadasavidhaá¹ƒ pana sukhumarÅ«paá¹ƒ yevÄ• panakavasena okÄ• sato sant 13/ paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya pana rÅ«paá¹ƒ okÄ• savasena santike nÄ• ma? kittakato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya pakatikathÄ• ya kathentÄ• naá¹ƒ dvÄ• dasahattho savanÅ«pacÄ• ro nÄ• ma hoti. tassa ora dÅ«re. tattha sukhumarÅ«paá¹ƒ dÅ«re hontaá¹ƒ lakkhaá¹‡atopi okÄ• satopi dÅ«re hoti; san okÄ• satova santike hoti, na lakkhaá¹‡ato. oá¸·Ä• rikarÅ«paá¹ƒ santike hontaá¹ƒ lakkhaá¹‡a santike hoti; dÅ«re hontaá¹ƒ okÄ• satova dÅ«re hoti, na lakkhaá¹‡ato.

__taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti ettha na heá¹-á¹-himanayo oloketabbo. heá¹-á¹-hÄ• hi bhinda na lakkhaá¹‡ato dÅ«raá¹ƒ bhindati, okÄ• sato dÅ«rameva bhindati. upÄ• dÄ• yupÄ• dÄ• ya dassitaá¹ƒ. attano hi rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike nÄ• ma; antokucchigatassÄ• pi parassa dÅ«re. antok bahiá¹-hitassa dÅ«re. ekamaÃ±ce sayitassa santike; bahipamukhe á¹-hitassa dÅ«re. antopa santike; bahipariveá¹‡e dÅ«re. antosaá¹…ghÄ• rÄ• me rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahisaá¹…ghÄ• r rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahisÄ«mÄ• ya dÅ«re. antogÄ• makhette rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahigÄ• mak rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahijanapade dÅ«re. antorajjasÄ«mÄ• ya rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahirajjasÄ« rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahisamudderÅ«paá¹ƒ dÅ«re. antocakkavÄ• á¸·e rÅ«paá¹ƒ santike; bahi ayaá¹ƒ rÅ«pakkhandhaniddeso.

2. vedanÄ• kkhandhaniddeso

<8> vedanÄ• kkhandhaniddesÄ• dÄ«su heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttasadisaá¹ƒ pahÄ• ya apubbamev vedanÄ• _ti catubhÅ«mikavedanaá¹ƒ pariyÄ• diyati. __sukhÄ• vedanÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni atÄ«tÄ niddiá¹-á¹-havedanaá¹ƒ sabhÄ• vato dassetuá¹ƒ \Be 13/ vuttÄ• ni. tattha sukhÄ• vedanÄ• cetasikÄ• \Ne 13/. tathÄ• dukkhÄ• vedanÄ• . adukkhamasukhÄ• pana cakkhÄ• dayo pas `atthi kÄ• yikÄ• , atthi cetasikÄ• â€™. tattha sabbÄ• pi kÄ• yikÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• . tathÄ• \Ee 14/. cetasikÄ• sukhÄ• pana tebhÅ«mikÄ• . adukkhamasukhÄ• catubhÅ«mikÄ• . tassÄ santativasena, khaá¹‡Ä• divasena ca atÄ«tÄ• dibhÄ• vo veditabbo.

tattha santativasena ekavÄ«thiekajavanaekasamÄ• pattipariyÄ• pannÄ• , ekavidhavisayasa paccuppannÄ• . tato pubbe atÄ«tÄ• , pacchÄ• anÄ• gatÄ• . khaá¹‡Ä• divasena khaá¹‡atta pubbantÄ• parantamajjhagatÄ• sakiccaÃ±ca kurumÄ• nÄ• vedanÄ• paccuppannÄ• . tato anÄ• gatÄ• . tattha khaá¹‡Ä• divasena atÄ«tÄ• dibhÄ• vaá¹ƒ sandhÄ• ya ayaá¹ƒ niddeso ka

<11> oá¸·Ä• rikasukhumaniddese __akusalÄ• vedanÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni jÄ• tito oá¸·Ä• rikasukh vuttÄ• ni. __dukkhÄ• vedanÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni sabhÄ• vato. __asamÄ• pannassa __sÄ• savÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni lokiyalokuttarato oá¸·Ä• rikasukhumabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ vuttÄ sadarathaá¹-á¹-hena dukkhavipÄ• kaá¹-á¹-hena ca oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• . kusalÄ• niddarathaá¹-á¹-h sukhavipÄ• kaá¹-á¹-hena ca sukhumÄ• . abyÄ• katÄ• nirussÄ• haá¹-á¹-hena avipÄ• kaá¹-á kusalÄ• kusalÄ• saussÄ• haá¹-á¹-hena savipÄ• kaá¹-á¹-hena ca oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• . abyÄ• katÄ•

dukkhÄ• asÄ• taá¹-á¹-hena dukkhaá¹-á¹-hena ca oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• . sukhÄ• sÄ• taá¹-á¹-hena s adukkhamasukhÄ• santaá¹-á¹-hena paá¹‡Ä«taá¹-á¹-hena ca sukhumÄ• . sukhadukkhÄ• kh pharaá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hena ca oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• . sukhavedanÄ• pi hi khobheti pharati. tathÄ• dukkhav uppajjamÄ• naá¹ƒ sakalasarÄ«raá¹ƒ khobhentaá¹ƒ Ä• luá¸·entaá¹ƒ abhisandayamÄ• naá¹ƒ chÄ• dayamÄ• naá¹ƒ sÄ«todakaghaá¹-ena Ä• siÃ±cayamÄ• naá¹ƒ viya uppajjati. dukkhaá¹ƒ tattaphÄ• laá¹ƒ anto pavesantaá¹ƒ viya tiá¹‡ukkÄ• ya bahi jhÄ• payamÄ• naá¹ƒ viya uppajja vuttanayeneva sukhumÄ• . asamÄ• pannassa vedanÄ• nÄ• nÄ• rammaá¹‡e vikkhittabhÄ• samÄ• pannassa vedanÄ• ekattanimitteyeva caratÄ«ti sukhumÄ• . sÄ• savÄ• Ä• savuppa Ä• savacÄ• ro \Ee 15/ nÄ• ma ekantaoá¸·Ä• riko. anÄ• savÄ• vuttavipariyÄ• yena sukhumÄ tattha \Ne 14/ eko neva kusalattike kovido hoti, na vedanÄ• ttike. so `kusalattikaá¹ƒ rakkhÄ• vedanÄ• ttikaá¹ƒ bhindati; `vedanÄ• ttikaá¹ƒ rakkhÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti kusalattikaá¹ƒ bhindati. ek rakkhÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti bhÅ«mantaraá¹ƒ bhindati. eko na bhindati. kathaá¹ƒ? ``sukhadukkhÄ• adukkhamasukhÄ• vedanÄ• sukhumÄ• â€™â€™ ti hi vedanÄ• ttike vuttaá¹ƒ. taá¹ƒ eko pa adukkhamasukhÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• hi kusalÄ• pi atthi akusalÄ• pi abyÄ• katÄ• pi. tattha k abyÄ• katÄ• sukhumÄ• . kasmÄ• ? kusalattike pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ Ä• gatattÄ• ti. evaá¹ƒ kusalatt vedanÄ• ttiko pana bhinno.

kusalÄ• kusalÄ• vedanÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , abyÄ• katÄ• vedanÄ• sukhumÄ• â€™â€™ ti ya taá¹ƒ eko paá¹-ikkhipati --- na sabbÄ• abyÄ• katÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• hi sukhÄ• pi atthi dukk tattha sukhadukkhÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , adukkhamasukhÄ• sukhumÄ• . kasmÄ• ? vedanÄ• ttik evaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• ttiko rakkhito hoti, kusalattiko pana bhinno. kusalattikassa pana Ä• gataá¹-á vedanÄ• ttikaá¹ƒ anoloketvÄ• vedanÄ• ttikassa Ä• gataá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne kusalattikaá¹ƒ anoloke kusalattikalakkhaá¹‡ena, sukhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ vedanÄ• ttikalakkhaá¹‡ena oá¸·Ä• rikasukhuma nÄ• ma.

yampi ``kusalÄ• kusalÄ• vedanÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , abyÄ• katÄ• vedanÄ• sukhumÄ• â€™â€ tattheko `kusalÄ• lokuttaravedanÄ• pi samÄ• nÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• nÄ• ma, vipÄ• kÄ• antama dvipaÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡asahajÄ• tÄ• pi samÄ• nÄ• sukhumÄ• nÄ• ma hotÄ«â€™ ti vadati paá¹‡Ä«taá¹ƒ lokuttaravedanaá¹ƒ oá¸·Ä• rikaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma karonto, dvipaÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a hÄ«naá¹ƒ jaá¸·aá¹ƒ vedanaá¹ƒ sukhumaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma karonto `tikaá¹ƒ rakkhissÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti nÄ• ma. tattha tattha bhÅ«miyaá¹ƒ kusalaá¹ƒ pana taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ bhÅ«mivipÄ• keneva saddhiá¹ bhindati nÄ• ma. tatrÄ• yaá¹ƒ nayo --- kÄ• mÄ• vacarakusalÄ• hi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• ; kÄ• mÄ• va 16/. rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacaralokuttarakusalÄ• \Be 15/ oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• ; rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• sukhumÄ• ti. iminÄ• nÄ«hÄ• rena kathento na bhindati nÄ• ma.

__tipiá¹-akacÅ«á¸·anÄ• gatthero_ panÄ• ha --- ``akusale oá¸·Ä• rikasukhumatÄ• nÄ• ma n ekantaoá¸·Ä• rikameva. lokuttarepi oá¸·Ä• rikasukhumatÄ• na uddharitabbÄ• . taÃ±hi ekant 15/. imaá¹ƒ kathaá¹ƒ Ä• haritvÄ• tipiá¹-akacÅ«á¸·Ä• bhayattherassa kathayiá¹ƒsu --- evaá¹ƒ tipiá¹-akacÅ«á¸·Ä• bhayatthero Ä• ha --- ``sammÄ• sambuddhena abhidhammaá¹ƒ patvÄ• padÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• gataá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne nayaá¹ƒ dÄ• tuá¹ƒ yuttaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne nayo adinno nÄ• ma yuttaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne nayo akato nÄ• ma natthi. idha panekacco `Ä• cariyo asmÄ«â€™ ti vicara oá¸·Ä• rikasukhumataá¹ƒ uddharamÄ• no kukkuccÄ• yati. sammÄ• sambuddhena pana loku uddharitÄ• â€™â€™ ti. evaÃ±ca pana vatvÄ• idaá¹ƒ suttaá¹ƒ Ä• hari --- ``tatra, bhante, yÄ• dukkhÄ• dandhÄ• bhiÃ±Ã±Ä• , ayaá¹ƒ, bhante, paá¹-ipadÄ• ubhayeneva hÄ«nÄ• akkhÄ• cÄ• â€™â€™ ti (DN III 152). ettha hi catasso paá¹-ipadÄ• lokiyalokuttaramissakÄ• kathitÄ•

__taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti ettha na heá¹-á¹-himanayo oloketabbo. taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒvÄ• panavas duvidhÄ• hi akusalÄ• --- lobhasahagatÄ• dosasahagatÄ• ca. tattha dosasahagatÄ• oá¸·Ä sukhumÄ• . dosasahagatÄ• pi duvidhÄ• --- niyatÄ• aniyatÄ• ca. tattha niyatÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ niyatÄ• pi kappaá¹-á¹-hitikÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , nokappaá¹-á¹-hitikÄ• sukhumÄ• . kappaá¹-á¹-hi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , sasaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• sukhumÄ• . lobhasahagatÄ• pi dvidhÄ• --- diá¹-á¹-hisam diá¹-á¹-hivippayuttÄ• ca. tattha diá¹-á¹-hisampayuttÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , diá¹-á¹-hivippayuttÄ• s diá¹-á¹-hisampayuttÄ• pi niyatÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , aniyatÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi asaá¹…khÄ• ri sasaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• sukhumÄ• .

saá¹…khepato akusalaá¹ƒ patvÄ• yÄ• vipÄ• kaá¹ƒ bahuá¹ƒ deti sÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , yÄ• a kusalaá¹ƒ patvÄ• pana appavipÄ• kÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , bahuvipÄ• kÄ• \Be 16/ sukhumÄ• . c kÄ• mÄ• vacarakusalÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , rÅ«pÄ• vacarakusalÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rik sukhumÄ• \Ee 17/. sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , lokuttarakusalÄ• sukhumÄ• . ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• va bhÅ«r

bhedato pana kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• dÄ• nasÄ«labhÄ• vanÄ• mayavasena tividhÄ• . tattha dÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , bhÄ• vanÄ• mayÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi duhetukÄ• tihetuk oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , tihetukÄ• sukhumÄ• . tihetukÄ• pi sasaá¹…khÄ• rikaasaá¹…khÄ• rikabhedat sasaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , asaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• sukhumÄ• . rÅ«pÄ• vacare paá¹-ham oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , dutiyajjhÄ• nakusalavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• ... pe ... catutthajjhÄ• nakusalaveda oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ• yatanakusalavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ•
.... nevasaÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanakusalavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , v sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , sotÄ• pattimaggasahajÄ• tÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• ... pe ... sukhumÄ• .

catubbidhe vipÄ• ke kÄ• mÄ• vacaravipÄ• kavedanÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , rÅ«pÄ• vacaravipÄ• k oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• ... pe ... lokuttaravipÄ• kavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• . evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va abhedato.

bhedato pana kÄ• mÄ• vacaravipÄ• kÄ• atthi ahetukÄ• , atthi sahetukÄ• . sahetukÄ• pi att tihetukÄ• . tattha ahetukÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , sahetukÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi duhetukÄ• oá¸·Ä• tatthÄ• pi sasaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , asaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• sukhumÄ• . paá¹-hamajjhÄ dutiyajjhÄ• navipÄ• kÄ• sukhumÄ• ... pe ... catutthajjhÄ• navipÄ• kÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi o Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ• yatanavipÄ• kÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• ... pe ... nevasaÃ±Ã sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , sotÄ• pattiphalavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , arahattaphalavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• .

tÄ«su \Be 17/ kiriyÄ• su kÄ• mÄ• vacarakiriyavedanÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , rÅ«pÄ• vacarakiriyav oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , arÅ«pÄ• vacarakiriyavedanÄ• sukhumÄ• . evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va abhedato. bhedato bhinnÄ• ya kÄ• mÄ• vacarakiriyÄ• ya ahetukakiriyavedanÄ• \Ee 18/ oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , sahetuk oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , tihetukÄ• sukhumÄ• . tatthÄ• pi sasaá¹…khÄ• rikÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , asaá¹…kh paá¹-hamajjhÄ• ne kiriyavedanÄ• oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , dutiyajjhÄ• ne sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rik catutthe sukhumÄ• . sÄ• pi oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• , Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ• yatanakiriyavedanÄ• sukhu viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±cÄ• ... pe ... nevasaÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanakiriyavedanÄ• sukhum yÄ• sukhumÄ• sÄ• paá¹‡Ä«tÄ• .

<13> dÅ«radukaniddese \Ne 17/ akusalavedanÄ• visabhÄ• gaá¹-á¹-hena visaá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-h dÅ«re. iminÄ• nayena sabbapadesu dÅ«ratÄ• veditabbÄ• . sacepi hi akusalÄ• divedanÄ• s dukkhÄ• divedanÄ• samaá¹…gino ca tayo tayo janÄ• ekamaÃ±ce nisinnÄ• honti, tesampi visabhÄ• gaá¹-á¹-hena visaá¹ƒsaá¹-á¹-hena ca dÅ«reyeva nÄ• ma. samÄ• pannavedanÄ• o akusalÄ• pana akusalÄ• ya sabhÄ• gaá¹-á¹-hena sarikkhaá¹-á¹-hena ca santike nÄ• ma. im santikatÄ• veditabbÄ• . sacepi hi akusalÄ• divedanÄ• samaá¹…gÄ«su tÄ«su janesu eko kÄ eko arÅ«pabhave, tesampi tÄ• vedanÄ• sabhÄ• gaá¹-á¹-hena sarikkhaá¹-á¹-hena ca santi kusalÄ• divedanÄ• samaá¹…gÄ«supi eseva nayo.

__taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti ettha heá¹-á¹-himanayaá¹ƒ anoloketvÄ• taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vÄ• pana kathentena ca na dÅ«rato santikaá¹ƒ uddharitabbaá¹ƒ, santikato pana dÅ«raá¹ƒ uddharitabl akusalÄ• --- lobhasahagatÄ• dosasahagatÄ• ca. tattha lobhasahagatÄ• lobhasahagatÄ• dosasahagatÄ• ya dÅ«re nÄ• ma. dosasahagatÄ• dosasahagatÄ• ya santike nÄ• ma, lobh dosasahagatÄ• pi niyatÄ• niyatÄ• ya santike nÄ• mÄ• ti. evaá¹ƒ aniyatÄ• .
kappaá¹-á¹-hitikaasaá¹…khÄ• rikasasaá¹…khÄ• rikabhedaá¹ƒ lobhasahagatÄ• dÄ«su ca dia sabbaá¹ƒ oá¸·Ä• rikadukaniddese vitthÄ• ritavasena anugantvÄ• ekekakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• saveda taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒkoá¹-á¹-hÄ• savedanÄ• ya eva santike, itarÄ• itarÄ• ya dÅ«reti veditabbÄ• ti.

ayaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• kkhandhaniddeso.

3. saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhaniddeso

<14> saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhaniddese __yÄ• kÄ• ci saÃ±Ã±Ä• _ti catubhÅ«mikasaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ __cakkhusamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni atÄ«tÄ• divasena niddiá¹-á¹-hasaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ vuttÄ• ni. tattha cakkhusamphassato cakkhusamphassasmiá¹ƒ vÄ• jÄ• tÄ• cakkhusampha nayo \Ne 18/. ettha ca purimÄ• paÃ±ca cakkhupasÄ• dÄ• divatthukÄ• va. manosamphassa avatthukÄ• pi. sabbÄ• catubhÅ«mikasaÃ±Ã±Ä• .

<17> oá¸·Ä• rikadukaniddese __paá¹-ighasamphassajÄ• _ti sappaá¹-ighe cakkhupasÄ• dÄ sappaá¹-ighe rÅ«pÄ• dayo Ä• rabbha uppanno phasso paá¹-ighasamphasso nÄ• ma. tato ta paá¹-ighasamphassajÄ• nÄ• ma. cakkhusamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• ... pe ... kÄ• yasampha vatthuto nÄ• maá¹ƒ. rÅ«pasaÃ±Ã±Ä• ... pe ... phoá¹-á¹-habbasaÃ±Ã±Ä• tipi tassÄ• yeva Ä• idaá¹ƒ pana vatthÄ• rammaá¹‡ato nÄ• maá¹ƒ. sappaá¹-ighÄ• ni hi vatthÅ«ni nissÄ• ya, sapp Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni Ä• rabbha uppattito esÄ• paá¹-ighasamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• ti vuttÄ• .
pariyÄ• yena etissÄ• nÄ• maá¹ƒ hotiyeva. cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±hi mano nÄ• ma. tena s nÄ• ma. tasmiá¹ƒ manosamphasse, tasmÄ• vÄ• manosamphassÄ• jÄ• tÄ• ti manosamph sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ mano nÄ• ma. tena sahajÄ• to phasso manosa manosamphasse, tasmÄ• vÄ• manosamphassÄ• jÄ• tÄ• ti manosamphassajÄ• .

adhivacanasamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• tipi pariyÄ• yena etissÄ• nÄ• maá¹ƒ hotiyeva. tayo h piá¹-á¹-hivaá¹-á¹-akÄ• hutvÄ• attanÄ• sahajÄ• tÄ• ya saÃ±Ã±Ä• ya adhivacanasamphass karonti. nippariyÄ• yena pana paá¹-ighasamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• ma paÃ±cadvÄ• rika adhivacanasamphassajÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• ma manodvÄ• rikasaÃ±Ã±Ä• . tattha paÃ±cadvÄ jÄ• nituá¹ƒ sakkÄ• ti oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• . rajjitvÄ• upanijjhÄ• yantaÃ±hi `rajjitvÄ• upanijjhÄ• yatÄ« upanijjhÄ• yantaá¹ƒ `kujjhitvÄ• upanijjhÄ• yatÄ«â€™ ti oloketvÄ• va jÄ• nanti.

tatridaá¹ƒ vatthu --- dve kira itthiyo nisÄ«ditvÄ• suttaá¹ƒ kantanti. dvÄ«su daharesu gÄ• me purato gacchanto ekaá¹ƒ itthiá¹ƒ olokesi. itarÄ• taá¹ƒ pucchi `kasmÄ• nu kho taá¹ƒ eso olo bhikkhu maá¹ƒ visabhÄ• gacittena olokesi, kaniá¹-á¹-habhaginÄ«saÃ±Ã±Ä• ya pana olokes caritvÄ• Ä• sanasÄ• lÄ• ya nisinnesu itaro bhikkhu taá¹ƒ bhikkhuá¹ƒ pucchi --- `tayÄ• sÄ• `Ä• ma olokitÄ• â€™. `kimatthÄ• yÄ• â€™ ti? `mayhaá¹ƒ bhaginÄ«sarikkhattÄ• taá¹ƒ oloke paÃ±cadvÄ• rikasaÃ±Ã±Ä• oloketvÄ• pi \Ne 19/ jÄ• nituá¹ƒ sakkÄ• ti veditabbÄ• . sÄ• pan keci pana javanappavattÄ• ti dÄ«penti. manodvÄ• rikasaÃ±Ã±Ä• pana ekamaÃ±ce vÄ• ek aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ cintentaá¹ƒ vitakkentaÃ±ca `kiá¹ƒ cintesi, kiá¹ƒ vitakkesÄ«â€™ ti pucchitvÄ• ta jÄ• nitabbato sukhumÄ• . sesaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• kkhandhasadisamevÄ• ti.

ayaá¹ƒ saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhaniddeso.

4. saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhaniddeso

<20> saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhaniddese __ye keci saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• _ti catubhÅ«mikasaá¹…kh __cakkhusamphassajÄ• cetanÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni atÄ«tÄ• divasena niddiá¹-á¹-hasaá¹…khÄ• re vuttÄ• ni. __cakkhusamphassajÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«ni vuttatthÄ• neva. __cetanÄ• _ti heá¹-á¹-himak padhÄ• nasaá¹…khÄ• ravasena vuttaá¹ƒ. heá¹-á¹-himakoá¹-iyÄ• hi antamaso cakkhuviÃ±Ã pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ Ä• gatÄ• cattÄ• ro saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• uppajjanti. tesu cetanÄ• padhÄ• nÄ• Ä• pÄ• kaá¹-attÄ• . tasmÄ• ayameva gahitÄ• . taá¹ƒsampayuttasaá¹…khÄ• rÄ• pana tÄ• ya g idhÄ• pi purimÄ• paÃ±ca cakkhupasÄ• dÄ• divatthukÄ• va. manosamphassajÄ• hadayava catubhÅ«mikacetanÄ• . sesaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• kkhandhasadisamevÄ• ti.

ayaá¹ƒ saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhaniddeso.

5. viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandhaniddeso

<26> viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandhaniddese \Ee 21/ \Be 20/ __yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a_nti ca pariyÄ• diyati. __cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a_ntiÄ• dÄ«ni atÄ«tÄ• divasena niddiá¹-á¹-haviÃ±Ã±Ä dassetuá¹ƒ vuttÄ• ni. tattha cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni \Ne 20/ paÃ±ca cakkhupasÄ• dÄ manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ hadayavatthukampi avatthukampi. sabbaá¹ƒ catubhÅ«makaviÃ±Ã± vedanÄ• kkhandhasadisamevÄ• ti.

ayaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandhaniddeso.

pakiá¹‡á¹‡akakathÄ•

idÄ• ni paÃ±casupi khandhesu samuggamato, pubbÄ• parato, addhÄ• naparicchedato, eku nÄ• nuppÄ• daekanirodhato, ekuppÄ• daekanirodhato, nÄ• nuppÄ• danÄ• nÄ• nirodhato, a ajjhattikabÄ• hirato, oá¸·Ä• rikasukhumato, hÄ«napaá¹‡Ä«tato, dÅ«rasantikato, paccayato, parinipphannato, saá¹…khatatoti soá¸·asahÄ• kÄ• rehi pakiá¹‡á¹‡akaá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ.

tattha duvidho __samuggamo_ --- gabbhaseyyakasamuggamo, opapÄ• tikasamuggamoti. t __gabbhaseyyakasamuggamo_ evaá¹ƒ veditabbo --- gabbhaseyyakasattÄ• naÃ±hi paá¹-isa apacchÄ• apure ekato pÄ• tubhavanti. tasmiá¹ƒ khaá¹‡e pÄ• tubhÅ«tÄ• kalalasaá¹…khÄ• hoti. khuddakamakkhikÄ• ya ekavÄ• yÄ• mena pÄ• tabbamattÄ• ti vatvÄ• puna `atibahuá¹ pakkhipitvÄ• ukkhittÄ• ya paggharitvÄ• agge á¹-hitabindumattaâ€™ nti vuttaá¹ƒ. tampi paá telato uddharitvÄ• gahite tassa paggharitvÄ• agge á¹-hitabindumattaâ€™ nti vuttaá¹ƒ. tam `imasmiá¹ƒ janapade manussÄ• naá¹ƒ kese aá¹-á¹-hadhÄ• phÄ• lite tato ekakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sa uttarakurukÄ• naá¹ƒ keso; tassa pasannatilatelato uddhaá¹-assa agge á¹-hitabindumattaâ€™ paá¹-ikkhipitvÄ• `etaá¹ƒ bahu, jÄ• tiuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• nÄ• ma sukhumÄ• ; tassÄ• ekaaá¹ƒsuno pa uddhaá¹-assa paggharitvÄ• agge á¹-hitabindumattaâ€™ nti vuttaá¹ƒ. taá¹ƒ panetaá¹ƒ \Be 2 vippasannaá¹ƒ anÄ• vilaá¹ƒ parisuddhaá¹ƒ pasannatilatelabindusamÄ• navaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ \Ee tilatelassa \Ne 21/ yathÄ• bindu, sappimaá¹‡á¸• o anÄ• vilo.

evaá¹ƒ vaá¹‡á¹‡apaá¹-ibhÄ• gaá¹ƒ, kalalanti pavuccatÄ«ti ||

evaá¹ƒ parittÄ• ya rÅ«pasantatiyÄ• tÄ«á¹‡i santatisÄ«sÄ• ni honti --- vatthudasakaá¹ƒ, kÄ• itthindriyavasena purisassa purisindriyavasena bhÄ• vadasakanti. tattha vatthurÅ«paá¹ƒ, ta cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni, taá¹ƒnissitÄ• vaá¹‡á¹‡agandharasojÄ• , jÄ«vitanti --- idaá¹ƒ va kÄ• yapasÄ• do, tassa nissayÄ• ni cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni, tannissitÄ• vaá¹‡á¹‡agandh idaá¹ƒ kÄ• yadasakaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. itthiyÄ• itthibhÄ• vo, purisassa purisabhÄ• vo, tassa nissa mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni, tannissitÄ• vaá¹‡á¹‡agandharasojÄ• , jÄ«vitanti --- idaá¹ƒ bhÄ• vadasa evaá¹ƒ gabbhaseyyakÄ• naá¹ƒ paá¹-isandhiyaá¹ƒ ukkaá¹-á¹-haparicchedena samatiá¹ƒsa k rÅ«pakkhandho nÄ• ma hoti. paá¹-isandhicittena pana sahajÄ• tÄ• vedanÄ• vedanÄ• kkha saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandho, saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandho, paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã± gabbhaseyyakÄ• naá¹ƒ paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• honti. sa napuá¹ƒsakapaá¹-isandhi hoti, bhÄ• vadasakaá¹ƒ hÄ• yati. dvinnaá¹ƒ dasakÄ• naá¹ƒ vasen kammajarÅ«pÄ• ni rÅ«pakkhandho nÄ• ma hoti. vedanÄ• kkhandhÄ• dayo vuttappakÄ• rÄ• gabbhaseyyakÄ• naá¹ƒ paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• honti.

imasmiá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• ne tisamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikappaveá¹‡Ä« kathetabbÄ• bhaveyya. taá¹ƒ pana `opapÄ• tikasamuggamoâ€™ _ nÄ• ma dassito. opapÄ• tikÄ• naÃ±hi paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• yatan heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttÄ• ni tÄ«á¹‡i, cakkhusotaghÄ• najivhÄ• dasakÄ• ni cÄ• ti satta rÅ«pasanta tattha cakkhudasakÄ• dÄ«ni kÄ• yadasakasadisÄ• neva. napuá¹ƒsakassa pana bhÄ• vadas paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• yatanÄ• naá¹ƒ opapÄ• tikÄ• naá¹ƒ samasattati ceva \Ee 23/ samasaá¹-á¹-hi rÅ«pakkhandho nÄ• ma. vedanÄ• kkhandhÄ• dayo vuttappakÄ• rÄ• evÄ• ti. evaá¹ƒ opapÄ paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• honti. ayaá¹ƒ `opapÄ• tikasamuggamoâ€™ nÄ• ma. ev `samuggamatoâ€™ _ veditabbÄ• .

__ `pubbÄ• paratoâ€™ _ti \Be 22/ evaá¹ƒ pana gabbhaseyyakÄ• naá¹ƒ apacchÄ• apure up kiá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ \Ne 22/ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti udÄ• hu arÅ«panti? rÅ« samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti, na arÅ«paá¹ƒ. kasmÄ• ? paá¹-isandhicittassa na rÅ«pajanakattÄ• . sab paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ, khÄ«á¹‡Ä• savassa cuticittaá¹ƒ, dvipaÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• ni, cattÄ• r soá¸·asa cittÄ• ni rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• penti. tattha paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ tÄ• va vatthu appatiá¹-á¹-hitatÄ• ya paccayavekallatÄ• ya Ä• gantukatÄ• ya ca rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ sahajÄ• taá¹ƒ vatthu uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e dubbalaá¹ƒ hotÄ«ti vatthuno dubbalatÄ• ya rÅ«paá yathÄ• ca papÄ• te patanto puriso aÃ±Ã±assa nissayo bhavituá¹ƒ na sakkoti, evaá¹ƒ etam papÄ• te patamÄ• naá¹ƒ viya appatiá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. iti kammavegakkhittattÄ• , appatiá¹-á¹-hita samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti.

paá¹-isandhicittaÃ±ca vatthunÄ• saddhiá¹ƒ apacchÄ• apure uppannaá¹ƒ. tassa vatthu pure bhavituá¹ƒ na sakkoti. sace sakkuá¹‡eyya, rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peyya. yatrÄ• pi vatthu paccayo bhavituá¹ƒ sakkoti, paveá¹‡Ä« ghaá¹-iyati, tatrÄ• pi cittaá¹ƒ aá¹…gato aparihÄ«naá samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. yadi hi cittaá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• nakkhaá¹‡e vÄ• bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e vÄ• rÅ«pa paá¹-isandhicittampi rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peyya. na pana cittaá¹ƒ tasmiá¹ƒ khaá¹‡adva samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. yathÄ• pana ahicchattakamakulaá¹ƒ pathavito uá¹-á¹-hahantaá¹ƒ paá¹ gahetvÄ• va uá¹-á¹-hahati, evaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ purejÄ• taá¹ƒ vatthuá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya uppÄ• dakkha gahetvÄ• va uá¹-á¹-hahati. paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e ca vatthu purejÄ• taá¹ƒ hutvÄ• paccayo b paccayavekallatÄ• yapi paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti.

yathÄ• ca Ä• gantukapuriso agatapubbaá¹ƒ padesaá¹ƒ gato aÃ±Ã±esaá¹ƒ \Ee 24/ --- `etha annapÄ• nagandhamÄ• lÄ• dÄ«ni dassÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti vattuá¹ƒ na sakkoti, attano avisayatÄ paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ Ä• gantukanti attano Ä• gantukatÄ• yapi rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• p kammajarÅ«pÄ• ni cittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• narÅ«pÄ• naá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• á¹-hitÄ• nÄ rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti.

khÄ«á¹‡Ä• savassa pana cuticittaá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-amÅ«lassa vÅ«pasantattÄ• na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ sabbabhavesu vaá¹-á¹-amÅ«laá¹ƒ vÅ«pasantaá¹ƒ abhabbuppattikaá¹ƒ punabbhave paveá¹ sotÄ• pannassa pana satta bhave á¹-hapetvÄ• aá¹-á¹-hameva vaá¹-á¹-amÅ«laá¹ƒ vÅ«pasa cuticittaá¹ƒ sattasu bhavesu rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti \Ne 23/, sakadÄ• gÄ• mino dvÄ« khÄ«á¹‡Ä• savassa sabbabhavesu vaá¹-á¹-amÅ«lassa vÅ«pasantattÄ• neva samuá¹-á¹-hÄ dvipaÃ±caviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡esu pana jhÄ• naá¹…gaá¹ƒ natthi, maggaá¹…gaá¹ƒ natthi, hetu na dubbalaá¹ƒ hotÄ«ti cittaá¹…gadubbalatÄ• ya tÄ• ni rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• penti. cattÄ tasmiá¹ƒ bhave rÅ«passa natthitÄ• ya rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• penti. na kevalaÃ±ca tÄ• tasmiá¹ƒ bhave aá¹-á¹-ha kÄ• mÄ• vacarakusalÄ• ni, dasa akusalÄ• ni, nava kiriyacittÄ• ni, Ä• ruppakusalÄ• ni, catasso Ä• ruppakiriyÄ• , tÄ«á¹‡i maggacittÄ• ni, cattÄ• ri phalacittÄ• n cittÄ• ni uppajjanti, tÄ• nipi tattha rÅ«passa natthitÄ• ya eva rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• pe paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ na samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti.

utu pana paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. ko esa utu nÄ• mÄ• ti? paá¹-isandhi samatiá¹ƒsakammajarÅ«pÄ• naá¹ƒ abbhantarÄ• tejodhÄ• tu. sÄ• á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ patvÄ• aá samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. utu nÄ• ma cesa dandhanirodho; cittaá¹ƒ khippanirodhaá¹ƒ. tasmiá¹ƒ d cittÄ• ni uppajjitvÄ• nirujjhanti. tesu paá¹-isandhianantaraá¹ƒ paá¹-hamabhavaá¹…gacittaá¹ aá¹-á¹-ha rÅ«pÄ• ni samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. yadÄ• pana saddassa uppattikÄ• lo bhavissati, tad saddanavakaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• pessanti. kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• ropi á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• ni samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. kuto panassa kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• roti? mÄ• tito. vuttampi ``yaÃ±cassa bhuÃ±jatÄ« mÄ• tÄ• , annaá¹ƒ pÄ• naÃ±ca bhojanaá¹ƒ.

tena so tattha yÄ• peti, mÄ• tukucchigato naroâ€™â€™ ti || (SN a I 235).

evaá¹ƒ kucchigato dÄ• rako mÄ• tarÄ• ajjhohaá¹-aannapÄ• naojÄ• ya yÄ• peti. sÄ• va á¹-rÅ«pÄ• ni samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. nanu ca sÄ• ojÄ• kharÄ• ? vatthu sukhumaá¹ƒ? kathaá¹ƒ ta paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ tÄ• va na patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti; ekassa vÄ• dvinnaá¹ƒ vÄ• sattÄ• hÄ• naá¹ƒ gatal pana pure vÄ• patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• tu pacchÄ• vÄ• ; yadÄ• mÄ• tarÄ• ajjhohaá¹-aannapÄ• naoj patiá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti, tadÄ• aá¹-á¹-ha rÅ«pÄ• ni samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti.

opapÄ• tikassÄ• pi \Be 24/ \Ne 24/ pakatipaá¹-iyattÄ• naá¹ƒ khÄ• danÄ«yabhojanÄ«yÄ• na nibbattassa tÄ• ni gahetvÄ• ajjhoharato á¹-hÄ• nappattÄ• ojÄ• rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• p araÃ±Ã±e nibbattati, mahÄ• chÄ• tako hoti, attanova jivhÄ• ya kheá¸·aá¹ƒ parivattetvÄ• gila á¹-hÄ• nappattÄ• ojÄ• rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti.

evaá¹ƒ paÃ±cavÄ«satiyÄ• koá¹-á¹-hÄ• sesu dveva rÅ«pÄ• ni rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• per kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• ro ca. arÅ«pepi dveyeva dhammÄ• rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• penti -- tattha rÅ«paá¹ƒ uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e ca bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e ca dubbalaá¹ƒ, á¹-hÄ• nakkhaá¹ rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. cittaá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• nakkhaá¹‡e ca bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e ca dubbal balavanti uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡eyeva rÅ«paá¹ƒ samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti. kammacetanÄ• niruddhÄ• kappakoá¹-isatasahassamatthakepi hi Ä• yÅ«hitaá¹ƒ kammaá¹ƒ etarahi paccayo hoti. etarah kappakoá¹-isatasahassapariyosÄ• nepi paccayo hotÄ«ti. evaá¹ƒ __ `pubbÄ• paratoâ€™ _ v

__ `addhÄ• naparicchedatoâ€™ _ti rÅ«paá¹ƒ kittakaá¹ƒ addhÄ• naá¹ƒ tiá¹-á¹-hati? arÅ«paa garupariá¹‡Ä• maá¹ƒ dandhanirodhaá¹ƒ. arÅ«paá¹ƒ lahupariá¹‡Ä• maá¹ƒ khippanirodhaá¹ƒ soá¸·asa cittÄ• ni uppajjitvÄ• nirujjhanti. taá¹ƒ \Ee 26/ pana sattarasamena cittena saddhiá¹ yathÄ• hi puriso `phalaá¹ƒ pÄ• tessÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti muggarena rukkhasÄ• khaá¹ƒ pahareyya ekakkhaá¹‡eyeva vaá¹‡á¹-ato mucceyyuá¹ƒ. tattha phalÄ• ni attano bhÄ• rikatÄ• ya paá¹-ha patanti, pattÄ• ni lahukatÄ• ya pacchÄ• . evameva muggarappahÄ• rena pattÄ• naÃ±ca pha vaá¹‡á¹-ato muttakÄ• lo viya paá¹-isandhikkhaá¹‡e rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ ekakkhaa bhÄ• rikatÄ• ya paá¹-hamataraá¹ƒ pathaviyaá¹ƒ patanaá¹ƒ viya rÅ«pe dharanteyeva soá¸·as uppajjitvÄ• nirujjhanaá¹ƒ; pattÄ• naá¹ƒ lahukatÄ• ya pacchÄ• pathaviyaá¹ƒ patanaá¹ƒ viya cittena saha nirujjhanaá¹ƒ.

tattha kiÃ±cÄ• pi rÅ«paá¹ƒ dandhanirodhaá¹ƒ garupariá¹‡Ä• maá¹ƒ, cittaá¹ƒ khippanirodha rÅ«paá¹ƒ pana arÅ«paá¹ƒ arÅ«paá¹ƒ vÄ• rÅ«paá¹ƒ ohÄ• ya pavattituá¹ƒ na sakkonti. dvinr pavatti. tatrÄ• yaá¹ƒ upamÄ• --- eko puriso lakuá¹‡á¹-akapÄ• do, eko dÄ«ghapÄ• do. tesu gacchantesu yÄ• va dÄ«ghapÄ• do \Be 25/ ekapadavÄ• raá¹ƒ akkamati, tÄ• va itaro pade p soá¸·asapadavÄ• rena gacchati. dÄ«ghapÄ• do lakuá¹‡á¹-akapÄ• dassa soá¸·asa padavÄ• \Ne 25/ Ä• kaá¸• á¸• hitvÄ• ekameva padavÄ• raá¹ƒ karoti. iti ekopi ekaá¹ƒ atikkamituá¹ƒ na gamanaá¹ƒ ekappamÄ• á¹‡ameva hoti. evaá¹ƒsampadamidaá¹ƒ daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ. lakuá¹‡ arÅ«paá¹ƒ; dÄ«ghapÄ• dapuriso viya rÅ«paá¹ƒ; dÄ«ghapÄ• dassa ekaá¹ƒ padavÄ• raá¹ƒ a soá¸·asapadavÄ• raakkamanaá¹ƒ viya rÅ«pe dharanteyeva arÅ«padhammesu soá¸·asanna nirujjhanaá¹ƒ; dvinnaá¹ƒ purisÄ• naá¹ƒ lakuá¹‡á¹-akapÄ• dapurisassa soá¸·asa padavÄ• re aÃ±chitvÄ• Ä• kaá¸• á¸• hitvÄ• ekapadavÄ• rakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ viya rÅ«passa sattarasamena nirujjhanaá¹ƒ; dvinnaá¹ƒ purisÄ• naá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ anohÄ• ya ekappamÄ• á¹‡ene rÅ«paá¹ƒ rÅ«passa arÅ«paá¹ƒ anohÄ• ya ekappamÄ• á¹‡eneva pavattananti. evaá¹ƒ __ `a veditabbÄ• .

__ `ekuppÄ• danÄ• nÄ• nirodhatoâ€™ _ti idaá¹ƒ pacchimakammajaá¹ƒ á¹-hapetvÄ• dÄ«p paá¹-isandhicittaá¹ƒ, dutiyaá¹ƒ \Ee 27/ bhavaá¹…gaá¹ƒ, tatiyaá¹ƒ bhavaá¹…gaá¹ƒ ... pe ... s bhavaá¹…gaá¹ƒ. tesu ekekassa uppÄ• daá¹-á¹-hitibhaá¹…gavasena tayo tayo khaá¹‡Ä• . ta tÄ«su tÄ«su khaá¹‡esu samatiá¹ƒsa samatiá¹ƒsa kammajarÅ«pÄ• ni uppajjanti. tesu paá¹-is uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e samuá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ kammajarÅ«paá¹ƒ sattarasamassa bhavaá¹…gacittas nirujjhati; á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e samuá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡eyeva; bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e samuá bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡eyeva nirujjhati. evaá¹ƒ dutiyabhavaá¹…gacittaá¹ƒ Ä• diá¹ƒ katvÄ• attan cittena saddhiá¹ƒ yojetvÄ• nayo netabbo. iti soá¸·asa tikÄ• aá¹-á¹-hacattÄ• lÄ«sa honti. aya aá¹-á¹-hacattÄ• lÄ«sakammajarÅ«papaveá¹‡Ä« nÄ• ma. sÄ• panesÄ• rattiÃ±ca divÄ• ca bhuÃ±jantÄ• nampi suttÄ• nampi pamattÄ• nampi nadÄ«soto viya ekantaá¹ƒ pavattati yevÄ `ekuppÄ• danÄ• nÄ• nirodhatoâ€™ _ veditabbÄ• .

__ `nÄ• nuppÄ• daekanirodhatÄ• â€™ _ pacchimakammajena dÄ«petabbÄ• . tattha Ä• yus soá¸·asannaá¹ƒ cittÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ• re sati heá¹-á¹-hÄ• soá¸·asakaá¹ƒ uparisoá¸·asakanti dve heá¹-á¹-hÄ• soá¸·asakasmiÃ±hi paá¹-hamacittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e samuá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ sa uparisoá¸·asakasmiá¹ƒ paá¹-hamacittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡eyeva nirujjhati; á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e tassa á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡eyeva \Be 26/ bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e samuá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ tassa bhaá¹…gakk heá¹-á¹-himasoá¸·asakasmiá¹ƒ pana dutiyacittassa ... pe ... soá¸·asamacittassa uppÄ• dakk samuá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ samatiá¹ƒsakammajarÅ«paá¹ƒ cuticittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡eyeva nirujjh á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e samuá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ cuticittassa á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡eyeva; bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e sam cuticittassa bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡eyeva nirujjhati. tato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya kammajarÅ«papaveá¹‡Ä yadi pavatteyya, sattÄ• akkhayÄ• avayÄ• ajarÄ• amarÄ• nÄ• ma bhaveyyuá¹ƒ.

ettha pana yadetaá¹ƒ `sattarasamassa bhavaá¹…gacittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡eyeva nirujjh `ekassa cittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e uppannaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±assa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e n aá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• yaá¹ƒ Ä• gatattÄ• vuttaá¹ƒ, taá¹ƒ ``yassa \Ee 28/ kÄ• yasaá¹…khÄ• ro niru cittasaá¹…khÄ• ro nirujjhatÄ«â€™â€™ ti? ``Ä• mantÄ• â€™â€™ ti (Yam II saá¹…khÄ• raya virujjhati. kathaá¹ƒ? kÄ• yasaá¹…khÄ• ro hi cittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• no assÄ• sapassÄ• savÄ• t cittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• narÅ«paÃ±ca cittassa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e uppajjitvÄ• yÄ• va aÃ±Ã±Ä• n uppajjanti tÄ• va tiá¹-á¹-hati. tesaá¹ƒ soá¸·asannaá¹ƒ sabbapacchimena saddhiá¹ƒ nirujjhati.
saddhiá¹ƒ uppajjati, tato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya sattarasamena saddhiá¹ƒ nirujjhati; na kassaci citta uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e vÄ• á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e vÄ• nirujjhati, nÄ• pi á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e vÄ• bhaá¹…ga esÄ• cittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• narÅ«passa dhammatÄ• ti niyamato cittasaá¹…khÄ• rena saddhiá ``Ä• mantÄ• â€™â€™ ti vuttaá¹ƒ.

yo cÄ• yaá¹ƒ cittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nassa khaá¹‡aniyamo vutto kammÄ• disamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nas tasmÄ• paá¹-isandhicittena sahuppannaá¹ƒ kammajarÅ«paá¹ƒ tato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya sattaras nirujjhati. paá¹-isandhicittassa á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e uppannaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasamassa uppÄ• dak paá¹-isandhicittassa bhaá¹…gakkhaá¹‡e uppannaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasamassa á¹-hÄ• nakkhaa nayenettha yojanÄ• kÄ• tabbÄ• . tato paraá¹ƒ pana utusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikapaveá¹‡Ä«yeva jhÄ• pethÄ• â€™ ti vattabbaá¹ƒ hoti. evaá¹ƒ __ `nÄ• nuppÄ• daekanirodhatoâ€™ _ veditab

__ `ekuppÄ• daekanirodhatoâ€™ _ti rÅ«paá¹ƒ pana rÅ«pena saha ekuppÄ• daá¹ƒ ekaniro saha ekuppÄ• daá¹ƒ ekanirodhaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ __ `ekuppÄ• daekanirodhatoâ€™ _ veditabbÄ•

__ `nÄ• nuppÄ• danÄ• nÄ• nirodhatÄ• â€™ _ \Be 27/ pana catusantatirÅ«pena dÄ«petabb pÄ• datalÄ• adho kesamatthakÄ• tacapariyantassa sarÄ«rassa tattha tattha catusantatirÅ« ghanapuÃ±jabhÄ• vena vattati. evaá¹ƒ vattamÄ• nassÄ• pissa na ekuppÄ• dÄ• ditÄ• sallak upacikarÄ• ji vÄ• kipillikarÄ• ji vÄ• olokiyamÄ• nÄ• ekÄ• baddhÄ• viya hoti, na pana ekÄ \Ne 27/ sÄ«sasantike aÃ±Ã±issÄ• sÄ«sampi udarampi pÄ• dÄ• pi, aÃ±Ã±issÄ• udarasanti udarampi pÄ• dÄ• pi, aÃ±Ã±issÄ• pÄ• dasantike aÃ±Ã±issÄ• sÄ«sampi udarampi pÄ• dÄ catusantatirÅ«pÄ• nampi aÃ±Ã±assa uppÄ• dakkhaá¹‡e \Ee 29/ aÃ±Ã±assa uppÄ• dopi ho aÃ±Ã±assa á¹-hitikkhaá¹‡e aÃ±Ã±assa uppÄ• dopi hoti á¹-hitipi bhaá¹…gopi, aÃ±Ã±assa bh uppÄ• dopi hoti á¹-hitipi bhaá¹…gopi. evamettha __ `nÄ• nuppÄ• danÄ• nÄ• nirodhatÄ• â€™ __ `atÄ«tÄ• dÄ«niâ€™ _ pana dÅ«radukapariyosÄ• nÄ• ni pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ Ä• gatÄ• neva. __

_pi ``kammajaá¹ƒ, kammapaccayaá¹ƒ, kammapaccayautusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• naâ€™â€™ ntiÄ• heá¹-á¹-hÄ• kathitÄ• niyeva. paÃ±capi pana khandhÄ• __parinipphannÄ• va_ honti, no ap __saá¹…khatÄ• va_ no asaá¹…khatÄ• ; apica nipphannÄ• pi hontiyeva. sabhÄ• vadhamme aparinipphannaá¹ƒ anipphannaÃ±ca. nirodhasamÄ• patti pana nÄ• mapaÃ±Ã±atti ca kathan lokiyalokuttarÄ• ti vÄ• saá¹…khatÄ• saá¹…khatÄ• ti vÄ• parinipphannÄ• parinipphannÄ• ti nipphannÄ• pana hoti samÄ• pajjantena samÄ• pajjitabbato. tathÄ• nÄ• mapaÃ±Ã±atti. sÄ labhati; nipphannÄ• pana hoti no anipphannÄ• ; nÄ• maggahaá¹‡aÃ±hi gaá¹‡hantova gaá¹

kamÄ• divinicchayakathÄ•

evaá¹ƒ pakiá¹‡á¹‡akato khandhe viditvÄ• puna etesuyeva --- khandhesu Ã±Ä• á¹‡abhedatthaá¹ƒ, kamatotha visesato.

anÅ«nÄ• dhikato ceva, upamÄ• to tatheva ca ||

daá¹-á¹-habbato dvidhÄ• evaá¹ƒ, passantassatthasiddhito.

vinicchayanayo sammÄ• , viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vibhÄ• vinÄ• ||

tattha \Be 28/ \Ne 28/ __ `kamatoâ€™ _ti idha uppattikkamo, pahÄ• nakkamo, paá¹-ipattikk desanÄ• kkamoti bahuvidho kamo.

tattha ``paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ kalalaá¹ƒ hoti, kalalÄ• hoti abbudaâ€™â€™ nti (SN a I 235) evamÄ ``dassanena pahÄ• tabbÄ• dhammÄ• , bhÄ• vanÄ• ya pahÄ• tabbÄ• dhammÄ• â€™â€™ pahÄ• nakkamo. ``sÄ«lavisuddhi, cittavisuddhÄ«â€™â€™ ti (MN I 259; Paá¹-is III 41) evam ``kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• \Ee 30/, rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• â€™â€™ ti evamÄ• di bhÅ«mikkamo. ``cattÄ• sammappadhÄ• nÄ• â€™â€™ ti (DN III 145) vÄ• ``dÄ• nakathaá¹ƒ sÄ«lakathaâ€™â€™ nt evamÄ• di desanÄ• kkamo. tesu idha uppattikkamo tÄ• va na yujjati, kalalÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ viya pubbÄ• pariyavavatthÄ• nena anuppattito; na pahÄ• nakkamo kusalÄ• byÄ• katÄ• naá¹ƒ ap paá¹-ipattikkamo akusalÄ• naá¹ƒ appaá¹-ipajjanÄ«yato; na bhÅ«mikkamo vedanÄ• dÄ«naá catubhÅ«makapariyÄ• pannattÄ• .

desanÄ• kkamo pana yujjati. abhedena hi yaá¹ƒ paÃ±casu khandhesu attaggÄ• hapatitaá¹
samÅ«haghanavinibbhogadassanena attaggÄ• hato mocetukÄ• mo bhagavÄ• hitakÄ• mo sukhaggahaá¹‡atthaá¹ƒ cakkhuÄ• dÄ«nampi visayabhÅ«taá¹ƒ oá¸·Ä• rikaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ tato iá¹-á¹-hÄ• niá¹-á¹-harÅ«pasaá¹ƒveditaá¹ƒ vedanaá¹ƒ, yaá¹ƒ vedayati taá¹ƒ saÃ±jÄ• nÄ• vedanÄ• visayassa Ä• kÄ• raggÄ• hikaá¹ƒ saÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, saÃ±Ã±Ä• vasena abhisaá¹…khÄ• vedanÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ nissayaá¹ƒ adhipatibhÅ«taÃ±ca viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡anti evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va `kamato viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo.

__ `visesatoâ€™ _ti khandhÄ• naÃ±ca upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• naÃ±ca visesato. ko pana t avisesato vuttÄ• , upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• sÄ• savaupÄ• dÄ• nÄ«yabhÄ• vena visesetvÄ•

``paÃ±ca, bhikkhave, khandhe desessÄ• mi paÃ±cupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhe ca, taá¹ƒ suá¹‡Ä• paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• ? yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci, bhikkhave, rÅ«paá¹ƒ atÄ«tÄ• nÄ• gatapaccuppannaá¹ƒ .
ayaá¹ƒ vuccati, rÅ«pakkhandho. yÄ• kÄ• ci vedanÄ• ... pe ... yÄ• kÄ• ci saÃ±Ã±Ä• ... pe
... pe ... yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ \Ne 29/ ... pe ... santike vÄ• --- ayaá¹ƒ vuccati, viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akkhandho. ime vuccanti, bhikkhave, paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• . katame ca, bhikkhav yaá¹ƒ \Be 29/ kiÃ±ci, bhikkhave, rÅ«paá¹ƒ ... pe ... santike vÄ• sÄ• savaá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• niyaá rÅ«pÅ«pÄ• dÄ• nakkhandho. yÄ• kÄ• ci vedanÄ• ... pe ... yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ sÄ• savaá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• niyaá¹ƒ --- ayaá¹ƒ \Ee 31/ vuccati, bhikkhave, viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡upÄ• dÄ• bhikkhave, paÃ±cupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• â€™â€™ ti (SN b III 48).

ettha ca yathÄ• vedanÄ• dayo anÄ• savÄ• pi sÄ• savÄ• pi atthi, na evaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ. yasm khandhabhÄ• vo yujjati tasmÄ• khandhesu vuttaá¹ƒ. yasmÄ• rÄ• saá¹-á¹-hena ca sÄ• sava upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhabhÄ• vo yujjati tasmÄ• upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhesu vuttaá¹ƒ. vedanÄ• d vuttÄ• , sÄ• savÄ• upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhesu. __ `upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• â€™ _ti ettha ca upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• ti evamattho daá¹-á¹-habbo. idha pana sabbepete ekajjhaá¹ƒ katvÄ•

__ `anÅ«nÄ• dhikatoâ€™ _ti kasmÄ• pana bhagavatÄ• paÃ±ceva khandhÄ• vuttÄ• anÅ« sabbasaá¹…khatasabhÄ• gekasaá¹…gahato, attattaniyaggÄ• havatthussa etapparamato, a anekappabhedesu hi saá¹…khatadhammesu sabhÄ• gavasena saá¹…gayhamÄ• nesu rÅ«p eko khandho hoti, vedanÄ• vedanÄ• sabhÄ• gasaá¹…gahavasena eko khandho hoti. esa n sabbasaá¹…khatasabhÄ• gasaá¹…gahato paÃ±ceva vuttÄ• . etaparamaÃ±cetaá¹ƒ attattani rÅ«pÄ• dayo paÃ±ca. vuttaÃ±hetaá¹ƒ --- ``rÅ«pe kho, bhikkhave, sati rÅ«paá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya evaá¹ƒ diá¹-á¹-hi uppajjati --- `etaá¹ƒ mama, esohamasmi, eso me attÄ• â€™ ti (SN b III 207 saÃ±Ã±Ä• ya ... saá¹…khÄ• resu .... viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡e sati viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• ya viÃ evaá¹ƒ diá¹-á¹-hi uppajjati --- `etaá¹ƒ mama, esohamasmi, eso me attÄ• â€™â€™ â€™ ti. ta attattaniyaggÄ• havatthussa etaparamatopi paÃ±ceva vuttÄ• . yepi caÃ±Ã±e sÄ«lÄ• dayo p vuttÄ• , tepi saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhapariyÄ• pannattÄ• ettheva avarodhaá¹ƒ gacchanti. tasm tadavarodhatopi paÃ±ceva vuttÄ• ti. evaá¹ƒ `anÅ«nÄ• dhikatoâ€™ vinicchayanayo viÃ±Ã±Ä

__ `upamÄ• toâ€™ _ti ettha hi gilÄ• nasÄ• lÅ«pamo rÅ«pupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandho \Ee 32/ gil viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhassa \Ne 30/ vatthudvÄ• rÄ• rammaá¹‡avasena nivÄ• sa \Be 30/ vedanupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandho Ä• bÄ• dhakattÄ• , gelaÃ±Ã±asamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÅ«pam kÄ• masaÃ±Ã±Ä• divasena rÄ• gÄ• disampayuttavedanÄ• sambhavÄ• , asappÄ• yasevanÄ vedanÄ• gelaÃ±Ã±assa nidÄ• nattÄ• . ``vedanaá¹ƒ vedanattÄ• ya saá¹…khatamabhisaá¹…
hi vuttaá¹ƒ. tathÄ• ``akusalassa kammassa katattÄ• upacitattÄ• vipÄ• kaá¹ƒ kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã± dukkhasahagataâ€™â€™ nti (Dhs 556). gilÄ• nÅ«pamo viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandh aparimuttattÄ• . apica cÄ• rakakÄ• raá¹‡aaparÄ• dhakÄ• raá¹‡akÄ• rakaaparÄ• dhikÅ«pam bhÄ• janabhojanabyaÃ±janaparivesakabhuÃ±jakÅ«pamÄ• cÄ• ti, evaá¹ƒ `upamÄ• toâ€™ v

__ `daá¹-á¹-habbato dvidhÄ• â€™ _ti saá¹…khepato vitthÄ• rato cÄ• ti evaá¹ƒ dvidhÄ• daá vinicchayanayo viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo. saá¹…khepato hi paÃ±cupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• Ä• sivisÅ ukkhittÄ• sikapaccatthikato, bhÄ• rasuttavasena (SN b III 22) bhÄ• rato, khajjanÄ«yapariyÄ khÄ• dakato, yamakasuttavasena (SN b III 85) aniccadukkhÄ• nattasaá¹…khatavadhakato vitthÄ• rato panettha pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• o viya rÅ«paá¹ƒ daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ, udakapubbuá¸·o v viya saÃ±Ã±Ä• , kadalikkhandho viya saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• , mÄ• yÄ• viya viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ. vu ``pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• Å«pamaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ, vedanÄ• pubbuá¸·Å«pamÄ• .

marÄ«cikÅ«pamÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• , saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• kadalÅ«pamÄ• .

mÄ• yÅ«pamaÃ±ca viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ, desitÄ• diccabandhunÄ• â€™â€™ ti || (SN b III 95).

tattha rÅ«pÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• Ä• dÄ«hi evaá¹ƒ sadisatÄ• veditabbÄ• --- yathÄ nissÄ• rova evaá¹ƒ rÅ«pampi niccasÄ• radhuvasÄ• raattasÄ• ravirahena nissÄ• rameva. ya vÄ• thÄ• lakaá¹ƒ vÄ• karissÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti gahetuá¹ƒ na sakkÄ• , gahitopi tamatthaá¹ƒ na rÅ«pampi \Ee 33/ `niccaâ€™ nti vÄ• `dhuvaâ€™ nti vÄ• `ahaâ€™ nti vÄ• `mamaâ€™ nti v sakkÄ• , gahitampi na tathÄ• tiá¹-á¹-hati, aniccaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ anattÄ• asubhaÃ±Ã±eva ho `pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• asadisamevaâ€™ _ hoti.

yathÄ• \Be 31/ vÄ• pana pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• o chiddÄ• vachiddo anekasandhighaá¹-ito bahÅ pÄ• á¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ Ä• vÄ• so, evaá¹ƒ rÅ«pampi chiddÄ• vachiddaá¹ƒ anekasandhighaá¹-itaá¹ kimikulÄ• ni vasanti. tadeva tesaá¹ƒ sÅ«tigharampi vaccakuá¹-ipi gilÄ• nasÄ• lÄ• pi susÄ• n gantvÄ• gabbhavuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• dÄ«ni karonti. evampi pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• asadisaá¹ƒ. yathÄ Ä• ditova badarapakkamatto hutvÄ• anupubbena pabbatakÅ«á¹-amattopi hoti, evaá¹ƒ rÅ«p hutvÄ• anupubbena byÄ• mamattampi gomahiá¹ƒsahatthiÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ vasena pabbatakÅ« macchakacchapÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ vasena anekayojanasatappamÄ• á¹‡ampi. evampi pheá¹‡apia pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• o uá¹-á¹-hitamattopi bhijjati, thokaá¹ƒ gantvÄ• pi, samuddaá¹ƒ patvÄ• pana evameva rÅ«pampi kalalabhÄ• vepi bhijjati, abbudÄ• dibhÄ• ve, antarÄ• pana abhejjamÄ• vassasataá¹ƒ patvÄ• avassameva bhijjati, maraá¹‡amukhe cuá¹‡á¹‡avicuá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ hoti. e pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• asadisaá¹ƒ.

yathÄ• pana pubbuá¸·o asÄ• ro, evaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• pi. yathÄ• ca so abalo, agayhupago, na phalakaá¹ƒ vÄ• Ä• sanaá¹ƒ vÄ• kÄ• tuá¹ƒ, gahitaggahitopi bhijjateva; evaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• pi a sakkÄ• `niccÄ• â€™ ti vÄ• `dhuvÄ• â€™ ti vÄ• gahetuá¹ƒ, gahitÄ• pi na tathÄ• tiá¹-á¹-ha agayhupagatÄ• yapi vedanÄ• __ `pubbuá¸·asadisÄ• â€™ _. yathÄ• pana tasmiá¹ƒ tasmiá uppajjati ceva nirujjhati ca, na ciraá¹-á¹-hitiko hoti; evaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• pi uppajjati ceva nirujjhat ciraá¹-á¹-hitikÄ• hoti, ekaccharakkhaá¹‡e koá¹-isatasahassasaá¹…khyÄ• uppajjitvÄ• niruj pubbuá¸·o udakatalaá¹ƒ, udakabinduá¹ƒ \Ee 34/, udakajallakaá¹ƒ saá¹…kaá¸• á¸• hitvÄ• pu gahaá¹‡avÄ• taÃ±cÄ• ti cattÄ• ri kÄ• raá¹‡Ä• ni paá¹-icca uppajjati; evaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• pi vatt kilesajÄ• laá¹ƒ, phassasaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-anaÃ±cÄ• ti cattÄ• ri kÄ• raá¹‡Ä• ni paá¹-icca uppaj pubbuá¸·asadisÄ• .

saÃ±Ã±Ä• pi asÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena __ `marÄ«cisadisÄ• â€™ _. tathÄ• agayhupagaá¹-á¹-he gahetvÄ• pivituá¹ƒ vÄ• nhÄ• yituá¹ƒ vÄ• bhÄ• janaá¹ƒ vÄ• pÅ«retuá¹ƒ. apica yathÄ• ma saÃ±jÄ• tÅ«mivego \Ne 32/ viya khÄ• yati; evaá¹ƒ nÄ«lasaÃ±Ã±Ä• dibhedÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• pi phandati vipphandati. yathÄ• ca marÄ«ci mahÄ• janaá¹ƒ vippalambheti \Be 32/, `paripuá¹‡ paripuá¹‡á¹‡anadÄ« viya dissatÄ«â€™ ti vadÄ• peti; evaá¹ƒ saÃ±Ã±Ä• pi vippalambheti, `i sukhaá¹ƒ niccaâ€™ nti vadÄ• peti. pÄ«takÄ• dÄ«supi eseva nayo. evaá¹ƒ vippalambhanen

saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• pi asÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena __ `kadalikkhandhasadisÄ• â€™ _. tathÄ• agayhu kadalikkhandhato kiÃ±ci gahetvÄ• na sakkÄ• gopÄ• nasÄ«Ä• dÄ«namatthÄ• ya upanetuá evaá¹ƒ saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• pi na sakkÄ• niccÄ• divasena gahetuá¹ƒ, gahitÄ• pi na tathÄ• hont bahuvaá¹-á¹-isamodhÄ• no hoti, evaá¹ƒ saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhopi bahudhammasamodhÄ• nÄ• nÄ• lakkhaá¹‡o, aÃ±Ã±oyeva hi bÄ• hirÄ• ya pattavaá¹-á¹-iyÄ• vaá¹‡á¹‡o, aÃ±Ã±o tat evameva saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhopi aÃ±Ã±adeva phassassa lakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ cet pana saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhotveva vuccatÄ«ti. evampi saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandho kadalikkhan viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ampi asÄ• rakaá¹-á¹-hena __ `mÄ• yÄ• sadisaá¹ƒâ€™ _. tathÄ• agayhupaga ittarÄ• lahupaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• , evaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ. taÃ±hi tatopi ittarataraÃ±cev lahupaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nataraÃ±ca. teneva hi cittena puriso Ä• gato viya, gato viya, á¹-hito v hoti. aÃ±Ã±adeva cÄ• gamanakÄ• le cittaá¹ƒ, aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ gamanakÄ• lÄ• dÄ«su. evampi vi mÄ• yÄ• ca mahÄ• janaá¹ƒ vaÃ±ceti, yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±cideva `idaá¹ƒ suvaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ rajataá¹ƒ m viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ampi \Ee 35/ mahÄ• janaá¹ƒ vaÃ±ceti, teneva cittena Ä• gacchantaá¹ƒ viya, g á¹-hitaá¹ƒ viya, nisinnaá¹ƒ viya katvÄ• gÄ• hÄ• peti. aÃ±Ã±adeva ca Ä• gamane cittaá¹ƒ, a evampi viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ mÄ• yÄ• sadisaá¹ƒ. visesato ca subhÄ• rammaá¹‡ampi oá¸·Ä• ri asubhanti daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ. vedanÄ• tÄ«hi dukkhatÄ• hi avinimuttato dukkhÄ• ti saÃ±Ã±Ä anattÄ• ti viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ udayabbayadhammato aniccanti daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ.

__ `evaá¹ƒ passantassatthasiddhitoâ€™ _ti evaÃ±ca saá¹…khepavitthÄ• ravasena dvidhÄ hoti, tatopi vinicchayanayo viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- saá¹…khepato tÄ• va paÃ±cu ukkhittÄ• sikapaccatthikÄ• dibhÄ• vena passanto khandhehi na vihaÃ±Ã±ati. vitthÄ• rato pa pheá¹‡apiá¹‡á¸• Ä• disadisabhÄ• vena passanto na asÄ• resu sÄ• radassÄ« hoti. visesato 33/ asubhato passanto kabaá¸·Ä«kÄ• rÄ• hÄ• raá¹ƒ parijÄ• nÄ• ti \Be 33/, asubhe subhanti kÄ• moghaá¹ƒ uttarati, kÄ• mayogena visaá¹ƒyujjati, kÄ• mÄ• savena anÄ• savo hoti, abhij bhindati, kÄ• mupÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ na upÄ• diyati. vedanaá¹ƒ dukkhato passanto phassÄ• hÄ• sukhanti vipallÄ• saá¹ƒ pajahati, bhavoghaá¹ƒ uttarati, bhavayogena visaá¹ƒyujjati, bhavÄ• byÄ• pÄ• dakÄ• yaganthaá¹ƒ bhindati, sÄ«labbatupÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ na upÄ• diyati. saÃ±Ã±aá passanto manosaÃ±cetanÄ• hÄ• raá¹ƒ parijÄ• nÄ• ti, anattani attÄ• ti vipallÄ• saá¹ƒ pajaha uttarati, diá¹-á¹-hiyogena visaá¹ƒyujjati, diá¹-á¹-hÄ• savena anÄ• savo hoti, idaá¹ƒ saccÄ• bhinivesakÄ• yaganthaá¹ƒ bhindati, attavÄ• dupÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ na upÄ• diyati. viÃ±Ã viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• hÄ• raá¹ƒ parijÄ• nÄ• ti, anicce niccanti vipallÄ• saá¹ƒ pajahati, avijjoghaá¹ avijjÄ• yogena visaá¹ƒyujjati, avijjÄ• savena anÄ• savo hoti, sÄ«labbataparÄ• mÄ• sakÄ• y diá¹-á¹-hupÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ na upÄ• diyati.

evaá¹ƒ mahÄ• nisaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ, vadhakÄ• divasena dassanaá¹ƒ yasmÄ• .

tasmÄ• khandhe dhÄ«ro, vadhakÄ• divasena passeyyÄ• ti ||

suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

2. abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<32> idÄ• ni \Ee 36/ abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ hoti. tattha rÅ«pakkhandhaniddeso heá vitthÄ• ritanayeneva veditabbo.

<34> vedanÄ• kkhandhaniddese __ekavidhenÄ• _ti ekakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sena. __phassasampa sabbÄ• pi catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• . sahetukaduke sahetukÄ• catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• , ahet upÄ• yena kusalapadÄ• dÄ«hi vuttÄ• vedanÄ• jÄ• nitabbÄ• . apicÄ• yaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• kkhan phassasampayuttato dassito, duvidhena sahetukÄ• hetukato, tividhena jÄ• tito \Ne 34/, catu bhÅ«mantarato, paÃ±cavidhena indriyato. tattha sukhindriyadukkhindriyÄ• ni kÄ• yappasÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• neva. somanassindriyaá¹ƒ chaá¹-á¹-havatthukaá¹ƒ vÄ• avatthukaá¹ƒ vÄ• domanassindriyaá¹ƒ chaá¹-á¹-havatthukaá¹ƒ kÄ• mÄ• vacaraá¹ƒ. upekkhindriyaá¹ƒ cakkhÄ• chaá¹-á¹-havatthukaá¹ƒ avatthukaÃ±ca catubhÅ«makaá¹ƒ. chabbidhena vatthuto dassito. ta vedanÄ• paÃ±cappasÄ• davatthukÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• va chaá¹-á¹-hÄ• avatthukÄ• vÄ•

sattavidhena tattha manosamphassajÄ• bhedato dassitÄ• , aá¹-á¹-havidhena tattha kÄ• ya navavidhena sattavidhabhede manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tusamphassajÄ• bhedato, dasavid manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tusamphassajÄ• bhedato. etesu hi sattavidhabhede manosamph manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tusamphassajÄ• ti dvidhÄ• bhinnÄ• . aá¹-á¹-havidhabhede tÄ• ya sukhÄ• dukkhÄ• ti dvidhÄ• bhinnÄ• . navavidhabhede sattavidhe vuttÄ• manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á kusalÄ• divasena tidhÄ• bhinnÄ• . dasavidhabhede aá¹-á¹-havidhe vuttÄ• manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• kusalÄ• divaseneva tidhÄ• bhinnÄ• .

kusalattiko cettha kevalaá¹ƒ pÅ«raá¹‡atthameva vutto. sattavidhaaá¹-á¹-havidhanavavidhab dÄ• tuá¹ƒ yuttaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne \Ee 37/ nayo dinno. abhidhammaÃ±hi patvÄ• tathÄ• gatena na yuttaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne nayo adinno nÄ• ma natthi. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• va dukamÅ«lake eko vÄ• ro.

satthÄ• hi imasmiá¹ƒ abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«ye vedanÄ• kkhandhaá¹ƒ bhÄ• jento tike gal gahetvÄ• tikesu pakkhipi, tike ca duke ca ubhatovaá¸• á¸• hananÄ«hÄ• rena Ä• hari; sattav catuvÄ«satividhena, tiá¹ƒsavidhena, bahuvidhenÄ• ti sabbathÄ• pi bahuvidhena vedanÄ• kl puggalajjhÄ• sayena ceva desanÄ• vilÄ• sena ca. dhammaá¹ƒ sotuá¹ƒ nisinnadevaparisÄ• Ä• dÄ• ya dukesu pakkhipitvÄ• kathiyamÄ• naá¹ƒ paá¹-ivijjhituá¹ƒ sakkonti, tesaá¹ƒ sappÄ• desesi. ye itarehi Ä• kÄ• rehi kathiyamÄ• naá¹ƒ paá¹-ivijjhituá¹ƒ sakkonti, tesaá¹ƒ tehÄ• kÄ• ayamettha __ `puggalajjhÄ• sayoâ€™ _. sammÄ• sambuddho pana attano mahÄ• visayatÄ pakkhipitvÄ• , duke vÄ• tikesu ubhatovaá¸• á¸• hanena vÄ• , sattavidhÄ• dinayena vÄ• , ya tathÄ• tathÄ• desetuá¹ƒ sakkoti. tasmÄ• pi imehÄ• kÄ• rehi desesÄ«ti ayamassa __ `desa tattha \Ne 35/ tike Ä• dÄ• ya dukesu pakkhipitvÄ• desitavÄ• ro dukamÅ«lako nÄ• ma. duke pakkhipitvÄ• desitavÄ• ro tikamÅ«lako nÄ• ma. tike ca duke ca ubhato vaá¸• á¸• hetvÄ• de ubhatovaá¸• á¸• hitako nÄ• ma. avasÄ• ne sattavidhenÄ• tiÄ• divÄ• ro bahuvidhavÄ• ro nÄ• mahÄ• vÄ• rÄ• .

tattha __dukamÅ«lake_ dukesu labbhamÄ• nena ekekena dukena saddhiá¹ƒ tikesu alabbh vedanÄ• ttikapÄ«tittikasanidassanattike apanetvÄ• , sese labbhamÄ• nake ekÅ«navÄ«sati t dutiyadukapaá¹-hamattikayojanavÄ• rÄ• dÄ«ni navavÄ• rasatÄ• ni paÃ±Ã±Ä• saÃ±ca vÄ• r pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ saá¹ƒkhipitvÄ• tattha tattha dassetabbayuttakaá¹ƒ dassetvÄ• vuttÄ• . asamm vitthÄ• rato veditabbÄ• .

__tikamÅ«lake_pi tikesu labbhamÄ• nena ekekena tikena saddhiá¹ƒ dukesu alabbhamÄ• n apanetvÄ• , sese labbhamÄ• nake sahetukadukÄ• dayo paÃ±Ã±Ä• sa duke yojetvÄ• , paá¹-hamattikadutiyadukayojanavÄ• rÄ• dÄ«ni navavÄ• rasatÄ• ni paÃ±Ã±Ä• saÃ±ca \Ee 3 pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ saá¹…khipitvÄ• tattha tattha dassetabbayuttakaá¹ƒ dassetvÄ• vuttÄ• . asam vitthÄ• rato veditabbÄ• .

__ubhatovaá¸• á¸• hitake_ duvidhabhede dutiyadukaá¹ƒ tividhabhede ca paá¹-hamatikaá¹ƒ labbhamÄ• nehi ekÅ«navÄ«satiyÄ• dukehi labbhamÄ• ne ekÅ«navÄ«satitike yojetvÄ• dutiyadukapaá¹-hamatikayojanavÄ• rÄ• dayo ekÅ«navÄ«sativÄ• rÄ• vuttÄ• . esa dukatikÄ• ubhatovaá¸• á¸• hitattÄ• ubhatovaá¸• á¸• hitako nÄ• ma tatiyo mahÄ• vÄ• ro.

bahuvidhavÄ• rassa sattavidhaniddese Ä• dito paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya labbhamÄ• nesu ekÅ«navÄ« saddhiá¹ƒ catasso bhÅ«miyo yojetvÄ• ekÅ«navÄ«sati sattavidhavÄ• rÄ• vuttÄ• . catuvÄ«s tesaá¹ƒyeva tikÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena ekÅ«navÄ«sativÄ• rÄ• vuttÄ• . tathÄ• bahuvidhavÄ• re cÄ tiá¹ƒsavidhavÄ• ro ekoyevÄ• ti sabbepi aá¹-á¹-hapaÃ±Ã±Ä• sa vÄ• rÄ• honti. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• ve pÄ• á¸·ivaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

idÄ• ni \Ne 36/ atthavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• hoti. tattha sattavidhaniddeso tÄ• va uttÄ• natthoyeva.
catuvÄ«satividhaniddese __cakkhusamphassapaccayÄ• vedanÄ• kkhandho atthi kusalo_ti kÄ• mÄ• vacaraaá¹-á¹-hakusalacittavasena veditabbo. __atthi akusalo_ti dvÄ• dasaakusala __atthi abyÄ• kato_ti tisso manodhÄ• tuyo, tisso ahetukamanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyo, aá¹ dasa kÄ• mÄ• vacarakiriyÄ• ti catuvÄ«satiyÄ• cittÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena veditabbo.

tattha aá¹-á¹-ha kusalÄ• ni dvÄ• dasa akusalÄ• ni ca javanavasena labbhanti. kiriyamanodh labbhati. dve vipÄ• kamanodhÄ• tuyo sampaá¹-icchanavasena, tisso vipÄ• kamanoviÃ±Ã±Ä santÄ«raá¹‡atadÄ• rammaá¹‡avasena, kiriyÄ• hetukamanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu voá¹-á¹-h mahÄ• vipÄ• kacittÄ• ni tadÄ• rammaá¹‡avasena, nava kiriyacittÄ• ni javanavasena labbha sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yadvÄ• resupi eseva nayo.

manodvÄ• re pana __atthi kusalo_ti catubhÅ«makakusalavasena kathitaá¹ƒ, __atthi akusal dvÄ• dasaakusalavasena. __atthi abyÄ• kato_ti ekÄ• dasannaá¹ƒ kÄ• mÄ• vacaravipÄ• kÄ \Ee 39/, navannaá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarakiriyÄ• naá¹ƒ, catunnaá¹ƒ sÄ• maÃ±Ã± catuttiá¹ƒsacittuppÄ• davasena kathitaá¹ƒ. tattha catubhÅ«makakusalaÃ±ceva akusalaÃ±ca kiriyato ahetukamanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu Ä• vajjanavasena, ekÄ• dasa vipÄ• kacittÄ• ni tebhÅ«makakiriyÄ• ceva sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aphalÄ• ni ca javanavaseneva labbhanti. tÄ• ni satta á¹-hatvÄ• kathetuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-anti. tiá¹ƒsavidhe pana á¹-hatvÄ• dÄ«piyamÄ• nÄ• ni sukhad tiá¹ƒsavidhasmiá¹ƒyeva á¹-hatvÄ• dÄ«payiá¹ƒsu.

etÄ• ni hi sabbÄ• nipi cittÄ• ni cakkhudvÄ• re upanissayakoá¹-iyÄ• , samatikkamavasena, b tÄ«hÄ• kÄ• rehi labbhanti. tathÄ• sotadvÄ• ramanodvÄ• resupi. ghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yadvÄ• bhÄ• vanÄ• vasenÄ• ti dvÄ«hevÄ• kÄ• rehi labbhantÄ«ti veditabbÄ• ni. kathaá¹ƒ? idha bhik caramÄ• no kasiá¹‡amaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ disvÄ• `kiá¹ƒ nÄ• metaâ€™ nti pucchitvÄ• \Be 37/ `k vutte puna `kiá¹ƒ iminÄ• karontÄ«â€™ ti pucchati. athassa Ä• cikkhanti --- `evaá¹ƒ bhÄ• ve uppÄ• detvÄ• , samÄ• pattipadaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ vipassanaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hetvÄ• , arahattaá¹ ajjhÄ• sayasampanno kulaputto `bhÄ• riyaá¹ƒ etaâ€™ nti asallakkhetvÄ• `mayÄ• pi esa gu vaá¹-á¹-ati, na kho pana sakkÄ• esa nipajjitvÄ• niddÄ• yantena nibbattetuá¹ƒ, Ä• ditova vÄ

sÄ«laá¹ƒ sodhetuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-atÄ«â€™ ti cintetvÄ• sÄ«laá¹ƒ sodheti. tato sÄ«le patiá¹-á¹-hÄ upacchinditvÄ• , ticÄ«varaparamena santosena santuá¹-á¹-ho, Ä• cariyupajjhÄ• yÄ• naá¹ƒ v kammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ uggaá¹‡hitvÄ• , kasiá¹‡aparikammaá¹ƒ katvÄ• , samÄ• pattiyo uppÄ samÄ• pattipadaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ vipassanaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hetvÄ• , arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• t parikammavedanÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , aá¹-á¹-hasamÄ• pattivedanÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ« lokuttarÄ• ti evaá¹ƒ cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• nibbattiyÄ• balavapac catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• cakkhusamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma jÄ• tÄ• . evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va __ `up cakkhudvÄ• re \Ee 40/ pana rÅ«pe Ä• pÄ• thagate `iá¹-á¹-he me Ä• rammaá¹‡e rÄ• go upp asamapekkhanÄ• ya moho, vinibandhassa pana me mÄ• no uppanno, parÄ• maá¹-á¹-hassa uddhaccaá¹ƒ, asanniá¹-á¹-hÄ• gatassa vicikicchÄ• , thÄ• magatassa anusayo uppannoâ€™ kulaputto attano kilesuppattiá¹ƒ Ã±atvÄ• `ime me kilesÄ• vaá¸• á¸• hamÄ• nÄ• anayabyas handa ne niggaá¹‡hÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti cintetvÄ• `na kho pana sakkÄ• nipajjitvÄ• niddÄ• yante Ä• ditova vÄ«riyaá¹ƒ kÄ• tuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ati sÄ«laá¹ƒ sodhetuâ€™ nti heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayen arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti. tattha sabbÄ• pi parikammavedanÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , aá¹-á¹-rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• , maggaphalavedanÄ• lokuttarÄ• ti evaá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• ramma samatikkamitvÄ• gatÄ• ti catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• cakkhusamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma jÄ• `samatikkamavasenaâ€™ _ labbhanti.

cakkhudvÄ• re pana rÅ«pe Ä• pÄ• thagate eko evaá¹ƒ pariggahaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapeti --- `idaâ nissitaâ€™ nti? tato naá¹ƒ `bhÅ«tanissitaâ€™ nti Ã±atvÄ• cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni upÄ• pariggaá¹‡hÄ• ti, tadÄ• rammaá¹‡e dhamme arÅ«panti pariggaá¹‡hÄ• ti. tato sappaccayaá¹ parigaá¹‡hitvÄ• tÄ«á¹‡i lakkhaá¹‡Ä• ni Ä• ropetvÄ• vipassanÄ• paá¹-ipÄ• á¹-iyÄ• saá¹…k
arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti. tattha sabbÄ• pi \Be 38/ parikammavedanÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ•
rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• , maggaphalavedanÄ• lokuttarÄ• ti evaá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• ramma ayaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• cakkhusamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma jÄ• tÄ• . evaá¹ƒ __ `bhÄ• vanÄ• vas aparo \Ne 38/ bhikkhu suá¹‡Ä• ti --- `kasiá¹‡aparikammaá¹ƒ kira katvÄ• samÄ• pattiyo upp samÄ• pattipadaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ vipassanaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hetvÄ• arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡antÄ kulaputto `bhÄ• riyaá¹ƒ etaâ€™ nti asallakkhetvÄ• `mayÄ• pi esa guá¹‡o nibbattetuá¹ƒ vaá purimanayeneva paá¹-ipajjitvÄ• arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti. tattha sabbÄ• pi parikammaved aá¹-á¹-hasamÄ• pattivedanÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• , maggaphalavedanÄ• loku sotaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• \Ee 41/ nibbattiyÄ• balavapaccayo hotÄ«ti c sotasamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma jÄ• tÄ• . evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va __ `upanissayavasenaâ€™ _ labb sotadvÄ• re pana sadde Ä• pÄ• thagateti sabbaá¹ƒ cakkhudvÄ• re vuttanayeneva veditabb uppannaá¹ƒ kilesaá¹ƒ samatikkamitvÄ• gatÄ• ti catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• sotasamphassapac `samatikkamavasenaâ€™ _ labbhanti.

sotadvÄ• re pana sadde Ä• pÄ• thagate eko evaá¹ƒ pariggahaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapeti --- ayaá¹ƒ sabbaá¹ƒ cakkhudvÄ• re vuttanayeneva veditabbaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ saddÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ samm vedanÄ• sotasamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma jÄ• tÄ• . evaá¹ƒ __ `bhÄ• vanÄ• vasenaâ€™ _ ghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yadvÄ• resu pana gandhÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«su Ä• pÄ• thagatesu `iá¹-á uppannoâ€™ ti sabbaá¹ƒ cakkhudvÄ• re vuttanayeneva veditabbaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ gandhÄ• ram kilesaá¹ƒ samatikkamitvÄ• gatÄ• ti catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• ghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yasamphass tÄ«su dvÄ• resu __ `samatikkamavasenaâ€™ _ labbhanti.

ghÄ• nadvÄ• rÄ• dÄ«su pana gandhÄ• dÄ«su Ä• pÄ• thagatesu eko evaá¹ƒ pariggahaá¹ƒ gandho, ayaá¹ƒ raso, idaá¹ƒ phoá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ kiá¹ƒ nissitaâ€™ nti sabbaá¹ƒ cakkhudvÄ• veditabbaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ gandhÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni sammasitvÄ• nibbattitÄ• ti \Be 39/ ayaá ghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yasamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma jÄ• tÄ• . evaá¹ƒ __ `bhÄ• vanÄ• vasena manodvÄ• re pana tÄ«hipi Ä• kÄ• rehi labbhanti. ekacco hi jÄ• tiá¹ƒ bhayato passati, jaraá maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ bhayato passati, bhayato disvÄ• `jÄ• tijarÄ• byÄ• dhimaraá¹‡ehi muccituá¹ƒ v 39/ pana sakkÄ• nipajjitvÄ• niddÄ• yantena jÄ• tiÄ• dÄ«hi muccituá¹ƒ, Ä• ditova vÄ«riyaá sodhetuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-atÄ«â€™ ti cintetvÄ• cakkhudvÄ• re vuttanayeneva paá¹-ipajjitvÄ• ara tattha sabbÄ• pi parikammavedanÄ• kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , aá¹-á¹-hasamÄ• pattivedanÄ• rÅ« maggaphalavedanÄ• lokuttarÄ• ti evaá¹ƒ jÄ• tijarÄ• byÄ• dhimaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ catubhÅ«mikave balavapaccayo hotÄ«ti \Ee 42/ catubhÅ«mikavedanÄ• manosamphassapaccayÄ• nÄ• ma `upanissayavasenaâ€™ _ labbhanti.

manodvÄ• re pana dhammÄ• rammaá¹‡e Ä• pÄ• thagateti sabbaá¹ƒ cakkhudvÄ• re vuttan dhammÄ• rammaá¹‡e uppannaá¹ƒ kilesaá¹ƒ samatikkamitvÄ• gatÄ• ti catubhÅ«mikavedan jÄ• tÄ• . evaá¹ƒ __ `samatikkamavasenaâ€™ _ labbhanti.

manodvÄ• re pana dhammÄ• rammaá¹‡e Ä• pÄ• thagate eko evaá¹ƒ pariggahaá¹ƒ paá¹-á dhammÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ kiá¹ƒ nissitaâ€™ nti? `vatthunissitaâ€™ nti. `vatthu kiá¹ƒ nissitaâ€ nissitaâ€™ nti. so cattÄ• ri mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• ni upÄ• dÄ• rÅ«paÃ±ca rÅ«panti pariggaá¹‡hÄ• arÅ«panti pariggaá¹‡hÄ• ti. tato sappaccayaá¹ƒ nÄ• marÅ«paá¹ƒ pariggaá¹‡hitvÄ• tÄ«á¹‡i vipassanÄ• paá¹-ipÄ• á¹-iyÄ• saá¹…khÄ• re sammasitvÄ• arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti. tatt kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , aá¹-á¹-hasamÄ• pattivedanÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• , magga dhammÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ sammasitvÄ• nibbattitÄ• ti ayaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• manosamphassapac `bhÄ• vanÄ• vasenaâ€™ _ labbhanti. yÄ• panetÄ• sabbesampi catuvÄ«satividhÄ• dÄ«naá cakkhusamphassajÄ• vedanÄ• ... pe ... manosamphassajÄ• vedanÄ• ti cha cha vedanÄ• sampayuttapaccayavasena vuttÄ• ti.

ayaá¹ƒ vedanÄ• kkhandhaniddeso.

saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhÄ• dayopi \Be 40/ iminÄ• upÄ• yena veditabbÄ• . kevalaÃ±hi saÃ±Ã±Ä vedanÄ• ttikapÄ«tittikÄ• pi labbhanti, dukesu ca sukhasahagatadukÄ• dayopi. saá¹…khÄ• r phassassÄ• pi saá¹…khÄ• rakkhandhapariyÄ• pannattÄ• phassasampayuttoti avatvÄ• citt cettha hetudukÄ• dayopi labbhanti. tikÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhasadisÄ• eva \Ne 40/. viÃ±Ã± cakkhusamphassajÄ• dibhÄ• vaá¹ƒ avatvÄ• cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡antiÄ• di vuttaá¹ƒ. na hi s manosamphassajanti niddisituá¹ƒ. sesamettha saÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhe vuttasadisameva. imes khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ niddeseyeva \Ee 43/ vedanÄ• kkhandhaniddesato atirekatikadukÄ• laddhÄ vÄ• rappabhedo veditabboti.

abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

3. paÃ±hÄ• pucchakavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<150> idÄ• ni paÃ±hÄ• pucchakaá¹ƒ hoti. tattha paÃ±hÄ• pucchane paÃ±cannaá¹ƒ khandh katiakusalÄ• ? katiabyÄ• katÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dinÄ• nayena yaá¹ƒ labbhati, yaÃ±ca na labb pucchitvÄ• vissajjane ``rÅ«pakkhandho abyÄ• katoâ€™â€™ tiÄ• dinÄ• nayena yaá¹ƒ labb veditabbaá¹ƒ. yattha yattha ca `eko khandhoâ€™ ti vÄ• `dve khandhÄ• â€™ ti vÄ• paricch uppannÄ• , siyÄ• anuppannÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dinÄ• nayena tanti á¹-hapitÄ• , tattha tattha p gahaá¹‡aá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. seso tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ kusalÄ• divibhÄ• go heá¹ dhammasaá¹…gahaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• yaá¹ƒ (Dhs-a 985) vuttoyeva.

Ä• rammaá¹‡attikesu pana cattÄ• ro khandhÄ• paÃ±capaá¹‡á¹‡Ä• sa kÄ• mÄ• vacaradha dussantassa muyhantassa saá¹ƒvarantassa sammasantassa paccavekkhantassa ca parittÄ sattavÄ«sati rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacaradhamme Ä• rabbha rajjantassa dussantassa muyhantas pariggahaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapentassa mahaggatÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• , maggaphalanibbÄ• nÄ• ni pa appamÄ• á¹‡Ä• rammaá¹‡Ä• , paÃ±Ã±attiá¹ƒ paccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le navattabbÄ• rammaá teyeva \Be 41/ sekkhÄ• sekkhÄ• naá¹ƒ maggapaccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le maggÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä sahajÄ• tahetunÄ• maggahetukÄ• , maggaá¹ƒ garuá¹ƒ katvÄ• paccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le Ä• maggÄ• dhipatino \Ne 41/, vÄ«riyajeá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ vÄ• vÄ«maá¹ƒsajeá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ vÄ• m sahajÄ• tÄ• dhipatinÄ• maggÄ• dhipatino, chandajeá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ pana cittajeá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• nÄ• ma honti.

atÄ«tÄ• ni pana khandhadhÄ• tuÄ• yatanÄ• ni Ä• rabbha rajjantassa dussantassa muyhan pariggahaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapentassa atÄ«tÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• honti, anÄ• gatÄ• ni Ä• rabbha anÄ

honti, paccuppannÄ• ni Ä• rabbha paccuppannÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• honti, paÃ±Ã±attiá¹ƒ vÄ• n paccavekkhantassa navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• honti.

tathÄ• attano khandhadhÄ• tuÄ• yatanÄ• ni Ä• rabbha rajjantassa dussantassa muyhanta pariggahaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapentassa ajjhattÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• honti, paresaá¹ƒ khandhadhÄ• tuÄ pavattentassa bahiddhÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• , paá¹‡á¹‡attinibbÄ• napaccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• lepi ba ajjhattaá¹ƒ kÄ• lena bahiddhÄ• dhammesu evaá¹ƒ pavattentassa ajjhattabahiddhÄ• ramma Ä• kiÃ±caÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanakÄ• le navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ti veditabbÄ• .

iti bhagavÄ• imaá¹ƒ khandhavibhaá¹…gaá¹ƒ suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yÄ• divasena tayo parivaá bhÄ• jento dassesi. tÄ«supi hi parivaá¹-á¹-esu ekova paricchedo. rÅ«pakkhandho hi sabbatt cattÄ• ro khandhÄ• catubhÅ«makÄ• lokiyalokuttaramissakÄ• kathitÄ• ti.

sammohavinodaniyÄ• vibhaá¹…gaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya

khandhavibhaá¹…gavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

2. Ä• yatanavibhaá¹…go

1. suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<154> idÄ• ni \Ee 45/ \Be 42/ \Ne 42/ tadanantare Ä• yatanavibhaá¹…ganiddese suttantabh dassento __dvÄ• dasÄ• yatanÄ• ni cakkhÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• yatana_ntiÄ• dimÄ• ha. tatth atthalakkhaá¹‡atÄ• vatva, kamasaá¹…khepavitthÄ• rÄ• .
---

tathÄ• daá¹-á¹-habbato ceva, viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayo ||

tattha visesato tÄ• va cakkhatÄ«ti __cakkhu; _ rÅ«paá¹ƒ assÄ• deti, vibhÄ• veti cÄ• ti attho __rÅ«paá¹ƒ; _ vaá¹‡á¹‡avikÄ• raá¹ƒ Ä• pajjamÄ• naá¹ƒ hadayaá¹…gatabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ pakÄ• s __sotaá¹ƒ_. sappatÄ«ti __saddo; _ udÄ• hariyatÄ«ti attho. ghÄ• yatÄ«ti __ghÄ• naá¹ƒ_. gan attano vatthuá¹ƒ sÅ«cayatÄ«ti attho. jÄ«vitaá¹ƒ avhÄ• yatÄ«ti __jivhÄ• _. rasanti taá¹ƒ sattÄ assÄ• dentÄ«ti attho. kucchitÄ• naá¹ƒ sÄ• savadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• yoti __kÄ• yo_. Ä• yoti u __phoá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ_. manatÄ«ti __mano_. attano lakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ dhÄ• rayantÄ«ti __dham avisesato pana Ä• yatanato, Ä• yÄ• naá¹ƒ tananato, Ä• yatassa ca nayanato Ä• yatananti v cakkhurÅ«pÄ• dÄ«su hi taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒdvÄ• rÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• sena s

Ä• yatanti uá¹-á¹-hahanti ghaá¹-á¹-enti vÄ• yamantÄ«ti vuttaá¹ƒ hoti. te ca pana Ä• yabhÅ«t tanonti vitthÄ• rentÄ«ti vuttaá¹ƒ hoti. idaÃ±ca anamatagge saá¹ƒsÄ• re pavattaá¹ƒ atÄ«va Ä saá¹ƒsÄ• radukkhaá¹ƒ yÄ• va na nivattati tÄ• va nayanteva, pavattayantÄ«ti vuttaá¹ƒ hoti. it dhammÄ• Ä• yatanato Ä• yÄ• naá¹ƒ tananato Ä• yatassa ca nayanato `Ä• yatanaá¹ƒ Ä• ya apica nivÄ• saá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹-á¹-hena, Ä• karaá¹-á¹-hena, samosaraá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹-á¹-saÃ±jÄ• tidesaá¹-á¹-hena, kÄ• raá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hena ca Ä• yatanaá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. tathÄ• hi lo vÄ• sudevÄ• yatanaâ€™â€™ ntiÄ• dÄ«su nivÄ• saá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• yatananti vuccati \Be rajatÄ• yatanaâ€™â€™ ntiÄ• dÄ«su Ä• karo. sÄ• sane pana ``manorame Ä• yatane sevant tiÄ• dÄ«su (AN b V 38) samosaraá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ. ``dakkhiá¹‡Ä• patho gunnaá¹ƒ Ä• ya saÃ±jÄ• tideso. ``tatra tatreva sakkhibhabbataá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti sati satiÄ• yataneâ€™â€™ kÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

cakkhurÅ«pÄ• dÄ«su cÄ• pi te te cittacetasikÄ• dhammÄ• nivasanti tadÄ• yattavuttitÄ• yÄ nivÄ• sanaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ. cakkhÄ• dÄ«su ca te Ä• kiá¹‡á¹‡Ä• taá¹ƒ nissitattÄ• tadÄ• ran cakkhÄ• dayo nesaá¹ƒ Ä• karo. cakkhÄ• dayo ca nesaá¹ƒ samosaraá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ, ta vatthudvÄ• rÄ• rammaá¹‡avasena samosaraá¹‡ato. cakkhÄ• dayo ca nesaá¹ƒ saÃ±jÄ• tide nissayÄ• rammaá¹‡abhÄ• vena tattheva uppattito. cakkhÄ• dayo ca nesaá¹ƒ kÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒ abhÄ• vatoti. iti nivÄ• saá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹-á¹-hena, Ä• karaá¹-á¹-hena, samosaraá¹‡aá¹-á¹-hÄ• saÃ±jÄ• tidesaá¹-á¹-hena, kÄ• raá¹‡aá¹-á¹-henÄ• ti imehi kÄ• raá¹‡ehi ete dhammÄ• `Ä• ya vuccanti. tasmÄ• yathÄ• vuttenatthena cakkhu ca taá¹ƒ Ä• yatanaÃ±cÄ• ti __cakkhÄ• yata ca te Ä• yatanaÃ±cÄ• ti __dhammÄ• yatana_nti evaá¹ƒ tÄ• vettha `atthatoâ€™ viÃ±Ã±Ä• ta

__ `lakkhaá¹‡atoâ€™ _ti cakkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ lakkhaá¹‡atopettha viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayo lakkhaá¹‡Ä• ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ• rÅ«pakaá¹‡á¸• aniddese vuttanayeneva veditabbÄ• ni.

__ `tÄ• vatvatoâ€™ _ti tÄ• vabhÄ• vato. idaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ hoti --- cakkhÄ• dayopi hi dhammÄ dhammÄ• yatanamicceva avatvÄ• kasmÄ• dvÄ• dasÄ• yatanÄ• ni vuttÄ• nÄ«ti ce? cha viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akÄ• yuppattidvÄ• rÄ• rammaá¹‡avavatthÄ• nato. idha channaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á Ä• rammaá¹‡abhÄ• vena ca vavatthÄ• nato ayameva tesaá¹ƒ bhedo hotÄ«ti dvÄ• dasa vutt cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡avÄ«thipariyÄ• pannassa hi viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akÄ• yassa cakkhÄ• yatanan rÅ«pÄ• yatanameva cÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ \Ee 47/ \Ne 44/. tathÄ• itarÄ• ni itaresaá¹ƒ. chaá¹-bhavaá¹…gamanasaá¹…khÄ• to manÄ• yatanekadesova uppattidvÄ• raá¹ƒ, asÄ• dhÄ• raá Ä• rammaá¹‡anti \Be 44/. iti channaá¹ƒ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡akÄ• yÄ• naá¹ƒ uppattidvÄ• rÄ• ramm vuttÄ• nÄ«ti. evamettha `tÄ• vatvatoâ€™ viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayo.

__ `kamatoâ€™ _ti idhÄ• pi pubbe vuttesu uppattikkamÄ• dÄ«su desanÄ• kkamova yujjati.
sanidassanasappaá¹-ighavisayattÄ• cakkhÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ pÄ• kaá¹-anti paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ desita anidassanasappaá¹-ighavisayÄ• ni sotÄ• yatanÄ• dÄ«ni. atha vÄ• dassanÄ• nuttariyasava bahÅ«pakÄ• rattÄ• ajjhattikesu cakkhÄ• yatanasotÄ• yatanÄ• ni paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ desitÄ• ni.

tÄ«á¹‡i. paÃ±cannampi gocaravisayattÄ• ante manÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ. cakkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ pana anantarÄ• ni bÄ• hiresu rÅ«pÄ• yatanÄ• dÄ«ni. apica viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡uppattikÄ• raá¹‡avavatt kamo veditabbo. vuttaÃ±hetaá¹ƒ ``cakkhuÃ±ca paá¹-icca rÅ«pe ca uppajjati cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä manaÃ±ca paá¹-icca dhamme ca uppajjati manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aâ€™â€™ nti (MN III 421) ev viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayo.

__ `saá¹…khepavitthÄ• rÄ• â€™ ti_ saá¹…khepato hi manÄ• yatanassa ceva dhammÄ• ya tadavasesÄ• naÃ±ca Ä• yatanÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«pena saá¹…gahitattÄ• dvÄ• dasÄ• pi Ä• yatanÄ vitthÄ• rato pana ajjhattikesu tÄ• va cakkhÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ jÄ• tivasena cakkhupasÄ• damatta paccayagatinikÄ• yapuggalabhedato pana anantappabhedaá¹ƒ. tathÄ• sotÄ• yatanÄ• dÄ«n tebhÅ«makakusalÄ• kusalavipÄ• kakiriyaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡abhedena ekÄ• sÄ«tippabhedaá¹ƒ, v anantappabhedaá¹ƒ. rÅ«pagandharasÄ• yatanÄ• ni samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nabhedato catuppabhed dvippabhedaá¹ƒ. sabhÄ• gavisabhÄ• gabhedato pana sabbÄ• nipi anantappabhedÄ• ni. ph pathavÄ«dhÄ• tutejodhÄ• tuvÄ• yodhÄ• tuvasena tippabhedaá¹ƒ, samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nato catup sabhÄ• gavisabhÄ• gato anekappabhedaá¹ƒ. dhammÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ tebhÅ«makadhammÄ• n evaá¹ƒ saá¹…khepavitthÄ• rÄ• viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayo.

__ `daá¹-á¹-habbatoâ€™ _ti \Ee 48/ ettha pana sabbÄ• nevetÄ• ni Ä• yatanÄ• ni anÄ• gam
daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• ni. na hi tÄ• ni pubbe udayÄ• kutoci Ä• gacchanti, nÄ• pi uddhaá¹ƒ vayÄ• kho pubbe udayÄ• appaá¹-iladdhasabhÄ• vÄ• ni, uddhaá¹ƒ \Be 45/ vayÄ• paribhinnasabhÄ pubbantÄ• parantavemajjhe \Ne 45/ paccayÄ• yattavuttitÄ• ya avasÄ• ni pavattanti. tasmÄ• ca daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• ni. tathÄ• nirÄ«hato abyÄ• pÄ• rato ca. na hi cakkhurÅ«pÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ e amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ sÄ• maggiyÄ• viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma uppajjeyyÄ• â€™ ti, na ca tÄ• ni viÃ dvÄ• rabhÄ• vena vatthubhÄ• vena Ä• rammaá¹‡abhÄ• vena vÄ• Ä«hanti, na byÄ• pÄ• ra dhammatÄ• vesÄ• yaá¹ƒ cakkhurÅ«pÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ sÄ• maggiyaá¹ƒ cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• abyÄ• pÄ• rato ca daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• ni. apica ajjhattikÄ• ni suÃ±Ã±agÄ• mo viya daá¹-á¹-habb dhuvasubhasukhattabhÄ• vavirahitattÄ• , bÄ• hirÄ• ni gÄ• maghÄ• takacorÄ• viya ajjhattik vuttaÃ±hetaá¹ƒ --- ``cakkhu, bhikkhave, haÃ±Ã±ati manÄ• pÄ• manÄ• pehi rÅ«pehÄ«ti vitth cha pÄ• á¹‡akÄ• viya daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• ni, bÄ• hirÄ• ni tesaá¹ƒ gocarÄ• viyÄ• ti. evampetth viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayoti.

idÄ• ni tesaá¹ƒ vipassitabbÄ• kÄ• raá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ __cakkhuá¹ƒ anicca_ntiÄ• di Ä• raddha hutvÄ• abhÄ• vaá¹-á¹-hena __anicca_nti veditabbaá¹ƒ. aparehipi catÅ«hi kÄ• raá¹‡ehi anic uppÄ• davayavantato, vipariá¹‡Ä• mato, tÄ• vakÄ• likato, niccapaá¹-ikkhepatoti.

tadeva paá¹-ipÄ«á¸·anaá¹-á¹-hena __dukkhaá¹ƒ_. yasmÄ• vÄ• etaá¹ƒ uppannaá¹ƒ á¹-hitiá á¹-hitiyaá¹ƒ jarÄ• ya kilamati, jaraá¹ƒ patvÄ• avassaá¹ƒ bhijjati; tasmÄ• abhiá¹‡hasampaá¹ dukkhamato, dukkhavatthuto, sukhapaá¹-ikkhepatoti imehi catÅ«hi kÄ• raá¹‡ehi dukkhaá¹ƒ.

avasavattanaá¹-á¹-hena pana __anattÄ• _. yasmÄ• vÄ• etaá¹ƒ uppannaá¹ƒ á¹-hitiá¹ƒ mÄ• á¹-hÄ• nappattaá¹ƒ mÄ• jiratu, jarappataá¹ƒ mÄ• bhijjatÅ«ti imesu tÄ«su á¹-hÄ• nesu kass natthi, suÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ tena vasavattanÄ• kÄ• rena; tasmÄ• suÃ±Ã±ato, assÄ• mikato, akÄ• m attapaá¹-ikkhepatoti imehi catÅ«hi kÄ• raá¹‡ehi anattÄ• .

vibhavagatikato \Ee 49/, pubbÄ• paravasena bhavasaá¹…kantigamanato, pakatibhÄ• vavij __vipariá¹‡Ä• madhammaá¹ƒ_. idaá¹ƒ aniccavevacanameva. __rÅ«pÄ• aniccÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ« á¹-hapetvÄ• cakkhuá¹ƒ tebhÅ«makadhammÄ• aniccÄ• , no cakkhu. cakkhu pana cakkhu c sesadhammÄ• dukkhÄ• , no cakkhu. cakkhu \Be 46/ pana cakkhu ceva dukkhaÃ±ca. sesad cakkhu pana cakkhu ceva anattÄ• cÄ• ti. rÅ«pÄ• dÄ«supi eseva nayo.

imasmiá¹ƒ pana suttantabhÄ• janÄ«ye tathÄ• gatena kiá¹ƒ dassitanti? dvÄ• dasannaá¹ƒ Ä• anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ. sammÄ• sambuddho hi anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ dassento aniccena vÄ• aniccadukkhehi vÄ• . tattha ``cakkhu, attÄ• ti yo vadeyya, taá¹ƒ na upapajjati. cakkhussa up paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati. yassa kho pana uppÄ• dopi vayopi paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati `attÄ• me uppajjati ca ve evamÄ• gataá¹ƒ hoti. tasmÄ• taá¹ƒ na upapajjati --- cakkhu attÄ• ti yo vadeyya iti cakkhu a III 422). imasmiá¹ƒ sutte aniccena anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ dassesi. ``rÅ«paá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, ana hidaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, attÄ• abhavissa, na yidaá¹ƒ rÅ«paá¹ƒ Ä• bÄ• dhÄ• ya saá¹ƒvatteyya; l evaá¹ƒ me rÅ«paá¹ƒ hotu, evaá¹ƒ me rÅ«paá¹ƒ mÄ• ahosÄ«ti. yasmÄ• ca kho, bhikkhave, rÅ«paá¹ƒ Ä• bÄ• dhÄ• ya saá¹ƒvattati; na ca labbhati rÅ«pe --- evaá¹ƒ me rÅ«paá¹ƒ hotu, e ahosÄ«â€™â€™ ti (SN b III 59; Vin I 20) imasmiá¹ƒ sutte dukkhena anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ da bhikkhave, aniccaá¹ƒ, yadaniccaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ, yaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ tadanattÄ• , yadana nesohamasmi, na meso attÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (SN b III 15) aniccadukkhehi anattalakk aniccadukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ pÄ• kaá¹-attÄ• .

hatthato hi taá¹-á¹-ake vÄ• sarake vÄ• kismiÃ±cideva vÄ• patitvÄ• bhinne `aho anicca â€ aniccaá¹ƒ pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. attabhÄ• vasmiá¹ƒ pana gaá¹‡á¸• apiá¸·akÄ• dÄ«su vÄ• khÄ• á¹‡ukaá¹‡á¹-akÄ• dÄ«hi vÄ• viddhÄ• su `aho dukkhaâ€™ nti vadanti. evaá¹ƒ dukkha anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ apÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ andhakÄ• raá¹ƒ avibhÅ«taá¹ƒ duppaá¹-ivijjhaá¹ƒ dudd duppaÃ±Ã±Ä• panaá¹ƒ \Ee 50/. aniccadukkhalakkhaá¹‡Ä• ni uppÄ• dÄ• vÄ• tathÄ• gatÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• yanti. anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ vinÄ• buddhuppÄ• dÄ• na paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati, buddhup mahiddhikÄ• hi mahÄ• nubhÄ• vÄ• tÄ• pasaparibbÄ• jakÄ• sarabhaá¹…gasatthÄ• rÄ• da vattuá¹ƒ sakkonti, `anattÄ• â€™ ti vattuá¹ƒ na sakkonti. sace hi te sampattaparisÄ• ya anat sakkuá¹‡eyyuá¹ƒ, sampattaparisÄ• ya maggaphalapaá¹-ivedho bhaveyya. anattalakkhaá¹‡a kassaci avisayo, sabbaÃ±Ã±ubuddhÄ• nameva visayo. evametaá¹ƒ anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ ap \Be 47/ anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ dassento \Ne 47/ aniccena vÄ• dassesi, dukkhena vÄ• , anicc taá¹ƒ aniccadukkhehi dassesÄ«ti veditabbaá¹ƒ.

imÄ• ni pana lakkhaá¹‡Ä• ni kissa amanasikÄ• rÄ• appaá¹-ivedhÄ• , kena paá¹-icchannatt aniccalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ tÄ• va udayabbayÄ• naá¹ƒ amanasikÄ• rÄ• appaá¹-ivedhÄ• , santatiy upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti. dukkhalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ abhiá¹‡hasampaá¹-ipÄ«á¸·anassa amanasikÄ• rÄ• a paá¹-icchannattÄ• , na upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti. anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ nÄ• nÄ• dhÄ• tuvinibbhogassa appaá¹-ivedhÄ• , ghanena paá¹-icchannattÄ• , na upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti. udayabbayaá¹ƒ pana par vikopitÄ• ya aniccalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ yÄ• thÄ• vasarasato upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti. abhiá¹‡hasampaá¹-i iriyÄ• pathe ugghÄ• á¹-ite dukkhalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ yÄ• thÄ• vasarasato upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti. nÄ• n ghanavinibbhoge kate anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ yÄ• thÄ• vasarasato upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti.

ettha ca aniccaá¹ƒ aniccalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, dukkhaá¹ƒ dukkhalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, anattÄ• anattal vibhÄ• go veditabbo. tattha __anicca_nti khandhapaÃ±cakaá¹ƒ. kasmÄ• ? uppÄ• davayaÃ± abhÄ• vato vÄ• ; uppÄ• davayaÃ±Ã±athattaá¹ƒ __aniccalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, _ hutvÄ• abhÄ• va vÄ• . ``yadaniccaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ dukkhaâ€™â€™ nti vacanato pana tadeva khandhapaÃ±cakaá¹ƒ abhiá¹‡hasampaá¹-ipÄ«á¸·anato; abhiá¹‡hasampaá¹-ipÄ«á¸·anÄ• kÄ• ro __dukkhalakkhaá¹ dukkhaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ anattÄ• â€™â€™ ti pana vacanato tadeva khandhapaÃ±cakaá¹ƒ __anattÄ avasavattanÄ• kÄ• ro __anattalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ_. iti aÃ±Ã±adeva aniccaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ anattÄ aniccadukkhÄ• nattalakkhaá¹‡Ä• ni. paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• , dvÄ• dasÄ• yatanÄ• ni, aá¹-á¹-hÄ sabbampi aniccaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ anattÄ• nÄ• ma. vuttappakÄ• rÄ• kÄ• ravikÄ• rÄ• aniccad

saá¹…khepato panettha dasÄ• yatanÄ• ni kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• ni, dve tebhÅ«makÄ• ni. sabb veditabbo.

suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

2. abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<155> abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«ye \Be 48/ \Ne 48/ yathÄ• heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vipassakÄ• naá¹ƒ u ``cakkhÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ rÅ«pÄ• yatanaâ€™â€™ nti yugalato Ä• yatanÄ• ni vuttÄ• ni, tathÄ• a ajjhattikabÄ• hirÄ• naá¹ƒ sabbÄ• kÄ• rato sabhÄ• vadassanatthaá¹ƒ ``cakkhÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ s ajjhattikabÄ• hiravavatthÄ• nanayena vuttÄ• ni.

<156> tesaá¹ƒ niddesavÄ• re __tattha katamaá¹ƒ cakkhÄ• yatana_ntiÄ• dÄ«ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ veditabbÄ• ni.

<167> yaá¹ƒ panetaá¹ƒ dhammÄ• yatananiddese ``tattha katamÄ• asaá¹…khatÄ• dhÄ• tu mohakkhayoâ€™â€™ ti vuttaá¹ƒ, tatrÄ• yamattho --- __asaá¹…khatÄ• dhÄ• tÅ«_ti asaá¹…
yasmÄ• panetaá¹ƒ Ä• gamma rÄ• gÄ• dayo khÄ«yanti, tasmÄ• rÄ• gakkhayo dosakkhayo Ä• cariyÄ• naá¹ƒ samÄ• natthakathÄ• .

vitaá¹‡á¸• avÄ• dÄ« panÄ• ha --- `pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ƒ nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• ma natthi, kilesakkha `suttaá¹ƒ Ä• harÄ• â€™ ti ca vutte ``nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ nibbÄ• nanti kho, Ä• vuso sÄ• riputta, vuc Ä• vuso, nibbÄ• nanti? yo kho, Ä• vuso, rÄ• gakkhayo dosakkhayo mohakkhayo --- idaá¹ƒ v etaá¹ƒ jambukhÄ• dakasuttaá¹ƒ Ä• haritvÄ• `iminÄ• suttena veditabbaá¹ƒ pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ kilesakkhayova nibbÄ• naâ€™ nti Ä• ha. so vattabbo --- `kiá¹ƒ pana yathÄ• cetaá¹ƒ suttaá¹ addhÄ• vakkhati --- `Ä• ma \Ee 52/, natthi suttato muÃ±citvÄ• atthoâ€™ ti. tato vattabbo -- suttaá¹ƒ Ä• bhataá¹ƒ; anantarasuttaá¹ƒ Ä• harÄ• â€™ ti. anantarasuttaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma --- ``arah Ä• vuso sÄ• riputta, vuccati; katamaá¹ƒ nu kho, Ä• vuso, arahattanti? yo kho, Ä• vuso, rÄ• g mohakkhayo --- idaá¹ƒ vuccati arahattaâ€™â€™ nti (SN b IV 315) idaá¹ƒ tassevÄ• nantaraâ imasmiá¹ƒ pana naá¹ƒ Ä• bhate Ä• haá¹ƒsu --- `nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ nÄ• ma dhammÄ• yatanapar cattÄ• ro khandhÄ• . nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ sacchikatvÄ• viharanto dhammasenÄ• pati \Be 49/ nibb arahattaá¹ƒ pucchitopi kilesakkhayameva Ä• ha. kiá¹ƒ pana nibbÄ• naÃ±ca arahattaÃ±ca el `ekaá¹ƒ \Ne 49/ vÄ• hotu nÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ• . ko ettha tayÄ• atibahuá¹ƒ cuá¹‡á¹‡Ä«karaá¹‡aá¹

`na tvaá¹ƒ ekaá¹ƒ nÄ• naá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• sÄ«ti. nanu Ã±Ä• te sÄ• dhu hotÄ«â€™ ti evaá¹ƒ puna vaÃ±cetuá¹ƒ asakkonto Ä• ha --- `rÄ• gÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ khÄ«á¹‡ante uppannattÄ• arahattaá¹ƒ mohakkhayoâ€™ ti vuccatÄ«ti. tato naá¹ƒ Ä• haá¹ƒsu --- `mahÄ• kammaá¹ƒ te kataá¹ƒ. laÃ vadÄ• pento etadeva vadÄ• peyya. yatheva ca te etaá¹ƒ vibhajitvÄ• kathitaá¹ƒ, evaá¹ƒ idan nibbÄ• naÃ±hi Ä• gamma rÄ• gÄ• dayo khÄ«á¹‡Ä• ti nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ rÄ• gakkhayo dosakkha tÄ«á¹‡ipi hi etÄ• ni nibbÄ• nasseva adhivacanÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti.

sace evaá¹ƒ vutte saÃ±Ã±attiá¹ƒ gacchati iccetaá¹ƒ kusalaá¹ƒ; no ce, bahunibbÄ• natÄ• ya evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va pucchitabbo --- `rÄ• gakkhayo nÄ• ma rÄ• gasseva khayo udÄ• hu dosamohÄ dosasseva khayo udÄ• hu rÄ• gamohÄ• nampi? mohakkhayo nÄ• ma mohasseva khayo ud vakkhati --- `rÄ• gakkhayo nÄ• ma rÄ• gasseva khayo, dosakkhayo nÄ• ma dosasseva khay khayoâ€™ ti.

tato vattabbo --- `tava vÄ• de rÄ• gakkhayo ekaá¹ƒ nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ hoti, dosakkhayo ekaá¹ƒ, tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ akusalamÅ«lÄ• naá¹ƒ khaye tÄ«á¹‡i nibbÄ• nÄ• ni honti, catunnaá¹ƒ upÄ• dÄ• paÃ±cannaá¹ƒ nÄ«varaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ khaye paÃ±ca, channaá¹ƒ taá¹‡hÄ• kÄ• yÄ• naá¹ƒ kha anusayÄ• naá¹ƒ khaye satta, aá¹-á¹-hannaá¹ƒ micchattÄ• naá¹ƒ khaye aá¹-á¹-ha, navannaá taá¹‡hÄ• mÅ«lakadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ \Ee 53/ khaye nava, dasannaá¹ƒ saá¹ƒyojanÄ• naá¹ƒ kh diyaá¸• á¸• hakilesasahassassa khaye pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ƒ pÄ• á¹-iyekkaá¹ƒ nibbÄ• nanti bahÅ natthi pana te nibbÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ pamÄ• á¹‡anti. evaá¹ƒ pana aggahetvÄ• nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• ekameva nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ rÄ• gakkhayo dosakkhayo mohakkhayoti vuccati. tÄ«á¹‡ipi hetÄ• ni adhivacanÄ• nÄ«ti gaá¹‡haâ€™.

sace \Be 50/ pana evaá¹ƒ vuttepi na sallakkheti, oá¸·Ä• rikatÄ• ya kÄ• retabbo. kathaá¹ƒ? ` acchadÄ«pimigamakkaá¹-Ä• dayopi kilesapariyuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• vatthuá¹ƒ paá¹-isevanti. atha ne paá¹-isevanapariyante kileso vÅ«pasammati. tava vÄ• de acchadÄ«pimigamakkaá¹-Ä• dayo honti. oá¸·Ä• rikaá¹ƒ vata te nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ thÅ«laá¹ƒ, kaá¹‡á¹‡ehi piá¸·andhituá¹ƒ na sakkÄ• 50/ aggahetvÄ• nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• gamma rÄ• gÄ• dayo khÄ«á¹‡Ä• ti ekameva nibbÄ• naá¹ mohakkhayoti vuccati. tÄ«á¹‡ipi hetÄ• ni nibbÄ• nasseva adhivacanÄ• nÄ«ti gaá¹‡haâ€™.

sace pana evaá¹ƒ vuttepi na sallakkheti, gotrabhunÄ• pi kÄ• retabbo. kathaá¹ƒ? evaá¹ƒ tÄ• `tvaá¹ƒ gotrabhu nÄ• ma atthÄ«ti vadesÄ«â€™ ti? `Ä• ma vadÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti. `gotrabhukkha khÄ«yanti, khÄ«yissantÄ«â€™ ti? na khÄ«á¹‡Ä• , na khÄ«yanti; apica kho khÄ«yissantÄ«ti Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ karotÄ«â€™ ti? `nibbÄ• naá¹ƒâ€™. `tava gotrabhukkhaá¹‡e kilesÄ• na k kho khÄ«yissanti. tvaá¹ƒ akhÄ«á¹‡esuyeva kilesesu kilesakkhayaá¹ƒ nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã± anusayesu anusayappahÄ• naá¹ƒ nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±apesi. taá¹ƒ te na sameti. evaá¹ƒ p Ä• gamma rÄ• gÄ• dayo khÄ«á¹‡Ä• ti ekameva nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ rÄ• gakkhayo dosakkhayo m hetÄ• ni nibbÄ• nasseva adhivacanÄ• nÄ«ti gaá¹‡haâ€™.

sace pana evaá¹ƒ vuttepi na sallakkheti, maggena kÄ• retabbo. kathaá¹ƒ? evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va pu maggaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma vadesÄ«â€™ ti? `Ä• ma vademÄ«â€™ ti. `maggakkhaá¹‡e kilesÄ• khÄ« khiyissantÄ«â€™ ti? jÄ• namÄ• no vakkhati --- `khÄ«á¹‡Ä• ti vÄ• khÄ«yissantÄ«ti vÄ• vatt khÄ«yantÄ«ti vattuá¹ƒ \Ee 54/ vaá¹-á¹-atÄ«â€™ ti. `yadi evaá¹ƒ, maggassa kilesakkhayaá¹ƒ katamaá¹ƒ? maggena khÄ«yanakakilesÄ• katame? maggo katamaá¹ƒ kilesakkhayaá¹ƒ nib katame kilese khepeti? tasmÄ• mÄ• evaá¹ƒ gaá¹‡ha. nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ pana Ä• gamma rÄ• gÄ nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ rÄ• gakkhayo dosakkhayo mohakkhayoti vuccati. tÄ«á¹‡ipi hetÄ• ni nibbÄ• na evaá¹ƒ vutte evamÄ• ha --- `tvaá¹ƒ Ä• gamma Ä• gammÄ• ti vadesÄ«â€™ ti? `Ä• ma vade idaá¹ƒ te kuto laddhaâ€™ nti? `suttato laddhaâ€™ nti \Be 51/. `Ä• hara suttaâ€™ nti. ``evaá taá¹‡hÄ• ca taá¹ƒ Ä• gamma, tamhi khÄ«á¹‡Ä• , tamhi bhaggÄ• , na ca kiÃ±ci kadÄ• cÄ«â paravÄ• dÄ« tuá¹‡hÄ«bhÄ• vaá¹ƒ Ä• pannoti.

idhÄ• pi dasÄ• yatanÄ• ni kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• ni, dve pana catubhÅ«makÄ• ni lokiyalokuttara

abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

3. paÃ±hÄ• pucchakavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<168> idhÄ• pi \Ne 51/ paÃ±hÄ• pucchake yaá¹ƒ labbhati yaÃ±ca na labbhati, taá¹ƒ sabba labbhamÄ• navaseneva vissajjanaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ; na kevalaÃ±ca idha, sabbesupi paÃ±hÄ• pu pana dasannaá¹ƒ Ä• yatanÄ• naá¹ƒ rÅ«pabhÄ• vena abyÄ• katatÄ• veditabbÄ• . dvinnaá¹ƒ khandhavibhaá¹…ge catunnaá¹ƒ khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ viya kusalÄ• dibhÄ• vo veditabbo. kevala sappaccayÄ• va saá¹…khatÄ• va dhammÄ• yatanaá¹ƒ pana ``siyÄ• appaccayaá¹ƒ, siyÄ• Ä• rammaá¹‡attikesu ca anÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ sukhumarÅ«pasaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ dhammÄ• ya bhajati. taÃ±ca kho anÄ• rammaá¹‡attÄ• na parittÄ• dibhÄ• vena navattabbadhammÄ• ran sesaá¹ƒ tÄ• disameva. idhÄ• pi hi cattÄ• ro khandhÄ• viya dvÄ• yatanÄ• paÃ±capaá¹‡á¹‡ Ä• rabbha rajjantassa dussantassa muyhantassa saá¹ƒvarantassa sammasantassa paccav parittÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ti sabbaá¹ƒ khandhesu vuttasadisamevÄ• ti.

sammohavinodaniyÄ• vibhaá¹…gaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya

Ä• yatanavibhaá¹…gavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

3. dhÄ• tuvibhaá¹…go

1. suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<172> idÄ• ni \Ee 55/ \Be 52/ \Ne 52/ tadanantare dhÄ• tuvibhaá¹…ge sabbÄ• dhÄ• tuyo saá¹…khipitvÄ• tÄ«hi chakkehi suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ dassento __cha dhÄ• tuyo_tiÄ• d gaá¹‡anaparicchedo. __dhÄ• tuyo_ti paricchinnadhammanidassanaá¹ƒ. __pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ nÄ• ma sabhÄ• vaá¹-á¹-ho, sabhÄ• vaá¹-á¹-ho nÄ• ma suÃ±Ã±ataá¹-á¹-ho, suÃ±Ã±ataá¹-á¹ evaá¹ƒ sabhÄ• vasuÃ±Ã±atanissattaá¹-á¹-hena pathavÄ«yeva dhÄ• tu __pathavÄ«dhÄ• tu_ nayo. evamettha padasamÄ• saá¹ƒ viditvÄ• evamattho veditabbo --- __pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«_ __Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«_ti Ä• bandhanadhÄ• tu. __tejodhÄ• tÅ«_ti paripÄ• canadhÄ• tu. __vÄ• yo __Ä• kÄ• sadhÄ• tÅ«_ti asamphuá¹-á¹-hadhÄ• tu. __viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«_ti vijÄ• nanad

<173> __pathavÄ«dhÄ• tudvaya_nti pathavÄ«dhÄ• tu dve ayaá¹ƒ. ayaá¹ƒ pathavÄ«dhÄ• tu ajjhattikabÄ• hirabhedena pana dve dhÄ• tuyo evÄ• ti attho. tenevÄ• ha --- ``atthi ajjhattikÄ• bÄ• hirÄ• â€™â€™ ti. tattha __ajjhattikÄ• _ti sattasantÄ• napariyÄ• pannÄ• niyakajjhattÄ• saá¹…khÄ• rasantÄ• napariyÄ• pannÄ• anindriyabaddhÄ• . __ajjhattaá¹ƒ paccatta_nti ubh niyakajjhattÄ• dhivacanameva. idÄ• ni taá¹ƒ sabhÄ• vÄ• kÄ• rato dassetuá¹ƒ __kakkhaá¸·a __kakkhaá¸·a_nti thaddhaá¹ƒ. __kharigata_nti pharusaá¹ƒ. __kakkhaá¸·atta_nti kakkhaá¸·ab __kakkhaá¸·abhÄ• vo_ti kakkhaá¸·asabhÄ• vo. __ajjhattaá¹ƒ upÄ• dinna_nti niyakajjhattasa upÄ• dinnaá¹ƒ. upÄ• dinnaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma sarÄ«raá¹-á¹-hakaá¹ƒ. sarÄ«raá¹-á¹-hakaÃ±hi kamm

mÄ• vÄ• , taá¹ƒ sandhÄ• ya upÄ• dinnampi atthi anupÄ• dinnampi; Ä• dinnaggahitaparÄ• r \Ee 56/ sabbampetaá¹ƒ upÄ• dinnamevÄ• ti dassetuá¹ƒ ``ajjhattaá¹ƒ upÄ• dinnaâ€™â€™ n

idÄ• ni tameva pathavÄ«dhÄ• tuá¹ƒ vatthuvasena dassetuá¹ƒ __seyyathidaá¹ƒ kesÄ• lomÄ __seyyathida_nti nipÄ• to. tassattho --- yÄ• sÄ• ajjhattikÄ• pathavÄ«dhÄ• tu sÄ• katamÄ paccattaá¹ƒ kakkhaá¸·aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma taá¹ƒ katamanti? __kesÄ• lomÄ• _tiÄ• di tassÄ• ajjhatt vatthuvasena pabhedadassanaá¹ƒ. idaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ hoti --- kesÄ• nÄ• ma ajjhattÄ• upÄ• di kakkhaá¸·attalakkhaá¹‡Ä• imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko \Be 53/ koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so. lomÄ• karÄ«saá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. idha pana avuttampi paá¹-isambhidÄ• magge (Paá¹-is I 4) pÄ• á¸·iÄ• ru __matthaluá¹…gaá¹ƒ_ Ä• haritvÄ• matthaluá¹…gaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma ajjhattaá¹ƒ upÄ• dinnaá¹ƒ sa kakkhaá¸·attalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so. parato Ä• poc pittÄ• dÄ«supi eseva nayo.

iminÄ• kiá¹ƒ dassitaá¹ƒ hoti? dhÄ• tumanasikÄ• ro. imasmiá¹ƒ pana dhÄ• tumanasikÄ• re vipassanaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapetvÄ• uttamatthaá¹ƒ arahattaá¹ƒ pÄ• puá¹‡itukÄ• mena kiá¹ƒ katt catupÄ• risuddhisÄ«laá¹ƒ sodhetabbaá¹ƒ. sÄ«lavato hi kammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nabhÄ• vanÄ• ijjha sodhanavidhÄ• naá¹ƒ visuddhimagge vuttanayeneva veditabbaá¹ƒ. visuddhasÄ«lena pana pubbapalibodhÄ• chinditabbÄ• . tesampi chindanavidhÄ• naá¹ƒ visuddhimagge vuttanayen chinnapalibodhena dhÄ• tumanasikÄ• rakammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ uggaá¹‡hitabbaá¹ƒ. Ä• cari dhÄ• tumanasikÄ• rakammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ uggaá¹‡hÄ• pentena sattavidhaá¹ƒ uggahakos manasikÄ• rakosallaá¹ƒ Ä• cikkhitabbaá¹ƒ. antevÄ• sikenÄ• pi Ä• cariyassa santike bahuvÄ nijjaá¹-aá¹ƒ paguá¹‡aá¹ƒ kammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ kÄ• tabbaá¹ƒ. vuttaÃ±hetaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hakat ``Ä• dikammikena bhikkhunÄ• jarÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• muccitukÄ• mena sattahÄ• kÄ• rehi uggah dasahÄ• kÄ• rehi manasikÄ• rakosallaá¹ƒ icchitabbaâ€™â€™ nti.

tattha vacasÄ• , manasÄ• , vaá¹‡á¹‡ato, saá¹‡á¹-hÄ• nato, disato, okÄ• sato, paricchedato imasmiá¹ƒ dhÄ• tumanasikÄ• rakammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne __ `uggahakosallaá¹ƒâ€™ _ icchitabba nÄ• tisÄ«ghato, nÄ• tisaá¹‡ikato, vikkhepapaá¹-ibÄ• hanato \Ee 57/, paá¹‡á¹‡attisamatikkam anupubbamuÃ±canato, lakkhaá¹‡ato, tayo ca suttantÄ• ti imehi dasahÄ• kÄ• rehi __ `mana icchitabbaá¹ƒ. tadubhayampi parato satipaá¹-á¹-hÄ• navibhaá¹…ge Ä• vi bhavissati.

evaá¹ƒ \Ne 54/ uggahitakammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nena pana visuddhimagge vutte aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa s paÃ±caá¹…gasamannÄ• gate senÄ• sane vasantena attanÄ• pi paÃ±cahi padhÄ• niyaá¹…
pacchÄ• bhattaá¹ƒ piá¹‡á¸• apÄ• tapaá¹-ikkantena vivittokÄ• sagatena kammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá manasikarontena ca vaá¹‡á¹‡asaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• nadisokÄ• saparicchedavasena \Be 54/ kesÄ• d manasikaritvÄ• avasÄ• ne evaá¹ƒ manasikÄ• ro pavattetabbo --- ime __kesÄ• _ nÄ• ma sÄ«sakaá¹-Ä• hapaliveá¹-hanacamme jÄ• tÄ• . tattha yathÄ• vammikamatthake jÄ• tesu ku vammikamatthako jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi kuá¹‡á¹-hatiá¹‡Ä• ni jÄ• tÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, nÄ• pi kuá¹‡á¹-h

`mayaá¹ƒ vammikamatthake jÄ• tÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, evameva na sÄ«sakaá¹-Ä• hapaliveá¹-hana jÄ• tÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi kesÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ sÄ«sakaá¹-Ä• hapaliveá¹-hanacamme jÄ• Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti kesÄ• nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__lomÄ• _ sarÄ«raveá¹-hanacamme jÄ• tÄ• . tattha yathÄ• suÃ±Ã±agÄ• maá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne j suÃ±Ã±agÄ• maá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi dabbatiá¹‡Ä• ni jÄ• tÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, nÄ• pi `mayaá¹ƒ suÃ±Ã±agÄ• maá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne jÄ• tÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, evameva na sarÄ«raveá¹-hanac jÄ• tÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi lomÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ sarÄ«raveá¹-hanacamme jÄ• tÄ• â€™ ti. a Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti lomÄ• nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__nakhÄ• _ aá¹…gulÄ«naá¹ƒ aggesu jÄ• tÄ• . tattha yathÄ• kumÄ• rakesu daá¹‡á¸• akehi kÄ«á¸·antesu na daá¹‡á¸• akÄ• jÄ• nanti `amhesu madhukaá¹-á¹-hikÄ• á¹-hapitÄ• â€™ ti, jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ daá¹‡á¸• akesu á¹-hapitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na aá¹…guliyo jÄ• nanti `am jÄ• tÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi nakhÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ aá¹…gulÄ«naá¹ƒ aggesu jÄ• tÄ• â€™ ti.
Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti nakhÄ• nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re p
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__dantÄ• _ hanukaá¹-á¹-hikesu jÄ• tÄ• . tattha yathÄ• vaá¸• á¸• hakÄ«hi pÄ• sÄ• á¹‡audu silesajÄ• tena bandhitvÄ• á¹-hapitathambhesu na udukkhalÄ• ni jÄ• nanti `amhesu thambh thambhÄ• \Ne 55/ jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ udukkhalesu á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na hanukaá¹-dantÄ• jÄ• tÄ• â€™ ti \Be 55/, nÄ• pi dantÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ hanukaá¹-á¹-hikesu jÄ• tÄ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti dantÄ• nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__taco_ sakalasarÄ«raá¹ƒ pariyonandhitvÄ• á¹-hito. tattha yathÄ• allagocammapariyonad na mahÄ• vÄ«á¹‡Ä• jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ allagocammena pariyonaddhÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi allag mahÄ• vÄ«á¹‡Ä• pariyoddhÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na sarÄ«raá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ tacena pa jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayÄ• sarÄ«raá¹ƒ pariyonaddhanti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkha taco nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ_ aá¹-á¹-hisaá¹…ghÄ• á¹-aá¹ƒ anulimpitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• mahÄ•
bhittiyÄ• na bhitti jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ mahÄ• mattikÄ• ya littÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi mahÄ• mattikÄ mahÄ• bhitti littÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na aá¹-á¹-hisaá¹…ghÄ• á¹-o jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ navamaa maá¹ƒsena littoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayÄ• aá¹-á¹-hisaá¹…ghÄ• á¹-o littoâ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«

acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__nhÄ• ru_ sarÄ«rabbhantare aá¹-á¹-hÄ«ni Ä• bandhamÄ• nÄ• á¹-hitÄ• . tattha yathÄ• va
kuá¹-á¹-adÄ• rÅ«su na kuá¹-á¹-adÄ• rÅ«ni jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ vallÄ«hi vinaddhÄ• nÄ«â€™ t `amhehi kuá¹-á¹-adÄ• rÅ«ni vinaddhÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, evameva na aá¹-á¹-hÄ«ni jÄ• nanti `may Ä• baddhÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, nÄ• pi nhÄ• rÅ« jÄ• nanti `amhehi aá¹-á¹-hÄ«ni Ä• baddhÄ• nÄ«â€ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• \Ee 59/ ete dhammÄ• . iti nhÄ• ru nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sa koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__aá¹-á¹-hÄ«su_ paá¹‡hikaá¹-á¹-hi gopphakaá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. gopphakaá jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hi Å«ruá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á Å«ruá¹-á¹-hi kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ \Be 56/. kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-hi piá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¹-ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. piá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¹-ako gÄ«vaá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hito. gÄ«vaá¹
sÄ«saá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. sÄ«saá¹-á¹-hi gÄ«vaá¹-á¹-hike patiá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. gÄ piá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¹-ake patiá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. piá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¹-ako kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-himhi patiá¹-á¹-hito.
kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-hi Å«ruá¹-á¹-hike patiá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. Å«ruá¹-á¹-hi jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hike patiá¹-á¹-hita jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hi gopphakaá¹-á¹-hike patiá¹-á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. gopphakaá¹-á¹-hi paá¹‡hikaá¹-á¹-hik tattha yathÄ• iá¹-á¹-hakadÄ• rugomayÄ• disaÃ±cayesu na heá¹-á¹-himÄ• heá¹-á¹-himÄ• j uparime ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi uparimÄ• uparimÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ heá¹-á patiá¹-á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na paá¹‡hikaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ gopphakaá¹-á¹-hiá¹ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na gopphakaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ Å«ruá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na Å«ruá¹-á kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ piá¹-á¹-hika ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na piá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¹-ako jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ gÄ«vaá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukk ti, na gÄ«vaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ sÄ«saá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na sÄ«s `ahaá¹ƒ gÄ«vaá¹-á¹-himhi patiá¹-á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na gÄ«vaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ piá¹-á¹-patiá¹-á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na piá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¹-ako jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-himhi patiá¹-á¹-kaá¹-iá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ Å«ruá¹-á¹-himhi patiá¹-á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na Å«ruá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-himhi patiá¹-á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na jaá¹…ghaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ gopphaka patiá¹-á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, na gopphakaá¹-á¹-hi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ paá¹‡hikaá¹-á¹-himhi patiá¹-á¹-aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti aá¹-á¹-hi nÄ• ma

koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__aá¹-á¹-himiÃ±jaá¹ƒ_ tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ«naá¹ƒ abbhantare á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ veá¸·upabbÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ anto pakkhittesu sinnavettaggÄ• dÄ«su \Ee 60/ na veá¸·upabbÄ• d vettaggÄ• dÄ«ni pakkhittÄ• nÄ«â€™ ti, nÄ• pi vettaggÄ• dÄ«ni jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ veá¸·upa evameva na aá¹-á¹-hÄ«ni jÄ• nanti `amhÄ• kaá¹ƒ anto aá¹-á¹-himiÃ±jaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ«naá¹ƒ anto á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapacc dhammÄ• . iti aá¹-á¹-himiÃ±jaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so a nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__vakkaá¹ƒ_ \Ne 57/ galavÄ• á¹-akato nikkhantena ekamÅ«lena thokaá¹ƒ gantvÄ• dvidhÄ vinibaddhaá¹ƒ hutvÄ• hadayamaá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ parikkhipitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• vaá¹‡á¹-ambaphaladvaye na vaá¹‡á¹-aá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayÄ• ambaphaladvayaá¹ƒ upanibaddhaâ€™ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ vaá¹‡á¹-ena upanibaddhaâ€™ nti, evameva na thÅ«lanhÄ• ru jÄ• nÄ• ti ` upanibaddhaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi vakkaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ thÅ«lanhÄ• runÄ• upanibaddhaâ€ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti vakkaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re p
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__hadayaá¹ƒ_ sarÄ«rabbhantare uraá¹-á¹-hipaÃ±jaramajjhaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha jiá¹‡á¹‡asandamÄ• nikapaÃ±jarabbhantaraá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hapitÄ• ya maá¹ƒsapesiyÄ• na jiá¹‡á¹‡asandamÄ• nikapaÃ±jarabbhantaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `maá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya maá¹ƒsapesi á¹-maá¹ƒsapesi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ jiá¹‡á¹‡asandamÄ• nikapaÃ±jarabbhantaraá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹ uraá¹-á¹-hipaÃ±jarabbhantaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `maá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya hadayaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• `ahaá¹ƒ uraá¹-á¹-hipaÃ±jarabbhantaraá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti hadayaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__yakanaá¹ƒ_ antosarÄ«re dvinnaá¹ƒ thanÄ• naá¹ƒ abbhantare dakkhiá¹‡apassaá¹ƒ nissÄ
yathÄ• ukkhalikapÄ• lapassamhi lagge yamakamaá¹ƒsapiá¹‡á¸• e na ukkhalikapÄ• lapassa yamakamaá¹ƒsapiá¹‡á¸• o laggoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi yamakamaá¹ƒsapiá¹‡á¸• o \Ee 61/ jÄ• nÄ• t laggoâ€™ ti, evameva na thanÄ• naá¹ƒ abbhantare dakkhiá¹‡apassaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `maá¹ƒ n á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi yakanaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ thanÄ• naá¹ƒ abbhantare dakkhiá¹‡apa
nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti yakanaá¹ƒ nÄ
pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ•

__kilomakesu_ paá¹-icchannakilomakaá¹ƒ hadayaÃ±ca vakkaÃ±ca parivÄ• retvÄ• á¹-hitaá apaá¹-icchannakilomakaá¹ƒ sakalasarÄ«re cammassa heá¹-á¹-hato maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ pariyonan yathÄ• pilotikapaliveá¹-hite maá¹ƒse na maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ pilotikÄ• ya paliveá¹ pilotikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayÄ• maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ paliveá¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na vakkahadayÄ• n \Ne 58/ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ kilomakena paá¹-icchannaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi kilomakaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti ` sakalasarÄ«re maá¹ƒsaÃ±ca paá¹-icchannaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccav dhammÄ• . iti kilomakaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetan thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__pihakaá¹ƒ_ hadayassa vÄ• mapasse udarapaá¹-alassa matthakapassaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-h koá¹-á¹-hakamatthakapassaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hitÄ• ya gomayapiá¹‡á¸• iyÄ• na koá¹-á¹-haka `gomayapiá¹‡á¸• i maá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi gomayapiá¹‡á¸• i jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá koá¹-á¹-hakamatthakapassaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na udarapaá¹-alassa m `pihakaá¹ƒ maá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi pihakaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ udarapaá¹-a nissÄ• ya á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dham imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thad

__papphÄ• saá¹ƒ_ sarÄ«rabbhantare dvinnaá¹ƒ thanÄ• naá¹ƒ abbhantare hadayaÃ±ca yak olambantaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• jiá¹‡á¹‡akoá¹-á¹-habbhantare olambamÄ• ne sakuá jiá¹‡á¹‡akoá¹-á¹-habbhantaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi sakuá¹‡akulÄ• vako olambamÄ• no á¹-hito sakuá¹‡akulÄ• vako jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ jiá¹‡á¹‡akoá¹-á¹-habbhantare olambamÄ• no á¹-hitoâ sarÄ«rabbhantaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi papphÄ• saá¹ƒ olambamÄ• naá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• `ahaá¹ƒ evarÅ«pe sarÄ«rabbhantare olambamÄ• naá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti papphÄ• saá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sar
acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__antaá¹ƒ_ galavÄ• á¹-akato karÄ«samaggapariyante sarÄ«rabbhantare á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha y obhujitvÄ• á¹-hapite chinnasÄ«sadhamanikaá¸·evare na lohitadoá¹‡i jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi dham á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi dhamanikaá¸·evaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ lohitadoá¹‡ikÄ• yaá¹ƒ á¹-hit sarÄ«rabbhantaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi antaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi antaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `aha á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti a imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thad

__antaguá¹‡aá¹ƒ_ \Ne 59/ antantare ekavÄ«sati antabhoge bandhitvÄ• á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha y pÄ• dapuÃ±chanarajjumaá¹‡á¸• alakaá¹ƒ sibbetvÄ• á¹-hitesu rajjukesu na pÄ• dapuÃ±char jÄ• nÄ• ti `rajjukÄ• maá¹ƒ sibbetvÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi rajjukÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ
pÄ• dapuÃ±chanarajjumaá¹‡á¸• alakaá¹ƒ sibbetvÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na antaá¹ƒ jÄ Ä• bandhitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi antaguá¹‡aá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ antaá¹ƒ bandhitvÄ• aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti antaguá¹‡aá¹ƒ n
pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathavÄ«dhÄ•

__udariyaá¹ƒ_ udare á¹-hitaá¹ƒ asitapÄ«takhÄ• yitasÄ• yitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• suvÄ• nadoâ suvÄ• navamathumhi na suvÄ• nadoá¹‡i jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi suvÄ• navamathu á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, n `ahaá¹ƒ suvÄ• nadoá¹‡iyaá¹ƒ á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, evameva na udaraá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi udariyaâ udariyaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ udare á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavek iti udariyaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato

pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__karÄ«saá¹ƒ_ \Ee 63/ pakkÄ• sayasaá¹…khÄ• te aá¹-á¹-haá¹…gulaveá¸·upabbasadise ar tattha yathÄ• veá¸·upabbe omadditvÄ• pakkhittÄ• ya saá¹‡hapaá¹‡á¸• umattikÄ• ya na ve paá¹‡á¸• umattikÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi paá¹‡á¸• umattikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ veá¸·upa na pakkÄ• sayo jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi karÄ«saá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi karÄ«saá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `al á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti k sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto thaddho pathav __matthaluá¹…gaá¹ƒ_ sÄ«sakaá¹-Ä• habbhantare á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• purÄ• á¹‡alÄ• piá¹-á¹-hapiá¹‡á¸• iyÄ• na lÄ• bukaá¹-Ä• haá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi piá¹-á¹-hapiá¹‡á¸• i á¹-hitÄ• piá¹-á¹-hapiá¹‡á¸• i jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ lÄ• bukaá¹-Ä• he á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na sÄ«sak jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi matthaluá¹…gaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi matthaluá¹…gaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti \Be 6 sÄ«sakaá¹-Ä• habbhantare á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡a matthaluá¹…gaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ•

pathavÄ«dhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__yaá¹ƒ_ \Ne 60/ __vÄ• panaÃ±Ã±ampÄ«_ti iminÄ• Ä• pokoá¹-á¹-hÄ• sÄ• dÄ«su tÄ«su a lakkhaá¹‡avasena yevÄ• panakaá¹ƒ pathaviá¹ƒ katvÄ• dasseti.

bÄ• hirapathavÄ«dhÄ• tuniddese __ayo_ti kÄ• á¸·alohaá¹ƒ. __loha_nti jÄ• tilohaá¹ƒ, vijÄ• t kittimalohaá¹ƒ, pisÄ• calohanti catubbidhaá¹ƒ. tattha ayo, sajjhu, suvaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ, tipu, sÄ«s tambalohaá¹ƒ, vekantakanti imÄ• ni satta jÄ• tilohÄ• ni nÄ• ma. nÄ• ganÄ• sikalohaá¹ƒ vijÄ kaá¹ƒsalohaá¹ƒ, vaá¹-á¹-alohaá¹ƒ, Ä• rakÅ«á¹-anti tÄ«á¹‡i kittimalohÄ• ni nÄ• ma. morakkha malinakaá¹ƒ, capalakaá¹ƒ, selakaá¹ƒ, Ä• á¹-akaá¹ƒ, bhallakaá¹ƒ, dÅ«silohanti aá¹-á¹-ha pisÄ tesu paÃ±ca jÄ• tilohÄ• ni pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ vuttÄ• neva. tambalohaá¹ƒ, vekantakalohan jÄ• tilohehi saddhiá¹ƒ sesaá¹ƒ sabbampi idha lohanti veditabbaá¹ƒ.

__tipÅ«_ti setatipu. __sÄ«sa_nti kÄ• á¸·atipu. __sajjhÅ«_ti \Ee 64/ rajataá¹ƒ. __muttÄ• _ti s __maá¹‡Ä«_ti á¹-hapetvÄ• pÄ• á¸·iÄ• gate veá¸·uriyÄ• dayo seso jotirasÄ• dibhedo sabbop vaá¹ƒsavaá¹‡á¹‡amaá¹‡i. __saá¹…kho_ti sÄ• muddikasaá¹…kho. __silÄ• _ti kÄ• á¸·asilÄ• , setasilÄ• tiÄ• dibhedÄ• sabbÄ• pi silÄ• . __pavÄ• á¸·a_nti pavÄ• á¸·ameva. __rajata_nti ka __jÄ• tarÅ«pa_nti suvaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ. __lohitaá¹…ko_ti rattamaá¹‡i. __masÄ• ragalla_nti kaba bahisÄ• rÄ• antamaso nÄ• á¸·ikerÄ• dayopi __tiá¹‡aá¹ƒ_ nÄ• ma. antosÄ• raá¹ƒ antamaso __kaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ_ nÄ• ma. __sakkharÄ• _ti muggamattato yÄ• va muá¹-á¹-hippamÄ• á¹‡Ä• muggamattato pana heá¹-á¹-hÄ• __vÄ• likÄ• _ti vuccati. __kaá¹-hala_nti yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci kapÄ pathavÄ«. __pÄ• sÄ• á¹‡o_ti antomuá¹-á¹-hiyaá¹ƒ asaá¹‡á¹-hahanato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya hatthi pÄ• sÄ• á¹‡o nÄ• ma. hatthippamÄ• á¹‡ato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya pana upari __pabbato_ \Be 61/

iminÄ• tÄ• laá¹-á¹-hi-nÄ• á¸·ikera-phalÄ• dibhedaá¹ƒ sesapathaviá¹ƒ gaá¹‡hÄ• ti. __yÄ• ca pathavÄ«dhÄ• tu yÄ• ca bÄ• hirÄ• _ti iminÄ• dvepi pathavÄ«dhÄ• tuyo kakkhaá¸·aá¹-á¹-he pathavÄ«dhÄ• tu evÄ• ti dasseti.

<174> __Ä• podhÄ• tu_niddesÄ• dÄ«su heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayeneva veditabbaá¹ƒ. __Ä• p Ä• bandhanavasena Ä• po. tadeva Ä• posabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ• Ä• pogataá¹ƒ nÄ• ma. sne snehasabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ• __snehagataá¹ƒ_ nÄ• ma. __bandhanattaá¹ƒ rÅ«passÄ• _ti a bandhanabhÄ• vo. __pittaá¹ƒ semha_ntiÄ• dÄ«nipi \Ne 61/ vaá¹‡á¹‡asaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• nadisokÄ pariggahetvÄ• dhÄ• tuvaseneva manasikÄ• tabbÄ• ni.

tatrÄ• yaá¹ƒ nayo --- __pittesu_ hi abaddhapittaá¹ƒ jÄ«vitindriyapaá¹-ibaddhaá¹ƒ sakalasarÄ
á¹-hitaá¹ƒ, baddhapittaá¹ƒ pittakosake á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• pÅ«vaá¹ƒ byÄ• petvÄ• á¹-h jÄ• nÄ• ti `telaá¹ƒ maá¹ƒ byÄ• petvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi telaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ pÅ«v á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na sarÄ«raá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `abaddhapittaá¹ƒ maá¹ƒ byÄ• petvÄ• á¹-h abaddhapittaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ sarÄ«raá¹ƒ byÄ• petvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. yathÄ• ca vass kosÄ• takÄ«kosake na kosÄ• takÄ«kosako jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi vassodakaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ `ahaá¹ƒ kosÄ• takÄ«kosake á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na pittakosako jÄ• nÄ• ti mayi baddha baddhapittaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ pittakosake á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhog dhammÄ• . iti pittaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano aby yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__semhaá¹ƒ_ ekapatthapÅ«rappamÄ• á¹‡aá¹ƒ udarapaá¹-ale á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• upa saÃ±jÄ• tapheá¹‡apaá¹-alÄ• ya candanikÄ• ya na candanikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi pheá¹‡apaá pheá¹‡apaá¹-alaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ candanikÄ• ya á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na udarapaâ semhaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi semhaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ udarapaá¹-ale á¹-hitaâ€™ nti.
Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti semhaá¹ƒ \Be 62/ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ s koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä

__pubbo_ anibaddhokÄ• so, yattha yattheva khÄ• á¹‡ukaá¹‡á¹-akappaharaá¹‡aaggijÄ• lÄ• sarÄ«rappadese lohitaá¹ƒ saá¹‡á¹-hahitvÄ• paccati, gaá¹‡á¸• apÄ«á¸·akÄ• dayo vÄ• uppa tiá¹-á¹-hati. tattha yathÄ• pharasuppahÄ• rÄ• divasena paggharitaniyÄ• se rukkhe na rukkh pharasuppahÄ• rÄ• dippadesÄ• jÄ• nanti `amhesu niyyÄ• so á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi niyyÄ• s pharasuppahÄ• rÄ• dippadesesu á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, evameva na sarÄ«rassa khÄ• á¹‡ukaá¹‡á¹-jÄ• nanti \Ee 66/ `amhesu pubbo á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi pubbo jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ tesu padese aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti pubbo nÄ• ma in pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandh __lohitesu_ saá¹ƒsaraá¹‡alohitaá¹ƒ abaddhapittaá¹ƒ viya sakalasarÄ«raá¹ƒ byÄ• petvÄ• á sannicitalohitaá¹ƒ yakanaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nassa heá¹-á¹-hÄ• bhÄ• gaá¹ƒ pÅ«retvÄ• ekapattapÅ«r vakkahadayayakanapapphÄ• sÄ• ni tementaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha saá¹ƒsaraá¹‡alohite abad vinicchayo. itaraá¹ƒ pana yathÄ• jajjarakapÄ• laá¹-á¹-he udake heá¹-á¹-hÄ• leá¸• á¸• ukhaá na leá¸• á¸• ukhaá¹‡á¸• Ä• ni jÄ• nanti `mayaá¹ƒ udakena temiyamÄ• nÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, `ahaá¹ƒ leá¸• á¸• ukhaá¹‡á¸• Ä• ni tememÄ«â€™ ti, evameva na yakanassa heá¹-á¹-hÄ• bh vÄ• jÄ• nanti `mayi lohitaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaá¹ƒ, amhe vÄ• temayamÄ• naá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• p `ahaá¹ƒ yakanassa heá¹-á¹-hÄ• bhÄ• gaá¹ƒ pÅ«retvÄ• vakkÄ• dÄ«ni temayamÄ• naá¹ƒ á¹-Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti lohitaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re p acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__sedo_ \Be 63/ aggisantÄ• pÄ• dikÄ• lesu kesalomakÅ«pavivarÄ• ni pÅ«retvÄ• tiá¹-á¹-ha tattha yathÄ• udakÄ• abbÅ«á¸·hamattesu bhisamuá¸·Ä• lakumudanÄ• á¸·akalÄ• pesu na b jÄ• nanti `amhehi udakaá¹ƒ paggharatÄ«â€™ ti, nÄ• pi bhisÄ• dikalÄ• pavivarehi pagghara `ahaá¹ƒ bhisÄ• dikalÄ• pavivarehi paggharÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti, evameva na kesalomakÅ«paviva paggharatÄ«â€™ ti, nÄ• pi sedo jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ kesalomakÅ«pavivarehi paggharÄ• mÄ« Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti sedo nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• a abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__medo_ thÅ«lassa sakalasarÄ«raá¹ƒ pharitvÄ• kisassa jaá¹…ghamaá¹ƒsÄ• dÄ«ni \Ee 67 patthinnasneho. tattha yathÄ• haliddipilotikapaá¹-icchanne maá¹ƒsapuÃ±je na maá¹ƒsapuÃ nissÄ• ya haliddipilotikÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi haliddipilotikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ maá¹ƒsa á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, evameva na sakalasarÄ«re jaá¹…ghÄ• dÄ«su vÄ• maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti ` á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi medo jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ sakalasarÄ«re jaá¹…ghÄ• dÄ«su vÄ• maá¹ƒs aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti medo nÄ• ma im 63/ koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto patthinnasneho patthinnayÅ«sabh Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__assu_ yadÄ• saÃ±jÄ• yati tadÄ• akkhikÅ«pake pÅ«retvÄ• tiá¹-á¹-hati vÄ• paggharati v udakapuá¹‡á¹‡esu taruá¹‡atÄ• laá¹-á¹-hikÅ«pakesu na taruá¹‡atÄ• laá¹-á¹-hikÅ«pakÄ• jÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi udakaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ taruá¹‡atÄ• laá¹-á¹-hikÅ«pakesu á¹-hitaâ akkhikÅ«pakÄ• jÄ• nanti `amhesu assu á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, nÄ• pi assu jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ akkh aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti assu nÄ• ma ima
koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä

__vasÄ• _ aggisantÄ• pÄ• dikÄ• le hatthatalahatthapiá¹-á¹-hipÄ• datalapÄ• dapiá¹-á¹-hinÄ• sapuá¹-analÄ• á¹-aaá¹ƒsakÅ«á¹-es tattha yathÄ• pakkhittatele Ä• cÄ• me \Be 64/ na Ä• cÄ• mo jÄ• nÄ• ti `maá¹ƒ telaá¹ƒ ajjhot nÄ• pi telaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ Ä• cÄ• maá¹ƒ ajjhottharitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na h

jÄ• nÄ• ti `maá¹ƒ vasÄ• ajjhottharitvÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi vasÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ ha ajjhottharitvÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ« Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__kheá¸·o_ tathÄ• rÅ«pe kheá¸·uppattipaccaye sati ubhohi kapolapassehi orohitvÄ• jivhÄ•
yathÄ• abbocchinnaudakanissande nadÄ«tÄ«rakÅ«pake na kÅ«patalaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi ti, nÄ• pi udakaá¹ƒ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ kÅ«patale santiá¹-á¹-hÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti \Ee 68/, evameva jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi ubhohi kapolapassehi orohitvÄ• kheá¸·o á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi kheá¸·o jÄ• n kapolapassehi orohitvÄ• jivhÄ• tale á¹-hitoâ€™ ti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavek iti kheá¸·o nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__siá¹…ghÄ• á¹‡ikÄ• _ yadÄ• saÃ±jÄ• yati tadÄ• nÄ• sÄ• puá¹-e pÅ«retvÄ• tiá¹-á¹-hati v yathÄ• \Ne 64/ pÅ«tidadhibharitÄ• ya sippikÄ• ya na sippikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi pÅ«tidadhi á pÅ«tidadhi jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ sippikÄ• ya á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na nÄ• sÄ• puá¹-Ä• jÄ• siá¹…ghÄ• á¹‡ikÄ• á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi siá¹…ghÄ• á¹‡ikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ nÄ• sÄ• p aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti siá¹…ghÄ• á¹‡ik
pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä• bandh

__lasikÄ• _ aá¹-á¹-hikasandhÄ«naá¹ƒ abbhaÃ±janakiccaá¹ƒ sÄ• dhayamÄ• nÄ• asÄ«tisat yathÄ• telabbhaÃ±jite akkhe na akkho jÄ• nÄ• ti `maá¹ƒ telaá¹ƒ abbhaÃ±jitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ akkhaá¹ƒ abbhaÃ±jitvÄ• á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, evameva na asÄ«tisatasandhay abbhaÃ±jitvÄ• \Be 65/ á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti, nÄ• pi lasikÄ• jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ asÄ«tisatasandhay á¹-hitÄ• â€™ ti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡arahitÄ• ete dhammÄ• . iti sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto yÅ«sabhÅ«to Ä Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti.

__muttaá¹ƒ_ vatthissa abbhantare á¹-hitaá¹ƒ. tattha yathÄ• candanikÄ• ya pakkhitte adhor na ravaá¹‡aghaá¹-o jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi candanikÄ• raso á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, nÄ• pi candanikÄ• raso ravaá¹‡aghaá¹-e á¹-hitoâ€™ ti, evameva na vatthi jÄ• nÄ• ti `mayi muttaá¹ƒ á¹-hitaâ€™ nti, jÄ• nÄ• ti `ahaá¹ƒ vatthimhi á¹-hitaâ€™ nti. aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ Ä• bhogapaccavekkhaá¹‡
muttaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ Ä• bandhanÄ• kÄ• ro Ä• podhÄ• tÅ«ti. __yaá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti avasesesu tÄ«su koá¹-á¹-hÄ \Ee 69/ vuttaá¹ƒ.

__bÄ• hiraÄ• podhÄ• tu_niddese mÅ«laá¹ƒ paá¹-icca nibbatto raso __mÅ«laraso_ nÄ• ma nayo. khÄ«rÄ• dÄ«ni pÄ• kaá¹-Ä• neva. yathÄ• pana bhesajjasikkhÄ• pade evamidha niya

khÄ«raá¹ƒ khÄ«rameva. sesesupi eseva nayo. __bhummÄ• nÄ«_ti Ä• vÄ• á¹-Ä• dÄ«su á¹-h __antalikkhÄ• nÄ«_ti pathaviá¹ƒ appattÄ• ni vassodakÄ• ni. __yaá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti himodakakappavinÄ• sakaudakapathavÄ«sandhÄ• rakaudakÄ• dÄ«ni idha yevÄ• panakaá¹

<175> __tejodhÄ• tu_niddese \Ne 65/ tejanavasena __tejo_. tejova tejobhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ usmÄ• _ti uá¹‡hÄ• kÄ• ro. usmÄ• va usmÄ• bhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ• __usmÄ• gataá¹ƒ. usuma usumabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ• __usumagataá¹ƒ. yena cÄ• _ti yena tejogatena kuppitena. __sa santappati, ekÄ• hikajarÄ• dibhÄ• vena usumajÄ• to hoti. __yena ca jÄ«rÄ«yatÄ«_ti yena a indriyavekallataá¹ƒ balaparikkhayaá¹ƒ valipalitÄ• dibhÄ• vaÃ±ca pÄ• puá¹‡Ä• ti. __yena ca kuppitena ayaá¹ƒ kÄ• yo á¸• ayhati, so ca \Be 66/ puggalo `á¸• ayhÄ• mi á¸• ayhÄ• mÄ«â€™ satadhotasappigosÄ«tacandanÄ• dilepanaÃ±ceva tÄ• lavaá¹‡á¹-avÄ• taÃ±ca paccÄ• sÄ«sa asitapÄ«takhÄ• yitasÄ• yitaá¹ƒ sammÄ• pariá¹‡Ä• maá¹ƒ gacchatÄ«_ti yenetaá¹ƒ asitaá¹ƒ pÄ• nakÄ• di, khÄ• yitaá¹ƒ vÄ• piá¹-á¹-hakhajjakÄ• di, sÄ• yitaá¹ƒ vÄ• ambapakkamadhup paripÄ• kaá¹ƒ gacchati, rasÄ• dibhÄ• vena vivekaá¹ƒ gacchatÄ«ti attho. ettha ca purimÄ• t catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• , pacchimo kammasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nova. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• vettha padasaá idaá¹ƒ pana manasikÄ• ravidhÄ• naá¹ƒ --- idha bhikkhu `yena santappati, ayaá¹ƒ imasmiá¹ koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissatto paripÄ• canÄ• kÄ• ro tejodhÄ• tÅ«â€™ jÄ«rÄ«yati, yena pariá¸• ayhati, yena asitapÄ«takhÄ• yitasÄ• yitaá¹ƒ sammÄ• pariá¹‡Ä• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko \Ee 70/ koá¹-á¹-hÄ• so acetano abyÄ• kato suÃ±Ã±o nissa tejodhÄ• tÅ«â€™ ti manasi karoti. __yaá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• katiko ek yevÄ• panakaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ paviá¹-á¹-ho.

__bÄ• hiratejodhÄ• tu_niddese kaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ paá¹-icca pajjalito kaá¹-á¹-hupÄ• dÄ• no aggi sakalikaggiÄ• dÄ«supi eseva nayo. __saá¹…kÄ• raggÄ«_ti kacavaraá¹ƒ saá¹ƒkaá¸• á¸• hitv __indaggÄ«_ti asaniaggi. __aggisantÄ• po_ti jÄ• lÄ• ya vÄ• vÄ«taccikaá¹…gÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ __sÅ«riyasantÄ• po_ti Ä• tapo. __kaá¹-á¹-hasannicayasantÄ• po_ti kaá¹-á¹-harÄ• siá¹-á¹-hÄ eseva nayo. __yaá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti petaggi kappavinÄ• saggi nirayaggiÄ• dayo idha yevÄ• paviá¹-á¹-hÄ• .

<176> __vÄ• yodhÄ• tu_niddese vÄ• yanavasena __vÄ• yo_. vÄ• yova vÄ• yobhÄ• vaá¹ƒ thambhitattaá¹ƒ rÅ«passÄ• _ti avinibbhogarÅ«passa thambhitabhÄ• vo. __uddhaá¹…gamÄ pavattakÄ• uddhaá¹ƒ Ä• rohanavÄ• tÄ• \Ne 66/. __adhogamÄ• vÄ• tÄ• _ti uccÄ• rapassÄ orohanavÄ• tÄ• . __kucchisayÄ• vÄ• tÄ• _ti antÄ• naá¹ƒ bahivÄ• tÄ• . __koá¹-á¹-hÄ• sayÄ antovÄ• tÄ• . __aá¹…gamaá¹…gÄ• nusÄ• rino vÄ• tÄ• _ti dhamanijÄ• lÄ• nusÄ• rena saka anusaá¹-Ä• samiÃ±janapasÄ• raá¹‡Ä• dinibbattakÄ• \Be 67/ vÄ• tÄ• . __satthakavÄ• tÄ• _ kattariyÄ• chindantÄ• viya pavattavÄ• tÄ• . __khurakavÄ• tÄ• _ti khurena viya hadayaá¹ƒ __uppalakavÄ• tÄ• _ti hadayamaá¹ƒsameva uppÄ• á¹-anakavÄ• tÄ• . __assÄ• so_ti \Ee 71

__passÄ• so_ti bahinikkhamananÄ• sikÄ• vato. ettha ca purimÄ• sabbe catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• cittasamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• va. ayamettha padavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

idaá¹ƒ pana manasikÄ• ravidhÄ• naá¹ƒ --- idha bhikkhu uddhaá¹…gamÄ• dibhede vÄ• te u pariggahetvÄ• `uddhaá¹…gamÄ• vÄ• tÄ• nÄ• ma imasmiá¹ƒ sarÄ«re pÄ• á¹-iyekko koá¹-suÃ±Ã±o nissatto vitthambhanÄ• kÄ• ro vÄ• yodhÄ• tÅ«â€™ ti manasi karoti. sesesupi ese panÄ• _ti sese vÄ• yokoá¹-á¹-hÄ• se anugatÄ• vÄ• tÄ• idha yevÄ• panakaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ

__bÄ• hiravÄ• yodhÄ• tu_niddese __puratthimÄ• vÄ• tÄ• _ti puratthimadisato Ä• gatÄ• v __pacchimuttaradakkhiá¹‡esu_pi eseva nayo. __sarajÄ• vÄ• tÄ• _ti saha rajena sarajÄ• . _
rajavirahitÄ• suddhÄ• arajÄ• nÄ• ma. __sÄ«tÄ• _ti sÄ«tautusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• sÄ«taval __uá¹‡hÄ• _ti uá¹‡hautusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• uá¹‡havalÄ• hakantare samuá¹-á¹-hitÄ• . __pa tanukavÄ• tÄ• . __adhimattÄ• _ti balavavÄ• tÄ• . __kÄ• á¸·Ä• _ti kÄ• á¸·avalÄ• hakantare s abbhÄ• hato chavivaá¹‡á¹‡o kÄ• á¸·ako hoti. tesaá¹ƒ etaá¹ƒ adhivacanantipi eke. __veramb upari vÄ• yanavÄ• tÄ• . __pakkhavÄ• tÄ• _ti antamaso makkhikÄ• yapi pakkhÄ• yÅ«hanas __supaá¹‡á¹‡avÄ• tÄ• _ti garuá¸·avÄ• tÄ• . kÄ• maÃ±ca imepi pakkhavÄ• tÄ• va ussadava __tÄ• lavaá¹‡á¹-avÄ• tÄ• _ti tÄ• lapaá¹‡á¹‡ehi vÄ• aÃ±Ã±ena vÄ• kenaci maá¹‡á¸• alasaá samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• pitÄ• vÄ• tÄ• . __vidhÅ«panavÄ• tÄ• _ti bÄ«janapattakena samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• p tÄ• lavaá¹‡á¹-avidhÅ«panÄ• ni anuppannampi vÄ• taá¹ƒ uppÄ• denti, uppannampi parivatte idha pÄ• á¸·iÄ• gate á¹-hapetvÄ• sesavÄ• tÄ• yevÄ• panakaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ paviá¹-á¹-hÄ•

<177> __Ä• kÄ• sadhÄ• tu_niddese \Ee 72/ appaá¹-ighaá¹-á¹-anaá¹-á¹-hena na kassatÄ«ti Ä• kÄ• sabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ• __Ä• kÄ• sagataá¹ƒ_. aghaá¹-á¹-anÄ«yatÄ• ya \Be 68/ __ag gatattÄ• __aghagataá¹ƒ_ \Ne 67/. __vivaro_ti antaraá¹ƒ. tadeva vivarabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ gatattÄ• __asamphuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ maá¹ƒsalohitehÄ«_ti maá¹ƒsalohitehi nissaá¹-aá¹ƒ. kaá¹‡á¹‡acchido pabhedadassanaá¹ƒ. tattha __kaá¹‡á¹‡acchidda_nti kaá¹‡á¹‡asmiá¹ƒ chiddaá¹ƒ vivaraá¹ƒ n asamphuá¹-á¹-hokÄ• so. sesesupi eseva nayo. __yenÄ• _ti yena vivarena etaá¹ƒ asitÄ• dib ajjhoharaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ ajjhoharati, anto paveseti. __yatthÄ• _ti yasmiá¹ƒ antoudarapaá¹-alasa etadeva catubbidhaá¹ƒ ajjhoharaá¹‡Ä«yaá¹ƒ tiá¹-á¹-hati. __yenÄ• _ti yena vivarena sabbam kasaá¹-abhÄ• vaá¹ƒ Ä• pannaá¹ƒ nikkhamati, taá¹ƒ udarapaá¹-alato yÄ• va karÄ«samaggÄ• vidatthicaturaá¹…gulamattaá¹ƒ chiddaá¹ƒ maá¹ƒsalohitehi asamphuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ nissaá¹-aá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. __yaá¹ƒ vÄ• panÄ• _ti ettha cammantaraá¹ƒ maá¹ƒsantaraá¹ƒ nhÄ• runtaraá lomantaranti idaá¹ƒ sabbaá¹ƒ yevÄ• panakaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ paviá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ.

__bÄ• hirakaÄ• kÄ• sadhÄ• tu_niddese __asamphuá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ catÅ«hi mahÄ• bhÅ«tehÄ« nissaá¹-aá¹ƒ bhittichiddakavÄ• á¹-achiddÄ• dikaá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. iminÄ• yasmiá¹ƒ Ä• kÄ• catukkapaÃ±cakajjhÄ• nÄ• ni uppajjanti taá¹ƒ kathitaá¹ƒ.

<178> __viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu_niddese cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡asaá¹…khÄ• tÄ• dhÄ• tu __ sesÄ• supi eseva nayo. iti imÄ• su chasu dhÄ• tÅ«su pariggahitÄ• su aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa dhÄ• kathaá¹ƒ? pathavÄ«tejovÄ• yodhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena tÄ• va phoá¹-á¹-habbadhÄ• tu gahitÄ• v Ä• podhÄ• tuÄ• kÄ• sadhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena dhammadhÄ• tu, viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuggahaá purecÄ• rikapacchÄ• cÄ• rikattÄ• manodhÄ• tu gahitÄ• va hoti. cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• sesÄ• nava Ä• haritvÄ• dassetabbÄ• \Ee 73/. cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena cakkhudhÄ• tu, Ä• rammaá¹‡abhÅ«tÄ• rÅ«padhÄ• tu ca gahitÄ• va honti. evaá¹ƒ sotaviÃ± sotadhÄ• tuÄ• dayoti aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasÄ• pi gahitÄ• va honti. tÄ• su dasahi dhÄ• tÅ«hi rÅ«pap sattahi arÅ«papariggaho. dhammadhÄ• tuyÄ• siyÄ• rÅ«papariggaho, siyÄ• arÅ«paparigg dhÄ• tÅ«hi rÅ«papariggaho, aá¸• á¸• haá¹-á¹-hadhÄ• tÅ«hi arÅ«papariggahoti rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«p rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«paá¹ƒ paÃ±cakkhandhÄ• . taá¹ƒ hoti dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ. taá¹ƒsamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• pikÄ samudayasaccaá¹ƒ \Be 69/. ubhinnaá¹ƒ appavatti nirodhasaccaá¹ƒ. taá¹ƒpajÄ• nano maggo catusaccakammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasadhÄ• tuvasena abhiniviá¹-á¹-hassa bhikkh matthakaá¹ƒ pÄ• petvÄ• nigamanaá¹ƒ kathitanti veditabbaá¹ƒ.

<179> idÄ• ni \Ne 68/ dutiyachakkaá¹ƒ dassento __aparÄ• pi cha dhÄ• tuyo_tiÄ• dimÄ• ha dukkhadhÄ• tÅ«_ti kÄ• yappasÄ• davatthukÄ• ni sukhadukkhÄ• ni sappaá¹-ipakkhavasena sukhaÃ±hi dukkhassa paá¹-ipakkho, dukkhaá¹ƒ sukhassa. yattakaá¹ƒ sukhena pharitaá¹-á¹-dukkhaá¹ƒ pharati. yattakaá¹ƒ dukkhena pharitaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ tattakaá¹ƒ sukhaá¹ƒ pharati domanassadhÄ• tÅ«_ti idampi tatheva yugaá¸·akaá¹ƒ kataá¹ƒ. somanassaÃ±hi domanassa domanassaá¹ƒ somanassassa. yattakaá¹ƒ somanassena pharitaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ tattakaá¹ƒ yattakaá¹ƒ domanassena pharitaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ tattakaá¹ƒ somanassaá¹ƒ pharati.

__upekkhÄ• dhÄ• tu avijjÄ• dhÄ• tÅ«_ti idaá¹ƒ pana dvayaá¹ƒ sarikkhakavasena yugaá¸·ak hetaá¹ƒ avibhÅ«tattÄ• sarikkhakaá¹ƒ hoti. tattha sukhadukkhadhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena taá¹ƒ sa kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu, vatthubhÅ«tÄ• kÄ• yadhÄ• tu, Ä• rammaá¹‡abhÅ«tÄ• phoá honti. somanassadomanassadhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena taá¹ƒ sampayuttÄ• manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a avijjÄ• dhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena dhammadhÄ• tu gahitÄ• . upekkhÄ• dhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena cakkhusotaghÄ• najivhÄ• viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tumanodhÄ• tuyo \Ee 74/, tÄ• saá¹ƒyeva vatt cakkhudhÄ• turÅ«padhÄ• tuÄ• dayo ca gahitÄ• ti evaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasapi dhÄ• tuyo gahitÄ dasahi dhÄ• tÅ«hi rÅ«papariggahotiÄ• di sabbaá¹ƒ heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayeneva veditabbaá¹ yÄ• va arahattÄ• matthakaá¹ƒ pÄ• petvÄ• nigamanaá¹ƒ kathitaá¹ƒ hotÄ«ti veditabbaá¹ƒ. ta sukhadhÄ• tu yaá¹ƒ kÄ• yikaá¹ƒ sÄ• ta_nti Ä• dÄ«ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayÄ• neva.

<181> tatiyachakke __kÄ• mo_ti dve kÄ• mÄ• --- vatthukÄ• mo ca kilesakÄ• mo ca. tattha kÄ• mapaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttÄ• dhÄ• tu __kÄ• madhÄ• tu, _ kÄ• mavitakkassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. v kÄ• moyeva dhÄ• tu __kÄ• madhÄ• tu, _ kÄ• mÄ• vacaradhammÄ• nametaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ.
__byÄ• pÄ• dadhÄ• tu, _ byÄ• pÄ• davitakkassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. byÄ• pÄ• dova dhÄ• tu b

dasaÄ• ghÄ• tavatthukassa \Be 70/ paá¹-ighassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. vihiá¹ƒsÄ• paá¹-isaá¹ƒyu __vihiá¹ƒsÄ• dhÄ• tu, _ vihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakkassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. vihiá¹ƒsÄ• yeva dhÄ• tu vihi parasattavihesanassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. ayaá¹ƒ pana heá¹-á¹-hÄ• anÄ• gatattÄ• evaá¹ƒ att
--- vihiá¹ƒsanti etÄ• ya satte, vihiá¹ƒsanaá¹ƒ vÄ• etaá¹ƒ sattÄ• nanti vihiá¹ƒsÄ• . sÄ• viheá karuá¹‡Ä• paá¹-ipakkhalakkhaá¹‡Ä• vÄ• ; parasantÄ• ne ubbegajananarasÄ• , sakasantÄ• vÄ• ; dukkhÄ• yatanapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• ; paá¹-ighapadaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• ti veditabbÄ• . ne lobhÄ• nikkhantattÄ• alobho, nÄ«varaá¹‡ehi nikkhantattÄ• paá¹-hamajjhÄ• naá¹ƒ, sabbÄ• sabbakusalaá¹ƒ. nekkhammapaá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttÄ• dhÄ• tu __nekkhammadhÄ• tu, _ nekkham nekkhammameva dhÄ• tu nekkhammadhÄ• tu, sabbassÄ• pi kusalassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. ab __abyÄ• pÄ• dadhÄ• tu, _ abyÄ• pÄ• davitakkassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. abyÄ• pÄ• dova dhÄ• nÄ• maá¹ƒ. avihiá¹ƒsÄ• paá¹-isaá¹ƒyuttÄ• dhÄ• tu __avihiá¹ƒsÄ• dhÄ• tu, _ avihiá¹ƒsÄ• vi nÄ• maá¹ƒ. avihiá¹ƒsÄ• va dhÄ• tu avihiá¹ƒsÄ• dhÄ• tu, karuá¹‡Ä• yetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ.

<182> idÄ• ni tamevatthaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ __tattha katamÄ• kÄ• madhÄ• tÅ«_ti padabhÄ• j __paá¹-isaá¹ƒyutto_ti saá¹ƒpayogavasena paá¹-isaá¹ƒyutto. __takko vitakko_tiÄ• dÄ«ni vutt __viheá¹-hetÄ«_ti bÄ• dheti, dukkhÄ• peti. __heá¹-hanÄ• _ti pÄ• á¹‡ippahÄ• rÄ• dÄ«hi bÄ• balavaheá¹-hanÄ• __viheá¹-hanÄ• _. hiá¹ƒsanti etÄ• yÄ• ti __hiá¹ƒsanÄ• _. balavahiá¹ƒsan rosanÄ• _ti ghaá¹-á¹-anÄ• . __virosanÄ• _ti balavaghaá¹-á¹-anÄ• . sabbattha vÄ• `viâ€™ u vaá¸• á¸• hitaá¹ƒ. upahananti etenÄ• ti upaghÄ• to, paresaá¹ƒ upaghÄ• to __parÅ«paghÄ• t

mettÄ• yanti etÄ• yÄ• ti __metti_. mettÄ• yanÄ• kÄ• ro __mettÄ• yanÄ• _. mettÄ• ya ayitas __mettÄ• yitattaá¹ƒ_. byÄ• pÄ• dena vimuttassa cetaso vimutti __cetovimutti_. ettha ca puri upacÄ• rappattÄ• pi appanÄ• patÄ• pi mettÄ• kathitÄ• , pacchimena appanÄ• pattÄ• va.

karuá¹‡Ä• yanti \Be 71/ etÄ• yÄ• ti __karuá¹‡Ä• _. karuá¹‡Ä• yanÄ• kÄ• ro __karuá¹‡Ä• ya karuá¹‡Ä• samaá¹…gino bhÄ• vo __karuá¹‡Ä• yitattaá¹ƒ_. vihiá¹ƒsÄ• ya vimuttassa cetaso idhÄ• pi purimanayeneva upacÄ• rappanÄ• bhedo veditabbo. ubhayatthÄ• pi ca pariyosÄ• n cetovimuttivisesanatthaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ.

ettha ca kÄ• mavitakko sattesupi uppajjati saá¹…khÄ• resupi. ubhayattha uppannopi kamm pana sattesu uppannoyeva kammapathaá¹ƒ bhindati, na itaro. vihiá¹ƒsÄ• yapi eseva nayo. c
--- sabbasaá¹…gÄ• hikÄ• ceva asambhinnÄ• ca. kÄ• madhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡ena hi byÄ• pÄ• kÄ• madhÄ• tuyÄ• yeva pana nÄ«haritvÄ• nÄ«haritvÄ• dvepi etÄ• dassitÄ• ti. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• sabbasaá¹…gÄ• hikakathÄ• \Ee 76/. á¹-hapetvÄ• pana byÄ• pÄ• davihiá¹ƒsÄ• dhÄ• tuyo s kÄ• madhÄ• tu evÄ• ti. ayaá¹ƒ asambhinnakathÄ• nÄ• ma. nekkhammadhÄ• tuggahaá¹‡en gahitÄ• yeva. nekkhammadhÄ• tuto pana nÄ«haritvÄ• nÄ«haritvÄ• tadubhayampi dassitan sabbasaá¹…gÄ• hikakathÄ• . á¹-hapetvÄ• abyÄ• pÄ• daavihiá¹ƒsÄ• dhÄ• tuyo avasesÄ• n asambhinnakathÄ• nÄ• ma.

imÄ• hi ca chahi dhÄ• tÅ«hi pariggahitÄ• hi aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa dhÄ• tuyo pariggahitÄ• va hon
kÄ• madhÄ• tutova nÄ«haritvÄ• nÄ«haritvÄ• labhÄ• petabbÄ• aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa dhÄ• tuyo chakkÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa honti. evaá¹ƒ pana aggahetvÄ• ekekasmiá¹ƒ chakk aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa katvÄ• sabbÄ• nipi tÄ• ni aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasakÄ• ni ekajjhaá¹ƒ abhisaá¹…khipi hontÄ«ti veditabbÄ• . iti imasmiá¹ƒ suttantabhÄ• janÄ«ye soá¸·asa dhÄ• tuyo kÄ• mÄ• vaca evamettha sammasanacÄ• rova kathitoti veditabbo.

suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

2. abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<183> abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«ye \Be 72/ sarÅ«peneva sabbÄ• pi dhÄ• tuyo dassento __a cakkhudhÄ• tu rÅ«padhÄ• tÅ«_tiÄ• dimÄ• ha. tattha uddesavÄ• re tÄ• va --- atthato lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dito, kamatÄ• vatvasaá¹…khato.

paccayÄ• atha daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• , veditabbo vinicchayo ||

tattha __ `atthatoâ€™ _ti cakkhatÄ«ti __cakkhu_. rÅ«payatÄ«ti __rÅ«paá¹ƒ_. cakkhussa vi __cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a_nti evamÄ• dinÄ• tÄ• va nayena cakkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ visesatthato pana vidahati, dhÄ«yate, vidhÄ• naá¹ƒ, vidhÄ«yate etÄ• ya, ettha vÄ• dhÄ«yatÄ«ti __dhÄ• kÄ• raá¹‡abhÄ• vena vavatthitÄ• hutvÄ• suvaá¹‡á¹‡arajatÄ• didhÄ• tuyo viya suvaá¹‡á¹‡a anekappakÄ• raá¹ƒ saá¹ƒsÄ• radukkhaá¹ƒ vidahanti \Ee 77/; bhÄ• rahÄ• rehi ca bhÄ• ro viy dhÄ• rÄ«yanteti attho. dukkhavidhÄ• namattameva cetÄ• avasavattanato. etÄ• hi ca karaá saá¹ƒsÄ• radukkhaá¹ƒ sattehi anuvidhÄ«yati; tathÄ• vihitaÃ±cetaá¹ƒ etÄ• sveva dhÄ«yati á cakkhÄ• dÄ«su ekeko dhammo yathÄ• sambhavaá¹ƒ vidahati dhÄ«yatetiÄ• diatthavasena d apica yathÄ• titthiyÄ• naá¹ƒ attÄ• nÄ• ma sabhÄ• vato natthi, na evametÄ• . etÄ• pana a dhÄ• rentÄ«ti dhÄ• tuyo. yathÄ• ca loke vicittÄ• haritÄ• lamanosilÄ• dayo silÄ• vayavÄ• d evametÄ• pi dhÄ• tuyo viya dhÄ• tuyo. vicittÄ• hetÄ• Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±eyyÄ• vayavÄ• ti. yathÄ samudÄ• yassa avayavabhÅ«tesu rasasoá¹‡itÄ• dÄ«su aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ visabhÄ• gala dhÄ• tusamaÃ±Ã±Ä• , evametesupi paÃ±cakkhandhasaá¹…khÄ• tassa attabhÄ• vassa ava veditabbÄ• . aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±avisabhÄ• galakkhaá¹‡aparicchinnÄ• hete cakkhÄ• dayoti. ap nijjÄ«vamattassetaá¹ƒ adhivacanaá¹ƒ. tathÄ• hi bhagavÄ• --- ``cha dhÄ• turo ayaá¹ƒ, bhik tiÄ• dÄ«su (MN III 343-344) jÄ«vasaÃ±Ã±Ä• samÅ«hanatthaá¹ƒ dhÄ• tudesanaá¹ƒ akÄ• sÄ cakkhu ca taá¹ƒ dhÄ• tu cÄ• ti cakkhudhÄ• tu \Be 73/ ... pe ... manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±ca taá manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«ti evaá¹ƒ tÄ• vettha atthato viÃ±Ã±Ä• tabbo vinicchayo.

__ `lakkhaá¹‡Ä• ditoâ€™ _ti cakkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dito pettha veditabbo vinicchay lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayeneva veditabbÄ• ni.

__ `kamatoâ€™ _ti idhÄ• pi pubbe vuttesu uppattikkamÄ• dÄ«su desanÄ• kkamova yujjati.
hetuphalÄ• nupubbavavatthÄ• navasena vutto. cakkhudhÄ• tu rÅ«padhÄ• tÅ«ti idaÃ±hi dva cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tÅ«ti phalaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ sabbattha kamato veditabbo vinicchayo.

__ `tÄ• vatvatoâ€™ _ti tÄ• vabhÄ• vato. idaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ hoti --- tesu tesu hi suttÄ• bhidham
Ä• bhÄ• dhÄ• tu, subhadhÄ• tu, Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ• yatanadhÄ• tu, viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±cÄ•
Ä• kiÃ±caÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanadhÄ• tu \Ee 78/, nevasaÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanadhÄ• tu, sa kÄ• madhÄ• tu, byÄ• pÄ• dadhÄ• tu, vihiá¹ƒsÄ• dhÄ• tu, nekkhammadhÄ• tu, abyÄ• pÄ• da sukhadhÄ• tu, dukkhadhÄ• tu, somanassadhÄ• tu, domanassadhÄ• tu, upekkhÄ• dhÄ• tu \
Ä• rambhadhÄ• tu, nikkamadhÄ• tu, parakkamadhÄ• tu, hÄ«nadhÄ• tu, majjhimadhÄ• tu, p Ä• podhÄ• tu, tejodhÄ• tu, vÄ• yodhÄ• tu, Ä• kÄ• sadhÄ• tu, viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu, saá¹…
anekadhÄ• tunÄ• nÄ• dhÄ• tulokoti evamÄ• dayo aÃ±Ã±Ä• pi dhÄ• tuyo dissanti.

evaá¹ƒ sati sabbÄ• saá¹ƒ vasena paricchedaá¹ƒ akatvÄ• kasmÄ• aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasÄ• ti ayan sabhÄ• vato vijjamÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ sabbadhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ tadantogadhattÄ• . rÅ«padhÄ• tuyeva pana rÅ«pÄ• dippaá¹-ibaddhÄ• . kasmÄ• ? subhanimittattÄ• . subhanimittaÃ±hi subhadhÄ• rÅ«pÄ• divinimuttaá¹ƒ na vijjati, kusalavipÄ• kÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• vÄ• rÅ«pÄ• dayo eva subha rÅ«pÄ• dimattamevesÄ• . Ä• kÄ• sÄ• naÃ±cÄ• yatanadhÄ• tuÄ• dÄ«su cittaá¹ƒ manoviÃ±Ã dhammadhÄ• tu. saÃ±Ã±Ä• vedayitanirodhadhÄ• tu pana sabhÄ• vato natthi; dhÄ• tudvaya kÄ• madhÄ• tu dhammadhÄ• tumattaá¹ƒ vÄ• hoti, yathÄ• ha ``tattha katamÄ• kÄ• madhÄ
... pe ... micchÄ• saá¹…kappoâ€™â€™ ti; aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasapi dhÄ• tuyo \Be 74/ vÄ• , yathÄ•
avÄ«cinirayaá¹ƒ pariyantaá¹ƒ katvÄ• uparito paranimmitavasavattideve antokaritvÄ• yaá¹ƒ etthÄ• vacarÄ• ettha pariyÄ• pannÄ• khandhadhÄ• tuÄ• yatanÄ• , rÅ«pÄ• , vedanÄ• , saÃ viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ --- ayaá¹ƒ vuccati kÄ• madhÄ• tÅ«â€™â€™ ti. nekkhammadhÄ• tu dham dhammÄ• nekkhammadhÄ• tÅ«â€™â€™ ti vÄ• vacanato manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tupi h byÄ• pÄ• davihiá¹ƒsÄ• abyÄ• pÄ• daavihiá¹ƒsÄ• sukhadukkhasomanassadomanassupekkh • tuyo dhammadhÄ• tuyeva.

hÄ«namajjhimapaá¹‡Ä«tadhÄ• tuyo aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasadhÄ• tumattameva. hÄ«nÄ• hi cakkhÄ majjhimapaá¹‡Ä«tÄ• cakkhÄ• dayo majjhimÄ• ceva paá¹‡Ä«tÄ• ca dhÄ• tÅ«. nippariyÄ• y dhammadhÄ• tumanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyo hÄ«nadhÄ• tu. lokiyÄ• kusalÄ• byÄ• katÄ• majjhimadhÄ• tu. lokuttarÄ• pana dhammadhÄ• tumanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyo paá¹‡Ä«t pathavÄ«tejovÄ• yodhÄ• tuyo phoá¹-á¹-habbadhÄ• tuyeva. Ä• podhÄ• tu Ä• kÄ• sadhÄ• tu viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• disattaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tusaá¹…khepoye dhammadhÄ• tuekadeso ca saá¹…khatadhÄ• tu. asaá¹…khatadhÄ• tu pana dhammadhÄ• anekadhÄ• tunÄ• nÄ• dhÄ• tuloko pana aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasadhÄ• tuppabhedamattamevÄ• ti. iti sabbadhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ tadantogadhattÄ• aá¹-á¹-hÄ• raseva vuttÄ• ti.

apica vijÄ• nanasabhÄ• ve viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡e jÄ«vasaÃ±Ã±Ä«naá¹ƒ jÄ«vasaÃ±Ã±Ä• samÅ«h \Ne 73/. santi hi sattÄ• vijÄ• nanasabhÄ• ve viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡e jÄ«vasaÃ±Ã±ino. tesaá¹ƒ cakkhusotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡amanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tubhedena tassÄ• cakkhurÅ«pÄ• dipaccayÄ• yattavuttitÄ• ya aniccataÃ±ca pakÄ• setvÄ• dÄ«gharattÄ• nusay samÅ«hanitukÄ• mena bhagavatÄ• aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasa dhÄ• tuyo pakÄ• sitÄ• . kiÃ±ca bhiyyo veneyyajjhÄ• sayavasena; ye ca imÄ• ya nÄ• tisaá¹…khepavitthÄ• rÄ• ya desanÄ• ya vene tadajjhÄ• sayavasena ca aá¹-á¹-hÄ• raseva pakÄ• sitÄ• .

saá¹…khepavitthÄ• ranayena \Be 75/ tathÄ• tathÄ• hi, dhammaá¹ƒ pakÄ• sayati esa yathÄ• yathÄ• ssa.

saddhammatejavihataá¹ƒ vilayaá¹ƒ khaá¹‡ena,

veneyyasattahadayesu tamo payÄ• tÄ«ti ||

evamettha `tÄ• vatvatoâ€™ veditabbo vinicchayo.

__ `saá¹…khatoâ€™ _ti cakkhudhÄ• tu tÄ• va jÄ• tito eko dhammotveva saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gac tathÄ• sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yarÅ«pasaddagandharasadhÄ• tuyo sotapasÄ• dÄ• divasen pathavÄ«tejovÄ• yovasena tayo dhammÄ• ti saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchati. cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ad kusalÄ• kusalavipÄ• kavasena dve dhammÄ• ti saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchati. tathÄ• \Ee 80/sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yaviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyo. manodhÄ• tu pana paÃ±cadvÄ• rÄ• vajjanakusalÄ• kusalavipÄ• kasampaá¹-icchanavasena tayo dhammÄ• ti s dhammadhÄ• tu tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ arÅ«pakkhandhÄ• naá¹ƒ, soá¸·asannaá¹ƒ sukhumarÅ«pÄ• na vasena vÄ«satidhammÄ• ti saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchati. manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu sesakusalÄ• kusalÄ• byÄ• kataviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡avasena chasattatidhammÄ• ti saá¹…khaá¹ƒ g `saá¹…khatoâ€™ veditabbo vinicchayo.

__ `paccayÄ• â€™ _ti cakkhudhÄ• tuÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuÄ• dÄ«su panetesaá¹ƒ paccayabhÄ• vo niddesavÄ• re Ä• vi bhavissati.

__ `daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• â€™ _ti daá¹-á¹-habbatopettha vinicchayo veditabboti attho. sabbÄ• e dhÄ• tuyo pubbantÄ• parantavivittato, dhuvasubhasukhattabhÄ• vasuÃ±Ã±ato, paccayÄ• ya visesato panettha bheritalaá¹ƒ viya cakkhudhÄ• tu daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• , daá¹‡á¸• o viya rÅ«pad cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu \Ne 74/. tathÄ• Ä• dÄ• satalaá¹ƒ viya cakkhudhÄ• tu, mukha mukhanimittaá¹ƒ viya cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu. atha vÄ• ucchutilÄ• ni viya cakkhudhÄ viya rÅ«padhÄ• tu, ucchurasatelÄ• ni viya cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu. tathÄ• adharÄ• ra uttarÄ• raá¹‡Ä« viya rÅ«padhÄ• tu, aggi viya cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu. esa nayo sotad

manodhÄ• tu pana yathÄ• sambhavato cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ purecar dhammadhÄ• tuyÄ• vedanÄ• kkhandho sallamiva sÅ«lamiva ca daá¹-á¹-habbo \Be 76/; saÅ vedanÄ• sallasÅ«layogÄ• Ä• turÄ• viya; puthujjanÄ• naá¹ƒ vÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• Ä• sÄ• dukkha ayathÄ• bhuccanimittaggÄ• hakato vanamigo viya; saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• paá¹-isandhiyaá¹ƒ pakk khipanakapuriso viya, jÄ• tidukkhÄ• nubandhanato rÄ• japurisÄ• nubandhacorÄ• viya, sabl khandhasantÄ• nassa hetuto visarukkhabÄ«jÄ• ni viya; rÅ«paá¹ƒ nÄ• nÄ• vidhÅ«paddavan daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ.

asaá¹…khatÄ• pana dhÄ• tu amatato santato khemato ca daá¹-á¹-habbÄ• . kasmÄ• ?
sabbÄ• natthapaá¹-ipakkhabhÅ«tattÄ• . manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu gahitÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• va pavatanato vanamakkaá¹-o viya, duddamanato assakhaá¸·uá¹…ko viya, yattha khittadaá¹‡á¸• o viya, lobhadosÄ• dinÄ• nappakÄ• rakilesayogato raá¹…ganaá¹-o viya daá¹

<184> niddesavÄ• re __cakkhuÃ±ca paá¹-icca rÅ«pe cÄ• _ti idaÃ±ca dvayaá¹ƒ paá¹-icca a kiriyÄ• manodhÄ• tuÃ±ceva sampayuttakhandhattayaÃ±cÄ• ti attho. cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ad nissayapaccayo hoti, rÅ«paá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡apaccayo, kiriyamanodhÄ• tu vigatapaccayo, t sahajÄ• tapaccayo. tasmÄ• esÄ• cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tu ime cattÄ• ro paá¹-icca up paá¹-iccÄ• _tiÄ• dÄ«supi eseva nayo.

__niruddhasamanantarÄ• _ti niruddhÄ• ya samanantarÄ• . __tajjÄ• manodhÄ• tÅ«_ti tasm kusalÄ• kusalavipÄ• kato duvidhÄ• manodhÄ• tu sampaá¹-icchanakiccÄ• . __sabbadhamm paá¹-hamasamannÄ• hÄ• ro_ti etesu cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• dÄ«su sabbadhammesu uppa cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ \Ne 75/ vÄ• Ä• rammaá¹‡asaá¹…khÄ• tesu sab ayamettha attho veditabbo. etena paÃ±cadvÄ• rÄ• vajjanakiccÄ• kiriyamanodhÄ• tu gahitÄ __manodhÄ• tuyÄ• pi uppajjitvÄ• niruddhasamanantarÄ• _ti ettha __pi_-kÄ• ro sampiá¹‡á manodhÄ• tuyÄ• pi manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyÄ• pÄ«ti ayamettha attho veditabbo. tena y uppajjitvÄ• niruddhÄ• ya samanantarÄ• uppajjati santÄ«raá¹‡akiccÄ• vipÄ• kamanoviÃ±Ã uppajjitvÄ• niruddhÄ• ya samanantarÄ• uppajjati voá¹-á¹-habbanakiccÄ• kiriyamanoviÃ±Ã tassÄ• uppajjitvÄ• niruddhÄ• ya \Be 77/ samanantarÄ• uppajjati javanakiccÄ• manoviÃ±Ã sabbÄ• pi kathitÄ• hotÄ«ti veditabbÄ• . __manaÃ±ca paá¹-iccÄ• _ti bhavaá¹…gamanaá¹ƒ.

catubhÅ«mikadhammÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ. __uppajjati manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a_nti sahÄ• vajjana imasmiá¹ƒ pana á¹-hÄ• ne hatthe gahitapaÃ±haá¹ƒ nÄ• ma gaá¹‡hiá¹ƒsu. mahÄ• dhamma dÄ«ghabhÄ• á¹‡akÄ• bhayattheraá¹ƒ hatthe gahetvÄ• Ä• ha --- `paá¹-iccÄ• ti nÄ• ma Ä• g Ä• vajjanaá¹ƒ visuá¹ƒ na kÄ• tabbaá¹ƒ, bhavaá¹…ganissitakameva kÄ• tabbaâ€™ nti. tasm sahÄ• vajjanakaá¹ƒ bhavaá¹…gaá¹ƒ. __manoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a_nti javanamanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡a abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«ye soá¸·asa dhÄ• tuyo kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , dve catubhÅ«mikÄ• loki

abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

3. paÃ±hÄ• pucchakavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<185> paÃ±hÄ• pucchake aá¹-á¹-hÄ• rasannaá¹ƒ dhÄ• tÅ«naá¹ƒ heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayÄ• veditabbo. Ä• rammaá¹‡attikesu pana __cha dhÄ• tuyo parittÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• _ti idaá¹ƒ pan cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• dÄ«naá¹ƒ manodhÄ• tuyÄ• ca ekantena paÃ±casu rÅ«pÄ• rammaá vuttaá¹ƒ. __dve dhÄ• tuyo_ti vuttÄ• naá¹ƒ pana dhammadhÄ• tumanoviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• t manÄ• yatanadhammÄ• yatanesu vuttanayeneva parittÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ditÄ• \Ne 76/ vedita paÃ±hÄ• pucchake soá¸·asa dhÄ• tuyo kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , dve catubhÅ«mikÄ• lokiyalokutt evamayaá¹ƒ dhÄ• tuvibhaá¹…gopi teparivaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ nÄ«haritvÄ• va bhÄ• jetvÄ• desitoti.

sammohavinodaniyÄ• vibhaá¹…gaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya

dhÄ• tuvibhaá¹…gavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

4. saccavibhaá¹…go

1. suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<189> idÄ• ni \Ee 83/ \Be 78/ \Ne 77/ tadanantare saccavibhaá¹…ge __cattÄ• rÄ«_ti gaá¹‡ __ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«_ti paricchinnadhammanidassanaá¹ƒ. __dukkhaá¹ƒ ariyasacca_ntiÄ• din vibhÄ• gato nibbacana-lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dippabhedato.

atthatthuddhÄ• rato ceva, anÅ«nÄ• dhikato tathÄ• ||

kamato ariyasaccesu, yaá¹ƒ Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ tassa kiccato.

antogadhÄ• naá¹ƒ pabhedo, upamÄ• to catukkato ||

suÃ±Ã±atekavidhÄ• dÄ«hi, sabhÄ• gavisabhÄ• gato.

vinicchayo veditabbo, viÃ±Ã±unÄ• sÄ• sanakkame ||

tattha __ `vibhÄ• gatoâ€™ _ti dukkhÄ• dÄ«naÃ±hi cattÄ• ro cattÄ• ro atthÄ• vibhattÄ• tat anaÃ±Ã±athÄ• , ye dukkhÄ• dÄ«ni abhisamentehi abhisametabbÄ• . yathÄ• ha, ``dukkhass saá¹…khataá¹-á¹-ho, santÄ• paá¹-á¹-ho, vipariá¹‡Ä• maá¹-á¹-ho --- ime cattÄ• ro dukkhassa avitathÄ• anaÃ±Ã±athÄ• . samudayassa Ä• yÅ«hanaá¹-á¹-ho, nidÄ• naá¹-á¹-ho, saá¹ƒyoga
... pe ... nirodhassa nissaraá¹‡aá¹-á¹-ho, vivekaá¹-á¹-ho, asaá¹…khataá¹-á¹-ho, amataá¹-á¹-h maggassa niyyÄ• naá¹-á¹-ho, hetvaá¹-á¹-ho, dassanaá¹-á¹-ho, Ä• dhipateyyaá¹-á¹-ho --- ime maggaá¹-á¹-hÄ• tathÄ• avitathÄ• anaÃ±Ã±athÄ• â€™â€™ ti (Paá¹-is II 8). tathÄ• \Ne 78/
pÄ«á¸·anaá¹-á¹-ho, saá¹…khataá¹-á¹-ho, santÄ• paá¹-á¹-ho, viparinÄ• maá¹-á¹-ho, abhisam (Paá¹-is II 11) evamÄ• di. iti evaá¹ƒ vibhattÄ• naá¹ƒ catunnaá¹ƒ catunnaá¹ƒ atthÄ• naá¹ƒ va veditabbÄ• nÄ«ti. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• vettha vibhÄ• gato vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `nibbacanalakkhaá¹‡Ä• dippabhedatoâ€™ _ti \Ee 84/ ettha pana `nibbacanatoâ€™ tÄ• ayaá¹ƒ saddo kucchite dissati; kucchitaÃ±hi puttaá¹ƒ duputtoti vadanti. __ `khaá¹ƒâ€™ _sad tucchaÃ±hi Ä• kÄ• saá¹ƒ __kha_nti vuccati. idaÃ±ca paá¹-hamasaccaá¹ƒ kucchitaá¹ƒ aneka tucchaá¹ƒ bÄ• lajanaparikappitadhuvasubhasukhattabhÄ• vavirahitato. tasmÄ• kucchitattÄ• __dukkha_nti vuccati. __ `saá¹ƒâ€™ _iti ca ayaá¹ƒ \Be 79/ saddo ``samÄ• gamo sametaâ€™ DN II 396) saá¹ƒyogaá¹ƒ dÄ«peti; __ `uâ€™ _iti ayaá¹ƒ saddo ``uppannaá¹ƒ uditaâ€™â€™ Nidd II khaggavisÄ• á¹‡asuttaniddesa 141) uppattiá¹ƒ. __ `ayaâ€™ _saddo pana kÄ• raá¹‡a dutiyasaccaá¹ƒ avasesapaccayasamÄ• yoge sati dukkhassuppattikÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒ. iti dukkhas uppattikÄ• raá¹‡attÄ• __dukkhasamudaya_nti vuccati.

tatiyasaccaá¹ƒ pana yasmÄ• `niâ€™ saddo abhÄ• vaá¹ƒ __ `rodhaâ€™ _saddo ca cÄ• rak ettha saá¹ƒsÄ• racÄ• rakasaá¹…khÄ• tassa dukkharodhassa sabbagatisuÃ±Ã±attÄ• , sama saá¹ƒsÄ• racÄ• rakasaá¹…khÄ• tassa dukkharodhassa abhÄ• vo hoti tappaá¹-ipakkhattÄ• t vuccati, dukkhassa vÄ• anuppÄ• danirodhapaccayattÄ• dukkhanirodhanti. catutthasaccaá¹ dukkhanirodhaá¹ƒ gacchati Ä• rammaá¹‡avasena tadabhimukhÄ«bhÅ«tattÄ• , paá¹-ipadÄ• dukkhanirodhappattiyÄ• , tasmÄ• dukkhanirodhagÄ• minÄ« paá¹-ipadÄ• ti vuccati.

yasmÄ• panetÄ• ni buddhÄ• dayo ariyÄ• paá¹-ivijjhanti, tasmÄ• __ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«_ti vu ``catÄ• rimÄ• ni, bhikkhave, ariyasaccÄ• ni (SN c V 1097). katamÄ• ni ... pe ... imÄ• ni kho, ariyasaccÄ• ni. ariyÄ• imÄ• ni paá¹-ivijjhanti, tasmÄ• __ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«_ti vuccantÄ«â€™ saccÄ• nÄ«tipi ariyasaccÄ• ni. yathÄ• ha --- ``sadevake, bhikkhave, loke ... pe ... sadevama ariyo, tasmÄ• ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«ti vuccantÄ«â€™â€™ ti. atha vÄ• etesaá¹ƒ abhisambuddha ariyasaccÄ• ni. yathÄ• ha --- ``imesaá¹ƒ kho, bhikkhave, catunnaá¹ƒ ariyasaccÄ• naá¹ƒ \Ne

abhisambuddhattÄ• tathÄ• gato arahaá¹ƒ sammÄ• sambuddho `ariyoâ€™ ti vuccatÄ«â€™ \Ee 85/ saccÄ• nÄ«tipi ariyasaccÄ• ni; ariyÄ• nÄ«ti tathÄ• ni avitathÄ• ni avisaá¹ƒvÄ• dakÄ•
--- ``imÄ• ni kho, bhikkhave, cattÄ• ri ariyasaccÄ• ni tathÄ• ni avitathÄ• ni anaÃ±Ã±athÄ• ni ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«ti vuccantÄ«â€™â€™ ti. evamettha nibbacanato vinicchayo veditabbo.

kathaá¹ƒ __ `lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dippabhedatoâ€™ _? ettha hi bÄ• dhanalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ dukkhas pavattipaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ. pabhavalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ samudayasaccaá¹ƒ, anupacchedak palibodhapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ. santilakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ nirodhasaccaá¹ƒ, accutirasaá¹ƒ, animittapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ \Be 80/. niyyÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ maggasaccaá¹ƒ, kilesapp vuá¹-á¹-hÄ• napaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ. apica pavattipavattakanivattinivattakalakkhaá¹‡Ä• n tathÄ• saá¹…khatataá¹‡hÄ• asaá¹…khatadassanalakkhaá¹‡Ä• ni cÄ• ti evamettha `lakkha vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `atthatthuddhÄ• rato cevÄ• â€™ _ti ettha pana __atthato_ tÄ• va ko saccaá¹-á¹-hoti ce?
upaparikkhamÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ mÄ• yÄ• va viparÄ«tako, marÄ«cÄ«va visaá¹ƒvÄ• dako, titthiyÄ anupalabbhasabhÄ• vo ca na hoti; atha kho bÄ• dhanapabhavasantiniyyÄ• nappakÄ• rena ariyaÃ±Ä• á¹‡assa gocaro hotiyeva; esa aggilakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ viya, lokapakati viya ca tacchÄ• saccaá¹-á¹-hoti veditabbo. yathÄ• ha --- ``idaá¹ƒ dukkhanti kho, bhikkhave, tathametaá¹ƒ av anaÃ±Ã±athametaâ€™â€™ nti (SN c V 1090) vitthÄ• ro. apica --- nÄ• bÄ• dhakaá¹ƒ yato dukkhaá¹ƒ, dukkhÄ• aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ na bÄ• dhakaá¹ƒ.

bÄ• dhakattaniyÄ• mena, tato saccamidaá¹ƒ mataá¹ƒ ||

taá¹ƒ vinÄ• nÄ• Ã±Ã±ato dukkhaá¹ƒ, na hoti na ca taá¹ƒ tato.

dukkhahetuniyÄ• mena, iti saccaá¹ƒ visattikÄ• ||

nÄ• Ã±Ã±Ä• nibbÄ• nato santi, santaá¹ƒ na ca na taá¹ƒ yato.

santabhÄ• vaniyÄ• mena, tato saccamidaá¹ƒ mataá¹ƒ ||

maggÄ• \Ne 80/ aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ na niyyÄ• naá¹ƒ, aniyyÄ• no na cÄ• pi so.

tacchaniyyÄ• nabhÄ• vattÄ• , iti so saccasammato ||

iti tacchÄ• vipallÄ• sa-bhÅ«tabhÄ• vaá¹ƒ catÅ«supi.

dukkhÄ• dÄ«svavisesena, saccaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ Ä• hu paá¹‡á¸• itÄ• ti ||

evaá¹ƒ \Ee 86/ `atthatoâ€™ vinicchayo veditabbo.

kathaá¹ƒ __ `atthuddhÄ• ratoâ€™ _? idhÄ• yaá¹ƒ `saccaâ€™ saddo anekesu atthesu dissa ``saccaá¹ƒ bhaá¹‡e, na kujjheyyÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (Dhp 224) vÄ• cÄ• sacce. ``sacce cÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (J II 21.433) viratisacce. ``kasmÄ• nu saccÄ• ni \Be 81/ vadanti n kusalÄ• vadÄ• nÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«su (Sn 891) diá¹-á¹-hisacce. ``ekaÃ±hi saccaá¹ƒ na du (Sn 890) paramatthasacce nibbÄ• ne ceva magge ca. ``catunnaá¹ƒ ariyasaccÄ• naá¹ƒ kati l (Vibh 216) ariyasacce. svÄ• yamidhÄ• pi ariyasacce vattatÄ«ti evamettha `atthuddhÄ• ratoâ veditabbo.

__ `anÅ«nÄ• dhikatoâ€™ _ti kasmÄ• pana cattÄ• reva ariyasaccÄ• ni vuttÄ• ni, anÅ«nÄ• aÃ±Ã±assÄ• sambhavato, aÃ±Ã±atarassa ca anapaneyyabhÄ• vato; na hi etehi aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ ekampi apanetabbaá¹ƒ sambhoti. yathÄ• ha --- ``idha, bhikkhave, Ä• gaccheyya samaá¹‡o `netaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ, aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ yaá¹ƒ samaá¹‡ena ahametaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ á¹-hapetvÄ• aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ pa netaá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ vijjatÄ«â€™â€™ tiÄ• di. yathÄ• cÄ• ha --- ``yo hi koci, bhikkhave, sa vÄ• evaá¹ƒ vadeyya `netaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ, yaá¹ƒ samaá¹‡ena ahametaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ paccakkhÄ• ya aÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±apessÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti netaá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ vijjatÄ«â€™â€™ tiÄ• di (SN c V 1086).

apica pavattimÄ• cikkhanto bhagavÄ• sahetukaá¹ƒ Ä• cikkhi, nivattiÃ±ca saupÄ• yaá¹ƒ. iti pavattinivattitadubhayahetÅ«naá¹ƒ \Ne 81/ etapparamato cattÄ• reva vuttÄ• ni. tathÄ• pari sacchikÄ• tabba bhÄ• vetabbÄ• naá¹ƒ, taá¹‡hÄ• vatthutaá¹‡hÄ• taá¹‡hÄ• nirodhataá¹‡hÄ•
Ä• layÄ• layarÄ• matÄ• Ä• layasamugghÄ• taÄ• layasamugghÄ• tÅ«pÄ• yÄ• naÃ±ca vase `anÅ«nÄ• dhikatoâ€™ vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `kamatoâ€™ _ti ayampi desanÄ• kkamova. ettha ca oá¸·Ä• rikattÄ• sabbasattasÄ• dhÄ suviÃ±Ã±eyyanti dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ \Ee 87/ vuttaá¹ƒ, tasseva hetudassanattha samudayasaccaá¹ƒ, hetunirodhÄ• phalanirodhoti Ã±Ä• panatthaá¹ƒ tato nirodhasaccaá¹ƒ, tadadhigamupÄ• yadassanatthaá¹ƒ ante maggasaccaá¹ƒ. bhavasukhassÄ• dagadhitÄ• naá saá¹ƒvegajananatthaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ dukkhamÄ• ha. taá¹ƒ neva akataá¹ƒ Ä• gacchati, na ito pana hotÄ«ti \Be 82/ Ã±Ä• panatthaá¹ƒ tadanantaraá¹ƒ samudayaá¹ƒ. tato sahetukena d saá¹ƒviggamÄ• nasÄ• naá¹ƒ dukkhanissaraá¹‡agavesÄ«naá¹ƒ nissaraá¹‡adassanena assÄ tato nirodhÄ• dhigamatthaá¹ƒ nirodhasampÄ• pakaá¹ƒ magganti evamettha `kamatoâ€™ vi

__ `ariyasaccesu yaá¹ƒ Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ tassa kiccatoâ€™ _ti saccaÃ±Ä• á¹‡akiccatopi vinicc duvidhaÃ±hi saccaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ --- anubodhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±ca paá¹-ivedhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aÃ±ca. t lokiyaá¹ƒ anussavÄ• divasena nirodhe magge ca pavattati. paá¹-ivedhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ lokutta nirodhÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ katvÄ• kiccato cattÄ• ripi saccÄ• ni paá¹-ivijjhati. yathÄ• ha --- ``yo dukkhaá¹ƒ passati dukkhasamudayampi so passati, dukkhanirodhampi passati, dukkhaniro paá¹-ipadampi passatÄ«â€™â€™ ti (SN c V 1100) sabbaá¹ƒ vattabbaá¹ƒ. yaá¹ƒ panetaá¹ƒ dukkhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ pariyuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• bhibhavanavasena pavattamÄ• naá¹ƒ sakkÄ• yad samudayaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ ucchedadiá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ, nirodhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ sassatadiá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ, m akiriyadiá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ; dukkhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ vÄ• dhuvasubhasukhattabhÄ• varahitesu khandh dhuvasubhasukhattabhÄ• vasaÃ±Ã±Ä• saá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ phale vippaá¹-ipattiá¹ƒ, samudaya issarappadhÄ• nakÄ• lasabhÄ• vÄ• dÄ«hi loko pavattatÄ«ti akÄ• raá¹‡e kÄ• raá¹‡Ä• bhimÄ vippaá¹-ipattiá¹ƒ, nirodhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ arÅ«palokalokathÅ«pikÄ• dÄ«su apavaggaggÄ• hab vippaá¹-ipattiá¹ƒ, maggaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ kÄ• masukhallikaattakilamathÄ• nuyogappabhede \E visuddhimaggaggÄ• havasena pavattaá¹ƒ upÄ• ye vippaá¹-ipattiá¹ƒ nivatteti. tenetaá¹ƒ vucc loke \Ne 82/ lokappabhave, lokatthagame sive ca tadupÄ• ye.

sammuyhati tÄ• va naro, na vijÄ• nÄ• ti yÄ• va saccÄ• nÄ«ti ||

evamettha `Ã±Ä• á¹‡akiccatoâ€™ pi vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `antogadhÄ• naá¹ƒ pabhedÄ• â€™ _ti dukkhasaccasmiÃ±hi, á¹-hapetvÄ• taá¹‡haÃ±cev
sabbadhammÄ• antogadhÄ• ; samudayasacce chattiá¹ƒsa taá¹‡hÄ• vicaritÄ• ni; nirodhasa maggasacce sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-himukhena vÄ«maá¹ƒsiddhipÄ• dapaÃ±Ã±indriyapaÃ±Ã±Ä• b sammÄ• saá¹…kappÄ• padesena tayo nekkhammavitakkÄ• dayo, sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• padese sammÄ• kammantÄ• padesena tÄ«á¹‡i kÄ• yasucaritÄ• ni, sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vamukhena app ca, sabbesaá¹ƒyeva vÄ• etesaá¹ƒ sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• kammantÄ• jÄ«vÄ• naá¹ƒ ariyakantas saddhÄ• hatthena paá¹-iggahetabbattÄ• tesaá¹ƒ atthitÄ• ya ca atthibhÄ• vato saddhindriyasaddhÄ• balachandiddhipÄ• dÄ• , sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mÄ• padesena catubbidhasammappadhÄ• navÄ«riyindriyavÄ«riyabalavÄ«riyasambojjhaá¹…gÄ• ni, sammÄ catubbidhasatipaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nasatindriyasatibalasatisambojjhaá¹…gÄ• ni, sammÄ• samÄ• dh savitakkasavicÄ• rÄ• dayo tayo tayo samÄ• dhÄ«, cittasamÄ• dhisamÄ• dhindriyasamÄ• dhibalapÄ«tipassaddhisamÄ• dhiupekkhÄ• sambojjh evamettha `antogadhÄ• naá¹ƒ pabhedÄ• â€™ pi vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `upamÄ• toâ€™ _ti bhÄ• ro viya hi dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ, bhÄ• rÄ• dÄ• na bhÄ• ranikkhepanamiva nirodhasaccaá¹ƒ, bhÄ• ranikkhepanÅ«pÄ• yo viya maggasaccaá¹ƒ roganidÄ• namiva samudayasaccaá¹ƒ, rogavÅ«pasamo viya nirodhasaccaá¹ƒ, bhesajjamiva dubbhikkhamiva vÄ• dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ, dubbuá¹-á¹-hi viya samudayasaccaá¹ƒ, subhikkhami suvuá¹-á¹-hi viya maggasaccaá¹ƒ. apica verÄ«veramÅ«laverasamugghÄ• taverasamugghÄ visarukkharukkhamÅ«lamÅ«lupacchedatadupacchedupÄ• yehi, bhayabhayamÅ«lanibbhaya orimatÄ«ramahoghapÄ• rimatÄ«rataá¹ƒsampÄ• pakavÄ• yÄ• mehi ca yojetvÄ• petÄ• ni upa `upamÄ• toâ€™ vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `catukkatoâ€™ _ti atthi cettha dukkhaá¹ƒ na ariyasaccaá¹ƒ, atthi ariyasaccaá¹ƒ na dukk dukkhaÃ±ceva \Ne 83/ ariyasaccaÃ±ca, atthi neva dukkhaá¹ƒ na ariyasaccaá¹ƒ. esa nayo s maggasampayuttÄ• dhammÄ• sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aphalÄ• ni ca ``yadaniccaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ dukkhaâ€™ saá¹…khÄ• radukkhatÄ• ya dukkhaá¹ƒ na ariyasaccaá¹ƒ. nirodho ariyasaccaá¹ƒ na dukkha ariyasaccadvayaá¹ƒ siyÄ• dukkhaá¹ƒ aniccato, na pana yassa pariÃ±Ã±Ä• ya bhagavati br tathatthena. sabbÄ• kÄ• rena pana upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhapaÃ±cakaá¹ƒ dukkhaÃ±ceva ariy maggasampayuttÄ• dhammÄ• sÄ• maÃ±Ã±aphalÄ• ni ca yassa pariÃ±Ã±atthaá¹ƒ bhagav tathatthena neva dukkhaá¹ƒ na ariyasaccaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ samudayÄ• dÄ«supi yathÄ• yogaá¹ƒ pettha vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `suÃ±Ã±atekavidhÄ• dÄ«hÄ«â€™ _ti \Be 84/ ettha suÃ±Ã±ato tÄ• va paramatthena hi s vedakakÄ• rakanibbutagamakÄ• bhÄ• vato suÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ«ti veditabbÄ• ni. tenetaá¹ƒ vucca dukkhameva hi na koci dukkhito, kÄ• rako na kiriyÄ• va vijjati.

atthi nibbuti na nibbuto pumÄ• , maggamatthi gamako na vijjatÄ«ti ||

atha vÄ• --- dhuvasubhasukhattasuÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, purimadvayamattasuÃ±Ã±amamatapadaá¹ƒ.

dhuvasukhaattavirahito, maggo iti suÃ±Ã±ato tesu ||

nirodhasuÃ±Ã±Ä• ni \Ee 90/ vÄ• tÄ«á¹‡i, nirodho ca sesattayasuÃ±Ã±o. phalasuÃ±Ã±o vÄ dukkhassÄ• bhÄ• vato magge ca nirodhassa, na phalena sagabbho pakativÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ pa phalaá¹ƒ dukkhasamudayÄ• naá¹ƒ nirodhamaggÄ• naÃ±ca asamavÄ• yÄ• , na hetusamave hetuphalasamavÄ• yavÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ dviaá¹‡ukÄ• dÄ«ni viya. tenetaá¹ƒ vuccati --- tayamidha nirodhasuÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ, tayena tenÄ• pi nibbuti suÃ±Ã±Ä• .

suÃ±Ã±o phalena hetu, phalampi taá¹ƒ hetunÄ• suÃ±Ã±anti || evaá¹ƒ \Ne 84/ tÄ• va `suÃ±Ã±atoâ€™ vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `ekavidhÄ• dÄ«hÄ«â€™ _ti sabbameva cettha dukkhaá¹ƒ ekavidhaá¹ƒ pavattibhÄ• vato tividhaá¹ƒ kÄ• marÅ«pÄ• rÅ«pÅ«papatibhavabhedato, catubbidhaá¹ƒ catuÄ• hÄ• rabhedato paÃ±cupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhabhedato. samudayopi ekavidho pavattakabhÄ• vato, duvidho diá¹-á¹-hisampayuttÄ• sampayuttato, tividho kÄ• mabhavavibhavataá¹‡hÄ• bhedato, catubb paÃ±cavidho rÅ«pÄ• bhinandanÄ• dibhedato, chabbidho chataá¹‡hÄ• kÄ• yabhedato. niroc asaá¹…khatadhÄ• tubhÄ• vato, pariyÄ• yena pana duvidho saupÄ• disesaanupÄ• disesato catubbidho catumaggÄ• dhigamanÄ«yato, paÃ±cavidho paÃ±cÄ• bhinandanavÅ«pasamato chataá¹‡hÄ• kÄ• yakkhayabhedato. maggopi ekavidho bhÄ• vetabbato, duvidho samathavip dassanabhÄ• vanÄ• bhedato vÄ• \Be 85/, tividho khandhattayabhedato. ayaÃ±hi sappades nippadesehi tÄ«hi khandhehi saá¹…gahito. yathÄ• ha --- ``na kho, Ä• vuso visÄ• kha, ariyena aá¹-á¹-haá¹…gikena maggena tayo khandhÄ• saá¹…g

visÄ• kha, khandhehi ariyo aá¹-á¹-haá¹…giko maggo saá¹…gahito. yÄ• cÄ• vuso visÄ• kha sammÄ• kammanto, yo ca sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo --- ime dhammÄ• sÄ«lakkhandhe saá¹…gahi sammÄ• sati, yo ca sammÄ• samÄ• dhi --- ime dhammÄ• samÄ• dhikkhandhe saá¹…gahit sammÄ• saá¹…kappo --- ime dhammÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhe \Ee 91/ saá¹…gahitÄ• â€™â ettha hi sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• dayo tayo sÄ«lameva. tasmÄ• te sajÄ• tito sÄ«lakkhandhena sa pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ sÄ«lakkhandheti bhummena niddeso kato, attho pana karaá¹‡avaseneva ved sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mÄ• dÄ«su pana tÄ«su samÄ• dhi attano dhammatÄ• ya Ä• rammaá¹‡e vÄ«riye pana paggahakiccaá¹ƒ sÄ• dhente satiyÄ• ca apilÄ• panakiccaá¹ƒ sÄ• dhentiyÄ• sakkoti.

tatrÄ• yaá¹ƒ upamÄ• --- yathÄ• hi nakkhattaá¹ƒ kÄ«á¸·issÄ• mÄ• ti uyyÄ• naá¹ƒ paviá¹-á¹
supupphitaá¹ƒ campakarukkhaá¹ƒ disvÄ• hatthaá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• pi gahetuá¹ƒ na sakkuá¹‡e 85/ onamitvÄ• piá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ dadeyya. so tassa piá¹-á¹-hiyaá¹ƒ á¹-hatvÄ• pi kampamÄ• no g sakkuá¹‡eyya. athassa itaro aá¹ƒsakÅ«á¹-aá¹ƒ upanÄ• meyya. so ekassa piá¹-á¹-hiyaá¹ƒ á¹ aá¹ƒsakÅ«á¹-aá¹ƒ olubbha yathÄ• ruci pupphÄ• ni ocinitvÄ• piá¸·andhitvÄ• nakkhattaá¹ƒ k evaá¹ƒsampadamidaá¹ƒ daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ.

ekato uyyÄ• naá¹ƒ paviá¹-á¹-hÄ• tayo sahÄ• yÄ• viya hi ekato jÄ• tÄ• sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• n supupphitacampakarukkho viya Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, hatthaá¹ƒ ukkhipitvÄ• pi gahetuá¹ƒ asak dhammatÄ• ya Ä• rammaá¹‡e ekaggabhÄ• vena appetuá¹ƒ asakkonto samÄ• dhi, piá¹-á¹-h vÄ• yÄ• mo, aá¹ƒsakÅ«á¹-aá¹ƒ datvÄ• á¹-hitasahÄ• yo \Be 86/ viya sati. yathÄ• tesu ekass á¹-hatvÄ• ekassa aá¹ƒsakÅ«á¹-aá¹ƒ olubbha itaro yathÄ• ruci pupphaá¹ƒ gahetuá¹ƒ sakkot paggahakiccaá¹ƒ sÄ• dhente satiyÄ• ca apilÄ• panakiccaá¹ƒ sÄ• dhentiyÄ• laddhÅ«pakÄ• Ä• rammaá¹‡e ekaggabhÄ• vena appetuá¹ƒ. tasmÄ• samÄ• dhiyevettha sajÄ• tito samÄ• d vÄ• yÄ• masatiyo pana kiriyato saá¹…gahitÄ• honti.

sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hisammÄ• saá¹…kappesupi paÃ±Ã±Ä• attano dhammatÄ• ya `aniccaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ nicchetuá¹ƒ na sakkoti, vitakke pana Ä• koá¹-etvÄ• Ä• koá¹-etvÄ• dente hi heraÃ±Ã±iko kahÄ• paá¹‡aá¹ƒ hatthe á¹-hapetvÄ• sabbabhÄ• gesu \Ee 92/ oloketukÄ• n cakkhutaleneva parivattetuá¹ƒ sakkoti, aá¹…gulipabbehi pana parivattetvÄ• parivattetvÄ• i sakkoti; evameva na paÃ±Ã±Ä• attano dhammatÄ• ya aniccÄ• divasena Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ abhiniropanalakkhaá¹‡ena pana Ä• hananapariyÄ• hananarasena vitakkena Ä• koá¹-entena Ä• dÄ• ya Ä• dÄ• ya dinnameva nicchetuá¹ƒ sakkoti. tasmÄ• idhÄ• pi sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hiye paÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhena saá¹…gahitÄ• , sammÄ• saá¹…kappo pana kiriyato saá¹…gahito ho maggo saá¹…gahaá¹ƒ gacchati. tena vuttaá¹ƒ --- ``tividho khandhattayabhedatoâ€™â€™ ti.
sotÄ• pattimaggÄ• divasena.

apica sabbÄ• neva saccÄ• ni ekavidhÄ• ni avitathattÄ• abhiÃ±Ã±eyyattÄ• vÄ• , duvidhÄ• saá¹…khatÄ• saá¹…khatato ca, tividhÄ• ni dassanabhÄ• vanÄ• hi pahÄ• tabbato appahÄ• nevapahÄ• tabbanÄ• pahÄ• tabbato \Ne 86/ ca, catubbidhÄ• ni pariÃ±Ã±eyyÄ• dibhedatoti.
vinicchayo veditabbo.

__ `sabhÄ• gavisabhÄ• gatoâ€™ _ti sabbÄ• neva ca saccÄ• ni aÃ±Ã±amaÃ±Ã±aá¹ƒ sabhÄ dukkarapaá¹-ivedhato ca. yathÄ• ha ---

``taá¹ƒ kiá¹ƒ maÃ±Ã±asi, Ä• nanda, katamaá¹ƒ nu kho dukkarataraá¹ƒ vÄ• durabhisambhav dÅ«ratova sukhumena tÄ• lacchiggaá¸·ena asanaá¹ƒ atipÄ• teyya poá¹…khÄ• nupoá¹…kha sattadhÄ• \Be 87/ bhinnassa vÄ• lassa koá¹-iyÄ• koá¹-iá¹ƒ paá¹-ivijjheyyÄ• â€™â€™ ti? `` dukkarataraÃ±ceva durabhisambhavataraÃ±ca --- yo sattadhÄ• bhinnassa vÄ• lassa koá¹-i paá¹-ivijjheyyÄ• â€™â€™ ti. ``tato kho te, Ä• nanda, duppaá¹-ivijjhataraá¹ƒ paá¹-ivijjhanti ye yathÄ• bhÅ«taá¹ƒ paá¹-ivijjhanti ... pe ... ayaá¹ƒ dukkhanirodhagÄ• minÄ« paá¹-ipadÄ• ti ya paá¹-ivijjhantÄ«â€™â€™ ti (SN c V 1115).

visabhÄ• gÄ• ni salakkhaá¹‡avavatthÄ• nato. purimÄ• ni ca dve sabhÄ• gÄ• ni duravagÄ• lokiyattÄ• sÄ• savattÄ• ca, visabhÄ• gÄ• ni phalahetubhedato \Ee 93/ pariÃ±Ã±eyyappahÄ dve sabhÄ• gÄ• ni gambhÄ«ratthena duravagÄ• hattÄ• lokuttarattÄ• anÄ• savattÄ• ca, vi visayavisayÄ«bhedato sacchikÄ• tabbabhÄ• vetabbato ca. paá¹-hamatatiyÄ• ni cÄ• pi sabh visabhÄ• gÄ• ni saá¹…khatÄ• saá¹…khatato. dutiyacatutthÄ• ni cÄ• pi sabhÄ• gÄ• ni hetua ekantakusalÄ• kusalato. paá¹-hamacatutthÄ• ni cÄ• pi sabhÄ• gÄ• ni saá¹…khatato, visabh dutiyatatiyÄ• ni cÄ• pi sabhÄ• gÄ• ni nevasekkhÄ• nÄ• sekkhabhÄ• vato, visabhÄ• gÄ• ni s iti evaá¹ƒ pakÄ• rehi, nayehi ca vicakkhaá¹‡o.

vijaÃ±Ã±Ä• ariyasaccÄ• naá¹ƒ, sabhÄ• gavisabhÄ• gatanti || suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yauddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

1. dukkhasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

jÄ• tiniddeso

<190> idÄ• ni \Ne 87/ saá¹…khepato uddiá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni dukkhÄ• dÄ«ni vibhajitvÄ• dassetuá katamaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ ariyasaccaá¹ƒ jÄ• tipi dukkhÄ• _ti niddesavÄ• ro Ä• raddho. tattha jÄ dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabbo; jarÄ• , maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, soko \Be 88/, paridevo, dukkhaá¹ƒ, domana appiyasampayogo, piyavippayogo veditabbo; appiyasampayogassa piyavippayogassa dukk veditabbÄ• , icchÄ• ya dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabbo; khandhÄ• veditabbÄ• , khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ tattha dukkhassa ariyasaccassa kathanatthÄ• ya ayaá¹ƒ mÄ• tikÄ• --- idaÃ±hi dukkhaá¹ƒ n nÄ• nappakÄ• raá¹ƒ, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- dukkhadukkhaá¹ƒ, vipariá¹‡Ä• madukkhaá¹ƒ, saá¹…

paá¹-icchannadukkhaá¹ƒ, appaá¹-icchannadukkhaá¹ƒ, pariyÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ, nippariyÄ• yad tattha kÄ• yikacetasikÄ• dukkhavedanÄ• sabhÄ• vato ca nÄ• mato ca dukkhattÄ• __ `du sukhavedanÄ• vipariá¹‡Ä• mena dukkhuppattihetuto __ `vipariá¹‡Ä• madukkhaá¹ƒâ€™ _ n avasesÄ• ca tebhÅ«makÄ• saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• udayabbayapÄ«á¸·itattÄ• __ `saá¹…khÄ• rad pÄ«á¸·anaá¹ƒ pana maggaphalÄ• nampi atthi. tasmÄ• ete dhammÄ• dukkhasaccapariyÄ• nÄ• mÄ• ti veditabbÄ• . kaá¹‡á¹‡asÅ«ladantasÅ«larÄ• gajapariá¸·Ä• hadosajapariá¸·Ä• hÄ• pucchitvÄ• jÄ• nitabbato \Ee 94/ upakkamassa ca apÄ• kaá¹-abhÄ• vato __ `paá¹-icchanna apÄ• kaá¹-adukkhantipi vuccati. dvattiá¹ƒsakammakÄ• raá¹‡Ä• disamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• no Ä• bÄ• upakkamassa ca pÄ• kaá¹-abhÄ• vato __ `appaá¹-icchannadukkhaá¹ƒâ€™ _ nÄ• ma, pÄ• k á¹-hapetvÄ• dukkhadukkhaá¹ƒ sesaá¹ƒ dukkhasaccavibhaá¹…ge Ä• gataá¹ƒ jÄ• tiÄ• di sab vatthubhÄ• vato __ `pariyÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒâ€™ _ nÄ• ma. dukkhadukkhaá¹ƒ __ `nippariyÄ• y tattha pariyÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ nippariyÄ• yadukkhanti imasmiá¹ƒ padadvaye á¹-hatvÄ• dukkh kathetabbaá¹ƒ. ariyasaccaÃ±ca nÄ• metaá¹ƒ pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ saá¹…khepatopi Ä• gacchati vitt Ä• gataá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne saá¹…khepenapi vitthÄ• renapi kathetuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ati \Ne 88/. vitthÄ• n pana vitthÄ• reneva kathetuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ati, na saá¹…khepena. taá¹ƒ idaá¹ƒ imasmiá¹ƒ á¹-hÄ Ä• gatanti vitthÄ• reneva kathetabbaá¹ƒ. tasmÄ• yaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ niddesavÄ• re ``tattha katama ariyasaccaá¹ƒ? jÄ• tipi dukkhÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«ni padÄ• ni gahetvÄ• ``jÄ• ti veditabbÄ• veditabboâ€™â€™ tiÄ• di vuttaá¹ƒ. tattha jÄ• tiÄ• dÄ«ni tÄ• va ``tattha katamÄ• jÄ• ti? yÄ• sattÄ• naá¹ƒ tamhi tamhi sattanikÄ• ye jÄ• ti saÃ±jÄ• tÄ«â€™â€™ ti imassa pana padabhÄ

veditabbÄ• ni.

<191> tatrÄ• yaá¹ƒ \Be 89/ atthavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• --- __tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ sattÄ• na_nti ayaá¹ƒ
sattÄ• naá¹ƒ sÄ• dhÄ• raá¹‡aniddeso. yÄ• devadattassa jÄ• ti, yÄ• somadattassa jÄ• tÄ«t kathiyamÄ• ne neva sattÄ• pariyÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ gacchanti, na sabbaá¹ƒ aparatthadÄ«panaá dvÄ«hi padehi na koci satto apariyÄ• dinno hoti, na kiÃ±ci aparatthadÄ«panaá¹ƒ na sijjhati.
``yÄ• tesaá¹ƒ tesaá¹ƒ sattÄ• naâ€™â€™ nti. __tamhi tamhÄ«_ti ayaá¹ƒ jÄ• tigativasena an sattanikÄ• yÄ• naá¹ƒ sÄ• dhÄ• raá¹‡aniddeso. __sattanikÄ• ye_ti sattÄ• naá¹ƒ nikÄ• ye, sa sattasamÅ«heti attho.

__jÄ• tÄ«_ti ayaá¹ƒ jÄ• tisaddo anekattho. tathÄ• hesa ``ekampi jÄ• tiá¹ƒ, dvepi jÄ• tiyoâ€™
MN II 257) ettha bhave Ä• gato. ``atthi visÄ• khe \Ee 95/, nigaá¹‡á¹-hÄ• nÄ• ma samaá¹‡aj III 71) ettha nikÄ• ye. ``tiriyÄ• nÄ• ma tiá¹‡ajÄ• ti nÄ• bhiyÄ• uggantvÄ• nabhaá¹ƒ Ä• hac ti (AN b V 196) ettha paÃ±Ã±attiyaá¹ƒ. ``jÄ• ti dvÄ«hi khandhehi saá¹…gahitÄ• â€™â€™ ti saá¹…khatalakkhaá¹‡e. ``yaá¹ƒ, bhikkhave, mÄ• tukucchimhi paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ cittaá¹ƒ uppann viÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ pÄ• tubhÅ«taá¹ƒ, tadupÄ• dÄ• ya sÄ• vassa jÄ• tÄ«â€™â€™ ti (Vin I 12 ``sampatijÄ• to, Ä• nanda, bodhisattoâ€™â€™ ti (MN III 207) ettha pasÅ«tiyaá¹ƒ. ``anupakk jÄ• tivÄ• denÄ• â€™â€™ ti (DN I 331) ettha kule. ``yatohaá¹ƒ, bhagini, ariyÄ• ya jÄ• tiyÄ• j 351) ettha ariyasÄ«le. idha panÄ• yaá¹ƒ savikÄ• resu paá¹-hamÄ• bhinibbattakkhandhesu v jÄ• yamÄ• nakavasena jÄ• tÄ«ti idamettha sabhÄ• vapaccattaá¹ƒ. saÃ±jÄ• yanavasena __s padaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hitaá¹ƒ. okkamanavasena __okkanti_. jÄ• yanaá¹-á¹-hena vÄ• __jÄ• ti, _ aparipuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• yatanavasena yuttÄ• . saÃ±jÄ• yanaá¹-á¹-hena __saÃ±jÄ• ti, _ sÄ• paripu yuttÄ• . okkamanaá¹-á¹-hena __okkanti, _ sÄ• aá¹‡á¸• ajajalÄ• bujavasena yuttÄ• . te hi aá vatthikosaÃ±ca \Ne 89/ okkamanti, okkamantÄ• pi pavisantÄ• viya paá¹-isandhiá¹ƒ gaá¹‡ha abhinibbattanaá¹-á¹-hena __abhinibbatti_. sÄ• saá¹ƒsedajaopapÄ• tikavasena yuttÄ• . te h nibbattanti. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• va sammutikathÄ• .

idÄ• ni \Be 90/ paramatthakathÄ• hoti. khandhÄ• eva hi paramatthato pÄ• tubhavanti, na __khandhÄ• na_nti ekavokÄ• rabhave ekassa, catuvokÄ• rabhave catunnaá¹ƒ, paÃ±cavokÄ gahaá¹‡aá¹ƒ veditabbaá¹ƒ. __pÄ• tubhÄ• vo_ti uppatti. __Ä• yatanÄ• na_nti ettha tatra tatra uppajjamÄ• nÄ• yatanavasena saá¹…gaho veditabbo. __paá¹-ilÄ• bho_ti santatiyaá¹ƒ pÄ• t pÄ• tubhavantÄ• neva hi tÄ• ni paá¹-iladdhÄ• ni nÄ• ma honti. __ayaá¹ƒ vuccati jÄ• tÄ«_ti a kathiyati. sÄ• panesÄ• tattha tattha bhave paá¹-hamÄ• bhinibbattilakkhaá¹‡Ä• , nÄ«yyÄ• t idha ummujjanapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• , phalavasena dukkhavicittatÄ• paccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ idÄ• ni __ `jÄ• tiyÄ• dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ayaÃ±hi jÄ• ti sayaá¹ƒ na dukkhÄ• , vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhÄ• ti \Ee 96/ vuttÄ• . kataradukkhassa panÄ• yaá¹ƒ vatthÅ«ti? yaá¹ƒ bÄ• lapaá¹‡á¸• itasuttÄ• dÄ«su (MN III 246 Ä• dayo) bhagavatÄ• pi upamÄ• vasena pakÄ• yaÃ±ca sugatiyaá¹ƒ manussaloke gabbhokkantimÅ«lakÄ• dibhedaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati, vatthu. tatridaá¹ƒ gabbhokkantimÅ«lakÄ• dibhedaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ --- ayaÃ±hi satto mÄ• tuku uppalapadumapuá¹‡á¸• arÄ«kÄ• dÄ«su nibbattati. atha kho heá¹-á¹-hÄ• Ä• mÄ• sayassa u udarapaá¹-alapiá¹-á¹-hikaá¹‡á¸• akÄ• naá¹ƒ vemajjhe paramasambÄ• dhe tibbandhakÄ• re nÄ• nÄ• kuá¹‡apagandhaparibhÄ• vite asuciparamaduggandhapavanavicarite adhimattajeg pÅ«timacchapÅ«tikummÄ• sacandanikÄ• dÄ«su kimi viya nibbattati. so tattha nibbatto dasa mÄ• tukucchisambhavena usmanÄ• puá¹-apÄ• kaá¹ƒ viya paccamÄ• no piá¹-á¹-hapiá¹‡á¸• samiÃ±janapasÄ• raá¹‡Ä• dirahito adhimattaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ paccanubhotÄ«ti. idaá¹ƒ tÄ• va `gabbhokkantimÅ«lakaá¹ƒâ€™ _ dukkhaá¹ƒ.

yaá¹ƒ pana so mÄ• tu sahasÄ• upakkhalanagamananisÄ«danauá¹-á¹-hÄ• naparivattanÄ•
eá¸·ako viya ahiguá¹‡á¹-hikahatthagato sappapotako viya ca Ä• kaá¸• á¸• hanaparikaá¸• á¸• hanaodhunananiddhunanÄ• dinÄ• upakkamena adhimattaá sÄ«tudakapÄ• nakÄ• le sÄ«tanarakÅ«papanno \Ne 90/ viya, uá¹‡hayÄ• gubhattÄ• diajjhoha aá¹…gÄ• ravuá¹-á¹-hisamparikiá¹‡á¹‡o viya, loá¹‡ambilÄ• diajjhoharaá¹‡akÄ• le khÄ• rÄ• paá¹-icchakÄ• dikammakÄ• raá¹‡appatto viya tibbaá¹ƒ dukkhamanubhoti --- idaá¹ `gabbhapariharaá¹‡amÅ«lakaá¹ƒâ€™ _ dukkhaá¹ƒ.

yaá¹ƒ \Be 91/ panassa mÅ«á¸·hagabbhÄ• ya mÄ• tuyÄ• mittÄ• maccasuhajjÄ• dÄ«hipi ad dukkhuppattiá¹-á¹-hÄ• ne chedanaphÄ• lanÄ• dÄ«hi dukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati --- idaá¹ƒ __ `gabb dukkhaá¹ƒ. yaá¹ƒ vijÄ• yamÄ• nÄ• ya mÄ• tuyÄ• kammajehi vÄ• tehi parivattetvÄ• naraka atibhayÄ• nakaá¹ƒ yonimaggaá¹ƒ paá¹-ipÄ• tiyamÄ• nassa \Ee 97/ paramasambÄ• dhena y viya nikkaá¸• á¸• hiyamÄ• nassa mahÄ• nÄ• gassa narakasattassa viya ca saá¹…ghÄ• á¹-a dukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati --- idaá¹ƒ __ `vijÄ• yanamÅ«lakaá¹ƒâ€™ _ dukkhaá¹ƒ. yaá¹ƒ pana jÄ• t taruá¹‡avaá¹‡asadisassa sukumÄ• rasarÄ«rassa hatthaggahaá¹‡anhÄ• panadhovanacoá¸· sÅ«cimukhakhuradhÄ• ravijjhanaphÄ• lanasadisaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati --- idaá¹ƒ mÄ• tuk nikkhamanamÅ«lakaá¹ƒâ€™ _ dukkhaá¹ƒ. yaá¹ƒ tato paraá¹ƒ pavattiyaá¹ƒ attanÄ• va attÄ• acelakavatÄ• divasena Ä• tÄ• panaparitÄ• panÄ• nuyogamanuyuttassa, kodhavasena abhu dukkhaá¹ƒ hoti --- idaá¹ƒ __ `attÅ«pakkamamÅ«lakaá¹ƒâ€™ _ dukkhaá¹ƒ.

yaá¹ƒ pana parato vadhabandhanÄ• dÄ«ni anubhavantassa dukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati --- idaá¹ƒ `parÅ«pakkamamÅ«lakaá¹ƒâ€™ _ dukkhanti. iti imassa sabbassÄ• pi dukkhassa ayaá¹ƒ jÄ• tenetaá¹ƒ vuccati --- jÄ• yetha no ce narakesu satto, tatthaggidÄ• hÄ• dikamappasayhaá¹ƒ.

labhetha dukkhaá¹ƒ nu kuhiá¹ƒ patiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ,

iccÄ• ha dukkhÄ• ti munÄ«dha jÄ• ti ||

dukkhaá¹ƒ tiracchesu kasÄ• patodadaá¹‡á¸• Ä• bhighÄ• tÄ• dibhavaá¹ƒ anekaá¹ƒ.

yaá¹ƒ \Ne 91/ taá¹ƒ kathaá¹ƒ tattha bhaveyya jÄ• tiá¹ƒ,

vinÄ• tahiá¹ƒ jÄ• ti tatopi dukkhÄ• ||

petesu dukkhaá¹ƒ pana khuppipÄ• sÄ• - vÄ• tÄ• tapÄ• dippabhavaá¹ƒ vicittaá¹ƒ.

yasmÄ• ajÄ• tassa na tattha atthi,

tasmÄ• pi dukkhaá¹ƒ muni jÄ• timÄ• ha ||

tibbandhakÄ• re \Be 92/ ca asayhasÄ«te, lokantare yaá¹ƒ asuresu dukkhaá¹ƒ.

na taá¹ƒ bhave tattha na cassa jÄ• ti,

yato ayaá¹ƒ jÄ• ti tatopi dukkhÄ• ||

yaÃ±cÄ• pi \Ee 98/ gÅ«thanarake viya mÄ• tugabbhe, satto vasaá¹ƒ ciramato bahi nikkhamanaÃ±ca.

pappoti dukkhamatighoramidampi natthi,

jÄ• tiá¹ƒ vinÄ• itipi jÄ• tirayaÃ±hi dukkhÄ• ||

kiá¹ƒ bhÄ• sitena bahunÄ• nanu yaá¹ƒ kuhiÃ±ci, atthÄ«dha kiÃ±cidapi dukkhamidaá¹ƒ kadÄ• ci.

nevatthi jÄ• tivirahe yadato mahesÄ«,

dukkhÄ• ti sabbapaá¹-hamaá¹ƒ imamÄ• ha jÄ• tinti ||

jarÄ• niddeso

<192> __jarÄ• _niddese __jarÄ• _ti sabhÄ• vapaccattaá¹ƒ. __jÄ«raá¹‡atÄ• _ti Ä• kÄ• ranid __khaá¹‡á¸• icca_ntiÄ• dayo tayo kÄ• lÄ• tikkame kiccaniddesÄ• . pacchimÄ• dve pakatini iminÄ• padena sabhÄ• vato dÄ«pitÄ• , tenassÄ• idaá¹ƒ sabhÄ• vapaccattaá¹ƒ. jÄ«raá¹‡at 92/, tenassÄ• yaá¹ƒ Ä• kÄ• raniddeso. khaá¹‡á¸• iccanti iminÄ• kÄ• lÄ• tikkame dantanakh khaá¹‡á¸• itabhÄ• vakaraá¹‡akiccato. __pÄ• licca_nti iminÄ• kesalomÄ• naá¹ƒ palitabhÄ• v __valittacatÄ• _ti iminÄ• maá¹ƒsaá¹ƒ milÄ• petvÄ• tace valittabhÄ• vakaraá¹‡akiccato dÄ« khaá¹‡á¸• iccanti Ä• dayo tayo kÄ• lÄ• tikkame kiccaniddesÄ• . tehi imesaá¹ƒ vikÄ• rÄ• naá pÄ• kaá¹-Ä«bhÅ«tÄ• ti pÄ• kaá¹-ajarÄ• dassitÄ• . yatheva hi udakassa vÄ• vÄ• tassa vÄ• tiá¹‡arukkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ saá¹ƒsaggapalibhaggatÄ• ya vÄ• jhÄ• matÄ• ya vÄ• gatamaggo gatamaggo tÄ• neva udakÄ• dÄ«ni, evameva jarÄ• ya dantÄ• dÄ«su khaá¹‡á¸• iccÄ• divas cakkhuá¹ƒ ummÄ«letvÄ• pi gayhati. na ca khaá¹‡á¸• iccÄ• dÄ«neva jarÄ• ; na hi jarÄ• cakk

__Ä• yuno_ \Be 93/ __saá¹ƒhÄ• ni indriyÄ• naá¹ƒ paripÄ• ko_ti imehi pana padehi kÄ• lÄ• Ä• yukkhayacakkhÄ• diindriyaparipÄ• kasaá¹…khÄ• tÄ• ya pakatiyÄ• dÄ«pitÄ• . tenassime veditabbÄ• . tattha yasmÄ• jaraá¹ƒ pattassa Ä• yu hÄ• yati tasmÄ• jarÄ• ``Ä• yuno saá¹ƒh phalÅ«pacÄ• rena vuttÄ• . yasmÄ• daharakÄ• le suppasannÄ• ni sukhumampi \Ee 99/ atta gaá¹‡hanasamatthÄ• ni cakkhÄ• dÄ«ni indriyÄ• ni jaraá¹ƒ pattassa paripakkÄ• ni Ä• luá¸·itÄ oá¸·Ä• rikampi attano visayaá¹ƒ gahetuá¹ƒ asamatthÄ• ni honti, tasmÄ• ``indriyÄ• naá¹ƒ pa phalÅ«pacÄ• reneva vuttÄ• .

sÄ• panesÄ• evaá¹ƒ niddiá¹-á¹-hÄ• sabbÄ• pi jarÄ• pÄ• kaá¹-Ä• paá¹-icchannÄ• ti duvid dantÄ• dÄ«su khaá¹‡á¸• Ä• dibhÄ• vadassanato rÅ«padhammesu jarÄ• __ `pÄ• kaá¹-ajarÄ
pana jarÄ• tÄ• disassa vikÄ• rassa adassanato __ `paá¹-icchannajarÄ• â€™ _ nÄ• ma. tatt khaá¹‡á¸• Ä• dibhÄ• vo dissati, so tÄ• disÄ• naá¹ƒ dantÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ suviÃ±Ã±eyyattÄ• vaá disvÄ• manodvÄ• rena cintetvÄ• ``ime dantÄ• jarÄ• ya pahaá¹-Ä• â€™â€™ ti jaraá¹ƒ jÄ• baddhÄ• ni gosiá¹…gÄ• dÄ«ni oloketvÄ• heá¹-á¹-hÄ• udakassa atthibhÄ• vaá¹ƒ jÄ• nanaá savÄ«cÄ«ti evampi ayaá¹ƒ jarÄ• duvidhÄ• hoti. tattha maá¹‡ikanakarajatapavÄ• á¸·acanda mandadasakÄ• dÄ«su pÄ• á¹‡Ä«naá¹ƒ viya ca pupphaphalapallavÄ• dÄ«su apÄ• á¹‡Ä«naá vaá¹‡á¹‡avisesÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ dubbiÃ±Ã±eyyattÄ• jarÄ• __ `avÄ«cijarÄ• â€™ _ nÄ• ma, nira aÃ±Ã±esu pana yathÄ• vuttesu antarantarÄ• vaá¹‡á¹‡avisesÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ suviÃ±Ã±eyyattÄ

nÄ• ma.

tattha \Ne 93/ savÄ«cijarÄ• upÄ• dinnÄ• nupÄ• dinnakavasena evaá¹ƒ dÄ«petabbÄ• --- da paá¹-hamameva khÄ«radantÄ• nÄ• ma uá¹-á¹-hahanti, na te thirÄ• . tesu pana patitesu pur te paá¹-hamameva setÄ• honti, jarÄ• vÄ• tena pana pahaá¹-akÄ• le kÄ• á¸·akÄ• honti. kes tambÄ• pi honti kÄ• á¸·akÄ• pi setÄ• pi. chavi pana salohitikÄ• hoti. vaá¸• á¸• hantÄ• naá¹ƒ odÄ• tÄ• naá¹ƒ odÄ• tabhÄ• vo, kÄ• á¸·akÄ• naá¹ƒ kÄ• á¸·akabhÄ• vo paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati, jarÄ vaá¸·iá¹ƒ gaá¹‡hÄ• ti. sabbampi sassaá¹ƒ vapitakÄ• le setaá¹ƒ hoti, pacchÄ• nÄ«laá¹ƒ, jarÄ pahaá¹-akÄ• le paá¹‡á¸• ukaá¹ƒ hoti. ambaá¹…kurenÄ• pi dÄ«petuá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ati eva. __ay ayaá¹ƒ \Be 94/ jarÄ• nÄ• ma kathiyati. sÄ• panesÄ• \Ee 100/ khandhaparipÄ• kalakkhaá¹ maraá¹‡Å«panayanarasÄ• , yobbanavinÄ• sapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• .

__ `jarÄ• ya dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ettha pana ayampi sayaá¹ƒ na dukkhÄ• , du vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhÄ• ti vuttÄ• . katarassa dukkhassa? kÄ• yadukkhassa ceva domanas hi attabhÄ• vo jarasakaá¹-aá¹ƒ viya dubbalo hoti, á¹-hÄ• tuá¹ƒ vÄ• gantuá¹ƒ vÄ• nisÄ«dituá balavaá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati; puttadÄ• re yathÄ• pure asallakkhente domanassaá¹ƒ dvinnampi dukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhÄ• ti veditabbÄ• . apica --- aá¹…gÄ• naá¹ƒ sithilabhÄ• vÄ• , indriyÄ• naá¹ƒ vikÄ• rato.

yobbanassa vinÄ• sena, balassa upaghÄ• tato ||

vippavÄ• sÄ• satÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ, puttadÄ• rehi attano.

apasÄ• danÄ«yato ceva, bhÄ«yyo bÄ• lattapattiyÄ• ||

pappoti dukkhaá¹ƒ yaá¹ƒ macco, kÄ• yikaá¹ƒ mÄ• nasaá¹ƒ tathÄ• .

sabbametaá¹ƒ jarÄ• hetu, yasmÄ• tasmÄ• jarÄ• dukhÄ• ti ||

maraá¹‡aniddeso

<193> __maraá¹‡a_niddese cavanakavasena __cuti; _ ekacatupaÃ±cakkhandhÄ• ya cutiyÄ __cavanatÄ• _ti bhÄ• vavacanena lakkhaá¹‡anidassanaá¹ƒ. __bhedo_ti cutikhandhÄ• naá¹ bhaá¹…guppattiparidÄ«panaá¹ƒ \Ne 94/. __antaradhÄ• na_nti ghaá¹-assa viya bhinnassa b cutikhandhÄ• naá¹ƒ yena kenaci pariyÄ• yena á¹-hÄ• nÄ• bhÄ• vaparidÄ«panaá¹ƒ. __macc maccusaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ. kÄ• lo nÄ• ma antako, tassa kiriyÄ• __kÄ• lakiriyÄ• maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ dÄ«pitaá¹ƒ hoti.

idÄ• ni paramatthena dÄ«petuá¹ƒ __khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ bhedo_tiÄ• dimÄ• ha. paramatthena satto nÄ• ma koci marati. khandhesu pana bhijjamÄ• nesu satto marati bhinnesu matoti voh catupaÃ±cavokÄ• ravasena khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ bhedo, ekavokÄ• ravasena kaá¸·evarassa nik khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ bhedo, sesadvayavasena \Ee 101/ kaá¸·evarassa \Be 95/ nikkhepo veditab rÅ«pakÄ• yasaá¹…khÄ• tassa kaá¸·evarassa sambhavato. yasmÄ• vÄ• cÄ• tumahÄ• rÄ• kiÃ±ci nikkhipati, tasmÄ• tesaá¹ƒ vasena khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ bhedo. manussÄ• dÄ«su kaá¸·ev kaá¸·evarassa nikkhepakaraá¹‡ato maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ ``kaá¸·evarassa nikkhepoâ€™â€™ ti vutta __jÄ«vitindriyassa upacchedo_ti iminÄ• indriyabaddhasseva maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma hoti, an maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma natthÄ«ti dasseti. `sassaá¹ƒ mataá¹ƒ, rukkho matoâ€™ ti idaá¹ƒ pana atthato pana evarÅ«pÄ• ni vacanÄ• ni sassÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ khayavayabhÄ• vameva dÄ«penti.

idaá¹ƒ sabbampi maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ nÄ• ma kathiyati.

apicettha khaá¹‡ikamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, sammutimaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, samucchedamaraá¹‡anti ayampi b `khaá¹‡ikamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒâ€™ _ nÄ• ma pavatte rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«padhammÄ• naá¹ƒ bhedo. `tisso __ `sammutimaraá¹‡aá¹ƒâ€™ _ nÄ• ma. khÄ«á¹‡Ä• savassa appaá¹-isandhikÄ• kÄ• lakiriy `samucchedamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒâ€™ _ nÄ• ma. imasmiá¹ƒ panatthe sammutimaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ adhipp upakkamamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, sarasamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, Ä• yukkhayamaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, puÃ±Ã±akkhayama tayidaá¹ƒ cutilakkhaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, viyogarasaá¹ƒ, vippavÄ• sapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• naá¹ƒ.

__ `maraá¹‡assa dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ettha pana idampi sayaá¹ƒ na dukkhaá vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhanti vuttaá¹ƒ. maraá¹‡antikÄ• pi hi sÄ• rÄ«rikÄ• vedanÄ• , paá¹-ivÄ Ä• dittatiá¹‡ukkÄ• \Ne 95/ viya, sarÄ«raá¹ƒ nidahanti. narakanimittÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ upaá¹-á¹-hÄ balavadomanassaá¹ƒ uppajjati. iti imesaá¹ƒ dvinnampi dukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ vatthubhÄ• vena duk ca ---

pÄ• passa pÄ• pakammÄ• di, nimittamanupassato.

bhaddassÄ• pasahantassa, viyogaá¹ƒ piyavatthukaá¹ƒ ||

mÄ«yamÄ• nassa \Ee 102/ yaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ, mÄ• nasaá¹ƒ avisesato.

sabbesaÃ±cÄ• pi yaá¹ƒ sandhi-bandhanacchedanÄ• dikaá¹ƒ ||

vitujjamÄ• namammÄ• naá¹ƒ, hoti dukkhaá¹ƒ sarÄ«rajaá¹ƒ.

asayhamappaá¹-ikÄ• raá¹ƒ, dukkhassetassidaá¹ƒ yato.

maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ vatthu tenetaá¹ƒ, dukkhamicceva bhÄ• sitanti ||

apica \Be 96/ imÄ• ni jÄ• tijarÄ• maraá¹‡Ä• ni nÄ• ma imesaá¹ƒ sattÄ• naá¹ƒ vadhakapacc gavesantÄ• ni vicaranti. yathÄ• hi purisassa tÄ«su paccÄ• mittesu otÄ• rÄ• pekkhesu vicar ``ahaá¹ƒ asukaaraÃ±Ã±assa nÄ• ma vaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ kathetvÄ• etaá¹ƒ Ä• dÄ• ya tattha gami dukkaraá¹ƒ natthÄ«â€™â€™ ti. dutiyo vadeyya ``ahaá¹ƒ tava etaá¹ƒ gahetvÄ• gatakÄ• le p karissÄ• mi, ettha mayhaá¹ƒ dukkaraá¹ƒ natthÄ«â€™â€™ ti. tatiyo vadeyya --- ``tayÄ• etas kate tiá¹‡hena asinÄ• sÄ«sacchedanaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma mayhaá¹ƒ bhÄ• ro hotÅ«â€™â€™ ti. te e kareyyuá¹ƒ.

tattha paá¹-hamapaccÄ• mittassa araÃ±Ã±assa vaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ kathetvÄ• taá¹ƒ Ä• dÄ• ya ta suhajjaÃ±Ä• timaá¹‡á¸• alato nikkaá¸• á¸• hitvÄ• yattha katthaci nibbattÄ• panaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma dutiyassa pothetvÄ• dubbalakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ viya nibbattakkhandhesu nipatitvÄ• parÄ• dhÄ«namaÃ±caparÄ• yaá¹‡abhÄ• vakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ jarÄ• ya kiccaá¹ƒ. tatiyassa tiá¹‡he viya jÄ«vitakkhayapÄ• panaá¹ƒ maraá¹‡assa kiccanti veditabbaá¹ƒ.

apicettha jÄ• tidukkhaá¹ƒ sÄ• dÄ«navamahÄ• kantÄ• rappaveso viya daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ. jar annapÄ• narahitassa \Ne 96/ dubbalyaá¹ƒ viya daá¹-á¹-habbaá¹ƒ. maraá¹‡adukkhaá¹ƒ dubb iriyÄ• pathapavattane vihataparakkamassa vÄ• á¸·Ä• dÄ«hi anayabyasanÄ• pÄ• danaá¹ƒ v

sokaniddeso

<194> __soka_niddese byasatÄ«ti byasanaá¹ƒ; hitasukhaá¹ƒ khipati viddhaá¹ƒsetÄ«ti attho byasanaá¹ƒ Ã±Ä• tibyasanaá¹ƒ; corarogabhayÄ• dÄ«hi Ã±Ä• tikkhayo Ã±Ä• tivinÄ• soti atth phuá¹-á¹-hassÄ• _ti \Ee 103/ ajjhotthaá¹-assa abhibhÅ«tassa samannÄ• gatassÄ• ti attho. s ayaá¹ƒ pana viseso --- bhogÄ• naá¹ƒ byasanaá¹ƒ __bhogabyasanaá¹ƒ; _ rÄ• jacorÄ• divas bhogavinÄ• soti attho. rogoyeva byasanaá¹ƒ __rogabyasanaá¹ƒ; _ rogo hi Ä• rogyaá¹ƒ byas byasanaá¹ƒ. sÄ«lassa byasanaá¹ƒ __sÄ«labyasanaá¹ƒ; _ dussÄ«lyassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. s vinÄ• sayamÄ• nÄ• uppannÄ• diá¹-á¹-hiyeva byasanaá¹ƒ __diá¹-á¹-hibyasanaá¹ƒ_. ettha c anipphannÄ• ni, pacchimÄ• ni tÄ«á¹‡i nipphannÄ• ni tilakkhaá¹‡abbhÄ• hatÄ• ni. purimÄ• n na akusalÄ• ni. sÄ«ladiá¹-á¹-hibyasanadvayaá¹ƒ akusalaá¹ƒ.

__aÃ±Ã±ataraÃ±Ã±atarenÄ• _ti \Be 97/ gahitesu vÄ• yena kenaci aggahitesu vÄ• mittÄ• n kenaci. __samannÄ• gatassÄ• _ti samanubandhassa aparimuccamÄ• nassa. __aÃ±Ã±atar yena kenaci sokadukkhassa uppattihetunÄ• . __soko_ti socanakavasena soko; idaá¹ƒ tehi k upajjanakasokassa sabhÄ• vapaccattaá¹ƒ. __socanÄ• _ti socanÄ• karo. __socitatta_nti soc abbhantare soko. dutiyapadaá¹ƒ upasaggavasena vaá¸• á¸• hitaá¹ƒ. so hi abbhantare sukkh parisukkhÄ• pento viya uppajjatÄ«ti ``antosoko antoparisokoâ€™â€™ ti vuccati.

__cetaso parijjhÄ• yanÄ• _ti cittassa jhÄ• yanÄ• kÄ• ro. soko hi uppajjamÄ• no aggi viya ci paridahati, ``cittaá¹ƒ me jhÄ• maá¹ƒ, na me kiÃ±ci paá¹-ibhÄ• tÄ«â€™â€™ ti vadÄ• peti. du tassa bhÄ• vo __domanassaá¹ƒ_. anupaviá¹-á¹-haá¹-á¹-hena sokova sallanti __sokasallaá¹ ayaá¹ƒ soko nÄ• ma kathiyati. so panÄ• yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±cÄ• pi atthato domanassavedanÄ• va \N santepi antonijjhÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡o, cetaso parinijjhÄ• yanaraso, anusocanapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ•

__ `sokassa dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ettha pana ayaá¹ƒ sabhÄ• vadukkhattÄ• ce vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhoti vutto. kataradukkhassÄ• ti? kÄ• yikadukkhassa ceva javanakkha sokavegena hi hadaye mahÄ• gaá¹‡á¸• o uá¹-á¹-hahitvÄ• paripaccitvÄ• bhijjati, mukhato v nikkhamati, balavaá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati. ``ettakÄ• me Ã±Ä• tayo khayaá¹ƒ gatÄ• ti cintentassa ca balavaá¹ƒ domanassaá¹ƒ uppajjati. iti imesaá¹ƒ dvinnaá¹ƒ dukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ v dukkhoti veditabbo. apica --- sattÄ• naá¹ƒ hadayaá¹ƒ soko, sallaá¹ƒ viya vitujjati.

aggitattova nÄ• rÄ• co, bhusaÃ±ca á¸• ahate puna ||

samÄ• vahati ca byÄ• dhi-jarÄ• maraá¹‡abhedanaá¹ƒ.

dukkhampi vividhaá¹ƒ yasmÄ• , tasmÄ• dukkhoti vuccatÄ«ti ||

paridevaniddeso

<195> __parideva_niddese \Be 98/ `mayhaá¹ƒ dhÄ«tÄ• , mayhaá¹ƒ puttoâ€™ ti evaá¹ƒ Ä• rodanti etenÄ• ti __Ä• devo_. taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ vaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ parikittetvÄ• parikittetvÄ• devanti e tato parÄ• ni dve dve padÄ• ni purimadvayasseva Ä• kÄ• rabhÄ• vaniddesavasena vuttÄ• r __palÄ• po_ti tucchaá¹ƒ niratthakavacanaá¹ƒ. upaá¸• á¸• habhaá¹‡itaaÃ±Ã±abhaá¹‡itÄ• div __vippalÄ• po. lÄ• lappo_ti punappunaá¹ƒ lapanaá¹ƒ. lÄ• lappanÄ• kÄ• ro __lÄ• lappanÄ• _ __lÄ• lappitattaá¹ƒ. ayaá¹ƒ vuccati paridevo_ti ayaá¹ƒ paridevo nÄ• ma kathiyati. so lÄ• lapp guá¹‡adosaparikittanaraso, sambhamapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• no.

__ `paridevassa dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ettha pana ayampi sayaá¹ƒ na dukkho, kÄ• yadukkhadomanassadukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ pana vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhoti vutto. paridevanto muá¹-á¹-hÄ«hi \Ne 98/ potheti, ubhohi hatthehi uraá¹ƒ paharati \Ee 105/ piá¹ƒsati, sÄ«sena yujjhati. tenassa balavaá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati. `ettakÄ• me Ã±Ä• tayo khayaá¹ƒ va gatÄ• â€™ tiÄ• dÄ«ni cinteti. tenassa balavaá¹ƒ domanassaá¹ƒ uppajjati. iti imesaá¹ƒ dvinn vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhoti veditabbo. apica --- yaá¹ƒ sokasallavihato paridevamÄ• no,

kaá¹‡á¹-hoá¹-á¹-hatÄ• lutalasosajamappasayhaá¹ƒ.

bhiyyodhimattamadhigacchatiyeva dukkhaá¹ƒ,

dukkhoti tena bhagavÄ• paridevamÄ• hÄ• ti ||

dukkhadomanassaniddeso

196-7__._ __dukkhadomanassa_niddesÄ• heá¹-á¹-hÄ• dhammasaá¹…gahaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ
eva. lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni pana tesaá¹ƒ tattha vuttÄ• neva.

`dukkhassa dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabbo, domanassassa dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ ti ett sayaÃ±ca dukkhattÄ• kÄ• yikacetasikadukkhÄ• naÃ±ca vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhanti vuttaá¹ kaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• sikÄ• naÃ±ca chedanadukkhena dukkhitassa \Be 99/, anÄ• thasÄ• lÄ• yaá¹ƒ katvÄ• nipannassa, vaá¹‡amukhehi puá¸·uvakesu nikkhamantesu balavaá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkha nÄ• nÄ• raá¹…garattavatthamanuÃ±Ã±Ä• laá¹…kÄ• raá¹ƒ nakkhattaá¹ƒ kÄ«á¸·antaá¹ƒ mah balavadomanassaá¹ƒ uppajjati. evaá¹ƒ tÄ• va dukkhassa dvinnampi dukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ vatthub pÄ«á¸·eti kÄ• yikamidaá¹ƒ, dukkhaá¹ƒ dukkhaÃ±ca mÄ• nasaá¹ƒ bhiyyo.

janayati yasmÄ• tasmÄ• , dukkhanti visesato vuttanti || cetodukkhasamappitÄ• pana kese pakiriya urÄ• ni patipisenti, Ä• vaá¹-á¹-anti, vivaá¹-á¹-an papatanti, satthaá¹ƒ Ä• haranti, visaá¹ƒ khÄ• danti, rajjuyÄ• ubbandhanti, aggiá¹ƒ pavisanti taá¹ƒ viparÄ«taá¹ƒ vatthuá¹ƒ tathÄ• tathÄ• vippaá¹-isÄ• rino pariá¸• ayhamÄ• nacittÄ• cin domanassassa ubhinnampi dukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ vatthubhÄ• vo veditabbo. apica --- pÄ«á¸·eti yato cittaá¹ƒ, kÄ• yassa ca pÄ«á¸·anaá¹ƒ samÄ• vahati.

dukkhanti domanassampi, domanassaá¹ƒ tato ahÅ«ti ||

upÄ• yÄ• saniddeso

<198> __upÄ• yÄ• sa_niddese \Ee 106/ Ä• yÄ• sanaá¹-á¹-hena __Ä• yÄ• so; _ saá¹ƒsÄ«d cittakilamathassetaá¹ƒ nÄ• maá¹ƒ. balavaá¹ƒ Ä• yÄ• so __upÄ• yÄ• so_. Ä• yÄ• sitabhÄ• v upÄ• yÄ• sitabhÄ• vo __upÄ• yÄ• sitattaá¹ƒ_. __ayaá¹ƒ vuccati upÄ• yÄ• so_ti ayaá¹ƒ upÄ panesa byÄ• sattilakkhaá¹‡o, nitthunanaraso, visÄ• dapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• no.

__ `upÄ• yÄ• sassa dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ettha pana ayampi sayaá¹ƒ na dukkh vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhoti vutto. kupitena hi raÃ±Ã±Ä• issariyaá¹ƒ acchinditvÄ• hataputtab Ä• á¹‡attavadhÄ• naá¹ƒ bhayena aá¹-aviá¹ƒ pavisitvÄ• nilÄ«nÄ• naá¹ƒ mahÄ• visÄ• dappa dukkhaseyyÄ• ya dukkhanisajjÄ• ya balavaá¹ƒ kÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati. `ettakÄ• no Ã±Ä naá¹-á¹-hÄ• â€™ ti cintentÄ• naá¹ƒ balavadomanassaá¹ƒ uppajjati. iti imesaá¹ƒ dvinnampi c vatthubhÄ• vena dukkhoti veditabboti. apica --- cittassa \Be 100/ paridahanÄ• , kÄ• yassa visÄ• danÄ• ca adhimattaá¹ƒ.

yaá¹ƒ dukkhamupÄ• yÄ• so, janeti dukkho tato vutto ||

ettha ca mandagginÄ• antobhÄ• janeyeva telÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ pÄ• ko viya soko. tikkhagginÄ• bahinikkhamanaá¹ƒ viya paridevo. bahinikkhantÄ• vasesassa nikkhamitumpi appahontassa parikkhayÄ• pÄ• ko viya upÄ• yÄ• so daá¹-á¹-habbo.

appiyasampayoganiddeso

<199> __appiyasampayoga_niddese \Ne 100/ __yassÄ• _ti ye assa. __aniá¹-á¹-hÄ• _ti apa hontu apariyesitÄ• vÄ• , nÄ• mamevetaá¹ƒ amanÄ• pÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• naá¹ƒ. manasmiá¹ƒ n __akantÄ• _. manasmiá¹ƒ na appiyanti, na vÄ• manaá¹ƒ vaá¸• á¸• hentÄ«ti __amanÄ• pÄ• sabhÄ• vanidassanaá¹ƒ. anatthaá¹ƒ kÄ• menti icchantÄ«ti __anatthakÄ• mÄ• _. ahitaá¹ƒ kÄ __ahitakÄ• mÄ• _. aphÄ• sukaá¹ƒ dukkhavihÄ• raá¹ƒ kÄ• menti icchantÄ«ti __aphÄ• sukak khemaá¹ƒ nibbhayaá¹ƒ vivaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ na icchanti, sabhayaá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-ameva nesaá¹ƒ kÄ• n __Ä• yogakkhemakÄ• mÄ• _.

apica saddhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ vuddhisaá¹…khÄ• tassa atthassa akÄ• manato tesaá¹ƒyeva hÄ• kÄ• manato __anatthakÄ• mÄ• _. saddhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒyeva upÄ• yabhÅ«tassa hitassa akÄ• upÄ• yabhÅ«tassa ahitassa ca kÄ• manato __ahitakÄ• mÄ• _. phÄ• sukavihÄ• rassa akÄ• kÄ• manato __aphÄ• sukakÄ• mÄ• _. yassa kassaci nibbhayassa akÄ• manato bhayassa c __ayogakkhemakÄ• mÄ• _ti evampettha attho daá¹-á¹-habbo.

__saá¹…gatÄ«_ti gantvÄ• saá¹ƒyogo. __samÄ• gamo_ti Ä• gatehi saá¹ƒyogo. __samodhÄ sahabhÄ• vo. __missÄ«bhÄ• vo_ti sabbakiccÄ• naá¹ƒ sahakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ. ayaá¹ƒ sattavasen pana yaá¹ƒ labbhati taá¹ƒ gahetabbaá¹ƒ. __ayaá¹ƒ vuccatÄ«_ti ayaá¹ƒ appiyasampayogo n aniá¹-á¹-hasamodhÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡o, cittavighÄ• takaraá¹‡araso, anatthabhÄ• vapaccupaá¹-so \Be 101/ atthato eko dhammo nÄ• ma natthi. kevalaá¹ƒ appiyasampayuttÄ• naá¹ƒ duvidh vatthubhÄ• vato dukkhoti vutto. aniá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni hi vatthÅ«ni samodhÄ• nagatÄ• ni vijjhanach kÄ• yikampi dukkhaá¹ƒ uppÄ• denti, ubbegajananato mÄ• nasampi. tenetaá¹ƒ vuccati --- disvÄ• va appiye dukkhaá¹ƒ, paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ hoti cetasi.

tadupakkamasambhÅ«ta-matha kÄ• ye yato idha ||

tato \Ne 101/ dukkhadvayassÄ• pi, vatthuto so mahesinÄ• .

dukkho vuttoti viÃ±Ã±eyyo, appiyehi samÄ• gamoti ||

piyavippayoganiddeso

<200> __piyavippayoga_niddeso vuttapaá¹-ipakkhanayena veditabbo. __mÄ• tÄ• vÄ• _tiÄ sarÅ«pena dassetuá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ. tattha mamÄ• yatÄ«ti __mÄ• tÄ• _. piyÄ• yatÄ«ti \Ee 108/__bhÄ• tÄ• _. tathÄ• __bhaginÄ«_. mettÄ• yantÄ«ti mittÄ• , minantÄ«ti vÄ• __mittÄ• ; _ sa pakkhipantÄ«ti attho. kiccakaraá¹‡Ä«yesu sahabhÄ• vaá¹-á¹-hena amÄ• hontÄ«ti __amacc ajjhattikoti evaá¹ƒ jÄ• nanti Ã±Ä• yantÄ«ti vÄ• __Ã±Ä• tÄ«_. lohitena sambandhÄ• ti __sÄ• padÄ• ni atthato veditabbÄ• ni. __ayaá¹ƒ vuccatÄ«_ti ayaá¹ƒ piyehi vippayogo nÄ• ma kath iá¹-á¹-havatthuviyogalakkhaá¹‡o, sokuppÄ• danaraso, byasanapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• no.

so atthato eko dhammo nÄ• ma natthi. kevalaá¹ƒ piyavippayuttÄ• naá¹ƒ duvidhassÄ• pi du dukkhoti vutto. iá¹-á¹-hÄ• ni hi vatthÅ«ni viyujjamÄ• nÄ• ni sarÄ«rassa sosanamilÄ• panÄ• d dukkhaá¹ƒ uppÄ• denti, `yampi no ahosi, tampi no natthÄ«â€™ ti anusocÄ• panato mÄ• na

Ã±Ä• tidhanÄ• diviyogÄ• , sokasarasamappitÄ• vitujjanti.

bÄ• lÄ• yato tato yaá¹ƒ, dukkhoti mato piyaviyogoti ||

icchÄ• niddeso

<201> __icchÄ• _niddese __jÄ• tidhammÄ• na_nti jÄ• tisabhÄ• vÄ• naá¹ƒ jÄ• tipakatikÄ• n taá¹‡hÄ• uppajjati. __aho vatÄ• _ti patthanÄ• . __na_ \Be 102/ __kho panetaá¹ƒ icchÄ• ya etaá¹ƒ ``aho vata mayaá¹ƒ na jÄ• tidhammÄ• assÄ• ma, na ca vata no jÄ• ti Ä• gaccheyyÄ

pahÄ«nasamudayesu sÄ• dhÅ«su vijjamÄ• naá¹ƒ ajÄ• tidhammattaá¹ƒ, parinibbutesu ca vij anÄ• gamanaá¹ƒ icchitaá¹ƒ, taá¹ƒ icchantassÄ• pi maggabhÄ• vanÄ• ya vinÄ• apattabbato pattabbato na icchÄ• ya pattabbaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma hoti. __idampÄ«_ti etampi; upari sesÄ• ni upÄ __yampiccha_nti yenapi dhammena alabbhaneyyaá¹ƒ vatthuá¹ƒ icchanto na labhati, taá¹ƒ alabbhaneyyavatthuicchanaá¹ƒ dukkhanti veditabbaá¹ƒ. __jarÄ• dhammÄ• na_ntiÄ• dÄ«sup evamettha alabbhaneyyavatthÅ«su icchÄ• va ``yampicchaá¹ƒ na labhati tampi dukkhaâ€™â alabbhaneyyavatthuicchanalakkhaá¹‡Ä• , tappariyesanarasÄ• , tesaá¹ƒ appattipaccupaá¹-á dvinnaá¹ƒ pana dukkhÄ• naá¹ƒ vatthubhÄ• vato dukkhÄ• ti vuttÄ• . ekacco hi rÄ• jÄ• bhavi so chinnabhinnagaá¹‡ena parivÄ• rito pabbatavisamaá¹ƒ vÄ• vanagahanaá¹ƒ vÄ• pavisati pavattiá¹ƒ Ã±atvÄ• balakÄ• yaá¹ƒ peseti. so rÄ• japurisehi nihatapariv Ä• ro sayampi laddha rukkhantaraá¹ƒ vÄ• pÄ• sÄ• á¹‡antaraá¹ƒ vÄ• pavisati. tasmiá¹ƒ samaye mahÄ• megho ua kÄ• á¸·avaddalikÄ• hoti. atha naá¹ƒ samantato kÄ• á¸·akipillikÄ• dayo pÄ• á¹‡Ä• parivÄ• r balavakÄ• yadukkhaá¹ƒ uppajjati. `maá¹ƒ ekaá¹ƒ nissÄ• ya ettakÄ• Ã±Ä• tÄ« ca bhogÄ• c cintentassa balavadomanassaá¹ƒ uppajjati. iti ayaá¹ƒ icchÄ• imesaá¹ƒ dvinnampi dukkhÄ• dukkhÄ• ti veditabbÄ• . apica --- taá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ patthayamÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ, tassa tassa alÄ• bhato.

yaá¹ƒ vighÄ• tamayaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ, sattÄ• naá¹ƒ idha jÄ• yati ||

alabbhaneyyavatthÅ«naá¹ƒ, patthanÄ• tassa kÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒ.

yasmÄ• tasmÄ• jino dukkhaá¹ƒ, icchitÄ• lÄ• bhamabravÄ«ti ||

upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhaniddeso

<202> __upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandha_niddese __saá¹ƒkhittenÄ• _ti desanaá¹ƒ sandhÄ• ya vutta dukkhasatÄ• nÄ«ti vÄ• ettakÄ• ni dukkhasahassÄ• nÄ«ti vÄ• ettakÄ• ni dukkhasatasahass saá¹ƒkhipituá¹ƒ na sakkÄ• , desanÄ• pana sakkÄ• , tasmÄ• ``dukkhaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma aÃ±Ã±aá saá¹ƒkhittena paÃ±cupÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• dukkhÄ• â€™â€™ ti desanaá¹ƒ saá¹…khipen nipÄ• to; tassa te katameti ceti attho. __rÅ«pÅ«pÄ• dÄ• nakkhandho_tiÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ attho k vaá¹‡á¹‡itoyeva.

__ `khandhÄ• naá¹ƒ_ \Ne 103/ __dukkhaá¹-á¹-ho veditabboâ€™ _ti ettha pana --- jÄ• tippabhutikaá¹ƒ \Ee 110/ dukkhaá¹ƒ, yaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ idha tÄ• dinÄ• .

avuttaá¹ƒ yaÃ±ca taá¹ƒ sabbaá¹ƒ, vinÄ• ete na vijjati ||

yasmÄ• tasmÄ• upÄ• dÄ• na-kkhandhÄ• saá¹…khepato ime.

dukkhÄ• ti vuttÄ• dukkhanta-desakena mahesinÄ• ||

tathÄ• hi indhanamiva pÄ• vako, lakkhamiva paharaá¹‡Ä• ni, gorÅ«pamiva á¸• aá¹ƒsamaka lÄ• vakÄ• , gÄ• maá¹ƒ viya gÄ• maghÄ• takÄ• , upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhapaÃ±cakameva jÄ• t bÄ• dhayamÄ• nÄ• , tiá¹‡alatÄ• dÄ«ni viya bhÅ«miyaá¹ƒ, pupphaphalapallavÄ• dÄ«ni viya upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhesuyeva nibbattanti. upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• naÃ±ca Ä• didukkhaá¹ƒ j pariyosÄ• nadukkhaá¹ƒ maraá¹‡aá¹ƒ. mÄ• raá¹‡antikadukkhÄ• bhighÄ• tena pariá¸• ayham tadasahanato lÄ• lappanadukkhaá¹ƒ paridevo. tato dhÄ• tukkhobhasaá¹…khÄ• taaniá¹-á¹-h kÄ• yassa Ä• bÄ• dhanadukkhaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ. tena bÄ• dhiyamÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ puthujjanÄ• n cetobÄ• dhanadukkhaá¹ƒ domanassaá¹ƒ. sokÄ• divuá¸• á¸• hiyÄ• janitavisÄ• dÄ• naá¹ƒ an manorathavighÄ• tappattÄ• naá¹ƒ icchÄ• vighÄ• tadukkhaá¹ƒ icchitÄ• lÄ• bhoti evaá¹ƒ nÄ• upaparikkhiyamÄ• nÄ• upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhÄ• va dukkhÄ• ti yadetaá¹ƒ ekamekaá¹ƒ dasse kappehi na sakkÄ• asesato vattuá¹ƒ, taá¹ƒ sabbampi dukkhaá¹ƒ ekajalabindumhi sakalasa yesu kesuci paÃ±casu upÄ• dÄ• nakkhandhesu saá¹…khipitvÄ• dassetuá¹ƒ ``saá¹ƒkhittena dukkhÄ• â€™â€™ ti bhagavÄ• avocÄ• ti.

dukkhasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

2. samudayasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<203> __samudayasacca_niddese \Be 104/ __yÄ• yaá¹ƒ taá¹‡hÄ• _ti yÄ• ayaá¹ƒ taá¹‡hÄ punabbhavakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ \Ne 104/ punobbhavo, punobbhavo sÄ«lamassÄ• ti ponobbhavikÄ 111/ deti, punabbhavÄ• ya saá¹ƒvattati, punappunaá¹ƒ bhave nibbattetÄ«ti ponobbhavikÄ• punabbhavassa dÄ• yikÄ• pi atthi adÄ• yikÄ• pi, punabbhavÄ• ya saá¹ƒvattanikÄ• pi atthi a paá¹-isandhiyÄ• upadhivepakkamattÄ• pi. sÄ• punabbhavaá¹ƒ dadamÄ• nÄ• pi adadamÄ• saá¹ƒvattamÄ• nÄ• pi asaá¹ƒvattamÄ• nÄ• pi, dinnÄ• ya paá¹-isandhiyÄ• upadhivepakkam nÄ• maá¹ƒ labhati. abhinandanasaá¹…khÄ• tena nandirÄ• gena sahagatÄ• ti __nandirÄ• ga saddhiá¹ƒ atthato ekattameva gatÄ• ti vuttaá¹ƒ hoti. __tatratatrÄ• bhinandinÄ«_ti yatra yatra tatratatrÄ• bhinandinÄ«, rÅ«pÄ• dÄ«su vÄ• Ä• rammaá¹‡esu tatratatrÄ• bhinandinÄ«; rÅ«p saddagandharasaphoá¹-á¹-habbadhammÄ• bhinandinÄ«ti attho. __seyyathida_nti nipÄ• to;
attho. __kÄ• mataá¹‡hÄ• _ti kÄ• me taá¹‡hÄ• kÄ• mataá¹‡hÄ• ; paÃ±cakÄ• maguá¹‡ikarÄ taá¹‡hÄ• __bhavataá¹‡hÄ• ; _ bhavapatthanÄ• vasena uppannassa sassatadiá¹-á¹-hisahag rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«pabhavarÄ• gassa ca jhÄ• nanikantiyÄ• cetaá¹ƒ adhivacanaá¹ƒ. vibhave taá¹‡h ucchedadiá¹-á¹-hisahagatassa rÄ• gassetaá¹ƒ adhivacanaá¹ƒ.

idÄ• ni tassÄ• taá¹‡hÄ• ya vatthuá¹ƒ vitthÄ• rato dassetuá¹ƒ __sÄ• kho panesÄ• _tiÄ• dir __uppajjatÄ«_ti jÄ• yati. __nivisatÄ«_ti punappunaá¹ƒ pavattivasena patiá¹-á¹-hahati. __yaá sÄ• tarÅ«pa_nti yaá¹ƒ lokasmiá¹ƒ piyasabhÄ• vaÃ±ceva madhurasabhÄ• vaÃ±ca. __cakkhu cakkhÄ• dÄ«su mamattena abhiniviá¹-á¹-hÄ• sattÄ• sampattiyaá¹ƒ patiá¹-á¹-hitÄ• attano c nimittaggahaá¹‡Ä• nusÄ• rena vippasannapaÃ±capasÄ• daá¹ƒ suvaá¹‡á¹‡avimÄ• ne uggh viya maÃ±Ã±anti, sotaá¹ƒ rajatapanÄ• á¸·ikaá¹ƒ viya pÄ• maá¹…gasuttakaá¹ƒ viya ca \Ee 1 tuá¹…ganÄ• sÄ• ti laddhavohÄ• raá¹ƒ ghÄ• naá¹ƒ vaá¹-á¹-etvÄ• á¹-hapitaharitÄ• lavaá¹-á¹-jivhaá¹ƒ rattakambalapaá¹-alaá¹ƒ viya mudusiniddhamadhurarasadaá¹ƒ maÃ±Ã±anti, kÄ• ya viya suvaá¹‡á¹‡atoraá¹‡aá¹ƒ viya ca maÃ±Ã±anti, manaá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±esaá¹ƒ manena asadisa rÅ«paá¹ƒ suvaá¹‡á¹‡akaá¹‡ikÄ• rapupphÄ• divaá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ viya \Be 105/, saddaá¹ƒ mattakaravÄ«kakokilamandadhamitamaá¹‡ivaá¹ƒsanigghosaá¹ƒ viya, attanÄ• paá¹-iladdhÄ catusamuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nikagandhÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni `kassa aÃ±Ã±assa evarÅ«pÄ• ni atthÄ evaá¹ƒ maÃ±Ã±amÄ• nÄ• naá¹ƒ tÄ• ni cakkhÄ• dÄ«ni piyarÅ«pÄ• ni ceva honti sÄ• tarÅ«p anuppannÄ• ceva taá¹‡hÄ• uppajjati, uppannÄ• ca punappunaá¹ƒ pavattivasena nivisati.
``cakkhuá¹ƒ loke \Ne 105/ piyarÅ«paá¹ƒ sÄ• tarÅ«paá¹ƒ. etthesÄ• taá¹‡hÄ• uppajjamÄ• nA tiÄ• dimÄ• ha. tattha __uppajjamÄ• nÄ• _ti yadÄ• uppajjati tadÄ• ettha uppajjatÄ«ti attho.
sabbatthÄ• pÄ«ti.

samudayasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

3. nirodhasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<204> __nirodhasacca_niddese __yo tassÄ• yeva taá¹‡hÄ• yÄ• _ti ettha `yo tasseva dukkh yasmÄ• samudayanirodheneva dukkhaá¹ƒ nirujjhati no aÃ±Ã±athÄ• , yathÄ• ha --- ``yathÄ• pi mÅ«le anupaddave daá¸·he, chinnopi rukkho punareva rÅ«hati.

evampi taá¹‡hÄ• nusaye anÅ«hate,

nibbattati dukkhamidaá¹ƒ punappunaâ€™â€™ nti || (Dhp 338).

tasmÄ• taá¹ƒ dukkhanirodhaá¹ƒ dassento samudayanirodhena dassetuá¹ƒ evamÄ• ha. sÄ tathÄ• gatÄ• . te dukkhaá¹ƒ nirodhentÄ• dukkhanirodhaÃ±ca dassentÄ• hetumhi paá¹-ipajj suvÄ• navuttino pana aÃ±Ã±atitthiyÄ• . te dukkhaá¹ƒ nirodhentÄ• dukkhanirodhaÃ±ca dass attakilamathÄ• nuyogena \Ee 113/ ceva tasseva ca desanÄ• ya phale paá¹-ipajjanti, na hetu

sÄ«hasamÄ• navuttitÄ• ya satthÄ• hetumhi paá¹-ipajjanto __yo tassÄ• yevÄ• _tiÄ• dimÄ• h tattha __tassÄ• yevÄ• _ti yÄ• sÄ• uppatti nivesavasena heá¹-á¹-hÄ• pakÄ• sitÄ• tassÄ• __asesavirÄ• ganirodho_tiÄ• dÄ«ni sabbÄ• ni nibbÄ• navevacanÄ• neva \Be 106/. nibbÄ• n virajjati nirujjhati. tasmÄ• taá¹ƒ ``tassÄ• yeva taá¹‡hÄ• ya asesavirÄ• ganirodhoâ€™â€™ ti Ä• gamma taá¹‡hÄ• cajiyati, paá¹-inissajjiyati, muccati, na alliyati. tasmÄ• nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ ``c mutti anÄ• layoâ€™â€™ ti vuccati. ekameva hi \Ne 106/ nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ. nÄ• mÄ• ni panassa nÄ• mapaá¹-ipakkhavasena anekÄ• ni nibbÄ• navevacanÄ• neva honti, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- as paá¹-inissaggo, mutti, anÄ• layo, rÄ• gakkhayo, dosakkhayo, mohakkhayo, taá¹‡hÄ• kkhayo animittaá¹ƒ, appaá¹‡ihitaá¹ƒ, anÄ• yÅ«hanaá¹ƒ, appaá¹-isandhi, anupapatti, agati, ajÄ• taá¹ abyÄ• dhi, amataá¹ƒ, asokaá¹ƒ, aparidevaá¹ƒ, anupÄ• yÄ• saá¹ƒ, asaá¹ƒkiliá¹-á¹-hantiÄ• dÄ idÄ• ni maggena chinnÄ• ya nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• gamma appavattipattÄ• yapi ca taá¹‡hÄ• ya dassitÄ• , tattheva abhÄ• vaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ __sÄ• kho panesÄ• _tiÄ• dimÄ• ha. tattha yath tittaalÄ• buvalliá¹ƒ disvÄ• aggato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya mÅ«laá¹ƒ pariyesitvÄ• chindeyya, sÄ• an appavattiá¹ƒ gaccheyya. tato tasmiá¹ƒ khette tittaalÄ• bu niruddhÄ• pahÄ«nÄ• ti vucceyya. tittaalÄ• bu viya cakkhÄ• dÄ«su taá¹‡hÄ• . sÄ• ariyamaggena mÅ«lacchinnÄ• nibbÄ• naá¹ gacchati. evaá¹ƒ gatÄ• pana tesu vatthÅ«su khette tittaalÄ• bu viya na paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati. yath Ä• netvÄ• nagarassa dakkhiá¹‡advÄ• re ghÄ• teyyuá¹ƒ, tato aá¹-aviyaá¹ƒ corÄ• matÄ• ti v vucceyyuá¹ƒ; evameva aá¹-aviyaá¹ƒ corÄ• viya yÄ• cakkhÄ• dÄ«su taá¹‡hÄ• , sÄ• dakkh nibbÄ• naá¹ƒ Ä• gamma niruddhattÄ• nibbÄ• ne niruddhÄ• . evaá¹ƒ niruddhÄ• pana tesu v 114/ corÄ• viya na paÃ±Ã±Ä• yati. tenassÄ• tattheva nirodhaá¹ƒ dassento ``cakkhuá¹ƒ lok sÄ• tarÅ«paá¹ƒ, etthesÄ• taá¹‡hÄ• pahÄ«yamÄ• nÄ• pahÄ«yati, ettha nirujjhamÄ• nÄ• n sesamettha uttÄ• natthamevÄ• ti.

nirodhasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

4. maggasaccaniddesavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<205> __maggasacca_niddese \Be 107/ __ayamevÄ• _ti aÃ±Ã±amaggapaá¹-ikkhepanatth taá¹ƒtaá¹ƒmaggavajjhehi kilesehi Ä• rakattÄ• ariyabhÄ• vakarattÄ• ariyaphalapaá¹-ilÄ• bha aá¹-á¹-haá¹…gÄ• ni assÄ• ti __aá¹-á¹-haá¹…giko_. svÄ• yaá¹ƒ caturaá¹…gikÄ• viya senÄ• tÅ«riyaá¹ƒ aá¹…gamattameva \Ne 107/ hoti, aá¹…gavinimutto natthi. nibbÄ• natthikehi mag maggati, kilese vÄ• mÄ• rento gacchatÄ«ti __maggo_. __seyyathida_nti so katamoti ceti at idÄ• ni aá¹…gamattameva maggo hoti, aá¹…gavinimmutto natthÄ«ti dassento __sammÄ• d sammÄ• samÄ• dhÄ«_ti Ä• ha. tattha sammÄ• dassanalakkhaá¹‡Ä• __sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi __sammÄ• saá¹…kappo_. sammÄ• pariggahalakkhaá¹‡Ä• __sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• _. sammÄ

__sammÄ• kammanto_. sammÄ• vodÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡o __sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo_. sammÄ• pa sammÄ• upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡Ä• __sammÄ• sati_. sammÄ• samÄ• dhÄ• nalakkhaá

tesu ca ekekassa tÄ«á¹‡i tÄ«á¹‡i kiccÄ• ni honti, seyyathidaá¹ƒ --- sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi tÄ• v paccanÄ«kakilesehi saddhiá¹ƒ micchÄ• diá¹-á¹-hiá¹ƒ pajahati, nirodhaá¹ƒ Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ
ca passati tappaá¹-icchÄ• dakamohavidhamanavasena asammohato. sammÄ• saá¹…kapp micchÄ• saá¹…kappÄ• dÄ«ni ca pajahanti, nirodhaÃ±ca Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ karonti. visesato sahajÄ• tadhamme \Ee 115/ abhiniropeti, sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• sammÄ• pariggaá¹‡hÄ• ti, sam samuá¹-á¹-hÄ• peti, sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo sammÄ• vodÄ• peti, sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo sammÄ• upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti, sammÄ• samÄ• dhi sammÄ• padahati.

apicesÄ• sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi nÄ• ma pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡Ä• nÄ• nÄ• rammaá ekÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• , kiccato pana dukkhe Ã±Ä• á¹‡antiÄ• dÄ«ni cattÄ• ri nÄ• mÄ• ni labhati pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡Ä• nÄ• nÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• honti, maggakÄ• le ekakkhaá¹‡Ä sammÄ• saá¹…kappo kiccato nekkhammasaá¹…kappotiÄ• dÄ«ni tÄ«á¹‡i \Be 108/ nÄ• mÄ• pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• kkhaá¹‡Ä• nÄ• nÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• viratiyopi honti cetanÄ• yopi, ma sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo sammÄ• satÄ«ti idampi dvayaá¹ƒ kiccato sammappadhÄ• nasatipaá¹-labhati. sammÄ• samÄ• dhi pana pubbabhÄ• gepi maggakkhaá¹‡epi sammÄ• samÄ• dhiye

iti imesu aá¹-á¹-hasu dhammesu bhagavatÄ• nibbÄ• nÄ• dhigamÄ• ya paá¹-ipannassa yog paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi desitÄ• . ayaÃ±hi ``paÃ±Ã±Ä• pajjoto paÃ±Ã±Ä• satthaâ€ ca \Ne 108/ vuttÄ• . tasmÄ• etÄ• ya pubbabhÄ• ge vipassanÄ• Ã±Ä• á¹‡asaá¹…khÄ• tÄ• y avijjandhakÄ• raá¹ƒ viddhaá¹ƒsetvÄ• kilesacore ghÄ• tento khemena yogÄ• vacaro nibbÄ• vuttaá¹ƒ ``nibbÄ• nÄ• dhigamÄ• ya paá¹-ipannassa yogino bahÅ«pakÄ• rattÄ• paá¹-hamaâ desitÄ• â€™â€™ ti.

sammÄ• saá¹…kappo pana tassÄ• bahÅ«pakÄ• ro, tasmÄ• tadanantaraá¹ƒ vutto. yathÄ• parivattetvÄ• parivattetvÄ• cakkhunÄ• kahÄ• paá¹‡aá¹ƒ olokento `ayaá¹ƒ kÅ«á¹-o, ayaá¹ƒ evaá¹ƒ yogÄ• vacaropi pubbabhÄ• ge vitakkena vitakketvÄ• vipassanÄ• paÃ±Ã±Ä• ya olok kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• , ime dhammÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• dayoâ€™ ti jÄ• nÄ• ti. yathÄ• vÄ• pana parivattetvÄ• parivattetvÄ• dinnaá¹ƒ mahÄ• rukkhaá¹ƒ tacchako vÄ• siyÄ• tacchetvÄ• ka vitakkena vitakketvÄ• vitakkatvÄ• dinnadhamme yogÄ• vacaro paÃ±Ã±Ä• ya `ime dhamm rÅ«pÄ• vacarÄ• â€™ tiÄ• dinÄ• nayena paricchinditvÄ• kamme upaneti. tena \Ee 116/ vut tassÄ• bahÅ«pakÄ• ro, tasmÄ• tadanantaraá¹ƒ vuttoâ€™â€™ ti.

svÄ• yaá¹ƒ yathÄ• sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hiyÄ• , evaá¹ƒ sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• yapi upakÄ• rako. yat vitakketvÄ• vicÄ• retvÄ• pacchÄ• vÄ• caá¹ƒ bhindatÄ«â€™â€™ ti (MN I 463). tasmÄ• ta vuttÄ• .

yasmÄ• pana `idaÃ±cidaÃ±ca karissÄ• mÄ• â€™ ti paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ vÄ• cÄ• ya saá¹ƒvidahi tasmÄ• vÄ• cÄ• kÄ• yakammassa upakÄ• rikÄ• ti sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• ya anantaraá¹ƒ samm catubbidhaá¹ƒ \Be 109/ pana vacÄ«duccaritaá¹ƒ, tividhaá¹ƒ kÄ• yaduccaritaá¹ƒ pahÄ• ya ub pÅ«rentasseva yasmÄ• Ä• jÄ«vaá¹-á¹-hamakasÄ«laá¹ƒ pÅ«rati, na itarassa, tasmÄ• tadub sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo vutto.

evaá¹ƒ suddhÄ• jÄ«vena `parisuddho me Ä• jÄ«voâ€™ ti ettÄ• vatÄ• paritosaá¹ƒ akatvÄ• na yuttaá¹ƒ, atha kho sabbairiyÄ• pathesu idaá¹ƒ vÄ«riyamÄ• rabhitabbanti dassetuá¹ƒ tada sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo vutto.

tato \Ne 109/ Ä• raddhavÄ«riyenÄ• pi kÄ• yÄ• dÄ«su catÅ«su vatthÅ«su sati suppatiá¹-á¹-h dassanatthaá¹ƒ tadanantaraá¹ƒ sammÄ• sati desitÄ• .

yasmÄ• pana evaá¹ƒ suppatiá¹-á¹-hitÄ• sati samÄ• dhissa upakÄ• rÄ• nupakÄ• rÄ• naá¹ƒ samanvesitvÄ• pahoti ekattÄ• rammaá¹‡e cittaá¹ƒ samÄ• dhÄ• tuá¹ƒ, tasmÄ• sammÄ• sa desitoti veditabbo.

__sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi_niddese ``dukkhe Ã±Ä• á¹‡aâ€™â€™ ntiÄ• dinÄ• catusaccakamma purimÄ• ni dve saccÄ• ni vaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ, pacchimÄ• ni vivaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ. tesu bhikkhuno vaá¹-á¹ kammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ• bhiniveso hoti, vivaá¹-á¹-e natthi abhiniveso. purimÄ• ni hi dve saccÄ• dukkhaá¹ƒ, taá¹‡hÄ• samudayoâ€™â€™ ti evaá¹ƒ saá¹…khepena ca ``katame paÃ±cakkh tiÄ• dinÄ• nayena vitthÄ• rena ca Ä• cariyassa santike uggaá¹‡hitvÄ• vÄ• cÄ• ya punappu yogÄ• vacaro kammaá¹ƒ karoti; itaresu pana dvÄ«su saccesu ``nirodhasaccaá¹ƒ iá¹-á¹-haá¹ maggasaccaá¹ƒ iá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kantaá¹ƒ manÄ• paâ€™â€™ nti evaá¹ƒ savaneneva kammaá¹ karonto cattÄ• ri saccÄ• ni ekena paá¹-ivedhena paá¹-ivijjhati, ekÄ• bhisamayena abhisame pariÃ±Ã±Ä• paá¹-ivedhena paá¹-ivijjhati, samudayaá¹ƒ pahÄ• napaá¹-ivedhena, nirodhaá¹ƒ sacchikiriyapaá¹-ivedhena, maggaá¹ƒ bhÄ• vanÄ• paá¹-ivedhena paá¹-ivijjhati; dukkhaá¹ƒ p pe ... maggaá¹ƒ bhÄ• vanÄ• bhisamayena abhisameti.

evamassa pubbabhÄ• ge dvÄ«su saccesu uggahaparipucchÄ• savanadhÄ• raá¹‡asamma savanapaá¹-ivedhoyeva; aparabhÄ• ge tÄ«su kiccato paá¹-ivedho hoti, nirodhe Ä• rammaá¹ sabbampi paá¹-ivedhaÃ±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ lokuttaraá¹ƒ, savanadhÄ• raá¹‡asammasanaÃ±Ä• á¹‡a paccavekkhaá¹‡Ä• pana pattasaccassa hoti. ayaÃ±ca Ä• dikammiko. tasmÄ• sÄ• idha na pubbe pariggahato `dukkhaá¹ƒ parijÄ• nÄ• mi \Be 110/, samudayaá¹ƒ pajahÄ• mi, nirodhaá bhÄ• vemÄ«â€™ ti Ä• bhogasamannÄ• hÄ• ramanasikÄ• rapaccavekkhaá¹‡Ä• natthi, pari aparabhÄ• ge pana dukkhaá¹ƒ pariÃ±Ã±Ä• tameva hoti ... pe ... maggo bhÄ• vitova hoti.

tattha dve saccÄ• ni duddasattÄ• gambhÄ«rÄ• ni, dve gambhÄ«rattÄ• duddasÄ• ni. dukk pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ; khÄ• á¹‡ukaá¹‡á¹-akappahÄ• rÄ• dÄ«su `aho dukkhaâ€™ nti vattabbatamp 110/ khÄ• ditukÄ• matÄ• bhuÃ±jitukÄ• matÄ• divasena uppattito pÄ• kaá¹-aá¹ƒ. lakkhaá¹‡a gambhÄ«raá¹ƒ. iti tÄ• ni duddasattÄ• gambhÄ«rÄ• ni. itaresaá¹ƒ pana dvinnaá¹ƒ dassanatt bhavaggagahaá¹‡atthaá¹ƒ hatthappasÄ• raá¹‡aá¹ƒ viya, avÄ«ciphusanatthaá¹ƒ pÄ• dappas bhinnavÄ• lassa koá¹-iyÄ• koá¹-iá¹ƒ paá¹-ipÄ• danaá¹ƒ viya ca hoti. iti tÄ• ni gambhÄ«rattÄ duddasattÄ• gambhÄ«resu gambhÄ«rattÄ• ca duddasesu catÅ«su saccesu uggahÄ• divas pubbabhÄ• gaÃ±Ä• á¹‡uppattiá¹ƒ sandhÄ• ya idaá¹ƒ ``dukkhe Ã±Ä• á¹‡aâ€™â€™ ntiÄ• di pana ekameva Ã±Ä• á¹‡aá¹ƒ hoti.

__sammÄ• saá¹…kappa_niddese kÄ• mato nissaá¹-oti __nekkhammasaá¹…kappo_. byÄ• p __abyÄ• pÄ• dasaá¹…kappo_. vihiá¹ƒsÄ• ya nissaá¹-oti __avihiá¹ƒsÄ• saá¹…kappo_. tattha kÄ• mavitakkassa padaghÄ• taá¹ƒ padacchedaá¹ƒ karonto \Ee 118/ uppajjati, abyÄ• pÄ• da avihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakko vihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakkassa. nekkhammavitakko ca kÄ• mavitakkassa paccan abyÄ• pÄ• daavihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakkÄ• byÄ• pÄ• davihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakkÄ• naá¹ƒ.

tattha yogÄ• vacaro kÄ• mavitakkassa padaghÄ• tanatthaá¹ƒ kÄ• mavitakkaá¹ƒ vÄ• samm kiÃ±ci saá¹…khÄ• raá¹ƒ. athassa vipassanÄ• kkhaá¹‡e vipassanÄ• sampayutto saá¹…kapp kÄ• mavitakkassa padaghÄ• taá¹ƒ padacchedaá¹ƒ karonto uppajjati, vipassanaá¹ƒ ussukkÄ athassa maggakkhaá¹‡e maggasampayutto saá¹…kappo samucchedavasena kÄ• mavitakk karonto uppajjati; byÄ• pÄ• davitakkassÄ• pi padaghÄ• tanatthaá¹ƒ byÄ• pÄ• davitakkaá¹ƒ saá¹…khÄ• raá¹ƒ sammasati; vihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakkassa padaghÄ• tanatthaá¹ƒ vihiá¹ƒsÄ• vitakk saá¹…khÄ• raá¹ƒ sammasati. athassa vipassanÄ• kkhaá¹‡eti sabbaá¹ƒ purimanayeneva yo kÄ• mavitakkÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ \Be 111/ pana tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ pÄ• á¸·iyaá¹ƒ vibhattesu aá¹-á¹-hatiá ekakammaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nampi apaccanÄ«kaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma natthi. ekantato pana kÄ• mavitakkass paá¹-hamajjhÄ• nameva paccanÄ«kaá¹ƒ, byÄ• pÄ• davitakkassa mettÄ• ya tikacatukkajjhÄ karuá¹‡Ä• ya tikacatukkajjhÄ• nÄ• ni. tasmÄ• asubhe parikammaá¹ƒ katvÄ• jhÄ• naá¹ƒ sa samÄ• pattikkhaá¹‡e jhÄ• nasampayutto saá¹…kappo vikkhambhanavasena kÄ• mavitakka jhÄ• naá¹ƒ pÄ• dakaá¹ƒ katvÄ• vipassanaá¹ƒ paá¹-á¹-hapentassa vipassanÄ• kkhaá¹‡e vip tadaá¹…gavasena kÄ• mavitakkassa paccanÄ«ko hutvÄ• uppajjati. vipassanaá¹ƒ ussukkÄ maggakkhaá¹‡e \Ne 111/ maggasampayutto saá¹…kappo samucchedavasena kÄ• mavitak uppajjati. evaá¹ƒ uppanno nekkhammasaá¹…kappoti vuccatÄ«ti veditabbo.

mettÄ• ya pana parikammaá¹ƒ katvÄ• , karuá¹‡Ä• ya parikammaá¹ƒ katvÄ• jhÄ• naá¹ƒ sa purimanayeneva yojetabbaá¹ƒ. evaá¹ƒ uppanno abyÄ• pÄ• dasaá¹…kappoti vuccati, avihiá vuccatÄ«ti \Ee 119/ veditabbo. evamete nekkhammasaá¹…kappÄ• dayo vipassanÄ• jhÄ• n pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• ; maggakkhaá¹‡e pana imesu tÄ«su á¹-hÄ• nesu uppannassa akusa anuppattisÄ• dhanavasena maggaá¹…gaá¹ƒ pÅ«rayamÄ• no ekova kusalasaá¹…kappo upp nÄ• ma.

__sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• _niddesepi yasmÄ• aÃ±Ã±eneva cittena musÄ• vÄ• dÄ• viramati, aÃ± tasmÄ• catassopetÄ• veramaá¹‡iyo pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• ; maggakkhaá¹‡e pana micch catubbidhÄ• ya akusaladussÄ«lyacetanÄ• ya padacchedato anuppattisÄ• dhanavasena ma ekÄ• va sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• saá¹…khÄ• tÄ• kusalaveramaá¹‡Ä« uppajjati. ayaá¹ƒ sammÄ• v

__sammÄ• kammanta_niddesepi yasmÄ• aÃ±Ã±eneva cittena pÄ• á¹‡Ä• tipÄ• tÄ• virama aÃ±Ã±ena kÄ• mesumicchÄ• cÄ• rÄ• , tasmÄ• tissopetÄ• veramaá¹‡iyo pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ micchÄ• kammantasaá¹…khÄ• tÄ• ya tividhÄ• ya akusaladussÄ«lyacetanÄ• ya padacched maggaá¹…gaá¹ƒ pÅ«rayamÄ• nÄ• ekÄ• va sammÄ• kammantasaá¹…khÄ• tÄ• akusalave sammÄ• kammanto nÄ• ma.

__sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«va_niddese \Be 112/ __idhÄ• _ti imasmiá¹ƒ sÄ• sane. __ariyasÄ• vako_t __micchÄ• Ä• jÄ«vaá¹ƒ pahÄ• yÄ• _ti pÄ• pakaá¹ƒ Ä• jÄ«vaá¹ƒ pajahitvÄ• . __sammÄ• Ä• kusalaÄ• jÄ«vena. __jÄ«vikaá¹ƒ kappetÄ«_ti jÄ«vitappavattiá¹ƒ pavatteti. idhÄ• pi yasmÄ• kÄ• yadvÄ• ravÄ«tikkamÄ• viramati; aÃ±Ã±ena vacÄ«dvÄ• ravÄ«tikkamÄ• , tasmÄ• pubb uppajjati; maggakkhaá¹‡e pana dvÄ«su dvÄ• resu sattannaá¹ƒ kammapathÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena micchÄ• Ä• jÄ«vadussÄ«lyacetanÄ• ya padacchedato anuppattisÄ• dhanavasena maggaá¹ sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vasaá¹…khÄ• tÄ• kusalaveramaá¹‡Ä« uppajjati. ayaá¹ƒ sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo

__sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• ma_niddeso \Ne 112/ sammappadhÄ• navibhaá¹…ge anupadavaá¹‡á¹ pana pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• cittesu labhati. aÃ±Ã±eneva hi cittena anuppannÄ• naá¹ƒ pÄ• akusalÄ• naá¹ƒ dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ anuppÄ• dÄ• ya vÄ• yÄ• maá¹ƒ karoti, aÃ±Ã±ena uppann anuppannÄ• naá¹ƒ kusalÄ• naá¹ƒ dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ uppÄ• dÄ• ya, aÃ±Ã±ena uppannÄ• naá ekacitteyeva labbhati. ekameva hi maggasampayuttaá¹ƒ vÄ«riyaá¹ƒ catukiccasÄ• dhanaá¹-á labbhati.

__sammÄ• sati_niddesopi satipaá¹-á¹-hÄ• navibhaá¹…ge anupadavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• vasena Ä pubbabhÄ• ge nÄ• nÄ• cittesu labbhati. aÃ±Ã±eneva hi cittena kÄ• yaá¹ƒ pariggaá¹‡hÄ• ti, vedanÄ• dÄ«ni; maggakkhaá¹‡e pana ekacitteyeva labbhati. ekÄ• yeva hi maggasampayut catukiccasÄ• dhanaá¹-á¹-hena cattÄ• ri nÄ• mÄ• ni labbhati.

__sammÄ• samÄ• dhi_niddese cattÄ• ri jhÄ• nÄ• ni pubbabhÄ• gepi nÄ• nÄ• , maggakkha samÄ• pattivasena nÄ• nÄ• , maggakkhaá¹‡e nÄ• nÄ• maggavasena. ekassa hi paá¹-hama dutiyamaggÄ• dayopi paá¹-hamajjhÄ• nikÄ• , dutiyÄ• dÄ«su aÃ±Ã±atarajjhÄ• nikÄ• vÄ• . e dutiyÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±atarajjhÄ• niko hoti, dutiyÄ• dayopi dutiyÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±ataraj paá¹-hamajjhÄ• nikÄ• vÄ• . evaá¹ƒ cattÄ• ropi maggÄ• jhÄ• navasena sadisÄ• vÄ• asadi honti.

ayaá¹ƒ panassa viseso pÄ• dakajjhÄ• naniyÄ• mena hoti. pÄ• dakajjhÄ• naniyÄ• mena tÄ• paá¹-hamajjhÄ• nÄ• vuá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya vipassantassa uppannamaggo \Be 113/ paá¹-hamajjhÄ maggaá¹…gabojjhaá¹…gÄ• ni panettha paripuá¹‡á¹‡Ä• neva honti. dutiyajjhÄ• nato uá¹-á¹-h maggo dutiyajjhÄ• niko hoti; maggaá¹…gÄ• ni panettha satta honti. tatiyajjhÄ• nato uá¹-á¹-h uppanno maggo tatiyajjhÄ• niko hoti; maggaá¹…gÄ• ni panettha satta, bojjhaá¹…gÄ• ni cha catutthajjhÄ• nato paá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya yÄ• va nevasaÃ±Ã±Ä• nÄ• saÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanÄ• .

Ä• ruppe catukkapaÃ±cakajjhÄ• naá¹ƒ uppajjati. taÃ±ca kho lokuttaraá¹ƒ no lokiyanti vuttaá etthÄ• pi paá¹-hamajjhÄ• nÄ• dÄ«su yato uá¹-á¹-hÄ• ya sotÄ• pattimaggaá¹ƒ paá¹-ilabhitvÄ bhÄ• vetvÄ• yo Ä• ruppe uppanno, taá¹ƒjhÄ• nikÄ• va tassa tattha tayo maggÄ• uppajjant pÄ• dakajjhÄ• nameva niyÄ• meti. keci pana therÄ• ``vipassanÄ• ya Ä• rammaá¹‡abhÅ«tÄ vadanti. keci ``puggalajjhÄ• sayo niyÄ• metÄ«â€™â€™ ti vadanti. keci ``vuá¹-á¹-hÄ• nagÄ• niyÄ• metÄ«â€™â€™ ti vadanti. tesaá¹ƒ vÄ• davinicchayo heá¹-á¹-hÄ• cittuppÄ• dakaá¹‡á lokuttarapadabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• yaá¹ƒ (Dhs-a 350) vuttanayeneva veditabbo. __ay sammÄ• samÄ• dhÄ«_ti yÄ• imesu catÅ«su jhÄ• nesu ekaggatÄ• , ayaá¹ƒ pubbabhÄ• ge sammÄ• samÄ• dhi nÄ• ma vuccatÄ«ti. evaá¹ƒ lokiyalokuttaravasena bhagavÄ• maggasac tattha lokiyamagge sabbÄ• neva maggaá¹…gÄ• ni yathÄ• nurÅ«paá¹ƒ chasu Ä• rammaá¹‡ honti. lokuttaramagge pana catusaccapaá¹-ivedhÄ• ya pavattassa ariyassa nibbÄ• nÄ• ram avijjÄ• nusayasamugghÄ• takaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• cakkhu sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hi. tathÄ• sampanna tividhamicchÄ• saá¹…kappasamugghÄ• takaá¹ƒ cetaso nibbÄ• napadÄ• bhiniropanaá¹ƒ sa passantassa vitakkentassa ca taá¹ƒsampayuttÄ• va catubbidhavacÄ«duccaritasamugghÄ• virati sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• . tathÄ• viramantassa taá¹ƒsampayuttÄ• va micchÄ• kammantasam tividhakÄ• yaduccaritavirati sammÄ• kammanto. tesaá¹ƒyeva sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• kammantÄ• taá¹ƒsampayuttÄ• va kuhanÄ• disamucchedikÄ• micchÄ• Ä• jÄ«vavirati sammÄ• Ä• jÄ«vo sammÄ• vÄ• cÄ• kammantÄ• jÄ«vasaá¹ƒkhÄ• tÄ• ya sÄ«labhÅ«miyaá¹ƒ patiá¹-á¹-hamÄ• n kosajjasamucchedako \Be 114/ anuppannuppannÄ• naá¹ƒ akusalakusalÄ• naá¹ƒ anuppÄ• dapahÄ• nuppÄ• daá¹-á¹-hitisÄ• dhako ca vÄ«riyÄ• rambho sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo.

taá¹ƒsampayuttova micchÄ• sativiniddhunanako kÄ• yÄ• dÄ«su kÄ• yÄ• nupassanÄ• disÄ• sammÄ• sati. iti anuttarÄ• ya satiyÄ• suvihitacittÄ• rakkhassa taá¹ƒsampayuttÄ• va micchÄ cittekaggatÄ• sammÄ• samÄ• dhÄ«ti. esa \Ee 122/ lokuttaro ariyo aá¹-á¹-haá¹…giko magg dukkhanirodhagÄ• minÄ« paá¹-ipadÄ• ti saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gato.

so kho panesa maggo sammÄ• diá¹-á¹-hisaá¹…kappÄ• naá¹ƒ vijjÄ• ya, sesadhammÄ• naá __vijjÄ• ceva caraá¹‡aÃ±ca_. tathÄ• tesaá¹ƒ dvinnaá¹ƒ vipassanÄ• yÄ• nena, itaresaá¹ƒ s saá¹…gahitattÄ• __samatho ceva vipassanÄ• ca_. tesaá¹ƒ vÄ• dvinnaá¹ƒ paÃ±Ã±Ä• kkha tiá¹‡á¹‡aá¹ƒ sÄ«lakkhandhena, avasesÄ• naá¹ƒ samÄ• dhikkhandhena adhipaÃ±Ã±Ä• adh saá¹…gahitattÄ• __khandhattayaÃ±ceva sikkhÄ• ttayaÃ±ca_ hoti; yena samannÄ• gato ari cakkhÅ«hi gamanasamatthehi ca \Ne 114/ pÄ• dehi samannÄ• gato addhiko viya vijjÄ• cara vipassanÄ• yÄ• nena kÄ• masukhallikÄ• nuyogaá¹ƒ, samathayÄ• nena attakilamathÄ• nuyo majjhimapaá¹-ipadaá¹ƒ paá¹-ipanno paÃ±Ã±Ä• kkhandhena mohakkhandhaá¹ƒ, sÄ«lakkhan samÄ• dhikkhandhena ca lobhakkhandhaá¹ƒ padÄ• lento adhipaÃ±Ã±Ä• sikkhÄ• ya paÃ±Ã sÄ«lasampadaá¹ƒ, adhicittasikkhÄ• ya samÄ• dhisampadanti tisso sampattiyo patvÄ• ama sacchikaroti, Ä• dimajjhapariyosÄ• nakalyÄ• á¹‡aá¹ƒ sattatiá¹ƒsabodhipakkhiyadhammarata sammattaniyÄ• masaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ ariyabhÅ«miÃ±ca okkanto hotÄ«ti.

suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

2. abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

206-214__._ idÄ• ni abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ hoti. tattha ``ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«â€™â€™ t paccayasaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ samudayaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ ``cattÄ• ri saccÄ• nÄ«â€™â€™ ti vutta hi vutte avasesÄ• ca kilesÄ• , avasesÄ• ca akusalÄ• dhammÄ• , tÄ«á¹‡i ca kusalamÅ«lÄ sÄ• savÄ• kusalÄ• dhammÄ• na saá¹…gayhanti. na ca kevalaá¹ƒ taá¹‡hÄ• va dukkhaá¹ƒ kilesÄ• dayo paccayÄ• samudÄ• nentiyeva. iti imepi paccayÄ• dukkhaá¹ƒ samudÄ• nentiy paccayasaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ samudayaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ ``ariyasaccÄ• nÄ«â€™â€™ ti avatvÄ• vuttaá¹ƒ.

niddesavÄ• re \Ee 123/ ca nesaá¹ƒ paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ dukkhaá¹ƒ aniddisitvÄ• tasseva dukkhas dukkhasamudayo niddiá¹-á¹-ho. tasmiÃ±hi niddiá¹-á¹-he ``avasesÄ• ca kilesÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ sukhaniddesaá¹ƒ hoti. nirodhasaccampettha taá¹‡hÄ• ya pahÄ• naá¹ƒ ``ta kilesÄ• naá¹ƒ pahÄ• naâ€™â€™ nti evaá¹ƒ yathÄ• vuttassa samudayassa pahÄ• navasena niddiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ. maggasaccaá¹ƒ panettha paá¹-hamajjhÄ• nikasotÄ• pattimaggavasena dh vibhattassa desanÄ• nayassa mukhamattameva dassentena niddiá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ. tattha nayabh pakÄ• sayissÄ• ma.

yasmÄ• \Ne 115/ pana na kevalaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-haá¹…giko maggova paá¹-ipadÄ• ``pubbeva k vacÄ«kammaá¹ƒ Ä• jÄ«vo suparisuddho hotÄ«â€™â€™ ti (MN III 433) vacanato pana pugg paÃ±caá¹…gikopi maggo paá¹-ipadÄ• evÄ• ti desito, tasmÄ• taá¹ƒ nayaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ pa niddiá¹-á¹-ho. yasmÄ• ca na kevalaá¹ƒ aá¹-á¹-haá¹…gikapaÃ±caá¹…gikamaggÄ• va paá¹-i atirekapaÃ±Ã±Ä• sadhammÄ• pi paá¹-ipadÄ• eva, tasmÄ• taá¹ƒ nayaá¹ƒ dassetuá¹ƒ tatiyo niddiá¹-á¹-ho. tattha ``avasesÄ• dhammÄ• dukkhanirodhagÄ• miniyÄ• paá¹-ipadÄ• ya sam parihÄ• yati. sesaá¹ƒ sabbattha sadisameva.

tattha aá¹-á¹-haá¹…gikavÄ• rassa ``taá¹‡hÄ• ya avasesÄ• naÃ±ca kilesÄ• naá¹ƒ pahÄ• naá koá¹-á¹-hÄ• sesu paá¹-hamakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• se tÄ• va sotÄ• pattimagge jhÄ• nÄ• bhinivese suc suddhikasuÃ±Ã±atÄ• , suÃ±Ã±atapaá¹-ipadÄ• , suddhikaappaá¹‡ihitaá¹ƒ, appaá¹‡ihitapaá¹-vÄ• resu dvinnaá¹ƒ dvinnaá¹ƒ catukkapaÃ±cakanayÄ• naá¹ƒ vasena __dasa nayÄ• _ honti.
vÄ«satiyÄ• abhinivesesu __dve nayasatÄ• ni_. tÄ• ni catÅ«hi adhipatÄ«hi catugguá¹‡itÄ• n suddhikÄ• ni dve sÄ• dhipatÄ« aá¹-á¹-hÄ• ti sabbampi __nayasahassaá¹ƒ_ hoti. yathÄ• ca sesamaggesupÄ«ti __cattÄ• ri nayasahassÄ• ni_ honti. yathÄ• ca paá¹-hamakoá¹-á¹-hÄ• s sesesupÄ«ti aá¹-á¹-haá¹…gikavÄ• re paÃ±casu koá¹-á¹-hÄ• sesu __vÄ«sati nayasahassÄ• paÃ±caá¹…gikavÄ• re sabbasaá¹…gÄ• hikavÄ• re cÄ• ti sabbÄ• nipi __saá¹-á¹-hi_ \Ee 124 vibhattÄ• ni. pÄ• á¸·i pana saá¹…khepena Ä• gatÄ• . evamidaá¹ƒ tividhamahÄ• vÄ• raá¹ƒ p saá¹-á¹-hinayasahassapaá¹-imaá¹‡á¸• itaá¹ƒ abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma niddiá¹-

abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

3. paÃ±hÄ• pucchakavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<215> paÃ±hÄ• pucchake catunnampi saccÄ• naá¹ƒ khandhavibhaá¹…ge vuttanayÄ• nusA veditabbo. Ä• rammaá¹‡attikesu pana samudayasaccaá¹ƒ kÄ• mÄ• vacaradhamme assÄ• d hoti, mahaggatadhamme assÄ• dentassa mahaggatÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, paÃ±Ã±attiá¹ƒ assÄ navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ. dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ \Ne 116/ kÄ• mÄ• vacaradhamme Ä• rabbha rÅ«pÄ• rÅ«pÄ• vacaradhamme Ä• rabbha uppattikÄ• le mahaggatÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, nava paccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le appamÄ• á¹‡Ä• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, paá¹‡á¹‡attiá¹ƒ paccavekkhaá¹‡ak maggasaccaá¹ƒ sahajÄ• tahetuvasena sabbadÄ• pi maggahetukaá¹ƒ vÄ«riyaá¹ƒ vÄ• vÄ«m katvÄ• maggabhÄ• vanÄ• kÄ• le maggÄ• dhipati, chandacittesu aÃ±Ã±atarÄ• dhipatikÄ• le dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ ariyÄ• naá¹ƒ maggapaccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le maggÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, tesaá paccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le maggÄ• dhipati, sesadhammapaccavekkhaá¹‡akÄ• le navattabbaá __dve saccÄ• nÄ«_ti dukkhasamudayasaccÄ• ni. etÄ• ni hi atÄ«tÄ• dibhede dhamme Ä• ra atÄ«tÄ• diÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• ni honti. samudayasaccaá¹ƒ ajjhattÄ• dibhede dhamme assÄ• de ajjhattÄ• diÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ hoti, dukkhasaccaá¹ƒ Ä• kiÃ±caÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanakÄ• le navattab veditabbaá¹ƒ. iti imasmiá¹ƒ paÃ±hÄ• pucchake dve saccÄ• ni lokiyÄ• ni honti, dve lokuttarÄ imasmiá¹ƒ, evaá¹ƒ purimesupi dvÄ«su. sammÄ• sambuddhena hi tÄ«supi suttantabhÄ• janÄ lokiyalokuttarÄ• neva saccÄ• ni kathitÄ• ni. evamayaá¹ƒ saccavibhaá¹…gopi teparivaá¹-á¹-a bhÄ• jetvÄ• dassitoti.

sammohavinodanÄ«yÄ• vibhaá¹…gaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya saccavibhaá¹…gavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

5. indriyavibhaá¹…go

1. abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<219> idÄ• ni \Ee 125/ \Be 118/ \Ne 117/ tadanantare indriyavibhaá¹…ge __bÄ• vÄ«satÄ«_ __indriyÄ• nÄ«_ti paricchinnadhammanidassanaá¹ƒ. idÄ• ni tÄ• ni sarÅ«pato dassento __ca tattha cakkhudvÄ• re indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __cakkhundriyaá¹ƒ_. sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kA kÄ• retÄ«ti __kÄ• yindriyaá¹ƒ_. vijÄ• nanalakkhaá¹‡e indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __manind indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __itthindriyaá¹ƒ_. purisabhÄ• ve indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __p anupÄ• lanalakkhaá¹‡e indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __jÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ_. sukhalakkhaá¹‡e in kÄ• retÄ«ti __sukhindriyaá¹ƒ_. dukkhasomanassa domanassa upekkhÄ• lakkhaá¹‡e indaá¹ __upekkhindriyaá¹ƒ_. adhimokkhalakkhaá¹‡e indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __saddhindriyaá¹ indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __vÄ«riyindriyaá¹ƒ_. upaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nalakkhaá¹‡e indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ __satindriyaá¹ƒ_. avikkhepalakkhaá¹‡e indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __samÄ• dhindriyaá¹ƒ_.
indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __paÃ±Ã±indriyaá¹ƒ_. anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taÃ±Ã±assÄ• mÄ«ti pavatte indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taÃ±Ã±assÄ• mÄ«tindriyaá¹ƒ_. Ã±Ä• tÄ• naá¹ƒye indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ kÄ• retÄ«ti __aÃ±Ã±indriyaá¹ƒ_. aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vÄ«bhÄ• ve indaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ __aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vindriyaá¹ƒ_.

idha suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ nÄ• ma na gahitaá¹ƒ. kasmÄ• ? suttante imÄ• ya paá¹-ipÄ• a indriyÄ• naá¹ƒ anÄ• gatattÄ• . suttantasmiÃ±hi katthaci dve indriyÄ• ni kathitÄ• ni, katthaci t paÃ±ca. evaá¹ƒ pana nirantaraá¹ƒ dvÄ• vÄ«sati Ä• gatÄ• ni nÄ• ma natthi. ayaá¹ƒ tÄ• vetth ayaá¹ƒ pana aparo nayo --- etesu hi atthato \Ne 118/ lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«hi, kamato ca vijÄ• niyÄ• .

bhedÄ• bhedÄ• tathÄ• kiccÄ• , bhÅ«mito ca vinicchayaá¹ƒ ||

tattha \Ee 126/ cakkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ tÄ• va ``cakkhatÄ«ti cakkhÅ«â€™â€™ tiÄ• dinÄ• nayen pacchimesu pana tÄ«su paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ `pubbabhÄ• ge anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taá¹ƒ amataá¹ƒ padaá¹ƒ jÄ• nissÄ• mÄ«â€™ ti evaá¹ƒ paá¹-ipannassa uppajjanato indriyaá¹-á¹-hasambhavato ca anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taÃ±Ã±assÄ• mÄ«tindriyanti vuttaá¹ƒ. dutiyaá¹ƒ Ä• jÄ• nanato ca indriyaá¹-á¹-h aÃ±Ã±indriyaá¹ƒ. tatiyaá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vino catÅ«su saccesu niá¹-á¹-hitaÃ±Ä• á¹‡akiccass khÄ«á¹‡Ä• savasseva uppajjanato indriyaá¹-á¹-hasambhavato ca aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vindriyaá¹ƒ.

ko panesa indriyaá¹-á¹-ho nÄ• mÄ• ti? indaliá¹…gaá¹-á¹-ho indriyaá¹-á¹-ho, indadesitaá¹-á¹-indadiá¹-á¹-haá¹-á¹-ho indriyaá¹-á¹-ho, indasiá¹-á¹-haá¹-á¹-ho indriyaá¹-á¹-ho, indajuá¹-á¹-haá indriyaá¹-á¹-ho. so sabbopi idha yathÄ• yogaá¹ƒ yujjati. bhagavÄ• hi sammÄ• sambuddho p indo. kusalÄ• kusalaÃ±ca kammaá¹ƒ kammesu kassaci issariyÄ• bhÄ• vato. tenevettha kam kusalÄ• kusalakammaá¹ƒ ulliá¹…genti. tena ca siá¹-á¹-hÄ• nÄ«ti indaliá¹…gaá¹-á¹-hena inda indriyÄ• ni. sabbÄ• neva panetÄ• ni bhagavatÄ• yathÄ• bhÅ«tato pakÄ• sitÄ• ni ca abhisam indadesitaá¹-á¹-hena indadiá¹-á¹-haá¹-á¹-hena ca indriyÄ• ni. teneva bhagavatÄ• muninden gocarÄ• sevanÄ• ya, kÄ• nici bhÄ• vanÄ• sevanÄ• ya sevitÄ• nÄ«ti indajuá¹-á¹-haá¹-á¹-hen Ä• dhipaccasaá¹…khÄ• tena issariyaá¹-á¹-henÄ• pi etÄ• ni indriyÄ• ni. cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡ cakkhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ siddhamÄ• dhipaccaá¹ƒ; tasmiá¹ƒ tikkhe tikkhattÄ• mande ca mandattÄ `atthatoâ€™ _ vinicchayo.

__ `lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«hÄ«â€™ _ti lakkhaá¹‡arasapaccupaá¹-á¹-hÄ• napadaá¹-á¹-hÄ• nehipi vinicchayaá¹ƒ vijÄ• niyÄ• ti attho. tÄ• ni nesaá¹ƒ lakkhaá¹‡Ä• dÄ«ni heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttanayÄ paÃ±Ã±indriyÄ• dÄ«ni hi cattÄ• ri atthato amohoyeva. sesÄ• ni tattha sarÅ«penevÄ• gatÄ•

__ `kamatoâ€™ _ti ayampi desanÄ• kkamova. tattha ajjhattadhammaá¹ƒ pariÃ±Ã±Ä• ya an hotÄ«ti attabhÄ• vapariyÄ• pannÄ• ni cakkhundriyÄ• dÄ«ni paá¹-hamaá¹ƒ desitÄ• ni. so pan upÄ• dÄ• ya itthÄ«ti vÄ• purisoti \Ee 127/ vÄ• saá¹…khaá¹ƒ gacchati, ayaá¹ƒ soti nidassan itthindriyaá¹ƒ purisindriyaÃ±ca \Ne 119/. so duvidhopi jÄ«vitindriyapaá¹-ibaddhavuttÄ«ti Ã±Ä jÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ. yÄ• va tassa pavatti tÄ• va etesaá¹ƒ vedayitÄ• naá¹ƒ anivatti. yaá¹ƒ kiÃ±ci sabbaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ sukhadukkhanti Ã±Ä• panatthaá¹ƒ tato sukhindriyÄ• dÄ«ni. taá¹ƒnirodhattha bhÄ• vetabbÄ• ti paá¹-ipattidassanatthaá¹ƒ tato saddhÄ• dÄ«ni. imÄ• ya paá¹-ipattiyÄ• esa attani pÄ• tubhavatÄ«ti paá¹-ipattiyÄ• amoghabhÄ• vadassanatthaá¹ƒ tato anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taÃ tasseva phalattÄ• tato anantaraá¹ƒ bhÄ• vetabbattÄ• ca tato aÃ±Ã±indriyaá¹ƒ. ito paraá¹ƒ adhigamo, adhigate ca panimasmiá¹ƒ natthi kiÃ±ci uttari \Be 120/ karaá¹‡Ä«yanti Ã±Ä• pana paramassÄ• sabhÅ«taá¹ƒ aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vindriyaá¹ƒ desitanti ayamettha kamo.

__ `bhedÄ• bhedÄ• â€™ _ti jÄ«vitindriyasseva cettha bhedo. taÃ±hi rÅ«pajÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ duvidhaá¹ƒ hoti. sesÄ• naá¹ƒ abhedoti evamettha bhedÄ• bhedato vinicchayaá¹ƒ vijÄ• niyÄ

__ `kiccÄ• â€™ _ti kiá¹ƒ indriyÄ• naá¹ƒ kiccanti ce? cakkhundriyassa tÄ• va ``cakkhÄ• yata cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡adhÄ• tuyÄ• taá¹ƒsampayuttakÄ• naÃ±ca dhammÄ• naá¹ƒ indriyapac yaá¹ƒ taá¹ƒ indriyapaccayabhÄ• vena sÄ• dhetabbaá¹ƒ attano tikkhamandÄ• dibhÄ• vena cakkhuviÃ±Ã±Ä• á¹‡Ä• didhammÄ• naá¹ƒ tikkhamandÄ• disaá¹…khÄ• taá¹ƒ attÄ• kÄ• rÄ• evaá¹ƒ sotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yÄ• naá¹ƒ. manindriyassa pana sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• naá¹ƒ a jÄ«vitindriyassa sahajÄ• tadhammÄ• nupÄ• lanaá¹ƒ, itthindriyapurisindriyÄ• naá¹ƒ itthipurisanimittakuttÄ• kappÄ• kÄ• rÄ• nuvidhÄ• naá¹ƒ, sukhadukkhasomanassadomanass abhibhavitvÄ• yathÄ• sakaá¹ƒ oá¸·Ä• rikÄ• kÄ• rÄ• nupÄ• panaá¹ƒ, upekkhindriyassa santapaá¹‡Ä«tamajjhattÄ• kÄ• rÄ• nupÄ• panaá¹ƒ, saddhÄ• dÄ«naá¹ƒ paá¹-ipakkhÄ• bhibh pasannÄ• kÄ• rÄ• dibhÄ• vasampÄ• panaá¹ƒ, anaÃ±Ã±Ä• taÃ±Ã±assÄ• mÄ«tindriyassa sa sampayuttakÄ• naÃ±ca \Ee 128/ tappahÄ• nÄ• bhimukhabhÄ• vakaraá¹‡aá¹ƒ, aÃ±Ã±indriy kÄ• marÄ• gabyÄ• pÄ• dÄ• ditanukaraá¹‡apahÄ• naÃ±ceva sahajÄ• tÄ• naÃ±ca attano vas aÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vindriyassa sabbakiccesu ussukkappahÄ• naÃ±ceva amatÄ• bhimukhabhÄ• v evamettha kiccato vinicchayaá¹ƒ vijÄ• niyÄ• .

__ `bhÅ«mitoâ€™ _ti cakkhusotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yaitthipurisasukhadukkhadomanassind kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• neva \Ne 120/. manindriyajÄ«vitindriyaupekkhindriyÄ• ni, saddhÄ• vÄ«riyasatisamÄ• dhipaÃ±Ã±indriyÄ• ni ca catubhÅ«mipariyÄ• pannÄ• ni. somana kÄ• mÄ• vacara-rÅ«pÄ• vacara-lokuttaravasena bhÅ«mittayapariyÄ• pannaá¹ƒ. avasÄ• ne evaá¹ƒ bhÅ«mito vinicchayaá¹ƒ vijÄ• niyÄ• . evaÃ±hi vijÄ• nanto --- saá¹ƒvegabahulo bhikkhu, á¹-hito indriyasaá¹ƒvare.

indriyÄ• ni pariÃ±Ã±Ä• ya, dukkhassantaá¹ƒ nigacchatÄ«ti ||

<220> niddesavÄ• re \Be 121/ ``yaá¹ƒ cakkhu catunnaá¹ƒ mahÄ• bhÅ«tÄ• naâ€™â€™ ntiÄ dhammasaá¹…gaá¹‡iyaá¹ƒ padabhÄ• jane (Dhs-a 595 Ä• dayo) vuttanayeneva veditabbaá¹ vÄ«riyindriyasamÄ• dhindriyaniddesÄ• dÄ«su ca sammÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo micchÄ• vÄ• yÄ• mo micchÄ• samÄ• dhÄ«tiÄ• dÄ«ni na vuttÄ• ni. kasmÄ• ? sabbasaá¹…gÄ• hakattÄ• . sabbasa kathitÄ• ni. evaá¹ƒ santepettha dasa indriyÄ• ni lokiyÄ• ni kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• neva, tÄ«á¹‡i lo lokiyalokuttaramissakÄ• nÄ«ti.

abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• .

2. paÃ±hÄ• pucchakavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<221> paÃ±hÄ• pucchake sabbesampi indriyÄ• naá¹ƒ kusalÄ• divibhÄ• go pÄ• á¸·inayÄ• n

<223> Ä• rammaá¹‡attikesu pana __sattindriyÄ• anÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• _ti cakkhusotaghÄ• najivhÄ• kÄ• yaitthipurisindriyÄ• ni sandhÄ• ya vuttaá¹ƒ. jÄ«vitindriyaá¹ƒ p idha anÄ• bhaá¹-á¹-haá¹ƒ. __dvindriyÄ• _ti dve indriyÄ• ; sukhadukkhadvayaá¹ƒ sandhÄ• y ekantaparittÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ. __domanassindriyaá¹ƒ siyÄ• parittÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, siyÄ• 129/ kÄ• mÄ• vacaradhamme Ä• rabbha pavattikÄ• le parittÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ hoti \Ne 121/ pana Ä• rabbha pavattikÄ• le mahaggatÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, paá¹‡á¹‡attiá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha pavat navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ. __navindriyÄ• siyÄ• parittÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• _ti

manindriyajÄ«vitindriyasomanassindriyaupekkhindriyÄ• ni ceva saddhÄ• dipaÃ±cakaÃ±ca s jÄ«vitindriyaÃ±hi rÅ«pamissakattÄ• anÄ• rammaá¹‡esu rÅ«padhammesu saá¹…gahitampi siyÄ• pakkhe saá¹…gahitaá¹ƒ.

__cattÄ• ri indriyÄ• nÄ«_ti sukhadukkhadomanassaaÃ±Ã±Ä• tÄ• vindriyÄ• ni. tÄ• ni hi mag bhajanti. __maggahetuka_nti sahajÄ• tahetuá¹ƒ sandhÄ• ya vuttaá¹ƒ. vÄ«riyavÄ«maá¹ƒsÄ• maggÄ• dhipati, chandacittajeá¹-á¹-hakakÄ• le siyÄ• navattabbÄ• .

__dasindriyÄ• _ \Be 122/ __siyÄ• uppannÄ• , siyÄ• uppÄ• dino_ti satta rÅ«pindriyÄ• ni tÄ sandhÄ• yetaá¹ƒ vuttaá¹ƒ. dasindriyÄ• ni domanassena saddhiá¹ƒ heá¹-á¹-hÄ• vuttÄ• neva paá¹‡á¹‡attiá¹ƒ Ä• rabbha pavattikÄ• le navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡aá¹ƒ, sesÄ• ni nibbÄ• napad __tÄ«á¹‡indriyÄ• ni bahiddhÄ• rammaá¹‡Ä• nÄ«_ti tÄ«á¹‡i lokuttarindriyÄ• ni. __cattÄ• rÄ« sukhadukkhasomanassadomanassÄ• ni. tÄ• ni hi ajjhattadhammepi bahiddhÄ• dhammepi Ä __aá¹-á¹-hindriyÄ• _ti manindriyajÄ«vitindriyaupekkhindriyÄ• ni ceva saddhÄ• dipaÃ±cakaÃ Ä• kiÃ±caÃ±Ã±Ä• yatanakÄ• le navattabbÄ• rammaá¹‡atÄ• veditabbÄ• .

iti imasmimpi paÃ±hÄ• pucchake dasindriyÄ• ni kÄ• mÄ• vacarÄ• ni, tÄ«á¹‡i lokuttarÄ• ni, lokiyalokuttaramissakÄ• neva kathitÄ• nÄ«ti. ayampi abhidhammabhÄ• janÄ«yena saddhiá¹ ayaá¹ƒ pana indriyavibhaá¹…go dveparivaá¹-á¹-aá¹ƒ nÄ«haritvÄ• bhÄ• jetvÄ• dassitoti.

sammohavinodaniyÄ• vibhaá¹…gaá¹-á¹-hakathÄ• ya

indriyavibhaá¹…gavaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ• niá¹-á¹-hitÄ• .

6. paá¹-iccasamuppÄ• davibhaá¹…go

1. suttantabhÄ• janÄ«yaá¹ƒ uddesavÄ• ravaá¹‡á¹‡anÄ•

<225> idÄ• ni \Ee 130/ \Be 123/ \Ne 122/ tadanantare paá¹-iccasamuppÄ• davibhaá¹…ge y avijjÄ• paccayÄ• saá¹…khÄ• rÄ• â€™â€™ tiÄ• dinÄ• nayena tanti nikkhittÄ• , tassÄ• atth karontena vibhajjavÄ• dimaá¹‡á¸• alaá¹ƒ otaritvÄ• Ä• cariye anabbhÄ• cikkhantena sakasa parasamayaá¹ƒ anÄ• yÅ«hantena suttaá¹ƒ appaá¹-ibÄ• hantena vinayaá¹ƒ anulomentena m dhammaá¹ƒ dÄ«pentena atthaá¹ƒ saá¹…gahantena tamevatthaá¹ƒ puna Ä• vattetvÄ• apar
